IN the mean Time, his Wife, Children, and Friends, who had fled to his Camp for Protection, were continually ſolliciting him to turn his Arms againſt his private Enemies, and to free his Country from thoſe Tyrants, who had ſo long oppreſs'd it: So that, having concluded a Peace with Mithridates upon very advantageous Terms, he paſs'd over with his Army into Italy. But, before he was arriv'd, Marius was dead of a Pleuriſy, occaſion'd by exceſſive Drinking, to which, in the Decline of Life, he accuſtom'd himſelf; and young Marius, who inherited his Father's Cruelty, as well as Power, enter'd into a cloſe League with Cinna, and engag'd Valerius Flaccus (whom they procur'd to be made Conſul) in their Intereſt,

---

† After he was upwards of ſeventy Years of Age, and had been ſix Times Conſul, he was forc'd to fly from Rome on Foot, without either a Friend or Servant to accompany him; and, to avoid Sylla's People, that purſu'd him, to throw himſelf into a Moraſs, where he lay the whole Night, ſunk, and bury'd in Mud up to the Neck. In the Morning, when he got out, and endeavour'd to gain the Sea-Shore, in Hopes of meeting ſome Veſſel to carry him out of Italy, he was known by the People of Minturnæ, ſeiz'd and carry'd into the Town, with a Rope about his Neck, all naked and muddy. The Magiſtrate of the Place, in Obedience to the Decree of the Senate, which had attainted him, and ſet a Price upon his Head, ſent a publick Slave, a Cimbrian by Birth, to put him to Death; but as the Slave approach'd with his naked Sword, Canſt thou, thou Barbarian, (ſaid he, with a loud Voice) have the Aſſurance to aſſaſſinate Caius Marius? Whereupon the Slave, frighten'd at the Sound of a Name ſo terrible to his Countrymen, threw down his Sword, and ran out of the Priſon in great Diſorder, crying out, That it was not in his Power to kill Marius. The Magiſtrates of Minturnæ, looking upon this as an Interpoſition of Heaven for the Preſervation of this great Man, not only ſet him at Liberty, but furniſh'd him with a Veſſel, wherein he ſail'd firſt into the Iſland of Ænaria, and thence deſigning for Africa, he was forc'd, either by Streſs of Weather, or Want of Water, to go on Shore upon the Coaſts of Sicily, where he met with new Dangers. For a Roman Quæſtor, who had the chief Command there, offer'd to ſeize him; ſo that Marius, being forc'd to defend himſelf, loſt ſixteen of his Men, who made a Stand juſt upon the Shore, whilſt others help'd him on Board. From Sicily he ſailed to Africa, and landed at Carthage; but from thence he was expelled by Sextilius, who, as Prætor, commanded in that Province, and, notwithſtanding the Rigour of the Seaſon, was forc'd to go on Board, and ſpend a good Part of the Winter in his Ship, wandering up and down thoſe Seas, 'till, being inform'd of what was doing at Rome by a Meſſenger from Cinna, he return'd to Italy, join'd Cinna, beſieg'd Rome, and reveng'd himſelf too ſeverely of his Enemies. Vertot's Revolutions of Rome, lib. x.

Intereſt, and Deſign of oppoſing Sylla. But Sylla, as ſoon as he landed in Italy, defeated Marius, and reduc'd him to the Neceſſity of laying violent Hands upon himſelf; and, having vanquiſh'd all his other Enemies, enter'd Rome at the Head of his victorious Forces, and there gave a looſe to his licentious Paſſion of Revenge. All the poor People, that had appear'd againſt him in Arms, even tho' they came to beg Quarter, he order'd to be maſſacred. Fourſcore Senators, and ſix hundred Knights, together with an infinite Number of the richeſt Citizens of Rome, he caus'd to be proſcrib'd: Their Sons and Grandſons he degraded from all their Rights and Privileges: Thoſe, that ſhould protect or harbour any of them, he threaten'd with the like Proſcription; and to thoſe, that ſhould apprehend or murther any of them, he promis'd a Reward of two Talents; ſo that it became no uncommon Thing for Slaves, that had murther'd their Maſters, nay for Children, that had murther'd their Fathers, to come, with their Hands reaking in Blood, to demand the Reward of their Treaſon or Parricide.

NOR was it only the Party, that favour'd Marius, which ſuffer'd in this barbarous Manner, but, as Sylla (e) made little or no Account of any Man's Life, he permitted his Friends and Officers, with Impunity, to revenge themſelves of all their private Enemies, inſomuch, that freſh Numbers were proſcrib'd, and murther'd every Day, and no one (eſpecially if he was rich and wealthy) was ſecure of his Life for a Moment: Nay, to ſuch an Exceſs of Cruelty and Arbitrarineſs did he proceed at laſt, that, without naming any particular Perſons, he proſcrib'd whole Cities and Nations, and, by Way of Confiſcation, ſeiz'd on all the Eſtates, Houſes, and Territories, belonging to ſuch Towns in Italy, as had declar'd for Marius during the Civil War, which (to attach them more firmly to his Intereſt) he took care to diſtribute among his Soldiers.

SOME however, that were about him, and had probably been benefited by theſe Uſurpations, being apprehenſive that ſuch violent Proceedings might not laſt long, (to give them the better Sanction, and ſome Colour of Law) advis'd him to take upon him the Office, not of a temporary, but perpetual Dictator. The Power of this ſupreme Magiſtrate was boundleſs. The Authority of the Conſuls, and all other Magiſtrates, except that of the Tribunes, was ſuperſeded by it. He had Power of Life and Death over his Fellow-Citizens, was ſole Arbiter of Peace and War, was at Liberty to raiſe, or diſband Forces as he thought fit, and under no Obligation to give an Account of his Conduct to any Body. In a Word, he had all the Power of the moſt abſolute King, (greater indeed than any of the antient Kings of Rome ever had) but then it was only in the Times of the greateſt Exigencies of the Commonwealth, when it was endanger'd either by powerful Enemies abroad, or by civil Commotions at home, that ſuch an Officer was appointed; and, leſt ſuch a large Power ſhould be abus'd, no Man was inveſted with it for longer than ſix Months. But Sylla, who had terrify'd the People into a tame Submiſſion, and made himſelf abſolute at Rome, would have it conferr'd on him for a Time undetermin'd; ſo that the Romans, who had chang'd Kingly Government into the Republican under Conſuls, and military Tribunes, after many Ages, relaps'd again into the abſolute Power of One; tho' Sylla, to leſſen the Averſion, which all Republicans could not but have to ſuch a Form of Government, took care to diſguiſe what was in Reality a Royalty, under the leſs odious Title of a † Dictatorſhip.

THIS

(e) Vertot's Revolutions of Rome, lib. x.

† One Thing is very wonderful in this Sylla, that after he had deſtroy'd more than an hundred Thouſand of his Fellow-Citizens in the Civil War, and had caus'd ninety Senators, (of which fifteen had been Conſuls) and more than ſix and twenty hundred Knights to be put to Death, he had the Courage to lay down the Dictatorſhip, and to reduce himſelf to the Level of a private Citizen, without fearing the Reſentment of ſo many illuſtrious Families, whoſe Heads he had deſtroy'd by his cruel Proſcriptions. The Romans in general look'd upon this his Abdication of the Sovereign Power, as an Inſtance of the greateſt Magnanimity, and gladly forgave him all his Murthers, for the Sake of the Liberty, Between Cæſar and Pompey.

This Succeſs of Sylla's in climbing up to the Empire, and ſupporting himſelf therein, made it apparent to thoſe that came after him, that the Romans could bear a Maſter, and gave Occaſion to the violent Conteſts, which afterwards happen'd between Cæſar and Pompey, who, after the Death of Craſſus *, and the Parthian War, were the two great Competitors for the Sovereignty of Rome.

Pompey's Character.

CNEIUS Pompeius (whoſe Father, being of the ſame Name, had been Conſul, and ſerv'd his Country faithfully in the Wars) was, from his very Youth, the Darling of the Roman People; created a General, before he had been a Soldier; and, thro' the whole Courſe of his Life, attended with a wonderful Train of Victories and Succeſſes: (f) But, being all along accuſtom'd to the Command of Armies, he could not ſo well, upon the Expiration of his Commiſſion, reduce himſelf to the Simplicity of a private Life; and therefore, whenever he appear'd in Publick, he was always follow'd by a Crowd of his Dependents, whoſe numerous Appearance look'd more like the Court of ſome great Prince, than the Attendants of a Citizen of any Republick. It muſt be own'd however, that, in his Purſuit of Dignities, he was leſs fond of the Power, that is inſeparable from them, than of the Honours and Splendors, that ſurround them; that, in ſhort, he was a Man of Show, rather than real Ambition; and, if he affected any high Offices in State, it was chiefly to raiſe himſelf above all the Commanders of his Time; for the great Pride of his Soul was, to be thought the only General of the Commonwealth, whereas he ſhould have contented himſelf with being the firſt.

Cæſar's Character.

(g) CAIUS Julius Cæſar was born of the illuſtrious Family of the Julii, and was indeed the moſt extraordinary Perſon of his Age. Nature, which ſeem'd to have form'd him for the Command of the reſt of Mankind, had given him an Air of Empire, and a Dignity of Aſpect inexpreſſible; but then this Air of Grandeur was allay'd by the Gentleneſs and Sweetneſs of his Behaviour, which gain'd him the Hearts of thoſe, he converſ'd with, and laid the Foundation of his future Greatneſs. He was a Man of exalted Courage, and inſinuating Eloquence, extenſive in his Deſigns, indefatigable in purſuing them, and ambitious of the great Offices of State, chiefly for the Increaſe of his Intereſt and Power, and for the Means and Opportunity which they afforded him, by gentle Degrees of becoming the Maſter and Sovereign of his Country.

Upon the Death of Craſſus, who held the Balance between theſe two great Men, the Emulation between them began to break out. Cæſar was in Gaul, purſuing his Victories againſt the Helvetians, the Germans, berty, which he thereby reſtor'd them; but his Enemies imputed it to the natural Uneaſineſs of his Mind, and his continual Fear, leſt ſome Roman might be bold enough, at one Stroke, to deprive him of his Empire and his Life both. However this be, 'tis certain, that, after having ſhed ſo much Blood, he died peaceably in his Bed, and, a few Days before his Death, compos'd his own Epitaph, which compriſes his true Character: viz. That no Body had ever outdone him, either in obliging his Friends, or perſecuting his Enemies. Vertot's Revolutions, lib. xi.

* When Craſſus led his Army into Meſopotamia, there came to him a certain Chief of an Arabian Tribe, who, having ſerv'd in the Wars under Pompey, had contracted an Acquaintance with ſeveral of the Romans, and was therefore a proper Inſtrument for Surenas, the Parthian General, to employ upon this Occaſion. He told Craſſus, enquiring about the Strength of the Enemy, that they were unable to ſtand before him, and that, to obtain a compleat Victory, he had nothing to do, but to march directly againſt them, for which Purpoſe, he offer'd himſelf to be their Guide. Craſſus was weak enough to accept of his Offer; and, accordingly, the crafty Man led them along the Plains of Meſopotamia, until he had brought them into a ſandy Deſert, where the Parthians, he knew, would have the beſt Opportunity of deſtroying them, and then rode off to acquaint Surenas with it, who immediately fell upon them, and gave them a terrible Defeat. Nor was this the only falſe Step, that Craſſus made: For having reſted the Remains of his Army for one Day at Carrhæ, not far from the Place where the Battle was fought, when, in the Night following, he endeavour'd to make his Eſcape, he committed himſelf to the Guidance of one Andromachus, another Traitor, who led him into the Midſt of Bogs, and Moraſſes, where Surenas overtook him, ſlew him, and gave his Army the greateſt Overthrow, that the Romans had ever receiv'd, ſince the Battle of Cannæ; for, in this Engagement, twenty Thouſand were ſlain, and ten Thouſand taken Priſoners; and the reſt forc'd to make their Eſcape by ſeveral Ways into Armenia, Cilicia, and Syria. Plutarch, in Craſſo. Appian, in Parthicis, and Dion Caſſius, lib. xl.

Germans, the Belgæ, the Britons, and ſeveral other Nations, and aſtoniſhing all the World with the Fame of his great Exploits; but Pompey, ſince the Time of his Victories in Aſia, had continu'd (now for the Space of twelve Years) for the moſt Part in Rome, notwithſtanding he had obtain'd a large Commiſſion to govern the Provinces of Spain and Africa.

By his conſtant reſiding at Rome he had got a perfect Aſcendant over the Senate; and ſome to remedy the Diſorders, they then labour'd under, were for creating him Dictator, till Cato, who was always watchful for the Publick Liberty, propos'd rather to chuſe him ſole Conſul, without a Collegue; becauſe a Conſul was reſponſible to the People and Senate for his Conduct, which a Dictator was not.

The Senate approv'd of this Expedient, and accordingly made Pompey the ſole Conſul. They continu'd him likewiſe in his former Governments, and, for the Payment of the Forces he had under him, gave him an annual Allowance of a Thouſand Talents out of the Exchequer: But, as all good Underſtanding between him and Cæſar was now vaniſh'd, he took Care to prefer two Laws, which the Senate readily agreed to, viz. That the Miſcarriages of Officers, for twenty Years laſt paſt, ſhould be enquir'd into; and that all abſent Perſons ſhould not be allow'd to demand any publick Employments; the latter of which was more immediately levelled at Cæſar: For Pompey's Deſign herein was, to oblige him to abandon the Government of the two Gauls, and the Command of his Army, in order to come in Perſon to ſollicit the Conſulate, which he, in his Turn, (as he ſignify'd by his Letters) expected to have conferr'd on him.

CÆSAR was very well aware of Pompey's Deſign; but, inſtead of relinquiſhing his Government, and returning to Rome, he choſe to remain at the Head of his Forces, and, when the Senate (by Pompey's Procurement) came to a Reſolution of taking the Government from him by naming his Succeſſor, he wrote ſeveral Letters to them, with a great deal of Temper, requeſting either that they would continue him in his Government, as they had done Pompey, or permit him, tho' abſent from Rome, to put up for the Conſulate; but the Majority of the Senate, that was entirely under Pompey's Direction, rejected every Propoſal that he ſent; ſo that, finding himſelf treated with Contempt, he paſs'd the Alps at the Head of the third Legion, and halted at Ravenna; from whence he ſent Fabius, one of his Lieutenants, with Letters to the Senate, (b) "wherein he magnify'd his own Exploits, expecting that ſome Regard ſhould be had to his Services; and wherein he declar'd his Readineſs to lay down his Command, in caſe Pompey would do the like; but that, if that General pretended to retain his Forces, he knew very well how to defend himſelf at the Head of his Legions, and would, in a few Days, be at Rome, to revenge the Injuries, which were done to him, as well as the Publick."

This Letter, when read to the Senate, was repreſented as a Kind of Declaration of War, and accordingly procur'd a "Decree that Lucius Domicius ſhould be Cæſar's Succeſſor, and have four Thouſand new Levies to enable him to go and take Poſſeſſion of his Government; and that, in caſe Cæſar refus'd to diſband his Army within ſuch a Time, he ſhould be proſecuted, as an Enemy to the Commonwealth." When Cæſar was inform'd of this Decree, he ſent Orders to ſuch of his Troops, as were neareſt at Hand, to advance towards the Rubicon, a ſmall River, that parted his Government of Gallia Ciſalpina from the reſt of Italy. When he came up the next Day, he found there five Thouſand Foot, and three hundred Horſe; and, having halted a while on the Bank of the River, he is ſaid there to have been ſeiz'd with ſome Remorſe upon Conſideration of what he was about to do; till, having reflected on the Hatred and Inveteracy of his Enemies, he threw himſelf into the River at once, once, paſſed it, and took Ariminum by Surprize; and from thence put all Rome in ſuch a Diſorder, that Pompey not having ſufficient Forces to reſiſt him, with the Conſuls, and a great Number of Senators, retir'd to Capua, and thence to Brunduſium, where taking Shipping, they ſoon arriv'd at the Port of Dyrrachium, a City of Epirus, where Pompey intended to gather together ſuch an Army, as might enable him to make a Stand.

UPON the Retreat of Pompey, Cæſar, in the Space of ſixty Days, made himſelf Maſter of all Italy, and came to Rome, where he promis'd the People every Thing ſhould be done for the Good of the Commonwealth: And having filled up the Senate, and ſettled ſome Kind of Government among them, he march'd his Army directly into Spain, where Pompey was Governor, and had left ſeveral Troops attach'd to his Intereſt. As ſoon as he came thither, he fell upon Afranius and Petreius, Pompey's Lieutenants; and, having driven them out of the Province, he made himſelf Maſter thereof, and ſo return'd to Rome, where he was declar'd Dictator, tho', after eleven Days, he laid down that Office, and together with Servilius Iſauricus, was elected Conſul for the Year enſuing.

POMPEY, by this Time, had been in Epirus for the Space of a Year, and had got together a conſiderable Army out of Greece, Aſia, and all the Eaſtern Countries, to ſupport his Intereſt; but, when Cæſar went after him, the Seaſon of the Year was too far advanc'd, either for the Fleets to be at Sea, or the Armies to take the Field, and ſo both Sides lay ſtill in their Winter Quarters.

From Joſeph. lib. xiii. c. 19. to the End of lib. xv.

IN the Spring both Armies took the Field, and encamp'd againſt each other near Dyrrachium, (now Durazzo) where, in ſeveral Skirmiſhes, Cæſar had the better; but, at length, in one of them he receiv'd ſo great a Defeat, that himſelf acknowledg'd he muſt have been utterly undone, had Pompey ſeen his Advantage, and purſu'd it. For Fear of the like Diſaſter therefore, or the Want of Proviſions for his Army, Cæſar decamp'd the next Day, and march'd towards Theſſaly, where he found Plenty of all Things, and there waited to give Pompey Battle. Pompey had an Army of forty-five Thouſand Foot, and five Thouſand Horſe, but they were moſt of them raw unexperienc'd Men, rais'd out of the effeminate Nations of Aſia, and ſome Roman Senators, and other Gentlemen, who knew very little of War. Cæſar, on the other Hand, had an Army of twenty-two Thouſand Foot, and one Thouſand Horſe; but then they were moſt Part of them veteran Soldiers, who, for the Space of ten Years, had been accuſtom'd to War and Victory in Gaul. On the Plains of Pharſalia theſe two Armies met with two of the greateſt Generals in the World at the Head of them, diſputing for univerſal Empire. The Engagement for ſome Time was ſharp on both Sides: But, at length, Pompey's Army was vanquiſh'd and broken. Fifteen Thouſand of them were ſlain; four and twenty Thouſand made Priſoners; their Camp was taken, and their General, with much ado, forc'd to make his Eſcape in Diſguiſe, and, after having wander'd from Place to Place, was, at length, in Egypt, * perfidiouſly ſlain, in the fifty-ninth Year of his Age.

---

* After the Defeat of his Army, Pompey, not well knowing which Way to betake himſelf, determin'd at laſt to go to Egypt. He had been a very conſiderable Friend to the late King Ptolemy Auletes, and therefore he expected a kind Reception from his Son. Taking therefore his Wife Cornelia, and his younger Son Sextus with him, he ſteer'd his Courſe towards Egypt, and, as he drew near to Land, ſent Meſſengers to the King, deſiring his Protection, and Aid in his preſent Diſtreſs. The King was then a Minor, under the Tuition of Pothynus an Eunuch, and Achillas the General of his Army, who, taking Theodotus, and ſome others into the Conſultation, adviſ'd together what Anſwer to ſend. Some were for receiving, and others for rejecting him; but Theodotus was of Opinion, that their only ſafe Way was to diſpatch him: "For ſhould they receive him, as he argu'd, Cæſar would revenge it; ſhould they reject him, "if ever he recover'd Power, himſelf would revenge it; and therefore the only Method to ſecure themſelves from "both, was to cut him off: For hereby they would certainly make Cæſar their Friend, and prevent the other from "doing any Miſchief; for dead Men (ſaid he, according to the Proverb) never bite." This Advice prevail'd, and accordingly Achillas, with Septimus a Roman Commander, then in the Service of the King of Egypt, was ſent to put it in Execution. Under the Pretence therefore of conducting Pompey to the King, they took him out of the Ship into a Boat;

After the Death of Pompey, and the Return of Cæſar to Rome, the Senate decreed him uncommon Honours, and an unlimited Authority. He was appointed Conſul for ten Years, and perpetual Dictator; had the Name of Imperator given him, and the auguſt Title of Father of his Country. His Perſon was declar'd ſacred and inviolable; and at all publick Games he had the Privilege of ſitting in a gilded Chair, with a golden Crown upon his Head; but notwithſtanding all this Profuſion of Honours, we find in what a barbarous Manner he was murther'd at laſt.

Between Anthony and Auguſtus.

After the Death of Julius Cæſar, great Confuſion and Diſorders happen'd in the Roman State, till, at length, Anthony and Octavianus, upon the forc'd Abdication of Lepidus, became the two great Men in the Empire. Anthony had all the Eaſt, and Octavianus all the Weſt; but not content with this, they ſoon took occaſion to differ with each other, and enter'd into Conteſt who ſhould have the Whole.

Anthony's Character.

ANTHONY was a Perſon of great Note for his military Skill and Abilities. At the Battle of Pharſalia he did Wonders: and in that of Philippi, (where Octavianus * behav'd but very meanly) the whole Victory was owing to his Courage and Conduct: But he was exceedingly addicted to Vice, eſpecially to the Love of Women, which Cleopatra obſerving, laid hold of him on this weak Side, and, for the Gratification of her Ambition and Avarice, (which were the two predominant Paſſions in her) put him upon ſuch Meaſures, as gave a general Offence to the Romans.

Auguſtus's Character.

OCTAVIANUS, on the other Hand, tho' he was always ſucceſsful, yet for this he was indebted not ſo much to his Courage, as his Cunning and Management; for, tho' he had a Genius capable of framing the greateſt Projects, yet, in cool Blood, he found himſelf incapable of facing the meaneſt Danger. And therefore being conſcious of his Weakneſs in this Reſpect, he contented himſelf with ſupplying the Schemes, and called in the Valour of other Men to put them in Execution. In moſt of his military Undertakings, he borrow'd (as it were) Agrippa's Courage, and the rather made uſe of him, becauſe he was a mere Soldier of Fortune, and, conſequently, incapable of creating any Jealouſy, or making himſelf Head of any Party.

After * a vaſt Preparation for War, theſe two great Men, of different Characters, met with their Armies and Fleets near Actium, a Town on the Coaſt of Epirus, there to decide the Empire of the World. Canidius, who had the chief Command of Anthony's Army, perſuaded him to decamp, and march into the Country of Thrace, or Macedon, there to try his Fortune in a Battle at Land, becauſe his Army was much more to be depended on, than his Fleet: But Cleopatra, who was then in Company with Anthony, advis'd him rather to decide the Matter by a Fight at Sea, and her Advice prevailed.

On the ſecond of September therefore, A. M. 3973. Ant. Chriſt. 31. the two Fleets engag'd before the Mouth of the Ambraſian Gulph, in the Sight of the two Armies, the one drawn up on the North, and Boat; but, as ſoon as they came near the Shore, they fell upon him, and ſlew him, cut off his Head, and caſt his dead Carcaſs on the Strand. His Wife and Son, ſeeing this barbarous Murther, rais'd bitter Cries and Lamentations; but all to no Purpoſe: Perceiving therefore themſelves in the like Danger, they hoiſted Sail, and made off, leaving this great Man (who, in the fifty-ninth Year of his Age, came to this woeful End) no other Funeral, than what Philip, an enfranchis'd Bondman of his, and a poor Roman, who came thither by Accident, could give him, by making a Funeral Pile of the broken Pieces of an old Boat, that lay wreck'd on the Shore. Plutarch. in Pompeio. and Appian. de Bellis Civilibus, lib. ii.

* On the Eve, before the Battle at Philippi, under Pretence of ſome Indiſpoſition, he left the Body, which he commanded, and, while the two Armies were engag'd, hid himſelf amongſt the Baggage; and, in a Sea-Fight againſt young Pompey, he had not the Courage to ſee the two Fleets engage, but lay in the Bottom of the Ship, with his Eyes lift up to Heaven, as if he had been in a Trance, and never once ſhew'd himſelf to his Soldiers, until News was brought him, that the Enemy was fled. Vertot's Revolutions of Rome, lib. xiv.

* Anthony's Forces, at Land and Sea, conſiſted of an hundred Thouſand Foot, twelve Thouſand Horſe, and five hundred Ships of War; and Octavianus's of eighty Thouſand Foot, twelve Thouſand Horſe, and two hundred and fifty Ships of War. Plutarch. in Antiocho, and Dion Caſſius, lib. lxxx.

and the other on the South Side of the Streights, which enter'd the Gulph, there to attend the Event of the Battle. The Fight, for ſome Time, continu'd dubious, with as fair a Proſpect of Succeſs for Anthony, as for his Adverſary, until Cleopatra forſook him: For ſhe, being affrighten'd with the Noiſe, and Terror of the Battle, gave Orders to the Captain, that commanded her Ship, to ſhear off, and ſo drew after her the whole Egyptian Squadron, which conſiſted of ſixty large Men of War.

ANTHONY, giving all for loſt, made after her as faſt as he could, and ſo by his Flight yielded the Victory to Octavianus; but, after he was gone, his Ships fought ſo valiantly, that, tho' the Engagement began at Noon, it was not ended till it was Night.

In the mean Time, Anthony and Cleopatra got to Teneros in Laconia, whither ſome of his Ships, that had eſcap'd the Fight, and ſeveral of his Friends, repair'd to him, from whom he underſtood, that, tho' his Fleet was deſtroy'd, his Land-Army was ſtill ſafe; and therefore he wrote to Canidius to retire with it thro' Macedonia into Aſia, in Hopes of being able, by that Means, to renew the War: But Canidius, in his March being overtaken by Octavianus, fled by Night to Anthony, and the Army, finding themſelves deſerted by their Generals, went over to the Enemy, as the foreign Forces, which had come to the Aſſiſtance of Anthony, fled all home to their reſpective Countries, and made their Peace afterwards with the Conqueror on the beſt Terms they could.

By this Time Anthony and Cleopatra were both return'd to Alexandria, and it was not long before Octavianus went in Purſuit of them. On their firſt Coming, Anthony fell upon the Roman Troops, while under the Fatigue of their March, and put them to a total Rout; but, in a ſecond Engagement with them, he was vanquiſh'd, and driven back into the City with great Loſs. The next Morning, when he went down to the Harbour to put the Fleet in Order to engage the Enemy, no ſooner were they drawn up in Line of Battle, but he ſaw them deſert, and go over to them, and, (to his greater Mortification) when he return'd into the City, he found that all the Land Forces, both Horſe and Foot, had in like Manner revolted from him.

When Anthony underſtood that all this was done by Cleopatra's Treachery, and in Hopes of making her Peace with Octavianus, he could not forbear expreſſing his Reſentment of it in loud Complaints; ſo that Cleopatra, for Fear of him, but (as ſhe pretended) to ſecure herſelf from the Enemy, fled to a Monument, which ſhe caus'd to be built of a great Height, and wonderful Structure, and having there ſhut herſelf up with two Maids, and one Eunuch, ſhe had it given out, that ſhe was dead. Anthony no ſooner heard the News, but, ſuppoſing it to be true, fell upon his Sword; however, having Intelligence, ſome Time after, that Cleopatra was ſtill alive, he order'd thoſe about him to carry him to her Monument, where might be ſeen one of the moſt deplorable Spectacles that can be imagin'd. Anthony, all over bloody, and breathing out his laſt, was by the Hands of Cleopatra, and her two Maids, drawn up by the Ropes and Pulleys, that were employ'd in the Building, to the Top of the Monument, and there, in a few Moments, expir'd in her Arms.

After the Death of Anthony, the great Care of Octavianus was, to make himſelf Maſter of Cleopatra's Perſon, and Riches; of her Perſon, to adorn his Triumph; and of her Riches, to defray the Expences of the War: But, after he had luckily compaſs'd both, ſhe, having private Notice given her of her being deſign'd to be carry'd to Rome, to make Part of the Show in her Conqueror's Triumph, caus'd herſelf * to be bitten with an Aſp, and ſo, to avoid this Infamy *, died after ſhe had reign'd, from the Death of her Father, twenty-two Years, and liv'd thirty-nine.

* The Aſp is a Serpent of Egypt and Libya, and proper only to thoſe Climates. Thoſe, that are bitten by it, die within three Hours, in a Kind of gentle Sleep, or Lethargy, without any Senſation of Pain; and therefore Cleopatra, who had experienc'd all Kinds of Poiſons upon other Creatures, made choice of this, as the eaſeſt Way of dying; and OCTAVIANUS, (i) tho' much concern'd for having thus loſt the chief Glory of his Triumph, did nevertheleſs make for Cleopatra (as he had permitted her to make for Anthony) a ſplendid and Royal Funeral. He had them both repoſited in the ſame Monument, which they had begun, and gave Orders to have it finiſh'd. Having thus ſettled his Affairs in Egypt, and cut off all thoſe, from whom he might expect any freſh Diſturbances, he made a Review of the ſeveral Provinces of the Leſſer Aſia, and the Iſles adjoining, and ſo, paſſing through Greece, return'd to Rome, where he triumph'd for three Days ſucceſſively, for his Victories over the Dalmatians, and for the Sea-Fight at Actium, and for the Conqueſt of Egypt; in the laſt of which, were led before him the Children of Cleopatra, and, tho' herſelf had eſcap'd that Fate, her Effigy was carry'd in Proceſſion, with an Aſp hanging at her Arm, to denote the Manner of her Death.

He is made ſole Emperor, and Pontifex Maximus.

AFTER this Triumph, he held a private Conſultation with Agrippa and Mecænas, (his two chief Miniſters, and principal Inſtruments of his Greatneſs) whether he ſhould reſtore the Commonwealth to its ancient State, or retain the Sovereign Power. Agrippa was for the reſtoring, but Mecænas for the retaining Part; whereupon Octavianus, knowing that the Senate was filled with his Creatures, whoſe Fortunes depended on his holding the Sovereignty, propos'd indeed, in a formal Speech, to reſign his Authority; but, no ſooner was the Propoſal made, than the whole Senate, with an unanimous Voice, diſſuaded him from it, and, with all Manner of Arguments, preſs'd hm to take upon him the ſole Adminiſtration of the Government, which with much ſeeming Reluctancy, at length, he conſented to. But, by no Means would he ſubmit to accept of it for a longer Term, than ten Years, tho', from ten Years to ten Years, upon one Pretence or other, he continu'd himſelf in it, as long as he liv'd, and ſo tranſmitted it to his Succeſſors.

WITH this new Power, the Senate was determin'd to confer on him a new Name. Himſelf had taken upon him the common Title of Imperator, which the Soldiers, during the Times of the Republick, us'd to give to victorious Generals; but this was not thought adequate to his Merit; And therefore, ſince the Word Auguſtus ſeem'd to ſignify ſomething, that, above human, was ſacred and venerable, This was made choice of, and, by the general Suffrage of the Senate, firſt given to him, with many more Things decreed in his Honour, by the Flattery of ſome, who courted his Favour, and the Fear of others, who dreaded his Power.

AUGUSTUS (for ſo we muſt now call him) having rais'd himſelf to this Height of Power and Glory, as ſoon as Lepidus *, who had been Pontifex Maximus, or and, to deceive her Keepers, kept an Aſp always hid in her Chamber, under Figs, Grapes, and Flowers, which, when ſhe was determin'd to die, ſhe took and held to her Arm, and, ſoon after its biting her, fell into a Sleep, and ſo died.

* This Lepidus was one of the Triumvirate, with Octavianus and Anthony, but a Man of no Manner of Merit. He join'd Octavianus, in carrying on the War againſt Sextus Pompeius, the Son of Pompey the Great; but when he arrogated or High-Prieſt of Rome, was dead, aſſum'd to himſelf (as did his Succeſſors in the Empire) that Office; and the firſt Thing he did, was to examine into the prophetical Books, which, at that Time, went abroad under the Name of the Sibyls †.

An Account of the Sibylline Oracles, and their Validity.

That, in the Reign of Tarquinius Superbus, there came a ſtrange Woman to Rome, who offer'd to ſell to the King nine Volumes of theſe Sibylline Oracles, but, upon his refuſing to purchaſe them, burnt three of them, and afterwards coming with ſix, and being rejected, burnt three more, and yet, at laſt, obtain'd the full Price of what ſhe had aſk'd at firſt, for the three remaining; that theſe Volumes, when purchas'd, (k) were laid up in the Capitol, committed to the Cuſtody of proper Officers, never conſulted but upon great Exigencies of State, and carefully preſerv'd, until, at the Burning of the Capitol, in the Civil Wars between Sylla and Marius, they happen'd to be conſum'd; that, upon the Rebuilding of the Capitol, (l) the Romans, with great Care, made another Collection of Sibylline Oracles from ſeveral Countries, and, after they had ſelected ſuch, as their Church and State did approve of for their Purpoſe, laid them up in the new Capitol, inſtead of thoſe, which the Fire had conſum'd; that, beſides theſe Capitoline Volumes, there were a great many more Sibylline Oracles in the World, (m) which Auguſtus, in the Beginning of his Office of Pontifex Maximus, endeavour'd to collect, and what he reputed genuine, or rather what ſuited his Purpoſe beſt, theſe he depoſited likewiſe in the Capitol, burning the reſt; that (n) Tiberius made another Review of theſe Oracles, and condemn'd ſeveral Volumes of them to the Flames, but the Capitoline Copies were ſtill held in great Veneration, (o) until they fell into Diſgrace in the Reign of Honorius, and, by his Order and Appointment, were burnt and deſtroy'd; (p) theſe are Facts, that are confirm'd by all Antiquity, and what compriſe indeed the whole Hiſtory of theſe Sibylline Writings. But, if they were all thus finally deſtroy'd, the Queſtion is, how came we by the preſent Collection of Greek Verſes, compris'd in eight Books, which go under the Name of the Sibyls, and of what Merit and Authority are we to account them?

Now, in Anſwer to this, it is to be obſerv'd, (q) that, long before the Times of Chriſtianity, there were extant, among the Heathens, ſeveral Oracles, or Predictions of future Events, aſcrib'd to one or more of gated the whole Honour of their Succeſſes to himſelf, Octavianus drew over all his Army to deſert him, and ſo reduc'd him to the Neceſſity of begging his Life, and of being content to lead the Remainder of it in a private and mean Condition at Circetii, a ſmall Maritime Town among the Latins, where he was ſent into Baniſhment, and there died in Obſcurity and Contempt. Suetonius, in Octavio, lib. xvi. Appion, de Bellis Civilibus, lib. v. and L. Florus, lib. iv. c. 8.

† The Sibyls were Women, of ancient Times ſaid to be endu'd with a prophetick Spirit, and to have deliver'd Oracles, foreſhewing the Fates and Deſtinies of Kingdoms. We have, in the Writings of the Antients, mention made of ten of them. The Cumæan, the Cumanian, the Perſian, the Helleſpontican, the Lybian, the Samian, the Delphian, the Phrygian, the Tiburtine, and the Erythræan; but ſome are of Opinion, that the Cumæan, and the Erythræan, was one and the ſame Sibyl; that ſhe was born at Erythræ in Ionia, and therefore was by the Greeks called Erythræa; but, having remov'd from Erythræa to Cumæ in Italy, and there deliver'd all her Oracles, ſhe was from thence, by the Romans and Italians, called Cumæa. Theſe Sibyls, among the Pagans, were what the Prophets and Propheteſſes were accounted among the Hebrews; and, as the moſt antient of theſe was nam'd Sibylla, ſo all others of the ſame Sex, who pretended to the like fatidical Spirit, were called Sibyls. The Place, from whence theſe Sibyls gave out their Oracles, was generally a Cave, or ſubterraneous Vault, (if we may judge of others by that at Cumæ) whereof Juſtin Martyr gives us this Account: "I have ſeen the Place, ſays he, which is a large Chapel, or Oratory, hewn out of "the main Rock, and muſt have been a Work of great Labour. Here the Sibyl (as the Inhabitants, who had a "Tradition thereof, told me) gave forth Oracles. In the Middle of the Chapel, they ſhew'd me three hollow Places, "hewn out of the ſame Rock, in which, when filled with Water, the Sibyl us'd to bathe herſelf, and ſo, having put "on her Garment, retir'd into the innermoſt Cell of the Chapel, (which was likewiſe hewn out of the ſame Rock) and, "having plac'd herſelf upon an elevated Seat, which jutted out into the Middle of the Cell, ſhe there utter'd her "Oracles." Lactantius, de falſâ Religione, lib. i. c. 6. Salmaſius, in Exercitat. ad Solinum, pag. 8. & *J. of theſe Propheteſſes, who were ſtil'd Sibyls; that theſe Predictions were held in great Eſteem among the Antients, as containing Notions conſonant to true Religion, the Worſhip of one God, the Conflagration of the World, the Renovation of it again, the general Reſurrection, and the Rewards and Puniſhments hereafter; and that both Heathen, Jewiſh, and Chriſtian Authors, who make mention of theſe Sibyls, give a ſtrong Sanction to their Authority. Varro looks upon them as inſpir'd Propheteſſes; Virgil does them Honour in citing their Predictions; Joſephus thinks them uſeful to eſtabliſh ſome Poſitions in ſacred Hiſtory; and Clemens Alexandrinus (as he quotes a more antient Author for it) brings in St Paul addreſſing himſelf to an heathen Audience in theſe Words: Take the Greek Books in your Hands, read the Sibyls, and ſee what they ſay of the Unity of God, and how they foretel what is to come, and you will there clearly find the Son of God. It muſt be acknowledg'd indeed, that the whole Collection of theſe Sibylline Oracles, as they are now extant in eight entire Books, is far from being genuine. The 1ſt, 2d, and moſt of the 5th, all the 6th, 7th, and 8th Books ſeem to be a manifeſt Forgery, the ſpurious Production of ſome zealous Chriſtian (perhaps about the Middle of the ſecond Age after Chriſt) for the Promotion of the Religion he profeſs'd.

(r) IN one Place, he explicitly declares himſelf to be a Chriſtian, and ſpeaks of the whole Myſtery of our Salvation, and of the Methods whereby it was accompliſh'd; of the Incarnation and Birth, the Circumciſion and Death, the Reſurrection and Aſcenſion of our Saviour Chriſt, with as much Accuracy, as do the Evangeliſts. (s) In another Place, he mentions Chriſt's future Reigning here upon Earth, according to the Notion of the Millenarians, which was not ſtarted till the ſecond Century; and, (t) in another, gives us a Succeſſion of the Roman Emperors, in their Order, from Julius Cæſar to Antoninus Pius, together with the Adoption of Marcus Aurelius and Lucius Verus, which has much more the Air of an hiſtorical Narrative, than a prophetick Prediction.

THESE Things diſcover a Forgery (at leaſt a great Part of theſe pretended Oracles) a little too palpably; but then, it muſt be obſerv'd, that neither the Heathens before, nor the Chriſtians, for the three firſt Centuries after Chriſt, knew any Thing of theſe ſpurious Pieces, becauſe we no where find them making any Citations from them; but now, (u) from the whole Proem, the greateſt Part of the third, all the fourth, and a ſmall Branch of the fifth Book, (which are the only Parts of the preſent Collection, that are either cited, or referr'd to by the antient Heathens) their Quotations are innumerable: And therefore, we may juſtly infer, that the preſent Copy of eight Books is not the ſame with what was extant before, and in the firſt Ages of Chriſtianity, but widely different from it; that thoſe are the genuine Prophecies only, which we find the antient Heathens and primitive Chriſtians ſo frequently citing, and ſo generally eſteeming, upon the Account of their Divine Inſpiration; and that the reſt, which have viſible Marks of Forgery upon them, were probably the ſpurious Additions of ſuch conceited Chriſtians, as called themſelves Gnoſticks; becauſe Epiphanius tells us, that this Set of Men boaſted of having Books, written by the Daughter of Noah, even as the pretended Propheteſs, at the End of the third Book, (which is a ſpurious Addition to what went before) gives us to know, that ſhe was a Wife to one of the three Sons of Noah, and was with him in the Ark, during the whole Time of the Deluge.

UPON the Whole therefore we may conclude, that tho', in the Collection, which we now have of the Sibylline Prophecies, ſeveral whole Books, and ſome Parts in others, are confeſſedly ſpurious; yet others there are, which have all the Evidences we can deſire, of their being genuine: And therefore to condemn them all in the Lump, and, becauſe ſome appear to be palpable palpable Forgeries, to include all under the ſame Category, is an Act of great Injuſtice.

If indeed we attend never ſo little to the Contents of thoſe Oracles, which we deem genuine, we cannot but perceive, that neither Heathens, Jews, nor Chriſtians could, conſiſtently with themſelves, be any Ways the Forgers of them. (x) The Heathens could not, becauſe they are directly levelled againſt their Wickedneſs, Idolatry, and Polytheiſm. The Jews could not, becauſe they foretel the Subverſion of their State and Temple by the Romans, which, we all know, they would never believe: And the Chriſtians could not, becauſe many Quotations, out of theſe Oracles, are found in other Authors, previous to Chriſtianity; and in the Beginning of it, ſeveral of them are cited by the firſt Chriſtians, in the open View of all Men, as very antient at that Time, very well known, and univerſally receiv'd over all the heathen World.

If then theſe genuine Prophecies of the Sibyls were not of human Contrivance and Invention, the concluſive Queſtion is, from whence was it that they deriv'd their Original? God, no doubt, who forc'd Balaam, contrary to his Will, to bleſs the Iſraelites, and to propheſy (y) the Coming of his Son out of Jacob, could, in what Manner he pleas'd, controul the diabolical Spirits, which preſided in the heathen Oracles, and make them utter Things, even relating to the Kingdom of the Meſſias, which otherwiſe they might have no Inclination to utter. But there is no Neceſſity for our having Recourſe to this extraordinary Expedient; ſince the Contents of the Sibylline Oracles (thoſe I mean that are genuine) are every where agreeable to the Scriptures, and foretel, for the main Part, the ſame great Revolutions of Providence, that they do: It is no Way inconſiſtent with the Divine Attributes to ſuppoſe, that, tho' God gave poſitive Laws, or an Inſtitution of religious Worſhip to the Jews only, and intruſted none but them with thoſe Divine Oracles, which related to that Worſhip; yet he might not wholly confine Divine Inſpiration to that Nation, but might ſupport the Law and Religion of Nature, and the right Worſhip of himſelf, as the one true God, among the Heathens likewiſe, by the Help of theſe Oracles, until (z) the Day dawned, i. e. a more perfect Revelation came, and he, who commanded the Light to ſhine out of Darkneſs, gave the Light of the Knowledge of the Glory of God in the Face of JESUS CHRIST.

THE APPARATUS TO THE HISTORY OF THE NEW TESTAMENT.

BEFORE we enter upon an Examination of Matters relating to the Chriſtian Revelation, it may not be improper to enquire a little, how the Diſpenſation of Moſes, which certainly was ſent from God, and confirm'd by Miracles, came to be ſuperſeded by this latter Inſtitution of Chriſt; ſince this is one of the greateſt Prejudices which the Jews have conceiv'd, and have Reaſon, as they think, to urge againſt the Divine Authority of our Religion, that has obtruded itſelf upon the World, and unjuſtly taken place of theirs, which, according to the Divine Ordination, (as they maintain) was to endure for ever.

An Objection, viz. that the Law of Moſes is immutable.

" (a) AN everlaſting Covenant, and a (b) Statute, or (c) Ordinance for ever, are " ſo common Appellations, ſay they, of our Law, and the ſeveral Branches of it, that " we cannot but think, had God at any Time intended a Repeal, he would have given " us previous Notice of it, and ſignify'd his Will to that Purpoſe, in ſome expreſs Texts " of Scripture: But ſince, in the whole Compaſs of our ſacred Books, we meet with " no ſuch Thing, but, on the contrary, very frequent Declarations of the perpetual and " immutable Obligation of the Diſpenſation we are under, we account ourſelves ſafe in “ ſhould repent: Hath he ſaid, and ſhall he not do it? Or hath he ſpoken, and ſhall he

“ not make it good? And therefore (f) to ſuppoſe, that he has retracted his former, and “ ſubſtituted a new Revelation, is to argue him guilty, either of ſuch Levity in the “ new, or ſuch Weakneſs in the old Eſtabliſhment, as cannot, without the greateſt De-

Anſwer'd, by ſhewing the different Kinds of the Jewiſh Law.

Now, in order to ſatisfy this Objection, (g) we muſt obſerve, that the Laws given to the Jews were of ſeveral Kinds, viz. Moral, Ceremonial, and Judicial. The Moral, which conſider'd them as Men, contain'd their Duty to God, their Neighbour, and themſelves: The Ceremonial, which conſider'd them as a Church, regarded their Purifications, their Sacrifices, and other Rites of religious Worſhip; and the Judicial, which conſider'd them as a commonwealth, had reſpect to their Conduct, and different Conditions in Life; to Damages, Puniſhments, and other civil Matters. * Now, in Relation to each of theſe we aſſert,——That the moral Precepts of their Law are ſo far from being repealed, that they are enforc'd, and exalted by the Chriſtian Rule of Manners; that the ceremonial, which were never preſcrib'd as Matters of intrinſick Goodneſs, but only as Figures of Things then to come, which ſince their Inſtitution are come, were not ſo properly caſt off, as worn out; and that the judicial, which were peculiar to their Country and Nation only, after the Diſſolution of their State and Government, ceas'd of courſe; and that God, conſequently, in this whole Affair, can be chargeable with no Variableneſs, nor Shadow of turning.

The Moral Law confirmed, and perfected by Chriſt.

Whether our Bleſſed Saviour made any material Addition to the Moral Law, as deliver'd by Moſes; whether the Rules he left us for governing (h) our Paſſions, for ſuppreſſing (i) the firſt Motions of unclean Deſires, for (k) forgiving Injuries, and for enlarging the Object (l) of our Charity, by loving even Strangers, even Enemies, and doing good to all Mankind; whether the Commands ſo often repeated, of forſaking all, and laying down our very Lives for the Sake of the Truth, together with a Reſtraint from ſuch Liberties, as were allow'd by the Jews, in Regard to Polygamy, and Divorce; whether theſe, and ſome other Precepts of the like Nature, are not entirely new, and peculiar to the Goſpel, or deduceable all (as the Jews contend) from the general Command of loving God with all the Heart, and our Neighbours as ourſelves, we ſhall not ſtay here to determine. This, we imagine, all will allow; that the Excellence of a Law, conſider'd as a Law, does not only conſiſt in the Subject-Matter of the Duties enjoin'd by it, but, proportionably, in all thoſe other Qualifications, which contribute to the Attainment of its proper End. Now, ſince the End of every Law is the Regulation of Manners, by promoting the Practice of the Virtues which it requires, and ſuppreſſing

* I lay no great Streſs on what may be obſerv'd of the different Manners of delivering the three Laws, Moral, Ceremonial, and Judicial, but only let it be an Occaſion to ſuggeſt to us a right Notion concerning the different Nature of them. The Ten Commandments, or Moral Law, was deliver'd on the Top of the Mount, and, in the Face of the whole World, as it were, to ſignify, that it was of univerſal Influence, and oblig'd all Mankind: But the Ceremonial was receiv'd by Moſes in private, in the Tabernacle; which may ſuggeſt to us, that it was of a peculiar Concern, that belong'd to the Jews only, and was to ceaſe, when the Tabernacle was down, and when the Veil of the Temple was rent. And as to the Judicial Law, it was neither ſo publickly, and audibly given, as the Moral Law, nor yet ſo privately, as the Ceremonial; thereby to intimate, that this Kind of Law is of an indifferent Nature, and either may be obſerv'd, or not obſerv'd, according as its Rules ſuit with the Place, and Government under which we live. Edwards's Survey of Religion, Part ii. c. 14.

(h) Matth. v. 22. (i) Ibid. ver. 28, 29, 30. (k) Ibid. ver. 39, 42. (l) Ibid. ver. 44. and Luke x. 29, 37.

ſuppreſſing the Vices which it prohibits, it muſt neceſſarily follow, that every Law muſt be more or leſs perfect according as the Plainneſs, or Obſcurity of its Precepts, or the Weight, or Weakneſs of its Sanctions appear to be.

(m) SINCE then the Moral Law, under the Goſpel-State, has explain'd Men's Duty more fully; and, (if not extended it farther) expreſs'd it in its juſt and utmoſt Extent; ſince it has cut off all Evaſions from pretended Ignorance, in many Degrees of Goodneſs, and Caſes of great Importance, which neither the common People, nor even the Teachers of the Jews held themſelves oblig'd to before; ſince it engages our utmoſt Diligence by expreſs Promiſes of eternal Life, for which the Law did no where poſitively covenant, but only for Proſperity, and Health, and the promis'd Land; ſince it reſtrains the Sinner by Threatenings of certain and eternal Vengeance, whereas the Law denounc'd only temporal Sufferings, Affliction, and Captivity, Diſeaſes and bodily Death; ſince the Goſpel-Compenſation, I ſay, is an Over-balance for all we can do, or endure to attain it, and the Goſpel-Penalty ſuch, as no Pleaſure, or preſent Profit, can make us an Amends for incurring; whereas the Law (ſuppoſing it requires all that the Goſpel requires) does not propoſe a valuable Conſideration for the Duties it enjoins, it cannot, I think, be deny'd, but that the moral Part of Religion is exalted by the Doctrine of JESUS CHRIST; and that, either by adding to the Matter of it, or at leaſt, by adding to the Clearneſs and Strength, the Efficacy and Obligation of it, our Saviour hath left it a more perfect Rule and Motive to Obedience, than he found it at his Coming.

That God all along expreſſed a Contempt for the ritual Law.

LONG before his Coming indeed, God, by the Mouth of his Prophets, had expreſſed a Contempt of all ritual Services, if they were not attended with moral Virtue; that he (n) deſired Mercy, and not Sacrifice, and the Knowledge of God, more than Burnt-Offerings; that he was not pleas'd (o) with Thouſands of Rams, nor ten Thouſands of Rivers of Oil; that (p) Incenſe was an Abomination to him, the New Moons and Sabbaths, and Calling of Aſſemblies he could not away with; and therefore he ſays, (q) I ſpake not to your Fathers, nor commanded them concerning Burnt-Offerings and Sacrifices; but theſe Things I commanded them, ſaying, Obey my Voice, and I will be your God, and ye ſhall be my People. Now, it is certain, that, at this Time, theſe Things were Part of Divine Worſhip, and that, on the very Day when the Iſraelites departed out of Egypt, God inſtituted the Paſchal Sacrifice; and therefore we cannot imagine, what ſhould be the Reaſon of his rejecting them, unleſs they were ſuch Precepts, (as he tells them) (r) that were not good, i. e. had no intrinſick Goodneſs in them, and Judgments whereby they ſhould not live; deſign'd indeed for Types of ſome Things future, but never to be of perpetual and unalterable Continuance in Religion.

Which was altogether typical.

AND indeed if we look into the Nature of Sacrifices in particular, we ſhall ſcarce be able to give a ſufficient Reaſon, why, in the firſt Ages of the World, and immediately after the Fall, Beaſts ſhould be ſlain in the Worſhip of God, before they were us'd in Food; why God ſhould accept the Blood of any Creature, or be pleas'd with taking away the Life, which he had given it; or why a peculiar Efficacy, towards the Expiation of Sin, ſhould be ſuppos'd to reſide in the Blood, more than any other Part, unleſs it had been upon Account of the Blood of Chriſt, which was typically prefigur'd by the Blood of Beaſts. Unleſs, I ſay, we are prepoſſeſs'd of this Truth, that the Sacrifices of the antient Law were prefigurative of the Sacrifice of JESUS CHRIST, (s) (q) Jer. vii. 22, 23. (r) Ezek. xx. 25. (s) Lamy's Introduction.

we can look upon the Tabernacle and Temple of Jeruſalem, no better than ſo many Slaughter-Houſes, and the Blood, and Fat, and continual Burning of Fleſh, would be a Means to incite our Diſguſt, rather than our Devotion. Such Sacrifices as theſe (as the Apoſtle juſtly argues) (t) could never be able to make him, that did the Service, perfect, as pertaining to the Conſcience; and therefore he concludes, that the Tabernacle was a Figure for the Time then preſent, and that the ritual Services, then impos'd, were limited to a certain Period, which he calls the Times of Reformation, i. e. they were to endure only ſo long, as till Matters could conveniently be order'd better, and the Condition of things would allow a more ſpiritual Worſhip to be eſtabliſh'd in their Stead.

And therefore only to be of temporal Continuance.

PURSUANT (u) to this, the Opinion of ſome conſiderable Jewiſh Writers is, that God would give a new Law by the Hand of the Meſſiah; that the Ceremonial ſhould laſt no longer than his Advent; that then it ſhould be lawful for them to eat Swine's Fleſh; and that, in Time to come, all Oblations ſhould ceaſe, except the Sacrifice of Praiſe: And therefore we may juſtly wonder, how they came to overlook that plain Prediction in the Prophet Jeremiah, (x) Behold the Days come, ſaith the Lord, that I will make a new Covenant with the Houſe of Iſrael, and with the Houſe of Judah: Not according to the Covenant, which I made with their Fathers, in the Day that I took them by the Hand to bring them out of the Land of Egypt; but this ſhall be the Covenant, that I will make with them, ſaith the Lord, I will put my Law in their inward Parts, and write it in their Hearts, and I will be their God, and they ſhall be my People: From whence the (y) Apoſtle infers, that the Mention of a new Covenant implies the firſt to be old, and liable to the Fate of every Thing that is ſo, which is to be decaying and ready to diſappear.

And to be repealed upon the Coming-in of the Gentiles.

NOTHING, I think, can be plainer in Scripture, than the Calling of the Gentiles into the Boſom of God's Church, when, according to the ſacred Phraſe, (z) his Mountain ſhall be eſtabliſhed in the Top of the Mountains, and all Nations ſhould flow thither; and when (a) pure Incenſe ſhould be offered in every Place, and his Name become great among the Heathens, from the Riſing of the Sun, until the Going-down of the ſame. But now, how could this poſſibly come to paſs ſo long as the Levitical Law ſubſiſted? It was impoſſible for the Gentiles to come, three Times every Year, from the utmoſt Parts of the World to Jeruſalem, as the Jews were requir'd to do; nor could there be any Senſe in their celebrating the Paſſover, and other Feſtivals, in Remembrance of a Deliverance from Egypt, and other momentous Events, when neither they, nor their Anceſtors had any Concern in them. Theſe were the Things, which diſtinguiſh'd Iſrael, as God's peculiar, and this was (b) the Partition-Wall, which was to be broken down, whenever the Prophecies, which declared that the Jew and Gentile ſhould both be made one, ſhould receive their Accompliſhments.

THE Truth is, (c) the Judicial and Ceremonial Laws of Moſes are like the Municipal Laws of any particular City, which are no longer in Force, when once the Prince or Lawgiver has declared his Intention to govern all his Subjects, in all Parts of his Dominions, by one and the ſame Law: And that the Deſtruction of the City and Temple of the Jews, and the miſerable Diſperſion of that People (which made it impoſſible for them to perform the Precepts that were required of them) was, to all Intents and Purpoſes, ſuch a Declaration, no one can doubt, who conſiders, that the Providence of God, in ſuch Caſes, is the Interpreter of his written Word, and that he cannot more plainly ſignify the Repeal of any Precept, and the Releaſe of all Obligation to it, than by rendering the Diſcharge of it abſolutely impracticable.

UPON the Whole then it appears, that God gave the Jews plain and ſufficient Warning, before he made any Change in the Inſtitution of Moſes; that, in making this Change, he acted the Part of a wiſe Prince, who accommodates his Laws to the Circumſtances of his Subjects; that, in the moral Law, he made no Alteration, only the Addition of ſtronger Sanctions; that the ceremonial Law he quite (d) diſannulled, becauſe of the Weakneſs and Unprofitableneſs thereof; that the political Law of Courſe expir'd, after the Deſtruction of the Jewiſh State and Polity; and that therefore, when any Laws of theſe latter Sort are ſaid to be appointed for ever, (e) the Phraſe for ever muſt imply (f) (as it often does) no more, than a periodical Duration *, limited according to the Nature of the Thing, and the Will of the Law-Giver.

Without any Reflection upon God.

(g) THE Jews indeed are ſtrictly requir'd, not to add to the Word which God commanded them, nor to diminiſh aught from it; but, tho' they were forbidden to do this, yet God himſelf was not bound by the Prohibition. Their Law ſtood upon Divine Authority, and was revealed by God; but it does not therefore follow, that the ſame Authority, which ſet it up, could not take it away. He no where tells us that this was his Laſt Revelation, or that he intended that we ſhould take it as ſuch; on the contrary, he expreſſly declares, that he would (h) make a New Covenant, and that, not according to the Covenant, which he had formerly made: And therefore, as it is no Diſparagement either to the Goodneſs, or Wiſdom, or Immutability of God, to ſay, that the Heavens and the Earth, which he hath now fram'd, ſhall, at a certain Time, (i) be diſſolved (k) and paſs away, and in their Place a New Heaven, and a New Earth, much more beautiful and glorious, ſucceed; ſo it reflects no Diſhonour upon him, to bring in a New Covenant (l), eſtabliſhed upon better Promiſes, and, by the Means of that, to vacate his former Inſtitutions.

An Objection.

* It is certain, and confeſs'd among the Jews, that the Word Olam, which we render by ever, does not always ſignify Eternity, but a limited and determinate Time. Thus much Joſeph Albo confeſſes, and produces ſeveral Inſtances for the Proof of it. To this Purpoſe it is ſaid of the Servant, that he ſhould ſerve his Maſter for ever, Exod. xxi. 6. i. e. to the Jubilee, becauſe the Year of Jubilee was the utmoſt Extent of that Servitude. In like Manner, Hannah ſays of her Son Samuel, that he ſhould appear before the Lord, and there abide for ever, 1 Sam. i. 22. which yet can be meant of no longer a Time, than that of his natural Life, or that Part of his Life only, in which he was capable of miniſtring legally. And ſo again, the Doors of the Temple are ſaid to be everlaſting, Pſal. xxiv. 7, 9. i. e. the Temple itſelf and its Gates were fix'd and permanent, in Compariſon of the Tabernacle, which was remov'd from Place to Place, and were indeed a Fabrick, that was to laſt a long Time; and therefore from this Expreſſion, the eternal Obligation of the Levitical Laws can by no Means be inferr'd; on the contrary, all that is meant by it, is, that they ſhould continue no longer, than the Jewiſh State and Polity did continue, as our learned Kidder, in his Demonſtration of the Meſſiah, Part iii, has abundantly ſhewn.

Anſwer'd, by ſhewing, that there was always a Covenant between God and Man.

Now, in Anſwer to theſe Queſtions, it might be ſufficient to ſay, that ſo it pleas'd God to act, whoſe Wiſdom is infinite, and (m) whoſe Glory it is (according to the Thoughts of the wiſe Man) to conceal the Cauſes and Reaſons of his Actions from Mankind. But, in calling Chriſt the Mediator of the New Teſtament, (n) and the Lamb, that was ſlain from the Foundation of the World, he has vouchſaf'd to aſſign a Reaſon for his delaying the Goſpel-Diſpenſation ſo long. For this intimates to us, that there was, all along, a Covenant between Chriſt, and his Heavenly Father, concerning the Redemption of Mankind; that, upon the Foreknowledge of their Tranſgreſſion, Chriſt undertook to be their Mediator, and engag'd, as their Proxy, to come down upon the Earth, to aſſume human Nature, to fulfil the Law which they ſhould violate, and to ſatiſfy God's Juſtice, by offering his Blood a Sacrifice for their Sins; that, until the Time ſhould come for Chriſt to execute this Engagement, all theſe Things ſhould be look'd upon as actually done, his Humiliation effected, his Blood ſhed, God's Juſtice ſatiſfy'd, and Man in a State of Reconciliation with him; conſequently, that there was a Saviour of the World, even before the World began, a conſtant Mediator between God and Man, a ſtanding Propitiation for Sin, and a daily Interceſſor at God's Right-Hand, whoſe Merits were available, and Righteouſneſs imputable to all the Race of Adam, tho' they, in their ſeveral Generations, might not have the Happineſs to know it. And if this (as it ſeems to be) is the Import of the Words, then will it follow, that Chriſtianity, in this Senſe, was as old as the Creation; that Mankind, in the earlieſt Ages of the World, were under the ſame Diſpenſation in Effect, that we are now; had the ſame Admiſſion to the Throne of Grace; the ſame Aſſiſtance (tho' not in Degree) to live virtuouſly; and, (o) if any Man ſinned, the ſame Advocate with the Father, even Jeſus Chriſt the Righteous, who is the eternal Propitiation for Sin: And the only Difference is, (p) that what was originally engag'd for, is ſince actually fulfilled; and the Bleſſings, which they had, but were not acquainted with, God, in his good Time, has declar'd unto us by an expreſs Revelation. But, all this while, they were under the ſame Covenant, and (upon a proper Uſe of the Means afforded them) in the ſame State of Salvation with us: For (q) in every Age, and every Nation, he that feared God, and worked Righteouſneſs, was accepted with him; and 'tis injurious to his Goodneſs, and Juſtice, and other ſacred Attributes, to ſay, that he either is, or ever was, a Reſpecter of Perſons.

And a Fitneſs that leſs perfect Diſpenſations ſhould go before.

And as he is no Reſpecter of Perſons, ſo has he always diſcover'd himſelf to be a God of Order, and not of Confuſion; and therefore it ſeems requiſite, that he ſhould proceed by Degrees, and not introduce the moſt perfect Diſpenſation, till others, of an inferior and leſs perfect Nature, had gone before. In the Creation of the World we read, that Trees, and Plants, and all Kinds of Vegetables were made before Beaſts, that have a ſenſitive Life; and that all Kinds of Beaſts were made before Man, who has a rational Soul, and is the moſt excellent of all God's Works in this lower World: And, in like Manner, 'tis reaſonable to ſuppoſe, that God ſhould make a gradual Increaſe in his Revelations, and proceed from the Shadow to the Subſtance, from Types to Realities, and from leſſer to greater Diſcoveries: And to this Purpoſe the Apoſtle to the Hebrews informs us, that the Worthies, who liv'd under the Law, and had (r) obtained a good Report by Faith, received not the Promiſe, (i. e. the full Intent of it, in the Coming of Chriſt) God having provided ſome better Things for us, that they, without us, ſhould not be made perfect. Tho' therefore we may think, with the Royal Preacher, that (s) truly Light is ſweet, and a pleaſant Thing it is for the Eyes to behold the Sun; yet we are to conſider, that the Darkneſs of the Night, which may reſemble the Religion of Nature, and the Dawning of the Day, which may repreſent the Inſtitutions of the Law, were to have their ſtated Periods, before our (t) Sun of Righteouſneſs was to riſe with Healing in his Wings, i. e. the Prince and Saviour of Mankind was to make his Entrance upon the Stage of the World, (u) not till after the legal Services were expir'd, the Predictions of the Patriarchs and Prophets accompliſh'd, and the Appearances of Angels, and Viſions, of Revelations, and extraordinary Declarations from Heaven had made Way for his Arrival.

(x) WHAT the Platoniſts hold concerning the ſeveral Powers and Faculties of Mens Souls, viz. that, in due Time and Place, they orderly awaken into Acts; and, when a lower Power is extinguiſh'd, a more extended and enlarg'd Capacity ſucceeds it, a more Divine Faculty and Life ſpring up, and are invigorated; what theſe Philoſophers (I ſay) hold concerning human Souls, is true of Religion, and its ſeveral Diſpenſations. There is a gradual Subordination of theſe ſeveral OEconomies; and, upon the Ceſſation and Extinction of one that is inferior, a more ſublime and perfect one ariſes in its Room. What God has been pleas'd to ſubſtitute in the Room of that Adminiſtration, which he hath thought proper to revoke, is the Chriſtian Revelation, of the Excellency of whoſe Doctrines, both moral and ſpeculative, we ſhall have occaſion (y) to diſcourſe hereafter; our preſent Buſineſs is, to enquire into the Merit of the Books, wherein theſe Doctrines are contain'd; and herein to conſider their Truth and Authority, their Number and Genuineneſs, their Method, and Stile, and Manner of Compoſition, together with ſome other Properties and Adjuncts peculiar to them, as the Rule of our Faith and Manners.

The Truth and Authority of the Scriptures of the New Teſtament.

THAT, in the Reign of Tiberius, there liv'd ſuch a Perſon as Jeſus Chriſt, and ſuffer'd Death under Pontius Pilate, the Roman Governor in Judea, is what Chriſtians in all Countries profeſs; what Jews of all Ages have acknowledg'd; and what even Heathen Authors (ſuch as Suetonius (z), Tacitus, and Pliny, jun.) have recorded. That this Jeſus had, from the very firſt, a Succeſſion of Men to publiſh his Doctrines, and to teſtify to the World the Hiſtory of his Life and Actions; and that, in a ſhort Space of Time, a certain Number of approv'd Hiſtorians recorded them in Writing, to be the Pillar and Foundation of all Truth, (as the Antients call it) is what the earlieſt Writers in the Chriſtian Church relate, and our preſent Poſſeſſion of the Books themſelves does imply. That the Books, which have deſcended to us, are the ſame, which theſe Hiſtorians indited, the Writers of the very next Age, and every Age ſince, have aſſerted; both Jews and Heathens, in their Tracts againſt Chriſtianity, have allow'd; and the numerous Paſſages cited from them, and in their Names even to this Day, do evince: And laſtly, that the Contents of theſe Books, in their Deſcent to us, have not ſuffer'd any conſiderable Alteration; but, (excepting ſome few Variations, occaſion'd by the Negligence of Tranſcribers) from the Days of the Apoſtles, and apoſtolick Men, to the preſent Age, have always been the ſame; the long Continuance of the Autographa in the Church, the many Copies and Tranſcripts taken from them, and their early Tranſlations into various Languages, have, under the Providence of God, been our Security.

SINCE then we have in our Hand authentick Records of our Saviour's Life and Actions, let us look a little into them, and ſee, whether their Authors have been defective in any of the Marks and Characters of true Hiſtorians.

The Evangeliſts true Hiſtorians from their own Characters.

THAT the Evangeliſts were Perſons of too much Truth and Honeſty to relate any wilful Lyes, is evident from the whole Tenor of their Writings; wherein the ſtricteſt Precepts about ſpeaking Truth, and the ſevereſt Prohibitions of Guile and Diſſimulation, either in our Words or Actions, do every where meet us. Men of Cunning and Artifice have all their fawning and inſinuating Ways to captivate the Weak, and ſuch as delight in Flattery; but with what Plainneſs and Simplicity do they go about to perſuade Men to become Chriſtians, when they barely relate the Matters of Fact concerning the Reſurrection of Jeſus, ſaying, that they themſelves were Eye-Witneſſes of it, and, upon the Credit of this their Teſtimony, expect that we ſhould aſſent? Had they been minded to aggrandize their Maſter, they would have diſplay'd indeed the Wonderfulneſs of his Birth, the many Miracles he wrought, the Deſcent of the Holy Ghoſt upon him, the Voice from Heaven declaring him to be the Son of God, the Glories of his Reſurrection, and the Triumph of his Aſcenſion; but by all Means would they have labour'd to conceal the Obſcurity of his Birth and Parentage, the low Condition of his Life, and the ſhameful and ignominious Circumſtances of his Death. Had they been minded to extol him above Meaſure, as a great and mighty Worker of Miracles, they would have expatiated upon every one, that came in their Way, and not compris'd ſome in the ſhort Compaſs of a Verſe or two, and concealed others under a general Enumeration, as we find they frequently do. Had they deſign'd to ſet off themſelves, their Labours, and Perils, and bold Adventures for the Sake of the Goſpel, they might have deſcrib'd them in all their pleaſing Horror; but (what is a ſingular Inſtance of their Truth and Ingenuity) their own mean Extraction and Employments, their Ignorance and Miſtakes, their ambitious Contentions, cowardly Deſertions, and baſe Denial of their Lord in the Time of the greateſt Exigence and Diſtreſs, they themſelves have left upon Record, for all ſucceeding Ages to peruſe and cenſure: Or, had they deſign'd any private Profit or Advantage to themſelves, they took the moſt improper Method in the World, in publiſhing what to the Jews, they knew, would be a Stumbling-block, and to the Gentiles, Fooliſhneſs; and what, they could not but foreſee, would expoſe both them and their Companions to Scorn and Contempt, to Dangers and Hazards, to Poverty and Want, to Bonds and Impriſonment, and Death itſelf.

Their Sufficiency of Intelligence.

NOW, when Perſons are both above all ſecular Intereſt, and forward to lay open too their own Faults and Failings merely for the Sake of Truth, 'tis a ſtrong Preſumption, that they have no Inclination to write Falſehoods; if ſo be they are competent Judges of what they are about, and have ſufficient Means of Information in their Power. And herein the Evangeliſts could not be defective, becauſe (even upon the Suppoſition of no Divine Aſſiſtance or Inſpiration) they had Perſons enow living to give them full Inſtructions, as to the great Periods and Actions of our Saviour's Life. (a) Of his Conception and Birth, and other Particulars preceding his Baptiſm, they might have an Account from Simeon and Anna, and the Parents of John, as well as from Joſeph and Mary. Of his Baptiſm, and what thereupon enſu'd, they might have Intelligence from John and his Diſciples. Of his Faſting and Temptation, from the ſame John, who not unlikely retir'd with him into the Wilderneſs, (where himſelf had been before) and continu'd with him until his Return; and of the ſeveral Tranſactions in his publick Miniſtry, they themſelves (as well as the other Apoſtles) were Eye and Ear-Witneſſes, and as competent Judges of what they heard and ſaw, as the greateſt Philoſophers living. By theſe and ſeveral other Helps, they might be ſupply'd with proper Materials for their reſpective Hiſtories; and when they had thus compiled them, (we ſpeak ſtill upon the Suppoſition of no Inſpiration) their Fidelity appear'd, in their ſpeedy committing them to Writing.

AND

(a) Grew's Coſmog. ſac.

And the Contents of their Goſpels.

AND indeed, if we look into the Contents of the Hiſtories, as well as the Characters of the Hiſtorians, we ſhall ſoon perceive ſuch a Simplicity, as well as Majeſty in their Narrations, ſuch Purity in their Precepts, and ſuch Sublimity in their Doctrines, as plainly denote them to be of Divine Revelation.

MEN of quick Parts and Ingenuity, it is true, may tell us cunningly deviſ'd Fables, and amuſe their Readers with Tales and Romances, that had never any Foundation in Nature: But, to frame ſuch an excellent Syſtem of Morality, as is contain'd in the Goſpels; to give ſuch an extraordinary Account of the Satisfaction for Sin, and of the Nature and Office of a Mediator; to feign the Life and Actions of a Meſſiah, which ſhould accord ſo exactly with the Predictions of the Prophets, and the Types and Prefigurations of the Moſaick Law; and to make the Rewards and Puniſhments of another Life ſo agreeable to human Reaſon, and ſo worthy of the Divine Majeſty; this was a Scheme, which theſe poor illiterate Men were no more able to invent, than they were to create a World. And, yet, notwithſtanding the great Variety and Difficulty of this Province, it is wonderful to obſerve, how all the four Evangeliſts, who wrote at different Times, and in diſtant Places, agree, not only in the main Topicks, but ſometimes in the moſt minute Circumſtances; inſomuch, that whenever they ſeem to diſagree, (b) (which chiefly ariſes from their not confining themſelves to the ſame Words, or the ſame Order of Time, and, with a little critical Obſervation, may eaſily be reconciled) whenever they diſagree, I ſay, it looks as if the Spirit of God deſign'd on Purpoſe that it ſhould be ſo, not only that they might be diſtinct Witneſſes of the ſame Things, but that all ſucceeding Ages of the Chriſtian World might ſee with their Eyes, that they neither tranſcrib'd from one another, nor combin'd, nor complotted together, like crafty Knaves.

I MIGHT here produce the Teſtimony, which God gave to the Truth of the Goſpel, (c) by Signs and Wonders, and by divers Miracles and Gifts of the Holy Ghoſt; and what a mighty Proof the Evangeliſts themſelves gave of their Fidelity in compoſing thoſe Writings, which they, and Thouſands more, were not afraid to ſeal with their Blood: But, becauſe an Agreement with other Authors is always reputed a good Token of hiſtorical Probity, I ſhall rather take notice of ſome few Facts, whereby the profeſs'd Enemies of Chriſtianity (both Jews and Pagans) have confirm'd the Authority of theſe ſacred Penmen.

The Teſtimony of other Authors.

THE (d) Coming of a King out of the Eaſt, who ſhould do great and mighty Actions, was a conſtant Report, (founded on the Sibylline Prophecies) which prevailed about the Time of our Saviour's Birth, and (e) Tacitus, (as a great Politician and Stateſman) will needs have it fulfilled in Veſpaſian or Titus, becauſe they were called out of Judea to the Empire of Rome. The Appearance of a wonderful Star, at the Time of his Nativity, is mention'd by (f) Pliny, in his Natural Hiſtory, under the Name of a bright Comet. The Murther of the Babes of Bethlehem is recorded by Dion in his Life of Octavius Cæſar; and Macrobius (who relates the Thing more at large) tells us, that Herod, upon the Account of the ſame Jealouſy, order'd his own Son to be ſlain. The Miracles that Jeſus did, when he enter'd upon his Miniſtry, the Title he laid claim to of being the Meſſiah, or a Divine Perſon ſent from Heaven to redeem Mankind, and the Doctrines, which he preach'd, (as they are recorded in the Goſpels) are are acknowledg'd and confeſs'd by Celſus, Julian, and Porphyry, as (g) ſeveral of the antient Fathers aſſure us. The Death of our Bleſſed Saviour, and the Manner of his Suffering under Pontius Pilate, and in the Reign of Tiberius, is mention'd (as we ſaid) both by Tacitus, and Lucian. The univerſal Eclipſe, which happen'd at the Time of his Paſſion, is taken notice of by (h) Dionyſius, before he was converted to the Faith. The terrible Earthquake, which was at the ſame Time, is related by Dion, Pliny, and Suetonius; and the Rending of the Veil of the Temple, (mention'd by three Evangeliſts) is teſtify'd by the Jewiſh Hiſtorian, Joſephus, who, among other Paſſages, has given us this memorable one concerning our Saviour Chriſt: "At this Time there was one Jeſus, a wiſe Man, if I may call him a Man; for he did moſt wonderful Works, and was a Teacher of thoſe, who receiv'd the Truth with Delight. He brought many to his Perſuaſion, both of the Jews and Gentiles. This was CHRIST: And tho' he was, by the Inſtigation of ſome of our Nation, and by Pilate's Sentence, hung on the Croſs, yet thoſe, who lov'd him at firſt, did not ceaſe to do ſo; for he came to Life again the third Day, and appear'd to them: And to this Day there remains a Sect of Men, who have from him the Name of Chriſtians." A Paſſage, which (as ſeveral * learned Authors have fully prov'd) is far from being an Interpolation.

That the Apoſtles were actually inſpir'd.

THAT God, who is a Spirit, can ſpeak as intelligibly to the Spirits and Minds of Men, as Men can ſpeak to the Ear, is obvious to our firſt Reflections on the Divine Attributes; and that there was ſome Neceſſity for God's communicating himſelf to the Apoſtles in this Manner, the Difficulty of their Province, which was to preach the Goſpel to all Nations and Languages, ſeems to imply. When Moſes was ſent to Pharaoh, and, for Fear of the Face of ſo great a King, was ready to retract, God, to encourage him, gives him the Promiſe, that (i) he would be with his Mouth, and with Aaron's Mouth, and would teach them what they ſhould ſay: And, in like Manner, when our Saviour tells his Diſciples, that (k) they ſhould be brought before Governors and Kings for his Sake, for a Teſtimony againſt them and the Gentiles; he bids them take no Thought how or what they ſhould ſpeak; for it ſhall be given unto you, ſays he, in the ſame Hour, what ye ought to ſay; for it is not ye that ſpeak, but the Holy Ghoſt, or the Spirit of my Father, which ſpeaketh in you. Now, if Moſes was inſpir'd upon that particular Occaſion, and the Apoſtles, in Caſes that were but perſonal, when brought before Magiſtrates upon Account of their Religion, had Aſſiſtances extraordinary imparted to them, (as whoever looks into their Defences muſt certainly acknowledge that they had) there is much more Reaſon for the ſame Gifts and Communications, in Matters that were to be of general Uſe to the Church in all Ages. To the End therefore that we might have no Doubt concerning the Doctrines, which the Apoſtles were to teach, we find our Saviour making them this farther Promiſe: (l) The Comforter, which is the Holy Ghoſt, whom the Father will ſend in my Name, he ſhall teach you all Things, and bring all Things to your Remembrance, whatſoever I have ſaid unto you, i. e. whatever Doctrines I have commanded you to teach, theſe he will remind you of continually; and whatever I have omitted teaching you, (becauſe you

* Upon the whole, I cannot ſee (ſays the Tranſlator of Joſephus) the leaſt Reaſon to think this Paſſage ſuppoſititious; on the contrary, there ſeems as much Evidence for the Truth and Sincerity of this Place in Joſephus, as of any other in all his Works: And it would have been far more ſtrange, if, in his Circumſtances, and Time, when he wrote, he had ſaid nothing of Chriſt, than that he ſaith what he does. you are not yet capable of receiving them) theſe he will inſtruct you in : For, that this is the true Import of the Promiſe, we may learn from the enſuing Words : (m) I have yet many Things to ſay unto you, but ye cannot bear them now ; but when he, the Spirit of Truth, is come, he ſhall guide you into all Truth, and he ſhall ſhew you Things to come.: And from hence we may be aſſur'd, (n) that all the Sermons and Diſcourſes of the Lord to his Diſciples, recorded in the Evangeliſts, are faithfully deliver'd by his Apoſtles, (as to the genuine Senſe and Import of them) otherwiſe the Holy Ghoſt did not bring to their Remembrance all Things, which he had ſaid unto them; and that, whatever they taught in any of their Epiſtles, addreſs'd to the Chriſtian Churches, they taught by the Guidance and Direction of the ſame Spirit, otherwiſe he did not teach them all Things, nor guide them into all Truth.

As appears from the Nature and End of their Writings.

AND indeed conſidering, that (o) the End of theſe Writings was to be perpetual Monuments of the Doctrines of Jeſus Chriſt, and a ſtanding Rule of Faith to Chriſtians in all Ages of the World, there was a certain Neceſſity, (for fear that the Churches ſhould fall into Error at any Time) that their Authors ſhould be directed and aſſiſted, in the Compoſition of them, by ſome infallible Guide. And, accordingly, we may obſerve, that (whatever Conceptions we may have of their Modeſty) they are no where aſham'd of making open Declarations of their being divinely inſpir'd. For (p) I am a Miniſter of Chriſt, ſays St Paul, according to the Diſpenſation of God, which is given to me to fulfil (i. e. fully to preach) the Word of God; and, (q) for this Cauſe thank we God without ceaſing, becauſe, when ye receiv'd the Word of God, which ye heard of us, ye received it, not as the Word of Men, but, as it is in Truth, the Word of God; and therefore, (r) if any Man be a Prophet or ſpiritual, let him acknowledge that the Things, I write unto you, are the Commandment of the Lord.

AND that this was the Acknowledgment of Chriſtians in all Ages from the Beginning, viz. that the Apoſtles, and other Penmen of the Books of the New Teſtament, were aſſiſted in their Writing, as well as in their Preaching, by the Spirit of God, is evident from innumerable Paſſages in the earlieſt Fathers, and the conſtant (s) Practice of the Church, in reading theſe Writings on the Lord's Day, for the Inſtruction of the People ; in proving all their Doctrines, and confuting Hereticks from their Authority ; and in eſteeming ſuch Perſons, as deny'd their Inſpiration, no better than Infidels : For what Wickedneſs is this, (t) ſays an ancient Author ? Either they believe not the Holy Scriptures to be divinely inſpir'd, and then they are Infidels ; or they pretend to be wiſer than the Holy Ghoſt, and then they are mad, and poſſeſs'd.

NOW, if Perſons ſo near the Times of the Apoſtles, that ſome of them either converſ'd with them, or were acquainted with their immediate Succeſſors ; if the Churches, which receiv'd theſe Writings from the very Hands of the Apoſtles, and kept ſtill the Originals or authentick Copies of them, did ſo unqueſtionably receive them as inſpir'd Writings, and look upon them as the Rule and Pillar of their Faith ; if they read them, together with thoſe Writings of the Prophets, which on all Hands were acknowledg'd to be the Word of God ; prov'd from them all the Doctrines of the Chriſtian Faith ; receiv'd them as the perfect Rule of Chriſtian Duty ; confuted all Hereſies, and erroneous Doctrines from them ; and repreſented thoſe as Infidels, who queſtion'd or deny'd their Inſpiration from the Holy Ghoſt ; they doubtleſs were well aſſur'd, that, as ſuch, they were deliver'd to them by the Apoſtles, and other ſacred Penmen : And, if this was Matter of Fact, what Reaſon have we, in theſe latter Ages, to call in Queſtion what was univerſally acknowledg'd by thoſe, who liv'd in the very Time, wherein the Books were written, and ſent to the Churches of Chriſt?

That the primitive Chriſtians had ſufficient Opportunities of knowing the genuine Books of the New Teſtament.

THAT the primitive Chriſtians had ſufficient Means and Opportunities to diſtinguiſh the genuine and inſpir'd Writings, from what were Apocryphal or ſpurious, no one can doubt, who conſiders, that the original Writings of the Apoſtles themſelves (whoſe Hands they were not unacquainted with) were in their Cuſtody; that tho' the Apoſtles wrote to whole Churches, yet particular Men are frequently nam'd in their Epiſtles, which was a great Means to aſcertain their Authority; that no ſooner were theſe Epiſtles ſent (as is plain in Caſe of (u) St Paul's) to particular Churches, but they were publiſh'd and read, with other ſacred Scriptures, in their open Aſſemblies; that Copies authentically atteſted were immediately taken of them, ſufficient to anſwer the Number of the Churches and Church-Officers, which the Apoſtles had every where ſettled; and (what is more than all) that, at this Time, there ſtill remain'd the miraculous Gift (x) of diſcerning Spirits, whereby Perſons, who were indu'd with it, were enabled to diſtinguiſh true Revelation from Impoſtures.

That the Canon of the New Teſtament was ſettled by St John.

'TIS reaſonable to ſuppoſe therefore, that, during this Period of Time, wherein the Helps and Advantages attending the Church were ſo many, God ſhould provide himſelf with a proper Inſtrument, to ſettle and determine the Rule of our Faith, and thereby preſerve the Chriſtian World from all future Uncertainty. And, accordingly, ſome have obſerv'd, that St John, who wrote his Goſpel and Epiſtles againſt thoſe Hereticks chiefly, who were the moſt notorious Forgers of ſpurious, and Corrupters of the true Books of the Scripture, had his Life prolong'd by Providence, that he might be able both to vindicate, and compleat the whole Canon thereof. 'Tis certain from Euſebius, that he revis'd the three Goſpels, before he wrote his own; and Photius tells us another Circumſtance, viz. that the Verſions of the Goſpel were approv'd by him, as well as the Originals; nor can we doubt, but that, in ſo long a Life, he had ſeen the Works of the reſt of the Apoſtles, and given them his Approbation: As what indeed could be more worthy his Care, or more neceſſary at that Juncture, than that he ſhould aſcertain the Authority of thoſe Writings, which were to be the Church's great Preſervative againſt thoſe Hereſies, which, even then, became too numerous, and which he could not but foreſee, would occaſion no ſmall Scandal and Diſturbance in future Ages?

This prov'd from Tertullian, Iræneus, and the Confeſſion of the Enemies of the Apoſtles.

WHAT gives a farther Confirmation of this Opinion is the Teſtimony of the ſame Euſebius, who, (y) in his Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory, tells us, that in the Beginning of the ſecond Century, about the Time of St John's Death, or immediately after it, there were great Numbers of Perſons, Diſciples, who travelled over the World, building up Churches, where the Apoſtles had before laid the Foundation, and preaching the Faith of Chriſt in Places, that had never heard of it before; who carry'd the Copies of the Goſpels, to all the Churches whither they went, and, not improbably, took along with them other Parts of the New Teſtament beſides, becauſe they were own'd and admitted every where ſoon after. Tertullian (z), who flouriſh'd at the End of the ſecond Century, tells us expreſly, that the Law and the Prophets, the Goſpels and Apoſtolick Writings were the Books, from whence we were to learn our Faith; and, that we may know what he meant by Apoſtolick Writings, he appeals, as Occaſion offers, not only to the four Goſpels, but to the Acts of the Apoſtles, to all the Epiſtles of St Paul, (except that that to the Hebrews) to the firſt of St Peter, and the firſt of St John, as the Writings of the Perſons, to whom they are aſcrib'd. Nay, Irenæus, (a) who liv'd before him, and convers'd (as himſelf tells us) with Polycarp, and others, that had been inſtructed by the Apoſtles and immediate Diſciples of our Lord, mentions the Code of the New Teſtament, as well as of the Old, and calls the one, as well as the other, the Oracles of God, and Writings dictated by his Word and Spirit. And what Wonder indeed, if the firſt Fathers of the Church did ſo, when we find the greateſt Adverſaries of the Chriſtian Name, even (b) Julian and (c) Celſus, acknowledging their Genuineneſs by quoting their Words, and referring us to them upon all Occaſions?

The common Order of the genuine Books.

SOME Difference indeed there always was in the primitive Church, concerning the Order wherein the Epiſtles were plac'd, but none at all in Relation to the Goſpels. The Acts of the Apoſtles, as containing an Account of what they did and ſuffer'd, were very properly plac'd after the four Goſpels, which are the ſeveral Hiſtories of our Saviour's Life and Actions. The Epiſtles did not ſtand according to the Order of Time, wherein they were wrote, but according to the Number, or Dignity of the Perſons, to whom they were addreſs'd. The whole Collection conſiſts of 27 Tracts: And we ſhall ſet them down according to the Order, wherein they now ſtand, which (as it appears from ancient Commentators, as well as all Greek and Latin Manuſcripts) was the moſt common and general Order, wherein they always ſtood.

St Matthew.

THE Goſpel of St Matthew, which, according to the Senſe of all Antiquity, was originally written in Syriack, (the Vulgar Tongue, at that Time, in Jeruſalem, and commonly, in the New Teſtament, called Hebrew) (d) was, in the Apoſtles Time, tranſlated into Greek, which Tranſlation, in the Beginning of the Church, was publiſh'd in all Nations, preſerv'd without Alteration, cited by Clemens Romanus, Barnabas Ignatius, and Polycarp, and, (e) after the Corruption of the Original, was always look'd upon as authentick, and canonical.

St Mark.

THE Goſpel of St Mark was originally the ſame as we now have it, compos'd in Greek by a Diſciple of St Peter, who, in his firſt Epiſtle, ſtiles him (f) his Son, becauſe very probably he had converted him to the Chriſtian Faith. It was certainly revis'd and approv'd by that great Apoſtle, and, from its firſt appearing, allow'd to be canonical, canonical, as is evident from ſeveral Paſſages, which Juſtin Martyr, a very early Writer in the Church, is known to cite from it.

St Luke. THE Goſpel of St Luke was written, in more elegant Greek than ordinary, by a Diſciple of St Paul, who attended him in his Travels, and continually aſſiſted him in the Labour of the Miniſtry, as we may learn from the Hiſtory of the Acts, and (g) the advantageous Character, which the Apoſtle gives him. The Apoſtle is therefore ſaid to have aſſiſted him in the Compoſition of his Hiſtory, which, upon that Account, is quoted by Clemens Romanus, Barnabas, and Irenæus, as Scriptures of undoubted Authority.

And St John. THE Goſpel of St John was the Work of our Saviour's favourite Apoſtle, which, according to Euſebius, was publiſh'd laſt of all, as a Supplement of what the other Evangeliſts had omitted; and, from its firſt Appearance, (h) was always receiv'd as authentick Scripture. Juſtin Martyr and Irenæus have both quoted Paſſages out of it; and (what tends not a little to its Commendation) the Platonick Philoſopher, Amelius, avers, that the Barbarian (as he calls St John) had hit on the right Notion, when, in the firſt Chapter of his Goſpel, he makes the Word of God incarnate.

The Acts of the Apoſtles. THE Book, that is called the Acts of the Apoſtles (which, from the Time of our Lord's Aſcenſion into Heaven, contains the Hiſtory of what his Followers did in Judea, and Jeruſalem, until the Time that they diſpers'd themſelves to preach in different Countries; and then continues a more particular Account of St Paul's Travels and Actions, until he was carry'd to Rome in the Reign of Tiberius) was compos'd by St Luke, as himſelf teſtifies in his Preface to Theophilus, and had this Evidence of its Antiquity, that it was rejected by the Heretick Cerinthus, who was contemporary with the Apoſtles.

St Paul. THE XIV Epiſtles of St Paul were all (except that to the Hebrews) receiv'd with a general Conſent, and read in the Churches, even in the firſt Ages of the Apoſtles, as appears from the Teſtimony of St Peter, who gives us this Character of his Brother's Writings, viz. (i) that in them there are ſome Things hard to be underſtood, which they who are unlearned, and unſtable, wreſt, as they do alſo the other Scriptures, to their own Deſtruction.

St James. THE Catholick Epiſtle of St James, (not of James (k), the Son of Zebedee, Brother of St John; but of James the Juſt, our Lord's near Kinſman, and Biſhop of Jeruſalem) according to the Account of Euſebius, and St Jerom, did, in their Time, ſtand in the Canon of the New Teſtament, tho' it was not ſo commonly quoted by the moſt ancient of the Fathers, as being both very ſhort, and containing almoſt nothing, but moral Inſtructions.

St Peter. THE firſt Epiſtle of St Peter was all along receiv'd in every Church as canonical; nor was there any great Reaſon to call in queſtion the Genuineneſs of the latter, ſince the Author deſcribes himſelf as a Perſon, who was preſent (l) at our Lord's Transfiguration, and as the Writer of the ſecond Letter to the ſame People, to whom he had directed his former, which are Characters that can agree with none ſo well, as with St Peter.

St John.

THE firſt Epiſtle of St John is allow'd by all Antiquity to be authentick; nor were the other two ever diſputed, whether they were Divine Writings or no, but only whether they were the Compoſitions of the Apoſtle, whoſe Name they bear; tho' it was not long, before this Diſpute was decided by their Admiſſion into all the antient Canons of the New Teſtament, as having indeed the ſame Spirit and Sentiments, the ſame Stile and Manner of Expreſſion, with the firſt.

St Jude.

THE Epiſtle of Jude, the Brother of James, tho' queſtion'd by ſome, was, upon mature Conſideration, receiv'd into all the Catalogues of Sacred Books, from the Time of Clemens Alexandrinus: And the Book of Revelation, (which is the laſt in the New Teſtament) for ſeveral Reaſons, that (m) we ſhall hereafter aſſign, was the Work of St John, and compos'd in the Iſle of Patmos, to which Irenæus, Euſebius, and ſeveral others agree, that he was baniſh'd.

Why ſome of theſe were doubted of.

SOME of theſe Books indeed (as we have already hinted) were plac'd among the ἀντιλεγόμενα, or doubtful Pieces, by the Antients; but for this many good Reaſons may be alledg'd. The Epiſtle to the Hebrews had no Name prefix'd to it, which St Paul, out of a Principle of Modeſty, might do, as not ſeeming to aſſume the Office of an Apoſtle to the Hebrews, which was St Peter's immediate Province, and * for this Reaſon it went under ſome Suſpicion of not being his. The ſecond Epiſtle of St Peter † was thought to differ in Stile from the firſt; That of St James, to maintain the Doctrine of Faith and good Works, contrary to St Paul to the Romans; and That of St Jude to quote a Paſſage from an † Apocryphal Book, for which Cauſes they might, for (m) Vid. Diſſert. the 1ſt, in the following Book.

* Without entering into the Teſtimony of the Antients, if we conſult the Epiſtle itſelf, we ſhall find Circumſtances in it, that can ſcarce agree with any other Perſon, than St Paul: For it appears, that it was wrote in Italy, ſince the Author of it ſalutes the Hebrews by the Name of Brethren in Italy, Heb. xiii 24. by a Perſon, who was in Bonds, but ſhortly expected his Liberty, Heb. xiii. 19. and who had Timothy for his Fellow-Labourer; which are three Circumſtances, that agree in no other Perſon, but St Paul. 'Tis certain, that St Luke (as ſome imagine) could not be the Writer of this Epiſtle; for, beſides that the Hebraiſms in it are much more frequent, than in his Goſpel, it is evident, that its Author was a Man of conſummate Knowledge in the Ceremonies and Myſteries of the Jews, which cannot be ſaid of St Luke, who was originally a Gentile; and tho' others have aſcrib'd it to Barnabas, yet, as it no where appears, that Barnabas ever ſtay'd in Italy, or was in Priſon there, ſo the great Difference of Stile between this, and the genuine Letter of Barnabas (which is much rougher, and far leſs elevated) plainly ſhews, that this was the Product of a different Pen; "and St Paul had Reaſon (as Clemens of Alexandria informs us) not to put his Name to the Inſcription "of the Letter, becauſe, writing to the Hebrews, who "had, a long Time, borne a Prejudice againſt him, and "judging that he ſhould become ſuſpected by them, he "acted prudently in making that Concealment." Du Pin's Hiſtory of the Canon, &c. Vol. II. c. 2.

† That there is a Difference in the Stile of the firſt and ſecond Epiſtles of St Peter is allow'd; but it is not ſuch a Difference, as ought to create any Doubt of the Genuineneſs of the Epiſtle. One Reaſon is, becauſe this Difference of Stile does not run through the whole Epiſtle, but affects only one Part of it. Another Reaſon is, that this Difference may be more probably accounted for, than by ſuppoſing the ſecond Epiſtle to come from another Hand, than the firſt. The ſecond Epiſtle is divided into three Chapters; the firſt and the third ſtand clear of this Difficulty, agreeing very well with the Stile of the firſt Epiſtle: The ſecond Chapter is full of bold Figures, and abounds in pompous Words and Expreſſions. It is a Deſcription of the falſe Prophets and Teachers, who infeſted the Church, and perverted the Doctrines of the Goſpel, and ſeems to be an Extract from ſome antient Jewiſh Writer, who had left behind him a Deſcription of the falſe Prophets of his own, and perhaps earlier Times. If this be the Caſe, where is the Wonder, that a Paſſage, tranſcrib'd from another Author, and inſerted into the ſecond Epiſtle, ſhould differ in Stile from St Peter's firſt Epiſtle? Since all muſt agree, that tho' a Man, when he expreſſes his own Sentiments, writes in his own proper Stile, be it what it will, yet, when he tranſlates from another, he naturally follows the Genius of the Original, and adopts the Figures and Metaphors of the Author before him. Biſhop Sherlock's Diſſertation I. annex'd to the Uſe and Intent of Prophecy.

† What the true antient Book was, which St Jude quoted, by whom penn'd, or of what Authority in the Jewiſh Church, no Mortal can tell: This only we know, that it was not among the Canonical Books. But, let the Book be ſuppos'd to have been of as little Authority as you for ſome Time, be rejected. The ſecond and third Epiſtles of St John were too much levelled againſt the Hereticks of that Age, not to provoke their Endeavours to hinder their Reception; and the Book of Revelations contain'd ſome Things, which aim'd ſo directly at Rome, and the Empire, that it might not be thought prudent at firſt to admit it into the Canon.

But admitted into the Canon ſooner, than is pretended.

NOR can it in the leaſt diminiſh the Credit and Authority of the New Teſtament to alledge, that the firſt Recognition of its controverted Books was by the Council of Laodicea, 330 Years after our Lord's Aſcenſion, (n) ſince it is plain, that the Buſineſs of that Council was, to declare, not ſo much which were the authentick Books of Scripture, as which were not; the Growth of heretical Books having made it neceſſary then, tho' not before, (for the better Information of the People) to diſtinguiſh the true from the falſe. For that the true were known long before this Council made their Declaration, (o) is manifeſt from the fifty-ninth Canon, which appoints, that no Books, which were extra Canonem, i. e. none, but ſuch as were Canonical, ſhould be read in Chriſtian Aſſemblies; which Title of Canonical (p) they had, becauſe they were inſerted in the Apoſtles Canons, and the Apoſtles Canons (according to the Opinion of the beſt Critics) were the Canons of Councils, aſſembled before the Council of Nice, becauſe we find them referr'd to in that Council; and were very probably ſtiled Apoſtolical, becauſe they were made by Men, who liv'd next to the Apoſtles Days, and who declar'd, in thoſe Canons, what they had receiv'd from them.

Their late Admiſſion an Argument for them.

BUT allowing theſe diſputed Books to be of later Admittance, than we have given them, yet the only juſt Inference that we can deduce from thence, is, that ſince theſe Books were not every where admitted upon their firſt appearing, this ſhews, that the Church did not proceed raſhly and careleſſly in the Affair; and ſince they were every where admitted afterward, this ſhews, that, upon Examination, clear Proof and Evidence was found of their Genuineneſs; and accordingly they have ever ſince been join'd, by Perſons of all Sects and Opinions, to the reſt of the Books, which we eſteem Canonical.

The Caſe of other antient Books.

WE readily grant, that, in the primitive Times, there were other Books, beſides the Holy Scriptures, wrote by pious and learned Men, and held in ſuch high Eſteem, as to be read in Chriſtian Aſſemblies; but then we are to conſider, that (q) how juſtly ſoever we may value them, yet, upon Enquiry, we ſhall find, that there is ſomething human, ſomething of Infirmity, ſomething of Fallibility in them, which makes them inferior to what is Apoſtolical; that the beſt approv'd Piece of them all (I mean the Epiſtle of Clemens to the Corinthians) was, for many Ages, ſuppos'd to be loſt, and tho', upon its appearing again, the beſt Critics thought they had good Reaſon to pronounce it genuine, yet they could not be ſure that it was entirely free from Corruption or Interpolation; that you pleaſe, yet, if it contain'd a good Deſcription of the antient falſe Prophets, why might not St Jude make uſe of that Deſcription, as well as St Paul quote Heathen Poets? Was it ever made an Objection againſt the Authority of his ſecond Epiſtle to Timothy, that he cites ſome antient Apocryphal Book for the Story of Jannes and Jambres? Or is it any Diminution to the Authority of the Goſpel, that our Saviour (as many learned Men think) in Luke xi. 49. quotes another ſuch Book, under the Title of the Wiſdom of God, and appeals to it, as containing antient Prophecies? If not, how comes it to be any Objection againſt St Jude's Epiſtle, that he quotes a Prophecy of Enoch from the like Authority? For theſe Reaſons little Regard is due to the Objection of the Antients againſt the Authority of St Jude's Epiſtle; and, accordingly, we are inform'd by St Jerom, that, notwithſtanding this Piece of Criticiſm, it was, in his Days, univerſally receiv'd in the Churches. Authoritatem, ſays he, vetuſtate jam & uſu meruit, & inter ſanctas Scripturas computatur. Biſhop Sherlock, ibid.

that though theſe Eccleſiaſtical Writers (as they were called) were, for ſome Time, read in Churches, yet they were not read as Canonical Scripture, but only in the Nature of Homilies, and Exhortations to Virtue and Piety; and that, in Proceſs of Time, even this Practice came to be laid aſide, and nothing allow'd to be read publickly, but what was of undoubted Apoſtolick Authority.

The Canon of the New Teſtament, continu'd entire.

THIS is the true Hiſtory of the Canon of Scripture, in the earlieſt Times of Chriſtianity; and that it continu'd the ſame in ſucceeding Ages, without any Addition or Mutilation, its being tranſlated into ſo many Tongues, in the four firſt Centuries, and diſpers'd into ſo many Hands, in ſo many different Countries, as well as † the Copies of great Antiquity ſtill extant among us, are a convincing Argument; eſpecially conſidering, that the ſeveral Sects of Chriſtians were, all along, ſo jealous and watchful over each other, that no ſpurious Piece could be introduc'd, or genuine Piece ſuppreſs'd, without their Knowledge and Remonſtrance; nor can we imagine, how any Catalogue of Books ſhould be receiv'd, (excluſive of all others) but upon the cleareſt Evidence and Conviction of their containing the true and only authentick Rule of Faith and Practice.

Its Stile and Method vindicated.

WE readily own again, that, in the Books of the New Teſtament, there is not that Elegance of Stile, or Accuracy of Method, which may be obſerv'd in ſome human Compoſitions; but then it ought to be conſider'd, that, as (r) too great a Niceneſs about theſe Matters is an Argument of a little Genius, and an Employ unbecoming the Dignity of the Spirit of God; ſo the Apoſtle has given us a very good Reaſon, why leaſt of all it ſhould have found a Place in ſuch Scriptures, as were deſign'd for the Rule of our Faith: (s) And I, Brethren, when I came to you, came not with Excellency of Speech, or of Wiſdom, declaring unto you the Teſtimony of God; for I determined not to know any Thing among you, but Jeſus Chriſt, and him crucified; and my Speech, and my Preaching was, not with inticing Words of Man's Wiſdom, but in Demonſtration of the Spirit, and of Power, that your Faith ſhould not ſtand in the Wiſdom of Men, but in the Power of God. (t) Strains of Rhetorick, whereby the Paſſions are rais'd to a great Height, are ſometimes neceſſary to gain a preſent Point, and carry a Cauſe by a violent and ſudden Tranſport, before Reaſon can interpoſe; but, ſince Religion was to be propounded upon reaſonable Motives, there was no Need for any Art of this Kind, when the Evidence of the Miracles, by which it was eſtabliſh'd, (here called the Demonſtration of the Spirit, and of Power) afforded ſo many other more certain and convincing Means of Perſuaſion.

BUT there is another Way of accounting for the Want of Elegance, as well as Uniformity, in the Stile and Method of the Evangelical Writers, and that is, by ſuppoſing, that, tho' the Spirit of God took care to direct and over-rule them all along, ſo as to make it impoſſible for them to record any Thing, but what was conſonant to Truth, and expreſſive of his Meaning; yet he might nevertheleſs leave them to their own Words and Manner of Expreſſion, which, conſidering the Difference of their Parts and Education, muſt neceſſarily occaſion a great Variety of Stile, and ſometimes Soleciſms, or Confuſion of Method in their Compoſitions: (u) Which Soleciſms, if they were but expreſſive of their Meaning, were, in that Reſpect, as valuable, as the greateſt Propriety of Language; and which Confuſion the Holy Spirit might the rather allow of, becauſe it might be of Uſe to prevent the Scriptures being corrupted or falſify'd, as they might have been, if either their hiſtorical Part had been digeſted into Diaries or Annals, or their preceptive Part reduc'd to ſeveral diſtinct Heads, and plac'd according to the Rules of Art.

† Such are the Cambridge Copy, in Greek and Latin, containing the four Goſpels, and the Acts of the Apoſtles; That in the French King's Library, containing St Paul's Epiſtles; and That in the Library of the Benedictines of St Germains, all ſuppos'd to be above a Thouſand Years old. The Alexandrian Copy is believ'd to have been written by Thecla, above 1300 Years ago; a Syriack Manuſcript, in the Library of the Duke of Florence, and a Gothick Tranſlation of the four Evangeliſts, formerly belonging to the Abbey of Werdin, are each of them of above a Thouſand Years Antiquity; beſides many more, which are in private Hands. Jenkins's Reaſonableneſs, &c. Other Objections.

WHAT we have ſaid in our former Apparatus concerning the great Obſcurity, ſeeming Contradictions, frequent Digreſſions, tedious Repetitions, falſe Reaſonings, and impertinent Relations, that are complain'd of in the Old Teſtament, may, with a ſmall Variation, be apply'd to the Solution of the like Objections, that are made againſt the New. It is reaſonable to ſuppoſe, (x) that a Book, written ſo many Ages ago, ſince which all the Circumſtances of the World have been ſtrangely alter'd; a Book, written in Languages, which bear ſo little Analogy with thoſe we converſe in; a Book, that delivers many new and unheard of Doctrines, which the World would know nothing of, unleſs they were recorded here; that ſpeaks of many myſterious Points, concerning the Divine Nature, and the ſurprizing Diſpenſations of God's Providence; that gives us an Account of a ſpiritual Kingdom, and another World, which, in this imperfect State, we can have no exact Notices of; that combats all the Vices and Vanities of this wicked World, and, conſequently, incites all the Wit and Malice of the looſe and unthinking Part of Mankind to find out Objections againſt it: It is reaſonable to ſuppoſe, I ſay, that a Book of this Kind ſhould be more liable to Difficulties, and Exceptions, than any other of common Compoſition. But then we are to conſider, that this is a Fault, not chargeable upon the Holy Scriptures, but upon human Infirmities, the Depravation of our Nature, and the Inſufficiency of our Underſtanding to comprehend the deep Things of God.

And its Tranſlations conſider'd.

WHAT the Uſe and Character of the ancient Vulgat, as well as more modern Latin Tranſlations, both of the Old and New Teſtament, are; and what the Riſe and Occaſion of the Engliſh Verſion, which, at preſent, we make Uſe of; in what Point of Light we are to conſider its Defects, and by what Means and Aſſiſtance, be enabled to make a better; theſe were Subjects, that fell under our Obſervation in our former Preparatory Diſcourſe, and all we have to add in this Place is, the great Caution and Sincerity, as well as Skill and Sagacity, that is requiſite in every one, that undertakes a Work of this Nature, bearing always in Mind that awful Denunciation, which is continually hanging over his Head: (y) If any Man ſhall add to the Things, contained in this Book, God ſhall add unto him the Plagues, that are written therein: And if any Man ſhall take away from the Words of this Book, God ſhall take away his Part out of the Book of Life, and out of the holy City, and from the Things, which are written in this Book.

THE HISTORY OF THE BIBLE.

BOOK VIII.

Containing an Account of Things, from the Birth of CHRIST to the Completion of the Canon of the New Teſtament. In all about 97 Years.

CHAP. I.

From the Birth of CHRIST, to the Beginning of the firſt Paſſover.

The Birth of John the Baptiſt, and of Jeſus Chriſt.

From the Beginning of the Goſpels to Matth. ix. 8. Mark ii. 23. Luke vi. 1.

AS ſoon as the Time, foretold by the Prophets †, for the Incarnation of the Son of God, began to draw near, † the Evangeliſt St Luke gives us this

---

† The two principal Prophets, who determine the Period, when our Lord was to appear in the World, are Daniel and Haggai. Daniel foretels, that, at the End of the ſeventy prophetical Weeks, i. e. at the Expiration of four hundred Years, after the Building of the Walls of Jeruſalem, the Meſſiah ſhould come, Chap. ix. 25. and Haggai propheſies, that, before the Deſtruction of the ſecond Temple, (even when the Scepter was departed from Judah, Gen. xlix. 10) the Deſire of all Nations ſhould come, and, by his frequent perſonal Appearance in the Temple, make the Glory of that latter Houſe much greater, than that of the former, Chap. ii. 7, &c.

† The Word Ευαγγέλιον ſignifies, in general, good News, and is of the ſame Import with our Saxon Word Goſpel; only, this Account of the Birth of his great Forerunner, John the Baptiſt †.

While his Father † Zacharias (who was a Prieſt of the eighth Courſe, viz. the Courſe of Abiah) was executing his Office at Jeruſalem, (which was in the latter Part of the Reign of Herod the Great †) it came to only, in the ſacred Uſe of them both, there ſeems to be a Metonymy, whereby the Words, that denote good News, are ſet to ſignify the Hiſtory of that good News, viz. of the Birth and Life, the Miracles and Doctrine, the Death and Reſurrection of our Saviour Chriſt, all of which put together do make up the joyful Tidings, which we call the Goſpel; and from this Etymology of the Words, the Perſons, who have recorded the Life and Actions of our Saviour, are called Evangeliſts, or Writers of the Goſpel. The Works of this Kind, which are receiv'd as Canonical, are but four, viz. that of St Matthew, St Mark, St Luke, and St John; but the ſpurious Pieces, which are handed down to us, (even tho' ſeveral of them be loſt) do exceed the Number of forty. The Truth is, the ancient Hereticks began generally with attacking the Goſpels, in order either to maintain their Errors, or excuſe them. To this Purpoſe, ſome rejected all the genuine Goſpels, and ſubſtituted others, that were ſpurious, in their Room. This produc'd the Goſpels of Apelles, Baſilides, Cerinthus, the Ebionites, and Gnoſticks. Others corrupted the true Goſpels, by ſuppreſſing whatever gave them any Trouble, and inſerting whatever might favour their erroneous Doctrines. Thus the Nazarens corrupted the original Goſpel of St Matthew, as the Marcionites did That of St Luke; while the Alogians rejected St John, as the Ebionites did St Matthew; and the Valentinians only acknowledg'd St John, as the Cerinthians did St Mark. Hammond's Annotations, M. Fabricius's Codex Apocryphus N. Teſt. and Calmet's Dictionary, under the Word Goſpel.

† There are two Places in the Prophets referr'd to, both by our Saviour, and his Evangeliſts, wherein the Baptiſt is deſcrib'd under this Character. The former is in the Prophet Iſaiah, The Voice of one crying in the Wilderneſs, prepare ye the Way of the Lord, make ſtraight in the Deſert an Highway for our God, Chap. xl. 3. and the latter (which is more plain and expreſs) is in Malachi, Behold I will ſend my Meſſenger, and he ſhall prepare the Way before me, &c. Chap. iii. 1. Both the Paſſages allude to Harbingers, and ſuch other Officers, as, upon the Journies of Princes, are employ'd to take the Care that the Ways ſhould be levelled, and put in Order, and all ſuch Obſtructions remov'd, as might hinder their Paſſage, or render it leſs commodious; and the Manner, in which the Baptiſt thus prepar'd the Way of the Lord, was by his Preaching, and by his Baptiſm. By his Preaching, he endeavour'd to bring the Jews to a due Senſe of their Sins; to abate their Confidence in being of Abraham's Seed, and punctual Obſervers of the Ceremonial Law; and to forewarn all of the dreadful Effects of God's Anger, who did not bring forth Fruits, worthy of Repentance: And by his Baptiſm, when adminiſter'd to ſuch Perſons, as were under the Obligation of the Law, he plainly ſhew'd, that he was therein admitting them to ſome Privileges, which they had not before, viz. the Remiſſion of their Sins upon their Faith and Obedience to him, who was the Meſſenger of the Covenant. Since therefore the Baptiſt was born ſix Months before our Saviour, and enter'd upon his Miniſtry ſix Months before our Saviour began his; and ſince no Part of his Doctrine determined in himſelf, and his Baptiſm referr'd every one to Chriſt for Acceptance and Salvation; he is very properly ſaid to be his Harbinger, a Meſſenger ſent to prepare his Way before him, or to ſet all Things in Readineſs for his Approach, by putting an End to the old, and making an Entrance into the new Diſpenſation, in which Senſe he is repreſented by the Fathers, as a Kind of middle Partition between the Law and the Goſpel; of the Law, as a Thing now come to a Period, and of the Goſpel, as commencing under him, who was ſhortly to make his Appearance. Stanhope, on the Epiſtles and Goſpels, Vol. I.

† Some of the Fathers were of Opinion, that this Zacharias was, as this Time, High-Prieſt, upon a falſe Suppoſition, that the offering of Incenſe was reſerv'd to the High Prieſt only: But, beſides the Teſtimony of Joſephus, who tells us expreſly, that Simon, the Son of Boethus, was High Prieſt this Year; it appears from St Luke himſelf, that Zacharias was no more than an ordinary Prieſt, of the Family or Courſe of Abiah, which, of the four and twenty Courſes, appointed by David for the Service of the Temple when it ſhould be built, was the eighth, 1 Chron. xxiv. 10. For, tho' it was the High-Prieſt's Prerogative, on the great Day of Expiation, to enter into the Holy of Holies, and there burn Incenſe, which no ordinary Prieſt might do, Levit. xvi. 12. yet, in the common Service of the Day, each Prieſt, whoſe Lot it was, went every Morning and Evening into the Sanctum, or Body of the Temple, and there burnt the daily Incenſe upon the Altar, which was plac'd before the Veil of the moſt holy Place, Exod. xxx. 6, &c. For theſe, and ſeveral other Reaſons, which Annotators have produc'd, it ſeems plain, that Zacharias could not poſſibly be High-Prieſt at this Time; and, whatever Credit may be given to the Tradition,——That, by the Order of Herod the Great, he was put to Death between the Porch and the Altar, viz. in the Incloſure, that ſurrounded the Altar of Burnt-Offerings; and that, when every one was ignorant of his Murther, a certain Prieſt, thinking that he ſtay'd too long, enter'd into the Temple, and found him dead, and his Blood congealed upon the Ground, and, at the ſame Time, hearing a Voice, that it ſhould never be wip'd out, until his Revenger came; whatever Credit, I ſay, may be given to this Tradition, it was doubtleſs upon this Foundation, that many of the Ancients thought, that Zacharias, the Father of John the Baptiſt, was that Zachariah, Son of Barachiah, mention'd by our Saviour in the Goſpel, whoſe Blood was ſhed between the Temple and the Altar. Pool's and Whitby's Annotations, and Calmet's Dictionary.

† St Luke, in particular, takes notice, that the Time, when our Lord's Forerunner was to be conceiv'd, was in the Reign of Herod, Son of Antipater, (for it was Herod Antipas, that put him to Death) commonly called the Great, who, (under the Romans) fought his Way to the Government of the Jews, and came to his Throne by the Slaughter of their Sanhedrim, by which Means he extinguiſh'd all the Dominion, which, till that Time, they held in the Tribe of Judah, Judah, not in a ſingle Perſon indeed, (for that was extinguiſh'd in the Aſmonæan Family) but in a ſelect Number out of that Royal Tribe, and ſo verify'd the Prophecy of old Jacob, Gen. xlix. 10. that the Scepter, or Government, was departed from Judah, and the Lawgiver from his Feet, which was a certain Sign that Shilo, i. e. the Meſſiah, was ſhortly to come. Pool's Annotations.

† The ſeveral Courſes of the Prieſts begun on the Sabbath-Day, and continu'd to ſerve till the Sabbath following; but, becauſe they were now increas'd to a great Number, (Joſephus tells us, that there were no leſs than a Thouſand in each Courſe) there were ſeveral Parts of the prieſtly Office, (whereof burning of Incenſe was one) which the Courſe, that then miniſter'd, ſeems to have divided among themſelves, for the Week that they were to attend, by Lot. Pool's and Whitby's Annotations.

† A Jewiſh Congregation, for the moſt part, conſiſted of all the Prieſts of the Courſe, which was then in waiting, of the Levites, and of certain Stationary Men, (as they called them) who repreſented the Body of the People, beſides ſome other accidental Worſhippers; and, when the Prieſt went into the Sanctuary, or within the firſt Veil to offer Incenſe, Notice was given by the Sound of a Bell, that it was then the Time of Prayer, whereupon every one preſent offer'd up his Supplications to God ſilently: And tho' this ſilent Prayer was not commanded, yet there ſeems a manifeſt Alluſion to it in thoſe Words of St John, where, at the offering of Incenſe with the Prayers of the Saints, 'tis ſaid, there was Silence in Heaven for half an Hour, Rev. viii. 1, &c. Nor is that Paſſage in Eccleſiaſticus, Chap. l. 19, 20. any bad Repreſentation of this Part of the Jewiſh Worſhip, And the People beſought the Lord, the moſt High, by Prayer, before him, that is merciful, till the Solemnity of the Lord was ended; and then he went down (viz. Simon the High Prieſt) and lifted up his Hands over the whole Congregation of the Children of Iſrael, to give the Bleſſing of the Lord with his Lips. Hammond's and Whitby's Annotations.

† The Jews had a peculiar Notion, that ſuch like Apparitions were always fatal to thoſe that had them, and a ſure Token of their inſtantaneous Death, Gen. xvi. 7. xxii. 11, 15. Exod. xx. 19, &c. but if this were not, 'tis natural for Men to be affrighten'd at ſudden and unuſual Things, eſpecially at any Divine Appearances, whether of God himſelf taking a viſible Shape, or authorizing an Angel ſo to do. For tho' God does not make the Appearances to affrighten us, yet ſuch is the Imbecillity of our Nature, that we cannot but be ſtartled at them; and Reaſon good there is, that God, by this Means, ſhould both declare his own Glory and Majeſty, and humble his poor Creatures, in order to make them more ſuſceptible of his Divine Revelations. Pool's Annotations, and Calmet's Commentary.

† This Word is deriv'd from the Hebrew Maſhach, to anoint, and is the very ſame with Χριστὸς, the Anointed, in Greek. It is a Name ſometimes given to the Kings and High-Prieſts of the Hebrews, 1 Sam. xii. 5, &c. Pſal. cv. 15. but principally, and by Way of Eminence, it belongs to that ſovereign Deliverer, who was expected by the Jews, and whom they vainly expect even to this Day, ſince he is already come at the appointed Time, in the Perſon of our Lord and Saviour JESUS CHRIST. The Jews were us'd to anoint Kings, High-Prieſts, and ſometimes Prophets. Saul, David, Solomon, and Joaſh, Kings of Judah, receiv'd the Royal Unction; Aaron and his Sons receiv'd the Sacerdotal; and Eliſha receiv'd the Prophetical, at leaſt God order'd Elijah to give it to him. But now, tho' JESUS CHRIST united in his own Perſon all the Offices of Prophet, Prieſt, and King, yet we no where find, that he receiv'd any outward or ſenſible Unction; and therefore the Unction, which the Prophets and Apoſtles ſpeak of, with Regard to him, is the ſpiritual and internal Unction of Grace and the Holy Ghoſt, of which the outward Unction was no more than a Figure and Symbol. Calmet's Dictionary.

‖ The Words of Zacharias to the Angel are, Whereby ſhall I know this? For I am an old Man, and my Wife well ſtricken in Years, Luke i. 18. much of the ſame Import with thoſe of Abraham upon a like Occaſion, Whereby ſhall I know that I ſhall inherit the Land of Canaan? Gen. xv. 8. How then came it to paſs, that Abraham was gratify'd with a Sign in the ſame Requeſt, for which Zacharias was puniſh'd with Dumbneſs? Now, tho' there may be a great Similitude in the Words, which are ſpoken by ſeveral Perſons, yet there may, at the ſame Time, be a very conſiderable Difference in the Heart and Habit of Mind, from whence they proceed, which, we muſt all allow, God can ſee much better, than we can perceive by Words. In Relation to Abraham then, the Holy Spirit bears him Teſtimony, that he ſtaggered not at the Promiſe through Unbelief, but was ſtrong in Faith, giving Glory to God, being fully perſuaded, that what he had promiſed, he was able to perform, Rom. iv. 19, 20, &c. and therefore if he aſked a Sign, it was not to beget, but to nouriſh and confirm this Faith in him. But in Zachariah, the aſking of a Sign favour'd of perfect Infidelity, in that he believ'd not an Angel, appearing to him in the Name of the Lord, and in a Place, where evil Angels durſt not come: An Angel, telling him his Prayer was heard, which evil Angels could not know; and acquainting him with Things, which tended to the Glory of God, the Completion of his Promiſes, and the Welfare of Mankind, which evil Angels would not do. His Puniſhment therefore was the juſt Reſult of his Unbelief; but in this Promiſe, and, for his farther Satisfaction, deſire ſome Miracle in Confirmation of it: Whereupon the Angel let him know, "That he was no leſs than "Gabriel, a ſpecial Attendant on God's "Throne, and diſpatch'd on Purpoſe to "inform him of this great Happineſs; "but that, ſince he was ſo incredulous, as "to require a Sign, he ſhould have ſuch "an one, as would be both a Puniſhment "of his Unbelief, and a Confirmation of "his Faith; for, until the Birth of the "Child, he ſhould be both deaf and "dumb;" which accordingly came to paſs: For, when he came out to the People, (who waited to (a) receive his Benediction) he made Signs, that he was not able to ſpeak to them, and they thence inferr'd, that he had ſeen ſome extraordinary Viſion within. After the Time of his Miniſtration however was over, he return'd home, and it was not long before his Wife Elizabeth perceiv'd herſelf with Child, tho' her Modeſty made her conceal it for the Space of five Months.

Six Months after Elizabeth's Conception, the ſame Angel Gabriel † was ſent to Nazareth, a City of Galilee, to a Virgin, nam'd ‡ Mary, (a near Relation to Elizabeth, and of the Houſe of David) who had lately been † eſpous'd to one Joſeph, a Perſon of the ſame Pedigree indeed, (what ſhews the Mercy of God in inflicting it) it was a Puniſhment of ſuch a Nature, as carry'd with it an Anſwer to his Deſire, being no more than a Privation of Speech, until the Words of the Angel were fulfilled. Pool's and Whitby's Annotations.

(a) Numb. vi. 24.

† Nazareth was a City of the Lower Galilee, ſituate in the South Part of that Province, and ſo not far from the Confines of Samaria to the South, and nearer to the Territories of Tyre and Sidon to the North-Weſt. According to Mr Maundrell's Account, in his Journey from Aleppo, it is at preſent only an inconſiderable Village, lying in a Kind of round concave Valley, on the Top of an high Hill. Here is a Convent built over what is ſaid to be the Place of the Annunciation, or where the bleſſed Virgin receiv'd the joyful Meſſage brought her by the Angel. It is built over the Place, I ſay, becauſe the Chamber, where ſhe receiv'd the Angel's Salutation, was, above four Hundred and fifty Years ago, remov'd from Nazareth, and, according to the Roman Legends, tranſported by Angels to Loretto, then a ſmall Village in the Pope's Dominions, but now become a City and Biſhop's See. Here is likewiſe the Houſe of Joſeph, the very ſame, (as the Fryars of the Convent tell you) wherein the Son of God liv'd for near thirty Years in Subjection to Man; and, not far diſtant from hence, they ſhew you the Synagogue, wherein our bleſſed Saviour preach'd that Sermon, (Luke iv. 16.) whereby his Countrymen were ſo exaſperated, that they roſe up, and thruſt him out of the City, and led him to the Brow of the Hill, whereon their City was built, that they might caſt him down headlong, Luke iv. 28, 29. for which Reaſon that Brow is to this Day called the Mountain of Precipitation. Wells's Geography of the New Teſtament.

‡ In our Tranſlation, the Words in the Text run thus,——— To a Virgin, eſpouſed to a Man, whoſe Name was Joſeph, of the Houſe of David; but, in my Opinion, they might better be plac'd in this Manner, ——— To a Virgin, of the Houſe of David, eſpouſed to a Man, whoſe Name was Joſeph, and the Virgin's Name was Mary; becauſe this agrees better with the Words of the Angel, The Lord God ſhall give him the Throne of his Father David. For, ſince the Angel had plainly told the Virgin, that ſhe ſhould have this Son without the Knowledge of any Man, it was not Joſeph's, but Mary's being of the Houſe of David, that made David his Father. Of her immediate Parents, however, the Scripture tells us nothing, not ſo much as their Names; but from Tradition we learn, that ſhe was the Daughter of Joachim and Anna, of the royal Tribe of Judah, and yet related to the Race of Aaron, becauſe Elizabeth, the Wife of Zacharias, was her Couſin. Whitby's Annotations, and Calmet's Dictionary under the Word.

† Eſpouſing or Betrothing was nothing elſe, but a ſolemn Promiſe of Marriage, made by two Perſons, each to other, at ſuch a Diſtance of Time, as they agreed upon. The Manner of performing this Eſpouſal was, either by a Writing, or by a Piece of Silver given to the Bride, or by Cohabitation. The Writing, that was prepar'd on theſe Occaſions, ran in this Form ——— " On ſuch a Day of ſuch a Month, in ſuch a Year, A, the Son of A, has ſaid to B, the "Daughter of B, Be thou my Spouſe according to the Law of Moſes, and the Iſraelites, and I will give thee, for the "Portion of thy Virginity, the Sum of two hundred Zuzims, as it is ordained by the Law. And the ſaid B has conſented "to become his Spouſe, upon theſe Conditions, which the ſaid A has promis'd to perform upon the Day of Marriage. "To this the ſaid A obliges himſelf; and for this he engages all his Goods, even as far as the Cloak, which he "wears upon his Shoulder. Moreover, he promiſes to perform all, that is intended in Contracts of Marriage, in Fa"vour of the Iſraelitiſh Women. Witneſſes A, B, C." The Promiſe by a Piece of Silver, and without Writing, was made before Witneſſes, when the young Man ſaid to his Miſtreſs, Receive this Piece of Silver, as a Pledge that you ſhall become my Spouſe. Laſtly, the Engagement by Cohabitation (according to the Rabbins) was allow'd by Law, Deut. xxiv. 1. but it had been wiſely forbidden by the Antients, becauſe of the Abuſes that might happen, and to prevent the Inconvenience of clandeſtine Marriages. After ſuch Eſpouſal was made, (which was generally when the Parties were young) the Woman continu'd with her Parents ſeveral Months, if not ſome Years, (at leaſt till ſhe was arriv'd at the Age of Puberty) before ſhe was brought home, and her Marriage conſummated: For ſo we find that Samſon's Wiſe indeed, but of no higher Profeſſion, than that of a Carpenter. The Angel, approaching the pious Maid, began to congratulate her with being highly in the Favour of God, and bleſſed above all the reſt of her Sex; becauſe ſhe ſhould have the Happineſs of bearin a Son, called by the Name of JESUS [†], or Saviour, the long expected Meſſiah, to whom God would give the Throne of his Father David [†], and of whoſe Sovereignty and Dominion there ſhould be no End.

CONSCIOUS of her own Virtue, and yet ſurpriz'd at this uncommon Appearance and Salutation, the Holy Virgin [†] began to expoſtulate with the Heavenly Meſſenger the Poſſibility of the Thing, ſince ſhe had all along liv'd in a ſtrict State of Virginity [†]. But the Angel, to ſatisfy her in this Particular, told her, "That this "wonderful Work was to be effected by "the inviſible Power and Operation of the "Holy Ghoſt [†]; and, to ſhew her that "nothing Wiſe remain'd with her Parents a conſiderable Time after Eſpouſal, Judg. xiv. 8, and that the bleſſed Virgin was diſcernably with Child, before ſhe and her intended Huſband came together, Matt. i. 18. Whether this Method of betrothing was at firſt ordain'd, or only approv'd by God, Deut. xx. 7, or whether it be now of any Obligation to us Chriſtians, we ſhall not pretend to determine. 'Tis certain, that it has nothing; that is Typical, nothing of the Carnal Ordinance in it, but ſomething very proper and convenient, viz. that the Parties contracted may have ſome intermediate Time to think ſeriouſly of the great Change, they are going to make in their Conditions; to diſcourſe more freely together about their domeſtick Affairs; and to implore God's Bleſſing and Protection over them and theirs, in all the Changes and Chances of this mortal Life. Pool's Annotations, and Calmet's Dictionary under the Word Marriage.

[†] We read but of few Inſtances in Scripture, where Men had Names determin'd for them by particular Appointment from Heaven, and before the Time of their Birth; and, as ſuch Names appear to be very ſignificant, ſo the Perſons, diſtinguiſh'd by them, were always remarkable for ſome extraordinary Qualities or Events, which their reſpective Names were deſign'd to denote. Our Lord's Name indeed, in Senſe and Subſtance, is the ſame with Joſhua, that famous Leader heretofore, who, after the Death of Moſes, ſettled the Iſraelites in the Promis'd Land, and ſubdu'd the Enemies, that oppos'd their Entrance into it. But, as that Earthly was a Figure of the Heavenly Canaan, ſo was the Captain of That an eminent Type of our Salvation; and, if he was worthy to be called a Saviour, much more is this Jeſus what his Name imports; for he delivers us from the heavieſt of all Bondages, and from the moſt formidable of all Enemies, as he, and he only it is, who ſaves his People from their Sins. Stanhope, on the Epiſtles and Goſpels, Vol. I.

[†] The Prophets, in their Predictions, are very full and expreſs, that the Meſſiah ſhould be a great King, and deſcend from the Line of David; vid. Pſal. x. 16. Iſaiah ix. 6, 7. Dan. vii. 14. and Ezek. xxvi. 7. and therefore the Angel, in his Meſſage to Mary, characterizes him, as a Succeſſor to that Prince's Throne, and ſeems to accommodate himſelf, in ſome Meaſure, to the Prejudices of the Jews, and perhaps of the Virgin-Mother herſelf, who, being bred up in the Synagogue, might expect that the Meſſiah ſhould be a temporal Prince, as well as they: But our Lord's Kingdom (as himſelf plainly declares) is not of this World, nor of the like Nature with other Empires upon Earth. His Reign is in the Hearts and Minds of Men; and his Dominion is in the Church, againſt which the Gates of Hell ſhall not prevail, and in which, of the Increaſe of his Government and Peace there ſhall be no End, Iſa. ix. 7. until the End cometh, when he ſhall deliver up the Kingdom to God, even the Father, 1 Cor. xv. 24. Calmet's Commentary.

[†] The Words of her Expoſtulation are, How ſhall this be, ſeeing I know not a Man? Which ſome look upon as no more, than a Reply of Admiration, and a Deſire to be further inform'd in what Manner God intended to effect ſuch a wonderful Work; tho' others perceive in them ſome ſmall Indications of Diffidence, but what might be more excuſable, becauſe there had been no ſuch Precedent of the Divine Power made in the World, as to cauſe a Virgin to conceive, and bring forth a Son. Pool's Annotations.

[†] Some are of Opinion, that Mary, very early in her Life, had made a Vow of perpetual Chaſtity, and that Joſeph was appointed her Huſband, not to live with her in the ordinary Uſe of Marriage, but merely to be the Guardian of her Virginity: But, beſides that no Vows of perpetual Virginity were ever in Uſe among the Jews, it can hardly be ſuppos'd, that a Jewiſh Woman, in whom Barrenneſs was reputed a Reproach, and look'd upon as a Curſe, would be ever induc'd to make one. Among the Precepts of the Law, the Jewiſh Doctors account Matrimony to be one, Gen. i. 28, from which none are exempted, but they who devote themſelves wholly to the Study of the Law: But, ſince this was not the Bleſſed Virgin's Caſe, it reflects a Diſhonour upon her Memory to imagine, that, after ſhe had enter'd into ſuch a Vow, ſhe ſhould admit of an Eſpouſal to Joſeph, which could be for no other End, but merely to mock him. Pool's and Whitby's Annotations.

[†] The Words in the Text are, the Holy Ghoſt ſhall come upon thee, and the Power of the Higheſt ſhall overſhadow thee; wherein, according to the uſual Modeſty of Scripture-Language, is imply'd all that Action of the Holy Ghoſt, whereby the Bleſſed Virgin was enabled to become fruitful, and the Place of ordinary Generation was in this Caſe ſupply'd. Now, when this Action is in Scripture repreſented as entirely the Work of God, and yet is attributed to the Holy Ghoſt in particular, we are not to underſtand it ſo peculiarly his, that the two other Perſons, ſubſiſting in the Matth. i. 18.

From the Beginning of the Goſpels to Matth. ix 8
Mark ii. 23
Luke vi. 1

Father's Speech was immediately reſtor'd to him, which he employ'd in the Praiſes of Almighty God, who had wrought ſuch Prodigies among them.

THE Holy Virgin, being return'd to Nazareth, ſtill concealed the Myſtery, which God had wrought in her, from her eſpous'd Huſband, but her pregnant Symptoms ſoon diſcover'd it; and tho' her Deportment had been extremely chaſt and modeſt, yet he might be well aſſur'd that ſhe was with Child. This rais'd no little Concern in his Breaſt; but, being a merciful good Man ‖, and unwilling, either to expoſe the Honour of her Family, which he thought ſhe had ſtain'd, or to inflict publick Puniſhment upon her, (b) according to the Sentence of the Law, he reſolv'd upon a Separation † with the utmoſt Privacy: But, before he came to put it in Execution, an Angel from Heaven † appear'd to him in a Viſion, informing him, "That his Wife's Conception was the immediate Work of the "Holy Ghoſt, and that ſhe ſhould bear a "Son, the ſame Perſon (c), whom the "Prophet had foretold under the Name "of Emanuel, or God with us:" Whereupon Joſeph was not diſobedient to the Heavenly Viſion, but taking the Holy Virgin

‖ The Words in the Text, as we tranſlate them, are ——— Joſeph her Huſband being a juſt Man: But, if he was a juſt Man, and was ſatisfy'd, that his intended Wife had, ſome Way or other, violated her Chaſtity, (as he knew nothing to the contrary at that Time) inſtead of ſcreening her Crime, he ought to have brought her to Puniſhment, Deut. xxii. 20, 21. Now it is to be obſerv'd, that, upon the Diſcovery of his Wife's Pregnancy, Joſeph had the Choice of three Things, 1ſt, Either he might (notwithſtanding this) have taken her to his Houſe as his Wife, becauſe the Law of Divorce laid none under an Obligation, but gave a Permiſſion only (in Caſe of ſome diſcover'd Uncleanneſs) to put away the Wife: Or 2dly, He might give her a Bill of Divorcement, either in publick or in private, (for that was left to his Option) either before two or three Witneſſes, or before a proper Magiſtrate, and that without ſpecifying any Crime againſt her: Or 3dly, He might, according to the Law, have brought her upon her Tryal, whether, in the Matter of her Pregnancy, ſhe had ſuffer'd a Rape, or was herſelf conſenting, Deut. xxii. 23, 24. Had therefore Joſeph done the firſt of theſe, he muſt have acted counter to his own Honour, and have incurr'd the common Reproach, that he, who retained an Adultereſs, is a Fool. Had he done the laſt of theſe, he was not ſure of convicting her; becauſe, upon Examination, it might appear, that ſhe had been forc'd; and, in that Caſe, the Man, that did it, was to die, Deut. xxii. 25. or ſhe might have been with Child before her betrothing, and, in that Caſe, ſhe was only oblig'd to marry the Perſon, that had abus'd her, Ver. 28, 29. Upon the Whole therefore, Joſeph thought it the beſt and juſteſt Way to proceed upon the Foot of a Divorce. Mary's being viſibly with Child was Reaſon ſufficient to authorize his parting with her; but he did not know for certain, that ſhe was guilty of Adultery, or that, conſequently, ſhe deſerv'd to die; and therefore he did not think it right, by bringing her upon her Tryal, to expoſe her. Pool's Annotations, and Calmet's Commentary, and Spanheim's Dub. Evang. Part I. Dub. 31.

(b) Deut. xxii. 23.

† The common Way of Separation among the Jews was, by the Man's giving the Woman a Letter of Divorce. This, in their Language, is called Gheth, and the Subſtance of it is to this Effect ——— "On ſuch a Day, Month, "and Year, and at ſuch a Place, I A divorce you voluntarily, put you away, and reſtore you to your Liberty, even "you B, who was heretofore my Wife, and I permit you to marry whom you pleaſe." When the Day of Divorce comes, the Rabbi, that attends, having ſtrictly examin'd both Parties, and finding that they are reſolv'd to part, bids the Woman open her Hands, and, when ſhe has receiv'd the Deed, to cloſe them both together, leſt it ſhould chance to fall to the Ground. The Man, when he gives her the Parchment, (for on Parchment the Bill of Divorce was to be wrote, in the Preſence of two Rabbins, and with many other trifling Circumſtances) tells her, Here is thy Divorce. I put thee away from me, and leave thee at Liberty to marry whom thou pleaſeſt; and, when the Woman has taken it, and the Rabbi read it over once more, ſhe is entirely free. There is in this Ceremony however to be remark'd, that they always endeavour to have ten, or twelve Perſons at it, beſides the two Witneſſes, who ſign the Deed. When therefore Joſeph intended to diſmiſs Mary privately, it could not be, by having no Witneſſes at all, but as few as the Nature of the Thing would bear, and by giving her the Letter of Divorcement into her own Hand, which ſhe might ſuppreſs, if ſhe thought fit, or by inſerting no Accuſation againſt her in it, in Caſe it came to be read before the Company. Calmet's Dictionary, under the Word Divorce. Whitby's and Beauſobre's Annotations.

† This Viſion was in a Dream, and while he was aſleep; and Dreams, we know, were one Way, whereby God revealed his Mind to People formerly, Job vii. 14. whereby he made himſelf known to his Prophets, Numb xii. 6. and not to Prophets only, but to Pagan Princes ſometimes, as appears by the Inſtances both of Pharaoh, and Nebuchadnezzar, Gen. xli. 1. Dan. ii. 1. But how to diſtinguiſh Divine from Natural Dreams, 'tis difficult to ſay, unleſs it be by the clear and diſtinct Series of their Repreſentation, and the forceable Impreſſion, which they leave upon Men's Spirits; whereas natural Dreams, for the moſt part, are rambling and inconſiſtent, and whoſo regardeth them (ſays the wiſe Son of Sirach) is like him, who catcheth at a Shadow, or followeth after the Wind, Eccluſ. xxxiv. 2. Pool's Annotations. Why God reveals himſelf by Dreams, and in the Night-Time. Vid. Spanheim's Dub. Evang. Part. ii. Dub. 59.

Luke ii. 1.

SOME Time before this, Auguſtus Cæſar had iſſu'd out a general Edict, that all Perſons in the Roman Empire, with their Eſtates and Conditions, ſhould be regiſter'd at certain appointed Places, according to their reſpective Provinces, Cities and Families. By Virtue of this Edict, Joſeph and his Wife Mary, being both of the Tribe of Judah, and Family of David, were oblig'd to go as far as Bethlehem †, which was the Mother-City of their Tribe, there to have their Names and Eſtates enrolled. The great Conflux of People, upon this Occaſion, had already filled all the Inns †, and Houſes of Reception, ſo that no better Place could be found for their Lodging

† The Word Firſt-born, in Scripture, admits of various Significations. Sometimes (and moſt commonly indeed) it dentes the Eldeſt of two or more Children, as Eliab is called the Firſt-born of Jeſſe, 1 Sam. xvii. 13. at others, the firſt that is born, without Regard to any elſe, as when God ſays to Moſes, Sanctify me all the Firſt-born, Exod. xiii. 2. In ſome Places it imports figuratively what is moſt dearly belov'd by us, in which Senſe, God frequently calls the Iſraelites his Firſt-born; and in others, what is moſt remarkable for Greatneſs or Excellency, as God promiſes David, (who was but a younger Brother of the Family) to make him the Firſt born of the Kings of the Earth, Pſal. lxxxix. 27. In any of theſe three laſt Senſes our Saviour might very properly be called his Mother's Firſt-born Son, for as much as he was really her firſt Child; her moſt, and only belov'd; and the moſt illuſtrious of his Race: But then Joſeph's not knowing his Wife until ſhe was deliver'd of her Firſt-born Son, ſeems to imply, that he knew her afterwards. Thoſe, who maintain the perpetual Virginity of the Bleſſed Mother, tell us, that ἕως οὗ, which we render until, in ſeveral Places of Scripture, has Relation only to the Time which precedes, and not to that which follows any Event; ſo that he knew her not until, may be taken in the ſame Senſe, as Samuel came not to ſee Saul till the Day of his Death, 1 Sam. xv. 35. i. e. he never came to ſee him: But, (beſides that moſt of the Paſſages, which are produc'd to this Purpoſe, are far from coming up to the Caſe in Hand) ſince the Angel commanded Joſeph to take Mary as his Wife, without any Intimation, that he ſhould not perform the Duty of an Huſband to her, it is not eaſy to conceive, why he ſhould live twelve Years with her, and all that while deny that Duty, which both the Law and the Canons of the Jews command the Huſband to pay his Wife, Exod. xxi. 10. If we imagine, that our Saviour would have been diſhonour'd in any other's lying in the ſame Bed after him, we ſeem to forget, how much he humbled and debas'd himſelf, in lying in that Bed firſt, and then in a Stable, and a Manger. But, leaving this Queſtion to thoſe, who affect to be curious beyond what is written, we may ſafely conclude with St Baſil, ——— "That, tho' it was "neceſſary for the Completion of the Prophecy, that the Mother of our Lord ſhould continue a Virgin, until ſhe had "brought forth her Firſt-born; yet, what ſhe was afterwards, 'tis idle to diſcuſs, becauſe it is of no Manner of "Concern to the Myſtery." Howell's Hiſtory, in the Notes, Pool's and Whitby's Annotations, and Spanheim's Dub. Evang. Part. i. Dub. 28.

† Bethlehem, where our Saviour was born (for there was another City of the ſame Name in the Tribe of Zebulon) is ſituate on the Declivity of an Hill, in the Tribe of Judah, two Leagues diſtant from Jeruſalem, and near thirty from Nazareth; ſo that we might juſtly wonder, how the Bleſſed Virgin, big with Child as ſhe was, could be able to take ſo long a Journey on Foot, (for we hear of no other Voiture that ſhe had) were it not preſumable, that the Child, which ſhe conceiv'd without Loſs of her Virginity, ſhe might be enabled to carry without the Senſe of any Load, or Uneaſineſs. What might poſſibly be the Motive of her taking ſuch a Journey, is not ſo well accounted for by pretending that ſhe was an Heireſs, and the ſole Relict of her Family, which, upon this Occaſion, ſhe was oblig'd to repreſent; as it is by ſaying, that this was done by the eſpecial Providence and Appointment of God, who order'd this Enrollment (which Auguſtus intended to have had done before) to be delay'd to this very Time, and then inſtigated the Bleſſed Virgin to accompany her Huſband, that ſo Chriſt might be born in Bethlehem, according to the Prediction of the Prophet, Micah v. 2. and that his Lineage and Family might at that Time be known, and preſerv'd in the publick Tables. The Birth indeed of our Bleſſed Saviour (more than its Extent or Riches) has made Bethlehem ever ſince a Place of high Renown, which is generally viſited by Pilgrims, and, at preſent, is furniſh'd, not only with a Convent of the Latins, but alſo with one of the Greeks, and another of the Armenians. Here are ſhewn you the very Place, where our Saviour was born; the Manger, in which he was laid; and the Cave or Grot, in which the Bleſſed Virgin hid herſelf, and her Divine Babe, from the Malice of Herod, for ſome Time, before their Departure into Egypt. Here are ſhewn you likewiſe the Chapel of St Joſeph, the ſuppos'd Father of our Lord; the Chapel of the Innocents; as alſo thoſe of St Jerom, St Paula, and Euſtochium. About half a Mile Eaſtward from the Town, you ſee the Field, where the Shepherds were watching their Flocks, when they receiv'd the glad Tidings of the Birth of CHRIST, and, not far from the Field, the Village, where they dwelt. Whitby's Annotations, Calmet's Commentary, and Wells's Geography of the New Teſtament.

† The Inns in the Eaſt are, even to this Day, large ſquare Buildings, but generally no more than one Story high, with a ſpacious Court in the Middle of them. Into this Court you enter in at a wide Gate, and, on the Right and Left Lodging than a Stable, where they had not been long, before the Bleſſed Virgin was deliver'd of a Son, whom (herſelf performing the Office of a Midwife †) ſhe bound in ſwaddling Cloaths, and laid down to reſt in a Manger. But, notwithſtanding this Obſcurity of our Saviour's Birth, God was pleas'd that very Night, by the Meſſage of an Angel, with a radiant Light ſurrounding him, to make a pompous Revelation of it to certain poor Shepherds, who were attending their Flocks on the Plains of Bethlehem; and, after one Angel had deliver'd the joyful Tidings, an innumerable Company, of the ſame Celeſtial Choir, broke out all together into this triumphant Doxology, Glory be to God on high, Peace on Earth, and Good-Will towards Men.

No ſooner was this heavenly Concert ended, but the overjoy'd Shepherds, remembering the Signs which the Angel, before he diſappear'd, had given them, immediately haſten'd to Bethlehem, where they found the Virgin-Mother, and Joſeph the ſuppos'd Father, attending the God-like Babe, whom, in humble Reverence, they ador'd, and then return'd, praiſing and extolling the Mercies of God, and, to the great Amazement of all that heard them, publiſhing in all Places what they knew concerning this Child.

As ſoon as the Child was eight Days old, his Parents had him circumcis'd † according to the Law; when, purſuant to the Order which the Angel had given before his Conception, they called his Name JESUS; and, as ſoon as he was forty Days old, two other Ceremonies were perform'd, viz. the Purification † of his Mother, and the Preſentation of her Firſt-born. Tho' therefore her Son's immaculate Left-Hand, meet with Rooms, that are appointed for Travellers to lodge in. Thoſe, that come firſt, take the Rooms they like beſt, but muſt be mindful to provide themſelves both with Bedding and Victuals, becauſe the Rooms are perfectly naked, and have no Furniture in them. 'Tis ſome Comfort however, that, for this Lodging (ſuch as it is) you'll pay nothing, only a ſmall Toll to the Town, as you paſs along; and have no Reaſon to fear the Loſs of any Thing you bring with you, becauſe the Maſter of the Inn takes great Care of the Gate at Night, and is indeed reſponſible for the Safety of whatever Baggage you carry into your Lodging. Calmet's Commentary.

† Which ſhe could not have done, to be ſure, had ſhe been deliver'd in the common Manner of other Women: But it was always the Opinion of the Church, from the Days of Gregory Nazianzen until now, (tho' before his Days there were ſome Opinions to the contrary) that, as there was no Sin in the Conception, ſo neither had the Virgin any Pains in the Production; for to her alone the Puniſhment of Eve, that in Sorrow ſhe ſhould bring forth Children, did not extend; becauſe, where nothing of Sin was the Ingredient, there nothing of Miſery could cohabit. Taylor's Life of Chriſt.

† Our Bleſſed Lord, as he was the ſupreme Lawgiver of the World, was not, in Strictneſs, bound to the Obſervation of his own Law, nor did he ſtand in any Need of Circumciſion, conſider'd as a Remedy againſt Original Sin; becauſe, in his Incarnation, he had contracted no Pollution; but, as he was made of a Woman, made under the Law, and came (as himſelf teſtifies, Matth. iii. 15.) to fulfil all Righteouſneſs, it became him to receive the Character, which diſtinguiſh'd the Jews from all other Nations. Among the Jews indeed, it was thought a Reproach to keep company with Perſons that were not circumcis'd. Thou wenteſt into Men uncircumciſed, and didſt eat with them, is the Accuſation, which they brought againſt St Peter, Acts. xi. 3. and therefore, as our Lord was ſent chiefly to the loſt Sheep of Iſrael, he could not have been qualify'd for their Acceptance and free Converſation, had he not ſubmitted to this Ordinance. Of him, was that moſt glorious of all the Promiſes made to Abraham intended, In thy Seed ſhall all the Nations of the Earth be bleſſed, Gal. iii. 16. And therefore fit it was, that he ſhould have the Seal or Teſtimony of Circumciſion, in order to ſhew, that he was truly and rightly deſcended of that Anceſtor: And, as he was come to be the Mediator of a New and better Covenant, it was but decent, that the former ſhould recede with Honour, and, that it might do ſo, himſelf ſhould approve of a Sacrament, which was both of Divine Inſtitution, and a Means of Admiſſion into that former Covenant. Pool's Annotations, and Stanhope, on the Epiſtles and Goſpels, Vol. I.

† The Law concerning the Purification of Women we have in the xiith Chapter of Leviticus, wherein it is ordain'd, that a Woman, after bearing of Children, ſhould continue, for a certain Number of Days, in a State, which the Law term'd unclean. For the ſeven firſt Days, all Converſation or Contact polluted them, that approach'd her, and for three and thirty Days more, (which in all amounted to forty) ſhe was ſtill (tho' in an inferior Degree) reputed unclean; but, at the Expiration of this Term, if her Child was a Son, (for the Time was double for a Daughter) ſhe was commanded to bring a Burnt-Offering, and a Sin-Offering, which wip'd out the Stain, which the Law laid upon her, and reſtor'd her to all the Purity and Privileges, ſhe had before. Now, tho' the miraculous Conception of the Bleſſed Virgin ſet her quite above any Obligation to the Law of Impurity, yet, ſince her being a Mother was ſufficiently culate Conception needed not that Ceremony, yet the Holy Virgin went up with Joſeph to Jeruſalem, there to offer the Sacrifice [†] preſcrib'd by the Law for her own Purification, and there to preſent her Son to the Lord, by delivering him into the Prieſt's Hands, and redeeming him again for five Shekels. But, while ſhe was in the Temple performing this, old Simeon [†] (who had long waited for the Redemption of Iſrael, and had been promis'd, by the Mouth of Heaven, that he ſhould not leave this World, before he had ſeen the illuſtrious Perſon who was to effect it) came in, and taking the Bleſſed Infant in his Arms, in an heavenly Extacy prais'd God for the Completion of his Promiſes, in letting him live to ſee the Saviour of the World, before he quitted it. And no ſooner had he ended his Divine Rapture, but an antient Widow of the Tribe of Aſer, whoſe Name was Anna, and whoſe Piety and Devotion, Severity of Life, and conſtant Frequentation of the publick Worſhip were very remarkable, coming into the Temple, and being herſelf likewiſe excited by a prophetick Spirit, gave God Thanks for his infinite Mercies; teſtifying, that this Child was the true Meſſiah, and declaring the ſame to all ſuch devout Perſons in Jeruſalem, as waited for his Coming.

ciently notorious, tho' the Manner of her being ſo was a Secret; 'twas fit, that ſhe ſhould ſubmit, as the known Mother of a Son, to the Ceremonies expected from her. Her Sin-Offering was not indeed due in any Senſe; but ſhe lay under the ſame legal Incapacity, in the Eye of the World, as other Women did, and was to be reſtor'd to the Temple by it. Her Burnt-Offering was not due, as that of other Parents is to commemorate a Deliverance from Pangs and Danger; but never, ſure, were Thanks ſo juſtly due for any Son, as this; never from any Mother, as from her, who had the Honour to bring forth her own and the World's Saviour, the Bleſſing and Expectation of all the Earth. As therefore he was circumcis'd in his own Perſon, tho' the myſtical and moral Part of Circumciſion had nothing to do with him; ſo his Mother ſubmitted to all the Purifications of any other Iſraelitiſh Woman, tho' ſhe partook not in any Degree of the Infirmities and Pollutions common to other Births. Stanhope, on the Epiſtles and Goſpels, Vol. IV.

[†] What the Bleſſed Virgin offer'd, we read, was a Pair of Turtles, which being the Oblation appointed only for the meaner Sort of People, Lev. xii. 6, 8. diſcovers the Poverty of Joſeph and Mary, that they could not reach to a Lamb of the firſt Year, the Offering, which they, who had Ability, were oblig'd to make. Whitby's Annotations.

[†] Some are of Opinion, that this Simeon was the Son and Succeſſor of Hillel, a very famous Doctor in the Jewiſh Church before our Saviour's Time, and that he was either the Father, or Maſter of Gamaliel, at whoſe Feet St Paul was educated. But, (beſides that, we can hardly ſuppoſe, how a Perſon of this Note could make ſo publick a Declaration in Favour of our Lord, and yet, no more Notice be taken of it) if we look into the ſeveral Revelations, which God, at this Time, was pleas'd to give of his Son, we ſhall find that none of them were directed to any of the Phariſees, or principal Doctors of the Law, but that to Joſeph a Carpenter, to Zacharias an ordinary Prieſt, and to a Company of poor Shepherds, ſuch Diſcoveries were made: And therefore, it is much more reaſonable to preſume that this Simeon, to whom God had revealed the Time of Chriſt's Coming, was ſome honeſt plain Man, more remarkable for his Piety and Devotion, than any other Quality or Accompliſhment. When he came into the Temple, 'tis ſaid, that among the other Mothers who brought their Children to be preſented to the Lord, he obſerv'd the Holy Virgin all ſhining with Rays of Light, and that, putting the Multitude aſide, he went directly to her, gave her his Bleſſing, took the Child Jeſus in his Arms, and, being divinely inſpir'd, pronounc'd the Canticle, Nunc dimittis. Nicephorus relates, that, as ſoon as he return'd the Child to his Mother, he died; and Epiphanius adds, that the Hebrew Prieſts refus'd to give him Burial, becauſe he had ſpoken of our Saviour with too much Advantage. But theſe Traditions may be groundleſs Fictions. Pool's Annotations, Calmet's Commentary, and Dictionary, under the Word Simeon.

[‖] The Words in St Luke are, when they had performed all Things according to the Law of the Lord, they returned into Galilee to their own City Nazareth, Chap. ii. 39. which muſt be interpreted of ſome Time at leaſt, after they had perform'd theſe Things. For upon Suppoſition, that the Magians came to Bethlehem, after that Joſeph and Mary had been at Jeruſalem with the Child, upon the Child's Return from thence, his Parents muſt have taken Bethlehem in their Way, and there made ſome ſmall Stay, (in which Time we ſuppoſe that the Wiſe-men came) before they departed to the Place of their ſettled Abode: Becauſe the other two Suppoſitions, viz. That the Wiſe-men came to Bethlehem before the Preſentation of the Child at Jeruſalem, or, that they came not till he was in the ſecond Year of his Age, when his Parents, upon ſome Buſineſs or other, happen'd to be at Bethlehem, are attended with more Difficulties, than can eaſily be ſurmounted. to the Jews, caus'd an uncommon Star to ariſe in the Eaſt, which ſome Wiſe-men, or Aſtronomers, in thoſe Parts obſerving, and underſtanding withal, that this was to ſignify the Birth of the Meſſiah promis'd to the Jews, travelled to the Metropolis of Judea, there enquiring after this new-born Prince, that they might teſtify their Homage and Adoration of him. Their publick Character and Appearance, and their openly calling him the King of the Jews, put Herod † into a great Conſternation, and the whole City indeed into no ſmall Commotion, as both fearing, and hoping ſomething extraordinary.

Herod's murtherous Intentions againſt him diſappointed.

HEROD however, being reſolv'd to deſtroy this ſuppos'd Rival in his Kingdom, immediately aſſembled the whole Body of the Sanhedrim, and demanded of them the very Place where the Meſſiah ſhould be born. Bethlehem, in the Land aſſign'd to the Tribe of Judah, (they told him) was the very Spot, which the Holy Spirit, by the Prophet Micah, had mark'd out for this great Event; which when he underſtood, he diſmiſs'd the Aſſembly; and ſending for the abovemention'd Aſtronomers, with the utmoſt Secrecy he enquir'd of them the exact Time of the Star's firſt Appearance, and then diſmiſs'd them to Bethlehem, with Orders to make diligent Search for the young Prince, and, when they had diſcover'd where he was, to bring him Word to Jeruſalem, that he, in like Manner, might go, and pay him his Homage: But this Pretence of worſhipping was no more, than a Cloak to his Intention of killing the Child.

THESE Perſons however, having receiv'd the King's Inſtructions, † departed towards Bethlehem, and, in their Way, were very agreeably ſurpris'd with a new Sight of the ſame miraculous Star, they had ſeen in their own Country, which went before them, and (like the fiery Pillar in the Wilderneſs) directed them to the very Houſe, where Jeſus and his Mother abode. As ſoon as they enter'd in, they fell proſtrate on the Ground, according to the Eaſtern Cuſtom, and, having in this Manner ador'd the Child, † preſented him with the richeſt Products of their Country, Gold and precious Odours, more particularly Frankincenſe and Myrrh.

HAVING thus perform'd their Homage and Congratulations, theſe Eaſtern Strangers were thinking of nothing more, than to return to Jeruſalem, and acquaint Herod with the happy Diſcovery, they had made; but God, who knew the Heart of that Tyrant, prevented them by a Viſion that very Night, which directed them into their own Country another Way; and, not long after, ſent an Angel to Joſeph, to acquaint him with Herod's intended Cruelty againſt the Child, and to order him to retire into Egypt, with him and his Mother, and there to continue, till farther Notice; which Joſeph inſtantly obey'd, and, for Fear of Diſcovery, taking the Advantage of the Night, with all poſſible Speed ſet forward for Egypt.

† Herod, who was naturally of a jealous and ſuſpicious Temper, knew very well, that himſelf was hated by the Jews, and that the Jews were then in full Expectation of the Meſſiah, (a Prince, that was to ſubdue all other Nations) to come and reign over them, and had therefore great Reaſon to fear, that this Rumour of a King's being born among them, confirm'd by ſuch extraordinary Means, as Perſons coming from a far Country, and conducted to Jeruſalem by the Guidance of a wonderful Star, might be a Means to excite Sedition among the People, and occaſion perhaps a Revolution in the Government. Calmet's Commentary.

† Some, upon this Occaſion, are apt to wonder, why none of the Jews ſhould have the Curioſity to attend the Wiſe-men in their Journey to Bethlehem; and the Reaſon, that is commonly aſſign'd for their Omiſſion in this Reſpect, is the Dread they might have of offending the Tyrant, under whom they liv'd: But, as it is highly probable, that, when the Wiſe-men came to Jeruſalem, they made their immediate Application to Court, as the moſt likely Place where to gain Intelligence of him, that was born King of the Jews; and, as it is much to be queſtion'd, whether Herod, when he conven'd the Doctors of the Law, made any Mention of the Wiſe men's Coming, but nakedly propounded the Queſtion to them, where Chriſt was to be born? So there is great Reaſon to preſume, that he ſent them away ſo privately, that, that if any of the Jews had been courageous enough to have gone along with them, they poſſibly might not have had an Opportunity. The greater Wonder of the two therefore is, that Herod ſhould ſend none, in whom he could confide, to be preſent at the Diſcovery of this Rival Prince, and to bring him Word thereof, if not diſpatch him: But, in this, the Protection and Providence of God was viſible. Pool's Annotations.

† Some of the Antients are of Opinion, that, in the Preſents, which theſe Eaſtern Sages made, they had a myſtical Meaning, and deſign'd to ſignify their Acknowledgment both of the Divinity, Royalty, and Humanity of our Bleſſed Saviour: For the Incenſe, ſay they, was proper to be given him, as a God; the Gold, as a King; and the Myrrh, as a mortal Man, whoſe Body was to be embalm'd therewith. But all this is no more than the Sport of a luxuriant Fancy. 'Tis certain, that the Eaſtern People never came into the Preſence of their Princes, without ſome Preſents, and that their Preſents were uſually of the moſt choice Things, that their Country did afford. All that they meant therefore was to do Homage to a new-born Prince of a neighbouring Nation, in the beſt Manner they could; and if (what Naturaliſts tell us be true) viz. that Myrrh was only to be found in Arabia, and Frankincenſe in Sabæa, which is a Part of Arabia; and that this Country was not deſtitute of Gold, 2 Chron. ix. 14, and, at the ſame Time, was famous for Men converſant in Aſtronomy; this makes a very probable Argument, that the Wiſe-men came from thence. But of this we ſhall ſee more hereafter. Pool's Annotations.

In the mean Time, Herod waited impatiently for the Return of the Eaſtern Sages; but, at length, finding himſelf deluded, and his moſt ſecret and ſubtle Deſigns blaſted, he fell into a moſt violent Rage and Fury; and, having reſolv'd to effect by Cruelty, what he had been diſappointed of doing by Policy, he ſent out his Soldiers, and † made a bloody Maſſacre of all the Children in the City of Bethlehem, and the neighbouring Towns, that were ‖ two Years of Age, and under, including herein the whole Time, and more, that the Wiſe-men had told him, and not doubting, but that, in this general Slaughter, he ſhould diſpatch the young Prince, whom he ſo much dreaded: But God had provided him with a ſafe Retreat. The Shrieks, however, of tender Mothers for their innocent Babes, and the Groans of expiring Infants, which, on this Occaſion, filled the Skies, were inexpreſſible, and were one Reaſon, doubtleſs, why the Divine Vengeance, not long after, overtook this Tyrant, and * ſmote him with a ſtrange and terrible Diſtemper, which put an End to his wicked and brutal Life.

† It is thought ſtrange by ſome, that Joſephus, who writes the Life of Herod in moſt of its Circumſtances, ſhould make no Manner of Mention of the Murther of theſe Innocents: But, when it is conſider'd, that Joſephus was only born in the firſt Year of Caligula, and the thirty-ſeventh of Chriſt; that he wrote his Hiſtory of the Jewiſh Wars (which he extracted from publick Records) in the fifty-ſixth Year of his Age; and that it can ſcarce be ſuppos'd, an Action ſo inglorious to the Memory of Herod, as this Maſſacre was, ſhould be preſerv'd in the Jewiſh Records; it is not ſo very wonderful, that he, who wrote above ninety-three Years after the Fact was committed, ſhould make no Mention of it: Nor is it very material that he did not, ſince we find Macrobius, an heathen Author, about the latter End of the fourth Age, not forgetting to acquaint us, that Herod the King ordered to be ſlain in Syria (which, in Roman Authors, is frequently ſet for Judea) ſome Children, that were under two Years old, tho' he is miſtaken in the Circumſtances of the Story, when he makes Herod's own Son to be one of them. Saturn. lib. ii. c. 4.

‖ Some will needs infer from hence, that this dreadful Maſſacre was not committed until our Lord was almoſt two Years old, becauſe they were Children of that Age, and under, whom Herod order'd to be ſlain: But, beſides that the Word διετής may ſignify one, who has liv'd one Year only, and ſo the Words ἀπὸ διετοῦς ϗ κατωτέρω, may be tranſlated from a Year old, and under; Herod might poſſibly think, that the Star did not appear till ſome conſiderable Time after the young King's Birth, and ſo (to make ſure Work) might be induc'd to ſlay all born at Bethlehem, a Year before, and more, even to the Time of the Star's appearing: For he, who had the Heart to ſlay three of his own Sons, would hardly be ſparing of the Blood of other People's Children. Whitby's Annotations.

* The Diſeaſe of which he dy'd, and the Miſery, which he ſuffer'd under it, plainly ſhew'd that the Hand of God was then, in a ſignal Manner, upon him. For, not long after the Murther of the Infants at Bethlehem, his Diſtemper (as Joſephus informs us) daily increas'd, after an unheard of Manner, and he himſelf labour'd under the moſt loathſome and tormenting Accidents, that can be imagin'd. "He had a lingering and waſting Fever, and grievous "Ulcers in his Entrails and Bowels; a violent Cholick, an inſatiable Appetite, venomous Swelling in his Feet, Con"vulſions in his Nerves, a perpetual Aſthma, and ſtinking Breath, Rottenneſs in his Joints, and privy Members, "accompany'd with prodigious Itchings, crawling Worms, and intolerable Smells, ſo that he was a perfect Hoſpital "of incurable Diſeaſes." And thus he dy'd in horrid Pain and Torment, being ſmitten by God for his many enormous Iniquities. For, ſetting aſide ſome Appearances of Generoſity and Greatneſs, there was never a more compleat Tyrant than he. He ſuppreſs'd, and chang'd the High Prieſt's Office as he thought fit, and even profan'd the Temple itſelf. He ſlew the legal King of the Jews, extirpated all the Race of the Maccabees, deſtroy'd the whole Sanhedrim, and ſubſtituted others in their Room: Nor was his Rage confin'd to the Jews, but deſcended to his own Family and neareſt Relations, even to the executing his belov'd Wife Mariamne, and his own Sons, Alexander and Ariſtobulus, upon ſlight and trivial Occaſions. So wicked a Prince, as he was conſcious he had been, could not (he knew) occaſion any true Lamentation at his Death, but rather a great deal of Gladneſs and Rejoicing all the Kingdom over; and therefore to prevent this, he fram'd a Project, which was one of the moſt horrid, that ever enter'd into the Mind of Man. (d) BEFORE his Death, he had, by Will, (which, in ſome Meaſure, Auguſtus confirm'd) ſettled his Dominions upon his Sons and his Siſter. Archelaüs he had made his Succeſſor in that Part of his Kingdom, which included Judea, Idumæa, and Samaria: To Philip he had given Auronitis, Trachonitis, Panea, and Batanea: To Herod Antipas, Galilee, and Peræa; and to his Siſter Salome, ſome particular Cities, with a conſiderable Sum of Money. After his Death therefore, (which was notify'd to Joſeph by a Viſion) God order'd him to return, with the Child and his Mother, into the Land of Iſrael, which Joſeph readily obey'd; but, when he arriv'd in Judea, hearing that Archelaüs ſucceeded Herod in that Part of the Country, and being apprehenſive that the Cruelty and Ambition of the Father might be entail'd upon the Son, he fear'd to ſettle there; and therefore, being directed by God in another Viſion, he retir'd into the Dominions * of his Brother Herod Antipas, in Galilee, to his former Habitation in Nazareth, where the ſtrange Occurrences of our Lord's Birth were not ſo well known. † After this, we have no certain Account either of him, or his Parents, only that they annually repair'd with him to Jeruſalem, at the Paſſover; and that, as his Body increas'd in Stature, ſo, || more eſpecially of Death, he ſummon'd to come together to Jericho, where he was then lying ſick, and, when they were come, commanded his Soldiers to ſhut them all up in a ſpacious Place, called the Hippodrome; when having called his Siſter Salome, and her Huſband Alexas, with ſome choice Friends, he told them with Tears, " That he was ſenſible of the " Jews Hatred to his Government and Perſon, and that his Death would be an high Satisfaction to them; that his " Friends therefore ought to procure him ſome Solace in the Midſt of his bitter Anguiſh, which if they perform'd " according to his Order, the Mournings and Lamentations at his Death would be as great and magnificent, as ever " any Prince had; and this Order was, that on the ſame Hour, when he expir'd, the Soldiers ſhould ſurround the " Hippodrome, and put all the encloſ'd Perſons to the Sword, and then publiſh his Death, which (as he ſaid) would " cauſe his Exit to be doubly triumphant; firſt, for the poſthumous Execution of his Commands; and ſecondly, for the " Quality and Number of his Mourners." But Salome and Alexas, not being wicked enough to do what they had been made ſolemnly to promiſe, choſe rather to break their Obligation, than make themſelves the Executioners of ſo bloody a Deſign; and therefore, as ſoon as Herod was dead, they open'd the Hippodrome, and permitted all that were ſhut up in it, to return to their reſpective Homes. Joſephus de Bello Jud. lib. i. c. 18. Prideaux's Connection Part II. and Eachard's Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory, lib. i.

* This Antipas his Father Herod had once appointed to be his Succeſſor in his Kingdom, but afterwards expung'd him out of his Will, and only made him Tetrarch; but, not long after his Brother's Acceſſion to the Throne, he went to Rome, with a Purpoſe to diſpute the Kingdom with him, on Pretence, that his Father's former Will, by which he was conſtituted King, ought to take Place before the latter, which was made, when his Underſtanding was not ſo perfect. Both the Brothers procur'd able Orators to ſet forth their Pretenſions before the Emperor, but the Emperor nevertheleſs refus'd to decide any Thing concerning their Affair, nor did he at length give Archelaüs the Title of a King, but only of an Ethnarch, with one Moiety of the Territories, which his Father enjoy'd; but theſe, in a few Years after, he, by his ill Conduct, forfeited. Of all the Sons of Herod indeed, this Archelaüs is ſaid to have been of the moſt fierce and bloody Temper. At his firſt Acceſſion to the Government, (under the Pretence of a Mutiny) he had killed near three Three thouſand of his Subjects; and therefore Joſeph, hearing of this, might well dread to go, and ſettle in any Part of his Dominions; but, as Antipas was a Man of a more mild Diſpoſition, and the Birth of Jeſus not made ſo publick in Galilee and at Nazareth, as it was at Bethlehem, and even at Jeruſalem, by the Coming of the Wiſe-Men, and what happen'd at the Purification of the bleſſed Virgin, it was thought more adviſeable to retreat into this Village, than to ſet up his Abode in any populous City. Pool's Annotations.

|| The Words in the Text are, Jeſus increaſed in Wiſdom, and in Stature, and in Favour with God and Man, Luke ii. 52. But if it be aſk'd, how he, who was the Eternal Wiſdom of the Father, could be improv'd in any Quality of his Mind? The Anſwer is, that all Things in Scripture, which are ſpoken of Chriſt, are not ſpoken with Reſpect to his entire Perſon, but only with Reſpect to one or other of the Natures, that are united in that Perſon. His Divine Nature was infinite, and, conſequently, capable of no Improvements, but his Human was: And therefore, tho' the Divine Λογὸς was united to the human Soul by his Conception, yet might the Divine Nature communicate its Powers to the Human by diſtinct and gradual Illuminations; and, accordingly, we may obſerve, that all publick Manifeſtation of it to the World ſeems to have been induſtriouſly declin'd, 'till Ripeneſs of Years and Judgment had Chriſt's diſputing with the Doctors in the Temple at twelve Years of Age, and living with his Parents afterwards.

WHEN Paleſtine was reduc'd to this State, and our Bleſſed Saviour now advanc'd to the twelfth Year of his Age †, he went up with his Parents (according as their Cuſtom was) to Jeruſalem at the Time of the Paſſover. His Parents, after a Stay of the whole ſeven Days, having perform'd the uſual Ceremonies of the Feaſt, were now returning, with great Numbers of their Neighbours and Acquaintance, towards Galilee; and, never doubting, but that Jeſus had join'd himſelf with ſome of the Company, they travelled on patiently for a whole Day's Journey: But, when Night came on, and among their Relations and particular Friends they could hear no Tidings of him, it is not eaſy to imagine the Greatneſs of their Fears and ‖ Apprehenſions, which made them return to Jeruſalem with the utmoſt Speed, to make all poſſible Enquiry for him.

had carry'd him up to the Perfections of a Man. So little Reaſon have we to ſuppoſe, that he who condeſcended to be like us in Body, ſhould think it below him to be ſo too in that other no leſs eſſential, but much more noble Part of us, our Soul, without which, it was impoſſible for him to be Man; ſo little Reaſon to imagine, that the Divine Eſſence in him ſupply'd the Place and Offices of intellectual Faculties. Whitby's Annotations, and Stanhope on the Epiſtles and Goſpels, Vol. II.

(e) Jewiſh Antiq. lib. 17. c. 12. & de Bello Jud. lib. ii. c. 2.

† It is commonly obſerv'd by thoſe, that are learned in the Cuſtoms and Inſtitutions of the Jewiſh Church, that, 'till a Child was of twelve Years old, he was not oblig'd to go to Jeruſalem at the Time of the Paſſover; and that tho' their Youth were uſually thirteen before they were brought before the Maſters of the Synagogue to give an Account of their Proficiency in Religion, (which anſwers in a great Meaſure to the Chriſtian Rite of Confirmation) yet, ſince the Seaſon then appointed was accommodated to the Capacities and Attainments of Children in general, without forbidding thoſe of Qualifications extraordinary, and whoſe Genius (in the Jewiſh Phraſe) did run before the Commandment, to appear ſooner, our Saviour might offer himſelf to his Examination a Year before the common Time: And this is the beſt Reaſon, that can be aſſign'd, for his ſtaying behind his Parents, when he could not but know, that they were departed from Jeruſalem without him, and for his being found in one of the Rooms adjoining to the Temple, where the Doctors of the Law us'd to meet, not only to reſolve the Queſtions that were brought before them, but to examine likewiſe and confirm ſuch of the Youth, as they found to be qualify'd for that Ceremony, which (according to the ſame Authors) was uſually perform'd by devout Prayers, and ſolemn Benedictions. Grotius in Luke ii. 45. Beauſobre's and Pool's Annotations, and Stanhope, on the Epiſtles and Goſpels, Vol. II.

‖ It may ſeem a little ſtrange perhaps, that Mary and Joſeph, who had been ſufficiently inſtructed, one would think, in the great Article of Chriſt's Divinity, and therefore muſt certainly know, that, as he was the Power and Wiſdom of God, he could neither fall into any Danger, nor come to any Harm, ſhould ſo mightily afflict themſelves, when they came to miſs him. The Reaſon, which Origen (Hom. i. 9. in Luc.) ſeems to aſſign, is, not that his Parents ſuppos'd that he was loſt, or come to any Miſchance, but were apprehenſive that he had withdrawn himſelf to ſome other Place, and was poſſibly gone up to Heaven, there to continue, until his eternal Father ſhould think proper to ſend him down again: But the moſt eaſy and natural Solution is, that, without ever conſidering what they had ſufficient Reaſon to believe concerning his Divinity and Omnipotence, they ſuffer'd themſelves to be carry'd away by their natural Tenderneſs; and could not, without great Concern, ſee themſelves depriv'd of his Company, uncertain of what had befallen him, or for what poſſible Reaſon he ſhould abſent himſelf from theirs. It muſt not be deny'd however, that, tho' ſomething may be allow'd to a Parent's Fondneſs, yet it does not appear from their whole Conduct, and eſpecially from Mary's Complaint, and our Saviour's Reply, ver. 48, 49, that they had, as yet, a clear and perfect Knowledge of his divine Nature in Union with the Human, and therefore the Evangeliſt has remark'd upon them, that they underſtood not the Saying, which he ſpake unto them, ver. 50. Calmet's Commentary, and Pool's Annotations.

† The Words in the Text are, after three Days they found him; but we need not from thence infer, that they were three Days a ſeeking him, but rather, that it was three Days from the Time they ſet out from Jeruſalem;

Nor were his Parents leſs ſurpris'd to find him in that Place; but, when his Mother told him, with what Impatience they had ſought him, and, in ſome Meaſure, blam'd him for putting them in ſuch a Fright, the Excuſe which he made for himſelf, was, Knew you not that I muſt be employed in my Father's Houſe? Words, which, though ſhe at that Time did not rightly underſtand, ſhe took care nevertheleſs for ever after to regiſter in her Mind!

BEING thus happily found by his Parents, he return'd with them to Nazareth, and there living in all dutiful Subjection to them, wrought (very probably) with his reputed Father, in the Trade of a Carpenter, and, after his Father's Death (which is ſuppos'd to have happen'd about a Year before the Preaching of John the Baptiſt) (f) ſtill continu'd in the ſame Occupation: As indeed we can ſcarce help inferring, from the rude Treatment of the Nazarenes his Towns-men; as alſo from the total Silence of the Evangeliſts, as to the intermediate Actions of his Life †, that, though he grew in Favour with God and Man, yet (conſidering his Excellencies) he liv'd in a very obſcure Manner, and, till the Time of his Manifeſtation to Iſrael, ſhew'd no miraculous Marks to diſtinguiſh him from the reſt of Mankind.

(f) Mark vi. 3.

† It may poſſibly be made a Queſtion, why the Evangeliſts have given us no Account of our Saviour's Life, from the twelfth Year of his Age, till he began his Miniſtry, which, (according to the Vulgar Æra) was about the thirtieth; becauſe if, in this intermediate Space, he did any Thing worthy of Remembrance, it ought, in all Reaſon, to have been recorded. But, when it is conſider'd, that the End of the ſacred Penmen was, not ſo much to gratify our Curioſity, as to conſult our Profit, we cannot but admire the great Wiſdom of God, (by whoſe Inſpiration they wrote) in paſſing by the leſs active Parts of our Lord's Life, which would certainly have ſwelled their Goſpels to immenſurable Volumes, fit for the Peruſal of none, but the Studious, and ſuch as had Plenty of Time at their Command; whereas now, taking the four Goſpels together, they make but a ſmall Book, and ſeparately, no more than little Manuals, that may be carry'd about with us wherever we go; may be ſoon read over, and eaſily remember'd, even by Men of mean Capacities and no great Leiſure: And yet, they contain all the Tranſactions of our Saviour's Life, which chiefly concern us to know; I mean, ſuch as relate to his mediatorial Office, as that he came into the World to teach us to die, and to riſe again for us; to inſtruct us by his heavenly Doctrine, as our Prophet; to offer himſelf a Sacrifice on the Croſs, as our Prieſt; and to looſe the Bands of Death, and aſcend triumphant into Heaven, as our King. Illa ergo Tempora, ſays the learned Spanhemius, *notata, quæ nobis impenſa, quæ in munere tranſmiſſa, quæ ad ἀσφάλειαν fidei noſtræ ſufficere viſa, quæ Chriſtum exhibent, vel in Cathedrâ, vel in Cruce, vel in Throno. caus'd the Roman Soldiers to fall upon a great Number of Galileans, (very likely the Followers of Judas Gaulonites) and to ſlaughter them, like ſo many Sheep in the Temple, and on the very Day appointed for the killing of the Paſſover, and ſo mingled their Blood with their Sacrifices, Luke xiii. 1. That, when the People clamour'd againſt his taking ſome of the ſacred Money out of the Temple, he order'd the Soldiers, upon a Signal given, to fall upon them with large Battoons, ſo that many dy'd of the Blows which they receiv'd, and many were trodden to Death in the Throng: And that the Samaritans, as well as the Jews, felt the Severity of his Adminiſtration, when he deſtroy'd great Numbers of them near Tirathaba, and of thoſe, whom he took, that were of any Intereſt or Quality among them, ſtruck off their Heads. Joſephus de Bello Jud. lib. ii. c. 8. and Antiq. lib. xviii. c. 5.

* How John paſs'd the former Part of his Life, the Scripture is ſilent, but there is an ancient Tradition in the Church, that Elizabeth, hearing of the ſad Havock, which Herod's Barbarity had made among the Infants in Bethlehem, fled into the Wilderneſs to ſecure her Child from the Tyrant's Rage, and there attended him with all the Care and Tenderneſs of an affectionate Mother: That the Child was about eighteen Months old, when his Mother thus fled with him, but, after forty Days, ſhe died, and his Father Zachariah, at the next Time of his Miniſtration, was by the Command of Herod, (becauſe he would not diſcover the Place of his Son's Concealment) put to Death: That, in this Deſtitution of natural Parents, God ſent an Angel to be his Nouriſher and Guardian, (as he had formerly done to Elijah, when he fled from the Rage of Ahab) until he came of Strength to provide for himſelf, and that then he liv'd in the Manner, that the Evangeliſts have deſcrib'd. When he began his Preaching it is not ſo well agreed. Lightfoot, and ſome others, who believe that our Saviour was born in September, and that John was now beginning to be thirty Years of Age, are of Opinion, that he began his Miniſtry about the Paſſover; but Uſher, and his Followers, do, with more Probability, ſuppoſe, that his Preaching began upon the tenth Day of the ſeventh Month, (which anſwers to our nineteenth Day of October.) five Days before the Feaſt of Tabernacles, upon the great Day of Expiation, when the High-Prieſt enter'd the Holy of Holies, and when ſo ſolemn a Faſt was enjoin'd, that whoſoever did not afflict his Soul at that Time, was to be cut off from the People. Howell's Hiſtory, and Calmet's Dictionary, under the Word John.

† The Meaning of this Phraſe is, that John preach'd Repentance, Matth. iii. 2. and baptiz'd thoſe, that were penitent, in Token of the Remiſſion of their Sins, even as they, on their Parts, receiv'd Baptiſm, in Teſtimony of the Sincerity of their Repentance. Now Baptiſm, we know, was no new or ſtrange Thing among the Jews. It was acknowledg'd, and practis'd, as an Emblem of Purification from paſt Guilt, and a Rite of entering ſolemnly into Covenant with God. The Expoſitors of their Law agree, that this Ceremony paſs'd upon the whole Congregation of Iſrael, juſt before the Law was given at Mount Sinai; and their Cuſtom, in all ſucceeding Ages, has been, to receive their heathen Proſelytes by Baptiſm, as well as by Sacrifice and Circumciſion. In Conformity to this therefore, John both adminiſter'd and exhorted his Followers to his Ordinance of Baptiſm, as an Evidence of their Penitence for paſt Sins, and Profeſſion of better Obedience for the future: But then, as Faith is a Qualification for Baptiſm, as well as Repentance, he propounded our Lord for the Object of Faith to all, who receiv'd this Ordinance at his Hands; for John verily baptized with the Baptiſm of Repentance, ſaying unto the People, that they ſhould believe in him, who ſhould come after him, i. e. on Chriſt Jeſus, Acts xix. 4. 'Tis a great Miſtake therefore in ſome, to ſuppoſe that the Baptiſm of John was, in Subſtance, the ſame with what Chriſt did afterwards inſtitute: For John neither did, nor could baptize his Diſciples in the Name of the Holy Ghoſt, as the Apoſtles did, becauſe the Holy Ghoſt was not yet given, John vii. 39. He did not baptize them in the Name of Chriſt; for, had he done ſo, there had been no Occaſion for the Queſtion, Whether he himſelf were the Chriſt, or not? Luke iii. 15. Herein therefore lay the Imperfection of John's Baptiſm, that tho' it prepar'd Men to be Chriſtians, yet it did not make them ſo; and therefore we find St Paul baptizing again ſome Diſciples at Epheſus, (who had before receiv'd the Baptiſm of John) in order to fit them for the Reception of the Holy Ghoſt, Acts xix. 5, 6. Whitby's Annotations, and Stanhope, on the Epiſtles and Goſpels, Vol. IV.

† A Wilderneſs, among the Jews, did not ſignify a Place wholly void of Inhabitants, but a Place, that was more mountainous, leſs fruitful, leſs peopled, and where the Habitations were more diſpers'd, than in other Parts of the Country. For, as it is incongruous to ſuppoſe, that the Baptiſt ſhould preach the Doctrine of Repentance to Stocks, and Stones, and wild Beaſts; the Wilderneſs here muſt be underſtood in a Comparative Senſe, and, conſequently, the Wilderneſs of Judea, where he preach'd and baptiz'd, muſt be that Tract of Land, which lay on each Side of the River Jordan, on the Confines of Enon and Salem. Whitby's Annotations, Wells's Geography of the New Teſtament, and Spanheim's Dubia Evang. Part ii. Dub. 97.

* There is no Reaſon for running into Criticiſms, what the common Diet of the Baptiſt was, whether Fowl, or Fiſh, or Herbs, or wild Peaſe, (for the Word ἀκρίδες has been made to ſignify all theſe) ſince the Thing is notorious, that Locuſts (in the moſt obvious Senſe of the Word) were Creatures, which the Levitical Law look'd upon as clean, and allow'd the Jews to eat, Levit. xi. 22. That they were a common Food, as the Ancients affirm, (Pliny, and Wild-Honey, ſuch as Nature produc'd in theſe deſert Places, was the chief Diet he liv'd upon, and a † looſe Coat made of Camels Hair, and faſten'd with a Leathern Girdle, the only Garb he wore; and therefore no Perſon was ſo proper to inculcate the Doctrines of Repentance and Reformation, as he, who, by his free and reſolute Preaching, join'd with this great Severity of Life, ſoon procur'd a vaſt Auditory, and numerous Proſelytes of all Ranks and Qualities, from Jeruſalem, and all Judea, and all the Region about Jordan, confeſſing their Sins before God, and entering into this new Inſtitution by Baptiſm.

AMONG the great Multitudes, that came to his Preaching and Baptiſm, there were Phariſees †, and Sadducees not a few, whoſe Confidence and Immorality he ſharply reprov'd; while, at the ſame Time, he exhorted the common People to Works of extenſive Charity; the Publicans †, to avoid (Pliny, lib. xvii. c. 3. and Strabo, lib. xvi.) in Africk, Perſia, Syria, and even Paleſtine itſelf; that, according to the Account of ſome modern Authors, in ſome Places they are brought in Waggon loads, and ſold in the Market for the common People to feed on; and that they are frequently ſeen upon the Banks of the River Jordan, of the ſame Form, but much larger, than ours; and being either fried in Oil, or dry'd in the Sun, are accounted a good Sort of Food. As little Reaſon is there for Men to puzzle themſelves about what this μέλι ἄγριον, or wild Honey, means, ſince every one knows, that Judea was ſo fam'd for Plenty of Honey, that, in ſeveral Places of Scripture, it is ſaid to flow with Honey, and from the Inſtances of Sampſon, Judg. xiv. 8. and Jonathan, 1 Sam. xiv. 25. it muſt be concluded, that wild Honey, ſuch as either diſtilled from the Boughs, like Dew, or was found in the Cliffs of Rocks, or hollow Trunks of Trees, was no uncommon Thing in that Country. But, tho' theſe Locuſts and wild Honey may very properly be taken in their natural and moſt obvious Senſe, yet it muſt not therefore be thought, that John never eat any Thing elſe, but that, for the Generality, he made Uſe of ſuch ſlender Diet, and contented himſelf with what the deſert Place, which he choſe for his Habitation, could afford him. Spanheim's Dubia Evang. Part ii. Dub. 99.

† We are told by ſome Authors, that the Hair of Camels, about the Caſpian Sea, was formerly the ſofteſt in the World, of which was made a very fine Stuff; and that, in the Empire of the great Cham of Tartary, in the City of Calacia, the Metropolis of the Province of Tangouth, there is a Kind of Cloth, which the Inhabitants call Zambelotte, (the ſame, no Doubt, with what we call Camelot) made of Wool and Camels Hair, perfectly good, and as fine as any Cloth whatever. But there is Reaſon good to think, that John's Habit was far from being of this Kind, becauſe it would not ſo well ſuit with the Condition of a Man living in a Wilderneſs, to whom our Saviour oppoſes thoſe, that are cloathed in ſoft Raiment; would not ſo well agree with the Evangeliſt's Deſign of ſetting forth the Baptiſt's Auſterity in his Habit, as well as his Diet; nor comport ſo well with the Deſcription of Elias, whom he came to repreſent, an hairy Man, and one girt with a Girdle of Leather about his Loins, 2 Kings i. 8. Tho' therefore we may not infer from the Expreſſion, that the Baptiſt's Habit was mere Sack-cloth, (as ſome would have it) yet we cannot but conclude from thence, that it was plain and coarſe, ſuch as became the Place where he liv'd, (where Camels, we are told, were in great Plenty) and a Prophet and Preacher of Righteouſneſs to wear. For ſo in the Poem, written by Paulinus, it is deſcrib'd,

> Veſtis erat curvi ſetis conſerta Cameli,
> Contra luxuriem molles duraret ut artus,
> Arceretque graves compuncto corpore ſomnos.

† We have already, in a ſeparate Diſſertation, given a particular Account of the Riſe and Principles of the ſeveral Sects among the Jews, and need only take Notice here, that the Phariſees are thought to take their Name from the Word Paraſh, which ſignifies Separation, becauſe they were ſeparated from all others in their extraordinary Pretences to Sanctity, and ſome particular Obſervances; and that the Sadducees, (who were directly oppoſite to the Phariſees both in Temper and Principles) deriv'd their Name, either from Sadock, who liv'd near 300 Years before our Saviour's Birth, and is ſuppos'd to be the Founder of the Sect, or (as ſome think) from Sedeck, which ſignifies Juſtice, becauſe they pretended to be the only exact Diſtributers of Juſtice, and were very rigid indeed in the Execution of it. Eachard's Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory, in the Introduction.

† The Publicans were Perſons of no particular Sect, nor of any religious Function among the Jews, but certain publick Officers, whom the Romans employ'd to collect their Tributes, Tolls, and Impoſts. This Office was once of great Account among the Romans, and conferr'd upon none leſs than the Equeſtrian Order; but, when it came to fall into the Hands of the Jews, who farm'd it of the Romans, it ſoon became baſe, and infamous, and more eſpecially odious to the Jews upon theſe two Accounts: 1ſt, Becauſe theſe Tributes were look'd upon as a ſtanding Inſtance of their Slavery, which they, who made ſuch Boaſts of their being a free-born People, and inveſted in that Privilege by God himſelf, could leaſt of all endure. And, 2dly, Becauſe theſe Publicans, having farm'd the Cuſtoms of the Romans at high Rates, did generally make uſe of all Methods of Extortion and Oppreſſion, to enable them both to pay their Rents, and to raiſe ſome Advantage to themſelves. Upon theſe Accounts, the Publicans, as conſpiring with the Romans both to impoveriſh and enſlave their Countrymen, became ſo univerſally abhorr'd by the Jewiſh Nation, that they held it unlawful to do them any Act of common Courteſy, nay, even to eat or to drink with them, for which we find them ſo frequently blaming our Saviour. Eachard's Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory, in the Introduction, Page 27.

Matth. iii. 11. Mark i. 7. Luke iii. 16. His Teſtimony of our Saviour, and our Saviour's Baptiſm.

These ſolemn Admonitions, pronounc'd with ſo much Weight and Authority, procur'd him a mighty Veneration among the People, inſomuch, that ſeveral began to look upon him as the promis'd and now expected Meſſiah; but, to remove all Thoughts of this Kind, he freely declar'd, "that he only baptiz'd them with Water " to Repentance, and a new Life; but " that there was one coming, and ready " to appear among them, who would " baptize them with the Effuſion of the " Holy Ghoſt, and who ſo far exceeded " him in Power and Excellency, that he " was not worthy to do for him the meaneſt or moſt ſervile Office." Theſe were the Doctrines, which John preach'd, and this the Teſtimony, which he gave of Jeſus, even before he had the Happineſs to know him.

After John had continu'd in his Miniſtry for ſeveral Months, our Lord thought fit to remove from his private Retirement at Nazareth, and, taking Leave of his Mother and his Trade, paſs'd over into Judea, to Bethabara †, on the Banks of the River Jordan, where John was then baptizing.

He, who was Innocence and Purity itſelf, had certainly no Need of the Baptiſm of Repentance, but, being minded to honour and ſanctify the Inſtitution †, he offer'd himſelf to John, and when John, inſpir'd with a prophetick Spirit ‖, knew him, and thereupon endeavour'd to decline the Office, he gave him ſuch Reaſons for the Expediency of the Thing, as made him no longer heſitate, but immediately baptize him. Jeſus † was no ſooner got out of the Water, but, as he was making his † Bethabara does, in the Hebrew Language, ſignify as much as a Place of Paſſage; and therefore, whereas we read, Joſh. ii. 7, 23, that there was a Fording-place over Jordan not far from Jericho, and again, Joſh. iii 16, that the People paſs'd over-right againſt Jericho, 'tis probably conjectur'd, that hereabouts ſtood Bethabara, and was the Place of Reception and Entertainment for Paſſengers out of Judea, into Peræa, or the Country beyond Jordan; nay, it is imagin'd by ſome, that in the very ſame Place of the River, where the Ark ſtood, while the Iſraelites paſs'd over, our Bleſſed Saviour (the Ark of the Covenant of Grace) was baptis'd by John the Baptiſt. Wells's Geography of the New Teſtament.

† There are ſome other Reaſons, which might induce our Lord to come to John's Baptiſm, beſides what himſelf alledges, viz. the Performance of all Righteouſneſs, or whatever had a Tendency to the People's Edification; as, that he might authorize this Baptiſm of John by his publick Approbation; that by this Rite he might be initiated to his prophetick Office, and conſecrated to the Service of God; that hereby he might aboliſh the Ceremony of the Jewiſh Baptiſm, and more effectually recommend that of his own Inſtitution, to which this of the Baptiſt was an Introduction; and, more eſpecially, that in the Preſence of the Baptiſt, and all the Company, that had reſorted to him, he might obtain the Teſtimony of the Holy Ghoſt, and of his heavenly Father, to confirm John in the Belief of his being the promis'd Meſſiah, and to induce the People, as ſoon as he began his Miniſtry, to follow and attend to him. Calmet's Commentary.

‖ The Words in the Text are theſe, Then cometh Jeſus from Galilee to Jordan, unto John, to be baptized of him, but John forbad him, Matth. iii. 13, 14, but how could John forbid him, when he ſays of himſelf, I knew him not, but he, that ſent me to baptize with Water, the ſame ſaid unto me, Upon whom thou ſhalt ſee the Spirit deſcending and remaining on him, the ſame is he, who baptizeth with the Holy Ghoſt, John i. 33. Now to this it may be anſwer'd, that, ſince one Part of John's Miniſtry was to bear Witneſs of that Light, which lighteth every Man that cometh into the World, it was highly neceſſary, that our Saviour ſhould be unknown to him in Perſon, before he came to his Baptiſm, that the World might have no Suſpicion of any Colluſion, or that the Baptiſt teſtify'd of him by Compact. Tho' therefore he had never ſeen the Face of our Saviour, becauſe they were bred up in different Countries, yet, by a particular Revelation, he knew, that he was already come into the World, and was ſhortly to baptize with the Holy Ghoſt; and therefore, when our Saviour came, and preſented himſelf to be baptiz'd, he had immediately another Revelation, that this was the great Perſon, of whom he had been told before; even as Samuel, having been told by God, that, on the Morrow, a Man ſhould come to him to be the Captain over his People Iſrael, 1 Sam. ix. 16. upon Saul's Appearing, had another Inſpiration, reſembling the Baptiſt's here, Behold the Man, of whom I ſpake to thee, ver. 17. Whitby's Annotations.

† The Obſervation of the Greek Church, in Relation to this Matter, is this, that he, who aſcended out of the Water, muſt firſt deſcend down into it; and, conſequently, that Baptiſm is to be performed not by ſprinkling, but by waſhing the Body. And indeed, he muſt be ſtrangely ignorant of the Jewiſh Rites of Baptiſm, who ſeems to doubt of this, ſince, to the due Performance of it, they requir'd the Immerſion of the whole Body, to ſuch a Degree of Nicety,

His Temptation by the Devil, and Conqueſt over him.

OUR Bleſſed Lord, being thus by Baptiſm, and the Unction of the Holy Ghoſt, prepar'd for his prophetick Office, was, by the Impulſe of the Divine Spirit, carry'd farther into the Wilderneſs of Judea; where, after he had faſted forty Days and forty Nights †, (as Moſes did on Mount Sinai) and was now very hungry, the Devil † aſſum'd a bodily Shape, and ſet upon him with a threefold Temptation. 1ſt, From his Hunger he took occaſion to tempt him to deſpair, and diſtruſt of his Father's Care of him, who had abandon'd him in that Condition, and therefore, perſuading him that he was not the Son of God, he put him upon the Experiment of his being ſuch, by making the Stones become Bread: But our Saviour ſoon anſwer'd him by a (b) Paſſage out of the Scripture, intimating, that God, when he pleaſed, could employ Means extraordinary for the Support and Nouriſhment of Men. 2dly, His next Eſſay was, to try, how far Pride and Preſumption would affect him; and therefore, carrying him through the Air, and ſetting him upon the † higheſt Part of the Temple, he put him upon the Proof

Nicety, that if any Dirt was upon it, that hinder'd the Water from coming to that Part, they thought the Ceremony not rightly done. The Chriſtians, no doubt, took this Rite from the Jews, and follow'd them in their Manner of performing it. Accordingly, ſeveral Authors have ſhewn, that we read no where in Scripture of any one's being baptiz'd, but by Immerſion, and, from the Acts of Councils, and antient Rituals, have prov'd, that this Manner of Immerſion continu'd (as much as poſſible) to be us'd for thirteen hundred Years after Chriſt. But 'tis much to be queſtion'd, whether the Prevalence of Cuſtom, and the over Fondneſs of Parents, will, in theſe cold Climates eſpecially, ever ſuffer it to be reſtor'd. Whitby's Annotations.

† The Words in St Matthew are, ——— Lo, the Heavens were open'd; in St Mark, cloven or rent. The common People of the Jews indeed were of Opinion, that the Heavens were firm and ſolid, and that the Fire, which fell from thence upon the Face of the Earth, burſt through this Firmament, and made an Opening in this vaſt Convex, that ſurrounds us: And therefore it is, that the Evangeliſts expreſs themſelves in this Manner, in Accommodation to the Prejudices and Capacities of the Vulgar. But by the Phraſe we need underſtand no more, than that a ſudden Beam of radiant Light came darting from the Skies, (like a Flaſh of Lightning from the Clouds) and made it ſeem as tho' the Heavens had been open'd, or rent to let it out; becauſe, to the naked Eye, the Air, at that Time, ſeems to divide, to make a clearer and fuller Way for the Light. Calmet's Commentary, and Pool's Annotations.

† The Ancients were generally of Opinion, that the Holy Ghoſt, in his Deſcent upon our Saviour, aſſum'd the real Shape of a Dove, which, at that Time more eſpecially, was a very proper Repreſentation of his Dove-like Nature, Iſaiah xlii. 2, and of all ſuch as were to receive the ſame Spirit, and are requir'd to be as harmleſs as Doves; but moſt of the Moderns (tho' they allow, that the bleſſed Spirit did, at this Time, aſſume a viſible Shape, to render his Deſcent manifeſt) do maintain, that the ὡσεὶ περιστερὰ relates not to the Body or Shape of a Dove, but to the Manner of a Dove's deſcending, and lighting on any Thing; and thence they infer, that it was this Body of Light, which iſſu'd from the Skies, that came down upon Chriſt, and, while he was praying, hung hovering over his Head, juſt after the Manner and Motion of a Dove, before it ſettles upon any Thing. Whether of theſe Opinions ſhould prevail, 'tis idle to diſpute, ſince neither of them are deſtitute of ſome Countenance from Scripture, neither of them injurious to the Dignity of the Holy Ghoſt. Calmet's Commentary, and Hammond's Annotations.

† Whoever conſiders the Frailty of human Nature, cannot but allow, that ſo great and ſo long an Abſtinence, without any Senſe of Hunger, (for the Evangeliſt tells us, that our Saviour was only hungry afterwards) muſt be altogether miraculous, and ſo no Duty to us; and, if he reflects withal, that the End of his Faſt was not to chaſtize or ſubdue that Body, which was never irregular, (as the Deſign of all our Faſting is) he muſt allow, that our Saviour, in this Particular, ſet no Precedent to us, and therefore 'tis Cruelty, or a ſuperſtitious Folly at leaſt, in a Matter ſo ſupernatural, to enjoin Men to follow his Steps. Whitby's Annotations.

† This Word, which anſwers exactly with the Hebrew, Satan, ſignifies a Calumniator, or Accuſer; and, as it occurs, in Scripture, always in the ſingular Number, is ſuppos'd to denote that evil Spirit, who tempted our firſt Parents, the chief of the Rebel-Angels, and the avow'd Enemy of the Saints, 1 Theſſ. iii. 5. and 1 Pet. v. 8, &c. Beauſobre's Annotations.

(b) Deut. viii. 3.

† According to the Deſcription, that Joſephus gives us of the Temple, which Herod built, we hear of no Pinnacles, or lofty Turrets above the reſt of the Building; and therefore have Reaſon to think, that the πτερύγιον which is render'd Pinnacle, ſhould rather ſignify the Battlement, or that Parapet-Wall, which was carry'd round the Top of the Temple, (as well as private Houſes, Deut. xxii. 8.) to keep Men from falling from the Roof: And, if we may be allow'd to conjecture on what Part of the Battlement is was, that the Devil plac'd our Saviour; it ſeems very likely that

Proof of his being the Son of God, by throwing himſelf off from thence, and flying in the Air, alledging a Text out of the Pſalmiſt (i) to encourage him: But Jeſus as ſoon anſwer'd him by another Text, commanding Men (k) not to tempt God, or depend upon his Providence for their Conſervation, in Dangers of their own ſeeking. 3dly, His laſt Experiment was, to tempt him with the Charms of Ambition; and therefore, tranſporting him again through the Air, to the Top * of an exceeding high Mountain, he there made a lively Repreſentation to him of all the Kingdoms of the World, with all their dazzling Glories, at one View, and then told him, that, theſe, with all their Pomp and Splendor, were delivered to his Diſpoſal, and ſhould be given to him, if he would but acknowledge his Benefactor, and worſhip him: But this was a Boldneſs and Blaſphemy, ſuch as provok'd our Lord to exert his Divine Power, and to command him peremptorily to be gone, but with this Memento out of Scripture likewiſe, (l) Thou ſhalt worſhip the Lord thy God, and him only ſhalt thou ſerve: Whereupon the Devil left him for that Time, and Angels, ſent from Heaven, came with Refreſhments for him, after his triumphant Combat.

* The beſt Account, that we have, both of the Wilderneſs, and high Mountain, where our Lord was tempted, is in the Travels of Mr Maundrell, (for the Antients tell us very little of them) who informs us,——That, in his Journey from Jeruſalem to Jordan, after he had paſſed over Mount Olivet, he proceeded in an intricate Way, among Hills and Valleys interchangeably; and, after ſome Hours Travel in this Sort of Road, arriv'd at the Mountainous Deſert, into which our Bleſſed Saviour was led by the Spirit, to be tempted by the Devil; "A miſerable dry Place, ſays " he, it is, conſiſting of high rocky Mountains, ſo torn and diſorder'd, as if the Earth had here ſuffer'd ſome great " Convulſion, in which its very Bowels had been turn'd outward.——From the Tops of theſe Hills of Deſola- " lation we had however a delightful Proſpect of the Mountains of Arabia, the Dead Sea, and the Plains of Jericho, " into which laſt we deſcended after about five Hours March from Jeruſalem. As ſoon as we enter'd the Plain, we " turn'd upon the left Hand, and, going about one Hour that Way, came to the Foot of the Quarantania, (ſo called " from our Lord's Forty-Days Faſt) which, they ſay, is the Mountain, where the Devil tempted him with a viſionary " Scene of all the Kingdoms and Glories of the World. It is very high, and ſteep, and its Aſcent not only difficult, " but dangerous." This is the Account, which our Countryman gives us of the Place, where our Saviour was probably tempted: But it is is not ſuppoſable, that, even from the higheſt Mountain of the World, the Devil could ſhew all the Kingdoms of it, and therefore the moſt rational Account of this Matter is, that, as he was the Prince of the Power of the Air, he formed an Airy Horizon (as Dr Lightfoot expreſſes it) before the Eyes of Chriſt, which might carry ſuch a pompous and glorious Appearance of Kingdoms, States, and Royalties in the Face of it, as if he had ſeen thoſe very Kingdoms and States in Reality. God, we are told, caus'd Moſes to ſee the whole Land of Promiſe from the Top of Nebo, (as it is generally thought) by repreſenting it to him in a large Plan, or Map of it, in all the Valleys round about him; and, in like Manner, (by the Divine Permiſſion) in all the Valleys round about the high Mountain, on which our Lord ſtood, the Devil might make a large Draught of the ſtately Edifices, the Guards, and Attendants of Kings and Princes, appearing in their Splendor, viſible to his Eye, which he could not have ſeen ſo advantageouſly, had he ſtood on a Plain. Wells's Geography of the New Teſtament, Calmet's Commentary, and Pool's and Whitby's Annotations.

(l) Deut. vi. 13.

† The Sanhedrim (whoſe Buſineſs it was to take Cognizance of the Pretenſions of all Prophets when they began to appear in the World, and to enquire into their Authority and Miſſion) thought proper, out of their Body, to depute ſuch, as were of this Sect, becauſe, as they were Perſons, who believ'd the Immortality of the Soul, and the Reſurrection of the Body, they were better qualify'd than the Sadducees, (who believ'd neither) to enquire of John, whether he was Elias? Being in this Particular mere Pythagoreans, and fancying, that the Soul of one great or good Man might not the Meſſiah, whom they expected, nor Elias, who (as they imagin'd) would perſonally appear among them, nor any other Prophet † riſen from the Dead; but then he gave them to underſtand, that, tho' he was not Elias himſelf, yet he was that Prophet, whom Iſaiah intended, when he called him, the Voice of one † crying in the Wilderneſs, Make ſtrait the Way of the Lord; that his Baptiſm was only of Water, but the Efficacy of it depended upon one among them, whom they knew not; one, who ſucceeded him indeed in Time, but ſo far ſurpaſs'd him in Dignity, that he was not worthy ſo much as to be his Servant.

John i. 29.

THE very next Day, after the Departure of the Phariſees, as our Saviour was returning from the Wilderneſs to Bethabara, John pointed him out to the Multitude, as the immaculate Lamb † of God, which taketh away the Sins of Mankind; and then freely declar'd, that he was the very Perſon, of whoſe Superiority, both in Dignity and Exiſtence, he had ſpoken, and of whom, by certain Tokens, he both knew, and could bear record, that he was the Son of God.

John i. 35. The Coming in of his Diſciples.

TO two of his own Diſciples, the next Day, he gave the ſame Teſtimony, inſomuch, that they left their old Maſter, and follow'd Jeſus; and when Andrew † (who was one of them) went and diſcover'd the ſame Thing to his elder Brother Simon, he, in like Manner, became one of his Diſciples, to whom, the Day following, were adjoin'd Philip, an Inhabitant of the City Bethſaida †, and an intimate Friend of his (m) nam'd Nathaniel, of Cana in Galilee, and ſuppos'd to be the ſame with the Apoſtle Bartholomew.

might frequently paſs into another's Body, Vid. Joſeph. Antiq. lib. xviii. c. 2. and de Bello Jud. lib. ii. c. 8. and as they were the Patrons of Tradition, and exact in all the ordinary Rules and Cuſtoms, that were to be obſerv'd, they were the properer Perſons to examine into this new Rite of Baptiſm, by Way of Preparation for the Meſſiah, of which their Traditions were wholly ſilent, and therefore they aſk him, why baptizeſt thou? i. e. "Why uſurpeſt thou "an Authority, which belongs to none, but either to the Meſſiah, Elias, or ſome Prophet; by initiating us, who are "already under the Covenant, into a new Doctrine by Baptiſm, which is uſually adminiſter'd to none, but Heathen "Proſelytes?" And from hence it appears, that the Phariſees were the propereſt Men to ſend to the Baptiſt upon this Meſſage. Calmet's Commentary, and Whitby's and Beauſobre's Annotations,

† It was a receiv'd Tradition among the Jews, that, at the Coming of the Meſſiah, ſeveral of the antient Prophets ſhould ariſe from the Dead. Beauſobre's Annotations.

† It is the Opinion of ſome, that John choſe rather to preach, and to fulfil his Miniſtry in the Wilderneſs, than in the Temple, in order to make a more illuſtrious Difference between himſelf, who was but a Meſſenger, (whoſe Office it was to prepare his Lord's Way) and his Lord himſelf, of whom it was propheſy'd, that he ſhould frequently appear, and teach in the Temple, Mal. iii. 1. Pool's Annotations.

† Under the Jewiſh Law, when any Sacrifice was offer'd for Sin, he, that brought it, laid his Hand upon it, according to the Commandment of God, Levit. i. 4. iii. 2. iv. 4. and, by that Rite, transferr'd his Sins upon the Victim, which, after ſuch Act, is ſaid to take, and to carry them away. Accordingly, in the daily Sacrifice of the Lamb, the Sationary Men, who were the Repreſentatives of the People, laid their Hands upon the Lambs, that were to be offer'd, and when they were thus offer'd, they are ſaid to make an Atonement for their Souls, Exod. xxx. 15, 16. and, in Analogy hereunto, Chriſt is here called, by Way of Eminence, the Lamb of God, becauſe God intended to lay upon him, who was manifeſt to take away Sin, 1 John iii. 5. and came to ſuffer, in our Stead, the Puniſhment due to the Iniquities of us all. Whitby's and Beauſobre's Annotations.

† The other, in all Probability, was John, the beloved Apoſtle, and Evangeliſt, (becauſe he deſcribes the Circumſtances of the Time and Converſation, that paſs'd, ſo very punctually, John i. 40.) but in this, and ſeveral other Places of his Goſpel, (according to his wonted Modeſty) he chuſes to conceal his Name. Hammond's Annotations.

† There is no Mention of this Place in the Old Teſtament, and the Reaſon is, becauſe (as Joſephus tells us) it was but a very ſmall Village, till Philip the Tetrarch built it up to the Bulk and Appearance of a very magnificent City, and gave it the Name of Julias, out of Reſpect to Julia, the Daughter of Auguſtus Cæſar. Its original Name, in the Hebrew Tongue, imports a Place of Fiſhing, or elſe Hunting, and for both theſe Exerciſes it was very commodiouſly ſituated. As it belong'd to the Tribe of Naphtali, a Country remarkable for its Plenty of Deer, Gen. xlix. 21. it was excellently fitted for the latter of theſe Paſtimes; and as it lay on the North End of the Lake of Gennezareth, juſt where the River Jordan runs into it, it was ſo commodious for the former, that two of the Perſons juſt now mention'd, viz. Peter and Andrew, were Fiſhermen by Trade. Wells's Geography of the New Teſtament.

John ii. 1. His firſt Miracle of turning Water into Wine at the Marriage-Feaſt.

With theſe five Diſciples, Jeſus †, and his Mother, were invited next Day to a Marriage-Feaſt in Cana †, a ſmall Place in Galilee, not far from Nazareth. At this Solemnity there happen'd to be a Scarcity of Wine, which when his Mother underſtood, ſhe made her Application to him, in Hopes that, by ſome Means or other, he would not fail to ſupply the Defect. In other Inſtances, no doubt, ſhe had been made ſenſible of his ſupernatural Power; and therefore, (tho' his Anſwer to her ſeems to carry in it the Appearance of a Denial) ſhe ſtill expected ſomething extraordinary from him, and therefore order'd the Waiters to obey his Commands with the utmoſt Exactneſs.

The Cuſtom of the Jews, in all their Entertainments, was, to uſe frequent Waſhings; and, for this Purpoſe, there were, in a certain private Room, ſix Water-Ciſterns, containing each about twenty Gallons of our Meaſure. Theſe our Saviour commanded the Servants to fill up to the Brim, and, when they had ſo done, to carry the Liquor to the Governor of the Feaſt, for him to diſtribute to the reſt of the Company, as the Manner then was. But, when the Governor had taſted it, he was not a little ſurpriz'd; and, calling to the Bridegroom, told him, with a pleaſant Air, That, at moſt Entertainments like This, it was an uſual Thing for People to bring out their beſt Wine at firſt, and worſe, when the Gueſts had drank plentifully; but that he, contrary to the common Cuſtom, had reſerved his beſt to the latter End of the Feaſt.

This was the firſt Miracle, our Saviour did in any publick Manner, which prov'd both a Manifeſtation of his own Divinity, and a Confirmation of his Diſciples Faith. From Cana he went down to † Capernaum, † To aſcend and deſcend, to come and go, (according to the Hebrew Manner of Expreſſion) denotes a free and familiar Commerce, and ſuch, no doubt, was the Miniſtry of Angels, at our Saviour's Temptation and Agony, at his Reſurrection and Aſcenſion. The Words however muſt be own'd to be a plain Alluſion to Jacob's Ladder, Gen. xxviii. 12, 13. on the Top of which was the Divine Majeſty, and the Angels aſcending to receive his Commands, and deſcending to execute them: And therefore others have thought, that Chriſt by theſe Words intended to inform his Apoſtles, "That the Miracles, which they ſhould ſoon ſee him perform, would declare the Divine Majeſty preſent "with him, and giving him ſuch Commands, as he was to execute in his prophetick Office, as clearly and manifeſtly, "as if they had ſeen the Angels of God aſcending and deſcending upon him." Whitby's Annotations.

† It is obſerv'd by ſeveral, that only Ezekiel in the Old Teſtament, and our Saviour in the New, are called by this Name; that our Saviour is never ſo called but by himſelf; and that this is the common Appellation, that he gives himſelf. Ezekiel was doubtleſs ſo called to diſtinguiſh him from thoſe ſpiritual Beings, with whom he ſo frequently convers'd: And our Saviour took upon him that Title, not only to diſtinguiſh his human from his divine Nature, but to expreſs his Humility likewiſe, and Want of Reputation, while he continu'd in the Form of a Servant. Chemnitius, however, puts another Conſtruction upon this Title: He thinks, that, as the Term Meſſiah (which is commonly called Chriſt) was taken out of Daniel, ſo that other of the Son of Man is taken from thence likewiſe; for behold one, like the Son of Man, (ſays the Prophet) came with the Clouds of Heaven, and came to the Ancient of Days, Chap. vii. 13. and that therefore our Saviour did uſually call himſelf ſo, in Compliance to the Prophecy, as well as to aſſert his Humanity, and declare himſelf his Father's Servant, according to the Character given of him by Iſaiah xlii. 1. Pool's Annotations.

† In all Probability, it was at ſome Relation's Houſe, that this Marriage was kept, becauſe Mary was ſo ſollicitous for the Supply of Wine; and the Opinion of the Ancients is, that it was at the Houſe of Alphæus, otherwiſe nam'd Cleophas, whoſe Wife was Mary, the Siſter, or Couſin-German of the Bleſſed Virgin, and who, at this Time, marry'd his Son Simon the Canaanite, Matth. x. 4; tho' others will have it, that the Bridegroom was Nathaniel. Calmet's Commentary, and Whitby's Annotations.

† This is called Cana of Galilee, to diſtinguiſh it from another Town of the ſame Name, mention'd Joſh. xix. 28. belonging to the Tribe of Aſher, not far from the City of Sidon, and ſo ſituated much more North, than this Cana was. Wells's Geography of the New Teſtament.

† This City is no where mention'd in the Old Teſtament, either under this, or any Name like it; and therefore, is it not improbable, that it was one of thoſe Towns, which the Jews built after their Return from the Babyloniſh Captivity. It ſtood on the Sea-Coaſt, i. e. on the Coaſt of the Sea of Galilee, in the Borders of Zebulon and Naphthalim, naum, the Place where he uſually afterwards reſided; but his Stay at this Time was not long there, becauſe his Purpoſe was to go to Jeruſalem at the approaching Feaſt of the Paſſover †.

The firſt Paſſover. John ii. 15. His clearing the Temple, and working many Miracles at Jeruſalem.

As ſoon as our Saviour came to Jeruſalem, the firſt Thing he did, was to reform the publick Abuſe and Profanation of the Temple, occaſion'd by the Shops, which Money-Changers had ſet up, and the Beaſts, which the Dealers therein us'd to bring into the Court of the Gentiles †. This our Lord's Zeal for his Father's Honour could not well brook; and therefore, with a Scourge made of Cords, he drove all the Sellers ‖ and Barterers from the ſacred Ground, overturn'd the Tables † of the Money-Changers, and commanded thoſe who dealt in Doves or Pigeons, to take away their Goods, and make his Father's Houſe no longer a Houſe of Merchandiſe.

thalim, Matth. iv. 15, 16, and, conſequently, towards the upper Part thereof. It took its Name, no doubt, from an adjacent Spring of great Repute for its clear and limpid Waters, and which (according to Joſephus) is, by the Natives, called Capernaum. As this Spring might be ſome Inducement for the Building of the Town in the Place where it ſtood, ſo its being a convenient Wafting-Place from Galilee to any Parts on the other Side of the Sea, might be ſome Motive to our Lord for his moving from Nazareth, and making This the Place of his moſt conſtant Reſidence. Upon this Account Capernaum was highly honour'd, and is ſaid by our Lord himſelf to be exalted unto Heaven, but, becauſe it made no right Uſe of this ſignal Favour, it drew from him the ſevere Denunciation, that it ſhould be brought down to Hell, Matth. xi. 23, which has abundantly been veriſy'd; for ſo far is it from being the Metropolis of all Galilee, (as it was once) that it conſiſted, long ſince, of no more, than ſix poor Fiſhermen's Cottages, and may, perhaps, be now totally deſolate. Wells's Geography of the New Teſtament.

† This Feaſt is ſo well known, and has been ſo fully explain'd at the Time of its firſt Inſtitution, Exod. xii. that we need only remind our Reader, that, from the Word Paſach, which ſignifies to leap or ſkip over, the Jews gave the Name of Paſcha, or Paſſover, to that great Feſtival, which was annually appointed, in Commemoration of their Coming forth out of Egypt; becauſe, the Night before their Departure, the deſtroying Angel, who ſlew the Firſt-born of the Egyptians, paſſed over the Houſes of the Iſraelites, which were mark'd with the Blood of the Lamb, killed the Evening before, and for this Reaſon called the Paſchal Lamb. The Feaſt itſelf began on the fourteenth Day of Niſan, which is the firſt Month in their ſacred, but the ſeventh in the civil Year, and anſwers, in Part, to our March and April; but, as the Jews began their Days at ſix in the Evening, this Feaſt was to continue ſeven Days compleat, and ſo ended on the one and twentieth Day in the Evening. Calmet's Dictionary, under the Word.

† There were three Courts belonging to the Temple. The Court of the Prieſts, where the Altar of Incenſe ſtood: The Court of the Iſraelites, where the Jews, that were clean, and the Proſelytes of Juſtice, i. e. thoſe, who had embrac'd Circumciſion, and the whole Law of Moſes, met at their Devotions; and the Court of the Gentiles, where the unclean Jew, and the Gentile, who own'd the true God, without profeſſing Judaiſm, were permitted to come, and worſhip. Now, under the ſame Pretext of having the Sacrifices near at Hand, as well as out of a Contempt of that Court, where the Gentile Worſhippers were permitted to enter, the Prieſts, for their ſordid Gain, had permitted Beaſts and Poultry to be brought within this Court, and Graziers, and Huckſters, (whoſe Buſineſs properly was in the Markets of Jeruſalem) to mix with People at their Devotions, which was an Abuſe notoriouſly ſcandalous. Whitby's Annotations, and Eachard's Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory, chap. iii.

‖ It may poſſibly be aſk'd, how our Bleſſed Lord, with nothing but a Whip in his Hand, ſhould be able to execute this heroick Act, upon a Multitude of People, who might ſuffer Damage in their Wares, and, conſequently, be in a Diſpoſition to reſiſt him? Now, whoever conſiders, that our Saviour had done enough already to prove himſelf a Prophet ſent from God, and that the general Conceſſion was, that a Prophet, thus ſent, had ſufficient Authority to rectify Diſorders; if he remembers, at the ſame Time, the great Reverence, that was conſtantly paid to the Temple, and what Titles of Honour and Reſpect were given it by God himſelf, cannot but allow, that the preſent Abuſe of it was abominable, our Saviour's Zeal in redreſſing it commendable, and that, from all thinking and diſintereſted Perſons, it would, conſequently, meet with Countenance and Approbation. Nor is it to be doubted, but that a Conſciouſneſs of Guilt, in the Profaners themſelves, might, in ſome Meaſure, contribute to their Submiſſion and Acquieſcence; even in the ſame Manner, as his Enemies were ſtruck backwards, with a Senſe of their own Guilt, as well as the Majeſty of his Appearance, and fell down to the Ground, when they came to apprehend him in the Garden, John xviii. 6. Pool's Annotations, and Biſhop Smallbrook's Vindication, Page 146.

† It was an Appointment of the Law, that every Man, from twenty Years old and upwards, ſhould annually pay into the Treaſury of the Temple, in order to defray the Expence of the daily Sacrifices, the Sum of half a Shekel, Exod. xxx. 12, 15. This, and the voluntary Oblations of People of all Ranks, occaſion'd a Neceſſity of changing greater Coin into leſs, and very often, of foreign Coin into that which was current in the Nation. Under the Pretence therefore of having Things near at Hand, the Prieſts took this Opportunity to gratify their Covetouſneſs, by letting out Places to Money-Changers, who, to make up their Rent, (which very likely was exorbitant) might extort from thoſe, that came to them, or (as Origen imagines) give them ἀργύριον ἀδόκιμον, baſe Money inſtead of good, and ſo made the Temple a Den of Thieves. Whitby's Annotations on Matth. xxi. 13.

came and demanded of him by what [†] Authority he did theſe Things, and to give them ſome Evidence of his having a Commiſſion ſo to do: But to this he made no other Reply, than by foretelling his own Reſurrection, expreſs'd in the Metaphor of the Temple, which they underſtood of the Temple at Jeruſalem, that had been [‖] ſix and forty Years a-building, but he, of the Temple [†] of his own Body, which in three Days, after they had ſlain it, he promis'd to revive. Tho' therefore, at this Time, he refus'd to work any Miracle at the Inſtigation of the Jews, yet, ſhortly after, we find him working many, which ſurpris'd the whole City, and excited the Curioſity of one Perſon in particular, whoſe Name was Nicodemus (a conſiderable Man in the Sanhedrim, and of the Sect of the Phariſees) to repair to him, (but privately, and in the Night-Time, for Fear of being known) and to declare freely to him, That he verily believed he was come immediately from Heaven, becauſe the Miracles [‖], which he wrought, were a Demonſtration of it.

His Diſcourſe with Nicodemus concerning Regeneration, &c.

[†] HEREUPON our bleſſed Saviour took occaſion to let him know, that this Belief was not the only Qualification requiſite to become his Diſciple, and then proceeded to inſtruct him in the great Myſtery of Regeneration, telling him, “That, as no Production could tranſcend “the Nature and Condition of its Parent, “Fleſh,

[†] Whether it were the Prieſts, the Magiſtrates, or the common People, that put this Queſtion to our Saviour, 'tis certain, that they do not in the leaſt pretend to juſtify the Profanation, which he had thus reform'd; and therefore their Principle ſeems to have been, “That, let Corruptions and Abuſes in a Church be never ſo great, yet they “were not to be reform'd, but either by the ordinary Authority of the Magiſtrate, or by an extraordinary Authority from God. Such an Authority they were ready to acknowledge in Prophets; but then they expected that “thoſe, who pretended to This, and to have their Miſſion from God, ſhould be able to prove that Miſſion by ſome “miraculous Operations.” But, how they came to put this Queſtion to our Lord, after they had ſeen his Miracles, and knew that he claim'd a Divine Commiſſion, and had told them, that the Works, he had done in his Father's Name, bore Witneſs of him, John v. 36, can be imputed to nothing, but their Perverſeneſs, and obſtinate Infidelity. Pool's Annotations.

[‖] From Herod's beginning to rebuild the Temple, to this firſt Paſſover, after our Saviour's Baptiſm, 'tis agreed, that the Time was exactly ſix and forty Years; but then Joſephus, Antiq. lib. xv. c. 14, tells us, that the whole was finiſh'd in nine Years and an half. But this is to be underſtood of the grand Building only, ſince (according to the ſame Author, lib. xx. c. 8.) ſeveral new Works and Decorations were ſtill carrying on, and near eighteen Thouſand Men employ'd therein, even to the Time that young Agrippa was made King of Judea, which was about the ſixtieth Year of the Chriſtian Æra. Calmet's Commentary, and Beauſobre's Annotations.

[†] The Jews had a Maxim, or proverbial Speech among them, that the Sanctuary of Sanctuaries was the Meſſiah, and therefore there could be no Impropriety in our Saviour's calling his Body a Temple: For, if the Apoſtle calls our Bodies the Temple of God, as he does, 1 Cor. iii. 16, and 2 Cor. vi. 16, how much more does that Title belong to the Body of Chriſt, in which the Fulneſs of the Godhead dwelt always, and inſeparably? Pool's and Beauſobre's Annotations.

[‖] But are Miracles alone a Demonſtration of a Perſon's being ſent by God? Nicodemus was not ignorant of the Caution which Moſes had given the Jews againſt falſe Prophets, Deut. xii. 1, &c. nor does he here ſpeak of Miracles in general, but of thoſe particular Ones, which Jeſus had done in the Time of the Paſſover; and theſe were ſo great in their Nature, ſo ſolid in their Proof, ſo beneficial in their Effects, and in their End ſo well deſign'd to confirm a Doctrine, every Way ſuitable to the Divine Attributes, and to fulfil the Prophecies concerning the Meſſiah, the Sun of Righteouſneſs, who was to riſe with Healing in his Wings, Mal. iv. 2. that there was the greateſt Aſſurance, that none, without an omnipotent Hand, could do them. Not to ſay, that Nicodemus might have both examined the Doctrine, and enquir'd into the Life of Jeſus, before he made that Inference from his Miracles. Pool's Annotations, and Calmet's Commentary.

[†] Some have imagined, from the ſeeming Abruptneſs of the Anſwer, which our Lord gives Nicodemus, that Nicodemus might have put ſome previous Queſtion to him (not recorded by the Evangeliſt) concerning the Means of attaining the Kingdom of God, i. e. eternal Happineſs, or of qualifying himſelf to be a Diſciple of the Meſſiah; for, in that Senſe, the Kingdom of God is likewiſe taken. But (beſides that the Term anſwered does not always, in the New Teſtament, ſignify a Reply to a Queſtion already propounded (but very frequently no more, than the Beginning of a new Speech) the Connection between the Compliment, which Nicodemus makes our Lord, and our Lord's Reply to it, will not be amiſs, if we can but ſuppoſe in the Words this Implication: ——— “Thy Acknowledgment of my Divine Miſſion and Authority, free and generous tho' it be, will not be ſufficient to render thee a “Member of that Kingdom, which I am going to ſet up; for, except a Man be born again, i. e. renew'd in his “Mind, Will, and Affections, by the Operation of the Holy Ghoſt, and ſo become a new Creature, he cannot ſee “the Kingdom of God, i. e. he cannot be a Chriſtian here, or a Saint hereafter.” Pool's, Whitby's, and Hammond's Annotations.

† Thoſe, who make the Water and the Spirit, here mention'd by our Saviour, one and the ſame Thing, (which, to every common Reader, muſt, at firſt Sight, appear to be diſtinct) would do well to conſider, that the Queſtion between Chriſt and Nicodemus was about what was requiſite to prepare a Man for the Kingdom, i. e. God's Church, and make him Partaker of the Goſpel-Bleſſing. Certain it is, that Baptiſm by Water was not only the common Method of receiving Proſelytes into the Jewiſh Church, but it is declared likewiſe by our Lord himſelf to be the ordinary Way of entering into his Kingdom; for he, that believeth, and is baptized, ſays he, ſhall be ſaved, Mark xvi. 16. and therefore he gave Commiſſion to his Apoſtles to make Diſciples in all Nations by baptizing them, Matth. xxviii. 19. Nay; ſo far are the Gifts and Graces of the Holy Spirit from ſuperſeding the Neceſſity of this Ordinance, that, in the Apoſtolick Age, we find them rather eſteemed a proper Prediſpoſition for it: For, when the Holy Ghoſt fell upon Cornelius, and his Company, in the ſame Manner that it fell upon the Apoſtles, on the Day of Pentecoſt, Acts ii. 1. what is St Peter's Inference from theſe miraculous Gifts; Is it that the Perſons, on whom they reſted had no Need of Baptiſm? No; but rather, that theſe extraordinary Gifts were a full Evidence, that they were the proper Objects of it; for, can any one (ſays he) forbid Water, that theſe ſhould not be baptized? So far is the Baptiſm of the Spirit (even where it is undeniable) from excluding the Baptiſm of Water, and ſo ſtrong a Proof is the Inſtance before us, that the Graces of the Spirit may be the Foundation of a juſt Claim to Baptiſm, but never (where the Sacrament can be had) a lawful Diſpenſation to any Man for the Refuſal or Neglect of it. Whitby's Annotations, and Stanhope, on the Epiſtles and Goſpels, Vol. III.

† Our Bleſſed Saviour might well wonder at Nicodemus's Ignorance in the Point of Regeneration, when this was the common Notion of Proſelytiſm among the Jews, that he, who was waſh'd, and circumcis'd, was look'd upon as a recens natus, an Infant new-born: And when there were ſo many Paſſages, in the Law and the Prophets, relating to this very Doctrine; for what elſe can the Meaning be of the Circumciſion of the Heart, commanded by Moſes, Deut. x. 16. of the Renewal of a clean and right Spirit, pray'd for by David, Pſal. li. 10. of the putting God's Law in the inward Parts, mention'd by Jeremiah, Chap. xxxi. 33. and the giving his People a new Heart, and a new Spirit, promis'd by God, Ezek. xxxvi. 26? Theſe, and many more, were Intimations of the Doctrine of Regeneration; but the Phariſees were ſo taken up with their Rites and Traditions, that they gave ſmall Attention to the ſpiritual Things of nearer, and much greater Concernment to their Souls. Pool's and Beauſobre's Annotations.

† The Evangeliſt does no where mention the particular Place, where our Saviour began his Baptiſm, but there is Reaſon to preſume, that it was ſomewhere about Jericho, becauſe there it was, that John the Baptiſt firſt entered upon his Miniſtry; becauſe it ſeems expedient, that he ſhould open the firſt Scene of his Office, where his faithful Forerunner had given ſuch glorious and advantageous Teſtimonies of him, and, in one and the ſame Place, compleat John's Baptiſm of Repentance for Sins, (which was preparatory to his Coming) by the Baptiſm of Remiſſion of Sins, which he alone had proper Power to give. Calmet's Commentary.

John iii. 23. JOHN the Baptiſt had, at this Time, remov'd his Station from Bethabara to Ænon, a Place remarkable (as its Name imports) for Springs and Waters, and therefore of great Conveniency for baptizing. While he was there, a Diſpute happen'd to ariſe between his Diſciples, and certain Jews, who were preſent, which of the Baptiſms, that of John or that of Jeſus, was preferable? And when his Diſciples, by Way of Appeal to John, came, and acquainted him, that the Perſon, of whom he had given ſuch honourable Teſtimony, receiv'd Proſelytes (and that in vaſt Numbers) by the ſame Ceremony of Baptiſm, as he did, John repeated the ſame Teſtimony again, and reminded his Diſciples, how frequently he had told them, "That the Perſon, of whom they ſpake, was the Meſſiah, whom God had ſent into the World for the Salvation of Mankind, and himſelf no more than his Herald; and that his Miniſtry therefore was now going to decline, even as, upon the Approach of the Sun, the Glory of the Morning-Star decreaſes." And having ſaid many Things of the like Nature to prove Jeſus to be the Son of God, and of Co-Equality with the Father, he cloſ'd up his Commiſſion with theſe important Words, He that believes on the Son, hath everlaſting Life; but he that believeth not on the Son, ſhall not ſee Life, but the Wrath of God abideth on him.

Matth. xiv. 3. Mark vi. 17. Luke iii. 19. JOHN was, at this Time, in the Territories of Herod Antipas *, and, as he was a Man of great Freedom of Speech upon all Occaſions, he was not afraid, when he came to Herod's Court, to reprove him for his many Enormities, and, particularly, for his cohabiting with Herodias *, the Wife of his Brother Philip, who was ſtill living. This exaſperated the Woman againſt him to ſuch a Degree, that, tho' Herod, at firſt had ſome Eſteem and Reverence for him, yet, by her malicious Inſtigations †, ſhe prevailed with him to caſt him into Priſon, with a Purpoſe to have him deſtroy'd, whenever ſhe could find out a proper Opportunity.

ABOUT

* This Antipas, or Antipater, (for they are Words of the ſame Signification) was the Son of Herod the Great, by one of his Wives nam'd Cleopatra, a Native of Jeruſalem. In his firſt Will, his Father (as we ſaid before) nam'd him Succeſſor to his Kingdom; but, afterwards, he changed his Mind, made his Son Archelaus, King of Judea, and gave to Antipas the Title only of Tetrarch of Galilee and Petræa, which made him appeal to Auguſtus at Rome, in order to have his Father's former Will confirm'd, and the latter revers'd, but he did not obtain his End. Joſeph. Antiq. lib. xvii.

* This Woman was the Daughter of Ariſtobulus and Bernice, Siſter to King Agrippa, and Grand-Daughter to Herod the Great. She was, at firſt, married to her Uncle Philip, Son of the ſame Herod by Marianne, by whom ſhe had a Daughter nam'd Salome, the ſame who pleas'd Herod ſo well in her Dancing; and, how ſhe came to run from one Brother, to live with another, Joſephus has thus related the Story: ——— "Antipas, in his Paſſage to Rome, made ſome Stay with his Brother Philip, where he fell ſo paſſionately in Love with his Wife Herodias, that he could not forbear expreſſing it to her, and promis'd her withal, that, at his Return from Rome, he would put away his own Wife, and marry her. Upon theſe Conditions Herodias accepted of the Offer, and, as ſoon as Antipas was return'd, and his Wife gone, (for ſhe, having Notice of the Engagement between her Huſband and Herodias, made her eſcape to her Father Aretas, King of Petra) ſhe, with her Daughter Salome, left her Huſband Philip, and, coming directly to Antipas, for ever after liv'd with him in a State of Inceſt, Lev. xviii. 15. nor was her Ambition much leſs criminal than her Luſt: For, growing uneaſy to ſee her Brother Agrippa promoted to the Title of a King, while her new Huſband Antipas had no more than that of a Tetrarch, ſhe preſs'd him ſo much, that he determin'd to make a Journey to Rome, with an Intention to aſk the like Dignity of Caligula the Emperor; but the Emperor, being prejudic'd by ſeveral Letters, which Agrippa had written againſt Antipas, inſtead of advancing him, depriv'd him of his Tetrarchy, and condemn'd him to perpetual Baniſhment." The Emperor however, underſtanding that Herodias was Agrippa's Siſter, ſhew'd an Inclination to pardon her; but ſhe choſe rather to follow her Huſband in the Calamity ſhe had brought upon him, than to owe any Thing to her Brother's Fortune; ſo that they were both confiſcated, and baniſh'd together, firſt into France, and afterwards into Spain, where they dy'd. Jewiſh Antiq. lib. viii. c. 9.

† The Evangeliſts have aſſign'd the true Reaſon for the Baptiſt's Impriſonment: But ſince the Phariſees, very probably, repreſented him as an Author of a new Sect, a Promoter of Seditions and Rebellions, and a Perſon dangerous to the Government, by Reaſon of the Multitude of his Followers, Antipas craftily made that his Pretence (as appears from Joſephus, lib. xviii. c. 7.) for confining him; and, the better to remove him from the People, ſent him bound out of Galilee, into Petræa, to a ſtrong Caſtle, called Machærus, near the Dead Sea, and towards the Borders of Arabia, where he continu'd above a Year in Priſon. Eachard's Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory, c. 3.

From the Beginning of the Goſpels to Matth. ix. 8. Mark ii. 23. Luke vi. 1.

ABOUT the Time of John's Impriſonment, our Lord, who, by the Hands of his Apoſtles [†], had been baptizing for near ſeven or eight Months in Judea, underſtanding that the Phariſees began to be envious at him for the great Multitudes of People, that reſorted to him, reſolv'd to leave that Province, and paſs into [†] Galilee, in order to enter upon the more ſolemn Part of his miniſterial Function. In this Journey it was neceſſary for him to paſs through Samaria [†]; and, as he travelled on Foot, and the Weather was hot, when he came within a little of [†] Sychar, he ſent his Diſciples into the City to buy Proviſions, and ſat himſelf down by the Side of a famous Well, called Jacob's Well [†].

Our Saviour's Diſcourſe with the Woman at Jacob's Well.

WHILE he was ſitting there, a Woman of a looſe Life and Converſation came out of the City to draw Water; and when he requeſted ſome of her to drink, ſhe, perceiving that he was a Jew, took the Freedom to aſk him, how he could offer any ſuch Requeſt to a Samaritan, ſince there were ſo great Feuds, and ſo little Dealings [†] between them and the Jews? Little did the Woman know the Excellency [†] Several Reaſons may be aſſign'd, why our Saviour delegated the Office of baptizing to his Apoſtles. 1. Becauſe it was no ways proper for him to baptize in his own Name. 2. Becauſe the Baptiſm, that was peculiarly his, was the Baptiſm of the Holy Ghoſt, Acts xi. 16. 3. Becauſe it was an Office of more Importance, to preach the Goſpel, than to baptize, 1 Cor. i. 17. And, 4. Becauſe Chriſt's Baptizing of any might poſſibly have occaſion'd Diſguſts and Jealouſies among the Diſciples, in the ſame Manner, as, in the early Ages of the Church, we find People valuing themſelves, and deſpiſing others, upon their being baptized by ſuch or ſuch an eminent Apoſtle, 1 Cor. i. 12. Beauſobre's Annotations.

---

[†] It is a Province of Paleſtine, which extends itſelf chiefly into the Northern Parts thereof. The Tribes, which it contains, are Iſſachar, Zebulun, Naphthali, and Aſher, with Part (as ſome ſay) of Dan, and Peræa, beyond the Jordan. On the North, it is bounded by Lebanon and Syria; on the Weſt, by Phœnicia; on the South, by Samaria; and on the Eaſt, moſtly by the River Jordan, and the Sea of Galilee. It is generally divided into two Parts, the Upper and the Lower Galilee, whereof the former is called Galilee of the Gentiles, Matth. iv. 15. either becauſe it was chiefly poſſeſs'd by the Gentiles, with Jews interſpers'd among them, or rather, becauſe it border'd upon Gentile Nations, ſuch as the Phœnicians, Syrians, and Arabians. The whole Country (according to Joſephus) was fruitful, and well-cultivated, and the People laborious, and induſtrious. The Number of its Towns and Villages was prodigious great, and ſo well inhabited, that the leaſt of them did not contain leſs than fifteen Thouſand Souls. The Natives were a bold and intrepid Race of Men, who defended themſelves bravely againſt the foreign Nations, that ſurrounded them, but then their Wealth and Proweſs made them ſeditious, and very apt to rebel againſt the Romans, for which they ſometimes ſuffer'd very much. Whitby's Alphabetical Table.

[†] It is a Province of Paleſtine, (ſo called from its City of the ſame Name, that was once the Capital of the Kingdom of Iſrael) which lies exactly between Judea to the South, and Galilee to the North, and extends itſelf from the Mediterranean Sea Weſt-ward, to the River Jordan Eaſt-ward, taking up the moſt conſiderable Part of what formerly belong'd to the Tribe of Ephraim, and the half Tribe of Manaſſeh, on the Weſt Side of Jordan. Wells's Geography of the New Teſtament.

[†] Sychar is only a corrupt Pronunciation of Sychem, or Shechem, which is the Capital of the Country, that was once called Samaria. At preſent it is called Naploſa, and ſtands in a narrow Valley, between Mount Gerizzim on the South, (at the Foot of which it is ſituate) and Ebal on the North. On Mount Gerizzim they had once a Temple, which ſeem'd to rival That of Jeruſalem, but, in the Time of the Maccabees, it was deſtroy'd by Hyrcanus, and, what they have now, is only a little Place of Worſhip, to which, at certain Seaſons, they nevertheleſs repair for the Performances of the Rites of their Religion; but what thoſe Rites are, it is not eaſy to ſay. The whole Place, in ſhort, is ſtrangely decay'd from what it was anciently; for it conſiſts only of two Streets, that lie parallel under Mount Gerizzim, but is full of Inhabitants, and the Seat of a Baſſa. Wells's Geography of the New Teſtament.

[†] It is much to be queſtion'd, whether the Well, that is at preſent ſhewn to Travellers as Jacob's Well, be That, where our Saviour diſcours'd the Samaritan Woman, becauſe it ſeems to be too remote from the Town for Women to come thither to draw Water; unleſs we may ſuppoſe, that the City did formerly extend itſelf farther that Way, than it does now. However this be, the Well is, at preſent, cover'd with a ſmall Vault, into which you get down through a very ſtreight Hole, and then, removing a broad flat Stone, you diſcover the Mouth of the Well itſelf. It is dug in a firm Rock, about three Yards in Diameter, and thirty-five in Depth; and, to confute the Story, which is commonly told to Travellers, (viz. that it is all the Year dry, except on the Anniverſary, when our Saviour ſat upon it, but that then it bubbles up with Abundance of Water) Mr Maundrell tells us, that, when they came to ſound it, they found no leſs than five Yards of Water in it. Journey from Aleppo to Jeruſalem, and Wells's Geography of the New Teſtament.

[†] The chief Reaſons of the Jewiſh Hatred againſt the Samaritans were theſe three, 1ſt, The foreign Extraction of the Samaritans, they being moſt of them Deſcendants from the Cutheans, whom Salmanazar ſent to Samaria, lency of the Perſon, who aſk'd her ſo ſmall a Favour; but, in ſome Meaſure, to convince her, our Lord took occaſion from hence, under the Metaphor of Water, to diſcourſe to her of ſpiritual Bleſſings, and, to make her ſenſible of his Omniſcience, he reminded her of ſome Paſſages of her Life, particularly of the † five Times ſhe had been divorc'd for her Adulteries, and of the State of Fornication, wherein ſhe then liv'd.

CONVINC'D by this Diſcovery that he was a Prophet, ſhe propounded to him the great Queſtion ſo much controverted between the Jews and Samaritans, viz. Which was the proper Place of publick Worſhip, Gerizzim, or Jeruſalem? To which our Saviour, in his Anſwer, gives manifeſtly the Preference to the Jewiſh Form, and Place of Worſhip; but makes it a Queſtion of no great Moment, ſince the Time was approaching, when all Sacrifices and ceremonial Rites ſhould ceaſe, and when God, who is a Spirit, expected to be worſhipp'd in a more † rational and ſpiritual Manner, than hitherto he had been.

OUR Saviour, before he had done talking with the Woman, and juſt as his Diſciples were return'd from the City, had inform'd her, that himſelf was the (m) Meſſiah, whom ſhe ſpoke of; whereupon, leaving her Water-Pots, ſhe ran into the City, proclaiming aloud, that ſhe had met with a Perſon, who had told her all the Secrets of her Life, and who could be no other, than that great Prophet, who was to come into the World; ſo that the Inhabitants when he carry'd away the Ten Tribes into Captivity, 2 Kings xviii. 9. 2dly, The Difference of their Religion and Worſhip, foraſmuch as That of the Samaritans was a Kind of Mixture of Jewiſh and Pagan Rites together; and, 3dly, The Rival-Temple, which the Samaritans had built on Mount Gerizzim, and conſecrated to Jupiter Olympus, in order to avoid the Perſecution of Antiochus. Joſephus, Antiq. lib. xii. c. 7. Theſe were the chief Cauſes of the Animoſities between them. The Jews, however, did not carry their Reſentment ſo high, but that, in ſome Caſes, they would traffick, or buy any Thing of them; but then the Phariſees came in with a Tradition, that they were not to borrow any Thing of them, or receive any Kindneſs from them, nor drink of their Water, or eat of their Morſels. This, however, our Lord deſpis'd, as having no Foundation either in the Law of God, or Equity, and as tending to impair the Law of common Friendſhip and Humanity; and therefore we find him aſking to drink with the Samaritan Woman, and afterwards going into the City, and eating with the Sechemites. Beauſobre's and Whitby's Annotations.

† The Words in the Text are, thou haſt had five Huſbands, but whether five ſucceſſively, and after the Death of one another, or five, from whom ſhe had been divorc'd for Adultery, is not agreed. The beſt modern Interpreters, however, judge, that ſhe had been marry'd to five ſeveral Men, but ſo behav'd herſelf towards them, that for her Adultery, or ſome other froward Behaviour, they had given her a Bill of Divorce. This ſeems more likely to be the true Senſe, than that, after the Death of five legal Huſbands, ſhe ſhould live in Whoredom with a ſixth Perſon. Pool's Annotations.

† The Jews gave it out, that the Samaritans worſhipp'd God in the Image of a Dove; but this ſeems to be a mere Forgery upon them, 1ſt, becauſe among all the Idols, which they worſhipp'd when they came from Aſſyria, there is not the leaſt Hint of the Image of a Dove. 2dly, Becauſe Joſephus, who, in ſeveral Places of his Hiſtory, inveighs againſt them bitterly, does no where charge them with this Crime: And, 3dly, Becauſe it is a Thing utterly inconſiſtent with the Law of Moſes, which they embrac'd; for, as it forbids all Images, ſo it requires Men to ſacrifice the Dove to God; and ſurely, nothing can be more abſurd, than to worſhip That, which we are bound to ſacrifice. 'Tis very likely, therefore, that the Samaritans had no falſe Objects of Worſhip among them, and yet they, as well as the Jews, might not be furniſh'd with right Apprehenſions of the true One. They both were to blame, no doubt, in confining the Worſhip of God to any particular Place, and thinking, that he could not be rightly ador'd, but either at Gerizzim, according to the one, or at Jeruſalem, according to the other, when his Preſence is certainly every where, and in every Nation he that feareth him, and worketh Righteouſneſs, is accepted with him, Acts x. 35. They, as well as the Jews, might think, that God was pleas'd with outward Ordinances, with Sacrifices and Expiations, which ſanctified only to the Purifying of the Fleſh; but perhaps they never ſuppos'd, that theſe Things were but Types and Figures of what was to ſucceed, and therefore to be of no longer Continuance, than until the Subſtance of the Things themſelves was come. They, doubtleſs, both had ſome Expectations of a Meſſiah, but perhaps it never enter'd into their Heads, that he ſhould be the Angel of the Covenant, who, with the Incenſe of his Blood, ſhould offer up the Prayers of all the Saints upon the Altar, that is before the Throne, Rev. viii. 3. So that our Saviour, by this Part of his Diſcourſe with the Woman, plainly intimates, that, after his Reſurrection, and the Promulgation of his Goſpel, not only the Jews, and Samaritans, but the People of all Nations whatever, ſhould have righter Notions of God, the only Object of religious Worſhip, of the Extent and Univerſality of his Church, of the Qualifications requiſite in true Worſhippers, and of the Mediator, appointed by God to introduce and enforce their Prayers. Whitby's Annotations, and Calmet's Commentary.

habitants waited on him at the Well, invited him into their City, receiv'd him with great Civility, and, tho' ſome believ'd on him from the Teſtimony of the Woman, many more did ſo, from their own Conviction, in hearing his Sermons, and Divine Diſcourſes.

John iv. 46. His curing the Nobleman's Son, which converted his Family.

AFTER two Days Stay in the City, our Lord proceeded to Cana, where he had chang'd the Water into Wine, and where the Galileans, who, at the Paſſover, had ſeen the Miracles, which he did at Jeruſalem, receiv'd him with great Kindneſs and Reſpect. Hither it was, that an Officer belonging to the Court came, and addreſs'd himſelf to him with great Humility and Reverence, deſiring him, that he would come, and cure his Son, who was juſt at the Point of Death; and when, with more Importunity, he renew'd his Requeſt, and our Lord, to ſhew the Excellency of his Power, that could cure in Abſence, as well as Preſence, diſmiſs'd him with this Aſſurance, that his Son was reſtor'd to Health; the believing Father, joyfully returning home, was, by the Way, congratulated with the welcome News of his Son's Recovery; and enquiring of his Servants the Hour when the Child began to amend, by the Account, which they gave him, he perceiv'd, that it was at the very Inſtant, when Jeſus had declar'd to him, thy Son is well: Whereupon both he, and his whole Family, being convinc'd of our Saviour's Divinity, were converted to the Chriſtian Faith.

Luke iv. 14. His baſe Uſage at Nazareth, and Removal to Capernaum.

THE Impriſonment of John had put an End to his Miniſtry; and therefore, to ſupply that Loſs, our Saviour himſelf began to preach the Sum and Subſtance of the Goſpel, Faith, Hope, and Repentance, in the Province of Galilee; and this he did in ſuch an extraordinary Manner, that he was admir'd by all, and his Fame ſpread through the whole Country. Coming however to Nazareth, the Place of his Education, he went into the Synagogue † on the Sabbath-Day, and when he † ſtood up, and read (as the Cuſtom for Lay-Men was at that Time) a Paſſage in the Prophet Iſaiah, beginning with theſe Words, (n) The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, becauſe he hath anointed me to preach the Goſpel to the Poor, &c. which he apply'd to himſelf, (but in general Terms) and ſpake thereupon with ſo much Gracefulneſs, that the Eyes of the whole Congregation were turn'd upon him, admiring his Diſcourſe; many, who had known him in the Diſadvantages of his Education, began to have abject Thoughts of him upon the Meanneſs of his Extract, as if he had been

† That the Synagogue-Worſhip was, at this Time, loaded with Rites and Ceremonies of human Invention, that the Prieſts were very defective in the Diſcharge of their Functions, and the Manners of thoſe, who met there, very much corrupted, no one can doubt, who is at all acquainted with the Scriptures, and the Jewiſh Hiſtory; and yet, we find, that our Saviour and his Diſciples (as Members of the Church of Nazareth) went conſtantly every Sabbath-Day to theſe Synagogues, preſerving thereby the Unity of the Spirit in the Bond of Peace, and not, upon ſlight Pretences, forſaking the Aſſembling of themſelves together, as the Manner of ſome is, Heb. x. 25. Whitby's Annotations.

† What the Nature and Deſign of Synagogues were, and, at what Time, and upon what Occaſion, they were at firſt erected by the Jews, we have, in a particular Diſſertation, already diſcuſs'd, and need only take Notice, that tho' every Synagogue had a ſettled Reader, to whom was allow'd an annual Stipend, yet, when any grave and learned Perſon came in, (eſpecially if he was a Stranger) it was cuſtomary to make him the Compliment of reading the Portion of Scripture appointed for the Day, Acts xiii. 15. which he always did in a ſtanding Poſture. For, as the Law was given with Reverence, ſay the Jews, ſo it is to be handled with Reverence; and, when he had read what he thought fit, he might, if he was ſo diſpos'd and qualify'd, expound, or comment upon it. The Character, which John the Baptiſt had given of our Saviour, and the Miracles, which he had lately done in Cana and Capernaum, might poſſibly excite the Curioſity of the Maſter of the Synagogue to hear him read, and expound; read in Hebrew, and expound in Chaldee, as Ezra had introduc'd the Cuſtom. In reading the Law, People were confin'd to the Leſſon of the Day, but the Rabbins have obſerv'd, that, in reading the Prophets, there was a greater Licence allow'd; and therefore, tho' our Saviour might read juſt where the Book open'd, yet there ſeems to be a good deal of the Hand of God in directing him to a Place, which related to himſelf, and gave him ſo fair an Opportunity of declaring the Purpoſe of his Coming into the World, viz. to publiſh Redemption and Liberty, Pardon and Reconciliation with God. Beauſobre's Annotations, and Calmet's Commentary.

The wonderful Draught of Fiſhes, which amaz'd St Peter.

PETER and his Companions had been hard at Work all Night, but without any Manner of Succeſs; and therefore, when Sermon was ended, and our Saviour order'd Peter to launch out farther, and to let down his Nets for a Draught, he modeſtly

† Such Kind of popular Executions were ſometimes tolerated, and, under Pretence of Zeal for the Law, ſeveral were put to Death, (eſpecially in Times of publick Calamity, and, when the Jews were in their greateſt Diſtreſs, Joſeph. de Bello Jud. lib. v.) without the Formality of Juſtice. But what made the Nazarens ſo exceeding outrageous againſt our Saviour was, his declaring them unworthy of the Miracles he had done at Capernaum, his equalizing himſelf to ſome of the greateſt of the antient Prophets, and, by the Inſtances of the Sidonian Women, and Naaman the Syrian, plainly intimating, that his Goſpel ſhould chiefly be receiv'd by the Gentiles. Calmet's Commentary, and Whitby's Annotations.

† How he got out of their Hands, when they had laid hold of him, the Scripture does not tell us; nor is it our Concern to be curious to enquire. We know very well, that it was an eaſy Thing for him, who was God, as well as Man, to quit himſelf of any mortal Enemies: But how he did it, whether it was by blinding them for the preſent, or making himſelf inviſible, or merely by allaying their Rage, and changing their Wills, it is impoſſible to determine. Which Way ſoever he did it, it was certainly ſomething miraculous, and therefore depriv'd the Nazarens of the Liberty of complaining that he had done no Miracles among them. Pool's Annotations, and Calmet's Commentary.

† This Lake, which (according to Joſephus) is forty Furlongs in Breadth, and in Length an hundred, was, in the Times of the Old Teſtament, called the Sea of Chinnereth, Numb. xxxiv. 11. but the Writers of the New have given it three different Appellations. For, as it is called the Sea of Galilee, from the Province of Galilee in general, ſo it is called the Sea of Tiberias, from a Town of that Name, ſtanding on its Weſtern Shore, and the Lake of Genneſareth, from that Particular Tract of Galilee, which bounded it a great Way, on the Weſtern Side. The Lake lies upon a Gravel, which makes its Water both of a good Colour and Taſte. It is ſofter, than either Fountain or River Water, and withal ſo very cold, that it will not grow warm, tho' ſet in the Sun in the hotteſt Seaſon of the Year. The River Jordan runs thro' the Midſt of it, which ſtocks it with a great Variety of Fiſh, of a peculiar Taſte and Shape, not to be equalled in any other Place. In ſhort, it was a common Saying among the Jews, that God lov'd the Sea of Galilee more than any other Sea, which ſo far holds good, that this Sea, above all others, was honour'd with the Divine Preſence of our Bleſſed Saviour, while he dwelt at Capernaum, very frequently, and even once, after he was ariſen from the Dead. Wells's Geography of the New Teſtament.

‖ St Matthew and St Mark, in their Relations of this Tranſaction, are pretty uniform, but St Luke differs from them ſo widely, that Interpreters have been at ſome Pains to reconcile them. For, whereas the two former tell us, that theſe Fiſhermen were caſting a Net into the Sea, St Luke informs us, that they were gone out of their Ships, and had waſhed their Nets, beſides ſome other Variation in the Manner of the Call of the four Apoſtles. But, not to enter into a minute Examination of Particulars, we ought to conſider, that ſome Allowances are reaſonable, and neceſſary to be made for the Variation of Circumſtances in one Hiſtorian, who makes it his Buſineſs to recount Matters diſtinctly, and at large, and in another, whoſe Intention it is, only to declare Facts, in general, without entering into the Series and Order of each Action. Now, this is the Caſe of the two former Evangeliſts: They deſign'd no more, than a ſummary Account of theſe four Apoſtles Call, and their Compliance with it; and therefore they contented themſelves with ſetting down apart ſo much firſt, as relates to Andrew and Peter, and afterwards, what related to James and John. But St Luke, who purpoſes to ſhew the Manner, and whole Proceſs of the Call, records the Miracle at large, and interweaves ſeveral remarkable Paſſages, which were not needful to be mention'd in the brief Account of St Matthew and St Mark, but highly conducive to St Luke's Purpoſe of undertaking to deſcribe the miraculous Draught of Fiſhes, (Luke v. 10.) which, upon our Lord's Command to make a freſh Experiment, was taken. Stanhope, on the Epiſtles and Goſpels, Vol. III.

modeſtly told him of their unſucceſsful Toiling all Night, but, nevertheleſs, in Obedience to him, he was willing: Nor had he Cauſe to repent; for, upon letting down the Nets, they incloſ'd ſuch a Multitude of Fiſhes, that their Tackle began to break, ſo that they were forc'd to call to their Partners in the other Ship, to come to their Aſſiſtance, becauſe the Draught was ſuch, that it loaded both the Veſſels ſo very deep, that they were in ſome Danger of ſinking before they got to Shore.

AMAZ'D at this marvellous Sight, and dreading the viſible Appearance of ſo great and ſo divine a Power juſt by him, Peter threw himſelf down at our Saviour's Feet, deſiring him to † depart from him, becauſe he was a Perſon no ways worthy of his Preſence. But our Saviour bid him be of good Comfort, and, from the preſent Incident, took occaſion to inform him, that he had a nobler Work and Employment for him, even the † Gaining of Mens Souls to Salvation, if he would adjoin himſelf to him; and having given the like Invitation to the other three, Andrew, James, and John, they all obey'd his Call, and, leaving their Veſſels, Nets, Relations, and Employment, † became, ever after, his conſtant and inſeparable Diſciples.

† We have ſeveral Inſtances, both in the Old and New Teſtament, of Perſons ſtruck with dreadful Apprehenſions at the Preſence of the Divine Majeſty, or even of ſome Angel, or a Prophet delivering a Meſſage from him. And therefore Grotius ſuppoſes, that Peter's Caſe was much the ſame with that of the Widow of Sarepta, when ſhe complain'd to Elijah, What have I to do with thee, O thou Man of God, art thou come unto me to call my Sins to Remembrance? 1 Kings xvii. 18. But others more juſtly think, that Peter's Words are expreſſive, rather of his high Sentiments of our Lord, and the Conſciouſneſs of his own Unworthineſs to be found in ſuch a Perſon's Company, and that therefore they do not a little reſemble that glorious Declaration of the Centurion in the Goſpel, Lord, I am not worthy, that thou ſhouldeſt come under my Roof, but ſpeak the Word only, and my Servant ſhall be healed, Matth. viii. 8. Calmet's Commentary, and Pool's Annotations.

† The Words in our Tranſlation are, From henceforth thou ſhalt catch Men, but in the Greek ἀπὸ τοῦ νῦν ἀνθρώπους ἔσῃ ζωγρῶν, there is ſomething very remarkable. For it does not ſay, that Peter ſhould catch Men, as People generally do wild Beaſts or Fiſhes, in order to kill them, and eat them; but that he ſhould take them alive, as ſuch Fiſh and wild Creatures are taken, that are deſign'd to be put in Stews and Parks; and therefore the Senſe of the Words is, ——— Thou ſhalt be a Fiſher of Men, but ſuch a Fiſher, as ſhall preſerve them alive; as ſhall retrieve them, in ſhort, from Error and Ignorance, and Death; and conduct them to Truth, and Knowledge, and eternal Life. Hammond's Paraphraſe, and Calmet's Commentary.

† Towards the Concluſion of the firſt Chapter of St John's Goſpel, we meet with a Call of ſome five of our Lord's Diſciples, about a Year prior to this; but, by the Account of the other Evangeliſts, it appears that they did not, at this Time, become our Saviour's conſtant Attendants, becauſe it is preſumable, that, tho' he took this Opportunity to make himſelf known to them, yet he had not, as yet, any immediate Occaſion for them, and therefore remitted them to their reſpective Trades. Only Philip is ſuppoſ'd to have retain'd to him from the very firſt, becauſe he ſeems to have called him in a formal Manner, as he did not, at that Time, the reſt, John i. 43. and becauſe we find no farther Interview between him and Philip upon this Score, as there was between him and three, at leaſt, of the reſt, Luke v. 10, 11. Theſe three Diſciples therefore, viz. Andrew, Peter, and John, were twice called, but the former Calling was rather a Warning to hold themſelves in Readineſs for it, than an actual engaging them in his Service; but now in Philip, we meet with no other Call, than what he had at firſt, and therefore, tho' the Fathers, and ſome antient Writers, have given the Honour to St Andrew of being the firſt Diſciple; yet that Prerogative is evidently St Philip's. For though Andrew and Peter were the firſt that came, and converſ'd with our Lord, yet we find them returning to their Trades again, and not ordain'd to their Diſcipleſhip, till after the Time that the Baptiſt was caſt into Priſon. Beauſobre's Annotations, and Calmet's Commentary, and Howell's Hiſtory, Book ii. in the Notes.

† There are ſeveral Opinions, wherein the Excellency of Chriſt's Preaching, above that of the Jewiſh Doctors, did conſiſt. Some think, that his Teaching was not ſo much in the Manner of an Inſtructor, as a Legiſlator, and one, who, in his own Name, had Power to propound the Terms of Life and Death. But tho' this, in Relation to Chriſt's Divinity, be certainly true; yet it is not ſo agreeable, either to his Prophetick Office, or his frequent Declarations, that the Doctrine which he taught was not his own, but his, who ſent him; and that he ſpake not of himſelf, but as his Father had commanded him, John vii. 16. and xi. 51. Others imagine, that the Excellency of Chriſt's Preaching conſiſted aſtoniſh'd at him; and, to increaſe their Admiration, one in the Congregation, whoſe Body was poſſeſs'd with an unclean Spirit †, cry'd out in an hideous Manner, Let us alone, what have we to do with thee, thou Jeſus of Nazareth? Art thou come to deſtroy us? † I know thee who thou art, the Holy One of God. But Jeſus, who wanted the Teſtimony of no ſuch Confeſſors, commanded his Silence, and Departure out of the poor Man's Body; which immediately was done, to the great Surprize and Amazement of all the Spectators.

conſiſted in the Miracles, wherewith he confirm'd his Doctrine; for ſo the Evangeliſt repreſents the Matter: They all marvelled, ſaying, What new Doctrine is this? For with Authority he commandeth the unclean Spirits, and they obey him. Mark i. 27. But becauſe another Evangeliſt tells us, that it was his Doctrine, without his Miracles, that aſtoniſh'd the People, Matth. vii. 29. others are of Opinion, that his Excellency lay in the graceful and lively Manner of his Delivery, not like the Teachers of the Jews, who read their Lectures of the Law ſo coldly, ſo perfunctorily, as never to affect the Hearts of their Hearers; and that, in ſhort, he ſpake as a Prophet, who had a full Commiſſion from God to deliver his Meſſage to them; not as the Scribes, who pretended only to deliver the Traditions of their Forefathers. Whitby's and Pool's Annotations.

† Thoſe, who are minded to depreciate our Saviour's Miracles, will need perſuade us, that the Jews, having a Notion, that the Diſeaſes, whoſe Symptoms they could not account for, were inflicted by Devils, whom God might employ to chaſtiſe Mankind, did therefore give the Name of evil Spirits to ſeveral Diſtempers, which proceeded merely from natural Cauſes; that, of theſe Diſtempers, ſuch as had any Thing loathſome or nauſeous attending them, they generally called by the Name of an unclean Spirit; and that, becauſe Sepulchres, of all other Places, were reputed the moſt polluted, therefore, whenever any crazy or melancholick People took it in their Heads to frequent ſuch Places, that they were always ſaid to be poſſeſs'd with ſuch Spirits. See Beauſobre's Annotations on Matth. iv. 24. and x. 1. But, how groundleſs this whole Hypotheſis is, we ſhall take occaſion to ſhew at large, in our Anſwer to the Objections, belonging to this Chapter.

† It may juſtly be made a Queſtion, whether the Devil, who poſſeſs'd this Man, did actually know our Saviour to be the Son of God, as he pretended. There are two Evangeliſts, who relate this Miracle, and, in the Concluſion of it, both tell us, that our Saviour ſuffered not the Devils to ſpeak, becauſe they knew him to be Chriſt, Mark i. 34. Luke iv. 41. But, notwithſtanding this, ſome Interpreters do not ſcruple to affirm the contrary, viz. that the Devil had no perfect Perception of our Lord's Divinity, until his Reſurrection from the Dead. The State of Humiliation, which he choſe, the Obſcurity, which he liv'd in, and the Perſecutions, which he ſuffer'd, without ever employing his Power to redreſs them; the Care, which he took to conceal his moſt renown'd Actions, and to refer the Glory of them all to God alone, deceiv'd the Devil, and kept him in Suſpence. For, had he known Jeſus, ſay they, he would never have put it into the Heart of Judas to betray, or of the Jews to crucify him, ſince this was the proper Way to accompliſh Man's Redemption. But the Anſwer to this is obvious, —— That, tho' the Devil did know Jeſus to be the Meſſiah, yet he did not know the Myſtery of Man's Redemption. When he firſt eſſay'd our Lord in his Temptations, he ſpake indeed in a different Manner, If thou be the Son of God; but, by his Defeat, he ſoon perceiv'd that his Antagoniſt was more than Man. Tho' therefore he perfectly knew him to be the Son of God, yet, ſeeing him inveſted with our Nature, he might, very likely, be ſo far infatuated, as to think, that, by deſtroying his Humanity, he might poſſibly defeat God's great Deſign. For, how ſublime ſoever we may ſuppoſe his Intellective Faculties to be, yet the wonderful Work of Man's Salvation by the Death of Chriſt, the Apoſtle plainly tells us, is what no finite Underſtanding could comprehend, until God was pleaſed to make all Men ſee, what is the Fellowſhip of the Myſtery, which, from the Beginning of the World, hath been hid in God, to the Intent that now, unto Principalities and Powers in heavenly Places might be known, by the Church, the manifold Wiſdom of God, according to the eternal Purpoſe, which he purpoſed in Chriſt Jeſus our Lord, Eph. iii. 9, &c. Calmet's Commmentary.

† Fevers are common Diſtempers, and very often cur'd by ordinary Means, ſo that the Nature of this Miracle did not lie in the Cure of an incurable Diſeaſe, but in the Manner of the Cure, which was with a Touch; the Suddenneſs of it; her Fever immediately left her; and the Perfectneſs of it, in that ſhe was able to riſe and wait on the Company. This is ſaid to be Peter's Wiſe's Mother; and from hence it may be preſum'd, that Peter, who was himſelf of Bethſaida, had marry'd a Woman of Capernaum, and there liv'd with his Mother-in-Law. Pool's and Beauſobre's Annotations.

|| This plainly ſhews, that the curing of Diſeaſes, and the caſting out of Devils, were two diſtinct Things, and, conſequently, the Error of thoſe, who, in their Annotations, upon the very Texts, where they are mention'd ſeparately, endeavour to perſuade us, that the Devils caſt out were only Diſeaſes. Whitby's Annotations.

From the Beginning of the Goſpels to Matth. ix. 8. Mark ii. 23. Luke vi. 1.

People of all Kinds, and begging the Relief of this Heavenly Phyſician, who very readily cur'd them all, by a Touch only, or the Impoſition of his Hand.

Mark i. 35. Luke iv. 42.

THE next Morning he retir'd very early into a private Place, that, being free from the Noiſe and Importunities of the Multitude, he might have an Opportunity to pray: But even in his Solitude he was found out; and therefore, to diſengage himſelf from ſuch a Croud of Attendants, he told his Diſciples, that the Purport of his Miſſion was to preach the Goſpel in other neighbouring Cities, and therefore, leaving Capernaum, he made a Progreſs into Galilee, preaching in their publick Synagogues, curing all Kinds of Diſtempers, and diſpoſſeſſing all Demoniacks, that were brought to him.

Mark i. 40. Luke v. 12. In his Progreſs through Galilee, he cures a Leper, and at Capernaum, a Paralytick, &c.

IN his Progreſs through Galilee, he met with a Man overſpread with a foul Leproſy †, whom, upon his humble Petition, with one Touch † he immediately healed, but, at the ſame Time, † gave him ſtrict Charge, not to diſcover it to any one, until he † had preſented himſelf before the Prieſt, and offer'd the Sacrifice, that was appointed for a Teſtimony † of his Cure: But the poor Man, out of the Abundance of his Joy, could not refrain from publiſhing it abroad wherever he came, which ſtill increas'd our Saviour's Fame, ſo that he avoided returning openly into the City of Capernaum, leſt the Multitude of his Followers ſhould give ſome Umbrage to the State; and therefore, having finiſh'd his Progreſs through Galilee, (which laſted for almoſt three Months) he retir'd into a deſert Place, and there employ'd ſome Part of his Time in Prayer.

† A Leproſy was a Diſtemper very common among the Jews. It proceeded from a general Corruption of the Blood and Juices; render'd the Perſon, tainted with it, extreamly loathſome and deform'd; and, in hot Countries eſpecially, was, of all Diſtempers, the moſt ſpreading in the Body, and the moſt contagious to others. But then, with Regard to the Notions of the Jews, and their Law concerning it, it was ſtill more deteſtable. It ſeparated the Perſon infected with it from all civil and religious Communion. It diſtinguiſh'd him by all the outward Significations of Sorrow and Shame. It was generally look'd upon, as a Plague, inflicted by God, for ſome enormous Crime. It was thought ſo far above the Power of Art, that the very Attempt to cure it by Medicines was eſteem'd an impious Preſumption. In ſhort, it was dreaded as the higheſt of legal Pollutions, and requir'd a great Variety of Luſtrations, before the Patient could be reſtor'd to the Privilege of a Jew, Levit. xiii. Stanhope, on the Epiſtles and Goſpels, Vol. II.

† But how came our Saviour to run the Hazard of making himſelf unclean, Levit. v. 3. by touching one, that was manifeſtly ſo? Now, whatever the Law concerning the Leper's Uncleanneſs might be, it ſeems, as if the Prieſt that officiated about him, was not affected by it, becauſe we find him directly to make ſo near an Examination, and Inſpection into his Diſtemper, Levit. xiii. 14, &c. Aaron, we may obſerve, tho' he officiated about his Siſter Miriam in her Leproſy, is not ſaid to have contracted any Pollution by it; and therefore, well might a much greater High Prieſt than Aaron, in Virtue of his Office, claim the ſame Immunity. But then, in Virtue of his Divinity, it was impoſſible for him to incur any legal Uncleanneſs: As therefore the Effect, wrought upon this Leper, was a plain Demonſtration, that the Finger of God was in it, and he, conſequently, approv'd of the Action; ſo the Jews make it a receiv'd Rule, that a Prophet might vary from, and even change the Ritual Law: And, from hence we may infer, that as Elijah, and Eliſha, both might touch the dead Children whom they rais'd to Life again, without Imputation of Uncleanneſs, 1 Kings xvii. 19, and 2 Kings iv. 34. ſo might our Saviour touch this Leper; tho' the Opinion of ſome is, that he did not properly touch him as a Leper, becauſe, the Moment that he ſtretch'd out his Hand, the Leproſy was cur'd: But, if it were not, the Obſervation of Theophylact, (in Luc. vii. 13.) ſtill ſtands good, viz. That our Lord might touch the Leper, in order to ſhew, that it was not neceſſary to obſerve thoſe leſſer Matters of the Law; that touching an unclean Perſon did not defile one, that was pure himſelf: and that the only Thing indeed, that did defile, was the Leproſy of the Soul. Calmet's Commentary, and Whitby's Annotations.

† If it be aſk'd, Why our Saviour ſhould ſo often command the concealing his Miracles? We may aſſign for Reaſons, not only his Modeſty and great Humility, that there might be no Appearance of Oſtentation in him, and that the Jews might have no Pretence to accuſe him of ſeeking his own Glory, Matth. xii. 16. but becauſe, at this Time, it was not proper to irritate the Scribes and Phariſees (who had already made him quit Judea) too much. He knew that, in ſuch a determinate Space, they would bring about what God in his Counſel had decreed. In the mean Time, he was to work the Works of him that ſent him, while it was Day, John ix. 4. and to propagate his Goſpel, as much as poſſibly he could, both among the Jews and Gentiles, which could not have been ſo conveniently done, if the Greatneſs of his Miracles had once provok'd the Malice and Envy of his Enemies, to make their utmoſt Oppoſition againſt him. He knew, likewiſe, the mad and capricious Humour of the Multitude, and had Reaſon to apprehend, that they might come, and take him away by Force, and make him a King, John vi. 15. if all his Miracles had been blaz'd abroad, before he had ſufficiently inſtructed them in the ſpiritual Nature of his Kingdom. As therefore he was far from being a Friend to Popularity, or Sedition, he deſir'd, that ſeveral of his Miracles might be ſuppreſs'd, leſt any bad Conſequences ſhould attend the Publication of them, until his own Reſurrection from the Dead ſhould be an undeniable Proof and Confirmation of all the reſt. And this I take to be the Reaſon of his referring the Phariſees, when they came to demand a Sign of him, to that of the Prophet Jonah, Matth. xii. 39, whereby he imply'd, that he would uſe no more Means for their Conviction, until, by the Miracle of his Reſurrection, his Divine Power and the Completion of the ancient Types and Prophecies ſhould be ſo dilucidly manifeſted, as to leave them without all Excuſe. Calmet's Commentary, Beauſobre's and Hammond's Annotations.

† The Prieſthood, at this Time, was much degenerated from its primitive Inſtitution, and many human Rites and Ordinances were added to God's Law concerning the Prieſt's Examination of the Leper, who pretended to be clean; and Matth. ix. 2. Mark ii. 3. Luke v. 18.

UPON leaving his Retirement, he went privately into Capernaum, but it was not long before he was diſcover'd; and as ſoon as he was, ſuch vaſt Crowds were gather'd together to hear his Sermons, and to bring their Diſeas'd for Cure, that the Houſe where he was, and all the Court-Yard about it were not ſufficient to contain them. In the Houſe were many great Perſons, Phariſees, and Doctors of the Law from Jeruſalem and Judea, as well as Galilee, who, led thither by their Curioſity, ſat hearing his Diſcourſes, and obſerving his Miracles, when four Men came bearing a Paralytick † on his Bed; but, finding it impoſſible to paſs through the Throng, they adventur'd to uncover the Houſe ||, to let down the ſick Man, Bed and all, into the very Room, where he was ſitting.

and yet our Lord ſent this Leper to ſubmit to all theſe new-invented Ceremonies, as knowing, that tho' they did indeed corrupt, yet they did not extinguiſh the Divine Inſtitution. The Divine Inſtitution was no more than this, ——That, when a Leper was cur'd, he was to appear at the City-Gate, and the Prieſt was to examine whether he was truly healed or no; that, if he was, the Prieſt receiv'd him into the City, and by degrees into the Temple, whither he ſhould bring two clean Birds of any Kind, (the marginal Note ſays Sparrows) and, having made a Bunch of Cedar and Hyſſop mix'd together, ſhould tye them with a ſcarlet Ribbon made of Wool; that to this Bunch of Cedar and Hyſſop one of theſe Birds ſhould be faſten'd alive, and the other kill'd by the Leper, that was cur'd, and its Blood receiv'd in a Veſſel, fill'd with Water; that, when this was done, the Prieſt ſhould take the Bunch with the live Bird, and, having dipp'd both in the Water, ting'd with the Blood of the other Bird, ſhould ſeven Times ſprinkle the Leper with it, and that, after this, the live Bird ſhould be let looſe to flee where it would, and the Perſon, thus healed and purify'd, ſhould again be admitted to the Society of the Healthy, and a Communion in religious Offices, Levit. xiv. 1, &c. Whitby's and Hammond's Annotations.

† Various are the Senſes of the Words, a Teſtimony to them; for, they may ſignify, that the Gift or Oblation, which the Leper was to carry, would be a Means to evince the Perfection of his Cure, when the Prieſts had examin'd and admitted it as ſuch; that this would likewiſe be an Evidence to the People, who ſtood at that Time, and ſaw him cur'd, when they ſhould hear that the Prieſts had pronounc'd him clean; a Proof to the Prieſts, that himſelf was an Obſerver of the Law, by requiring his Patient to comply with the Ceremonies of it; and a full Demonſtration, that he was a Prophet come from God, ſince they themſelves own'd that a Leproſy could only be cur'd by the Finger of God. Beauſobre's, Hammond's, and Whitby's Annotations.

† The Words come from παραλύω, which ſignifies to reſolve or relax, and ſeems to imply, that this Diſtemper is a Relaxation of the Nerves, tho' it ſometimes proceeds from other Cauſes. It is always attended with great Weakneſſes, and Obſtructions of the Blood and Juices, which deprive the Limbs of their Motion, and ſometimes occaſion great Pain. The Diſtemper is reckon'd above the Power of all Medicines to remove; and yet, our Saviour cur'd it ſeveral Times merely by a Word's ſpeaking. Pool's Annotations.

|| But how could they poſſibly uncover the Houſe, when they could not ſo much as get to it, much leſs get upon it, by Reaſon of the Throng, that was before the Door? Now, to have a right Notion of this Matter, we muſt obſerve, that the Houſes in Judea were, for the moſt part, even, as they are to this Day, (Sandys's Travels, page 36.) low built, and flat roof'd, and ſurrounded with a Battlement about Breaſt-high, according to God's own Injunction, Deut. xxii. 8. ſo that, to go up to the Top of their Houſes, the Jews had two Ways; one, by a pair of Stairs within the Houſe, leading up to the Trap-door, which lay even with the Roof; and the other, on the Outſide of the Houſe, by a Ladder, or Pair of Stairs rather, either fix'd or moveable, by which they could aſcend to the Roof, when they pleas'd, without ever going into the Houſe itſelf. Since this then was the general Faſhion of Jewiſh Houſes, we need not doubt, but that this at Capernaum was of the ſame Figure and Make; and therefore the Bearers of the Paralytick, finding that they could not come at the Door by Reaſon of the Crowd, bethought themſelves of another Expedient. They went round a private Way, and coming to the Stairs, which ſtood on the Outſide of the Houſe, up theſe they carry him, and preſently gain the Top. But, finding the Trap-door (or Way of the Roof, as the Jews call it) ſhut againſt them, immediately they go to Work, and forcing it open, (which St Mark calls uncovering or breaking up the Roof, Chap. ii. 4. becauſe the Door, which lay even with the Roof, when let down and ſhut, was reputed a Part of it) they convey'd him down that Way, which St Luke calls letting him down through the Tiling, i. e. thro' the Roof, which (except where the Door was) was all pav'd with large Tiles, and by this Means they found it no difficult Matter to place him in the Midſt before Jeſus. Calmet's Commentary, and Pearce's Vindication of our Saviour's Miracles.

And as JESUS paſsed forth from thence, he saw a Man named Matthew sitting at the Receipt of Custom; and he saith unto him follow me; and he arose and followed him. St. Matt. Chap. 9. Ver. 9.

A. M. 4034, &c.
Ann. Dom. 30, &c.

From the Beginning of the Goſpels to Matth. ix 8. Mark ii. 23. Luke vi. 1.

Our Bleſſed Saviour, being not a little pleas'd with ſuch an Inſtance † of their Faith, and Reliance on his Mercy, was reſolv'd to cure the Man; and accordingly in the firſt Place, he gave him an Abſolution † from his Sins. This provok'd the Indignation of the Scribes and Phariſees, as deeming him guilty of Blaſphemy †, becauſe none (as they imagin'd) could forgive Sins, but God alone. But he, knowing their ſecret Thoughts, firſt reprov'd their Cenſoriouſneſs; and then, by curing the Patient before them, plainly demonſtrated what Authority he had to forgive Sins. For tho' the Power of Healing be much inferior to that of forgiving Sins; yet, becauſe it is not ſo eaſy to impoſe a Cure upon the World, where Mens Senſes are Witneſſes, as Remiſſion of Sins, which is a ſecret and inviſible Operation; therefore all the People, who were convinc'd by their Eyes of the Efficacy of Chriſt's laſt Words Riſe and walk, were ſatisfy'd of the Truth of the former Thy Sins are forgiven thee: And accordingly they glorify'd the Almighty, who had manifeſted ſuch Power on Earth, and being filled with reverential Fear, declar'd, that they had ſeen ſtrange and wonderful Things that Day.

Matth. ix. 9. Mark ii. 14. Luke v. 27.
He calls Matthew the Publican, and apologizes for his converſing with Sinners, and his Diſciples not faſting.

While our Lord continu'd at Capernaum, he went out one Day (as frequently he did) to the Lake-Side, and finding one Matthew †, otherwiſe nam'd Levi, the Son of Alpheus, a rich Publican, ſitting in his Office, he aſk'd him to be one of his Diſciples, who immediately † forſook his gainful Employment, and afterwards became both an Apoſtle and Evangeliſt. Within a few Days after his Converſion, Matthew invited our Saviour and his Diſciples, and, among others, ſome of the Profeſſion which he had forſook, to a Feaſt. The Scribes and Phariſees (who accounted all in a Manner Sinners, beſides themſelves, but more eſpecially theſe * Publicans) began to expoſtulate with theſe Diſciples, how it came to paſs that their Maſter, who ſet himſelf up for a Preacher of Righteouſneſs, and a Reformer of others, came to be ſo intimate with theſe lewd and loſt Wretches, as to ſit and eat with them at the ſame Table: But, when our Saviour undertook the Argument, he gave ſo fair an Account of the Reaſons for his converſing with theſe People, as made the very Objection † become his Apology. But all this would not content the Phariſees, and therefore, joining with ſome of John's Diſciples, that were then preſent, they came, and demanded of him, why it was that his Diſciples obſerv'd no Faſts, when ‡ they and John's Diſciples were known to keep many? To which he reply'd, "That † Some have ſuppos'd, that, becauſe the Hiſtory makes no mention of any Faith, but that of the Friends and Bearers of this impotent Man, that therefore the Patient himſelf had no Part in that virtuous Diſpoſition, which inclin'd our Saviour to compaſſionate him; and thence they infer, how far a Man may be benefited by the Faith and Interceſſions of others in his Behalf. But it is a Miſtake to think, that the Words their Faith exclude that of the ſick Perſon: For, had he not been perſuaded, that Chriſt was able to cure him, he would never have ſuffer'd himſelf to be preſented to him, in a Method ſo troubleſome to his weak Condition. We read indeed of no Petition, that he made to our Lord, but the Violence of his Diſtemper might poſſibly have depriv'd him of the Uſe of Speech; or, if it had not, the very Spectacle of a body ſo debilitated, the Manner of the Action, and the Fatigue which he muſt have undergone in it, all ſpake for him, and carry'd a more moving Eloquence, than it was poſſible for any Tongue to utter. Stanhope, on the Epiſtles and Goſpels, Vol. III.

† The Jews were of this Perſuaſion, ——— That every Diſeaſe of the Body (thoſe eſpecially, which were of a grievous Nature) were ſent upon Men for the Puniſhment of their Sins; and though they might carry this Maxim too far, John ix. 3. yet ſure it is, that the Scriptures repreſent moſt of the Calamities of Life, as the natural Effect of Mens Iniquities. And therefore ſome have obſerv'd, that, as the Word Sins is frequently put for the Puniſhment of Sins, our Saviour's forgiving the Man's Sins was no more, than a Declaration of his Intention to cure his Diſtemper: Whereas it is plain, that our Saviour ſpeaks of them, as two diſtinct Things, when he puts the Queſtion to the Company, Whether is eaſier to ſay, Thy Sins be forgiven thee? or to ſay, Take up thy Bed and walk? Matth. ix. 5. Whitby's Annotations.

† This Word, in Heathen Writers, ſignifies no more than Slander, or Calumny, or opprobrious Language of any Kind, ſuch as tends to impair a Man's good Name; but, in the ſacred Stile, it means unworthy and injurious Talk concerning God's Nature or Attributes; as when we aſcribe unto him ſuch Qualities as belong not to him, or rob him of thoſe that do; to him, the Infirmities of Man; or to Man, the Perfections of God. This is the Nature of the Sin; and the Puniſhment of it, under the Law, was Stoning without the Gates of the City, Lev. xxiv. 15, 16. Calmet's Commentary.

† Grotius, and thoſe that follow him, are of Opinion, that the Levi mention'd Luke v. 27. is not the ſame with Matthew, in Matth. ix. 9. becauſe Matthew never calls himſelf Levi, nor does Mark or Luke ever call Levi Matthew. But the Anſwer to this has long ſince been given by St Jerom, in Matth. ix. 9. viz. that the other two Evangeliſts (as their Charity and good Nature became them) endeavour to cover the Infamy of their Brother's former Way of Life, and therefore never call him the Publican, leſt they ſhould ſeem to reproach him with the Remembrance of his former Converſation, but ſpeak of him under his other Name; though he, out of his great Humility, in the Goſpel written by himſelf, does not only take the more commonly known Name of Matthew, but adds that odious Title likewiſe of Matthew the Publican. Since then the Cuſtom of having more Names than one, is known to have prevailed among the Jews; and as St Mark calls him Levi, the Son of Alpheus; ſo Matthew, in all Church Hiſtory, is ſaid to be the Son of one of the ſame Name; and ſince the Hiſtory of the Perſon, called Levi in Mark and Luke, agrees ſo exactly with what is ſaid of him, who, in the other Evangeliſt, is called Matthew, that there is not one circumſtantial Difference to be perceiv'd, we cannot but conclude, that this Matthew and Levi were one and the ſame Perſon. Whitby's Annotations, and Stanhope, on the Epiſtles and Goſpels, Vol. IV.

† The old Enemies of our Religion, Julian and Porphyry, accus'd Matthew of Folly and Inconſiderateneſs, in following a Man, whom he knew nothing of. But St Jerom's Reply is ——— That he could not want a ſufficient Knowledge

Knowledge both of our Saviour's Doctrine, and Miracles, before his Call. The Publicans, we find, were great Frequenters of the Synagogues, and other Places, where our Saviour taught, and, of all others, expreſs'd the greateſt Eagerneſs to be inſtructed by him; and therefore, if Matthew was of the ſame Diſpoſition, he cou'd not want Opportunities of being acquainted with our Saviour's Preaching, and of the wonderful Works, which he did every where, but more eſpecially at Capernaum. It is very probable therefore, that Matthew, upon ſuch Conviction, was inclinable to become one of our Saviour's Diſciples, even before he aſk'd him: But, if he was not, the Luſtre and Majeſty of the Divinity, hid under the Manhood, but ſhining conſpicuouſly in the Face of Jeſus Chriſt, was enough to attract every one, that he caſt his Eyes upon; at leaſt, that powerful Impulſe, which he, to whom all Hearts are open, knew how to inject into Matthew's Breaſt, could not fail to do it: And from this ſupernatural Movement doubtleſs it chiefly was, that ſo readily, and without the leaſt Heſitation, he left all, and followed Chriſt. Calmet's Commentary.

* Nor was it only among the Jews, but among the Heathens likewiſe, that the Name of a Publican was infamous. For, according to their Writers, they were accounted no better than Thieves and Cheats: Free Violence, and unpuniſh'd Rapine, and ſhameleſs Covetouſneſs, were their publick Profeſſion. Πάντες τελῶναι πάντες εἰσὶν ἅρπαγες, was the Saying of the Poet; and it is ſaid of Theocritus, that being aſk'd, which was the crueleſt among the Beaſts? His Reply was, That, of thoſe on the Mountains, the Bear and the Lion, but of thoſe in the City, the Publicans and Sycophants. Whitby's and Hammond's Annotations.

† The Arguments, which our Saviour uſes to the Phariſees for his keeping Company with Publicans and Sinners are theſe three: 1ſt, They that are whole need not a Phyſician, but they that are ſick, Matth. ix. 12. by which he intimates to them, that, in converſing with ſuch ſort of Perſons, he was about the Diſcharge of his proper Buſineſs; and that, as a Phyſician's Profeſſion did ſometimes call him among Patients, that had the moſt virulent Diſtempers; ſo he, whoſe Office it was to heal Souls, ought not to refuſe his Aſſiſtance to thoſe, whoſe Circumſtances moſt of all wanted his Help and Advice. 2d, God's Saying, in the Prophet Hoſea, Chap. vi. 6. that he would have Mercy, meaning thereby all the kind Offices, whereby we promote our Neighbour's Advantage, rather than Sacrifice, i. e. the Rites and Ordinances of the ceremonial Law; whereby he taught them, that tho' theſe latter might, in their due Place and Seaſon, be acceptable to God, yet Charity to the Souls of Men (which was the higheſt Act of Mercy, and that, wherein he was then employing himſelf) was much more eſteem'd by him. 3. That he came not to call the Righteous, but Sinners to Repentance, or that the great Deſign of his Appearance in the World was, to change the corrupt Manners and Diſpoſitions of Men; a Change, which the Righteous ſtanding leſs in need of, ſhould no more grudge the Opportunities of it to Sinners, than the Healthful ought to think themſelves diſparag'd, when the Phyſician forbears the Viſits to them, which he makes to the Sick. Some Commentators however have obſerv'd in this laſt Argument a ſevere Irony, and thus they expound it: "I am not come to cure thoſe, that think "themſelves well, nor to ſave thoſe, that account themſelves righteous, as you Phariſees ſeem to do; but I "am come to cure thoſe, who find themſelves ſick, and are ſenſible of the Burthen of their manifold Iniqui-"ties, as theſe Publicans ſeem to be." Stanhope, on the Epiſtles and Goſpels, Vol. IV. and Calmet's Commentary.

‡ Beſides the publick Faſts appointed by the Church, the Phariſees in general did faſt two Days every Week, and thoſe of more Strictneſs than ordinary, four. The Diſciples of John too, who was himſelf a Man of ſuch Abſtinence that our Saviour ſays of him, He came (comparatively) neither eating nor drinking, Matth. xi. 18. did, no doubt, in a great Meaſure, follow the Example of their Maſter; and, now that he was confin'd in Priſon, might, very probably, double their Faſts and their Prayers to God for his Deliverance. And if they and the Phariſees were able to do this, why ſhould the Diſciples of Chriſt be deem'd inſufficient? Now, to this it may be anſwer'd, that, among the Jews, there were not only the Sects of the Eſſenes and Phariſees, who led an auſtere Life, but alſo Schools of the Prophets, many of whom were Nazarites, and conſecrated to the Service of God; and that, beſides theſe, the Jews had likewiſe Academical and private Schools, from whence might come Diſciples to John, and the Phariſees, already train'd up to Faſting, and Penance, and other ſevere Duties of Religion. But now it is certain, that the Diſciples

“That it was not the proper Seaſon for the † Friends of the Bridegroom to faſt and afflict themſelves, while they had the Bridegroom's Company, but when they were depriv'd of it; and that it would be as imprudent and prepoſterous a Thing, to impoſe rigorous Auſterities upon his Diſciples, (who were but Novices in Religion, and inur'd to another Way of Life) as it would be to ſhew a Piece of new Cloth upon a rotten Garment, which, upon any Streſs, would make the Rent worſe, or to put new Wine † into old leathern Bottles; which, upon the leaſt Fermentation, would both burſt the Bottles, and deſtroy the Liquor; for ſee the Prevalence of Cuſtom, and how difficult it is to change an inveterate Habit, for as much as (n) none having drank old Wine deſireth new; for he ſaith the old is better.”

The OBJECTION.

“MEN, that take Matters upon Content, and read Hiſtories without ever examining into them, may perhaps imagine, that the Evangeliſts have given us a fair and rational Account of our Saviour's Doctrine and Miracles, without incurring any of the Abſurdities, or Inconſiſtencies, that are ſo manifeſt in other Writers; but, if we take a nearer Inſpection of the Books, that have deſcended to us under their Names, we ſhall find them relating ſuch incredible Stories, ſo frequently miſtaken in Matters of Fact, ſo generally miſapplying Paſſages in the Prophets, ſo inconſiſtent with themſelves, and ſo contradictory to one another, that ſome of the Objections, which Jewiſh or Heathen Infidels have advanc'd againſt them, have not been thought groundleſs or inſignificant.

“FOR what a lamentable Thing is it, that the two Evangeliſts, Matthew (o) and Luke (p), in deducing our Saviour's Lineage, ſhould almoſt in every Article, diſagree, and thwart one another; or, (were it poſſible to reconcile them) that they ſhould both make their Pedigrees terminate in Joſeph, who was no more than the reputed Father of Jeſus, and not in Jeſus himſelf, as born of the Virgin Mary, from whom alone he had his human Nature, and whoſe Genealogy, in this Caſe, was only to be regarded? What a plain Contradiction is it, that St Matthew (q) ſhould introduce

Diſciples of our Lord were choſen from their Fiſhing-Trade, and ſo came to him wholly unacquainted with, and unfitted for, theſe Auſterities, which to impoſe upon them now was not neceſſary; becauſe his Continuance among them was not to be long, and, after his Departure, they would have occaſion more than enough, to exerciſe theſe, and many more painful Duties in the Propagation of the Goſpel, and the Perſecutions which ſhould attend it. Whitby's Annotations.

† The Baptiſt, in his Diſcourſe to his Diſciples, had compar'd our Saviour to a Bridegroom, and himſelf to his Friend, or chief Gueſt, John iii. 29, and therefore, as our Saviour deſignedly makes uſe of the ſame Alluſion, his Argument runs thus,——“I am the Bridegroom, and my Church is my Bride; as long as I am here laſts the Marriage-feaſt, and my Diſciples are the Children or Friends of the Bridegroom, and ſo are not to mourn, but to rejoice with me while this Time laſts: But, at my Death and Departure, this Bridegroom ſhall be taken from them, and then will it be Time for them to faſt and mourn.” Whitby's Annotations.

† The Bottles, which were in uſe in the Eaſt, and, at this Time, are very common in other Countries, were not made of Glaſs, as ours are, but were certain Bags made of Goats-Skins, being well pitch'd and ſew'd together. They are very good Veſſels to preſerve Wine, Oil, or any other Liquor in; and, in this Reſpect, more eſpecially, very convenient to carry from Place to Place, becauſe, fall they never ſo often, they will not break, unleſs they be very old or decay'd. In which ſenſe, our Saviour compares his Diſciples, before the Deſcent of the Holy Spirit upon them, to old Bottles, becauſe they were not capable either of comprehending or practiſing all that Perfection, which he came into the World to teach Mankind. Calmet's Commentary.

“troduce our Lord as affirming to his Diſciples that Elias was already come in the Perſon of John the Baptiſt; and St John (r) put it in the Mouth of the Baptiſt to aſſert the very contrary, which he certainly would not have done, had he been the Perſon predicted by the (s) Prophet? And what a ſad Miſtake in Point of Chronology, that St Luke ſhould make the Taxation appointed by Auguſtus, which happen'd before our Saviour's Birth, fall out when Cyreneus was Governor of Syria, tho' (according to the Account of all other Hiſtorians) he did not ſucceed Quintilius Varus in that Government, (t) till above twelve Years after.

“ISAIAH makes mention indeed of a Virgin's (u) conceiving and bearing a Son, which St Matthew (x) has apply'd to the Conception and Birth of our Bleſſed Saviour; but, as the Word Alma, us'd by the Prophet, does not neceſſarily denote a Virgin, but ſometimes a young Woman, that has had Knowledge of Man; there is Reaſon to believe, that it ſhould bear this Signification, when referr'd to the Mother of Jeſus, becauſe 'tis difficult to imagine, how a Woman ſhould conceive, and bear a Son, and ſtill preſerve her Virginity. And indeed, if this be not the proper Acceptation of the Word, we can hardly aſſign any Reaſon, why our Saviour ſhould make choice of a Woman to be his Mother, who was betroth'd and marry'd to a Man, rather than a pure Virgin, who had no ſuch Engagements upon her.

“WHOEVER looks into the Writings of the Prophets, muſt obſerve, that, all along down from the Time of David, the Meſſiah is foretold under the Character of a very powerful Prince, who was to reign over the Houſe of Jacob for ever; and therefore it is abſurd to put the Son of Mary (who was born meanly, liv'd poorly, and dy'd ignominiouſly) upon the World for that Perſon, who is repreſented as one of the moſt glorious Kings, that ever was, or ever ſhall be in the Univerſe. 'Tis abſurd to tell us, that the Fulneſs of the Godhead dwelt in him bodily, and yet to relate the Story (y) of the Deſcent of the Holy Spirit upon him; unleſs we can ſuppoſe, that this Acceſſion of the Third Perſon in the Trinity could enable him to do more, than the Divinity, which always reſided in him: But much more abſurd is it, upon the like Suppoſition, to talk of (z) his being tempted by the Devil, when the Devil, if he knew him, would not have dar'd to do it; and, if he did not, the Divinity, wherewith he was arm'd muſt have made him impregnable to all his Aſſaults; ſo that the only End of this Tranſaction muſt have been to ſhew, that God was able to ſuſtain and overcome the Temptations of the Devil.

“MIRACLES are generally ſuppos'd to be the Manifeſtation of this Divinity reſiding in our Saviour, and the curing of Demoniacks is always accounted one of the greateſt of this Kind; but, as it is difficult to aſſign any Reaſon, why Dæmons at this Time were more numerous in Judea, than in any Country we ever read of; we have Reaſon to think, that the Perſons, repreſented in the New Teſtament as Demoniacks, were only ſuch, as were afflicted with ſtrange Diſeaſes, Fits of the Mother, Convulſions, Falling-Sickneſs, and the like; which the ſacred Penmen (according to the Idiom of the Hebrew Language) expreſs in this awful Manner.

“THE firſt Miracle, that our Saviour did, was his turning Water into Wine at a Marriage-Feaſt; but how he, who is all along repreſented as a very grave and ſedate Perſon, ſhould vouchſafe his “Preſence at a Wedding, which is uſually a Scene of Levities and Exceſs; how he came to give his Mother ſo rough and undutiful an Anſwer, that Interpreters have been at ſome Trouble to put a tolerable Conſtruction upon it; and, above all, how he came to ſupply the Company, which had already drank enough, with ſuch a large Quantity of Wine, as almoſt denotes him an Encourager of Intemperance, are Points, that the Evangeliſts have left to the perverſe Conjectures of Unbelievers.

“THE Completion of Prophecies, in the Perſon and Actions of our Bleſſed Lord, is certainly (a) a ſtrong Evidence of his being the Meſſiah; but, in the Application, which the Evangeliſts make of ſeveral of theſe, their Scope is commonly ſo perverted, their Words ſo corrupted, and their Senſe ſo wreſted from its plain and obvious Meaning; ſuch Shreds and looſe Sentences are culled out for this Purpoſe, as have no Manner of Relation to the Meſſiah, but ſuch as have receiv'd their Completion in ſome other Perſon, many Ages before; and, upon every Pinch, ſuch figurative and myſtical Interpretations (as quite expound away the true Importance of the Prophecies) are fled to for Shelter, that all that the Goſpel-Writers ſeem to have done upon this Head, is only to impoſe upon the World by a Parcel of Citations, and Applications of Prophecies, which, upon Examination, will be found nothing to the Purpoſe.

“(b) St MATTHEW, for Inſtance, (to name one Evangeliſt for all) having given an Account of the Conception of the Virgin Mary, and the Birth of Jeſus, informs us, (c) That all this was done, that it might be fulfilled, which was ſpoken by the Prophet, ſaying, Behold, a Virgin ſhall be with Child, and ſhall bring forth a Son, and thou ſhalt call his Name Immanuel! But the Words, as they ſtand in Iſaiah (d), relate to a young Woman, in the Days of Ahaz, as appears by their Context, and cannot, in any tolerable Conſtruction, have Relation to the Birth of our Saviour, whoſe Name was not Immanuel, but Jeſus.

“THE ſame Evangeliſt informs us, that Jeſus was carry'd into Egypt, from whence he return'd after the Death of Herod, (e) that it might be fulfilled which was ſpoken of the Lord by the Prophet, OUT OF EGYPT HAVE I CALLED MY SON, which Words are no where to be found but in the Prophet Hoſea (f); and yet, (g) according to their plain and obvious Senſe, they are no Prophecy, but relate to a paſt Action, viz. the conducting the Children of Iſrael out of the Land of Egypt.

“AGAIN, the ſame Evangeliſt, (h) having given us the Account of the Slaughter of the Children in Bethlehem, and in the Coaſts thereof, immediately ſubjoins, that then was fulfilled that which was ſpoken by Jeremiah (i), the Prophet, ſaying, in Rama was there a Voice heard, Lamentation, and Weeping, and great Mourning; Rachel weeping for her Children, and would not be comforted, becauſe they are not; whereas it is plain, from the Context, that this Lamentation, in its primary Senſe, does not relate to the Maſſacre of the Children in Bethlehem, but to the Ten Tribes being carry'd away into Captivity, and cannot, without manifeſt Violence, be apply'd to the other.

“ONCE more, the ſame Evangeliſt, having given us a ſhort Account of the Return, and Settlement of our Lord's Parents in the City of Nazareth, acquaints us farther, that the Reaſon of their doing ſo was, (k) that it might be fulfilled which is ſpoken by the Prophet, HE SHALL BE CALLED A NAZARENE.

“which is directly forging a Quotation upon us, becauſe there is no one of the Prophets, that ever ſaid or wrote any ſuch Thing. They no where tell us, that the Meſſiah was to dwell at Nazareth, nor can his Dwelling at Nazareth (ſuppoſing they did) be any Ground for his being called a Nazarene.

“The Place foretold by the Prophet, for his Birth and Habitation, was Bethlehem, and thither the Wiſe-Men were directed to repair; but now what Sort of Perſons theſe Wiſe-Men were, and from what Part of the World they came, what Kind of Star that was, which conducted them, and how they could know, that it portended the Birth of the King of the Jews; how the Juſtice and Mercy of God can be aſſoiled, in ſuffering ſo many harmleſs Babes to be maſſacred at Bethlehem upon the Account of Chriſt, or how Chriſt's Conduct may be accounted for, in diſcovering himſelf ſo freely to the Samaritan Woman, when he had all along given ſuch ſtrict Charge to his Apoſtles to conceal what they knew of his being the Meſſiah and Son of God; theſe, and ſome other Points, in this Period, the Evangeliſts have given us no Manner of Satisfaction in, and have therefore left us at large, either to form Conjectures of our own, or to call in Queſtion the Truth of their Narrations.”

Anſwer'd, by ſhewing, that there is no Contradiction in our Lord's Genealogy.

That the Evangeliſts were Perſons of too much Probity to deal in Lyes, and cunningly deviſ'd Fables, is evident from their Writings, wherein we find, not only the ſtricteſt Prohibitions againſt Guile and Diſſimulation both in Words and Deeds, but ſuch evident Tokens of their Simplicity and godly Sincerity, as ſhew, that they would not be prevailed upon to conceal Truth, even tho' it might tend to their laſting Diſhonour. For, let any one tell me, how they can be ſuppos'd capable of forging any Thing for the Advancement of their Cauſe, (l) who have not been wanting to record the Obſcurity of their Maſter's Birth and Life, the Poverty and Reproaches he endur'd in his Miniſtry, the Ignominy of his Paſſion and Death, and the Terrors and Agonies of his Mind upon the Approach of them; nay, who have not diſſembled their own Faults and Failings, their mean Extraction and Employments, their Ignorance and Miſtakes, their cowardly Deſertion of their Lord, and many unſucceſsful Attempts to convert others by their Preaching. Men, that were thus frank and open in their Proceedings, could never deſignedly palm any Falſehoods upon the World; and, if they were miſtaken in ſome Paſſages, it muſt be eſteem'd their Misfortune, not their Crime.

They were indeed illiterate Men all, except St Luke, and brought up in mean Employments; ſo very mean, that we cannot ſuppoſe them capable of writing a regular Hiſtory of any Kind, had they not been directed in it by the Spirit of Truth; but then to frame ſuch an excellent Syſtem of Morality, as is contain'd in the Goſpels; to give ſuch an extraordinary Account of the Satisfaction for Sin, and of the Nature and Office of a Mediator; to feign the Life and Actions of a Meſſiah, which ſhould agree ſo exactly with the Predictions of the Prophets, and the Types and Prefigurations of the Moſaick Law; this they were no more able to do, without the Aſſiſtance of the ſame Divine Spirit, than they were to create a World: And yet, notwithſtanding the great Variety and Difficulty of this Province, 'tis wonderful to obſerve how all the four Evangeliſts, who wrote at different Times, and in diſtant Places, agree, not only in the main Topicks, but ſometimes in the moſt minute Circumſtances, (m) inſomuch that whenever they ſeem to diſagree, (which chiefly ariſes from their not confining themſelves to the ſame Words or the ſame Order of Time) it looks, as if the the Spirit of God deſign'd on purpoſe that it ſhould be ſo, not only that they might be diſtinct Witneſſes of the ſame Things, but that all ſucceeding Ages of the Chriſtian World might ſee with their Eyes, that they had neither tranſcrib'd from one another, nor combin'd together like crafty Knaves.

(n) The Truth is, tho' the Evangeliſts no where contradict themſelves, or one another, yet they were not ſo ſollicitous to prevent their being ſuſpected of doing ſo by injudicious and raſh Men, as they would have been, had they recorded any Thing, but Truth; becauſe it is ſuitable to the Simplicity of Truth, not to be over-nice and curious about every Punctilio, and ſmaller Circumſtance, (as the Manner of Falſhood is) but to ſpeak fully and intelligibly, and then leave it to Men whether they will believe or not. Inſtead of criticizing therefore upon ſome difficult Parts of the Evangelical Writers, we ought to conſider their whole Deſign, Method, and Contrivance; and, if in theſe we find them rational and uniform, the common Candour of Mankind will hinder us from thinking them capable of any groſs Miſtakes or Inconſiſtencies, and where we perceive the Appearance of any ſuch, put us upon the charitable Office of adjuſting and reconciling them.

There is indeed a great and uncommon Difference between St Matthew and St Luke in their Genealogies of our Saviour, but to accommodate this, we may obſerve, 1ſt, That theſe two Evangeliſts were Men of different Nations, and, in that Reſpect, had different Deſigns. For (o) St Matthew was by Birth a Jew, wrote his Goſpel for the Benefit of the Jewiſh Converts; and wrote it very probably, in their Language: And, as he adher'd to the receiv'd Cuſtom of the Jews in this Matter of Genealogy, he began his Deduction no higher, than Abraham, the Father of the Hebrews; but St Luke was a Gentile, and may truly be called the Evangeliſt, as St Paul was the Apoſtle of the Gentiles; and therefore, when he comes to relate the Pedigree of Jeſus, he takes a different Method, and carries it up as far as Adam, the Father of all Mankind.

2d, We may obſerve likewiſe, that St Matthew (p) intends only to ſet down our Lord's † Political or Royal Pedigree, by which he had a Right to the Crown of the Jews, but St Luke ſhews his natural Deſcent through the ſeveral Succeſſions of thoſe, from whom he took Fleſh and Blood: And, to this Purpoſe, we find St Matthew (as we ſaid juſt now) beginning his Reckoning only from Abraham, (q) to whom the firſt Promiſe of the Kingdom was made; whereas St Luke runs his Line up to Adam, the firſt Head and Fountain of human Nature, which plainly ſhews, that the one deduc'd only his Title to the Crown, and the other the natural Deſcent of his Humanity.

3d, We may obſerve farther, that, as David had ſeveral Sons by former Wives, ſo by Bathſheba likewiſe he had three, beſides Solomon, whereof the eldeſt, next to him was Nathan, and that Chriſt deſcended naturally from David, not by Solomon, but, by Nathan: For, tho' it be frequently ſaid in Scripture, that the Meſſiah ſhould ſpring from David, it is never ſaid that he ſhould deſcend from Solomon; for which Reaſon, St Luke only deduces Nathan's Line,

† That St Matthew uſes the Word begat only in a political Senſe, is clear from hence, ——— That he applies it to him, who had no Child, even to Jeconiah, of whom it is expreſsly ſaid, Jer. xxii. 30. that God wrote him childleſs; whereupon, being depos'd by the King of Babylon, Zedekiah, his Uncle, was made King, and afterwards, upon the Removal of him likewiſe (there remaining no more of the Line of Solomon) Salathiel, being next of Kin, was declar'd King of the Jews; which Salathiel, upon that Account, is ſaid by St Matthew, Chap. i. 12, to have been begotten by Jeconiah, not becauſe he was naturally his Son, but only legally or politically ſo, as ſucceeding in the Kingdom during Jeconiah's Captivity. South's Sermons, Vol. III.

Line, which came into the Poſſeſſion of the Throne (upon Jeconiah's Captivity, and Want of Iſſue) in the Perſon of Salathiel.

4th, We may obſerve again, that the Crown of Judah being now come into the Line of Nathan in the Perſon of Salathiel, and, after him, in the great and renown'd Zorobabel; foraſmuch as the two Evangeliſts agree from Jeconiah to Zorobabel, and, after him, divide (each aſcribing to him a different Succeſſor, viz. the former Abiud, and the latter Rheſa) we may rationally ſuppoſe, that theſe two were the Sons of Zorobabel, and that from Abiud, the elder Brother, lineally deſcended Joſeph, according to the Computation of St Matthew, and from Rheſa, the younger Brother, deſcended Mary, of whom Jeſus was born, according to the Deſcription of St Luke.

5th, Once more we may obſerve, that it was a Cuſtom of the Jews, not to reckon the Woman by Name in her Pedigree, but to reckon the Huſband in Right of his Wife, for which Reaſon, we are not to think it ſtrange, that we find Joſeph twice reckon'd, firſt in his own Right by St Matthew, and then in his Wife Mary's Right by St Luke; for it is certain, that Mary was properly the Daughter of Eli, and that Joſeph, who, in the Account, ſucceeds him, is ſo reckon'd, not as his natural Son, but as his Son-in-Law, inſtead of his Wife Mary, as the Manner of the Jews was: And accordingly it is remark'd by ſome learned Men, that St Luke (r) does not ſay of Joſeph, that he was the Son of Eli, but only τȣ̃ Ἡλὶ he was of Eli, i. e. related to him, and belonging to his Family, as his Son-in-Law. Fit however it was, that the Genealogy of Jeſus ſhould be deduc'd from Joſeph, becauſe it was ſo generally receiv'd by the Jews, that Jeſus (s) was the Son of the Carpenter, (t) the Son of Joſeph; ſo that if Joſeph had not been acknowledg'd to have been of the Tribe of Judah, and of the Family of David (u), ſince, according to the receiv'd Rule of the Jews, that the Family of the Mother is not called a Family, they would not have failed to have objected this as a juſt Prejudice againſt all our Lord's Pretences of being the Meſſiah.

The Sum of theſe Obſervations, in ſhort, is this,——(x) That, the Royal Line of David by Solomon being extinct in Jeconiah, the Crown and Kingdom paſs'd into the next younger Line of Nathan, (another Son of David) in Salathiel and Zorobabel; which Zorobabel having two Sons, Abiud and Rheſa, the Royal Dignity deſcended, of Right, upon the Line of Abiud, of which Joſeph was the laſt; and he marrying the Virgin Mary, who ſprung from the Line of Rheſa, the younger Son of Zorobabel, and (as ſome imagine) having no Iſſue himſelf, his Right paſs'd into the Line of Mary, being next of Kin, and, by that Means, upon Jeſus her Son, ſo that he was both naturally the Son of David, and alſo legally the King of the Jews, the latter of which is accounted to us by St Matthew, as the former is by St Luke.

This ſeems to be a pretty clear Deduction of our Saviour's Pedigree, and is capable of giving a fair Solution to a great many of thoſe Objections, which ariſe from the different Names, or the unequal Numbers in the Names, or the unequal Diſtances from each other, which are diſcernable in the two Genealogies. But perhaps Interpreters might ſave themſelves the Trouble of giving a Reaſon for ſeveral Difficulties occurring therein, by ſaying, that St Matthew (y) (concerning whom the main Diſpute is) recites his Account, as he found it in the authentick Copies of the Jews, who, doubtleſs, in every Family, had preſerv'd ſome known and approv'd Genealogy of their Deſcent from Abraham, the Father of their Nation, in whom they ſo much glory'd, and from whoſe Loins they expected the promis'd Meſſiah.

THAT, even in our Saviour's Time, the Jews (z) had Genealogical Tables, wherein they kept an Account of their Families, and Tribes, is evident from what Joſephus ſays, viz. (a) That he gave the Succeſſion of his Family, as he found it written in the publick Books; nor need we queſtion, but that the like, or greater Care was employ'd to preſerve the Stems of the Royal Family of David. Since then the Jews, who liv'd in the Time when the Goſpels were publiſh'd, (tho' exactly curious in Things of this Nature, and, withal, maliciouſly bent againſt Chriſt and Chriſtianity) never once endeavour'd to invalidate the Account, which theſe Evangeliſts give us; this ſeems to be a ſufficient Proof, that theſe Genealogies, when firſt they came abroad, were neither thought erroneous, nor inconſiſtent, but agreeable to the publick Records then in Uſe, and, if any Difficulties now ariſe in them, they are not to be attributed to any real and intrinſick Cauſe, but acccidentally to the Ignorance of Interpreters, for Want of proper Helps, at this Diſtance of Time, whereby to explain them.

In our Lord's affirming John to be Elias.

IT may ſeem a little incongruous perhaps, that the Baptiſt ſhould deny what our Saviour confirms concerning him, viz. that he was the Elias, who was to be ſent before, to make Preparations for his Coming; but in this there will be no Manner of Contradiction, if it does but appear, that the Affirmation of the one, and the Negation of the other proceed upon different Conſiderations. Now the State of the Matter is this,—The Jews, at this Time, were in full Expectation of the Meſſiah, but then it was an univerſal Belief among them, that Elias ſhould appear before him, and that this Appearance ſhould be a certain Token of his Coming: This Belief they founded upon the Prophecy of Malachi, Behold I will ſend you Elijah the Prophet, before the Coming of the great and dreadful Day of the Lord; but then they imagin'd, either that the Body of Elijah was preſerv'd in Paradiſe, and ſhould again appear upon Earth at this Seaſon appointed for it, or that, his Body being diſſolv'd, God would infuſe the Spirit of Elijah into a new one, created for that Purpoſe. When therefore the great Council at Jeruſalem ſent to enquire of the Baptiſt whether he was either the Chriſt, or Elias, now return'd from Heaven, (as they imagin'd he was to do upon Chriſt's Appearance) to this their Senſe of the Queſtion he replies, in expreſs Terms, That he was neither the one, nor the other. But this does not at all interfere with our Lord's affirming, that he was the Perſon, foretold under the Name and Character of Elias, in the true Signification of Malachi's Prophecy. He was not indeed the very Elias, who had liv'd in King Ahab's Time, of whoſe ſecond Coming into the World the Sanhedrim now enquir'd, according to their Miſ-conſtruction of that Prophecy; but, according to the true Conſtruction thereof, he was the Perſon, who came in the Spirit and Power of Elias, of whom Elias was a Type, and whoſe Temper and Manner of Life Elias much reſembled.

HOW uſual a Thing it is for Perſons, who reſemble others in Qualities, Offices, or Actions, to be deſcrib'd by the Names * of thoſe, whom they reſemble, no one can be ignorant, who is the leaſt acquainted either with the Phraſe of Scripture, or with the common Forms of Speech. Thus the Meſſias is promis'd by the Name of David (b), becauſe he was to be a King; Zadock, the High-Prieſt, and his Sons are recorded by the Name of Aaron, and his Sons, by Reaſon of their Office; and, among us, 'tis no uncommon Thing to call the rich Man a Crœſus; the wiſe, Man, a Solomon; the Warrior, a Cæſar, an Alexander, or the like; and where then, I pray, can be the Miſapplication, in our Saviour's calling the Baptiſt by the Name of Elias, when, in the Severity of his Life, his Zeal for God's Glory, his ſuffering Perſecution, his bold Rebuking of Vice, his Reproofs of Herod, and the Hatred of his inceſtuous Queen, anſwerable to the Prophet's Chidings of Ahab, and the Malice of Jezebel, he ſo nearly reſembled the Tiſhbite? (c) He was not indeed the real Tiſhbite, but, by the Anſwer, which he returns to theſe Delegates from the Sanhedrim, (d) I am the Voice of one, crying in the Wilderneſs, make ſtraight the Way of the Lord, &c. he plainly intimates, that he was the very Meſſenger promis'd in Malachi, and came to diſcharge the Office aſſign'd to him in that Prophet. So far is John's Anſwer from contradicting what our Lord aſſerts of him, that it is indeed a Confirmation of it.

In the Account of the Taxation by St Matthew.

THE better to underſtand the Nature of that Taxation, which St Luke (e) refers us to, we muſt obſerve, that every fifth Year it was a cuſtomary Thing to take an Account of the Citizens of Rome, for which Purpoſe, there were proper Officers appointed, who were called Cenſors; (f) that their Buſineſs was to make a Regiſtration of all the Roman Citizens, their Wives and Children, with the Age, Qualities, Trades, Offices, and Eſtates, both real and perſonal of them all; that Auguſtus Cæſar was the firſt, that extended this to the Provinces, and three Times in his Reign, firſt, in the twenty-eighth Year before the Chriſtian Æra; ſecondly, in the eighth Year before it, and thirdly, in the fourteenth Year after it, cauſ'd the like Deſcription to be made of all the Provinces belonging to the Roman Empire, and that this ſecond Enrolment, which was in the eighth Year of the vulgar Chriſtian Æra, i. e. three Years before That, in which Chriſt was born, was the Deſcription to which St Luke refers us.

NOW ſuppoſing the Execution of Cæſar's Decree, in every Province of the Roman Empire, to be committed to the Governor of it; the carrying this Work through all the Countries that made up the Province of Syria, viz. through Syria, Cœlo-Syria, Phœnicia, and Judea, could not well take up leſs than the Space of three Years; for if Joab (g) was nine Months and twenty Days in taking an Account only (h) of the Ten Tribes of Iſrael, and in them only of ſuch Perſons as were able to bear Arms, we cannot think it unreaſonable, that the Execution of the Survey, which extended to all Manner of Perſons, their Poſſeſſions, Qualities, and other Circumſtances, ſhould, in ſo large a Province, take up leſs than three Years.

IT is to be obſerved farther, that tho' the Regiſtration was made at this Time, yet the Taxes thereupon were not paid till Judea was made a Roman Province, and Publius Sulpitius Quirinus (who in Greek is called Cyrenius) was made Governor of Syria; for, before Archelaüs was depos'd, the Jews paid their Taxes to their Princes, and their Princes paid their Tribute to the Roman Emperors; but, when Archelaüs was depos'd, and Judea made a Roman Province, the Tax was levy'd according to the Valuation that was made eleven Years before.

UPON the Whole therefore it appears, that, in this Affair, there were two diſtinct particular Actions, done at two diſtinct particular Times, viz. firſt, the making of the Survey, and then the levying the Tax thereupon; ſo that, if, what is ſaid in Luke ii. 1. be underſtood of the former of theſe, and what is ſaid in ver. 2. only only of the latter, this will remove all Difficulties, and reconcile that Evangeliſt with Joſephus; and, that it is to be thus underſtood, we have the Opinion of many learned Interpreters.

THE Truth is, (i) this Levy of the Tax, (which was ſettled eleven Years before) in the Time, when Cyrenius was Procurator of Syria, * was attended with ſo many Commotions and ſeditious Tumults, that the Evangeliſt thought, he could not make mention of its being decreed, without giving ſome Hint of the Manner of its being executed: And therefore he puts it in, by Way of Parentheſis, that (k) this Taxing was firſt made, (i. e. firſt put in Execution) when Cyrenius was Governor of Syria.

Or, in his Application of the Prophecy of Iſaiah, chap. vii. 14.

THERE is a Paſſage indeed in the Prophet Iſaiah, which St Matthew applies to the Birth of Jeſus, yet, according to the Context, it ſeems, at firſt Sight, to have a more immediate Reference to another Event; but let us examine the Hiſtory, from whence it is taken. In the Days of Ahaz, King of Judah, (and probably in the ſecond or third Year of his Reign) Rezin, King of Syria, and Pekah, King of Iſrael, united their Forces to come againſt Jeruſalem, which put the King and his People in ſuch Conſternation, (l) that their Hearts were moved (according to the Scripture-Expreſſion) as the Trees of the Wood are moved with the Wind. Hereupon Iſaiah is commanded to take his little Son Shear-jaſhub with him, and to go, and meet Ahaz, in order to aſſure him, that the Deſign, form'd againſt him by the two confederate Kings, ſhould not proſper: But, finding no Credence with the King, the Prophet undertakes to perform whatever Miracle he ſhould aſk, in Confirmation of the Truth of what he had promiſ'd him. Ahaz however, ſtill refuſing, out of a ſpecious Pretence of not being willing to tempt God, the Prophet turns from him, and addreſſing himſelf to the Nobles of the Royal Blood, (m) Hear ye now, O Houſe of David, ſays he, the Lord himſelf ſhall give you a Sign. Behold, a Virgin ſhall conceive, and bear a Son, and ſhall call his Name Immanuel.

* The Account, which Joſephus gives us of this Matter, is this, —— "Cyrenius, at this Time, ſays he, was "ſent Governor by Cæſar into Syria. He was a Man of eminent Fame, a Roman Senator, and one, that had paſs'd "through all the Degrees and Offices of Honour up to the Dignity of a Conſul. Coponius, who commanded the "Horſe, went along with him as Governor of Judea; but, Judea being already annex'd to Syria, it was Cyrenius's "Province to tax and ſeſs the Jews, and to make ſeizure of the Monies and Moveables of Archelaüs. The Jews "grumbled at this Way of aſſeſſing at firſt, but, through the Perſuaſion and Authority of the High-Prieſt Joazar, "the Son of Boethus, they were perſuaded to ſubmit and comply, without any farther Trouble, until one Judas, a "Gaulanite, of the City of Gamala, together with one Sadducus a Phariſee, inveigled the People into a Revolt. "Taxes, they ſaid, were only Marks of Slavery, and therefore the whole Nation ſhould do well to ſtand up for an "univerſal Liberty; and one lucky Hit would make them free and eaſy for ever, and advance them in their Reputation "as well as ſecure them in their Poſſeſſions. This was enough to put the Multitude in Tune for any Sort of Miſ-"chief: nor is it to be expreſs'd the Havock theſe turbulent Incendiaries made in the Nation, and what Murders "Robberies, and Depredations, without Diſtinction of Friend or Foe, they committed, under the Pretence of advanc-"ing the common Good of Liberty and Property, when nothing, but Paſſion and private Intereſt, was at the Bottom." (k) Luke ii. 2. (l) Iſaiah vii. 2. (m) Ibid. ver. 13, 14.

† Alma comes from an Hebrew Word, which ſignifies to hide, and very fitly agrees with the Cuſtom of the Eaſtern Countries, who were wont to keep their Daughters, while they were in their Virginity, from all Company and publick Converſation, and Interviews. Thus, it is ſaid, upon a publick and extraordinary Conſternation, that the Virgins, who were kept in, ran ſome to the Gates, and ſome to the Walls, and others looked out of the Windows, 2 Maccab. iii. 19. But there is another, and more proper Signification, which, from the ſame Word, that ſignifies to hide or cover, this Alma will bear, viz. as it denotes one, who has not known Man, or, according to the Scripture Phraſe, one, whoſe Nakedneſs has not been uncover'd. The Knowledge of a Woman is expreſs'd in the Law of Moſes by uncovering her Nakedneſs; and, agreeably hereunto, Alma is a moſt proper Word for a Virgin, who is cover'd, and whoſe Nakedneſs was never uncover'd, or revealed by the Knowledge of Man. This Account is perfectly agreeable to the Hebrew Manner of Speech, and to the Stile of the Law of Moſes. But this is not all, as ſeveral learned Men have ſhewn,

What, does Iſaiah offer Ahaz a Miracle, either in the Depth, or in the Height above, and when he ſeems to tell the Houſe of David, that God, of his own Accord, would perform a greater Work, than they could aſk, does he ſink to a Sign, that Nature produces every Day? Is that to be called a Wonder, (which Word implies an uncommon, ſurpriſing, and ſupernatural Event) which happens conſtantly by the ordinary Laws of Generation? How little does ſuch a Birth anſwer the ſolemn Apparatus, which the Prophet uſes, to raiſe their Expectation of ſome great Matter? Hear ye, O Houſe of David, —— Behold, the Lord himſelf will give you a Sign, worthy of himſelf, and what is it? Why, a young married Woman ſhall be with Child. How ridiculous muſt ſuch a Diſcovery make the Prophet, and how highly muſt it enrage the Audience, to hear a Man, at ſuch a Juncture as this, begin an idle and impertinent Tale, which ſeems to banter and inſult their Miſery, rather than adminiſter any Conſolation under it?

(p) But of what Uſe, or Conſolation could the future Birth of the Meſſiah be to the Houſe of David at that Time? Of very great Uſe, without all Doubt; for it aſſur'd them of the Truth of God's Promiſe, in that he would not ſuffer them to be deſtroy'd, nor (q) the Sceptre to depart from Judah, until the Meſſiah came. It aſſur'd them of his Almighty Power, in that he could create a new Thing in the Earth, by making a Virgin conceive, and thereby ſhew himſelf able to deliver them from their moſt potent Enemies; and it aſſur'd them likewiſe of his peculiar Favour, in that he had decreed the Meſſiah ſhould deſcend from their Family; ſo that the People, to whom he had vouchſaf'd ſo high a Dignity, might depend upon his Protection, and, under the Shadow of his Wings, think themſelves ſecure. (r) In ſhort, God had promis'd, the Meſſiah ſhould ſpring from the Tribe of Judah, and from the Family of David, even while that Tribe, and that Family, continu'd a Polity undeſtroy'd; and therefore, ſince that Promiſe was not yet abſolv'd, nor the Meſſiah as yet come, there was no Fear of the Extinction of Judah, and the Houſe of David at that Time, whatever their preſent Diſtreſs might be; but, as God's Promiſes were immutable, they had all Manner of Reaſon to believe, that the Enemies, now combin'd againſt them, would, by ſome Turn of Providence or other, be diſappointed in their Deſign.

ſhewn, that there is a great Affinity between the Hebrew and Punick Language, this makes the Words of St Jerom more remarkable: Linguâ Punicâ, quæ de Hebræorum Fontibus manare dicitur, propriè Alma Virgo appellatur, i. e. In the Punick Language, which is ſaid to be deriv'd from the Hebrew, ſhe, who is properly a Virgin, is called Alma, in Iſaiah, chap. vii. eſpecially, conſidering, that St Matthew renders it by the Word παρθένος, which ſignifies a Virgin, properly ſo called, the very ſame Word, that the LXX Interpreters made uſe of, about three hundred Years before St. Matthew wrote his Goſpel, and, conſequently, long enough before this Controverſy aroſe between Jews and Chriſtians. (r) Spanheim's Dub. Evang. Part. i. Dub. 27.

New Teſtament, made it a Thing neceſſary, that, when the Son of God came to be incarnate, he ſhould be born of a pure and immaculate Virgin; and 'tis impious to diſpute the Poſſibility of the Thing, when God Almighty was the Agent of it: But why this Virgin ſhould be (s) marry'd, rather than a ſingle Woman, is the other Queſtion, we are to reſolve. And, in order to do this, we muſt obſerve, that, by this Means, Mary's Genealogy, not only by her Father's Side, (which St Luke has recorded) but by her Huſband's likewiſe, (which St Matthew has done) came to be deduc'd; and ſo we have a double Teſtimony, that ſhe ſprang from the Seed of David, and, according to the Promiſes of old, was the true Mother of the Meſſiah; that, by this Means, we have the Teſtimony of her Huſband Joſeph concerning her Virginity, who was not a little uneaſy in his Mind, before he had Satisfaction given him by the Angel, and might, poſſibly, have been the firſt, that would have blaſted her Reputation, had he not been fully convinc'd of her Innocence and Modeſty; that, by this Means, our Lord's Birth was ſecur'd againſt all Imputation of Spuriouſneſs, and his Mother's Character protected from the Perſecution of opprobrious Tongues, which ſhe muſt have endur'd, (if not the Cenſure of the Law) and brought withal a perpetual Scandal upon her Family, had not her Pregnancy, by the Operation of the Holy Ghoſt, been concealed under the Umbrage of a common Huſband; and that, by this Means, our Lord was provided with a Guardian in his Childhood and Minority, and his Mother, with a Companion in her Journey, ſhe was ſhortly to take, from Nazareth to Bethany, and from thence into Egypt, and both of them with a Supporter, who, by honeſt Labour in his proper Occupation, might provide them with the Neceſſaries of Life.

In what Senſe he is, and will be, a moſt potent Prince.

THESE, and ſeveral other Reaſons, might be aſſign'd for our Lord's chuſing to be born of a Virgin, that went under the Notion of being marry'd; but how he came to be a Man of Poverty and Affliction, to live meanly, and die ignominiouſly, when (had he been the true Meſſiah) he muſt according to the Repreſentations made of him in the Prophets, have appear'd as one of the greateſt Monarchs in the World. This is the grand Objection of the Jews, and therefore, to give it a proper Solution, it ought to be conſider'd, that the (t) Meſſiah, in order to accompliſh the Prophecies concerning him, was to ſuſtain three different Characters; for he was to be a Prophet, and a Prieſt, as well as a King. The Predictions indeed, which refer to his Kingly Office, are more in Number, and enlarg'd upon more copiouſly, than either of the other; yet both the other are ſo eſſential to the Character of the Meſſiah, that, had any one of theſe been wanting in him, the Scheme of Man's Redemption had been broken and imperfect: And yet it is certain, that theſe three Offices require Operations, not only diſtinct, and peculiar to each, but ſuch as could not equally be exercis'd, at one and the ſame Time, by one and the ſame Perſon.

AS a Prophet, the Meſſiah was not only to teach, and inſtruct his People, but to undergo the common Fate of Prophets, in being deſpis'd, contradicted, perſecuted, and in bearing Teſtimony of the Truth of his Doctrine, by the Example of his Sufferings for it. As a Prieſt, he was to make ſacrifice for the Sins of his People, which, in this Caſe, could not be otherwiſe done, than by offering his own Blood, and, conſequently, dying in their Stead. Now, both theſe, in the Courſe of Things appointed by God, were to go before the Entrance upon his Kingly Office, becauſe the Prophecies mention'd this laſt, as a Recompence for the faithful Diſcharge of the other two. This is a Matter, that both the (u) Royal and (x) Evangelical Prophet expreſs ſo very plainly, that St Paul, in Effect, does but expound thoſe thoſe Paſſages, when he tells the Hebrews (y), that Jeſus, for the Suffering of Death, was crowned with Glory and Honour; and the Philippians (z), that for his taking upon him the Form of a Servant, and becoming obedient unto Death, even the Death of the Croſs, God had highly exalted him, and given him a Name, which is above every Name, &c. Since therefore his Regal Office was not to commence, till after he had accompliſh'd his other two, to complain, that his Kingly Power was not exercis'd at his firſt Coming, is to miſunderſtand the Prophecies, and confound the Order of Events: 'Tis to expect a full Accompliſhment of Predictions within a very narrow Space, that ſtrictly belong to an Office, ſtill in Exerciſe, and to which the Scripture ſays, (a) there ſhall be no End.

2. IT is to be obſerv'd farther, that the Stile and Manner of Prophets, eſpecially, when they treat of Subjects uncommon, ſublime, and ſpiritual, abound with figurative Schemes of Speech, and ſuch pompous and bold Metaphors, and Deſcriptions, taken from ſenſible Objects, as awaken in our Minds the moſt lofty Imaginations, we are capable of. This the Jews themſelves make no Difficulty to allow, and (b) ſome of their greateſt Doctors have laid it down for a Rule, in the Interpretation of the Prophets, that, in many Places, they are not literally to be underſtood, by Reaſon of thoſe metaphorical Expreſſions, whoſe true Intent is to repreſent Things, according to our Capacity, by Images familiar to our Senſes. If therefore moſt of theſe great and pompous Things, that are ſaid in the Prophets concerning the glorious Reign of the Meſſiah, may be underſtood of the ſpiritual Benefits, which we have receiv'd by his Coming, ſuch as the Graces of our Regeneration and Sanctification, the Wiſdom of his Laws, the Comforts of his Ordinances, the holy and peaceable Temper, which his Goſpel inſpires, the large Extent of its Propagation, and the bleſſed Effects, which, in all Places, where it is ſincerely believ'd and practis'd, it produces: If Things be reduc'd to this Senſe, I ſay, I cannot ſee, but that the Character of a powerful Prince has been fulfilled in our Saviour already; for what King was ever ſo proſperous as he, who, by the Propagation of his Goſpel, has enlarg'd his Dominions ſo wonderfully over the moſt diſtant Regions of the habitable World? Or, what Conqueſt was ever ſo glorious, as that, which he hath gain'd over the Errors and Prejudices, the Luſts and Paſſions of wicked and miſtaken Men, nay, even over all the Powers of Darkneſs, and Sin, and Death, and Hell?

BUT, be it granted, (as it ſeems indeed very probable) that ſeveral Paſſages in the Prophets relate to the temporal Greatneſs, Proſperity and Peace, that ſhall attend the Government of the Meſſiah, yet we are to conſider,

3. THAT, before the Conſummation of all Things, there will be an Enlargement of Chriſt's Kingdom, even here upon Earth. For, tho' he hath all Power both in Heaven and Earth already veſted in the human Nature, united with his own Divine Perſon, yet is not that Power ſo viſibly and fully executed, as it ſhall, one Day, be; nor are all thoſe glorious Effects as yet accompliſh'd, which the Prophets foretold, when deſcribing the victorious and peaceable, the unlimited and everlaſting Dominion of the Meſſiah. The Enlightening of the Jews and Gentiles, by bringing ſuch Multitudes of the one, and ſo many Nations of the other Sort, to the Acknowledgment of the Truth, is already a partial Completion of the Prophecies; but there is ſtill a nobler in Reſerve, when the Fulneſs of both ſhall come in. He reigns now actually in the Hearts of Men, and ſubdues the moſt formidable of our Enemies, by the Holineſs of his Laws, and the mighty Operations of his Grace; but that Dominion and Conqueſt will be much more abſolute, when the Time comes for every Enemy to be utterly deſtroy'd. Tho' therefore the Whole be not, yet abundantly enough has already been fulfilled, to make us acquieſce in a ſtedfaſt Aſſurance, that what is ſtill behind will moſt certainly come to paſs. For, ſure, how meanly ſoever they, that conſider Things imperfectly, may think of a deſpis'd and crucify'd Man, yet there is nothing ſo gloriouſly great, that may not moſt reaſonably be expected, from that very Man, when (c) declared to be the Son of God with Power, according to the Spirit of Holineſs, by the Reſurrection from the Dead.

The Deſcent of the Holy Ghoſt upon him.

IT is made a ſtrong Objection, by the Socinians, againſt our Saviour's being the Son of God, that, at the Time of his Baptiſm, the Holy Ghoſt deſcended upon him, for which there had been no Manner of Occaſion, ſay they, had the Divinity (which was certainly no leſs powerful than the Holy Ghoſt) been perſonally united to him. While our Bleſſed Saviour was diſcourſing concerning his approaching Death, and a Voice from Heaven was heard ſpeaking unto him, he told the People, (who ſeem'd to be divided in their Opinions of it) (d) This Voice came not becauſe of me, i. e. to ſatisfy me of the Divine Favour, or to comfort me againſt the Agonies of Death, but for your Sake, that ye might believe in me: And, in like Manner, it might be a ſufficient Anſwer to this Objection, that this viſible Deſcent of the Holy Ghoſt upon our Saviour was not for his Sake, or to convey any Virtue or Power, that he was not equally poſſeſs'd of by the Divine Nature, that reſided in him, but for the Sake of the Baptiſt, and thoſe, that were then preſent with him, even to inform them of the Excellency of his Perſon, and his Divine Miſſion: For ſo the Voice, which immediately follows the Prodigy, (e) This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleaſed; (f) hear ye him, plainly ſhews, that this whole Tranſaction was deſign'd for the Inſtruction of all the Company. Our Saviour indeed was now entering upon his prophetick Office, and fit it was, that the World ſhould have ſome previous Notice of it, before he came to open his Commiſſion. When he came to offer himſelf to John for Baptiſm, John indeed, by ſome ſudden Inſpiration, knew him, but he had not, as yet, made any publick Declaration of that Knowledge; and therefore God took care to give the Company this glorious Manifeſtation of his being his Son, and a Perſon ſanctify'd by this Deſcent of the Holy Ghoſt upon him to declare his Will to the World, (according to the Prophecy (g) concerning him) and whoſe Words and Doctrine it therefore concern'd all Men to hear and obey. Our Bleſſed Saviour indeed, as he was God, had no need of this Unction of the Holy Spirit, but, as he was to execute the prophetick Office, it was expedient for him to have it: For, as a Prophet is not to ſpeak in his own Name, but in the Name of God, and what he has ſuggeſted to him by the Spirit of God; ſo this prophetical Office was to be perform'd, not by the Divine Nature of our Lord, but by the Inſpiration of the Holy Spirit. "We muſt therefore (with a great Di-"vine (h) of our Church) diſtinguiſh "between the Excellencies and Perfec-"tions of Chriſt, which flow'd from the "Hypoſtatical Union of the two Natures, "and thoſe, which flow'd from the Dona-"tion and Anointing of the Holy Spirit. "From the hypoſtatical Union of the Na-"tures flow'd the infinite Dignity of his "Perſon, his Impeccability, his Self-Suffi-"ciency to fulfil the Law, and ſatisfy the "Divine Juſtice; as from the Anointing "of the Spirit flow'd his Knowledge of "all Evangelical Myſteries, the Doc-"trines and Precepts, which he deliver'd "in his Father's Name, and the many "miraculous Works, which he did in "Confirmation of his Miſſion and Doc-"trine." For this is plain to every one, that looks into the Goſpels, that, almoſt in every Page, our Saviour (i) owns his Miſſion from God; that the Doctrines, which he taught, were not his own, but God's; that they were all dictated by the Spirit of God; and that the Miracles, which he exhibited, in Teſtimony of theſe, proceeded from the ſame Spirit of God. Upon the Whole therefore we may conclude, that Jeſus Chriſt, being now in a State of Humiliation, and emptied of the Form of God, acted, in Things relating immediately to his prophetick Office, not as God, but only as a Prophet ſent from God; not by the Power of his Divine Nature, but of that Spirit, by which he was anointed, and ſanctify'd to that Office; tho' (notwithſtanding this Quieſcence in the Deity) being ſtill God, of the ſame Eſſence deriv'd from the Father, he might do many other Things by Virtue of his Divinity, ſuch as diſcerning the Hearts of all Men, walking upon the Sea, and ſtilling the ſtormy Winds with a Word, &c. And as this Divinity was Part of the Doctrine, he was to publiſh, he might, without any Contradiction to himſelf, aſſert, that God was properly his Father, and he properly his Son; that he and his Father were one, and that all Men were to worſhip the Son, even as they worſhipped the Father.

And his being tempted by the Devil, no Argument againſt his Divinity.

SOMETHING of the like Nature is to be ſaid in Relation to our Saviour's being tempted by the Devil, viz. that, though his Divinity did ſet him far above the utmoſt Oppoſition of any created Being, yet did not that Divinity exert itſelf upon all Occaſions, but ſometimes ſuſpended its Operations, and was quieſcent, as we ſaid before. (k) That the Divinity was thus quieſcent in Chriſt, until he enter'd upon the publick Exerciſe of his prophetick Office, is generally thought by moſt Orthodox Divines; that, in all the Actions, relating to the Execution of that his Office, it ceas'd in the like Manner to act, we have juſt now endeavour'd to prove; and 'tis generally thought, that this was the Caſe of his Temptation by the Devil, in which his Divine Perfections lying by, (as it were) and forbearing to engage, he is to be conſider'd abſtractly as a Man, though much more perfect, than any other Man. For fit it was, that he (who, for this very Reaſon perhaps, is called the ſecond Adam) ſhould overcome the great Enemy of Mankind, in that very Nature, alone, and unaſſiſted, wherein the firſt Adam was ſo miſerably foiled.

WHETHER the Devil might know, that our Saviour was in Reality the Son of God, or only ſome peculiar Favourite of his, Divines are at a Stand to determine. 'Tis the Obſervation of Origen, that (l) all the while, that our Saviour was under the Temptation, he never confeſſed himſelf to be the Son of God: And therefore, (m) ſince the Diſpenſation of the Goſpel was not fully and perfectly underſtood by good Angels, but gradually manifeſted to them; it is no Wonder, that the Devil ſhould be ignorant of the Myſteries of the Goſpel, particularly that great Myſtery of Godlineſs, God's Manifeſtation in the Fleſh. The Devil therefore, ſeeing our Saviour, after he had been (n) declared the Son of God, ſo long in the Wilderneſs, with wild Beaſts, and hungry, without any Food to ſuſtain him, might be induc'd to queſtion whether he was indeed the Son of God, in the moſt proper and higheſt Senſe of the Words, and thereupon incited to aſſail him: But, if even he knew him never ſo well, ſuch is his inveterate Malice, that it hath often prevailed with him to attempt Things very fooliſh and impoſſible. For, what could be more ſo, than for a Creature to attempt to be like God, or to annul the Truth of the Prophecies concerning Chriſt? What could be more pernicious to him, than the Death of the Lord of Life for the Redemption of Mankind, and yet this he attempted with the utmoſt Eagerneſs, and by ſetting all his Inſtruments to work to accompliſh it, tho' (o) it was impoſſible for our Lord to be held under the Power of Death:

Death: Whatever Satan therefore might conceive of Chriſt, (as Retavius retorts the Argument upon the Head of Crellius) he could not but certainly know from the Scriptures, that he was to be the Redeemer of Mankind, and the Author of their Salvation; that he was the Seed of the Woman, who was to bruiſe his Head; to ſit on the Throne of his Father David, and there rule for ever: And therefore, knowing all this, he could not hope to prevail in his Temptations of our Lord, unleſs he could believe, that he was able to reverſe both the Decrees and Oath of God. Whether therefore the Devil knew, or knew not our Saviour, it may well be deem'd an Infatuation in him, to think of being able to pervert him, as he had done our firſt Parents in their Obedience to God; but then it was far from being a fooliſh or unneceſſary Thing, for our Lord thus to ſuffer himſelf to be tempted, (q) ſince thereby he hath inſtructed us, that not any, the beſt, and moſt exalted Degree of Virtue ſets Men above Temptations; and ſince thereby he has encourag'd us to hope for his Aſſiſtance and Support under the like Circumſtances; both becauſe (r) himſelf hath ſuffered, being tempted, and becauſe (s) he was in all Points tempted like as we are, he cannot but be touched with the Feeling of our Infirmities. Theſe were the true Ends and Reaſons, why our Saviour ſuffer'd Temptation, and the proper and natural Inference from hence is that, which the ſame Author to the Hebrews makes, (t) Let us therefore come boldly to the Throne of Grace, that we may obtain Mercy, and find Grace to help us, in Time of Need.

Miracles, in Reſpect of God, all alike.

There are few Things wherein Mankind ſeem to be more agreed, than in the Acknowledgment and Acceptance of Miracles, as an authentick and indiſputable Teſtimony, that the Perſons entruſted with ſuch Power were employ'd by God; becauſe the conſtant Apprehenſions, which both Reaſon and Revelation have given us of God, are, that he will not employ his Power (as no true Miracles can be done without the Concurrence of his Power) to deceive his Creatures; and therefore, the Reaſoning of Nicodemus, when he came to viſit our Saviour, was right, (u) We know that thou art a Teacher come from God, becauſe no Man can do theſe Miracles, that thou doeſt, except God be with him. Since Miracles then are the avow'd Effects of a Divine Power, we muſt certainly be miſtaken in our Judgment of them, when, with Regard to their Author, we eſteem one greater than another. In Effects indeed, that are produc'd by human Power, we are apt to ſay, that ſome of them are greater than others, i. e. that they require more and greater Degrees of Power for the Production of them; but this Diſtinction vaniſhes in our Conſideration of the Supreme Being, to whoſe Omnipotence the greateſt Effect, we can imagine, gives no Limitation, but is, equal with the ſmalleſt, under the Compaſs of his Acting. To us perhaps, it may ſeem a greater Cure to diſpoſſeſs a Demon, than to drive away a Fever, but in the Hand of the Son of God, while he dwelt among us, they were Operations equally eaſy; and yet, a Miſconception in this Matter has certainly led ſome into an Opinion, that the ſeveral Demoniacks, mention'd in the Goſpels, were only ſo many Perſons afflicted with ſome ſtrange and uncommon Diſeaſes.

From the Beginning of the Goſpels to Matth. ix. 8. Mark ii. 23. Luke vi. 1.

That Demoniacks were different from People diſeas'd.

But that theſe Demons, or evil Spirits, which our Saviour, his Apoſtles, and the primitive Chriſtians, expelled out of the Bodies of Men, could not be Diſeaſes, is plain both from the Scriptures, and Eccleſiaſtical Writers, who make a conſtant and manifeſt Diſtinction between the curing Diſeaſes, and caſting out of Devils; for, when the Evangeliſt tells us, that (x) they brought unto Chriſt all ſick People, that were taken with divers Diſeaſes, and thoſe which were poſſeſſed with Devils, and thoſe that were Lunatick, and had the Palſy, and he healed them; when (y) he gave to the the Apoſtles Power againſt evil Spirits, to caſt them out, and to heal all Manner of Sickneſſes and Diſeaſes; and accordingly, (z) they healed many, that were ſick of divers Diſeaſes, and caſt out many Devils; when Irenæus (a) informs us, that the Chriſtians, in his Days, did truly caſt out Devils, and heal the Sick by Impoſition of Hands; and (b) Origen, that they caſt out Devils, and healed many Diſeaſes; can any one of tolerable Underſtanding think, that the Diſeaſes healed, and the Devils caſt out, were one and the ſame Thing?

THAT there were evil Spirits of this Kind, the Holy Scriptures have taken ſuch abundant Care to acquaint us with their Origin and Fall, their Names and Numbers, their Government and Orders, their malicious Deſigns, and Employments, &c. that no one can doubt of their Exiſtence, who believes theſe Holy Oracles to be true. That, both among the Jews, and Gentiles, before our Saviour's Advent, Men were poſſeſs'd with theſe evil Spirits, is evident from the Teſtimony of (c) Joſephus, who tells us of a very powerful Form of Exorciſm, which deſcended from Solomon, who learned of God; and from the Teſtimony of (d) Plutarch, who acquaints us, that the Exorciſts of moſt Nations adviſ'd thoſe, that were poſſeſs'd, to repeat the Epheſian Letters. And, that theſe evil Spirits, in our Saviour's Time, were diſtinct Subſtances, and not the Diſeaſes of Mankind, is evident from the Circumſtances of their Ejection, from their expoſtulating with him, What have we to do with thee? Art thou come to deſtroy us? Art thou come to torment us before the Time? And from his commanding them ſometimes to be ſilent, and ſometimes to come out of the Man, and enter into him no more, &c.

Why there were more of them about our Saviour's Coming.

THE Truth is, theſe Apoſtate Spirits had gotten ſo far Poſſeſſion of the World, that they began to rival God in his Worſhip, and therefore one End of his Son's Incarnation is ſaid to be this, (e) that he might deſtroy the Works of the Devil, and (f) overcome the ſtrong one, and divide his Spoils. And this, by the Way, may ſuggeſt a Reaſon, why at, or about the Time of our Saviour's Advent, and perhaps more eſpecially in the Places which he frequented, God might permit the Devil to exert himſelf in an unuſual Manner, in order to be the more ſignally triumph'd over by the Saviour of the World, and thoſe, that were delegated by him to convert Mankind to his Religion. Nay, had I Leiſure to proceed to Eccleſiaſtical Writers, I might eaſily ſhew, how victorious the Name of Chriſt was over theſe Principalities and Powers of Darkneſs, even after his Departure out of the World; for that our Lord was ſent for the Deſtruction of theſe evil Spirits, you may now learn, ſays Juſtin Martyr, (g) from what is done before your Eyes; for many Chriſtians, throughout all the World, and in every City of your Empire, have healed many, that were poſſeſſed of the Devil, and ſtill do they eject them, by the Invocation of the Name of Jesus, whom none of your Inchanters, Conjurers, or Sorcerers were able to expel: And give me a Man, (ſays Tertullian, (h) in that noble Challenge of his to the heathen Powers) give me a Man here before your Tribunals, that is viſibly poſſeſſed by the Devil; and if, when he is commanded by any Chriſtian to declare what he is, he don't immediately confeſs himſelf to be a Devil, not daring to lye to a Chriſtian, then let the Blood of that Chriſtian be ſhed before you in that very Place. But I forbear, and ſo proceed to the next Objection, which relates to our Saviour's Behaviour at the Marriage-Feaſt.

That our Saviour might conſiſtently with his Character, go to a Marriage.

OUR Bleſſed Saviour, indeed, was a Perſon of ſo grave and ſerious a Deportment, that whatever Inſtances we find of his Pity and Compaſſion to Mankind, of his grieving and being troubled, and even weeping upon ſome Occaſions, we can meet with none of his Laughing, nor any Token of a Mirth or Joy extraordinary, in the whole Hiſtory of his Life: But we muſt not from hence infer, that he was of a ſtiff and preciſe Temper, or in any Degree an Enemy to ſuch Forms of Civility, or ſocial Uſages, as were then in Practice. If therefore we may be allow'd to ſuppoſe, (what ſeems indeed highly probable) that this Marriage at Cana was between Perſons of his own Kindred and Acquaintance, and that, by the very Rules of celebrating ſuch Feſtivals among the Jews, all Exceſs and Intemperance was excluded, then will it follow, that it could be no Diſparagement to our Saviour's Character to accept of the Invitation that was made him, and to be preſent at ſuch a Meeting.

AMONG us indeed, (eſpecially among the vulgar Sort) there are ſometimes, on theſe Occaſions, Liberties taken, that are not ſo juſtifiable; but, among the Jews, there was always the greateſt Decency and Sobriety imaginable obſerv'd in the Celebration of their Marriages. (i) To this Purpoſe, a Governor of the Feaſt (as ſome ſay, of the ſacerdotal Race) was always choſen, whoſe Office it was, to have the Superintendency of the Diſhes and Wine, and to oblige the Gueſts to obſerve all the Decorums that Religion requir'd; and, not only ſo, but other Perſons, at this Time, were likewiſe appointed, to break Glaſs-Veſſels, as a common Signal, to give the Company Notice, that they had already drank enough, and were not permitted to run to Exceſs. Under this Regulation, 'tis ſcarce imaginable, that the Gueſts, at a Jewiſh Marriage, could be guilty of any Intemperance, and leaſt of all at this in Galilee, where our Saviour's Preſence and Obſervation, the Gravity of his Behaviour, and the Seaſonableneſs of his Diſcourſe may well be preſum'd to heighten the Decorum, and to keep all the Company under a proper Reſtraint.

That there was no exceſſive Drinking there.

WHAT therefore the Governor of the Feaſt ſays to the Bridegroom, (k) in Relation to the Water that was turn'd into Wine, is to be underſtood only as a general Repreſentation of a Cuſtom, uſual at other Feſtivals, which was to bring the beſt Wine at firſt, and, towards the Concluſion, that which was worſe; which Cuſtom (as the Governor tells him) was not obſerv'd here; for the Difference between this Entertainment and others is, that thou haſt kept the good Wine until now. (l) So that, when Men have well drank, is only a Circumſtance thrown in to illuſtrate the Compariſon, or deſcribe the latter End of a Feaſt, and has no Manner of Reference to the Condition of the Company then preſent. But allowing the Words ὅταν μεθυσθῶσι to be a Deſcription of the Condition, that the Company were then in, yet, it will by no Means follow, that they had proceeded to any Intemperance, becauſe the Words are equally capable of an innocent, as well as a vicious Meaning. (m) Μεθύειν indeed, in its primitive Signification, means no more, than Drinking after the Sacrifice; and, as there is nothing in the Etymology that determines this to be done to Exceſs, or beyond the proper Bounds of Joy in a Feſtival; ſo there are ſeveral Inſtances in Scripture, wherein it was certainly done according to the Rules of Sobriety and Moderation. Thus, (to mention one out of many) in the LXX's Verſion of Geneſis, where it is ſaid, that (n) Joſeph's Brethren drank, and were merry with him, the Words are ἐμεθύσθησαν μετ' ἀυτοῦ, and yet, no one can imagine, but that, in their preſent Circumſtances, thinking no other, than that he was the Governor of Egypt, and being apprehenſive, that he had no good Deſign againſt them, they were too much upon their Guard, and ſollicitous about their own Safety, to give any Way to Intemperance in his Preſence: And, if the Expreſſion here, and in (o) ſeveral other Paſſages, may be taken in a virtuous Senſe, we cannot but conclude, (unleſs we can ſuppoſe that St John deſign'd to expoſe his Maſter's Behaviour upon this Occaſion) that he intended we ſhould underſtand him in the moſt favourable Acceptation.

We indeed, in our Tranſlation, ſay, that the Water-Pots, wherein the Wine was created, (p) contained two or three Firkins a-piece; but ſome, who have look'd more nicely into μετρητὴς, or Meaſure, here ſpoken of, (q) have brought it ſo low, as to make the whole ſix Pots hold no more, than about fourteen or fifteen Gallons of our Engliſh Meaſure. But not to deſcend ſo low, we will ſuppoſe, at preſent, that the Quantity of Wine, made by our Saviour at this Feaſt, was as large as our Tranſlation repreſents it; yet, whoever conſiders the Nature of Jewiſh Marriages, how they were celebrated, with Feaſting and Rejoicings, not only on the Day of Solemnity, (as it is with us) but for ſix or ſeven Days after, and that, at theſe Feaſts, not only all their Relations, and Neighbours, and Acquaintance were invited, but that it was well-taken likewiſe, if any others (though not invited) would come to partake of the Entertainment, and bear a Share in the Joy: Whoever conſiders this, I ſay, cannot but imagine, that a very large Quantity of Wine muſt needs be requiſite at ſuch a Time, ſince it was to be a Supply, not for that Day only, but for all the ſucceeding Days, until the Time of the Feaſting was expir'd.

Or, if there were, Chriſt not chargeable with it.

Nay, even ſuppoſing farther, that our Lord, upon this Occaſion, did not confine himſelf to a preciſe Quantity, proportionate to the Company, or Period of the Feſtival, and (what is more) (r) that ſome of the Company might abuſe his Liberality by their Intemperance, (which is a Conceſſion not to be gather'd from the Text) yet he cannot therefore be charg'd with adminiſtring to their Exceſs by making ſuch an ample Proviſion, any more, than we can charge the Providence of God, with being inſtrumental to all the Gluttony and Drunkenneſs, which is committed in the World, merely becauſe he affords that Meat and Drink, which Men of inordinate Appetites abuſe to Exceſs. The Truth is, as it is an high Commendation of Providence, that it crowns us with Plenty, (whatever Uſe we make of it) and beſtows upon us all Things richly to enjoy; ſo was it not unbecoming a Perſon, inveſted with a Divine Commiſſion, to give, on this Occaſion, an eminent Inſtance of his flowing Liberality, and, by his generous Proviſion for the Family, to leave a grateful Memorial of his benevolent Regard to two Perſons, that, very likely, were his Relations, and had juſt enter'd into the honourable State of Matrimony.

No Indecency in our Lord's Reply to his Mother.

Since therefore our Lord anſwer'd, in ſo free and plentiful a Manner, his Mother's Requeſt at laſt, there ſeems to be ſomething in their Suppoſition, who, from the Propriety (s) of the Greek Expreſſion, think, that his Mother ſpake to him, before the Wine was out, but when it grew ſo low, that ſhe plainly perceiv'd, there would not be enough for the Company; and therefore our Saviour's Reply to her will very juſtly bear this Senſe. Τί ἐμοὶ καὶ σοὶ; "What is it to you or me? i. e. the "Care of providing Wine, upon this "Occaſion, does not properly belong to "you or me; but admitted it did, My "Hour is not yet come. 'Tis too ſoon as "yet to ſet about it; becauſe it is highly "fitting, that the Neceſſity of that ſuper- "natural Supply, which I intend them, "ſhould be a little more felt, in order to "recommend the Benefit itſelf, and to "give the Manner of attaining it a Power "of making a deeper Impreſſion on their "Minds."

This ſeems to be no unnatural Conſtruction of the Words, and removes all the ſeeming Harſhneſs of our Saviour's Anſwer, Woman, what have I to do with thee? We miſtake the Matter however very very much, if we think that the Word γυνὴ, which we render Woman, was any Title of Diſreſpect or Indifference, (as it ſeems to be in our Tranſlation) ſince it is frequently uſ'd by the beſt Authors, when the higheſt Marks of Eſteem are intended. The polite Xenophon himſelf puts it in the Mouth of one of his Perſian Chiefs, when he was addreſſing himſelf to a captive Lady, and comforting her under her unfortunate Circumſtances; and certainly a Time there was, that our Lord called his Mother by this Appellation, when he was far from being harſh or undutiful to her, even when he was hanging on the Croſs, and tenderly recommending both his Mother to the Care of his Beloved Apoſtle, and that Apoſtle to his Mother's Love and Affection, (t) Woman, behold thy Son. So little does our Saviour's Conduct, in this whole Tranſaction, deſerve theſe horrid and impious Cenſures, which of late have been thrown upon it!

That the Prophecies in the Old Teſtament are not miſapply'd in the New.

WHATEVER ſome modern Jews and Infidels may alledge againſt the Abuſe, (as they pretend) which the Writers of the New Teſtament have put upon the Prophecies of the Old by applying them to a wrong Senſe; (u) no Man need be told, that an Attempt of this Nature had been as impertinent, the Affront to Man's Reaſon as inſolent, and the Event as fruitleſs, nay, as fatal to their Cauſe, had they impos'd a falſe, or even controverted Senſe upon the Predictions confeſſedly relating to the Meſſiah, as it would have been, had they urg'd ſuch Predictions, as were not acknowledg'd to belong to him at all. The Truth is, if the Jews underſtood the Prophecies relating to the Meſſiah in one Senſe, and the Apoſtles, in their Addreſs to them, apply'd them in another, we cannot ſee how they could ever have made one Proſelyte, being in the ſame Condition with what St Paul deſcribes, when he tells us, that (x) he who ſpeaketh in an unknown Tongue, (and why not he, that ſpeaketh in an unknown Meaning? ſpeaketh to the Air, and becometh a Barbarian to him, that heareth, but underſtandeth him not. So that every Jew, converted to the Chriſtian Faith, is an implicit Proof of the Apoſtles applying the antient Prophecies in a Senſe, that was then current and familiar to them.

From the Beginning of the Goſpels to Matth. ix. 8. Mark. ii. 23. Luke vi. 1.

THAT the famous Prophecy in Iſaiah (y) is thus apply'd by St Matthew (z), to prove that Chriſt was born of an immaculate Virgin, we took Occaſion, in our Anſwer to the fourth of theſe Objections, to ſhew. The remaining Allegation is, that the Name of the Perſon, of whom the Prophet ſpeaks, was to be Immanuel; whereas the Name of that Son of Mary, of whom St Matthew ſpeaks, by God's expreſs Command, was Jeſus, and therefore the Words of the Prophet are miſapply'd by the Evangeliſt.

In what Senſe Jeſus was Immanuel.

NOW nothing is more common in Scripture, than, by the calling or naming a Perſon or Thing, not to mean that Perſon or Thing would be commonly diſtinguiſh'd by that Name, but only, that it ſhould have ſuch Properties and Qualities in it, as that Name did denote; or in other Words, that it ſhould really be what the full Senſe of that Name imported. Thus, of the City of Jeruſalem, it is foretold by the Prophet, (a) that it ſhould be called the City of Righteouſneſs, when it really was to be ſuch a City; for, in the foregoing Words, it is promis'd, that God would reſtore her Judges, as at the firſt, and her Counſellors, as at the Beginning. And, in like Manner, tho' it be declar'd by this Prophet (b), that the wonderful Child, which God promis'd to the Houſe of David, ſhould be called Immanuel, yet, if he was but what that Name properly imports, God with us, in a moſt eminent and peculiar Manner, it is not to be doubted, but that the Prophecy receiv'd its full Completion in the Perſon of our Saviour Chriſt.

FOR, beſides God's univerſal Preſence, there is a Preſence of Favour and Diſtinction, ſtinction, whereby he is ſaid to be, in a more peculiar Manner, with thoſe, whom he loves, and bleſſes above others. And, in this Regard, the Child, here ſpoken of, is juſtly called Immanuel, becauſe (as St Paul ſpeaks) (c) God was in him, reconciling the World to himſelf, for his Sake and Sufferings not imputing their Treſpaſſes unto them; ſo that by him (d) they, who were ſome time afar off, are made nigh, have Acceſs to the Father, (e) are accepted in the Beloved, and become, of Enemies and Strangers, Friends and Children, inſomuch, that God vouchſafes to dwell in them, and to be one of them. And, as God unites us to himſelf by Grace, ſo did he, in this Child, condeſcend, by an ineffable Generation, to unite our Subſtance and Nature to himſelf, to be perfect God, and perfect Man, (f) that ſo he might be the Firſt-Born among many Brethren, and redeem the Children from Death, who are Partakers of Fleſh and Blood, by himſelf taking Part of the ſame. Let it not then be any more objected, that the Child in the Prophecy could not be called Immanuel, whom we confeſs to have been called Jeſus; for he is therefore our Immanuel, becauſe our Jeſus; therefore, moſt eminently, moſt literally, God with us, becauſe, by ſo miraculous an Union, a Saviour of his People from their Sins.

St Matthew's Manner of introducing his Quotations.

It may ſeem perhaps ſurpriſing to ſome, that St Matthew ſhould ſo frequently introduce his Citations with a This was done, that it might be fulfilled, which was ſpoken by the Prophet: But whoever conſiders the Idiom of the Hebrew Tongue, cannot but know, that the Phraſe, anſwering to the Expreſſions, that it might be fulfilled, means no more, than that hereby was verify'd, or that this Event anſwered to the Prediction, or the like. Nay, the Jews were accuſtom'd to ſay, that a Paſſage of Scripture was then fulfilled, when any Thing happen'd, that was applicable to it; and therefore it is no Wonder, that St Matthew, who himſelf was a Jew, and, very probably, wrote his Goſpel in the Hebrew Tongue for the Benefit of his Countrymen, ſhould naturally fall into their Stile, and Manner of Expreſſion.

The Citation in Matth. ii. 15.

Now, whoever conſiders the State of the Jews in Egypt, their Bondage, and Danger of utter Extinction, by Reaſon of the Decree, which paſs'd for the Deſtruction of all their male Children (had not the Providence of God prevented the Execution of it) will ſoon perceive the Cauſe, why Egypt is made in Scripture the common Figure and Emblem of extream Danger, and imminent Death; and why a Deliverance out of Egypt ſhould be apply'd to every great Act of Preſervation, where there ſeem'd to be no viſible Means of Eſcape; inſomuch that, whenever any Inſtance of ſuch a watchful and protecting Providence happen'd, it was an uſual and proverbial Speech among the Jews (who were wont then, as they are ſtill, to apply Sentences out of Holy Writ to the common Occurrences of Life) to ſay, in Scripture-Phraſe, Out of Egypt have I called my Son, or he hath called him out of Egypt, i. e. he hath reſcu'd him from the Jaws of Death, or from the like Danger, that the Iſraelites were in, when he brought them out of Egypt with a mighty Hand, and a ſtretched-out Arm. Since Joſeph then was order'd to flee to Egypt, and to tarry there until Herod was dead, for this Reaſon, becauſe Herod ſought the young Child's Life; this diſtinguiſhing Preſervation of Jeſus, by Means of his Retreat, till the Danger was over, will juſtify the Evangeliſt (even tho' it had been any other Country, as well as Egypt, whereunto he retir'd) in applying to him the proverbial Saying upon that Occaſion, (g) Out of Egypt, i. e. out of manifeſt Danger, have I called my Son.

They saw the young Child with Mary his Mother and fell down and worshiped him. Math. 2d Chap. v. 11th introduces Rachel, the favourite Wife of Jacob, that great Progenitor of the Iſraelites, making bitter Lamentation for their Loſs, and refuſing all Conſolation, becauſe there were no Hopes of their Recovery. And the Murther of ſo many innocent Babes at Bethlehem, by the bloody Decree of Herod, was an Event ſo dolorous to their tender Parents, that the Evangeliſt, when he came to relate it, thought he might juſtly (by Way of Accommodation) apply the Words of the Prophet, and in the Name of all the miſerable Mothers, that had loſt their Children, make Rachel, upon this Occaſion, (and as a farther Accompliſhment of the Prophecy) return to her weeping again. The rather, becauſe Rachel, having been long dead before the Captivity, may, with equal Propriety, by the Evangeliſt, as ſhe is by the Prophet, be introduc'd weeping; the rather, becauſe ſhe was (i) ſo fond a Lover of Children, that ſhe is fitly enough brought in here in the Room of the tender Mothers, who wept for the Loſs of theirs; and the rather, becauſe the Slaughter of the Bethlemites might be called that of her Children, becauſe among them (k) was the Place of her Sepulture, after that ſhe had loſt her Life in the bitter Pangs of Child-Birth.

And Matth. ii. 23. explain'd and vindicated.

There is no Prophet, we own, wherein it is expreſſly ſaid, that the Meſſiah ſhould be called a Nazarene; (l) but the Obſervation of St Jerom, in his Comment upon this Place, is not amiſs, viz. that when St Matthew (m) mentions the Word Prophets, in the Plural Number, (whereas, in other Places, he had always cited ſome particular Prophet) he thereby ſhews, that he did not take the Words from the Prophets, but only the Senſe. Since then the Title of Nazarene both Jews and other Enemies of Chriſtianity have always, by Way of Contempt given to our Bleſſed Saviour, becauſe he was ſuppos'd to come out of that very City, from whence it was thought impoſſible, that (n) any good Thing ſhould come; and ſince moſt of the Prophets ſpeak of Chriſt, as a Perſon, that was to be reputed vile and abject, (o) a Stranger to his Brethren, and even an Alien to his Mother's Sons, (p) deſpiſed and rejected of Men, deſpiſed and eſteemed not, here is the plain Senſe of the Words, he ſhall be a Nazarene; (q) and the Angel, by God's Appointment, no doubt, ſent him to this contemptible Place, that he might thence have a Name of Infamy and Contempt put upon him, according to the frequent Intimation by the Prophets.

Who thoſe Wiſe-Men were.

(r) The Word, we render Wiſe-Men, in its Original, ſignifies Magicians, which, however now it beſpeaks not ſo good a Character, was, nevertheleſs, heretofore a Name of very innocent and honourable Signification. The Studious and Inquiſitive, whoſe Buſineſs and Profeſſion led them to ſearch into Nature, its moſt abſtruſe Cauſes and Effects, and more particularly into the Motions and Diſpoſitions of the heavenly Bodies, were diſtinguiſh'd by this Title: And, in what profound Veneration and Reſpect they were held, appears from the moſt important Matters, both ſacred and civil, being committed to their Adminiſtration. They were the Counſellors, the Judges, the Prieſts, the Princes, in a Word, the Oracles of the Eaſtern Countries. But, as the beſt Arts are ſometimes perverted to ill Purpoſes; ſo it happen'd to theſe, that falling into the Hands of bad Men, who met with People ignorant and credulous, and not only eaſy, but even glad to be deluded, they degenerated into the Cheats of judiciary Aſtrology; and theſe Abuſes grew ſo general, as, at laſt, to fix an ill Senſe upon the Word, and a Scandal on the Science itſelf.

It were a Wrong and great Indignity to the Perſons now before us, not to believe them of the nobler and better Sort; but we can hardly be perſuaded, (tho' ſome would would endeavour to do it) that they were Perſons of Royal Dignity, (s) becauſe we cannot reaſonably ſuppoſe, that the Evangeliſt would have omitted a Circumſtance of ſo great Moment, both for their Honour, and our Lord's. We can hardly think, but that ſome Account would have been given of their Royal Train and Equipage, and that all Jeruſalem would have been mov'd as much to ſee their Entry, as they were to hear their Queſtions: Nor can we imagine, that it would have been decent in Herod, to have receiv'd them with no more Reſpect; to have diſmiſs'd them to Bethlehem without Attendants; much leſs to have laid his Commands upon them to return back, and bring him an Account of the Child, as ſoon as they had found him, had they been Perſons of equal Rank and Dignity with himſelf. Upon theſe Conſiderations we may juſtly deny them the Title of Kings, tho' we cannot but allow them to be Perſons of great Wiſdom, Learning, and Integrity; of which Ours and ſome other Tranſlations of the Bible have been ſo ſenſible, as very prudently to decline the odious Name of Magicians, and to call them the Wiſe-Men of the Eaſt; but what Part of the Eaſt it was that they came from, few Interpreters have agreed.

Whence they came.

(t) SOME have imagin'd, that theſe Travellers came out of Perſia; others from Chaldea, others from Arabia, and others again from Meſopotamia. All theſe Countries lay Eaſtward from Jeruſalem and the Holy Land; and, in each of theſe, ſome antecedent Notions of the Meſſiah may be accounted for. In Chaldea and Perſia, by the Captivity of the Jews, and the Books of Daniel; in Arabia, by the Nearneſs of their Neighbourhood, and frequent Commerce; and in Meſopotamia, beſides theſe common Helps, they had the Prophecy of their Countryman Balaam, concerning a Star (u) that ſhould come out of Jacob, to direct them. (x) But as we know of no Record, wherein this Prophecy was preſerv'd, but the Book of Moſes, which the People of Meſopotamia neither read nor believ'd; ſo it ſeems evident, that Balaam's Words do not refer to a Star, that ſhould ariſe at any Prince's Birth, but to a certain King, who ſhould be as glorious and ſplendent in his Dominions, as the Stars are in the Firmament. Upon the Whole therefore it ſeems moſt likely, that theſe Wiſe-Men came out of Arabia (y), (which, according to Tacitus, was the Bound of Judea Eaſtward) not only becauſe the Gifts, which they preſented, were the natural Products of that Country, which was famous likewiſe for its Magi, inſomuch, that Pythagoras (as Porphyry, informs us) went into Arabia to acquire Wiſdom; but becauſe its Neighbourhood to Judea might give theſe Wiſe-Men the Advantage of diſcerning the Star better, than any more diſtant Nation had.

What the Star that conducted them was.

FOR, that this Star was no Celeſtial one, and ſuch as might be ſeen at a vaſt Diſtance, its Motion, contrary to the ordinary Courſe of Stars, its performing the Part of a Guide to the Travellers, and that by Day very probably, as well as Night, its accommodating itſelf to their Neceſſities, and diſappearing and returning, as they could beſt, or leaſt be without it, and (what is a Circumſtance as remarkable as any) its pointing out, and ſtanding over the very Place, where the Child was, (which the Height and Diſtance of common Stars makes it impoſſible for them to do) are a ſufficient Demonſtration. It ſeems not improbable therefore, that what the Evangeliſt calls a Star was only the glorious Light (z), which ſhone upon the Bethlehem-Shepherds, when the Angel came to impart unto them the Tidings of our Saviour's Birth; for that this Light was exceeding great is clear from that Expreſſion, which ſtiles it the (a) Glory of the Lord, and that it was a Light from Heaven hanging over their Heads, Heads, the Words in the (b) Greek, as well as (c) Latin Verſion, ſufficiently inform us.

Now every one knows, that ſuch a Light, at a great Diſtance, appears like a Star; or at leaſt, after it had thus ſhone about the Shepherds, it might be lifted up on high, and then form'd into the Likeneſs of a Star; where ſtanding vertically over Judea for ſome Time, it might direct the Arabian Aſtrologers (whom ſo ſtrange a PHÆNOMENON could hardly eſcape) to the capital City, as the likelieſt Place to gain Intelligence of the new-born King, whoſe Star they had ſeen in the Eaſt, i. e. from the Place of their Abode, which was in the Eaſt: For, ſhould we ſuppoſe, that this Light was plac'd in any Part of the Eaſtern Hemiſphere, it would have denoted ſomething extraordinary among the Indians, or other Eaſtern Nations, rather than among the People of the Jews.

How the Wiſe-Men came to underſtand what the Star meant.

(d) But how came theſe Eaſtern Sages to know this Star, or luminous Appearance in the Heavens, (place it where we will) denoted the Birth of a King? Now, for the Reſolution of this Queſtion, it muſt be obſerv'd, what (e) ſome Heathen Hiſtorians tell us, viz. That, through the whole Eaſt, it was expected, that, about this Time, a King was to ariſe out of Judea, who ſhould rule over all the World. Nor could it be well otherwiſe, ſince, from the Time of the Babyloniſh Captivity, we find the Jews diſpers'd (f) thro' all the Provinces of the Perſian Monarchy, and that (g) in great Numbers, and (h) many People of the Land becoming Jews; and, after their Return home, increaſing ſo mightily, that they were diſpers'd thro' Africa, Aſia, and many Cities, and Iſlands of Europe, and (as Joſephus (i) tells us) wherever they dwelt, making many Proſelytes to their Religion. (k) Now theſe Wiſe-Men living ſo near to Judea, the Seat of this Prophecy, and converſing with Jews, i. e. with thoſe, who every where expected the Completion of it at that Time, as ſoon as they came to ſee this extraordinary Star, or Body of Light hovering over Judea, they might rationally conjecture, that it ſignify'd the Completion of that celebrated Prophecy, concerning the King of Jewry, over the Center of which Land, they, being then in the Eaſt, might ſee this Meteor hang.

The Bethlehem Maſſacre, no Reflection on Providence.

Not long after the Departure of theſe Eaſtern Sages from Bethlehem, we find a prodigious Multitude of innocent Babes inhumanly put to Death, upon the Account of him, whom theſe Wiſe-Men came to adore. But, to vindicate the Juſtice and Goodneſs of Providence in this Proceeding, we need not appeal to God's univerſal Dominion over all his Creatures, and the Right he has to take away, in what Manner he pleaſes, the Being, which he gives us; we need only conſider the preſent Life, not as our laſt and final State, but as one, whoſe principal Tendency is to another; and then it will appear, that there is no certain Meaſure to be taken of the Divine Juſtice, or Goodneſs towards us, without taking in the Diſtributions of that other Life, which, indeed, is the main End of our living at all. What Solomon therefore, in his Wiſdom, ſays of the Righteous in general, is much more verify'd in the Caſe of theſe harmleſs Babes: (l) In the Sight of the Unwiſe, they ſeem'd to die, and their Departure is taken for Miſery; but they are in Peace; For, tho' they were puniſhed in the Sight of Men, yet is their Hope full of Immortality. (m) For a frail, a ſhort, a troubleſome, a dangerous Life, God gives them the Recompence of an immortal, a ſecurely happy, a compleatly glorious one; which not only vindicates, but magnifies his Goodneſs and Liberality to them. He conſiders their Infancy, and the noble Fruit which might have ſprung from theſe tender Plants, had they been allow'd to grow to full Maturity, and, accordingly, rewards them: For, tho' they wanted the Will of Martyrdom, which riper Years may have; yet, it muſt be allow'd, that they were clear of that voluntary and actual Sin, which thoſe riper Years would have contracted: And therefore, as in the moſt literal Senſe, (n) they were not defiled with ſenſual Pleaſures, but left the World in Virgin-Innocence; as they were truly redeem'd from among Men, whoſe early Tranſlation to a State of Bliſs prevented the Hazards and Temptations of a wicked World; and, as they were (ſtrictly ſpeaking) the firſt Fruits unto God, and the Lamb, who began to ſhed their Blood in the Cauſe of a new-born Saviour; ſo God hath been pleas'd to vouchſafe them a peculiar Honour, (o) to ſing, as it were, a new Song before the Throne, and to follow the Lamb whitherſoever he goeth, becauſe in their Mouth was found no Guile; for they were without Fault before the Throne of God.

Our Lord's Diſcovery of himſelf to the Samaritan Woman accounted for.

We have but one Objection more to anſwer, and that is, a ſeeming Inconſiſtency in our Saviour, in diſcovering to the Samaritan Woman his Divine Character, which he had ſo often deſir'd his Diſciples to conceal. Our Saviour, 'tis true, was ſo far from making any unneceſſary Declarations of himſelf, that, both upon (p) St Peter's confeſſing himſelf to be the Chriſt, and (q) after his Transfiguration, wherein he was declar'd to be the Son of God, we find him charging his Diſciples to ſay Nothing of this, until his Reſurrection: (r) Becauſe their Teſtimony, in theſe Points, might not only be like a Matter concerted between him and them, but becauſe indeed they were not qualify'd to be his Witneſſes in theſe Things, until they had receiv'd Power from on high, by the coming down of the Holy Ghoſt. 'Tis to be obſerv'd however, that, when our Lord is himſelf fairly called upon, and eſpecially by Perſons inveſted with Authority, he never once conceals his Divine Nature and Commiſſion.

When (s) the Jews came round him in Solomon's Porch, and ſaid unto him, how long doſt thou make us doubt? If thou be the Chriſt, tell us plainly; his Anſwer is expreſs, I told you, and ye believed not: The Works, that I do in my Father's Name, they bear Witneſs of me; for I and my Father are one. When he ſtood before the Judgment-Seat, and the High-Prieſt demanded of him, (t) I adjure thee by the living God, that thou tell us, whether thou be the Chriſt, the Son of God; his Anſwer is, Thou haſt ſaid: Or, (as St Mark (u) expreſſes it) I am; and ye ſhall ſee the Son of Man ſitting on the Right-Hand of Power, and coming in the Clouds of Heaven. Nay, there are ſome Inſtances, wherein, of his own Accord, and without any Provocation of this Kind, he freely diſcovers who he was: For, having cur'd the Man that was born blind, and afterwards meeting him accidentally, (x) Doſt thou believe on the Son of God, ſays he? Whereupon the Man aſking, Who is the Son of God, that I may believe on him? Our Saviour replies, Thou haſt both ſeen him, and it is he, who talketh with thee: And therefore we need leſs wonder that, when this Samaritan Woman had firſt of all confeſs'd him to be a Prophet, and, (as her Words ſeem to imply) (y) was a little dubious, whether he was not the Meſſiah, our Saviour ſhould prevent her Enquiry, and tell her voluntarily that he was. Eſpecially conſidering, that (z) ſuch a Declaration might be a Means to prepare her, and the reſt of the Samaritans, whenever his Apoſtles ſhould come to preach the Goſpel unto them, to receive their Teſtimony, as we find (by the Hiſtory of the Apoſtolick Acts) that they did it with great Gladneſs.

Several Goſpel-Facts proved by Heathen Teſtimonies.

Thus, have we endeavour'd to ſatisfy all the Exceptions of any Weight, that the Lovers of Infidelity have hitherto made to this this Part of the Evangelical Hiſtory; and, if Chriſtianity ſtood in Need either of the Support or Teſtimony of Heathen Authors, we might ſay, that the Incarnation of Chriſt, the Son of God, is no more, than (a) what the Greeks (as Julian avers) affirm both of Æſculapius and Pythagoras, viz. that they were both the Sons of Jupiter, tho' they appear'd in human Nature, which Doctrine (in the Evangeliſt St John) Amelius *, the Maſter of Porphyry, allows to be true: That the Birth of our Bleſſed Jeſus of a Virgin immaculate, is no more, than (b) what the antient Jewiſh Doctors expected in their Meſſiah, and therefore Simon Magus, who greatly affected that Character, pretended that his Mother Rachel bore him without the Loſs of her Virginity: That the new Star, or Body of Light, which, upon our Saviour's Birth, conducted the Wiſe-Men to him, (c) is acknowledg'd by Julian, tho' he would gladly aſcribe it to natural Cauſes; is ſet off with great Eloquence by Chalcidius *, in his Comment upon Plato's Timæus; and perhaps might be that very Phænomenon *, which Pliny (d) deſcribes under the Name of a Comet: That our Lord's Forerunner, John the Baptiſt, was ſuch a Perſon, as the Goſpel repreſents him, viz. an Exhorter of the Jews to the Love and Practice of Virtue, and to Regeneration by Baptiſm and Newneſs of Life, we have an ample Teſtimony in Joſephus (e): That our Lord himſelf was certainly a Prophet, Phlegon †, who was the Emperor Adrian's Freed-man, acknowledges, and, in his Hiſtory, has related ſeveral Events, which he foretold; that he was (f) a great Worker of Miracles, the Authors of the Talmud own, nor can Celſus and Julian, his bittereſt Enemies, deny it, only they would gladly impute them to a wrong Cauſe, his great Skill in magical Incantations: That human Bodies were frequently poſſeſs'd with Devils, who afflicted them with grievous and tormenting Diſeaſes, is the joint Conceſſion both of (g) Jamblicus and Minutius Fælix *; and that our Bleſſed Lord had the Power of curing theſe, (h) and of deſtroying the Dominion of evil Spirits, wherever he came, is the great Complaint of DISSERTATION I.

Of the Four EVANGELISTS, and their Writings.

BEFORE we proceed any farther in the Hiſtory of our Bleſſed Saviour's Life, it may not be amiſs to give ſome ſhort Account of the four Evangeliſts, that have recorded it. I call them four, becauſe, whatever ſpurious Pieces gain'd Credit in the World afterwards, the Tradition of the Church, from the Beginning of the ſecond Century, makes it evident, that the Goſpels then receiv'd were only the four Goſpels, which we now own.

St Matthew's Life.

St MATTHEW, who ſtands in the Front of theſe Evangeliſts, and is generally allow'd to be the firſt, who committed the Goſpel to Writing, was the Son of Alpheus, a Galilean by Birth, a Jew by Religion, and a Publican by Profeſſion. Among the Jews, as well as other Nations, the Cuſtom, at this Time, prevailed of having more Names than one; and therefore we find his Brother Evangeliſts, St Mark (i), and Luke (k), giving him the Name of Levi, with a civil Intent to avoid all Mention of his former not ſo reputable Profeſſion, before he was called to the Apoſtleſhip; but (what is no leſs an Inſtance of his own Modeſty) in the Goſpel written by himſelf he not only takes the Name, by which he was moſt commonly known, but generally adds the odious Epithet to it of Matthew the Publican; intending thereby, no doubt, to magnify the Grace of God, and the Condeſcenſion of our Bleſſed Saviour, who did not diſdain to take, into the higheſt Dignity of the Chriſtian Church, thoſe, whom the World rejected, and accounted vile.

(l) WHETHER he was born in Nazareth or no, 'tis certain, that his ordinary Abode was at Capernaum, (m) becauſe his proper Buſineſs was, to gather the Cuſtoms on Goods, that came by the Sea of Galilee, and the Tribute, which Paſſengers were to pay, that went by Water; for which Purpoſe there was a Cuſtom-Houſe by the Sea-Side, where Matthew had his Office, or Toll-Booth, there ſitting at the Receipt of Cuſtom. Our Lord, having lately cur'd a famous Paralytick, retir'd out of the Town, to walk by the Sea-Side, where he taught the People, that flock'd after him; and, having eſpy'd Matthew in his Office, he aſk'd him to become one of his Diſciples; whereupon, without any Manner of Heſitation, without ſtaying ſo much as to ſettle his Accounts, and put his Affairs in Order, he left all, and followed him.

WE cannot but ſuppoſe, that, as he liv'd in Capernaum, the Place of our Lord's uſual Reſidence, and where his Sermons and Miracles were ſo frequent, he muſt have been acquainted with his Perſon and Doctrine before this Time; and, conſequently, in a good Preparation to receive the Call with Gladneſs. And, that he did ſo, a good Evidence it ſeems to be his entertaining entertaining our Lord and his Diſciples at Dinner next Day in his Houſe; whither he invited ſeveral of his own Profeſſion, in Hopes, no doubt, that our Saviour's Company and Converſe might make the like Impreſſion upon them.

From his Election to the Apoſtolate, he continu'd conſtantly with our Lord, during his Abode upon Earth; and, after his Aſcenſion, for the Space of eight Years, preach'd the Goſpel, in ſeveral Parts of Judea: But, being now to betake himſelf to the Converſion of the Gentiles, he was intreated by the Jews, who had been converted to the Chriſtian Faith, to commit to Writing the Hiſtory of our Lord's Life and Actions, and to leave it among them, as a ſtanding Record of what he had preach'd to them; which, accordingly, he did, and ſo compos'd the Goſpel, which we have now under his Name.

(n) The Countries, in which he preach'd, were chiefly Parthia †, and Æthiopia, in the latter of which he converted Multitudes, ſettled Churches, and ordain'd Miniſters to confirm, and build them up; and, having ſignaliz'd his Zeal in the Miniſtry of the Goſpel, and his Contempt of the World in a Life † of moſt exemplary Abſtinence, he is, moſt probably, thought to have ſuffer'd Martyrdom at Nadabar, a City in Æthiopia; but of the Time, and Manner of his Death, no certain Account is tranſmitted to us.

His Writings.

At the Requeſt of the Jewiſh Converts, (as we ſaid) and, as ſome add, at the Command of the reſt of the Apoſtles, St Matthew wrote his Goſpel, about eight or nine Years after our Lord's Reſurrection: For, that it was extant, before the Diſperſion of the Apoſtles, is plain from Bartholomew carrying it with him into India, where (as Euſebius (o) informs us) it was found by Panœtus, when he went to propagate the Faith in thoſe Parts, and by ſuch, as retain'd the Knowledge of Chriſt, was reputed a valuable Treaſure.

As it was primarily deſign'd for the Benefit of the Jewiſh Converts †, whatever ſome Moderns may ſay to the contrary,

† As for what is related by Nicephorus, of his going into the Country of the Cannibals, and conſtituting Plato, one of his Followers, Biſhop of Myrmena; of Chriſt's appearing to him in the Form of a beautiful Youth, and giving him a Wand, which he pitching into the Ground, it immediately grew up into a Tree; of his ſtrange converting the Prince of that Country; of his numerous Miracles, peaceable Death, and ſumptuous Funeral, with abundance more of the like Nature, they are juſtly to be reckon'd among thoſe Fabulous Reports, that have no Ground, either of Truth or Probability, to ſupport them. Cave's Lives of the Apoſtles.

† Thoſe, who maintain, that St Matthew wrote in Greek, produce theſe Arguments for their Opinion. 1ſt, That ſome of the Fathers (ſuch as Origen, Epiphanius, and St Jerom) quote, indeed, the Hebrew of St Matthew, but quote it as a Book of no great Authority, which they would not have done, had it been the true Original. 2d, That, had St Matthew wrote in Hebrew, the Hebrew Names in the Goſpel would not have been interpreted into Greek, nor would he have quoted the Old Teſtament, according to the Septuagint Tranſlation. 3d, That the Greek Language was then very common in Paleſtine, and all the Eaſt. And, 4th, ſince all the other Authors of the New Teſtament wrote in Greek, why ſhould St Matthew alone write his Goſpel in Hebrew? But to theſe Arguments it may be reply'd, 1ſt, That the uniform Teſtimony of all the Ancients, who tell us that St Matthew wrote his Goſpel in Hebrew, is certainly of very great Weight; but then we muſt know, that there were two of theſe Copies of St Matthew, the one pure and uncorrupted, of which they have ſpoken with great Eſteem, the other deprav'd by Hereticks, which they have contemn'd, and look'd upon as Apocryphal. 2d, The Hebrew Names, interpreted into Greek, prove the very contrary to what would be inferr'd from it; for this demonſtrates that the Tranſlation was Greek, and the Original Hebrew. 3d, Of the Ten Paſſages in the Old Teſtament, that St Matthew cites in his Goſpel, there are ſeven of them, which reſemble the Hebrew more than the Septuagint; in the other three, the Septuagint and the Hebrew themſelves agree; but the plain Truth is, that St Matthew quotes by Memory, and relates, not ſo much the Words, as the Senſe of the Paſſages. 4th, However common the Greek Tongue might be in Paleſtine among the better Sort of People, yet it is certain, that the Generality of the Jews ſpoke commonly what they call Hebrew, which was Syriack and Chaldee mix'd with Hebrew. And, 5th, Tho' all the reſt of the New Teſtament were written in Greek, yet, that is no Argument why this Part of it ſhould; tho', if Convenience were conſider'd, it ſhould rather, one would think, be adapted to the general Uſe and Capacity of thoſe for whom it was wrote. The Diſpute, however, trary, the Voice † of all Antiquity muſt carry it againſt them, that it was originally wrote in Hebrew, not in the antient pure Hebrew, (for that, in a great Meaſure, was loſt among the Vulgar) but in a Language commonly us'd at that Time by the Jews of Paleſtine, (and therefore ſtill called the Hebrew Tongue, becauſe wrote in Hebrew Characters) which was the Syriack, with a Mixture of Hebrew and Chaldee.

This Goſpel of St Matthew was, for a long Time, in Uſe among the Jews, who had been converted to Chriſtianity, and when, ſome Time before the Romans laid Siege to Jeruſalem, they retir'd to Pella, they carry'd it thither along with them; from whence it was diffus'd into Decapolis, and all the Countries beyond Jordan, where the Judaizing Chriſtians ſtill made Uſe of it in the Time of Epiphanius (p) and Euſebius (q) of Cæſarea. But theſe Chriſtians (r) did not preſerve this Sacred Depoſitum with all the Fidelity they ſhould have done. They added to it ſeveral Things, which perhaps they might have heard from the Mouths of the Apoſtles, or from their immediate Diſciples, and this in Time brought it under the Suſpicion of other Believers. The Ebionites, at length, got it into their Hands, and by their Additions, and Defalcations, in Favour of ſome Errors they had fallen into concerning the Divinity of our Saviour, and the Virginity of the Bleſſed Mother, ſo corrupted it, that, at length, it was given up by other Churches which adher'd to the Form of ſound Doctrine. It continu'd however a long Time in its primitive Purity in the Hands of the Nazarenes, or firſt Believers in Paleſtine, who (tho' they were zealous in the Obſervation of the Law) embrac'd no ſuch Opinions, as the Ebionites did, nor made any Alterations in the Goſpel. But, after the Extinction of this Sect, we hear no more of the genuine Goſpel of St Matthew, becauſe the antient Greek Verſion, which, in the Apoſtolick Times, was made from it, having always preſerv'd its primitive Integrity, did, long before this, univerſally prevail, and was look'd upon as Authentick as the Original; for, tho' its Author be uncertain, yet every one, who mentions it, always aſcribes it to ſome one Apoſtle, or other.

When St Matthew began to write, the great Queſtion among the Jews was, whether our Bleſſed Saviour was the true Meſſiah or no, and the main Tendency of his Goſpel ſeems to prove this. For he ſhews, by his mighty Deeds, that he was the Chriſt, the Son of God; that his Mother Mary was a Virgin; that he was not come to deſtroy the Law, but to fulfil it; and that his Miracles were not magical Operations, nor the Effects of any human Art, but inconteſtable Proofs of the Power of God, and of his Divine Miſſion. (s) St Ambroſe obſerves, that none of the Apoſtles have enter'd ſo far into the Particulars of our Saviour's Actions †, as has St Matthew; that none of them have related the Hiſtory of the Wiſe-Men coming

† All the Ancients, with one Conſent, aſſure us, that St Matthew wrote in Hebrew. Papias, Irenæus, Origen, Euſebius, St Cyril of Jeruſalem, Epiphanius, St Jerom, St Auſtin, St Chryſoſtom, the Author of the Latin Cammentary on St Mark, which is aſcrib'd to St Chryſoſtom, and the Author of the Synopſis of the Scripture, which bears the Name of Athanaſius, are a Cloud of Witneſſes, who depoſe this; and therefore ſtrange it is, that any ſhould queſtion its being originally written in that Language, when the Thing is ſo univerſally and uncontroulably aſſerted by all Antiquity, not one, that I know of, after the ſtricteſt Enquiry I could make, diſſenting in this Matter, and who certainly had far greater Opportunities of being ſatisfy'd in theſe Things, than we can have at ſo great a Diſtance. Du Pin's Hiſtory of the Canon, Vol. II. c. 2. and Cave's Lives of the Apoſtles.

† If we compare St Matthew with the three other Evangeliſts, we may perceive a remarkable Difference in the Order and Succeſſion of our Saviour's Actions, from Chap. iv. 22, to Chap. xiv. 13, which has much perplex'd Chronologers and Interpreters. Some pretend, that St Matthew ſhould be follow'd, but others think it more reaſonable to ſubmit coming from the Eaſt, or the Parable of the wiſe and fooliſh Virgins, and ſome others, but he; that, in ſhort, he has given us more Rules for the Conduct of Life, and more Leſſons of Morality, ſuitable to our Neceſſities, than any; and all this, (t) in a natural and eaſy Stile, (tho' ſometimes mix'd with Hebraiſms) ſuch as becomes an Hiſtorian, and, eſpecially, a Sacred Hiſtorian, whoſe Narration ſhould be free from Affectation, and all ſuch trifling Ornaments, as do not agree with the Gravity and Dignity of his Subject.

St Mark's Life.

THO' the Name of Mark ſeems to be of Roman Extraction, yet the Evangeliſt now before us was born of Jewiſh Parents, and originally deſcended from the Tribe of Levi. What his proper Name was, or upon what Change or Accident of Life he might aſſume this, we have no Manner of Intelligence; but, as it was no unuſual Thing for the Jews, when they went into the European Provinces of the Roman Empire, to conform to the Cuſtoms of the Country, and, while they continu'd there, to be called by ſome Name of common Uſe; ſo ſome have conjectur'd, that, when Mark attended upon St Peter to Rome, he might at that Time take upon him this Name, which (as he never return'd to Judea to re-aſſume his own) he for ever after retain'd. In the Writings of the Apoſtles we read of ſeveral called by this Name. There is John (u), whoſe Sir-Name was Mark (x); Mark, the Siſter's Son of Barnabas; Mark, (y) who was employed in the Miniſtry; Mark, whom St Paul calls his Fellow-Labourer (z); and Mark, whom St Peter (a) ſtiles his Son: But which of theſe was the Evangeliſt, or whether the Evangeliſt might not be a Perſon diſtinct from each of theſe, has been a Matter of ſome Doubt among the Learned.

THAT he was one of the ſeventy Diſciples, and, among them, one of thoſe, who took Offence at our Lord's Diſcourſe of (b) eating his Fleſh, and drinking his Blood, ſome of the Antients have affirm'd; but Euſebius (c), from Papias, who was Biſhop of Hierapolis, and liv'd near thoſe Times, tells us poſitively, that he was no Hearer or Follower of our Saviour. He was converted by ſome of the Apoſtles, and moſt likely by St Peter, to whom he was a conſtant Retainer, and ſerv'd him in the Capacity of an Amanuenſis, and an Interpreter. (d) For, tho' the Apoſtles were divinely inſpir'd, and, among other miraculous Powers, had the Gift of Languages conferr'd on them; yet the Interpretation of Tongues ſeems to be a Gift, more peculiar to ſome, than others, and it might be St Mark's Talent, either by Word, or Writing, to expound St Peter's Diſcourſes to thoſe, who underſtood not the Language, wherein they were deliver'd.

HE accompany'd St Peter in all his Travels, preach'd Chriſtianity in Italy, and at Rome, and, at the Requeſt of the Chriſtians in thoſe Parts, compos'd his Goſpel, which St Peter afterwards revis'd and approv'd. From Italy he went into Egypt, and, having fix'd his chief Reſidence in Alexandria, he there, and in the Country round about, propagated the Chriſtian Faith with ſuch Succeſs, that Multitudes both of Men and Women, not only became Converts, but engag'd themſelves likewiſe in a more ſtrict Profeſſion † of the Religion that he taught them, than ordinary.

ſubmit to the Authority of the other three, eſpecially, ſince St Mark, who follows him cloſe enough in every other Thing, forſakes him in this Particular. However this be, it can prove no Prejudice to the Truth of Facts, which are the eſſential Part of the Goſpel; and, as to the Order of Time, the ſacred Authors are not always ſollicitous to follow it exactly. Calmet's Dictionary, under the Word Matthew.

† Philo, in his Treatiſe on a contemplative Life, gives us a long Account, and high Commendation of a Set of People, (whom he calls Θεραπευταὶ) who, in a pleaſant Place near the Maræotick Lake in Egypt, form'd themſelves into

FROM Alexandria he remov'd Weſtward; and paſſing through the Countries of Marmarica, Pentapolis, and ſome others in his Way to Libya, (tho' the People were barbarous in their Manners, as well as idolatrous in their Worſhip) by his Preaching, and Miracles, he not only converted, but, before he departed, confirm'd them in the Profeſſion of the Goſpel. Upon his Return to Alexandria he preach'd with all Boldneſs, order'd and diſpos'd of the Affairs of the Church, and wiſely provided for the Continuance thereof, by conſtituting Governors and Paſtors in it. (e) The great Number of Miracles, which he wrought, and the Reproaches, which ſome of the Converts made upon the ſenſeleſs Idols of the Egyptians, ſo exaſperated their Rage, that they were reſolv'd to deſtroy this Introducer of a new Religion among them. It was at the Time of Eaſter, when the great Solemnities of their God Serapis happen'd to be celebrated, at which Feſtival, the Minds of the People, being excited to a paſſionate Vindication of the Honour of their Idol, broke in upon St Mark, then engag'd in the ſolemn Celebration of Divine Worſhip, and, binding his Feet, they dragg'd him thro' the Streets, and other rugged Places, to a Precipice near the Sea; but, for that Night, they thruſt him into a dark Priſon, where his Soul, by a Divine Viſion, was ſtrengthen'd, and encourag'd under the Ruins of a ſhatter'd Body. Early next Morning the Tragedy began again. For, in the ſame Manner, as they had done the Day before, they dragg'd him about, till, his Fleſh being rak'd off, and his Veins empty'd of Blood, his Spirits failed, and he expir'd: But their Malice dy'd not with him, for, taking the poor Remains of his Body, they threw them into a Fire, and ſo burnt them; but his Bones and Aſhes the Chriſtians gather'd up, and decently intomb'd near the Place, where he uſually preach'd.

His Writings.

(f) AFTER the Defeat of Simon Magus (whereof we ſhall have Occaſion to ſay more hereafter) the Reputation of the Chriſtian Religion grew ſo great, and Converts at Rome became ſo many, that they were deſirous to have in Writing thoſe Doctrines which had hitherto been imparted to them by Word of Mouth only. St Mark, to whom this Requeſt was made, accordingly ſet himſelf to recollect, what he, by long Converſation, had learned from St Peter, who, (when the other had finiſh'd the Work) peruſ'd, approv'd, and recommended it to the Uſe of the Churches: And for this Reaſon it is, by ſome of the Antients, ſtil'd St Peter's Goſpel; not that St Peter dictated it to St Mark, but becauſe St Mark did chiefly compoſe it out of that Account, which St Peter uſually deliver'd in his Diſcourſes to the People: And accordingly St Chryſoſtom (g) obſerves, that the Evangeliſt, in his nervous Stile and Manner of Expreſſion, takes a great Delight to imitate St Peter.

into religious Societies, and liv'd a ſtrict Philoſophick Life, and theſe, Euſebius (Hiſt. Eccl. lib. ii. c. 16.) affirms to have been Chriſtians, converted and brought under theſe admirable Rules by St Mark, at his coming into Egypt: But whoever ſeriouſly conſiders Philo's Account, will plainly find, that he intends it of Jews, and Profeſſors of the Moſaick Religion, and not of Chriſtians; partly, becauſe it is improbable, that Philo, being a Jew, ſhould give ſo great a Character and Commendation of Chriſtians, who were ſo hateful to the Jews at that Time in all Places of the World; partly, becauſe Philo ſpeaks of them, as an Inſtitution of a conſiderable Standing, whereas Chriſtians had but lately appear'd in the World, and were later come into Egypt; and partly, becauſe many Things in Philo's Account do no Way ſuit with the State and Manners of Chriſtians at that Time. Cave's Life of St Mark.

† The original Greek Copy, under St Mark's own Hand, is ſaid to be extant at Venice at this Day, written (as they tell us) by him at Aquileia, and thence, after many hundred Years, tranſlated to Venice, where it is ſtill preſerv'd, tho' the Letters ſo worn out with Length of Time, that they are not capable of being read. There are likewiſe ſome Greek Manuſcripts, wherein the twelve laſt Verſes of this Goſpel are omitted; but they are extant in the greateſt Number of the moſt ancient and authentick Copies, as well as in the Works of Irenæus, an Author of prior Date to any Rome, and from hence ſome may be apt to think it highly congruous, that it ſhould at firſt be written in the Latin Tongue: But it muſt be conſider'd, (h) that as the Jewiſh Converts, in that City, underſtood but little Latin, ſo there were very few Romans, that did not underſtand Greek, which as (appears from the Writers of that Age) was the genteel and faſhionable Language of thoſe Times; nor can any good Reaſons be aſſign'd, why it ſhould be more inconvenient for St Mark to write his Goſpel in Greek, for the Uſe of the Romans, than that St Paul ſhould, in the ſame Language, write his Epiſtle to that Church.

We cannot compare St Matthew and St Mark together, but muſt perceive, that the latter had ſeen the Writings of the former, becauſe he often uſes the ſame Terms, relates the ſame Facts, and takes notice of the ſame Circumſtances; but we muſt not therefore infer, that all he intended in his Work was ſimply to abridge him: (i) Becauſe he begins his Goſpel in a different Manner; he omits ſeveral Things, particularly our Lord's Genealogy; he varies from him in the Order of his Narration; he relates ſome Facts, that the other has omitted; he enlarges upon others in many Particulars, and (what is no mean Argument of his Truth and Impartiality in all the reſt) the ſhameful Lapſe and Denial of his beloved Maſter St Peter he ſets down, with more, and more aggravating Circumſtances, than any of the other Evangeliſts have recorded.

St Luke's Life.

St LUKE, who, by ſome antient Authors, is called Lucius, and Lucanus, was a Syrian by Birth, a Native of Antioch, and by Profeſſion a Phyſician. Antioch (k), the Metropolis of Syria, was, at this Time, a City celebrated for the Pleaſantneſs of its Situation, the Fertility of its Soil, the Riches of its Traffic, the Wiſdom of its Senate, the Learning of its Profeſſors, and the Civility and Politeneſs of its Inhabitants by the Pens of ſome of the greateſt Orators of their Times; and yet, above all theſe, it was renown'd for this one peculiar Honour, that, in this Place it was, where the Diſciples were firſt named Chriſtians.

In Antioch there was a famous Univerſity well repleniſhed with learned Profeſſors of all Arts and Sciences, where St Luke could not miſs of a liberal Education; however, he did not only ſtudy in Antioch, but in all the Schools of Greece and Egypt, whereby he became accompliſh'd in every Part of human Literature: And, as the Greek Academies were then more eſpecially famous for the Study of Phyſick, our Evangeliſt, for ſome Time, apply'd himſelf ſolely to the Practice of That; and, after his Converſion, continu'd very likely, in the ſame Profeſſion, which was far from being inconſiſtent, but rather ſubſervient to the Miniſtry of the Goſpel, or the Cure of Souls.

As to his other Accompliſhment, the Art of Painting, the Antients knew nothing of it. Nicephorus (l) is the firſt Author, that mentions it, and tho' a great deal of Pains has been taken to prove, that ſome Pieces, ſtill extant, were drawn by his own Hand, yet the antient Inſcription found in a Vault, near St Mary's Church, in the Via lata at Rome, (the Place where St Paul's Houſe is ſaid to have ſtood) where Mention is made of a Picture of the Bleſſed Virgin, as one of the ſeven painted by St Luke, is an Argument of better Authority for his Skill in that Art, than any, that the Jeſuit Gretſer, in his laborious Treatiſe, (m) has produc'd. But whether ever our Evangeliſt painted the Bleſſed Virgin or not, 'tis certain, that he has left us ſo many Particulars (omitted by others) relating to the Conception, Birth, any of the Manuſcripts, that want them. It is not to be queſtion'd therefore, but that they originally belong'd to St Mark's Goſpel, and were ſuppreſs'd by ſome ignorant or conceited Tranſcriber, upon the Account of ſome ſeeming Contradictions between St Matthew, and this other Evangeliſt, which, with a ſmall Skill in critical Learning, may be eaſily reconciled. Cave's Lives of the Apoſtles, and Beauſobre's Preface ſur S. Marc.

Birth, and Infancy of her Son, (n) that he ſeems to have been acquainted with her, and to have had ſome Share in her Confidence.

That he was one of the ſeventy Diſciples is a Notion inconſiſtent with his own Declaration in the Preface to his Goſpel; wherein he informs us, that the Facts, therein contain'd, were communicated to him by others, who had been (o) Eye-Witneſſes, and Miniſters of the Word from the Beginning: And therefore the moſt probable Opinion is, that, as the Jews liv'd in great Numbers, and had their Synagogues, and Schools of Education at Antioch, St Luke was, at firſt, a Jewiſh Proſelyte, but, afterwards, by St Paul, (while he abode in this City) converted to the Chriſtian Faith. A Companion of his Travels, and Sufferings, he plainly appears to have been, if not from his firſt Converſion, at leaſt from the Time of St Paul's firſt going into Macedonia; for there, in his Account of the Apoſtle's Actions, he changes his Stile, and (p) includes himſelf ever after, as a Party concern'd in the Narrative.

The Truth is, he follow'd him in all his Dangers, was with him at ſeveral Arraignments at Jeruſalem, and accompany'd him in his deſperate Voyage to Rome, where he ſtill attended on him, to ſerve his Neceſſities, and ſupply thoſe miniſterial Offices, which the Apoſtle's Confinement would not ſuffer him to undergo. Nay, it appears from a Paſſage of St Paul (q) to Timothy, that he return'd with him to Rome the ſecond Time, waiting on him in the ſame Capacity, and eſpecially in carrying Meſſages to thoſe Churches, where they had planted Chriſtianity: Nor can we well forbear thinking, that he continued his Attendance on him, until the Apoſtle had finiſh'd his Courſe, and crown'd his Miniſtry with his Martyrdom; by which kind Offices he infinitely endear'd himſelf to St Paul, who own'd him for his Fellow-Labourer, and called him the beloved Phyſician, (r) and the Brother, whoſe Praiſe is in the Goſpel, throughout all the Churches.

From the Beginning of the Goſpels to Matth. ix. 8. Mark ii. 23. Luke vi. 1.

After the Death of St Paul, how he diſpos'd of himſelf is not ſo certain. Some are of Opinion, that he return'd into the Eaſt, and, in Egypt and Lydia, preach'd the Goſpel, wrought Miracles, converted Multitudes, and conſtituted Guides and Miniſters of Religion; but others rather think, that he travelled into Dalmatia, Gallia, Italy, and Macedonia, where he ſpar'd no Pains, nor declin'd any Dangers, that he might faithfully diſcharge the Truſt, committed to him. (s) Upon his coming into Greece, thoſe, who make him die a violent Death, (for ſome are of a contrary Opinion) tell us, that he preach'd with great Succeſs, and baptiz'd many Converts into the Chriſtian Faith, till a Party of Infidels, making Head againſt him, drew him to Execution, and, for Want of a Croſs, whereon to diſpatch him, hang'd him upon an Olive-Tree, in the eightieth Year of his Age.

His Writings.

We have two Pieces of his, viz. his Goſpel, and the Hiſtory of the Apoſtolick Acts, wrote for the Uſe of the Churches, and both dedicated to Theophilus: But who this Theophilus was, 'tis not ſo eaſy a Matter to determine, ſince many of the Antients themſelves have taken this Name in a general appellative Senſe, for a Lover of God, a Title common to every good Chriſtian; but others (with better Reaſon) have thought, that it is the proper Name of ſome Perſon of Diſtinction, ſince the Title of moſt excellent is annex'd to it, which is the uſual Form of Addreſs to Princes and great Men. But who this Perſon of Diſtinction was, 'tis impoſſible to tell, only we may ſuppoſe, that it was ſome conſiderable Magiſtrate, whom St Luke had converted, and to whom he now dedicated his Books, not only as a Teſtimony of honourable Reſpect, but as a Means of giving him a farther Information mation of thoſe Things, wherein he had inſtructed him.

(t) The Occaſion of his writing his Goſpel was (as himſelf intimates) the raſh and wrong Accounts given to the World by ſome, who, either out of Ignorance, or Deſign, had miſrepreſented the Actions and Doctrines of Chriſt, and ſow'd the Seeds of Error in the Church. 'Tis certain, that this Evangeliſt is more circumſtantial in relating the Facts, and more exact in the Method, and Order of them, than either of the two, who wrote before him. (u) The Hiſtory of Zacharias, the Generation of John the Baptiſt, the Angel's coming to the Bleſſed Virgin, Elizabeth's Salutation of her at the firſt Interview, the Occaſion of Joſeph and Mary's going to Bethlehem, the Circumſtances of our Saviour's Birth there, the Publication of it to the Shepherds, and the Teſtimony which Simeon and Anna gave to him in the Temple; theſe, and ſeveral other Pieces of Hiſtory, as well as the Parables of the loſt Sheep, loſt Piece of Money, and returning Prodigal Son, &c. are not related by any other Evangeliſt. His Hiſtory therefore is an excellent Supplement of what they have omitted; nor does it in the leaſt detract from the Authority of his Relations, that he himſelf was not preſent at the doing them: For, if we conſider who were the Perſons from whom he deriv'd his Account of Things, he had a Stock of Intelligence ſufficiently authentick to proceed upon; and, when he had finiſh'd it, had the Sanction and Approbation of an Apoſtle, divinely inſpir'd, (as himſelf likewiſe was) even of the great Apoſtle of the Gentiles, to confirm it.

Whoever looks into the Beginning of St Luke's Hiſtory of the Apoſtolick Acts, may eaſily perceive, that it is a Continuation of what he had related in his Goſpel; for it takes up the Story at our Saviour's Aſcenſion, and continues it to St Paul's Arrival at Rome after his Appeal to Cæſar, and ſo, properly ſpeaking, is but one Hiſtory divided into two Parts. The main Difference between the Goſpel and the Acts is, that, in the former, he writes from the Information he had from others, but ſuch as were true and authentick Witneſſes; in the latter, from his own Knowledge, and perſonal Concern in the Things he relates.

His chief Deſign, in the Compoſition of this Work, was, to write a true Hiſtory of the Apoſtles, and of the Foundation of the Chriſtian Church, in Oppoſition to the falſe Acts, and falſe Hiſtories, which began then to be diſpers'd about the World. This Hiſtory, however, does not compriſe the Acts of all the Apoſtles, but confines itſelf chiefly to the moſt remarkable Paſſages of two, St Peter and St Paul, and even of theſe two it gives us but a ſhort and ſummary Account. St Peter's Story carries it down no lower, than his Deliverance from Herod's impriſoning him, and the Death of his Perſecutor, which happen'd in the Year of Our Lord 44; and yet the Apoſtle liv'd four and twenty Years after this. And, in like Manner, the Hiſtory of St Paul is far from being compleat. For as, from the Time of his Converſion, there is very little ſaid of him, to his coming to Iconium, which was twelve Years after; ſo his Story proceeds no farther, than to his firſt coming to Rome, in the Year of Our Lord 58, and yet, after this, he liv'd ten Years, and, having preach'd the Goſpel in Spain, and other Parts of the Weſt, at laſt return'd to Rome, and there ſuffer'd Martyrdom.

(x) It muſt be own'd however, that the Evangeliſt is more particular in his Account of St Paul, than of any other of the Apoſtles, and that not only, becauſe he was more ſignally active in the Cauſe of Chriſtianity, but becauſe St Luke was his conſtant Attendant, an Eye-Witneſs of the whole Carriage of his Life, and privy to his moſt intimate Tranſactions, and therefore capable of giving a more full and ſatisfactory Relation of them.

(y) The Evangeliſt's Deſign, in ſhort, was not to compoſe a large Volume, but only to ſingle out ſome few Things, which he thought neceſſary for the Inſtruction of the Faithful, and, in this Reſpect, his Work may be called an Hiſtorical Demonſtration of the Truth of the Chriſtian Religion; ſince therein we perceive our Lord's Promiſes fulfilled, in his Miſſion of the Holy Ghoſt, in his Reſurrection and Aſcenſion into Heaven, in the Sovereign Power he exerciſes there, in the Miracles he enabled his Followers to work, in the Riſe and wonderful Progreſs of his Religion, and, in one Word, in the Chriſtian Church becoming the Church univerſal by the Call to the Gentiles.

We have only one Thing more to remark concerning this Hiſtory, viz. That, as St Luke wrote it at Rome, and at the End of St Paul's two Years Impriſonment there, with which he concludes his Story; ſo his Way and Manner of Writing is exact, and accurate; his Stile polite and elegant, ſublime and noble, and yet eaſy and perſpicuous, flowing with a natural Grace and Sweetneſs, admirably adapted to an hiſtorical Deſign, and, all along, expreſs'd in a Vein of purer and more refin'd Language, than is to be found in the other Writers of the Sacred Story.

St John's Life.

St JOHN, tho' the laſt in Order, yet firſt in Quality among the Evangeliſts, was by Birth a Galilean, the Son of Zebedee and Salome, (one of thoſe devout Women, who conſtantly attended our Lord in his Miniſtry) and Brother to James, who (to diſtinguiſh him from another Apoſtle of the ſame Name) is generally called James the Great. Before his adjoining himſelf to Chriſt, he ſeems to have been a Diſciple to John the Baptiſt, and is thought to have been that other Diſciple, who (in the firſt Chapter (z) of his Goſpel is ſaid to have been preſent with Andrew, when John declar'd Jeſus to be the Lamb of God, and thereupon to have follow'd him to the Place of his Abode.

He was by much the youngeſt of the Apoſtles, yet was he admitted into as great a Share of his Maſter's Confidence, as any. He was one of thoſe, to whom he communicated the moſt private Paſſages of his Life; one of thoſe, whom he took with him, when he went and reſtor'd Jairus's Daughter to Life; one of thoſe, to whom he exhibited a Specimen of his Divinity, in his Transfiguration on the Mount; one of thoſe, who were preſent at his Conference with Moſes and Elias, and heard that Voice, which declar'd him the beloved Son of God; and one of thoſe, who were Companions of his Solitude, and moſt retir'd Devotions, and bitter Agonies in the Garden. Thus, of the three, who were made the Witneſſes of their Maſter's Actions, which he ſaw convenient to conceal, St John had conſtantly the Privilege to make one. Nay, even of theſe three, he ſeems, in ſome Reſpects, to have the Preference; to be known by the moſt deſireable of all Titles, the Diſciple whom Jeſus loved; to have the Honour of † leaning upon his Lord's Boſom at Meat; to have the Intimacy with him, to aſk him a Queſtion, viz. (who in the Company was the Traitor?) Which even St Peter himſelf had not Courage to do; and (what is the higheſt Inſtance of his Affection) to have his Mother, his ſorrowful and diſconſolate Mother, with his laſt dying Breath, committed to his Care and Comfort: (a) Which peculiar Tokens of his Maſter's Favour and Eſteem ſome have aſcrib'd to the Apoſtle's eminent Modeſty, others to his unſpotted Chaſtity; others think it an Indulgence due to his Youth, but they ſeem to have the brighteſt Notion, who impute it to a Nearneſs of Relation, and a peculiar Sweetneſs of Diſpoſition, conſpiring to recommend him.

(b) Upon the Diviſion of the Provinces, which the Apoſtles made among themſelves, Aſia fell to St John's Share, tho' he did not immediately enter upon his Charge, but ſtay'd at Jeruſalem, at leaſt till the Death of the Bleſſed Virgin, which was about fifteen Years after our Lord's Aſcenſion. After he was thus releas'd from his Truſt, he took his Journey into Aſia, and induſtriouſly apply'd himſelf to propagate Chriſtianity, preaching where the Goſpel had not yet taken Place, and confirming it where it had been already planted. Many Churches of Note and Eminence were of his Foundation; but the chief Place of his Reſidence was at Epheſus, where, tho' St Paul had, many Years before, ſettled a Church, and conſtituted Timothy Biſhop of it, yet conſidering, that it was a City of exceeding great Reſort, both upon the Account of its Traffick, and the Conveniency of its Port, the Apoſtle thought he could not be ſeated more commodiouſly than here for diſperſing the Knowledge of his Doctrines, to Natives of ſeveral Nations and Quarters at once.

After ſeveral Years (ſome ſay twenty-ſeven) ſpent here, he was accus'd to Domitian (who had then begun a ſevere Perſecution) as a great Aſſerter of Atheiſm and Impiety, and a publick Subverter of the Religion of the Empire; ſo that, by his Command, the Proconſul of Aſia ſent him bound to Rome, where, as Tertullian relates, (in a Manner importing the Fact abundantly notorious) he was plung'd into a Cauldron of Oil ſet on Fire; but God, who had reſerv'd him for farther Services to the Truth, reſtrain'd the Heat of it, (as he did in the fiery Furnace of Old) and ſo preſerv'd him from this ſeemingly unavoidable Deſtruction. The Emperor however, unmov'd with his miraculous Deliverance, order'd him to be baniſh'd to Patmos, a ſmall diſconſolate Iſland in the Archipelago, where he remain'd ſeveral Years, inſtructing the Inhabitants in the Faith of Chriſt; and where he was vouchſaf'd thoſe Viſions, and prophetical Repreſentations, which he then recorded in his Book of Revelation, reaping this great Advantage from his Exile, that, tho' he was cut off from the Society of Men, he was the more entertain'd with immediate Converſes of Heaven.

Upon the Death of Domitian, and the Succeſſion of Nerva, who reſcinded all the odious Acts of his Predeceſſor, and, by publick Edict, re-called thoſe, whom the other's Fury had baniſh'd, St John took the Opportunity to return into Aſia, and fix'd his Seat again at Epheſus; the rather, becauſe the People of that Place had lately martyr'd their Biſhop Timothy. Here, with the Aſſiſtance of ſeven other Biſhops, he took upon him the Government of the large Dioceſe of Aſia-Minor, erected Oratories, and diſpos'd of the Clergy in the beſt Manner, that the Circumſtances of thoſe Times would permit; and having ſpent his Time in an indefatigable Execution of his Charge, travelling from Eaſt to Weſt to inſtruct the World in the Principles of the holy Religion which he was ſent to propagate; and * ſhunning no Difficulties or Dangers, to redeem Mens Minds from Vice, Error, or Idolatry, he finiſh'd (b) Cave's Life of St John.

* Euſebius (Hiſt. Eccl. lib. iii. c. 33.) gives us a very remarkable Inſtance of this, ——— In his Viſitation of the Churches near Epheſus, he was much taken with a beautiful young Man, whom he took, and, with a ſpecial Charge, committed him to the Education and Inſtruction of the Biſhop of the Place, who undertook the Charge, inſtructed, and baptiz'd him. After this, he thought he might a little relax the Reins of Diſcipline, but the Youth made a bad Uſe of his Liberty, and, being debauch'd by evil Company, made himſelf Captain of a Gang of High-way-men, the moſt looſe, cruel, and profligate Wretches of the Country. St John, at his Return, underſtanding this, and, having ſharply reprov'd the Negligence of his Tutor, reſolv'd to find him out, and without any Conſideration of what Danger he enter'd upon, in venturing himſelf among Perſons of deſperate Fortunes and abandon'd Conſciences, he went to the Mountains, where their uſual Haunt was; and, being there taken up by the Centinel, he deſir'd to be brought before their Commander, who no ſooner eſpied him coming towards him, but immediately fled. The aged Apoſtle follow'd after, but, being not able to overtake him, he paſſionately intreated him to ſtay, promiſing to undertake with God for his Peace and Pardon. He did ſo, and both melted into Tears, and the Apoſtle having pray'd with, and for him, return'd him a true Ponitent and Convert to the Church. Cave's Life of St John.

finiſh'd his Courſe, in the Beginning of Trajan's Reign, in a good old Age, and, in the ninety-ninth Year of his Life, dy'd a natural Death, and was bury'd near Epheſus; a wonderful Pattern of Holineſs and Charity, and a Writer ſo profound, as to deſerve (by way of Eminence) the Character of St John the Divine.

His Writings.

The firſt in Time, tho' plac'd laſt, is his Apocalypſe, or Book of Revelation, which he wrote in his Confinement at Patmos. After the Preface, and Admonition given to the Biſhops of the ſeven Churches in Aſia, it contains the Perſecutions, which the Faithful have ſuffer'd from the Jews, Hereticks, and Roman Emperors, down as far as Julian the Apoſtate. After this, we have a View of that Vengeance, which God has exercis'd againſt the Perſons of Perſecutors, againſt the Roman Empire, and the City of Rome, which is deſcrib'd under the Name of Babylon, the great Proſtitute, ſeated upon ſeven Hills; then we have a Deſcription of the peaceable and flouriſhing State of the Church for a Thouſand Years, and, after ſome Moleſtation from the Turk, (as is ſuppos'd) the Happineſs of the Church Triumphant, ſet off with all the imaginable Beauties of Rhetorick; and, at laſt, we come to a formal Concluſion of the whole Matter, and a ſevere Commination to all thoſe, who ſhall preſume either to add or diminiſh any Thing from this Prophecy.

(c) That St John, the Evangeliſt, was the Author of the Book of Revelation, all the moſt antient Eccleſiaſtical Writers were agreed, until Dionyſius, Biſhop of Alexandria, (in his Anſwer to one Nepos, another Egyptian Biſhop, who had reviv'd the groſs Notion of Cerinthus, concerning the Millennium, in order to evade the Uſe, which this Nepos had made of the Apocalypſe) called in Queſtion its Authority, by aſſerting, "that ſeveral of "the Antients had diſown'd this Book "to have been wrote by any Apoſtolic "Man; that Cerinthus had prefix'd "John's Name to it, to give the better "Countenance to his Dream of Chriſt's "Reign upon Earth; and that (tho' it "might be the Work of ſome inſpir'd "Perſon) it could not poſſibly be St John's, "becauſe its Stile, Matter, and Method "did by no Means agree with his other "Writings." Now, whoever looks into the antient Writers of the Church, will find, that Polycarp, Biſhop of Smyrna, who (according to (d) Irenæus) had ſeen St John; Ignatius, Biſhop of Antioch, who (according to (e) St Chryſoſtom) was converſant with the Apoſtles; Juſtin Martyr (f), Irenæus (g), Clemens (h) of Alexandria, and Tertullian (i), Authors all of the ſecond Century, are unanimous in their aſcribing this Work to the ſame Hand, from whence the Goſpel and Epiſtles did proceed; and that therefore the Opinion of one private Doctor ſhould not prevail againſt the Authority of ſo many Writers, who were either contemporary, or nearly ſubſequent to the Apoſtles. For, be it allow'd, that there is a Diverſity of Stile, yet does not every able Writer vary that, according to the Nature of the Subject, he is upon? In Hiſtory, the Stile ſhould be ſimple; in Epiſtles, familiar; and in Prophecies, majeſtick and ſublime; and therefore what Wonder is it, if, in Arguments ſo vaſtly different, the ſame Perſon did not always obſerve the ſame Tenor, and Way of Writing? Nothing can be more different in their Method and Diction, than the Book of Proverbs, and the Book of Canticles, and yet few have doubted, but that Solomon was the Writer of both: But now, that Cerinthus ſhould be the Author of a Book, which contains Doctrines directly oppoſite to the Errors, which he broach'd, is a Thing incredible. For, whereas Cerinthus did not believe that God made the World, or that Chriſt dy'd, and roſe again; the Author of the Revelation (k) aſcribes to God the Work of the the Creation, and calls our Bleſſed Saviour (l) the Firſt-Begotten of the Dead; and whereas Cerinthus made Jeſus merely the Son of Joſeph, and a Being different from that of Chriſt; the Author of the Revelation calls him expreſſly (m) the Son of God, and makes him (n) one and the ſame Perſon with Chriſt. Tho' therefore there may be ſome Similitude between St John's Expreſſions and the Notions of Cerinthus, in Regard to Chriſt's Reign of a Thouſand Years, yet it had been much more prudent in Dionyſius, to have given a ſpiritual Senſe and Interpretation of theſe Expreſſions, than to aſcribe to a wicked and ſenſual Man (as Cerinthus was) a Book, which breathes nothing but Piety and Holineſs, an awful Dread of God, and a Devotion, ſuch as the Angels perform in Heaven.

The Truth is, all Circumſtances concur to intitle our Apoſtle to be the Author of this Book: His Name frequently expreſs'd in it; his writing it in the Iſland of Patmos, whither none but he was baniſh'd; his directing particular Epiſtles to the ſeven Churches of Aſia, which had either been planted or cultivated by him; and his ſtiling himſelf their Brother and Companion in Tribulation, and in the Kingdom and Patience of Jeſus Chriſt; theſe, and many more Circumſtances, that might be mention'd, added to the Doctrine contain'd in it, which is highly ſuitable to the Apoſtolick Spirit and Temper, do evidently bear witneſs, that this Book was the Work of St John, and, conſequently, of Divine and Canonical Authority.

(o) Next to the Apocalypſe, in Order of Time, are the three Epiſtles, which St John wrote. The firſt of theſe is Catholick, calculated for all Times and Places, and contains moſt excellent Rules for the Conduct of the Chriſtian Life, and for Preſervation againſt the crafty Inſinuations of Seducers. The other two are but ſhort, and directed to particular Perſons: The one to a Lady of honourable Quality; and the other to the charitable and hoſpitable Gaius, ſo kind a Friend, and ſo courteous an Entertainer of all indigent Chriſtians.

(p) EUSEBIUS, and, after him, St Jerom informs us, that St John, having peruſ'd the other three Goſpels, approv'd and confirm'd them by his Authority; but, obſerving withal, that theſe Evangeliſts had omitted ſeveral of our Saviour's Actions, ſuch eſpecially, as were done before the Baptiſt's Impriſonment, he wrote his Goſpel, in order to ſupply what was wanting in them: And, becauſe, at this Time, there were ſeveral Hereticks (ſuch as Cerinthus, Ebion, and their Followers) ſprung up in the Church, who deny'd the Divine Nature of Jeſus Chriſt, another End of his writing was, to antidote the World againſt the Poiſon of theſe Hereſies, by making it appear, that our Bleſſed Saviour was God from all Eternity, and before his Incarnation; (q) and that, as other Evangeliſts had written the Series of his Generation according to the Fleſh, he might write a ſpiritual Goſpel, beginning from the Divinity of Chriſt: Which was a Subject reſerv'd for him (as the moſt excellent Perſon) by the Holy Ghoſt.

When therefore the Biſhops of Aſia, and ſeveral Ambaſſadors from other Churches, had been, for ſome Time, ſolliciting him, he caus'd them to proclaim a general Faſt, to ſeek the Bleſſing of Heaven on ſo great and momentous an Undertaking; and, when this was done, he ſet about the Work, and † compleated it in ſo excellent and ſublime a Manner, that the

The ſecond Paſſover. John v. 1.

From Matth. xii. 1. Mark. ii. 23. Luke vi. 1. John v. 1. to Matth. xvii. 14. Mark ix. 14. Luke ix. 37. John vii. 1.

OUR Bleſſed Saviour was now in the ſecond Year of his publick Miniſtry, when the near Approach of the Paſſover † (which was the Second after his Baptiſm) called him to Jeruſalem. On the South-Eaſt Side of the City, there was a famous Pool †, and an Hoſpital called Betheſda †, which conſiſted of five Portico's, in which lay a great Multitude of poor impotent People, with Diſtempers of all Kinds, waiting

† From the Time, that our Lord firſt began his Miniſtry, to the Concluſion of it, there had been four Paſſovers held at Jeruſalem; all, except the laſt, are not mention'd by the three firſt Evangeliſts, but St John has been mindful to ſet every one down. The firſt, Chap. ii. 13. The ſecond, Chap. v. 1. The third, Chap. vi. 4. And the fourth, Chap. xiii. 1. Pool's Annotations.

† The Word Κολυμβήθρα ſignifies any Pool, or Head of Water, that is deep enough for a Man to ſwim in: But, as in hot Countries more eſpecially, the Uſe of conſtant Bathing was highly neceſſary, for which Purpoſe it was uſual, in every great City, to have publick Baths erected, ſome have imagin'd, that this Pool was a large Baſon of Water of this Kind; and that the Portico's about it were Places, made for the Conveniency of dreſſing or undreſſing in the Shade, for thoſe, that were minded to bathe. However this be, 'tis certain, that, in ancient Times, there were two Pools, within the Compaſs of the Mount, on which the Temple ſtood, the one called the upper Pool, 2 Kings. xviii. 17. and the other, the Pool of Siloam, by the King's Garden, Neh. iii. 15. That St Jerom (who himſelf had been at Jeruſalem) makes mention of two Reſervoirs, one filled with the Rains, that fall in the Winter, and the other, with Water of a deep red Colour, as if it ſtill contain'd a Tinge of the Victims, that formerly were waſh'd in it; and that Mr Maundrell, in his Travels, Page 107, informs us, that, when he was there, he ſaw ſtill remaining what was reputed the Pool of Betheſda, whereof he gives us the particular Dimenſions, and tells us, that, at its Weſt End, there ſeem to be ſome old Arches, not unlikely the Porches, in which ſat that Multitude of Lame, Halt, and Blind, which are mention'd by St John, Chap. v. Dr Pearce's Vindication of our Saviour's Miracles, and Wells's Geography of the New Teſtament, Chap. iv.

† Some will have this Word to ſignify a Drain, or Sink-Houſe, becauſe the Water, which came from the Temple, and the Place, where the Victims were waſh'd, by ſubterraneous Paſſages ran into it; but moſt Interpreters expound Jesus Cureth the Lame-man at the Pool of Bethesda.

There was at Jeruſalem a Pool call'd Bethesda, frequented by a multitude of Impotent folk, of Blind, Halt, & Wither'd, to be cur'd by Bathing, after an Angel had Troubled the Waters; among whom was a certain man, that had been ill 38 Years; but had no one to help him in, wherefore Jesus said unto him, Riſe, take up thy Bed & Walk. — John Ch. waiting for the moving of the Water; for, at certain Times, an Angel came from Heaven, and, putting the Pool in a Fermentation, convey'd ſuch a medicinal Virtue into it, that the firſt Perſon, who enter'd it, after ſuch Commotion, was cur'd of whatſoever Diſtemper he had. On the Sabbath-Day our Saviour came to this Place; and, ſeeing a poor Paralytick †, who had been in that Condition for the Space of eight and thirty Years, and lain there a long while in Expectance of a Cure, but all in vain, becauſe, whenever the Water was mov'd, ſome one or other always ſtepp'd in before, and prevented him; † he immediately healed him with a Word's ſpeaking, and at the ſame Time † order'd him to take up his Bed, and walk Home: But, while he was doing this, the Jews exclaim'd againſt him for bearing a Burthen on the Sabbath-Day, which was † directly (a) contrary to their Law. The Man it an Houſe of Mercy, ſo called, ſay ſome, becauſe the erecting of Baths was an Act of great Kindneſs to the common People, whoſe Indiſpoſitions, in hot Countries, requir'd frequent Bathing; tho' the Generality rather think, that it more properly had that Name, from God's great Goodneſs ſhewn to his People, in giving this healing Virtue to theſe Waters. Pool's Annotations, and Pearce's Vindication of our Saviour's Miracles.

† The Word ἀσθενία, which we render Infirmity, or Weakneſs, is indeed a general Name for almoſt all Diſtempers, but here it is ſo limited in its Signification, by the Circumſtances occurring in the Man's Hiſtory, that it can properly denote no other Diſeaſe, than what we call a confirm'd Palſy. For, beſides that the Symptoms of no other Diſtemper do ſo exactly agree with the Deſcription given of this Infirmity, both in Point of its long Continuance, and extream Weakneſs; the very Word Weakneſs, in its moſt obvious Senſe, anſwers exactly to ſuch a Relaxation of the nervous Syſtem, as the Palſy is known to be, and (what is no mean Circumſtance) our Saviour makes uſe of the ſame Form and Method of Cure to this very Man, that he applies to another Paralytick, Riſe, take up thy Bed, and walk, Matth. ix. 6.

† If it be aſk'd, how it came to paſs, that of the Multitude of infirm People, who lay at this Pool, our Saviour ſhould think fit to cure but one? The Anſwer is obvious, becauſe he was an Object moſt to be compaſſionated of any in the Place, not only becauſe he was too feeble to ſtep into the Water himſelf, and too poor to have any to aſſiſt him; but, more eſpecially, becauſe he had been now a long while in this Condition, and yet ſtill depended upon the good Providence of God for an Opportunity to be cur'd at one Time or other. To cure at once whole Multitudes, indeed, ſounds more popular, and carries the Face of more extenſive Goodneſs; but, beſides that our Saviour might, in this Caſe, very probably conform to the Rule of Cure eſtabliſh'd providentially at Betheſda, which was to heal but one Perſon at one Time, his great Deſign in every Action of this Kind was to prove his Character and Commiſſion from God, to which End one ſingle and inconteſtable Miracle was as ſufficient an Evidence, as a Thouſand. The ſhort is, ſince our Lord was at Liberty to do what he would with his own, or to beſtow his Favours where he pleas'd, his Goodneſs was conſpicuous in chuſing the moſt helpleſs Object, and his Wiſdom no leſs manifeſt, in leaving the reſt to the ſtanding Miracle of the Pool. Biſhop Smallbroke's Vindication of our Saviour's Miracles, Page 525.

† It is very obſervable, that, whenever our Lord did any Miracle, he generally adjoin'd ſome Circumſtance or other to denote the Truth and Reality of it. Thus, after his Multiplication of the Loaves and Fiſhes, he order'd his Diſciples to gather up the Fragments, which amounted to twelve Baſkets full. Upon his changing the Water into Wine at Cana, he commanded the Servants to carry it to the Ruler of the Feaſt, for him to taſte it. When he had healed the Leper near Capernaum, he ſent him to preſent his Oblation, in Teſtimony of his Cure; and here, for the ſame Reaſon, viz. the Demonſtration of the Compleatneſs of his Cure, he bids the Paralytick take up his Bed, and go home. But why did he this on the Sabbath-Day? Even to make his Divine Power and Miſſion more univerſally known, eſpecially in Jeruſalem, the Capital of the Nation, and Center of the Jewiſh Church, by firſt working this Miracle on the Sabbath-Day, when there were more People at Liberty to view and conſider it; and then, ſending his Patient along the Streets, in a very uncommon Manner, and to make the People more inquiſitive, with his Bed upon his Back. Calmet's Commentary.

† The Prohibition runs in theſe Words: ——— Thus ſaith the Lord, Take heed to yourſelves, and bear no Burthen on the Sabbath-Day, nor bring it in by the Gates of Jeruſalem, neither carry forth a Burthen out of your Houſes on the Sabbath-Day, neither do ye any Work, but hallow ye the Sabbath-Day, as I commanded your Fathers, Jer. xvii. 21, 22. and, according to the Jewiſh Canons, thoſe, who did this, were puniſhable, either by Death, or Scourging. It muſt be acknowledg'd therefore, that our Saviour's Injunction to the late impotent Man was contrary to the Letter of the Law, but then it may be juſtly ſaid, that it was not contrary to the Senſe and Intention of it. The Law only prohibited civil Labour, and reſtrain'd Men from carrying ſuch Burthens, as they were wont to do in the Way of their Trade; but it did not forbid the doing of any Thing, that might be a Teſtimony of God's Mercy or Goodneſs to Mankind. As therefore the Sabbath was made for the Honour of God, and this Action was a publick Monument of his Mercy and Power, the Man, properly ſpeaking, did not break the Sabbath, neither did our Lord deſerve any Cenſure from the Jews; eſpecially conſidering, that, as he was a Prophet, even by their own Rules, he had Power to require what was contrary to the ceremonial Reſt of the Sabbath. Pool's and Whitby's Annotations, and Calmet's Commentary.

Man excus'd himſelf by declaring, that the Perſon, who had miraculouſly cur'd him, commanded him ſo to do, which he thought a ſufficient Warrant; but, when they underſtood that it was Jeſus, they (b) brought him before the Sanhedrim, with a Deſign to take away his Life, as an open Prophaner of the Sabbath. Here, in Defence of himſelf, he alledg'd,—— That, "ſince God (from whoſe Reſt they took the Obſervation of the Sabbath) did, on that Day, and all others, exerciſe the Works of Providence, Preſervation, and Mercy, there could be no Reaſon, why he, who was his Son, and inveſted with full Authority from him, (as (c) he proves immediately in a ſet Speech before the Council) might not employ himſelf on the Sabbath, as well as any other Day, in Actions of the like Nature;" Which provok'd the Jews ſtill more and more againſt him, for they look'd upon him now, not only as a Sabbath-Breaker, but a Blaſphemer likewiſe, who, by making himſelf the Son of God †, had claim'd a Co-Equality with him.

He vindicates his Diſciples for eating the Ears of Corn on the Sabbath Day.

WHAT the Reſult of our Saviour's Defence before the Sanhedrim was, we cannot tell, becauſe none of the Evangeliſts have acquainted us; but the Sequel of the Hiſtory informs us, that it no Ways abated the Malice of the Phariſees, becauſe, on the very next Sabbath-Day, upon his Diſciples pulling ſome Ears of Corn †, (as they paſs'd through the Fields) rubbing them in their Hands, and ſo eating them, becauſe they were really hungry, they began again to clamour againſt this Violation of the Sabbath; until our Saviour, in Vindication of his Diſciples, both from the Example of David † and his Attendants, (who eat the Shew-Bread †, which

(b) John v. 16. (c) Ver. 19. ad Finem.

† From hence it ſeems to follow, that, tho' the Jews had very high Conceptions of the Meſſiah, and were confident, that, when he came, he would be a mighty Prince, and ſubdue all other Nations under his Feet; yet they never once imagin'd that he would be God, or, in the ſtrict and ſublime Senſe of the Word, the Son of God, tho', in the very Prophecies, which (as they themſelves acknowledge) relate to the Meſſiah, he is called IMMANUEL, Iſaiah vii. 14. and, elſewhere, the Mighty God, the Everlaſting Father, the Prince of Peace, Iſaiah ix. 6. Whitby's Annotations.

† What our Lord's Diſciples did, in this Caſe, could not be accounted any unjuſt Invaſion of another's Property, becauſe the Law had indulg'd them thus far: ——— When thou goeſt into thy Neighbour's Standing-Corn, thou mayeſt pluck the Ears with thy Hand; but thou ſhalt not move a Sickle to thy Neighbour's Standing-Corn, Deut. xxiii. 25. It was not then for plucking the Ears of Corn, much leſs (as ſome ſay) for breaking their Faſts, before they had celebrated the publick Offices, (which was contrary to the Cuſtom of the Jews, Acts ii. 15.) that the Phariſees took Exceptions to the Diſciples; but for plucking them on the Sabbath-Day, whereof they thought this Action (which, at other Times, was lawful enough) to be a Violation, and, accordingly, our Saviour's whole Vindication of them turns upon this Suppoſition. Hammond's and Whitby's Annotations.

† There is ſomething very cogent in our Saviour's Argument, taken from David's Practice, becauſe, according to the Conceſſion of the Jews themſelves, his Example contains two Things tending to excuſe the Violation of the Sabbath; 1. That they ſuppoſe, that David, and his Men, fled on the Sabbath-Day, and yet were not guilty of breaking the Reſt of the Sabbath; for our Maſters think it lawful, ſay they, in him, whom the Gentiles, or Thieves purſue, to profane the Sabbath, by the Preſervation of his Life, even as David, when Saul purſued to kill him, fled, and eſcaped. 2. That their own Canons allow'd the Laity to eat of the Shew Bread for the Preſervation of Life; for it is a ſmall Thing, ſay they, to hold, that it is lawful for us to eat of the Bread remov'd from the Table; it would be lawful for us, in the Extremity of Hunger, even to eat of the Bread, now ſanctified upon the Table, if there were no other. And indeed this Opinion, that it was lawful to violate the Sabbath for Preſervation of Life, ſeems plainly to have obtain'd, before the Tranſlation of the Septuagint, who render the Words in Exod. xii. 16. to this Purpoſe, Ye ſhall do no ſervile Work on it, but that which ſhall be done for the Safety of Life. Whitby's Annotations.

† The Shew-Bread (which in Hebrew is literally the Bread of Faces) was ſo called, not becauſe it was ſet upon the golden Table, which was in the Sanctuary, but becauſe it was plac'd before the Lord, i. e. not far from the Ark of the Covenant, which was the Symbol of his more immediate Preſence. Theſe Loaves, according to the Number of the Tribes, were twelve: They were made four-ſquare, cover'd over with Leaves of Gold, and were of a conſiderable Bigneſs, having about three Quarts of Flour in each. They were ſerv'd up hot every Sabbath-Day, and, at the ſame Time, the ſtale ones, which had been expos'd the whole preceding Week, were taken away, and allow'd to be eat by none, but the Prieſts, and that only, in the holy Place, which was the Tabernacle at firſt, and afterwards the Temple, Lev. xxiv. 5, &c. and the Reaſon of this Inſtitution ſeems to have been, to repreſent, in a more lively Manner, to the People, God's Government and Preſence among them; that, as the Tabernacle firſt, and then the Temple was his Palace and Place of Reſidence, ſo theſe weekly Services of Bread, Wine, and Salt, (ſay the Jews) were to denote his Habitation among them, as if he had been an earthly Prince, for whom ſuch Proviſions are made. Calmet's Dictionary under the Word, and Lamy's Introduction.

Not long after this, our Saviour left Jeruſalem, and return'd into Galilee, where on another Sabbath-Day, while he was preaching, there ſtood before him a Man, whoſe Right-Hand was ſhrunk, and wither'd; and, when the Scribes and Phariſees inſidiouſly watch'd him, whether he would cure him, or not, our Lord bad him ſtand up in the Midſt of the Aſſembly as an Object of publick Commiſeration, and, turning to theſe ſuperſtitious Obſervers of the Sabbath, put the Queſtion ‖ to them, whether they thought it lawful, on the Sabbath-Day, to do good, or ill, actually to ſave Life, or negligently to deſtroy it? And then, from their own Practice, in running to the Relief of any dumb Creature, on the Sabbath-Day, he fairly inferr'd, that, whatever their hypocritical Pretences might be, they themſelves eſteem'd it lawful to do Good on that Day; and ſo, looking about him with ſome Marks of Indignation for their ſtrange Perverſeneſs, he commanded the poor Man to ſtretch out his lame Hand, and that very Moment it became as ſound as the other.

‖ There are ſome, who pretend to infer, from the Paſſage of St Mark, Chap. ii. 27, that the Words in St Matthew, The Son of Man is Lord alſo of the Sabbath, Chap. xii. 8, are of the ſame Import with, The Sabbath was made for Man, ſo that the Son of Man is here put for all Men in general, and, conſequently, the Senſe of the Words muſt be, that every one is Lord of the Sabbath, to obſerve or diſpenſe with it, according to the Call or Exigency of his Affairs. But, beſides that the Phraſe, Son of Man, which is us'd no leſs than eighty-eight Times in the New Teſtament, is, in all other Places, ſet to denote our Bleſſed Lord, and in Dan. vii. 13, from whence it is originally taken, it is thought by all ancient Jews, as well as Chriſtians, to ſignify the Meſſiah only; 'tis plain, that theſe two Paſſages are diſtinct Propoſitions in St Mark, Chap. ii. 27, 28. and that they can relate to no other than our Saviour Chriſt, becauſe he tells the Phariſees, and therein means of himſelf, that, in that Place, there was one greater than the Temple, i. e. whoſe Prophetick Office was of more Conſequence to the World, than the Sacerdotal Adminiſtrations in the Temple, and ought therefore, leaſt of all, to be interrupted by a ſuperſtitious Obſervation of the Sabbath. The Sabbath was made for Man, muſt therefore ſignify, that it was firſt appointed for the Good and Benefit of Man; and; being ſo, it cannot reaſonably be ſuppos'd to oblige him to any Thing, ſo contrary to Humanity, as ſtarving, or debilitating his Nature; and therefore, as the Son of Man came not to deſtroy Mens Lives, but to ſave them, he muſt have Power, in ſuch Caſes as concern the Good and Welfare of Mankind, to diſpenſe with the ſtrict Reſt of the Sabbath, which the Law requir'd. Calmet's Commentary, and Hammond's and Whitby's Annotations.

(d) Mark ii. 27.

‖ This is not contrary to what St Matthew, Chap. xii. 10, tells us, viz. That they aſked him, becauſe both are true. They aſk'd him, Whether it was lawful to heal? And he, in Reply, ſays, I alſo will aſk you one Thing; Is it lawful, on the Sabbath Day, to do Good, or to do Evil? Luke vi. 9. We are not, however, to ſuppoſe, that, by doing Evil, our Saviour propounded to the Phariſees, Whether, on the Sabbath-Day, it was lawful to do That, which, on any other Day, is utterly unlawful; for then, without doubt, they would have had a ready Anſwer for him; but only, whether, according to the Inſtitution of the Sabbath, it was lawful to do Good, or not to do it, to ſave Life, or not to ſave it, when a Man had it equally in his Power. And the Reaſon, why our Saviour inſtances in ſaving a Life is, becauſe it was a Maxim then among the Jews, that, on the Sabbath-Day, all ſervile Work was prohibited, except where the Life of any Man or Beaſt was concerned; but the modern Jews are of a contrary Opinion, and, in Hatred to Chriſtians, (as Grotius thinks) have loaded the Obſervation of the Sabbath with ſuch trifling and ſuperſtitious Practices, as their Fore-fathers and ancient Doctors knew nothing of. Whitby's and Beauſobre's Annotations, and Calmet's Commentary.

* It was a Direction, which our Saviour gave to his Diſciples, when they perſecute you in this City, flee to another, Matth. x. 23. and a Rule, which himſelf put in Practice: For, when, by his Doctrine and Miracles, he could do no Good upon Men by Reaſon of the Hardneſs of their Hearts, Mark iii. 5. he uſually departed, and retir'd, that he might give Place to their Wrath, and ſecure himſelf from their Malice, Matth. xii. 15. and John viii. 59. When the Providence of God brings Tryals upon us, we may reaſonably hope, that his Mercy will be magnify'd in our Reſcue from them; but there is not the ſame Aſſurance due to thoſe Troubles, which our own Forwardneſs or Indiſcretion involve us in. God hath no where promis'd to work Miracles for our Deliverance, nor engag'd to ſave thoſe, who are not careful to ſave themſelves. He hath commanded us to take up our Croſs, when he lays it in our Way, but he hath not commanded, that we ſhould go out and ſeek it; nay, or that we ſhould meet it, when we can paſs by another Way, and honeſtly, and with a good Conſcience, eſcape from it. He hath promis'd to ſuccour them that are tempted, i. e. Such, as are purely paſſive in the Thing; but, when Men break their Ranks, and, without Orders from their Commander, will needs march up (as it were) to the Mouth of a loaded Cannon, by turning their own Tempters, this is not Courage, but Fool-hardineſs; and, whatever Expectations theſe Men may cheriſh of God's Aſſiſtance in ſuch Caſes, they are not the Effects of a vigorous Faith, and well-grounded Truſt, but of a blind and hot-headed Preſumption. Stanhope's Occaſional Sermons.

† Though this be no more, than a Greek Name deriv'd from the Hebrew Edom, yet it is not to be underſtood of the original Habitation of the Edomites, Mount Seir, but rather of that ſouthern Part of the Province of Judea, which, during the Captivity of the Jews at Babylon, being left deſtitute, or not ſufficiently inhabited by its Natives, ſeems to have been poſſeſs'd by the neighbouring Idumæans. Theſe Idumæans, when afterwards conquer'd by the Maccabees, choſe rather to embrace the Jewiſh Religion, than to quit the Habitations, they had taken Poſſeſſion of; and, though hereupon they were incorporated into the Body of the Jewiſh Nation, yet that Tract of Judea, which they inhabited, did not ſo ſoon loſe the Name of Idumæa deriv'd from them, but retain'd it, not only in our Saviour's Days, but for a conſiderable Time afterwards. Wells's Geography of the New Teſtament.

† Some have thought that the Words, ἐν τῇ προσευχῇ τȣ̃ Θεȣ̃, ſhould be render'd in an Houſe of Prayer of God, or, in a Synagogue dedicated to the Service of God; but then they will be concern'd to find out any Houſe of Prayer, which at this Time ſtood on a Mountain, or any Place, (except the Temple) which was called by that Name: Nor can we conceive, why our Lord ſhould go out into a Mountain to pray, if it were not for the Privacy, and Retirement of it, which he could not have had in any common Place of Divine Worſhip. Our Saviour, however, being about to ſend out his Twelve Apoſtles, thought that ſo great a Work, as This, could not be done, without offering up his ſolemn Addreſſes to God for their Succeſs; and, accordingly, having found out a Place of Retirement, he thither betook himſelf, and, as the Evangeliſts inform us, continu'd all Night in Prayer, leaving the Biſhops and Governors of his Church an Example, what they are to do in the great and momentous Affair of appointing Perſons to the Miniſtry of the Goſpel. Whitby's and Pool's Annotations.

† Theſe two Brothers our Saviour calls Boanerges, a Word compos'd of two Hebrew, or Syriack Words, but what have ſuffer'd ſome Alteration in their paſſing into the Greek Language. For, whether it be, that the Greek Tranſcriber has miſtaken them, or that this might be the corrupt Way of pronouncing them in Galilee, certain it is, that the Originals are Beni Rehem, denoting Sons of Thunder, or of a Tempeſt; a Name given them in Alluſion to the natural Heat and Zeal of their Temper, and that Vehemence and Efficacy, wherewith our Saviour foreſaw, that they would preach preach the Goſpel. Of the former of theſe they gave an early Inſtance, in their Deſire to call down Fire from Heaven to conſume the Samaritans, Luke ix. 54. and, in the Acts of the Apoſtles, we find, that Peter and John are the chief Actors and Speakers in the Defence and Propagation of the Goſpel, and that the Zeal of James and Peter ſeems to be the Reaſon, why the one was ſlain by Herod, and the other impriſoned, in order to the like Execution. Calmet's Commentary, and Beauſobre's and Whitby's Annotations.

† The Name, given here to this Apoſtle, is not his proper, but patronymical Name, and imports only the Son of Tholomew, or Tolmai: So that we are ſtill at a Loſs for his perſonal Name, unleſs we will admit of the Conjecture, that he was indeed no other, than Nathanael. To this Purpoſe, it is remarkable, 1ſt, That as no other Evangeliſt makes mention of Nathanael, but St John, ſo he never once makes mention of Bartholomew. 2dly, That, in the Catalogue of the Apoſtles, Philip and Bartholomew are always coupled together, and were, very probably, ſent out together to preach the Goſpel: And fit Companions they were, ſuppoſing Nathanael to be the Man, with whom, 'tis plain, that Philip had an Intimacy, and was the firſt Inſtrument of bringing him to Jeſus. 3dly, That, this Nathanael is, by St John, Chap. xxi. 2, nam'd in Company with ſeveral of the Apoſtles, upon our Saviour's ſhewing himſelf at the Sea of Tiberias, after his Reſurrection, which, the Evangeliſt tells us, was the third Time of his doing ſo, Ver. 14. and ſome Preſumption, that he was one of them. 4thly, That, at the two former Times, 'tis expreſsly ſaid, that he appear'd to the Eleven, John xx. 19, 26. And here, at the third Time of his Appearance, thoſe, that are nam'd with Nathanael, are all of that Number. From theſe Conſiderations 'tis more than probable, that Nathanael was one of the Apoſtles; which can only be accounted for, by ſuppoſing that St John calls the ſame Perſon by his proper Name, Nathanael, whom the other Evangeliſt calls by his patronymical, Bartholomew. Stanhope, on the Epiſtles and Goſpels, Vol. IV.

† Thomas, in Hebrew, or Syriack either, ſignifies a Twin, and ſo is the ſame with Didymus, that other Name, whereby this Apoſtle is ſometimes called.

† Some are of Opinion, that Simon is here called the Canaanite from Cana, a little Town in Galilee, the Place of his Birth and Habitation; but others rather think, ſince this Apoſtle is by St Luke, Chap. vi. 15, called Zelotes, the Κανανίτης and Ζηλωτὴς are perfectly the ſame, juſt as Cephas and Peter, Tabitha and Dorcas are. That there was a Faction among the Jews, a little before the Deſtruction of their City and Nation, who aſſum'd to themſelves the Title of Zealots, (out of an hypocritical Oſtentation of Holineſs, tho', at the ſame Time, in their Hearts and Practices, they were the lewdeſt of Men) we have given a ſufficient Account above, Page 1144. but whether that Faction was in Being in our Saviour's Time, or, whether to be of the Number of ſuch Zealots may not be an Injury and Reproach to this Apoſtle's Memory, is much to be doubted. Hammond's Annotations, and Calmet's Commentary.

† This Man's Sirname may be taken, either from the Place of his Birth, which was Cariath, in the Tribe of Iſſachar, whereof we have Mention in Joſh. xv. 25. and Amos ii. 2. or from the Syriack Word Secariat, denoting the Purſe or Wallet, which it was the Office of this Judas to carry; or from the Word Aſhara, or Iſcara, which ſignifies to ſtrangle; and therefore, a Name, which the Evangeliſts might give him after his Death: But all theſe Etymologies are no more than mere Conjectures. Hammond's and Beauſobre's Annotations, and Calmet's Commentary.

† The Wiſdom of Chriſt ſaw fit to admit Judas into the Number of his Diſciples, that, by him, the Counſel of God, in giving up his Son to Death, and the Predictions of the Prophets might be fulfilled, Acts i. 16. This very Perſon, however, is by our Lord ſent to preach the Goſpel, to cure Diſeaſes, and to caſt out Devils, who had himſelf a Devil, John vi. 70. thereby to teach us, that the Miſſion of a Perſon may be valid, tho' he be not ſanctify'd, and that, in Things belonging to the Miniſterial Office, we ſhould hearken even to ſuch Perſons, and obey them. Whitby's Annotations.

† The Word Ἀπόστολος ſignifies an Envoy, and was a Name given by the Jews to any Meſſenger in general, but more eſpecially to ſuch Perſons, as were ſent by the High-Prieſt, and Heads of the People, to collect the Tithes, and other Dues belonging to the Temple or Synagogue, or to carry their Orders and Mandates to the Cities and Provinces, when any Affairs relating to Religion were tranſacted; and to this Cuſtom St Paul ſeems to allude, where he ſtiles himſelf an Apoſtle, not of Man, neither by Man, but of Jeſus Chriſt, Gal. i. 1. Our Saviour indeed, as he was no Lover of Innovations, took the Word from among the Jews; but then he rais'd it to a much higher, and more honourable Signification; for himſelf declares, that he ſent out his Apoſtles, even as his Father ſent out him, John xx. 21. i. e. with a full Commiſſion to act in his Stead, even as he did in God's: And, accordingly, we may obſerve, that, as the Father gave Judgment to the Son, John v. 22. ſo, in Effect, the Son gives Judgment to the Apoſtles, Matth. xix. 28. and Luke xxii. 30. that, as the Father gave the Son Power to forgive Sins upon Earth, Matth. ix. 6. ſo the Son gives Power to the Apoſtles to remit Sins on Earth likewiſe, John xx. 23. that, as the Father gave the Son the Honour to ſit down with him on his Throne, ſo the Son gave the Apoſtles the Privilege to ſit with him on Thrones, Matth. xix. 28. and Luke xxii. 30. and that, as the Father gave the Son to be the Foundation or Corner-Stone of the Church, Matth. xxi. 42. ſo the Son gave the Apoſtles to be Foundations upon a Foundation; for ſo the Church is ſaid to be built upon the Foundation of the Apoſtles, Chriſt being the chief Corner-Stone, Eph. ii. 20. Hammond's Annotations.

Herein he pronounces divers Bleſſings, both Spiritual and Temporal, to ſuch, as the Generality of the World eſteem'd miſerable: To the Poor in Spirit, or Humble-minded; to the Kind and Merciful; to the pious Mourners; to the Peace-Makers; to the Meek and Patient; to the Pure in Heart; to ſuch, as hunger and thirſt after Righteouſneſs; and to ſuch, as are perſecuted upon the Account thereof. Herein he inſtructs the Apoſtles, more eſpecially, in their Duty; and, in ſeveral Compariſons, ſetting before them the high Station, wherein he had ſo lately plac'd them, and how much it would redound to their Honour, if they behav'd well, and to their Diſhonour, if otherwiſe; he recommends to them, above all other Things, Purity of Life and Converſation. Herein he expounds the true Meaning, and ſhews the juſt Extent of ſeveral moral Precepts, viz. The Laws againſt Murther, againſt Adultery, againſt Perjury; That concerning Retaliation, and That of loving our Neighbour; and reſcues them from the wretched Gloſſes, and Interpretations, which the Jews had put upon them. Herein he diſſuades us from all covetous Inclinations, and anxious Thoughts concerning the Things of this World, from a Conſciouſneſs of our being under the Providential Care of God; and, having laid down ſeveral other Precepts, and Inſtructions, he concludes the Whole with this Admonition, —— That whoever heard, believed, and practiſed the Things, contained in his Diſcourſes, would, in the Event, be like a wiſe Builder, who laid the Foundation of his Houſe upon a Rock, not to be affected by Wind or Weather; but that he, who heard and practiſed them not, would be like a Man, who built his Houſe upon the Sand, ſoon to be blown down by the Winds, and waſhed away by the Floods †.

† The Mountain, where our Lord deliver'd his Diſcourſe, is generally ſuppos'd to be Tabor; for, by comparing St Mark, Chap. iii. 13. with the other two Evangeliſts, Matthew, Chap. xiv. 23. and Luke, Chap. vi. 12, &c. we may perceive, that it was not far diſtant from ſome Part of the Sea of Tiberias, whither our Lord had retir'd very lately from the Phariſees, and about five or ſix Leagues from Capernaum, whither he return'd after his Deſcent from this Mount. But then the Queſtion is, whether this Sermon be the ſame with what we find recorded by St Luke, Chap. vi. 20? Now, in order to reſolve this, we may obſerve, 1ſt, That the Sermon in St Matthew was deliver'd before the Healing of the Leper, Chap. viii. 2. whereas St Luke, who promiſes to diſcourſe in Order of what Chriſt did, gives us firſt the Story of the Leper, Chap. v. 12. and then an Account of Chriſt's Sermon, Chap. vi. 20. 2dly, That the Sermon in St Matthew our Lord preach'd on the Mount, and called his Diſciples up to him, whereas St Luke informs us, that our Lord came down with his Diſciples from a Mount, and ſtood in the Plain, and from thence preach'd what he recorded, Ver. 20. And, 3dly, That St Luke omits the much greater Part of the Sermon, as it is recorded by St Matthew; mentions only four Beatitudes, whereas St Matthew ſpeaks of eight; and has added four Woes, Ver. 24, &c. whereof we find no Indications in St Matthew. Since the Sermons then are ſo very different in their Matter, as well as in the Circumſtances of Time and Place, 'tis reaſonable to ſuppoſe, that they are not the ſame, tho' conſidering, that, after both the Sermons, we find our Lord returning to Capernaum, and healing the Centurion's Servant, Matth. viii. 5. and Luke vii. 1. we may probably conjecture, that he ſpake the Sermon in St Matthew, whilſt he was ſitting on the Mount, to his Diſciples; but that, in St Luke, he afterwards ſpake, when he came down into the Plain, Chap. vi. 20, in the Audience of all the People, Chap. vii. 1. Whitby's Annotations.

† The Word, which we render Floods, is in the Greek ποταμοὶ, which, tho' it chiefly ſignifies Rivers, i. e. ſuch Streams, as ariſe from Springs, does frequently denote Land-Floods, or Torrents, which are occaſion'd by any tempeſtuous ſudden Rains; for ſo Euſtathius explains the Word, in his Notes upon this Paſſage in Homer, Iliad iv.

Ὡς δ' ὅτε χείμαῤῥοι ποταμοὶ κατ' ὄρεσφι ῥέοντες,
Ἐς, μισγάγκειαν συμβάλλετον ὄβριμον ὕδωρ
Κρουνῶν ἐκ μεγάλων, &c.

AT his Return to Capernaum, he cur'd, at a Diſtance, the favourite Servant of the Roman Centurion [†], who had made an ample Declaration of his Divine Power, and thereupon receiv'd from him as ample Commendation of his Faith; and, at his Arrival at the Gates of Naim [†], he reſtor'd to Life a Widow's only Son, as the People were carrying him out to his Funeral, to the great Joy and Comfort of his Parent, and the no leſs Wonder and Aſtoniſhment of the Spectators, who, upon this Occaſion, glorify'd God, and publickly declar'd, that (e) a mighty Prophet was ſprung up among them; and that God [†] had viſited his People.

His Anſwer to the Baptiſt's Diſciples, and Commendation of him.

UPON the Fame of this, and ſeveral other Miracles, which our Saviour did daily, John the Baptiſt, who was ſtill in Priſon, ſent two of his Diſciples to enquire of him, [†] whether he himſelf was the promis'd Meſſiah, or ſome other Perſon was to appear in that Character? As our Lord was, at that Time, working many Miracles [‖], curing the Deaf, the Blind, the

" of the Doctrine, which he preach'd; as one, who had Authority, in his own Name, to propound the Terms of Life " and Death;" becauſe it is not only contrary to the Nature of his Prophetick Office, but to his own frequent Declarations, that the Doctrine, which he taught, was not his own, but his, who ſent him; and that he ſpake, not of himſelf, or in his own Name, but as he had heard from his Father, and as he had commanded him to ſpeak, John vii. 16, 17, 18. viii. 28. xii. 49. xiv. 10. and, therefore, the truer Interpretation is, what Lightfoot and others give us, viz. That he ſpake as a Prophet, having Authority from God to deliver his Meſſage to them, and not as the Scribes, who pretended only to deliver the Traditions of their Forefathers, and to teach them no more, than what they had learned from Hillel, Shammai, Abtalion, &c. Whitby's Annotations.

[†] He was an Officer, commanding an hundred Men, much of the ſame Rank and Station of one of our Captains, and belong'd to the Iron Legion, (as it was called) which was uſually quarter'd in Judea. Howell's Hiſtory in the Notes.

[†] Naim, or Nain, ſo called for the Pleaſantneſs of its Situation, was a Town of Galilee, about two Leagues from Nazareth, and not ſo much from Mount Tabor, between which, and the City, ran the River Kiſon. From our Saviour's meeting the Funeral coming out at the Gates, we may learn, that it was a Cuſtom among the Jews to bury their Dead in the Day-Time, when the neareſt Friends and Relations follow'd the Corps, which was uſually carry'd in Proceſſion through the Streets and publick Places, to the Cœmiteries, which were generally at a conſiderable Diſtance from the City, becauſe they look'd upon their Graves, as Places full of Pollution; whereas we Chriſtians, in Hopes of a joyful Reſurrection, and upon Preſumption, that many of thoſe, whoſe Bodies are repoſited in the Earth, are in a State of Felicity in Heaven, look upon theſe Places with great Reſpect and Veneration, and, accordingly, have our Tombs erected always very near, and, ſometimes, within the Body of our Churches. Whitby's Table of Places, and Calmet's Commentary on Luke vii. 12.

(e) Luke vii. 16.

[†] The People of Naim do, in theſe Words, acknowledge Jeſus to be the Meſſiah, or that great Prophet, whom Moſes had promis'd to the Jews: The Lord thy God will raiſe up unto thee a Prophet, from the Midſt of thee, of thy Brethren, like unto me, unto him ſhall ye hearken, Deut. xviii. 15. for they deſcribe this Prophet in the very ſame Terms, that Zacharias, the Father of John the Baptiſt, makes uſe of to denote the Meſſiah; The Lord hath viſited his People, Luke i. 68. Calmet's Commentary.

[†] The Words in the Text are, Art thou he, that ſhould come, or rather, he that is coming? For the Prophecies of the Meſſiah in the Old Teſtament were ſo plain, and yet his Perſon, or Name, ſo unknown to the Jews, that they were wont to expreſs it by ſome Circumlocution, and more eſpecially by this of ὁ ἐρχόμενος, he that cometh, for ſo he is term'd, Matth. iii. 11. xxi. 9. Luke vii. 20. xix. 38. John xii. 13. and Heb. x. 37, &c. and this Name they gather'd from Habakkuk, where he is called, he that ſhall come, Chap. ii. 3. and from Daniel, where he is ſtiled, he that cometh with the Clouds of Heaven, Chap. vii. 13. Hammond's and Whitby's Annotations.

[‖] If it be aſk'd, How the Seeing of theſe Things done by our Saviour could be a ſufficient Argument to John's Diſciples, that he was, in Truth, the Meſſiah? The Reply is, that the Performance of theſe Things was exactly anſwering the Character, which the Prophet had given of the Meſſiah, viz. That, at the Coming of God to ſave them, the Eyes of the Blind ſhould be opened, and the Ears of the Deaf unſtopped; that the Lame ſhould leap as an Hart, and the Tongue of the Dumb ſhould ſing, Iſaiah xxxv. 4, &c. And, therefore, inſtead of giving them a direct Anſwer, which might be liable to the old Objection of his bearing Record of himſelf, John viii. 13. our Saviour refers them to the Miracles, they ſaw him do; Miracles of the ſame Kind that were predicted of the Meſſiah; and then leaves it to their own Maſter to draw the Concluſions from thence; which was a Method of Conviction more ſhort and ſtrong, and withal more agreeable to our Saviour's Modeſty and great Humility, than any long Detail of Arguments would have prov'd. Pool's Annotations, and Calmet's Commentary.

And, having thus diſmiſs'd them, he began to diſcourſe to the People concerning John, giving a large Encomium of the Auſterity and Holineſs of his Perſon, † the Greatneſs of his Function, and Divinity of his Commiſſion; and hence taking occaſion to blame the Perverſeneſs of the Age, in rejecting both his and the Baptiſt's Teſtimony, (tho' the Baptiſt was a Man of a mortify'd Deportment, and he a Perſon of a free and affable Behaviour, ſo that † nothing would pleaſe them) he proceeded to upbraid the ſeveral Cities, where moſt of his Miracles had been wrought, viz. Chorazin, Bethſaida, and, more eſpecially, Capernaum, with their Obſtinacy and Impenitence; and, having declar'd, that the Myſteries of the Goſpel-Revelation were better adapted to the Humble and Modeſt, than to the Proud and Worldly-Wiſe, he concludes his Diſcourſe, with an Exhortation to ſuch, as were thus qualify'd to be his (f) Diſciples; Come unto me †, all ye, that labour, and are heavy laden, and I will give you Reſt, &c.

† Maimonides obſerves, that, tho' the Jews generally reckon eleven Degrees of Prophecy, yet two of theſe were ſomething more ſublime and excellent, than ordinary Prophecy. The one of theſe was what they called the Gradus Moſaicus, when the Prophet had a familiar Converſe with God upon all Occaſions; and the other, when he had his Revelations, not from a Dream or Extaſy, but an immediate Dictate of the Holy Ghoſt. Of this Sort was John the Baptiſt, who was plainly told by the Father, Matth. iii. 17. John xiii. 3. and as plainly proclaim'd it to others, that Jeſus was the Lamb of God. Other Prophets ſpoke of the Coming of Chriſt, but then they did it in a dark and obſcure Manner. They ſaw him only at a Diſtance, in a Dream, or in a Viſion of the Night, and couch'd their Predictions under a Veil of enigmatical Phraſes; but the Baptiſt ſpake of him openly, and diſtinctly. He knew him; he was converſant with him; he pointed him out to the People; had, in ſhort, the Honour of baptizing him, and hearing the Voice from Heaven teſtifying of him, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleaſed. And, upon theſe Accounts, we find him called a great and illuſtrious Perſon, Luke i. 15. one filled with the Holy Ghoſt, and, by Way of Excellence, the Prophet of the Moſt High, Ver. 76. Hammond's Annotations, and Calmet's Commentary.

† The Words of our Saviour, to illuſtrate this, are theſe, —— We have piped unto you, and ye have not danced; we have mourned unto you, and ye have not lamented, Matth. xi. 17. which ſeem to be a Proverb founded upon a Cuſtom among the Jewiſh Children to imitate what they ſaw done by others upon greater Occaſions, and particularly the Cuſtom in Feſtivities, or Funerals; when, in the former, as ſoon as the Muſician ſtruck up a Tune, the Company began to dance to his Pipe; and, in the latter, as ſoon as ſome old Women had begun the mournful Song, the reſt follow'd, lamenting, and beating their Breaſts. Theſe the Children were us'd to act, and perſonate in the Streets at Play; and, when one had begun the Muſician's Part, and another the old Woman's Part, and the reſt did not follow them in theirs, this gave Occaſion to the proverbial Saying, which our Saviour applies to the preſent Purpoſe, in this Senſe: "I and John have both of us invited you to enter into the Kingdom of Heaven, or to turn to God by Re-" pentance. John, by the Auſterity of his Life, and I, by my Affability and Courteſy, have endeavour'd to re-" commend ourſelves, but all to no Purpoſe. You will neither mourn with him, nor laugh with me; but, for that " very Reaſon, cenſure and revile our different Behaviour, accounting him, for his reſerv'd Temper, no better than a melancholick Kind of Mad-man; and me, for my open and free Converſation, a mere Glutton and Wine-bibber." Hammond's Annotations, and Calmet's Commentary.

(f) Matth. xi. 28.

† To come unto Chriſt, in the Phraſe of the New Teſtament, is to believe in him, and to become one of his Diſciples; and this Invitation our Saviour gives to all Mankind in general, and to the Jews in particular. To all Mankind, foraſmuch as all (without the Knowledge of Chriſt) are heavy laden with the Burthen of their Sins, and the Calamities incident to Life; are ſurrounded with a Cloud of Ignorance, and held in Bondage through the Fear of Death: And, to the Jews in particular, foraſmuch as they, under their Diſpenſation, were oppreſs'd with a Load of Ceremonies, a Yoke, which neither they, nor their Fathers, were able to bear, Acts xv. 10. beſides the additional Weight, which the Phariſees laid upon them, by their Traditions, heavy Burthens, and grievous to be borne, Matth. xxiii. 4. Whitby's Annotations, and Calmet's Commentary.

† Is it not a little ſtrange, that any Interpreters ſhould ever imagine, that this is the ſame Story with what we find related in Matth. xxvi. Mark xiv. and John xii. ſince the Hiſtories agree ſcarce in any Thing, unleſs it be in bringing the Alabaſter Box of Ointment, and Anointing our Saviour's Feet, which, in theſe Countries, eſpecially at great Entertainments, was no uncommon Thing? But, now, the Anointing, in the other Evangeliſts, was done at Bethany, within two Miles of Jeruſalem; this, in St Luke, in Galilee; that, in the Houſe of one Simon the Leper; this, in the Houſe Incident ſomewhat remarkable: For a certain Woman, who, not long before †, had been noted for a lewd Liver, came into the Houſe, and †, throwing herſelf at the Feet of Jeſus, waſh'd them with the Tears, which flow'd from her Eyes, and then, having wip'd them with her Hair, ſhe kiſs'd them, and anointed them with very precious Ointment †.

SIMON, who ſtill retain'd ſomething of the cenſorious Spirit of his Sect, ſeeing this Woman thus buſy in expreſſing her Love and Veneration for Jeſus, began to think within himſelf, that † he could not poſſibly be a Prophet; otherwiſe, he would have known the Woman to be infamous, and, conſequently, not ſuffer'd her to touch him: But our Saviour, who well

Houſe of one Simon a Phariſee; that, but a little before our Saviour's Paſſion; this, a conſiderable Time before it. At that, Judas was offended for the Waſte of the Ointment; at this, Simon for the Woman's touching our Saviour: Upon that Occaſion our Lord vindicates the Woman from one Head of Argument, and, upon this, from another. So that all Circumſtances make it plain, that theſe were different Actions, done by different Perſons, and at different Times. Pool's Annotations.

† Who this Woman was, the Goſpel no where tells us. We read indeed of three Perſons, who, by ſeveral Evangeliſts, are ſaid to have anointed our Lord's Head and Feet, viz. Mary Magdalene, Mary the Siſter of Lazarus, and this other Woman, whom St Luke calls a Sinner: And ſome Commentators makes theſe three to be one and the ſame Perſon. It is to be obſerv'd, however, that the Siſter of Lazarus is all along repreſented as a Perſon of great Sobriety and Virtue, who always liv'd at Bethany, was none of our Lord's Attendants, nor ever came into Galilee; and, conſequently, was a Woman diſtinct from Mary Magdalene, who was of his Retinue, Luke viii. 2; and from this other Woman, who anointed his Feet in Simon's Houſe: But, whether this Mary Magdalene, and this Woman, here called a Sinner, might not be the ſame Perſon, is not ſo eaſy to determine. The Characteriſtick of Magdalene is, that ſhe was the Perſon, out of whom our Lord had caſt ſeven Devils; but then, if the Ejection of theſe Devils be underſtood (as ſome will have it) in an allegorical Senſe, the Words will well enough ſuit with the Sinner in St Luke; or, ſuppoſe they were real Devils, the Ejection of them might be ſome Time before her coming into Simon's Houſe, and, (as our Saviour's Vindication of her ſeems to imply) her Reformation conſequent thereupon, tho' Simon knew nothing of it. For theſe Reaſons ſome have imagin'd, that the Sinner in St Luke and Mary Magdalene were both the ſame Perſon; and, that ſhe was called Magdalene, from the Town and Caſtle of Magdal, where her Huſband, who had been a Man of great Diſtinction, but then dead, had lately his Habitation. It muſt not be diſſembled however, that the moſt general and prevailing Opinion is, that theſe were two different and diſtinct Women. Calmet's Diſſert. ſur les trois Maries, and Hammond's Annotations.

† The Manner of the Eaſtern People was to lie upon a Kind of Bed, or Couch, while they were at Meat; to put off their Sandals, before they lay down; and to have their Servants and Domeſticks ſtand behind at their Feet; ſo that this Woman wanted not an Opportunity to expreſs her Devotion to our Lord, while he was in this Poſture. Beauſobre's Annotations.

† That it was a cuſtomary Thing among the Ancients, eſpecially at great Entertainments, to uſe Ointments, and coſtly Perfumes, appears from ſeveral Authorities. The Pſalmiſt plainly informs us, that this was the Cuſtom of the Jews, when, in Acknowledgment of God's great Bounty to him, he declares, Thou haſt prepared a Table for me; thou haſt anointed my Head with Oil, and my Cup ſhall be full, Pſal. xxiii. 5. The Scholiaſt upon Ariſtophanes acquaints us with the ſame Cuſtom among the Greeks, when he makes it a Rule, that they, who invite to an Entertainment, ſhould bring forth to their Gueſts Crowns and Ointments, ςεφάνυς ϗ μύρα παρετίθεσαν. And that, among the Romans, the like Uſage prevailed, is evident from that ſharp, but jocular Epigram in Martial:

> Unguentum fateor bonum dediſti
> Convivis here, ſed nihil ſcidiſti.
> Res falſa eſt, bene olere, & eſurire.
> Qui non cœnat, & ungitur, Fabulle,
> Hic verò mihi mortuus videtur. Lib. iii.

The general Cuſtom indeed, upon theſe Occaſions, was, to anoint the Head, and very ſeldom the Feet: But, beſides that the latter was a Token of more Humility, and no leſs Eſteem in this Woman, ſhe could not perhaps have an Opportunity of coming at our Saviour's Head, without giving ſome Diſturbance to the Company. Hammond's Annotations.

† Tho' the Jewiſh Religion permitted Harlots of their own Nation to enjoy all the Privileges of other Women, except that their Oblations were rejected as impure, yet the Phariſees, who pretended to a greater Degree of Sanctity than others, would not admit them to civil Uſage, or the common Benefits of Society, and thought Religion itſelf and the Honour of every Prophet concern'd in this Preciſeneſs. This was the Reaſon of Simon's making this Objection within himſelf: But, therein, he draws three falſe Concluſions, 1ſt, That, had Jeſus been a Prophet, he muſt have known what the Woman was; as if Prophets knew every Thing, and were able to look into the Secrets of the Heart. 2dly, That, as this Woman was a Sinner, our Saviour ſhould not have ſuffer'd her to touch him; as if the external Touch of a Perſon, engag'd in any vicious Courſe, could communicate Pollution to one, that was innocent. And, 3dly, That this Woman, whom he knew to be a Sinner ſome Time before, was ſtill in the ſame Condition; as if it were not in the Power of God at any Time to touch the Heart, and, in a Moment, to inſpire ſincere Repentance. Calmet's Commentary.

well underſtood Simon's Thoughts, propos'd to him a Parable of a certain Creditor, who had two Debtors, one of which ow'd him ten Times as much as the other, but, becauſe both of them were Inſolvent, he frankly forgave them both; and then, gaining from him a Confeſſion, that the Debtor, to whom the larger Sum was forgiven, would, in Gratitude, be bound to love the Creditor moſt, he turn'd to the Woman, and (by Way of Application) not only apologiz'd both for her Behaviour and his own, but reproach'd his Hoſt likewiſe, for having omitted ſome Inſtances of Reſpect and Civility, which this contemptible Woman (as he eſteem'd her) had abundantly ſupply'd. And therefore, in Return for ſuch uncommon Kindneſs, he gave her a full Pardon, and Abſolution of her Sins, which ſome in the Company ſeem'd to reſent, as an Invaſion of the Divine Prerogative; but that gave him no Manner of Uneaſineſs.

Luke viii. 1. His curing a Demoniack at Capernaum, whereupon the Phariſees blaſpheme, and he ſharply reproves them.

Upon his leaving Naim, he made a Progreſs, for ſome Months, round other Parts of Galilee, accompany'd with his Apoſtles, and ſeveral devout Women, whom he had cur'd of ſundry Diſeaſes, and who, in Gratitude, attended his Perſon, and, out of their own Subſtance, adminiſter'd † to his Neceſſities: Till returning, at length, to his own City Capernaum, ſuch Multitudes of People, upon the Rumour of his being come again, reſorted to him, that neither he, nor his Diſciples could find Time to eat. But his Meat was to do the Will of God, by healing the Sick, and relieving the Oppreſs'd; and therefore, as ſoon as a poor Demoniac, both blind and dumb, was brought before him, he immediately reſtor'd him both to his Speech and Eye-Sight, inſomuch, that all, who ſaw it, were greatly aſtoniſh'd, and, with a general Voice, declar'd that the Perſon, who did ſuch wonderful Works, could be no other, than the promis'd Meſſiah.

Matth. xii. 22.

Matth. xii. Mark iii. 22. Luke xi. 15.

The Phariſees however, and Doctors of the Law, who came from Jeruſalem, gave another Turn to this Miracle. They aſcrib'd it to the Power of the Devil †, even to Beelzebub †, the Chief of the Devils;

† It was cuſtomary, ſays St Jerom, on Matth. xxvii. 55. among the Jews, for Women, and eſpecially for Widows, to miniſter Neceſſaries to their Teachers; and this, without any Scandal or Imputation upon their Honour. Our Saviour lays it down as a general Rule, that the Labourer is worthy of his Hire, Luke x. 7. and the Apoſtle accounts it no more than Juſtice, that they, who ſow to others ſpiritual Things, ſhould be allow'd to reap their carnal, 1 Cor. ix. 11. Of what Condition or Quality theſe Women were, that attended our Lord, we are not told: They might be Virgins, Widows, or Wives, who had an Allowance for themſelves from their Huſbands: However, it could be no Injuſtice done their Families, to give unto him, who was Lord of all, that they and their Huſbands poſſeſs'd; and who, tho' he was rich, yet, for our Sakes, became poor, that we, through his Poverty, might be rich, 2 Cor. viii. 9. Whitby's and Pool's Annotations.

† That, which made the Phariſees thus calumniate our Saviour's Miracles, was, their finding the People induc'd by them to believe, that he was the Son of David, Matth. xii. 23. which was but another Word for the Meſſiah, the King of the Jews. For, tho' they might have ſome Apprehenſions, that, if this Belief obtain'd, it might poſſibly bring the Power of the Romans upon them, John xi. 48. yet, their chief Fear was, that the Greatneſs of his Miracles and Excellence of his Doctrine would put an End to their Credit, and Authority among the People, ſince they were conſcious to themſelves, that they could not vye with him in either. Whitby's Annotations.

† By ſeveral Paſſages in the Goſpel it ſeems evident, that the Jews, at this Time, had a Notion of a Kind of Empire, and Subordination among the infernal Powers, and that the Prince of this Empire was called Beelzebub. Beelzebub ſignifies properly God of Flies; but, why a Name of ſo mean an Import ſhould denote the Head of the Apoſtate Angels, it is not ſo eaſy a Matter to determine, unleſs we will admit of this Conjecture, viz. That, as the People of Ekron had an Idol, which they ſtiled Beelſamen, i. e. the God of Heaven, by other Nations called Jupiter Olympius; the Jews, who us'd to give Nick-Names, or Names of Contempt, to all falſe Gods, called it ſometimes Beelzebub, or the God-Fly, becauſe theſe Heathens worſhipp'd it under the Figure of that Inſect; and ſometimes Beelzebul, or the God of Ordure, becauſe ſome Sort of Flies delight to feed on Excrements. However this be, 'tis certain, that the Apoſtles, in ſeveral Places of their Writings, do ſeem to inſinuate, that, among the Apoſtate Spirits, there was one ſuperior to the reſt, whom therefore they call the Prince of Darkneſs, Luke xxii. 53. the Prince of this World, John xii. 31. and the Prince of the Power of the Air, Eph. ii. 2. who, in the Days of Tobit, went under the Name of Aſmodeus, Chap. iii. 8. and is now by the Jews generally called Sammael, and by the Chriſtians, Lucifer. Beauſobre's Annotations, and Calmet's Commentary.

Devils; and therefore † our "Bleſſed Saviour, by the Compariſon of a Kingdom, or Houſe divided againſt itſelf, (which is the readieſt Way to bring it to Deſolation) ſhews the Abſurdity of their Allegations, ſince, by that Means, the Devil would take the moſt effectual Courſe to deſtroy his own Empire. Nay, he argues from their own Pretenſions of having certain allow'd Exorciſts † among them, that evil Spirits might be caſt out by the Finger of God; that, when they were apparently ſo, 'twas very manifeſt, that the Kingdom of God, or the Meſſiah, was come among them; that obſtinately to reſiſt the Evidence of ſuch Miracles, or to aſcribe them to a Diabolical Power, was that Sin againſt the Holy Ghoſt, which is of a Nature unpardonable; and that, ſince they had been ſo impious, as to blaſpheme the Holy Spirit, by which he wrought them, nothing leſs could be expected, than that the Devils, ejected by him, finding no where among the Heathens ſuch deſirable Habitations of Reſt and Contentment, as among them, would endeavour to return, with ſeveral others worſe than themſelves, and, by their prodigious Wickedneſs and obſtinate Infidelity finding them more prepar'd, than ever, to receive them, would there take up their ſettled Abode; and having made them more incredulous and obdurate, more impure and wicked, more hypocritical and blaſphemous, than they were before, would bring upon them too a more lamentable Deſtruction."

Matth. xii. 38. Luke xi. 29. Reproves the Scribes and Phariſees for demanding a Sign.

All this however hinder'd not the Scribes and Phariſees from demanding of our Saviour ſome new Sign or Miracle in Evidence of his Miſſion; but, as he had given them a ſufficient Number of theſe already, he only referr'd them to one, that would not come to paſs till after his Death, namely, that of Jonas, whoſe Deliverance from the Whale's ‡ Belly, after three Days Confinement, was an eminent Type of his Reſurrection, after as long a Continuance ‖ of his Body in the Bowels of the Earth: And thence he took occaſion to

† The Argument, which our Saviour employs againſt the Jews upon this Occaſion, is, what we call ad hominem. He ſuppoſes, as they did, that among evil Spirits there was a Form of Government, which was to laſt unto the End of the World, and in it a certain Subordination, which made it ſubſiſt, and, from this Principle, he argues —— "That it was impoſſible, that an Empire, divided againſt itſelf, ſhould laſt long; incongruous to think, that a Prince, who knew his own Intereſt, would ſend Part of his Forces to engage his own Generals, and compel them to ſurrender to the Enemy, what they had lately taken from them; and therefore a Thing utterly incredible, that the Prince of the Devils ſhould give Orders to other inferior Devils, to quit the Bodies, which they had taken Poſſeſſion of, and, conſequently, that he ſhould expel any in the Name, or by the Authority of Beelzebub." Calmet's Commentary.

† That it was cuſtomary among the Jews to caſt out Devils by the Invocation of the Name of the Moſt High, we may learn from Juſtin Martyr, who, in his Dialogue with Trypho, tells him, that if any Jew exorcis'd a Devil, in the Name of the God of Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, perhaps he would obey him; from what Irenæus tells us, viz. That, by the Invocation of the Name of God, even before the Advent of our Lord, Men were ſav'd from evil Spirits, and all Kind of Demons; and from what Origen (cont. Celſ.) affirms, viz. That the Name of the God of Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, being us'd by the Jews, in the Incantation of Devils, did great Miracles: And, if this was a common Practice among the Jews, then will the Force of our Saviour's Argument be this, —— "You make no Doubt, but that your Exorciſts, who uſe the Name of God, do eject Devils by Virtue of that Name; and, how partial is it then in you to paſs an unjuſt Cenſure upon me, in whom you ſee far greater Evidences of the Finger of God, in my caſting out all Manner of evil Spirits, and healing all Kinds of Diſeaſes? Whitby's Annotations.

‡ The Word, in the Original, ſignifies not a Whale, but any large Fiſh; and ſome Naturaliſts are of Opinion, that it was not a Whale, whoſe Gullet is too narrow for that Purpoſe, but rather, what the Greeks calls the Lamia, or Dog-Fiſh, (as we ſhew'd elſewhere) whoſe Throat is more capacious, that ſwallow'd up Jonah. Vid. Page 887.

‖ But how can our Saviour be ſaid to have continu'd as long in the Grave, as Jonah did in the Whale's Belly, when there were no more than two Nights, and one whole Day, between his Death and his Reſurrection? Now, for a Reſolution of this, we muſt obſerve, 1ſt, That the Hebrews began their Computation of a natural Day from the Evening, or Night preceding; ſo that, from one Sun-ſet to another Sun-ſet, they reckon'd a compleat Day, even as Moſes does, when he ſays, The Evening and the Morning were the firſt Day, Gen. i. 5. 2dly, That it is a common Thing with them, as well as other Nations, to put Part of a Day for the whole; ſo that whatever is done in any Part of the Day, is properly enough ſaid to be done on that Day: And 3dly, That they uſually reckon That to be done in ſo many Days, or ſo many Days and Nights, which begins in any Part of the firſt, and ends in any Part of the laſt Day. Now, allowing this Manner of Computation, and reckoning that the firſt Day began on Thurſday, at Sun-ſet, and ended upon Friday, at Sun-ſet; ſince our Saviour dy'd on Friday, about three in the Afternoon, by putting a Part for the whole, here we have one Day. Saturday is allow'd on all Hands to be another; and, ſince the third Day began on Saturday at Sun-ſet, and our Saviour roſe on the Morning following, that Part of the Day, being likewiſe put for the whole, is fairly computed for the Third The Hebrew Child, according to Law, was to be circumcis'd the eighth Day, but then the Day of its Birth, and of its Circumciſion, were both counted; and, in like Manner, if we reckon the Day, on which Chriſt died, for one, and that, on which he roſe, for another, including withal the Night belonging to the former, we may properly enough ſay, that, in Imitation of the Prophet Jonah, he was three Days and three Nights in the Heart of the Earth. Whitby's and Hammond's Annotations, and Biſhop Kidder's Demonſtration, lib. i. c. 8.

† Since God had promis'd Solomon, that, as there was none like him before him, ſo, after him, none ſhould ariſe like him for Wiſdom, 1 Kings iii. 12. our Saviour's declaring, that in this Reſpect he was greater than Solomon, muſt be plainly avowing himſelf to be more than Man. Whitby's Annotations.

† The Words in the Text are, His Mother and his Brethren, Matth. xii. 46. but, as the Word Brethren (according to the Language of the Jews, Gen. xxix. 12. Levit. x. 4.) is of great Latitude, theſe Brothers are ſuppos'd to be either Joſeph's Sons by a former Wife, and ſo our Saviour's Brothers-in-Law, or the Children of Mary, the Wife of Cleophas, and ſo his Couſin-germans. There is, indeed, a Tradition in the Church, that, before his eſpouſing the Virgin Mary, Joſeph had another Wife, whoſe Name was Iſcha, by whom he had ſix Children, four Sons, James, Joſeph, Simon, and Jude, and two Daughters, whoſe Names, ſome ſay, were Eſther, and Thamar, others, Mary, and Salome. But whoever compares Matth. xiii. 55.—xxvii. 56. Mark xv. 40. and John xix. 25. together, will find, that the four Perſons, there ſaid to be our Saviour's Brothers, were the Sons of Mary, the Wife of Cleophas, (or Alpheus, for the Name is all one) and Siſter to the Bleſſed Virgin, and ſo theſe Brothers of his (as we ſaid) were no more, than his Couſin-germans. Others, however, ſtrenuouſly maintain the former Opinion, viz. That Mary, the Mother of Jeſus, was their Mother, i. e. their Step-Mother, and they, conſequently, his Brothers-in-Law; and that, 1ſt, Becauſe this Opinion retains the proper Signification of the Word Brothers, in which the Jews always ſeem to uſe it, when they ſpeak of our Lord's Brothers and Siſters; and, 2dly, Becauſe it agrees with the Senſe of Antiquity, which, ever before St Jerom's Time, (ſays the learned Pearſon) look'd upon them, as the Brothers of our Lord, who liv'd with his Mother, and are therefore ſo frequently found together, Matth. xii. 46. John. ii. 12. Calmet's Commentary, and Beauſobre's and Whitby's Annotations.

† We have another Speech of our Saviour's, much of the ſame Import with this. For, when a certain Woman in the Company, upon hearing his excellent Doctrine, broke out into this Exclamation, Bleſſed is the Womb, that bare thee, and the Paps, which thou haſt ſucked! his Reply is, Yea, rather bleſſed are they, that hear the Word of God, and keep it, Luke xi. 27, 28. For, whoſoever ſhall do the Will of my Father, who is in Heaven, the ſame is my Brother, and Siſter, and Mother, Matth. xii. 50. which Texts do not derogate any Thing from the Honour, truly due to the Bleſſed Virgin, as the Mother of the Meſſiah; but only ſhew the Folly of ſome, who exalt her above Chriſt, whom, conſider'd only as his Mother, Chriſt himſelf ſeems here to ſet beneath every true Believer; tho', conſider'd as a Believer likewiſe, ſhe has a juſt Title to Pre-eminence, and 'tis, by that, ſhe is infinitely more happy, than if ſhe had only been his Mother according to the Fleſh. The ſame Day he went out of the Houſe, where he commonly abode, and, for the greater Conveniency of teaching the People, repair'd to the Sea-Shore, where, being follow'd by the ſame Multitudes, to avoid the Throng, he went on board a Veſſel, and from thence taught them in Parables (an uſual Way of Inſtruction among the Jews, but what he had not practis'd before) thereby to engage the Attention and accommodate himſelf to the Capacity of thoſe that heard him. By the Parable of the Sower, he repreſented the different Succeſſes of the Goſpel, according to the different Diſpoſitions of its Hearers; by the Tares growing among the good Seed, the Mixture of the Wicked and Godly under the ſame Profeſſion of Chriſtianity; by the Grain of Muſtard-Seed, and the little Piece of Leaven, the wonderful Increaſe and Propagation of the Goſpel from ſmall Beginnings; by the Treaſure in the Field, and the Pearl of great Price, the ineſtimable Benefits, that would accrue to the true Profeſſors of Religion; but that the Profeſſion of it would include a mixt Multitude, and be therefore like a Net, caſt into the Sea, which incloſes Fiſhes of all Kinds, ſome good, and ſome bad, the Good to be preſerv'd, but the Bad caſt away. This is the Explication, which our Lord gave his Diſciples of theſe ſeveral Parables; and when, by their Anſwer, he perceiv'd that they underſtood them all, he concluded his Diſcourſe with one Similitude more, viz. That (g) every Goſpel-Teacher ought to reſemble a well furniſhed Houſe-Keeper †, who brings all Things out of his Repoſitory, both old and new, according to the Occaſions of his Gueſts.

(g) Matth. xiii. 52.

† And, what this Houſe-keeper was in his own Family, that ſhould every Miniſter of the Goſpel be in the Church of Chriſt. He ſhould be thoroughly inſtructed in the Word of God, and capable of amaſſing a plentiful Proviſion of all Knowledge, both ſacred and profane. To bring out of his Treaſure, or Store-Houſe, Things new and old, was a Kind of proverbial Saying among the Hebrews, and denoted a Man's giving a plentiful or liberal Entertainment to his Friends, and ſuch as came about him. And therefore, as the Houſe-holder, if a Man of Subſtance and Sufficiency, of a large Stock, and as large a Mind, will entertain his Friends and Gueſts with Plenty, and Variety of Proviſions, anſwerable to the Difference of Mens Palates, as well as to the Difference of the Seaſons; ſo our Goſpel-Scribe, or Teacher, in the Entertainment of his ſpiritual Gueſts, is not always to ſet before them, only the main Subſtantials of Religion, whether for Belief or Practice, but, as the Matter ſhall require, to add alſo Illuſtration to the one, and Enforcement to the other, ſometimes perſuading, ſometimes terrifying; and, accordingly, addreſſing himſelf to the Afflicted and Deſponding with Goſpel-Lenitives, and, to the Hardy and Obſtinate, with Legal Corroſives; and, ſince the Reliſh of all is not the ſame, he is to apply to the Vulgar, with plain familiar Similitudes, and to the Learned, with greater Choice of Language and Cloſeneſs of Argument, and ſo ſuit his Diſcourſes to the various Circumſtances, Tempers, and Apprehenſions of his Hearers. Calmet's Commentary, and South's Sermons, Vol. IV.

† What might poſſibly be the Motive of this Scribe's offering to attend our Saviour, the Conjectures of Commentators have been different. Some think, that he did it with a ſincere Deſire to become his Diſciple; others, with a Deſign to turn Spy upon him; ſome, out of a Spirit of Vanity, to diſtinguiſh himſelf, by being a Retainer to a Maſter, in ſo great Reputation among the People; and others, out of a Principle of Self-intereſt, that he might attain ſome Poſt of Honour and Advantage, upon our Lord's Advancement to his Kingdom. This, indeed, ſeems to be the moſt probable Ground of his Reſolution; and, accordingly, the Deſign of our Saviour's Anſwer is, to diſcourage him from being his Diſciple upon ſuch ſecular Views, the Foxes have Holes, and the Birds of the Air have Neſts, but the Son of Man hath not where to lay his own Head, Matth. viii. 20. And therefore, much leſs any Accommodation, or Proſpect of Preferment, for his Followers. Calmet's Commentary, and Whitby's Annotations.

ſelf to Jeſus, and that his Father was not actually dead, but only grown ſo very old, that he could not live long; and therefore the Purport of his Addreſs to Chriſt is, "That, for the ſmall Remainder of his Father's Life, he might "be permitted to live with him, but that, after he had paid his laſt Offices to him, he would not fail to return "again, and devote himſelf intirely to his Service:" But others underſtand the Words in a literal Senſe. Calmet's Commentary.

† The Words in the Text are, —— Let the Dead bury the Dead, Mat. viii. 22. which is a Form of Speech common in all Sorts of Authors, when in the ſame Place they uſe the ſame Words twice, tho' very frequently in different Senſes. Thus the Pſalmiſt, ſpeaking of God, ſays, with the froward thou ſhalt ſhew thyſelf froward, Pſal. xviii. 26. even as Moſes introduces God ſpeaking of himſelf, If ye walk contrary to me, I will alſo walk contrary to you, Lev. xxvi. 23, 24. where the Words forward and contrary, as they relate to God, denote the Puniſhments, which he intended to bring upon the Obſtinate, and are the rather us'd, becauſe the ſame Words went before. And, in like Manner, Let the Dead bury their Dead, but follow thou me, may ſignify, let others bury the Dead; thou haſt Work of more Conſequence to do. It muſt not be diſſembled however, that, by the Dead, both ſacred and profane Authors do frequently mean, not only thoſe, who, in a natural Senſe, are dead, but thoſe likewiſe, who in a ſpiritual Senſe are ſo, by being alienated from the Life of God, and dead in Treſpaſſes and Sins. Thus Clemens of Alexandria tells us, that the Philoſophy of the Barbarians called thoſe dead, who deſerted their Doctrines, and ſubjected their Minds to ſenſual Pleaſures, which Philo calls the Death of the Soul, entombed in Paſſions, and all Manner of Wickedneſs. And therefore the full Import of our Saviour's Words muſt be, "Let thoſe, who are unconcern'd for the Things of God, "and unfit to engage in promoting them, perform ſuch Offices, which they can do, as well as others; but thou, who "haſt begun to follow me, and to attend upon the Kingdom of God, go on with Reſolution, and without allowing "thyſelf any Avocation from that Work:" Hereby teaching us, that they, who are called to the Preaching of the Goſpel, and the Salvation of Souls, ſhould not ſuffer any earthly Buſineſs, which may be done as well by others, who are unfit to be employ'd in Spirituals, to give them the leaſt Impediment or Moleſtation. Hammond's and Whitby's Annotations.

(h) Luke ix. 62.

† To put the Hand to the Plough, is a proverbial Saying, not only among the Greeks and Hebrews, but many other Nations, and denotes, in general, the Beginning of any Enterprize. This our Saviour applies to ſpiritual Huſbandry; and thereby gives us to underſtand, that, as he, who undertakes to plow, ſhould not look behind him, for Fear of making his Furrows crooked or unequal; ſo he, that engages in the Miniſtry of the Goſpel, ſhould not ſuffer himſelf to be encumber'd with much Serving about other Matters, but, in the Language of the Apoſtle, forgetting thoſe Things, that are behind, and reaching forth unto thoſe Things, which are before, preſs toward the Mark, for the Prize of the high Calling of God in Jeſus Chriſt, Phil. iii. 13, 14. Whitby's Annotations, and Calmet's Commentary.

† The ſtilling the Raging of the Sea was ſo peculiar a Prerogative of God, Pſal. lxxxix. 9. and cvii. 25, 29. that it is not at all to be wonder'd, that our Saviour's Diſciples ſhould be convinc'd of a Divine Power reſiding in him, who was able to do this with the Breath of his Command. Whitby's Annotations.

‡ This Country, which is ſo called by the Greeks from its rough and craggy Mountains, together with Ituræa, made, in our Saviour's Time, one Tetrarchy, i. e. one fourth Part, or rather Diviſion (for they were not equal Parts) of the Kingdom of Herod the Great, when he dy'd. It was antiently called Argob, Deut. iii. 13. and, according to the beſt Account, is bounded, to the Eaſt, by Arabia Deſerta; to the Weſt, by Batanæa; to the South, by Ituræa; and to the North, by the Country of Damaſcus: And, as it was a Province full of rocky Hills, which ſerv'd for an Harbour to a great Number of Thieves and Robbers, it often found Employment for Herod the Great (as we may ſee in the Hiſtory of Joſephus) to expel them. Wells's Geography of the New Teſtament, and Whitby's Table.

‡ This, in St Matthew, is called the Country of the Gergeſans, becauſe it lay in the Neighbourhood of the two Cities, Gadara and Gergeſa, which were both ſituated within the Diſtrict of Decapolis. Gadara, which took its Name from the Tribe of Gad, (to whom it fell by Lot in the Diviſion of the Land) was a famous City beyond Jordan, the Capital of Peræa (as Joſephus de Bello, lib. v. c. 3, tells us) and ſtood Eaſtward of the Sea of Tiberias, about ſixty Furlongs from the Shore. Gergeſa was a Place of ſome Importance likewiſe according to the ſame Hiſtorian; and the Adjacency of theſe two Towns made the Evangeliſts call the Country, that lay between them, ſometimes by one Name, and ſometimes by another. Wells's Geography of the New Teſtament.

two Demoniacs ‖ moſt grievouſly diſtracted, with ſome poor Rags about them, came running towards him, and fell at his Feet, and worſhipp'd him. Hideous Spectacles were they both; but one, much fiercer than the other, made diſmal Out-Cries both Day and Night, and cut his Fleſh with ſharp Stones; and, tho' he had been often bound with Fetters and Chains, yet he as often broke them to Pieces, ranging, (with his Companion) among the Rocks † and Tombs, and ſo very furious and outrageous, that no Traveller durſt paſs that Way. Upon their Approach to Jeſus, the Devils (who ſpake by their Mouths) declar'd him to be the Son of God, and expreſs'd their Fear of his being come to * torment them before their Time. They acknowledg'd their Number to be vaſtly great, and (if he caſt them out of the poſſeſs'd Perſons) implor'd him to ſuffer them to enter into a Herd of Swine, that were feeding on the Mountains not far off. Accordingly he permitted them: Whereupon the whole Herd, to the Number of two Thouſand, ran violently upon the Rocks, and, caſting themſelves headlong into the Lake, were all drown'd, and utterly loſt.

He leaves Gadara.

The Keepers of the Swine fled in the utmoſt Fright, and reported this ſtrange Accident in the City of Gadara, and the neighbouring Villages, which brought great Multitudes to the Place, where they found the Man (who had been the more furious of the two) ſitting at our Saviour's Feet, cloath'd, and in his perfect Senſes. But, whether it was, that they took amiſs the Deſtruction of the Swine, or thought themſelves unworthy of his Divine Preſence, ſo it was, that they intreated our Lord to depart out of their Country; which accordingly he did, † but, inſtead of permitting the Man (out of whom he had caſt the moſt Devils) to go along with him, as he deſir'd, he order'd him (i) to return to his Houſe, and his Friends, and there to declare what wonderful Things the Lord had done for him.

‖ There is ſome Difference between the Evangeliſts in their Account of this Cure: For, whereas St Mark, Chap. v. 2. and St Luke Chap. viii 27, take notice only of one Demoniac; St Matthew, Chap. viii. 28, makes mention of two. Now, to reconcile this ſeeming Difference, Dr Lightfoot ingeniouſly conjectures, that one of theſe two was a Gergaſen, and a Jew, and ſo, in caſting the Devil out of him, our Lord did no more, than what he had frequently done in Judea; but the other a Gadaren, i. e. one of an heathen City, as Joſephus teſtifies, for which Reaſon St Mark and St Luke take chiefly notice of him, as a more remarkable Inſtance, becauſe he and the Syrophœnician Woman are the only two Heathens, we read of, that our Saviour cur'd. But there is a farther Reaſon for the Evangeliſt's taking notice of one, rather than the other, and that is,—That the one, in his Behaviour, was more remarkable, than the other; was poſſeſs'd with an unclean Spirit, called himſelf Legion, and could not be bound with Fetters or Chains; went about naked, and cutting himſelf with Stones; and, when he was cur'd, diſtinguiſh'd himſelf by deſiring to follow Chriſt: Circumſtances all, which St Matthew omits, but St Mark and St Luke have particularly related, and, upon theſe Accounts, might very likely think, that he fell more properly under their Conſideration, than the other. Whitby's and Beauſobre's Annotations.

† The Tombs, which the Evangeliſts here mention, are ſaid to be in the Mountains, and in the Wilderneſs: For the Cuſtom of the Jews was, to have their Tombs, like ſo many little Cells, cut out in the Sides of Caverns, and hollow Parts of Rocks and Mountains, at ſome Diſtance from their Towns, and uſually in very lonely and deſert Places; into which it was uſual for the Devils to compel thoſe, whom they poſſeſs'd, in order to confirm Men in the vain Perſuaſion, that the Souls of thoſe, who dy'd in any Crime, were, after Death, turn'd into Devils. Hammond's Annotations.

* St Jerom, upon the Paſſage now before us, is apt to imagine, that as Slaves, who have a long while run from their Maſter, no ſooner ſee his Face, but they bethink themſelves of the Puniſhment, which they have deſerv'd; ſo the Devils, finding our Saviour upon Earth, thought, at firſt Sight, that he was come to judge, and condemn them; and therefore they aſk, Art thou come hither to torment us before the Time? i. e. before the Time of the Laſt Judgment, when they expect no other, than to be eternally puniſh'd, or (as the Scripture expreſſes it) to be caſt into the Lake of Fire and Brimſtone for ever. Calmet's Commentary.

† One Reaſon, as ſome imagine, why this Man deſir'd to be with Chriſt, was his Fear, leſt the Devil, at his Departure, might ſeize upon him again; and 'twas, partly to avoid the Suſpicion of Vain-Glory, whereof our Lord might have given ſome Umbrage, had he carry'd about with him all thoſe, upon whom his greateſt Miracles were wrought, and partly, to ſhew, that in his Abſence he was able to protect ſuch as believe and truſt in him, from the Malice of evil Spirits, that he would not accept of his Company. Whitby's Annotations.

And returning to Capernaum, cures the Woman of her Bloody-Flux.

From Matth. xii. 1. Mark ii. 23. Luke vi. 1. John v. 1. to Matth. xvii. 14. Mark ix. 14. Luke ix. 37. John vii. 1.

AS ſoon as our Lord had repaſs'd the Lake, and was return'd to Capernaum, the People came flocking about him, as uſual; and, while he was teaching them, one Jairus †, a chief Ruler of the Synagogue, falling proſtrate at his Feet, humbly beſought him to come, and cure his Daughter, who was at the Point of Death; not doubting but that, if he laid his Hands upon her, ſhe would inſtantly recover. The Forwardneſs of the Ruler's Faith claim'd our Saviour's Compaſſion and Aſſiſtance; and therefore he immediately roſe, and follow'd him: But, as he was on the Way, and preſs'd with great Throngs of People, a certain Woman †, who had been diſeas'd with an unnatural Flux of Blood for twelve Years, and (in Hopes of a Cure) had in vain ſpent all her Eſtate upon Phyſicians, being now confident, that, if ſhe could but come to touch the Hem of his Garment, ſhe ſhould be healed, preſs'd forward; and, having got a Touch of it privately, (as ſhe thought) found herſelf perfectly ſound. But ſhe was not unknown to Jeſus; and therefore, when he, perceiving that † Virtue was gone out of him, turn'd about in the Throng, and demanded who it was, that † had touched him? The poor Woman came trembling, and, falling down at his Feet, declar'd to all the Company, both the Cauſe, and miraculous Effects of her touching him, which he was ſo far from blaming, that he commended her Faith, and imputed her Cure to the wonderful Strength of it.

DURING

† Some learned Men are of Opinion, that this Ruler of the Synagogue was the Preſident of the Conſiſtory of the twenty-three Judges, who were appointed in every City to puniſh ſuch Offences, as were not capital; but 'tis more generally thought, that he was not a Civil Magiſtrate, but a leading Man in the Synagogue of Capernaum, who had, in a great Meaſure, under his Direction ſuch Things, as related to the Service of God. We are to obſerve however that the Word ἀρχισυνάγωγος is ſometimes taken in a ſtrict Senſe, for the Perſon, who was the Preſident, the Head, and Maſter of the Synagogue, who (according to this Acceptation) was but one; and, at other Times, in a larger Senſe, ſo as to comprehend the Preſbyters and Elders likewiſe, in which Senſe, the Rulers of the Synagogue were more than one. How many there were, it is no where defin'd, becauſe That depended upon the Largeneſs of the City, and the Number of thoſe, who frequented the Place of Divine Worſhip; only we may obſerve, that Jairus was not the chief Preſident, becauſe he is called one of the Rulers of the Synagogue, Mark v. 22. Vertinga de Regim. Synag. lib. ii. c. 11. Calmet's Commentary, and Hammond's and Whitby's Annotations.

† Euſebius tells us for a Certainty, that this Woman was a Gentile, living in Paneas, or Cæſarea Philippi, a Town, ſituate near the Head of the River Jordan, Hiſt. Eccl. lib. vii. c. 18. and, upon the Report of others, relates this Story: "That, by the Gate of this Woman's Houſe, was erected a Braſs Statue, bearing the Effigies of a Woman "upon her Knees in the Poſture of a Supplicant; that, oppoſite to her, there ſtood the Effigies of a Man in Braſs, "reſembling our Saviour, ſtretching out his Hand to the Woman; that, at the Feet of this Statue, an unknown Plant "ſprung up, which, reaching to the Border of his Garment, became a preſent Remedy againſt all Manner of "Diſeaſes; and that theſe Statues were ſtanding, even unto the Time of the Emperor Maximianus, who took them "away from this City." But, (not to inſiſt on the many Exceptions, that might be made to this Story, which favours much of the Superſtition of later Times) how a Woman, who, as all the Evangeliſts inform us, had ſpent all that ſhe had, ſhould be able to erect two ſuch coſtly Statues, or how the Jews, in all their Wars, or the Gentiles, who were both bitter Enemies to Chriſtianity, ſhould ſuffer ſuch a Confirmation of it to remain ſo long, we can by no Means imagine. Calmet's Commentary, and Whitby's Annotations.

† Hence it is evident, that the Virtue, whereby our Saviour did theſe miraculous Cures, was not communicated to him, but reſided in him, and, conſequently, proves that he was God. For the Virtue, whereby the Prophets and Apoſtles did their Cures, is aſcrib'd to God; as when it is ſaid, that God did ſpecial Miracles by the Hand of Paul, Acts xix. 11. but the Miracles done by Chriſt are imputed to the Virtue, which went out of him, and healed all that ſought to touch him, Luke vi. 19. The Virtue's going out of him, however, is a popular Expreſſion, which muſt not be taken in its literal Senſe, as if it were a Quality diſtinct from the Perſon of Chriſt, and what might paſs from him to another; becauſe the Divine Power reſiding in him was incapable of any Alienation, or Diminution, be the Cures he perform'd never ſo many, never ſo miraculous; and therefore the only Meaning of the Expreſſion muſt be, that it went out, with Regard to us, or, according to our Conceptions and Apprehenſions of Things, when it diſcover'd and manifeſted itſelf in the Cure of ſome Diſeaſe, or any other outward Effects. Whitby's Annotations, and Calmet's Commentary.

† Our Saviour's Diſciples, we find, admir'd at his aſking this Queſtion, Mark v. 31. but the Reaſon for his doing ſo, we may ſuppoſe, was, to diſcover to the People the Greatneſs of the Miracle, which, without this Examination, might have gone off without being known; to ſhew them the Strength and Virtue of the Woman's Faith and Confidence in his Power; and thence to convince Jairus, who began a little to ſtagger in his Faith, that he was able to revive his Daughter, even tho' ſhe was dead, if he did but believe. Calmet's Commentary, and Beauſobre's Annotations.

And reſtores Jairus's Daughter to Life again.

DURING this Tranſaction, the Delay prov'd fatal (as one might imagine) to Jairus; for a Meſſage was brought him, that his Daughter was actually dead, and therefore there was no Occaſion to give Jeſus any farther Trouble; but our Saviour, who over-heard what the Meſſenger ſaid, bid the Father not fear, but only believe, and then he ſhould find the bleſſed Effects of his Faith in the Recovery of his Daughter: But he had ſcarce ſpoke theſe Words, when approaching the Houſe he found the Muſicians *, and Mourners already come, who were deploring her Death with melancholy Tones, and loud Lamentations, according to the Cuſtom of thoſe Times. He deſir'd them however, as he went in, to ceaſe their funeral Ceremonies, becauſe, at that Time, † there was no Occaſion for them; and ſo, with the young Woman's Parents, and Peter, and James, and John, going into the Chamber, he approach'd the Bed where ſhe lay, and, taking her by the Hand, commanded her to ariſe, at which powerful Word ſhe immediately reviv'd, and walk'd round the Room, to the no ſmall Amazement of her Parents. At his Departure, he order'd them to give her ſomething to eat, and left a ſtrict Charge with them that they ſhould make the Miracle a Secret; but their Joy was too great to conceal, what, in Gratitude for ſo great a Mercy, they thought they were oblig'd to divulge.

IN his Return from Jairus our Lord was follow'd in the Streets by two blind Men imploring his Aid, who, as ſoon as he had enter'd the Houſe, came after him, and, when he had cur'd them, were diſmiſs'd with a ſtrict Charge to conceal the Miracle, which, out of the Abundance of their Joy, they could not do. And, no ſooner were the blind Men gone, but the People brought to him a dumb Man poſſeſs'd with a Devil, which when he had caſt out, the Perſon immediately recover'd his Speech, to the great Aſtoniſhment of the Multitude, who unanimouſly acknowledg'd, that the like had never been ſeen in Iſrael; only the Phariſees perſiſted in their old Malice, and inſinuated to the People, (as formerly) that he ejected Devils by the Help of ſome ſupreme Devil, who had the reſt under his Controul, and with whom he was confederate.

* In all the Books of the Old Teſtament, there is not the leaſt Hint given us of any muſical Inſtruments employ'd in Funerals. We read indeed of a good deal of Mourning for the Dead, of Mourners hir'd on purpoſe, and of the diſmal Ditties, which theſe People ſung to excite Sorrow in others: But the Uſe of Muſick was reckon'd an incongruous Thing, and no Ways comporting with the Solemnity of this ſad Seaſon. Among Heathen Authors there is frequent Mention made of it, as a Thing long in Uſe, both with the Greeks, and Romans; and therefore we may preſume, that from theſe Nations it was, that the Jews borrow'd, and adopted it into their Funeral Ceremonies. That among them it was in Uſe in our Saviour's Time, at leaſt among Perſons of the better Rank, is plain from the Paſſage now before us; that it was an eſtabliſh'd Cuſtom in the Time of Joſephus, is evident from his own Teſtimony; and that it grew into a Kind of ſuperſtitious Uſe, in the Times following, is evident from what the Rabbins enjoin, viz. that none, even of the meaner Sort, ſhould, at the Funeral of a Wiſe, have fewer than two Flutes, beſides the Voices of old Women, who, by their ſad Modulation, were to extort Lamentation from others. Selden's Uxor. Hebr. lib. iii. c. 8. Hammond's Annotations, and Calmet's Commentary.

† The Reaſon, which our Saviour gives for this, is, ——— That the Maid was not dead, but aſleep, Mat. ix. 24. Now, in ſeveral Places of the New Teſtament eſpecially, Death is called a Sleep, John xi. 11. Acts vii. 60. 1 Cor. xv. 6, &c. and therefore our Saviour only makes uſe of this Word of a ſofter Signification, not ſo much with a Deſign to impoſe upon thoſe, to whom he directed his Speech, as to teſtify his Humility, and great Modeſty, in his Deſire to conceal his Divine Power. The Perſons he ſpoke to were certainly thoſe, who were preparing for her Interment, and performing the Funeral Rites belonging to it; and therefore he only intimates, that ſhe was not ſo dead, as they accounted her, i. e. not to come to Life again, before the Reſurrection; but, that her Death was no more, that what he could remove, with the ſame Facility, as another might be awaken'd out of Sleep. Whitby's and Pool's Annotations.

Matth. ix. 35. Mark vi. 6. Sends out his Apoſtles, and gives them their Commiſſion.

UPON his Departure from Nazareth, he viſited moſt of the Cities, and Villages of Galilee, teaching in the Synagogues, preaching the Goſpel, and curing all Kinds of Diſeaſes among the People; and, as he obſerv'd, one Day, the numerous Throngs and Multitudes, that reſorted to him, he look'd upon them with an Eye of Pity and Compaſſion, as ſo many Sheep diſpers'd, and deſtitute of Shepherds, and from thence form'd a Reſolution to ſend out his twelve Apoſtles (by two and two together) into the more diſtant Parts of Judea, whilſt himſelf continu'd preaching in Galilee, and the Places adjacent.

TO this Purpoſe * he inveſted them with a full Power to cure all Diſeaſes, eject Devils, and even raiſe the Dead. He gave them Inſtructions in what Manner they were to behave in the Places, whither they went; but forbad them, at the ſame Time, to addreſs themſelves to any of the Gentiles, or Samaritans, but only to the loſt † Sheep of the Houſe of Iſrael. He told them the Conſequences of their Miniſtry, which, (after his Death more eſpecially) inſtead of intitling them to temporal Advantages, would expoſe them to ſundry Kinds of Perſecutions; but, for their Encouragement, he acquainted them, that thoſe, who rejected their Meſſage, ſhould be treated with Severity, at leaſt at the righteous Judgment of God; whereas thoſe, that receiv'd them kindly, and gave (were it but a Cup of cold Water) to the leaſt of his Diſciples, for their Maſter's Sake, ſhould in no wiſe miſs of his Reward. † The Word τέκτων is of general Signification, and denotes any Worker, either in Wood, Mettal, or Stone; but the Tradition of the Church has all along been, that our Bleſſed Saviour was, what our Tranſlation has ſpecify'd, a Carpenter; and Juſtin Martyr aſſures us, that he made Ploughs and Yokes, which, at that Time, were the Carpenters Buſineſs. However, this be, 'tis certain, that, by the Jewiſh Canons, all Parents were bound to teach their Children ſome Trade; that their moſt celebrated Rabbins thought it a great Reproach not to be of ſome Profeſſion; and that there was a peculiar Reaſon, why our Saviour ſhould be of one, and that no very liberal one neither, even to take off all Suſpicion of his being bred up in curious Arts, which his Enemies, at all Times, were forward enough to ſay, notwithſtanding the Diſadvantages of his Education. Beauſobre's and Whitby's Annotations.

† This was a common Proverb among other Nations, as well as the Jews; and therefore Ariſtides was wont to ſay, That a Philoſopher was never worſe, than at home. Grotius on Matth. xiii. 57.

* Among all the Accounts, which the Heathens have given us of their famous Magicians, and Workers of Wonders, there are none to be found, who ever pretended to a Power to delegate their Virtue to others, or to impart their Power to them, upon the Invocation of their Names, or Belief of their Doctrine. Hence Arnobius (adverſ. Gentes, lib. i.) having ſumm'd up the Miracles, which our Saviour did, adds, That he not only did them by his Power, but permitted many others to do them by Invocation of his Name, nor did he any peculiar and aſtoniſhing Miracles himſelf, that he did not enable his little ones, and even Ruſticks to perform: Whereupon he aſks thoſe, he writes to, Did ever that Jupiter, whom the Romans worſhip in their Capitol, give the like Power to any Mortal? And then concludes this to be a Demonſtration of a truly Divine Power: For to transfer your miraculous Power to a Man, and to give Authority and Strength to a Creature to do That, which you alone can do, is an infallible Evidence of one, who hath Power over all, and the Cauſes of all Things at his Beck. Whitby's Annotations.

† He calls all Iſrael Sheep, tho' they were not obedient to the Voice of Shepherds, as being all choſen People. He calls them loſt Sheep, becauſe they were in great Danger of being loſt, and ruin'd, by the Ignorance and Wickedneſs of their Guides; and to them the Apoſtles were ſent, becauſe they were the Children of the Kingdom, Matth. viii. 12. to whom the Promiſe of the Meſſiah was made, Gen. xvii. 1. and of whom as concerning the Fleſh he came, Rom. ix. 5. and therefore, it was the Divine Will, that they ſhould be firſt honour'd with the Preaching of the Goſpel, and alone enjoy the Miniſtry of Jeſus Chriſt, and his Diſciples, while he continu'd upon Earth: But, upon their rejecting of ſo great Salvation, the Apoſtle's Commiſſion was enlarg'd. For it was neceſſary (ſays St Paul to the Jews) that the Word of God ſhould firſt have been ſpoken to you, but, ſeeing you put it from you, and judge yourſelves unworthy of everlaſting Life, lo, we turn to the Gentiles, Acts xiii. 46. Whitby's and Beauſobre's Annotations.

It was in the Hands of Aretas, King of Arabia, when he marry'd his Daughter to Herod Antipas, but how it afterwards came into Herod's Poſſeſſion (as it certainly was, when he beheaded John the Baptiſt) we have no Account from Hiſtory. Calmet's Commentary.

† That it was an uſual Cuſtom with Kings to celebrate the Day of their Birth, and that of their Acceſſion to the Throne, (for the Word may be apply'd to either) with great Solemnity, we have an Example as old as Pharaoh, Gen. xl. 20. nor need we doubt, but that, on ſuch joyful Occaſions, there were Muſick and Dancing, and all Manner of Diverſions to entertain the Company: But, that Perſons of the firſt Rank and Diſtinction ſhould act any Part in theſe Diverſions, was a rare and unwonted Thing; and therefore, St Chryſoſtom, in Matth. Hom. xlix, is of Opinion, that Herodias, foreſeeing what would happen, forc'd this young Lady upon a Thing, which would have better become an Actreſs upon the Stage. Calmet's Commentary.

† This Herodias, (as Joſephus relates the Matter) in Contempt of the Laws of her Country, marry'd again to Herod, the natural Brother of her Huſband, ſeparating herſelf from him, whilſt living, altho' he had a Child by her; ſo that being guilty both of Inceſt, and Adultery, ſhe might well be called his unlawful Wife. † An Offer like this we find Ahaſuerus (a great Aſſyrian Monarch) making Queen Eſther, Chap. v. 3.

† It may not be improper here to take notice of the remarkable Providence of God, in avenging the Death of this righteous Man upon Herod, Herodias, and her Daughter. 1ſt, As the War between Herod, and Aretas, King of Arabia, was occaſion'd by Herod's wicked Contract with Herodias to eject his Daughter, who was his lawful Wife, and to marry her, who was his Brother Philip's; ſo Joſephus declares, that the Jews look'd upon his putting John to Death, as the Cauſe of the Miſcarriage of his Army, God being angry with him for the Death of John the Baptiſt. 2dly, Envying the Glory of her Brother Agrippa, upon whom Caligula had conferr'd the Title of a King, Herodias prevailed with her Huſband to repair to Rome, in order to requeſt the like Favour of the Emperor; but the Emperor, having receiv'd a bad Impreſſion againſt him, inſtead of granting what he deſir'd, depriv'd him of his Government, and baniſh'd both her and him to Lyons in France, where they liv'd ingloriouſly, and died miſerably; and this, according to Joſephus (Antiq. lib. xviii. c. 9.) was done, in Puniſhment of her Envy, and of his Readineſs to hearken to her Sollicitations. And, 3dly, Of her Daughter, it is related, that, as ſhe was going over the Ice in Winter, the Ice brake, and let her in up to the Head, which, upon the meeting of the Ice again, was ſever'd from her Body. And this Story, if it be true (as it is confidently told us by Nicephorus, Hiſt. Eccl. lib. i. c. 20.) is a wonderful Inſtance of God's avenging Providence. Whitby's Annotations.

† Herod was no more than a Tetrarch, or one of thoſe Four, among whom his Father's Kingdom was divided; but St Mark, Chap. vi. 14, gives him the Title of a King, as himſelf no doubt was fond enough of it, and perhaps, in the Provinces under his Dominion, was generally called by it. Why he came to be concern'd at the young Lady's deſiring ſo ſtrange a Boon, as that of the Baptiſt's Head, is no Wonder. Upon hearing of his Death, our Saviour removes into the Deſert, where he feeds the Multitude.

ABOUT the ſame Time, that Jeſus was inform'd of John's Death by his Diſciples, his own Apoſtles return'd from their ſeveral Journies, and gave him an Account all their Tranſactions. The Fame of the Miracles, which our Saviour, both by himſelf, and his Apoſtles, had wrought, gave Herod ſome Umbrage to think, that the Perſon, who did them, was John, whom he had unjuſtly murder'd, and who now very probably † was riſen from the Dead to revenge his Blood upon him; and therefore, knowing the Subtlety and Cruelty of that Prince, our Saviour order'd his Apoſtles to prepare a Veſſel, wherein he, and they only, might croſs the Sea of Galilee, and retire for a little while from the Multitude, to a Deſert near Bethſaida. But in vain was it for him to think of concealing himſelf: The People, the Evangeliſts inform us, that Herod had conceiv'd a good Opinion of the Baptiſt, as a juſt and holy Man, and when he heard him (as he did it very gladly) in many Things he follow'd his Advice, Mark vi. 20. and not only ſo, but fear'd the Reſentment of the People likewiſe (with whom he was in high Eſteem) when they ſhould come to be inform'd of the Cauſe and Circumſtances of his Death, Matth. xiv. 5. There might, however, be another Reaſon, leſs obſerv'd, for Herod's Concern upon this Occaſion. It was now his Birth-Day; and 'twas uſual, even among Heathen Princes, at ſuch a Time, to be gay and merry; to think of no ill Omens, to ſurceaſe all Contentions, and not ſo much as to deprive of Life, even condemn'd Criminals, on that Day, when the Sovereign of the Country receiv'd his, leſt they ſhould offend, or ſadden the Genius, that preſided over their Nativity: And therefore, it is more than probable, that Herod, who was more than half a Pagan, might have the ſame Notion of the Thing. But, if he had not, it can hardly be thought, but that ſuch an Execution would damp the Joy of the Meeting, and procure him more Enemies among the thinking Part of the Company, than the Non-performance of a wicked and illegal Oath could have done. Hammond's Annotations, and Calmet's Commentary.

† The Word σπικȣλάτωρ, which we render Executioner, in the Hiſtory of the Roman Emperors, ſignifies a Soldier of the Guard; and among the Jews, Romans, Chaldæans, and Egyptians, it was cuſtomary for one of the King's Guard to be the Executioner of thoſe, whom he had condemned to Death. Hammond's Annotations.

† Thus died the great Fore-runner of our Bleſſed Saviour, about two Years, and three Months, after his Entrance upon his publick Miniſtry, in the thirty-fifth Year of his Age, and was the firſt, who ſuffered upon the Account of the Goſpel, tho' ſeldom called the firſt Martyr. "He was indeed a Man (according to the Character "which Joſephus gives of him) endued with all Virtue, who exhorted the Jews to the Practice of Juſtice to-"wards Men, and Piety towards God, and alſo to Baptiſm, which would become acceptable to God, if they "renounced their Sins, and, to the Cleanneſs of their Bodies, added the Purity of their Souls." Antiq. lib. xviii. c. 7.

† When Herodias had got the Baptiſt's Head in her Poſſeſſion, 'tis ſaid, that ſhe thruſt his Tongue through with her Bodkin, and for Fear, that the Head, if bury'd with the Body, ſhould be re-united, and riſe again to diſturb her unlawful Luſt, and diſquiet Herod's Conſcience, ſhe bury'd it in her own Palace; but where his Diſciples bury'd his Body the Evangeliſts have not inform'd us, only we are ſo told, that, in the Time of Julian the Apoſtate, his Tomb was ſhewn at Samaria, where the Inhabitants of the Country opened it, and burnt Part of his Bones; but the reſt were ſaved by ſome Chriſtians, that carry'd them to one Philip, an Abbot at Jeruſalem, who preſented them to St Athanaſius; but ſome Time after, when Theodoſius built a Church, in Honour of the Baptiſt, in the Place where the Temple of Serapis ſtood, Ann. Dom. 396. theſe holy Reliques were repoſited in it: Tho' what became of his Head, we no where read, only the Abbot Villeloin tells us, in his Memoirs, that he ſaw one at Amiens, but that this was the fifth, or ſixth Head of the Baptiſt, that, in the Courſe of his Travels, he had the Honour to kiſs. Theodoret. Hiſt. Eccl. lib. iii. c. 3. Ruffin. Hiſt. c. 27. and Calmet's Dictionary, under the Word.

† Several of the antient Jewiſh Writers, as well as ſome modern Rabbins, are of Opinion, that the Souls of Men and Women, when they dy'd, went into other Bodies, inſomuch, that they imagine, that the Soul of Moſes was the ſame with That of Abel; and That of the Egyptian, whom Moſes ſlew, the ſame with That of Cain: But, whether the Jews had this Notion of the Tranſmigration of Souls (as Joſephus, de Bell. Jud. lib. vii. cap. 25. and Philo, de Somniis, ſeem to tell us) it can hardly be thought, that what Herod here ſays, in Regard to our Saviour, was ſpoken in Alluſion to it; becauſe it is not conceivable, how the Soul of John, lately dead, could enter into the Body of Chriſt, which for thirty Years, and upwards, had been informed by another Soul. And therefore his Words muſt be underſtood, not of the Tranſition of the Baptiſt's Soul, but of his Reviviſcence, or returning to Life again. For, as it was an Opinion among the Jews, that, at the Coming of the Meſſiah, ſome of their Prophets would riſe from the Dead; Herod had ſome Reaſon to ſuppoſe, that John, whom all the Jews held to be a Prophet, might be permitted to return into the World, and perhaps to avenge his Death upon the Tyrant. Calmet's Commentary, and Whitby's Annotations.

Matt. xiv. 15. Mark vi 38. Luke ix. 12.

People, ſeeing where he took Shipping, ran after him on Foot by the Lake Side, and, tho' they had a great Circuit of Land to take, were got into the Deſert, almoſt as ſoon as he; which ſingular Inſtance of their Zeal ſo affected his Compaſſion, that, tho' he came to that Place for the Sake of Retirement, he could no longer with-hold his Preſence from them; but, aſcending a Mountain, and taking his Diſciples with him, he there firſt inſtructed them in ſeveral Things concerning the Kingdom of God, and, having afterwards cur'd their Sick and Diſeaſed, he, at laſt, fed them all to the Number of five Thouſand Men, beſides Women and Children, with five Barley-Loaves, and two ſmall Fiſhes, (having at firſt invok'd a Bleſſing † upon them) and that with a Plenty ſo exuberant, that the very Fragments †, which remain'd, filled twelve Baſkets.

Avoids being made King, and walks upon the Surface of the Sea.

This miraculous Multiplication made ſuch an Impreſſion upon the Multitude, that they no longer doubted of his being the Meſſiah, and were therefore reſolv'd to ſet him up for their King by main Force; but he, knowing the Miſchief of ſuch a Deſign, conſtrain'd his Diſciples (who were forward enough perhaps to join in the Thing) immediately to take Shipping, and to paſs by Bethſaida || to Capernaum, whilſt himſelf diſmiſs'd the Multitude; and (when he had ſo done) continu'd, till after Midnight, in Meditation and Prayer.

Matt. xiv. 24. Mark vi. 47. John vi. 17.

In the mean Time, the Ship, where the Apoſtles were on Board, was toſs'd with a great Storm in the Middle of the Lake. The Waves ran ſo high, and the Wind was ſo contrary, that, as ſoon as Morning appear'd, they had not got much above a League on their Voyage, when our Saviour came walking † upon the Surface of the Sea, and drew near towards the Ship. This ſtrange Appearance † (which

† The Evangeliſts make uſe of two Words upon this Occaſion; Bleſſing, and giving Thanks; and, by the former of thoſe, ſome Interpreters underſtand the multiplying Virtue, which he then commanded down upon the Suſtenance, that he was going to give to the People, and its marvellous Increaſe in the Hands of the Diſtributers, whereby it became a Repaſt ſufficient for ſo large a Multitude: Tho' others think, that he did no more, than what we call ſaying Grace, i. e. thank'd God for his bountiful Proviſion of all Things, and begg'd his Bleſſing upon what he was going to diſpenſe among the People, that it might tend to the wholſome Nouriſhment of their Bodies. However this be, 'tis enough to warrant the indifferent Uſe of theſe two Words, that the Forms of Addreſs to Almighty God, upon the Uſe of his Gifts for our Refreſhment, have uſually been of a mixed Nature, as conſiſting partly of Praiſes, and partly of Petitions; becauſe the End of ſuch Devotions is manifeſtly twofold, viz. to render our Acknowledgments to God for his Liberality, and then to beg of him, that the good Creatures, which he hath given us, may be ſanctify'd to our Uſe. Stanhope, on the Epiſtles and Goſpels, Vol. II.

† It was a ſufficient Reaſon for our Saviour's ordering the Fragments to be gather'd up, and put in Baſkets, that, from them, might appear both the Reality of the Miracle, and the exceeding Greatneſs of the Increaſe; but becauſe our Lord aſſigns another, by ſaying, Gather up the Fragments, that nothing be loſt, he hath herein ſhew'd us, that all Reſerving for the future is not unlawful; that Charity is very conſiſtent with Frugality; indeed not only that they may, but that they ſhould, go together; for God will be ſure to make a mighty Difference between the Virtue, and the ſpecious Extream beyond it; between the liberal and the laviſh Man. Stanhope, on the Epiſtles and Goſpels, Vol. II.

|| St Mark tells us, that our Saviour order'd his Apoſtles to croſs the Sea, and wait for him on the other Side, at Bethſaida, Chap. vi. 45. St John writes, that accordingly they enter'd into the Ship, but, inſtead of going where they were directed, they ſteer'd their Courſe towards Capernaum, Chap. vi. 17. and yet, after all, if we will believe St Matthew, they landed at laſt, neither at Bethſaida, nor Capernaum, but in the Country of Genneſareth, Chap. xiv. 34. Now to reconcile this, we need only remember, what all the Evangeliſts tell us, viz. that, while the Apoſtles were on Board, there aroſe a ſtrong Gale of Wind, which, blowing from the North, prov'd, in a Manner, quite contrary to them, ſo that, inſtead of making the Port of Bethſaida, which is on the North Coaſt of the Sea of Galilee, the next Morning they found themſelves on the oppoſite Side, not far from Tiberias, and to the South of Capernaum. Tho' therefore our Saviour order'd them to go to Bethſaida, yet they could not do it, becauſe the Wind was againſt them. Their next Attempt therefore was, to get to Capernaum, but even that they could not do; but, being forc'd to yield to the Storm, were carry'd a good Way below to the South of it, from whence they juſt touch'd at Nazareth, and thence proceeded to Capernaum. Calmet's Commentary.

† Among ſeveral other Inſtances of God's Omnipotence, Job mentions this, as one, that he treadeth upon the Waves of the Sea. Job ix. 8.

† It was a common Opinion among the Jews, that Spirits did ſometimes appear, cloath'd in an human Form, but what put the Apoſtles at this Time in the greater Fright, was their imagining, that thoſe, who appear'd at Night, were uſually evil Spirits, and that this, which they now ſaw, might poſſibly be the Demon, who had rais'd the Storm. Beauſobre's Annotations.

(which they took for a Spirit) increas'd their Fear not a little. Our Lord indeed, to diſpel it, told them who he was; but Peter, ſtill doubtful, wanted a Demonſtration, which when he permitted him to try, and the Apoſtle, upon the Experiment, was ready to ſink, he graciouſly reach'd out his Hand, and, with a gentle Rebuke for the Weakneſs of his Faith, ſetting him again upon the Top of the Waves, walk'd along with him to the Veſſel; which they had no ſooner enter'd, but the Winds, knowing their Duty to their Sovereign, ceas'd. This the reſt of the Diſciples obſerving, came, and ador'd Jeſus, acknowledging his Omnipotence, and admiring the Divinity of his Power and Perſon; and, as it was not long before the Ship gain'd the Port, great Numbers out of the Country, as ſoon as they underſtood that he was arriv'd, brought their Sick and Diſeaſed on Beds, and laid them before him in the Streets, beſeeching him to permit them only to touch the Border of his Garment, and as many, as touched him, were made whole.

John vi. 22. His Diſcourſe to the People, whom he had fed, concerning ſpiritual Food, which gave Diſguſt.

The Multitudes, whom our Lord had miraculouſly fed in the Deſert near Bethſaida, were in Expectation of finding him, the next Morning, on the Mountain; for they had ſeen the Diſciples take Shipping without their Maſter, and no other Veſſel left for him: But perceiving that he was gone, as well as his Diſciples, and having an Opportunity of other Veſſels from Tiberias, they paſs'd over with all Expedition to Capernaum, where they found him teaching in the Synagogues; and, being in no ſmall Surprize, deſir'd to know of him how he got thither? But, inſtead of gratifying their Curioſity † with a direct Anſwer, he who knew their corrupt Expectations, and that they came after him, not ſo much for his miraculous Gifts, as the Gratification of their own Appetites, took occaſion from thence to diſcourſe † to them of a certain Food, different from what he had given them in the Deſert of Bethſaida, infinitely more deſerving of their Inquiſition, and whereof the Manna in the Wilderneſs was no more than a Figure, or a Type. What this Food was he ſignify'd to them, viz. the Merits of his future Death and Paſſion, which alone could be available for the obtaining of eternal Life to ſuch, as believ'd in his Divine Miſſion, and Deſcent from Heaven.

John vi. 6

But theſe ſublime Truths, which, for the preſent, he thought proper to couch in Terms obſcure and figurative enough, ſo gravelled the Intellects of his Auditory, that even his Diſciples began to murmur, and many of his Followers, miſtaking the Words in a literal, which he intended in a ſpiritual Senſe, and thence inferring that he was not ſuch a Meſſiah, as they imagin'd, wholly deſerted him; inſomuch, that he began to ſuſpect the Fidelity of his very Apoſtles, until Peter (in behalf of all the reſt) declar'd their fix'd Purpoſe of adhering to him, upon full Conviction, that † We may obſerve, from ſeveral Parts of the Goſpel, particularly from Luke xiii. 23, 24. John xii. 34, 35. that it was uſual with our Bleſſed Saviour to anſwer nothing to ſuch curious Queſtions, as had no Tendency to Edification, but to divert the People from them, by propoſing ſome more profitable Subject. Whitby's Annotations.

† Our Bleſſed Saviour, through the greateſt Part of the ſixth Chapter of St. John's Goſpel, takes an Occaſion, from the Multitudes coming after him out of a greedy Deſire to be fed, to diſcourſe to them of ſpiritual Bleſſings, under the Metaphors of Meat and Drink; and, for his Apology in ſo doing, we may obſerve, that, among the Oriental and Jewiſh Writers, no Metaphor was more common than this; that, to this Purpoſe, Solomon, in his Book of Proverbs, introduces Wiſdom crying in the Streets, Come eat of my Bread, and drink of my Wine, which I have mingled, Prov. ix. 5. For they that eat me, ſhall yet be hungry, and they that drink me, ſhall yet be thirſty, ſays the wiſe Son of Syrach; for the Soul (as Plato expreſſes it) is nouriſh'd by receiving and practiſing good Things; and Wiſdom, Temperance, and Piety, are the Food of a Soul, that can ſuck them in. That, as our Saviour calls himſelf the Bread, which came down from Heaven, Philo, upon the Words of Moſes diſcants, what Food can God rain down from Heaven, but that Heavenly Wiſdom, which he ſends down upon the Soul, that deſires it? That as he exhorts the People to labour for the Meat, that periſhes not; Philo declares, that the Wiſdom of God is the Nurſe and Nouriſher of thoſe, that deſire incorruptible Diet; L. de eo quod deterius, p. 137. and from hence we may perceive, why our Saviour inſiſts ſo much upon this Metaphor, even becauſe it was familiar to the Jews, and us'd by their moſt celebrated Writers. Whitby's Annotations.

that he was the Meſſiah, the Son of the Living God. But, notwithſtanding this liberal and frank Confeſſion, our Lord gave them to underſtand, that they were not equally ſound, for among the Twelve, whom he had ſelected, One of them was to prove a Traytor, meaning this of Judas Iſcariot, who juſtly deſerv'd that Name, becauſe he afterwards betray'd him.

WHETHER our Bleſſed Saviour was at Jeruſalem on the third Paſſover after his Baptiſm, the Evangeliſts have not inform'd us; but 'tis very probable, that he, who came to fulfil all Righteouſneſs, would not neglect ſo great an Ordinance. Upon this Preſumption, 'tis moſt generally believ'd that he was there, tho', very likely, he might not ſtay long, but, as ſoon as the Feſtival was over, return into Galilee, (k) becauſe the Rulers, at Jeruſalem, lay in wait for an Opportunity to put him to Death.

UPON his Return into Galilee, a certain Number of Scribes and Phariſees † were ſent from Jeruſalem, to be Spies upon his Actions, and to criticize upon his Doctrine. (k) John vii. 1.

† The Sanhedrim, which ſat at Jeruſalem, and was the ſupreme Court in all religious Affairs, ſent Meſſengers to John the Baptiſt, when he began his Preaching, enquiring who he was, and by what Authority he baptiz'd, John i. 19. and, as the Phariſees had charg'd our Saviour's Diſciples, with a Violation of the Sabbath, in plucking and rubbing the Ears of the Corn, and himſelf with the ſame Crime, in curing the Sick on the Sabbath-Day, it is not improbable, that theſe Accuſations had reach'd Jeruſalem, and that the Scribes and Phariſees, here mention'd, were Emiſſaries, ſent from the Sanhedrim, to watch and obſerve our Saviour. And this ſeems the rather to be ſo, becauſe they were ſo very ready (when they could find him guilty of no Violation of the Laws of God) to pick a Quarrel with him about ſome Rites and Ceremonies of the Church, which he, and his Diſciples, thought not ſo very neceſſary to be obſerv'd. Pool's Annotations.

* The Traditions, in the Jewiſh Church, came to gain Credit, upon this Preſumption, that Moſes, when he receiv'd the Law from God on Mount Sinai, which he recorded in his five Books, was inſtructed, at the ſame Time, in ſeveral Things, which God enjoin'd him not to commit to Writing, for fear that the Heathens ſhould tranſcribe them: That, in theſe Things, Moſes inſtructed his Succeſſor Joſhua, and from Joſhua they were tranſmitted, through the Elders of the People, by oral Conveyance only, until Ezra, after the Return from the Babyloniſh Captivity, collected them all together, and made the Cabbala, in ſeventy-two Books, which was kept by Gamaliel, and others, that ſucceeded, as Heads of the Sanhedrim, until the Deſtruction of Jeruſalem: That, about an hundred and twenty Years after this, R. Judas, the Son of Simon, compos'd a Book of them, called the Miſhna, i. e. the ſecond Law, which is indeed the moſt antient Collection of Traditions that the Jews have: That, three hundred Years after this, R. Jonathan, meeting with more, compil'd them into a larger Volume; and an hundred Years after this, another Rabbi made a Collection of ſuch, as were found among the Jews, who remain'd in Babylon: That theſe two (which are a Kind of Supplement and Explication of the Miſhna) are called, the one, the Talmud of Jeruſalem, and the other, of Babylon; and that by theſe the Jews, at this Day, are govern'd in Matters Eccleſiaſtical, all the World over. In Relation to the particular Cuſtom of waſhing before Meat, their Canon is, that, Whoſoever deſpiſeth the Waſhing of Hands, is worthy to be excommunicated; he comes to Poverty, and will be extirpated out of the World: For (according to the Senſe of one of their Doctors, viz. R. Aquiba) he that takes Meat with unwaſhed Hands is worthy of Death; and therefore, when the ſame Doctor was in Priſon, and had not Water enough, both to drink, and waſh his Hands, he choſe to do the latter, becauſe it is better, ſays he, to die with Thirſt, than to tranſgreſs the Tradition of the Elders. 'Tis no Wonder then that Perſons inur'd to thoſe Notions ſhould ſo readily take Exception at our Saviour's omitting what were indeed (tho' they thought not ſo) Matters of an indifferent Nature. Pool's, Whitby's, Hammond's, and Beauſobre's Annotations, and Lightfoot, on Matt. xv. 2.

† The Way, whereby the Jews made the Law of honouring and ſubſiſting their Father and Mother of no Effect, was, by pretending that whatever their Parents requeſted of them, was a Corban, i. e. that they had devoted it, as a Gift, or Offering to God, or to his Temple; and, whatever was thus devoted, was not to be touch'd, be the Neceſſity never ſo urgent: For their Canon about Vows was, ——— That they reach even to Things commanded, and take Place, as well in Things required by the Law, as Things indifferent; that a Man may be ſo bound by them, that he cannot, without great Sin, do what God had commanded to be done; and that, in this Caſe, if he makes a Vow, which cannot ſolemn one of honouring their Parents, and relieving them in their Wants? And, thereupon, looking upon them as ſo many Hypocrites [†], with whom he diſdain'd to hold any farther Converſe, he turn'd to the Multitude, and inform'd them, "that true Piety did not conſiſt in outward Ceremonies, but in a ſincere Obſervance of the Laws of God; that no Pollution could be in what enter'd into a Man's Mouth, but only in what proceeded from it; for (as he afterwards explains the Thing to his Diſciples) whatever we eat does not affect the Mind, the only Seat of Defilements; for it paſſes into the Stomach, and is ſoon thrown out of the Body, ſo that, be it never ſo groſs or unclean, it cannot pollute the Eater: But all Pollution is from within, from the Corruption of the Heart, ſuch as impure Thoughts, unchaſte Deſires, unholy Purpoſes, immodeſt and indecent Speeches, &c. Theſe are the Things, that leave a laſting Stain upon the Soul, which a Thing, ſo merely external, as omitting to waſh before Meat, cannot do."

Matt. xv. 21. Mark vii. 24. And Cure of the Syro-phœnician Woman's Daughter, and ſeveral others.

This was a Doctrine not well pleaſing to the Phariſees, as his Diſciples told him; but they were a Set of People, whoſe Cenſure he juſtly deſpis'd, blind Leaders of the blind, (as he properly enough calls them) whoſe vain Traditions, as having nothing of Divine Inſtitution in them, his Purpoſe was to aboliſh. And, from thence, in departing to the Coaſts of Tyre [†] and Sidon, he enter'd into an Houſe, with a Deſign to conceal himſelf; but a certain Syro-phœnician Woman, having got Intelligence where he was, came, and earneſtly requeſted of him to cure her Daughter, who was ſadly tormented with a Devil.

be performed without breaking a Commandment, his Vow muſt be ratified, and the Commandment violated. This was a Superſtition, which the Phariſees, and other Doctors of the Law, who had a Property in the Gifts and Oblations that were made to the Temple, thought themſelves concern'd to indulge; and therefore, when any pretended, that their Parents ſtood in need of their Help, they told them, that if they did but acquaint them, that it was a Gift, or that they had vow'd ſuch a Portion of their Eſtate to ſacred Uſes, that would, before God, excuſe them from relieving them: Nay, they affirm'd farther, that if a Man did but in a Paſſion ſay, that the Thing, which another aſk'd of him was a Corban, tho' it were not actually conſecrated to religious Uſes, this was Vow enough to prevent his relieving that other Perſon, even, putting the Caſe, that it were his own Father; unleſs they ſhould abſolve him from it, which they would undertake to do for ſo many Shekels of Silver, Levit. xxvii. ſuch abundant Reaſon had our Bleſſed Saviour to charge the Jewiſh Doctors with making one of the greateſt Commands in the ſecond Table of the Law void by their Traditions concerning Vows. Pool's and Whitby's Annotations, and Pocock's Miſcel. p. 415.

[†] In ſeveral Places of the Goſpel, our Lord calls the Phariſees Hypocrites, not only becauſe they plac'd the Worſhip of God, and a great deal of Sanctity and Religion, in Ceremonies of human Inſtitution, and, tho' they pretended to extraordinary Purity, did all their good Works to be ſeen of Men, Matt. xxiii. 5. but more eſpecially in this Place, becauſe, being ſuperſtitiouſly careful to avoid the outward Pollution of the Body, by abſtaining from the Touch of any Thing, which they reputed unclean, and waſhing their Hands, whenever they thought they had done ſo; they left that, which was within, viz. their Hearts, and Affections, full of Iniquity, Uncleanneſs, Extortion, and Exceſs, Matt. xxiii. 25. and Luke xi. 39. but from Chriſt's Example in this Particular we muſt not be forward to pronounce Men Hypocrites, becauſe we have neither that Authority, nor that Knowledge of their Hearts, which he had. Whitby's Annotations.

[†] Both the antient and preſent Condition of Tyre we have had occaſion to take notice of before, p. 1096. in the Notes: And now to do the like to Sidon. It is generally ſuppos'd to have took its Name from Sidon, a Son of Canaan, Gen. x. 15. and upon that Account to be one of the moſt ancient Cities in the Univerſe. It was formerly very ſtrong both by Art and Nature, having on the North-Side a Fort, or Citadel, built on an inacceſſible Rock, and inviron'd on all Sides by the Sea. The Commodiouſneſs of its Situation made it a great Place of Trade, which brought in vaſt Riches, and made the Inhabitants not a little luxurious, inſomuch, that to live after the Manner of the Sidonians is the Scripture Phraſe, Judges xviii. 7, for to live voluptuouſly. At preſent it is ſtrangely alter'd from what it was; for, though it is well enough ſtock'd with Inhabitants, yet it is very much ſhrunk from its antient Extent, and much more from its Splendor, as appears from the great many beautiful Pillars, which lie ſcatter'd up and down in the Gardens without the preſent Walls. Tyre and Sidon were ſeated both on the Mediterranean Sea, about twenty Miles diſtant from each other, and the Country adjoining to them, which lay to the Weſt and North of Galilee, was called the Coaſts, or Territories of Tyre and Sidon. The old Inhabitants of this Tract were Deſcendants of Canaan, (for Sidon was his eldeſt Son) and continu'd in Poſſeſſion of it much longer, than they did of any other Part of the Country. The Greeks call it Phœnicia, and when, by Right of Conqueſt, it became a Province of Syria, it took the Name of Syro-phœnicia; and from hence the Woman whom St Matthew calls a Canaanite, is by St Mark ſtiled a Syro-phœnician, as being, both by Religion and Language, a Greek. Wells's Geography of the New Teſtament, c. 7. and Maundrell's Journey from Aleppo to Jeruſalem.

From Matth. xii. 1. Mark ii. 23. Luke vi. 1. John v. 1. to Matth. xvii. 14. Mark ix. 14 Luke ix. 37. John vii. 1.

Our Lord (for the Trial of her Faith) ſeem'd, at firſt, to take no Notice of her, until his Diſciples (to get rid of her Importunity) deſir'd him to grant her Requeſt, and diſmiſs her. His Miniſtry, he told them, was confin'd to Judea, nor was he properly ſent to any, but the loſt Sheep of the Houſe of Iſrael. All this the poor Woman heard, but ſo far was ſhe from being diſcourag'd by ſuch Coldneſs, that, advancing nearer, ſhe threw herſelf proſtrate at his Feet, imploring his Help for her Child; and when (in an harſh Metaphor) he told her, that it was not proper to work thoſe Miracles for an Heathen, which were originally deſigned for God's People, the Jews; the afflicted Mother own'd indeed the Truth of what he had alledg'd, but then (continuing the ſame Figure) ſhe humbly hop'd, that a poor diſtreſſed Heathen might, in ſome ſmall Meaſure, partake of the Mercies, which were more peculiarly promiſed to the Jews. Which Anſwer was ſo highly expreſſive of the Woman's Humility, Faith, and Reliance, that he granted her Petition; ſo that, when ſhe return'd home, ſhe found her Daughter laid upon the Bed, and perfectly well.

Matth. xv. 29. Mark vii. 31.

From the Coaſts of Sidon, our Lord paſs'd Eaſtward to Decapolis †, and from thence, towards the Sea of Galilee, where, in his Way, he cur'd a deaf and dumb Man, by putting his Fingers † in his Ears, and ſome of his Spittle upon his Tongue; and thence repairing to a Mountain, he not only cur'd every Perſon that was brought unto him, whatever his Malady or Diſtemper was, but, in the Concluſion, fed all the Multitude, which amounted to four Thouſand Men, beſides Women and Children, (and who, for three Days ſucceſſively, had been attending him) with ſeven Loaves, and a few ſmall Fiſhes.

Matt. xv. 29. Mark viii. 10. His Reaſoning with the Phariſees and Sadducees, and with his own Diſciples.

Having thus diſmiſs'd the Company, he embark'd, with his Diſciples, for the Coaſt of Dalmanutha †; but no ſooner was he arriv'd there, than the Phariſees, joining with their Enemies the Sadducees, came, and demanded of him a Sign from Heaven, in order to convince them, that he was the true Meſſiah: But having firſt upbraided them with their Acuteneſs in diſcerning the Face of the Sky, and from thence the Prognoſticks of fair or foul Weather, and their Blindneſs in not perceiving the manifeſt Signs of the Meſſiah's Coming, he remitted them (as he had done before) to the Miracle of his own Reſurrection, and ſo ſailed back with his Diſciples.

Matth. xvi. 5. Mark viii. 14.

His Diſciples, in the Hurry of their Departure, had forgot to take Bread with them; and therefore, when our Saviour, in their Paſſage, gave them Caution to take care of the Leaven * of the Phariſees and Sadducees, and they were ignorant enough to take his Words in a literal Senſe, he firſt gently reprov'd the Blindneſs of their Underſtandings, and the Shortneſs of their Memories, who had ſo ſoon forgotten his miraculous Multiplication of the Loaves and Fiſhes, at two different Times, and then gave them to underſtand, that his Words did not concern the Leaven of Bread, but the corrupt Doctrines of the Phariſees and Sadducees.

† It is a Country in Paleſtine, which was ſo called, becauſe it contain'd ten Cities, ſome ſituated on the Eaſt, and others on the Weſt Side of the River Jordan; the 1ſt and principal City is Scythopolis, and the reſt (according to Pliny) are, 2d, Philadelphia; 3d, Raphanæ; 4th, Gadara; 5th, Hippos; 6th, Dion; 7th, Pella; 8th, Geraſa; 9th, Canatha; and 10th, Damaſcus; tho' others reckon them after another Manner, as Pliny himſelf obſerves, lib. v. c. 18. Calmet's Dictionary, under the Word.

† Chriſt often made uſe of viſible Signs to repreſent that divine inviſible Virtue, which was inherent in him, and which, upon that Occaſion, he intended to exert: And therefore, becauſe deaf Perſons ſeem to have their Ears clos'd, he puts his Fingers into the Man's Ears, to intimate, that, by his Power, he would open them; and, becauſe the Tongue of the Dumb ſeems to be ty'd, or to cleave to the Palate, therefore he moiſten'd it with Spittle, to ſignify that he would looſe, and give free Motion to it. Theſe, 'tis true, were not capable to effect the Cure, but they had this Uſe in them, that they excited the Obſervation and Attention of the People, before whom theſe Cures were wrought. Whitby's and Beauſobre's Annotations.

* The Leaven of the Phariſees was their Hypocriſy, and too ſcrupulous Obſervance of the Traditions of their Elders; and That of the Sadducees was their Denial of the Exiſtence of Angels and Devils, the Reſurrection of the Body, and the Immortality of the Soul; ſo that the Meaning of our Saviour's Caution to his Apoſtles is: —— To avoid the

With this Diſcourſe they landed at Bethſaida, which (tho' the Birth-Place of ſeveral of his Apoſtles) had by the Perverſeneſs and Infidelity of its Inhabitants ſo offended him, that, when a blind Man was preſented to him for Cure, he would not do it in the City, in the Sight of the Inhabitants; but, taking him out of the Gate, he anointed his Eyes with his Spittle, and laid his Hands on them. The Man, at firſt, ſaw Objects indiſtinctly, Men, like Trees walking, but when our Lord had laid his Hands upon him the ſecond Time, he reſtor'd him to his perfect Sight, and ſo ſent him Home, with a Charge † not to return into the City, nor to diſcover the Thing to any Perſon belonging to that Place.

Matt. xvi. 13. Mark viii. 27. Luke ix. 18.

From that Place he departed into the Coaſts of Cæſarea Philippi †, where being minded to make ſome Trial of his Apoſtles Faith and Proficiency, he demanded of them, what Opinion Mankind had of him, and whom they took him to be? Some (ſay they) take you to be John the Baptiſt †, riſen from the Dead; ſome Elias, ſent down from Heaven; and others Jeremias, or ſome other of the antient Prophets, reſtor'd to Life again: But, when he continu'd aſking what their Notion of him was, and Simon † (in the Name of the reſt) had made an open Confeſſion,

† The Reaſon of our Saviour's giving the Man this Charge, is founded upon the Infidelity of the People of Bethſaida, wherewith he upbraids them, Matth. xi. 21.

† This City is ſituated near the Head of the Jordan, and was by the Canaanites called Laiſh, or Lechem, Judg. xviii. 7. but, being taken by ſome of the Danites, it was by them called Dan, and is generally reputed the utmoſt Border Northward of the Land of Iſrael. It was uſually called, by Heathen Writers, Paneas, from the adjoining Spring, Paneum, or Panion, which is commonly taken for the Fountain-Head of Jordan. Auguſtus Cæſar gave it, and all the Territories belonging to it, to Herod the Great. He, having rebuilt the Place, gave it, and the Tetrarchy of Ituræa and Trachonitis, to which it adjoin'd, to his youngeſt Son Philip, who, when he had enlarg'd and beautify'd it, ſo as to make it the Capital of his Dominions, and chief Place of his Reſidence, gave it the Name of Cæſarea Philippi, partly, to compliment Tiberius Cæſar, who was then Emperor; partly, to preſerve the Memory of his own Name; and, partly, to diſtinguiſh it from another Cæſarea, mention'd in Acts x. 1. ſituate on the Mediterranean, and built by his Father, in Honour of his great Benefactor Auguſtus Cæſar. Wells's Geography of the New Teſtament.

† Thoſe, who held, that Jeſus was John the Baptiſt riſen from the Dead, were of the ſame Opinion with Herod the Tetrarch, Matth. xiv. 2, and ſeem to have imbib'd the Notion of the Phariſees, who (according to Joſephus) us'd to ſay, that a good Man might eaſily return to Life again. Thoſe, who took him for Elias, ran into the general Opinion of the Nation, that Elias was to come before the Meſſiah, and anoint him, when he came; and therefore, notwithſtanding his Doctrine and Miracles, they could not conceive him to be the Meſſiah, ſo long as his mean Appearance was contrary to their Expectations: And thoſe, who thought him to be Jeremias, ſeem to have eſpous'd the Sentiment of ſome of their Doctors, who look'd upon that Prophet as the Head of the whole Order, not improbably upon the Character, which God gives him, Before I formed thee in the Belly, I knew thee, and, before thou waſt out of the Womb, I ſanctified thee, and I ordained thee a Prophet to the Nations, Jer. i. 5. Whitby's and Beauſobre's Annotations.

† That the reſt of the Apoſtles knew and believ'd the great Truth, which St Peter here declares, no one can doubt, who calls to mind the Atteſtation made of it before by John the Baptiſt, John i. 34. the frequent Confeſſions of it by evil Spirits diſpoſſeſs'd before their Eyes, Mark iii. 15. and that full Declaration of it in the Name of the whole Fraternity, We believe, and are ſure, that thou art that Chriſt, the Son of the living God, John vi. 69. for which Reaſon we find the Fathers, upon this Occaſion, ſpeaking of St Peter, as the Mouth, the Tongue, the Voice of the Church, and a Kind of Foreman to the reſt of the Apoſtles; for this they might think a Matter of Decency and good Manners, a Means to prevent Confuſion and Diſorder, and a Token of that Union and Harmony, which was among them, that one Man ſhould ſpeak for all the reſt. And why that one Man ſhould be St Peter, rather than any of the reſt, may very reaſonably be imputed to the Seniority of his Age, the natural Fervor of his Temper, and his longer Attendance upon our Bleſſed Saviour, than ſeveral of the reſt had been employ'd in. Theſe are ſufficient Reaſons for his delivering the Judgment of the Company, and for our accounting his Confeſſion the common Voice of all, to a Queſtion, which had evidently been propounded to them all. Stanhope, on the Epiſtles and Goſpels, Vol. IV.

Confeſſion, that he was Chriſt, the Son of the living God, he not only allow'd that Confeſſion to be true, and what was confirm'd by the Atteſtation † of God himſelf, but, in Alluſion to the Name, he had given him, which ſignifies a Rock †, or Stone, he told Simon, "That he would make him a Foundation-Stone, or a prime Miniſter † in building his Church, which ſhould be ſo firmly eſtabliſh'd, that all the Power † and Policy of its Enemies ſhould not be able, at any Time, to deſtroy it; and that, for the more orderly Government of it, he would give him the Keys of the Kingdom of Heaven, ſo that his Sentence, whenever it ſhould regularly exclude, or admit any Perſon into the Boſom of the Church upon Earth, ſhould, in like Manner, be ratify'd and confirm'd in Heaven." But then, to prevent the ill Uſe, that might be made of this Diſcovery, he ſtrictly charg'd his Apoſtles ‖ not to declare to any Man, that he was the Meſſiah.

Perceiving

† The Words in the Text are, Fleſh and Blood hath not revealed this to thee, but my Father which is in Heaven, Matth. xvi. 17. but how did God reveal this to St Peter? Thoſe who pretend that he had a particular Revelation, not vouchſafed to any others, without which he could not have own'd Chriſt to have been the Son of God, muſt not only allow the like Revelation to Nathanael, John i. 49. to the Centurion, who was preſent at our Lord's Crucifixion, Matth. xxvii. 54. and to all others, who made Declaration of the ſame Faith; but muſt likewiſe excuſe all thoſe Jews, who did not believe in Chriſt, becauſe it was not in their Power ſo to do without this peculiar Revelation. Without running ourſelves into theſe Premunires therefore, we may reaſonably conclude, that the Senſe of our Saviour's Words is this,—— "What others ſay of me, viz. that I am John, Elias, Jeremias, or the like, this thou haſt learnt from Men, but the Faith, which thou haſt now confeſs'd concerning me, though it requir'd of thee a due Attention to the Proofs given of it, yet, ſince thoſe Proofs are the Doctrine, which I teach from God, and the Miracles, done in Confirmation of it, are apparently the Finger of God, thy Faith muſt be acknowledg'd to be the Reſult, not of human Wiſdom, but of Divine Revelation. God has given thee a teachable and intelligent Mind, to perceive, by my Doctrine and Miracles, that I am the true Meſſiah, notwithſtanding the Obſcurity of my Appearance, and therefore thou may'ſt be truly ſaid to be taught of God, becauſe my Doctrine is the Word, and my Miracles are the Power of God." Whitby's Annotations, and Calmet's Commentary.

† Peter was ſo called, either becauſe his being the Apoſtle of the Jews, to whom the Goſpel was firſt tender'd, might make him, in ſome Senſe, one of the firſt Foundations of the Chriſtian Church, Eph. ii. 20. or becauſe the Firmneſs and Reſolution, wherewith he ſupported the Chriſtian Cauſe, even to the Day of his Martyrdom, was very eminent and remarkable. Beauſobre's Annotations.

† It is very evident, that, whereas the Word Church is capable of two Senſes, and taken, in common Speech, ſometimes for a Society of Perſons worſhipping God, and ſometimes for a Place ſet apart for the publick Performance of ſuch Worſhip, our Saviour intends it here in the former of theſe Senſes, and that the Building of this Church (which is a Metaphor of frequent Uſe in the New Teſtament) ſignifies the doing all thoſe Things, either in private Chriſtians, or publick Communities of them, which may contribute to their Growth in Grace and Goodneſs, their mutual Strength and Support, their Perfection and Continuance; and, accordingly, Chriſtians, thus united together, are called a ſpiritual Houſe, 1 Pet. ii. 5. an heavenly Building, fitly framed together, and an Habitation of God through the Spirit, Eph. ii. 21, 22. Stanhope, on the Epiſtles and Goſpels, Vol. IV.

† The Words in the Text are,——The Gates of Hell ſhall not prevail againſt it, Mat. xvi. 18. Some Interpreters mean by the Word Hades, which we tranſlate Hell, the State, or Place of the Dead, and by the Gates of Hades, the Power of Death; and ſo the Words, apply'd to the Members of Chriſt's myſtical Body, or to particular Chriſtians, will mean, "That tho', at preſent, Death hath the Dominion over them, yet ſhall not his Conqueſt of thoſe, that die in the Lord, be abſolute and final. They ſhall not continue dead to all Eternity; but ſhall revive, a ſecond Time, to a better Life, and triumph over this laſt great Enemy of Mankind." Others by Hell underſtand the Place of infernal Torments; and ſo, by an eaſy Figure, apply it to the Devil and his Angels, inhabiting thoſe Regions of Darkneſs; but then, becauſe the Gates of Cities are not only, in all Countries, Places of Strength, but, among the Jews more eſpecially, were Places of Judicature, and where Magiſtrates met to conſult for the Security of the Publick, it hence comes to paſs, that by the Gates of Hell they mean the Strength and Policy of the Wicked, and ſo make the Senſe of our Saviour's Promiſe to be this,——"That, notwithſtanding all the wicked Contrivances of Satan and his Inſtruments, to deſtroy the Profeſſion of Chriſtianity in the World, yet all their Power and Policy ſhould not be able to effect it. Chriſt's holy Religion ſhould ſtand and flouriſh, in deſpite of their wicked Contrivances; and, however a Defection might happen in ſome particular Places, to the End of the World, he ſhould never want a Society of Men, confeſſing, with St Peter, that Jeſus is the Chriſt, the Son of the living God, Matt. xvi. 16. Whitby's and Hammond's Annotations, and Stanhope, on the Epiſtles and Goſpels, Vol. IV.

‖ In ſeveral Parts of the Goſpel we find our Saviour enjoining the People, whom he had cur'd, not to make any Publication of his Miracles, Matt. viii. 4. and ix. 30. but it is an Injunction of a particular Nature not to diſcover that he Perceiving by this Diſcourſe with Peter, that his Diſciples had got a right Notion of his Office and Divinity, he began thence-forward to prepare their Minds for his Sufferings, and to talk more openly of his Death and Reſurrection. One Day therefore, as he was inſiſting on the Sufferings, which he was to undergo at Jeruſalem ‖, and Peter, unable to endure a Thought ſo diſagreeable to the Dignity of his Maſter, deſir'd him to deſiſt †, he gave him a very ſharp Rebuke †, as a Perſon, whoſe Advice croſs'd his gracious Purpoſes of Man's Redemption, and ſavour'd of nothing but worldly Grandeur; and therefore, to extinguiſh in them all Notions of a temporal Kingdom, he called his Diſciples and told them, that, "Whoever pretended to profeſs his Re-"ligion, ſhould take up his Croſs †, or "patiently ſubmit to all Manner of Per-"ſecutions, in ſure and certain Hope of "an happy Immortality, which he would "procure for his Followers, when he was "in his Kingdom, in which, ſome, that "were then preſent among them, 'ere it "were he was the Chriſt, tho' this was an Article neceſſary for every Man to know and believe, in order to his Salvation. Now, tho' this was a Point neceſſary for all to know, yet the Apoſtles were not the proper Perſons, at this Time, to declare it, becauſe it might look like a Kind of Confederacy between them, if they ſhould prove too laviſh in the Commendations of their Maſter. It would much better become his infinite Wiſdom, therefore, to find out himſelf a proper Opportunity for the Diſcovery of this great Truth, without drawing the Envy of the Phariſees upon him, and obſtructing the Progreſs of the Goſpel, which could hardly be believ'd, conſidering the low Circumſtances, wherein he appear'd; and which, had it been believ'd, might have encourag'd the Attempt of the Jews to come, and make him a King, John vi. 15. What therefore our Saviour ſays to his three Apoſtles, in Relation to his Transfiguration, that they ſhould tell no Man of it, until he was riſen from the Dead, Matt. xvii. 9. is applicable to this Paſſage likewiſe. For, after his Reſurrection, they were by Office to be his Witneſſes, and to declare to others that he was the Chriſt, becauſe they could then do it, not only without Suſpicion of Confederacy, but with greater Advantages and Succeſs, after that Chriſt had taken Poſſeſſion of his Kingdom, and had teſtify'd this, by ſitting down at the Right-Hand of Power, and, by ſending down upon them the Holy Ghoſt, to enable them to confirm their Teſtimony. Pool's, Beauſobre's, and Whitby's Annotations.

‖ Jeruſalem was the Place, where this Tragedy was to be acted, becauſe, as our Lord obſerves, a Prophet could not ſuffer out of that City, Luke xiii. 33. for there ſat the Sanhedrim, that was to try him; and there liv'd the Roman Governor, who had the Power of Life and Death, and was to condemn him. Whitby's Annotations.

† Peter's Words in the Greek are ἵλεώς σοι, Κύριε, Matth. xvi. 22. which we may render propitius eſto tibi, Domine, favour thyſelf, or be kind to thyſelf. "Since the Rulers at Jeruſalem have ſuch malevolent Deſigns againſt "thee, why ſhouldſt thou think of going any more among them? If they intend to evil intreat thee, and take away thy "Life, be thou kind, and favourable to thyſelf, avoid the Danger by keeping at a Diſtance from it, and conſult thine "one Preſervation by continuing here." This ſeems to be the proper Senſe of St Peter's Words, and they were doubtleſs ſpoken with a good Intention, and ſingular Affection for his Maſter, but ſtill they argu'd great Weakneſs in him, in pretending to contradict one, whom he had juſt before acknowledg'd to be the Chriſt, the Son of God, and denote him ignorant of the Redemption of Mankind by that Death, which God in his wiſe Counſel had determin'd. Pool's Annotations, and Young's Sermons, Vol. II.

† The Words of our Saviour, upon this Occaſion, are,—— Get thee behind me, Satan; thou art an Offence to me, Matth. xvi. 23. Not that we are to think, that our Saviour ever imagin'd, that St Peter, in this Advice, had any pernicious Deſigns againſt him, as the great Enemy of Mankind has, when he tempts, and deludes them into Sin; but his only Meaning is, that his Interpoſition in this Affair was very unreaſonable, and highly repugnant to his Deſign of coming into the World, which was to ſave it. "Thou thinkeſt perhaps, ſays he, Peter, that, in this "thy Advice, thou ſheweſt thy Kindneſs to me, as a Friend, that reſpects my Welfare, and art tender of my Pre-"ſervation; but, inſtead of that, thou art an Adverſary to me, (for ſo the Word Satan ſignifies, Numb. xxii. 32. "2 Sam. xix. 23. 1 Kings v. 4, &c.) in thy endeavouring to draw me aſide from doing what is my Father's Will "and Command, John x. 18. I told thee that I muſt ſuffer; that ſuch is the determinate Counſel of God, and "ſuch my fix'd Purpoſe and Reſolution; and therefore all Advice to the contrary is ſo far from pleaſing, that it is "an Offence to me; I cannot away with it; and therefore get thee behind me, Satan: For, tho' there is no Malice "in thy Intention, yet imprudently haſt thou run upon the ſame Advice, that Satan uſes the moſt ſucceſsfully of all "others to undo Men by, and that is, the Advice of Self-indulgence. For favour thyſelf is the moſt artificial of all "the Suggeſtions of the Devil; becauſe That being made ſpecious with the Pretences of Reaſon and Juſtice, and "ſweeten'd by its Agreeableneſs to that of Self-love, with which all Men do naturally abound, it ſeldom fails of "being ſwallow'd, tho' Poiſon and Death lurk under it." Pool's and Whitby's Annotations. Calmet's Commentary, and Young's Sermons, Vol. II.

† Among ſeveral Nations it was a Cuſtom for the Criminal to bear the Croſs, whereon he was to ſuffer, to the Place of Execution, Lipſius de Cruce, lib. ii. c. 65. and, in Alluſion to this, our Saviour makes uſe of the Phraſe to denote our chearfully bearing thoſe Trials, and Perſecutions, which the Divine Providence brings upon us in the Execution of our Duty, and our Adherence to his moſt holy Religion. Pool's and Beauſobre's Annotations.

† Our Saviour's Words are theſe: —— Verily I ſay unto you, there are ſome of them, who are ſtanding here, who ſhall not taſte of Death, until they ſee the Son of Man coming in his Kingdom, Matth. xvi. 28. Some Interpreters, both ancient and modern, underſtand this Paſſage of our Lord's Transfiguration on the Mount, in which there was ſome Glimpſe of the Glory of his Father, and the Attendance of Angels; but, beſides that this happen'd too ſoon (no more than ſix Days) after theſe Words were ſpoken, to need the Expreſſion of ſome of them not ſeeing Death until it came to paſs, which muſt at leaſt denote ſome Diſtance of Time; 'tis very plain, that, at this wonderful Sight, none of the three Apoſtles could behold Chriſt coming in his Kingdom, becauſe his Kingdom did not commence, till after his Reſurrection, when all Power both in Heaven and Earth was given him, Matth. xxviii. 18. Others imagine, that the Paſſage relates to the great Day of Judgment, becauſe 'tis ſaid, that Chriſt will reward every Man according to his Work, Chap. xvi. 27. But then, on the other Hand, it may be alledg'd, that there was none in the Company then ſtanding there, who was not to die, or to taſte of Death (which is the Jewiſh Phraſe) long before the Coming of that great and terrible Day of the Lord: And therefore, others have concluded, that This Coming of Chriſt in his Kingdom relates to another Event, viz. The Deſtruction of the Jewiſh Church and Nation, wherein our Lord may properly enough be ſaid to come in the Glory of his Father, and with his Angels, and to reward the Jews in deſtroying them, and Chriſtians in preſerving them, according to their Works. This happen'd above forty Years after our Saviour's Death, when ſome of the Company (as particularly John the Evangeliſt was) might be then alive, and Witneſſes of the Accompliſhment of our Lord's Menaces againſt that devoted City and Nation. This is the popular Interpretation at preſent, but I cannot ſee, why the other Parts of our Saviour's Exaltation may not be taken into the Account; for, as he began to enter upon his Kingdom by his Reſurrection, and Aſcenſion into Heaven, ſo his ſending the Holy Ghoſt upon the Apoſtles, as well as the terrible Judgment, which he brought upon the Jewiſh Nation, may all be look'd upon as the Effects and Conſequences of his glorious Reign. Whitby's and Beauſobre's Annotations, and Calmet's Commentary.

‖ What St Luke calls (ὡσεὶ ἡμέραι ὀκτὼ) about eight Days, Chap. ix. 28. St Matthew, and St Mark, make after ſix Days: But the Reaſon of this ſeeming Diſagreement is, that the two laſt Evangeliſts compute only the intire Days between our Saviour's Diſcourſe, and his going up into the Mount, and therefore ſtile them ſix; whereas St Luke, including both the Days of his Diſcourſe, and his Aſcent, calls them eight Days. And this is evident from the Word ὡσεὶ, which, when any Sum is mention'd, is always added to ſignify, that it is not exact, but wants ſomething to make it compleat, as may be ſeen in Matth. xiv. 21. Luke i. 56.—iii. 23.—xxiii. 44. John iv. 6.—xix. 14. Acts ii. 41, &c. Whitby's Annotations.

† That this was Mount Tabor, (which ſtood in the Midſt of the Lower Galilee, at an equal Diſtance between the Mediterranean, and the Sea of Tiberias) is a Matter confirm'd by the Voice of all Antiquity, but ſome modern Writers are of a different Opinion, becauſe Tabor (ſay they) does not ſtand in the Way between Cæſarea Philippi and Capernaum, and that our Saviour travelled from Cæſarea to this Mount, (which is almoſt through the whole Length of Galilee) is a little too much to ſuppoſe; Lightfoot on Mark ix. But this he had Space enough to do in the ſix intervening Days between his Diſcourſe and his Transfiguration, and that he really did ſo, is made very probable, both from St Matthew, and St Mark, who ſeem to intimate, that, after he had finiſh'd his Diſcourſe with his Diſciples, he enter'd immediately upon his Journey; and, accordingly, we hear nothing more of him, until the Expiration of ſix whole Days, Matth. xvii. 1. Luke ix. 28. as to the Deſcription of the Mount itſelf, ſee p. 574. in the Notes, only we may add here from Mr Maundrell, that, on the Top of it, are three Grotto's, made to repreſent the three Tabernacles, which St Peter propos'd to erect, in the Aſtoniſhment that poſſeſs'd him, at the Glory of the Transfiguration. knowing what he ſaid in his Fright and Tranſport, a bright and ſhining Cloud ſuddenly came over them, and a Voice from thence proclaim'd, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleaſed; hear ye him. Upon which the Apoſtles were ſeiz'd with a greater Conſternation than ever, and fell proſtrate upon the Ground; but, upon our Lord's touching, and encouraging them, they look'd up, and ſaw none but him; for the other two were vaniſh'd.

Matth. xvii. 9. Mark ix. 9.

As they deſcended the Mount, he ſtrictly commanded them not to tell any Man what ſtrange Things they had ſeen, until he was riſen from the Dead. They were ready to obey his Commands, but did not rightly underſtand his laſt Words †, and therefore they had ſome Altercations among themſelves concerning the Meaning of his Riſing from the Dead: And another Difficulty they had to ſolve; for, having ſeen Elias with our Saviour upon the Mount, they could not forbear aſking him, What Reaſon the Scribes and Phariſees had for aſſerting, that that Prophet was to come upon the Earth before the Meſſiah? To which our Saviour replied, That theſe Jewiſh Doctors were not miſtaken in their Notion, becauſe Elias was in Effect come already, and had received the ſame bad Treatment from his Countrymen, that himſelf, in a ſhort Time, was to expect; from whence they perceived, that, by the Elias he ſpoke of, he plainly intended John the Baptiſt.

The OBJECTION.

“THE Pool of Betheſda (if what “St John (a) relates of it be true) “was certainly one of the moſt remark“able Places in all Jeruſalem, Its Cures “were ſo wonderful, and ſo highly con“ducive to the Honour of the Jewiſh Na“tion, that, for what Reaſon the other “Evangeliſts ſhould ſay nothing of them, “we can hardly imagine; but why Joſe“phus (b), who profeſſedly wrote the Hi“ſtory of the Jews, and is always forward “enough to boaſt in their Praiſe, ſhould “give us no Manner of Account of this pe“culiar Manifeſtation of God's diſtin“guiſhing Providence over that People, is “a Thing utterly unaccountable. Since “the Evangeliſt therefore ſtands alone in “this Story, it would have been ſome “Satisfaction to his Readers, had he a “little more minutely recounted when “this Pool firſt acquir'd its miraculous “Quality, and how long it retain'd it; “upon what particular Occaſions, and “how oft the Angel deſcended to trouble “its Waters; and by what Means its “Waters, when troubled, became both “impregnated with a ſanative Virtue, “and yet ſo limited in their Operation, “as to cure but one diſeas'd Perſon at “once.

“(c) The Raiſing of the Widow's Son to Life again might poſſibly be a true Miracle, (d) tho' Inſtances there have been of the miſtaken Death of Perſons, who, from a State of Lethargy, have reviv'd; as might be (e) the Caſe of the Ruler's Daughter likewiſe, (f) becauſe we find our Saviour ſo ſtrictly enjoining her Parents to conceal the Miracle. But, whatever may be ſaid in behalf of theſe, 'tis highly improbable, that what (g) happen'd to the Demoniacks, in the Country of the Gadarens, ſhould be true, (h) not only becauſe the Jews, who dwelt in theſe Parts, were prohibited to eat Swines Fleſh, and, (i) under the Pain of an Anathema, forbidden to keep any in their Country; but, even upon the Suppoſition, that the Swine belonged to the neighbouring Gentiles, it will be no eaſy Matter to vindicate the Goodneſs and Juſtice of Chriſt, in permitting ſo large an Herd thus to be deſtroyed, and their Owners injured in ſo egregious a Manner.

“(k) Our Lord's Transfiguration on the Mount was, doubtleſs, a glorious Sight; but ſtill we are at a Loſs for the Reaſon of his appearing in ſuch an extraordinary Manner at this Time, rather than another; (l) for his making a Mountain, rather than a Valley, the Scene; and his Apoſtles, (who were of his Party) rather than the Multitude, (who wanted Conviction) the Witneſſes of this his Majeſty; nor can we conceive, why the true Moſes and Elias (not any Spectres or Apparitions in their Likeneſs) ſhould be preſent with Jeſus on the Mount, and the Apoſtles overhear them diſcourſe together, and yet not leave us one Word of what was the Subject of their Converſation.

“We cannot but admire likewiſe, why John the Baptiſt, who was ſent into the World for this very Purpoſe, that he might (m) bear Witneſs of Chriſt, (as if he had now forgot himſelf, or was grown diffident of what he had ſo often teſtify'd to others) (n) ſhould ſend his Diſciples to enquire of him, whether he was the true Meſſias or no. Why our Bleſſed Saviour, who, as a Teacher ſent from Heaven, was to inſtruct the People in the moſt plain Truths, made uſe of the parabolical Method, (wherein there is a manifeſt Obſcurity) eſpecially, ſince the declar'd End of his doing ſo is ſaid to be, (o) that ſeeing they might not ſee, and hearing, they might not underſtand: Why he did not (p) vouchſafe the Phariſees a Sign from Heaven, to approve himſelf the Prophet foretold by Moſes, eſpecially ſince the Sign of the Prophet Jonas (which was only typical of his future Reſurrection) was incompetent for a preſent Sign, and incapable of giving them any Satisfaction: Or, laſtly, why he made ſuch mean Inſtruments, as obſcure, illiterate Fiſhermen, to be the firſt Preachers of the Goſpel, when, in all ſubſequent Ordinations, a tolerable Stock of Knowledge and Learning, as well as ſome Influence and Authority among the People, is thought no bad Qualification for that Office.

“Whether the Evangeliſts have given us a right Repreſentation of our Saviour's Behaviour, we ſhall not pretend to determine; but a Perſon of a philoſophic Soul, much more of a Divine Original, ſhould be ſeated above all paſſionate Reſentments, one would think, and look upon his Enemies (if he had any) with Pity and Contempt, rather than with (q) Anger and Indignation: And ſo calm and compos'd ſhould his whole Deportment be, as to give no Umbrage to any, much leſs to his neareſt Relations (who may be preſum'd to know him beſt) to call in Queſtion the Soundneſs of his Intellectuals, Anſwer'd, by ſhewing that St John's Goſpel was to ſupply the Defects of the other Evangeliſts.

St JOHN, according to the general Senſe of Antiquity, having peruſ'd the other Evangeliſts, and obſerv'd in what Particulars they were defective, at the Perſuaſion of the other Biſhops of Aſia, was prevailed upon to write his Goſpel, as a Supplement to their Omiſſions. Whoever will give himſelf the Trouble to compare his Hiſtory with that of the other Evangeliſts, will find this Notion, in a great Meaſure, verify'd. For (not to mention other Particulars) our Saviour's Miracles, antecedent to his Reſurrection, as they are recorded by St John, are no more than eight. 1ſt, His turning Water into Wine at the Marriage of Cana in Galilee. 2d, His telling the Samaritan Woman the Secrets of her Life. 3d, His healing the Nobleman's Son at Capernaum. 4th, His curing the lame Man at the Pool of Betheſda. 5th, His feeding five Thouſand Men with five Barley-Loaves, and two Fiſhes. 6th, His walking upon the Surface of the Water, and calming the Storm at Sea. 7th, His giving Sight to a blind Man by anointing his Eyes with Clay. And 8th, his raiſing Lazarus from the Dead. Now all theſe are omitted by the former Evangeliſts, except the 5th, and 6th, which St John ſeems to have recorded, chiefly to introduce a moral Diſcourſe, which our Saviour took occaſion to make to the People, and which the other ſacred Penmen had omitted; which is a plain Argument, that the Intent of St John's Goſpel was to ſupply the Defects of the other three; and that therefore, their Silence is no Manner of Argument againſt St John's Account of the Pool of Betheſda.

and why Joſephus omits mentioning the Pool of Betheſda.

It may ſeem a little ſtrange indeed, that Joſephus ſhould give us no Account of it, eſpecially, when the ſanative Virtue of its Waters, occaſion'd by ſo extraordinary a Means, could not but redound to the Honour of his Country. (z) But, when it is conſider'd, that the like Omiſſions have been frequently made by other Hiſtorians, who, in their Writings, have neglected to inſert ſeveral conſiderable Matters of Antiquity, merely becauſe they were ſo familiar, and well known to them: (a) When it is conſider'd, that Joſephus, in particular, wrote his Hiſtory for the Information of the Greeks and learned Romans, who were Heathens, and, for Fear of ſhocking their Belief, is very tender of dwelling too much upon Miracles: When it is conſider'd, that he is entirely ſilent in ſeveral other Inſtances, that bear ſome Relation to our Saviour Chriſt; that he does not ſo much as intimate the Slaughter of the Infants at Bethlehem, mention'd by St Matthew (b), not give any clear Account of the Roman Cenſus, or Taxation, which occaſion'd our Lord to be born at Bethlehem, as it is recorded by St Luke (c): When it is conſider'd, that the miraculous Cure of the impotent Man by Jeſus had ſo viſible a Connection, that he could not, in Decency, give an Account of the one, without making ſome Mention of the other, and therefore choſe rather to decline the Hiſtory of both; and, laſtly, when it is conſider'd, that this Pool (according to (d) Tertullian) "ceas'd to be beneficial to the Jews, "upon their final Perſeverance in Blaſphe- "my and Infidelity againſt Chriſt;" there is no Wonder at all, that Joſephus, who was very defective in other Matters, and no great Lover of Miracles, ſhould omit giving us an Account of a Pool, whoſe Virtue was extinct and gone, when firſt he wrote his Antiquities, and which he could not well make mention of, without giving an implicit Honour to Chriſt.

When it firſt had, and loſt its ſanative Quality.

That, upon the Death of our Bleſſed Saviour, this Pool might loſe its ſanative Quality, is no improbable Conjecture, becauſe the Jews no longer deſerv'd ſuch a peculiar Bleſſing; but when at firſt it came to be impregnated with it, is not a Matter of ſo eaſy Solution. The Words in the Text are, that an (e) Angel went down (κατὰ καιρὸν) at a certain Seaſon, which (f) a learned Author chuſes rather to render at the Seaſon, (i. e. of the Paſſover) and troubled the Water; from whence he infers, that the firſt Time of this ſupernatural Moving of the Water, and, conſequently, of the Pool's receiving a miraculous healing Quality, was, at this Paſſover; which was the ſecond, after the Commencement of our Saviour's publick Miniſtry, and the Reaſon he aſſigns for its being this, rather than any other Paſſover, is,——"That our "Saviour, having gone through all the "Cities of Galilee, and moſt of the other "Parts of the Country of Judea, preach- "ing, and healing Diſeaſes, came up to "Jeruſalem at the Paſſover, with an In- "tent to fix his Abode there; that, to "prepare his Way before him, God "might give this Pool an healing Quality, "(g) thereby to ſhew the Jews, (in a "typical Manner) that the Meſſenger of "the Covenant was coming among them, "to open a Fountain (h) to the Houſe of "David, and to the Inhabitants of Jeru- "ſalem, for Sin and for Uncleanneſs; but "that, inſtead of giving him a kind Re- "ception, they took counſel together, how "they might take away his Life, which "made him withdraw himſelf from them, "and, upon his Departure, the miracu- "lous Virtue of the Water ceas'd." The only Objection againſt this Hypotheſis is, that it makes the Miracle of no more than a Week, or ten Days Continuance, which is too ſhort a Space for ſo great a Company (as is here repreſented) to be gather'd together; to have taken up their Abode (as it were) in the Apartments of this Hoſpital; and to be acquainted ſo perfectly (as the Paralytick, in his Diſcourſe with our Saviour, ſeems to be) with the Nature of the Pool, and the Manner of its preternatural Perturbation. And therefore, (to follow the Generality of Commentators) tho' we ſhould ſuppoſe, that its medicinal Virtue began at the Time of this ſecond Paſſover, yet we may ſtill adhere to the Opinion of Tertullian, and ſay, that, at certain Times at leaſt, it continu'd with the Jews (and a ſingular Bleſſing it was) until they had filled the Meaſure of their Iniquity, (i) by denying the Holy One, and the Juſt, and by killing the Prince of Life.

How it came by it.

How the Waters of this Pool came by their ſanative Quality, Opinions, in ſome Meaſure, have been divided. Our (k) learned Hammond (who ſometimes affects a Singularity of Interpretation) ſuppoſes, that the Waters became medicinal by being impregnated with an healing Warmth from the Blood and Entrails of the ſacrific'd Beaſts, that were waſh'd there, and that the Angel in the Text is not to be underſtood of any of thoſe celeſtial Beings, that are uſually diſtinguiſh'd by that Name, but only of a common Meſſenger, viz. an Officer, or Servant of the Prieſts, who, at a proper Seaſon, was ſent by him to ſtir the the Pool. The great (l) Bartholine ſuppoſes, that theſe Waters were naturally medicinal, and that their Commotion was occaſion'd by an extraordinary Fermentation of ſome Mineral in them; and therefore, he makes the Angel no more than a divine Power, which originally gave this Efficacy, tho' it was exerted in a natural Way. But, beſides that the Word ἄγγελος ſeldom occurs in the former, and never in this Senſe, in any hiſtorical Narrative in Scripture; there are theſe plain Objections againſt both Hypotheſes, viz. (m) That, be the Waters impregnated with what Ingredient we pleaſe, (had their Operation been mechanical) they muſt neceſſarily have cur'd more than one Perſon, at every Commotion, or Fermentation; and yet, they never can be ſuppos'd of Efficacy enough to cure all Manner of Diſeaſes, in an Inſtant, and at one ſingle Immerſion, as the Waters of Betheſda are repreſented to do: And therefore, waving all ſuch groundleſs Suppoſitions, we may be allow'd to ſet the Authority of an ancient Father of the Church againſt theſe modern Names, and ſay, "That the An-" "gel, which deſcended at a certain Seaſon, gave the Water its medicinal Virtue; for the Nature of the Water was not ſanative in itſelf, (if it had, Cures would have always happen'd) but the whole depended on the Virtue communicated to it by the Angel."

Why it cur'd but one at once.

Now the true Reaſon, why the Virtue thus communicated to the Water by the Operation of an Angel, was effectual only to the curing of one Perſon at one Time, was to evince the Miraculouſneſs of the Cure. Had many been cur'd at once, the Sceptick might have imputed their Cures to the natural Virtue of the Water, and, upon this Suppoſition, been embolden'd to aſk, "Where is the Wonder of this? Do not many medicinal Baths cure various Kinds of Diſeaſes, and Multitudes of ſuch, as labour under each Diſeaſe, provided their Caſe be curable? Had one only indeed been cur'd, the firſt, that could get in after the Troubling of the Water, there would have been then a great and real Miracle: But now the Numbers make the Fact ſuſpicious. To make it appear a Miracle indeed, its Effects ſhould have been confin'd and limited to particular Times, and Perſons, and otherwiſe ſo circumſtantiated, as that the Power of God, and not of blind Nature, might have been apparent in it." But all this Language is effectually ſilenc'd by the Method, which the wiſe Providence of God took in this Caſe, and the Miracle eſtabliſh'd upon ſuch evident Conviction, as the Mouth of Infidelity itſelf cannot gainſay.

The Raiſing the Widow's Son, and Jairus's Daughter, both real Miracles.

That the Widow of Naim's Son and the Ruler of the Synagogue's Daughter were both of them really Dead, is evident from the Senſe of all, that were about them, who were actually carrying the one to his Burial, and making Preparation for the Funeral of the other; ſo that had not our Bleſſed Saviour been confident of the divine Virtue reſiding in him, whereby he was able to recover them to Life again, it would have been Madneſs in him to have attempted to do it.

"He might ſuppoſe, perhaps, that there was a Miſtake in the People, that were about them, and that theſe two young Perſons might poſſibly be in a lethargick State." But, beſides the Folly of preſuming upon a Thing, which ſcarce happens once in a Century, how could he tell, that, upon his touching the Bier of the one, or the Hand of the other, and calling upon them, they would inſtantly awake? And if they did not awake at his Call, his whole Pretenſions of being a Prophet ſent from God, with a Power to reſtore Life to the Dead, muſt as effectually have been ruin'd, as if the Perſons, here ſuppos'd in a Lethargy only, had actually been dead. But now, if we examine a little into our Lord's Conduct in both theſe Caſes, we ſhall find, that he acted, not upon any Suppoſition of Miſtake in the People, but out of the the Fulneſs of the Godhead, that dwelt in him bodily. He, coming to the City of Naim, attended with his Diſciples, meets, at the Gate, the Funeral of a certain young Man, the only Son of a Woman, that was a Widow. The Conſideration of her deſtitute Condition mov'd his Compaſſion indeed; but, for all that, he might have let the Funeral paſs. None of the Company either aſk'd, or challeng'd him to raiſe the dead Youth: It was entirely his own Offer; and an Offer, that no wiſe Man, who ſet up for a Prophet, would have ever made, had he not been conſcious (as we find he was) that he was able to perform it.

While he was at Capernaum, a Perſon of ſome Note requeſts of him to go, and heal his Daughter, who was at the Point of Death. Before he could get to the Houſe, a Meſſenger comes, and acquaints the Father, that ſhe was actually dead. (n) Here, our Lord, had a fair Opportunity to excuſe himſelf; for, tho' he might pretend to cure Diſeaſes (which was all that Jairus requeſted of him) yet it did not therefore follow, that he was to raiſe the Dead. But, inſtead of retracting, he offers, of his own Accord, to go forward, and tells the Father (as he afterwards did) that he would raiſe her to Life again: (o) Be not afraid; only believe, ſays he, and ſhe ſhall be made whole; which he could never have ſaid from any other Principle, than a Conſciouſneſs of that (p) almighty Power, whereby he is able to ſubdue all Things to himſelf.

Why our Saviour charg'd her Parents to conceal the latter.

But, tho' our Lord was conſcious of his Divine Power, yet, upon his coming to the Ruler's Houſe, inſtead of making any oſtentatious Boaſt of it, we find him, by the Modeſty of his Expreſſion, the Maid is not dead, but ſleepeth, endeavouring to conceal it. 'Tis, in a great Meaſure, indeed, owing to his Modeſty, and great Humility, that, inſtead of proclaiming, he requires the People ſo frequently to ſuppreſs the Fame of his marvellous Works: But, in the preſent Caſe, he might have ſome Regard to the Character of Jairus, as Ruler of the Synagogue, and, by this Advice of Silence, diſpenſe with his ſpeaking publickly of a Miracle, which might poſſibly draw the Malice of the Scribes and Phariſees upon him, as well as upon himſelf. In the Caſe of his raiſing Lazarus, we find, that (q) becauſe, by Reaſon of him, many of the Jews went away, and believed on Jeſus, the chief Prieſts conſulted, not only how to deſtroy Jeſus, but to put Lazarus likewiſe to Death: And much of the ſame Deſign might have been ſuſpected (which our Saviour, by this kind Caution, endeavour'd to prevent) if it once came to their Knowledge, that ſo great a Man, as a Governor of the Synagogue, by the miraculous Recovery of his Daughter, had forſaken the Religion of his Anceſtors, and was become a Convert to the Chriſtian Faith.

No Injuſtice in the Deſtruction of the Swine of Gadara.

GADARA was one of the Cities, beyond Jordan, belonging to the Country called Decapolis, which was ſometimes in the Hands of the Jews, and ſometimes of the Syrians, but, at this Time, was inhabited by both. The Syrians were Heathens, and, conſequently, made uſe of Swine, not only for Food, but for Sacrifices likewiſe: And, 'tis not improbable, that the Jews of the Country might be tempted to feed Swine, by the Advantage they made in ſelling them to their Heathen Neighbours. (r) This was againſt a Prohibition of their Law, 'tis true; but Laws, we know, are not always obſerv'd, and perhaps leaſt of all at Gadara, which, being in the Extremity of the Jewiſh Territories, and under the Juriſdiction of Heathens, left the Jews without any Reſtraint upon them, but that of Conſcience, which is too frequently violated for Sake of Gain.

To bring the Matter then to a narrow Compaſs. The Swine, which were deſtroy'd, in Conſequence of the Permiſſion, which our Saviour gave the evil Spirits Spirits to enter into them, belong'd either to the Jews, or Gentiles of Gadara: If they belong'd to the Jews, it cannot be deny'd, but they were juſtly puniſh'd for breaking their own Laws and Conſtitutions, which forbad them to keep any; nor can our Saviour's Right of inflicting the Puniſhment be called in Queſtion, becauſe it was a receiv'd Maxim among the Jews, that any Perſon, inveſted with the Character of a Prophet, and acting by the Spirit of God, might, without the Aſſiſtance of a Magiſtrate, put the Laws in Execution againſt Offenders: And therefore, we, who acknowledge our Jeſus to have been more than a Prophet, can never be at a Loſs to account for his exerciſing an Authority among the Jews, which (according to their own Confeſſion) was allowable in the loweſt of that Order. But, if the Heathens of Gadara were the Owners of theſe Swine, our Saviour might be induc'd to permit the Devils to enter into them, not only to teach them the Sacredneſs of the Jewiſh Laws, which they, on Account of the Prohibition of Swine's Fleſh, may be ſuppos'd to have ridiculed; but to cure them likewiſe of their idolatrous Worſhip of Demons, and to engage them to embrace the Chriſtian Faith. For when they ſaw our Lord's Power over ſuch a Multitude of Devils, exhibited in their Poſſeſſion of ſuch a Number of Swine (had they made a right Application of the Miracle) they could not but perceive the Truth and Divinity of his Doctrine, and the Madneſs of their worſhipping ſuch impure Spirits, as were both caſt out of the Men at his Command, and could not enter into the Swine without his Permiſſion.

They could not but perceive, I ſay, that our Saviour was a Prophet ſent from Heaven; that what he did was by a Commiſſion from God; and, conſequently, that he could not be guilty of any Injuſtice in the Deſtruction of the Swine, which, upon this Suppoſition, was not his Act, but the Act of Providence. He, indeed, as a Man, had no Right to deſtroy the People's Swine, but God, who, is the ſupreme Proprietor of the whole Earth, moſt certainly had; and ſhall we then complain of him for ſuch a Puniſhment as this, when every Day we ſee more ſurprizing Inſtances before our Eyes? When we ſee him laying whole Nations waſte with Peſtilence, with Famine, and with Earthquakes, ſhall we confeſs his ſovereign Authority in theſe Caſes, and yet, upon the Loſs of two Thouſand Swine, cry out, and ſay, Why haſt thou done this? The Heathens themſelves (upon the Suppoſition of a Providence) will acknowledge this to be unreaſonable; nor can our Saviour (as acting by a Divine Commiſſion) ever be juſtly blam'd, becauſe he once or twice did the ſame Thing, which God does every Day.

But, after all, whether the Proprietors were Jews, or Gentiles (s) the Words in the Text do not imply, that our Saviour was either principal, or acceſſary to the Deſtruction of the Swine. St Mark, indeed, tells us, that he gave the Devils Leave; and St Luke, that he ſuffer'd them to enter into the Swine; but by this is meant no more, than that he did not prevent them; that he did not interpoſe his Divine Power, in order to hinder them from entering; but, if this made our Saviour a Sharer in the Deſtruction of the Swine, by Parity of Reaſon, it will make God (becauſe he permits it) anſwerable for all the Evil, that is done under the Sun. Thus, whether we ſuppoſe the Jews, or Heathens, Owners of the Herd of Swine, our Saviour's permitting the Devils to enter into them made him not acceſſary to their Deſtruction; or, if it be ſaid, that he did it with a punitive Intent, it was either to make the Jews ſuffer for the Breach of their Law, or the Heathens for their obſtinate Idolatry; which his Character of a Prophet, and the Teſtimony of his being the Son of the Moſt High, without all Controverſy, authoriz'd him to do.

The End of Chriſt's Tranſfiguration.

From Matth. xii. 1. Mark ii. 23. Luke vi. 1. John v. 1. to Matth. xvii. 14. Mark ix. 14. Luke ix. 37. John vii. 1.

TO know the true End and Deſign of our Saviour's Transfiguration, it may not be improper to look back a little into the Context, where we find, that after Peter's confeſſing him to be (t) the Chriſt, the Son of the Living God, from that Time began he to ſhew unto his Diſciples, how that he muſt go unto Jeruſalem, and ſuffer many Things of the Elders, and chief Prieſts, and Scribes, and be killed, and be raiſed again the third Day. Nor was this all, for he foretold them, that they likewiſe were to ſuffer many grievous Perſecutions for his Name's Sake, and therefore he recommended to them the unpleaſant Doctrines of (u) Self-denial, and taking up the Croſs, and following him, with this great (tho' diſtant) Encouragement, that (x) when the Son of Man ſhould come in the Glory of his Father, with his Angels, he ſhould then reward every one according to his Works.

THESE Predictions, Doctrines, and Promiſes, were ſo contrary to the Expectation of his Diſciples, who hop'd in him to have a temporal Prince and Deliverer, a Reſtorer of the decay'd State of Iſrael, and Promoter of themſelves to great Honours and Employments, that our Saviour thought proper, (not many Days after) in order to revive their Faith and Truſt in him, and (y) to fortify their Minds againſt what was likely to enſue, to take as many with him into the Mount, as made up a legal Evidence, and there to give them an ocular Conviction of what he had promiſ'd, in Recompence of what they were to ſuffer, by aſſuming, for a While, the Luſtre * and Appearance of a glorify'd Body; which ſo rais'd their drooping Hearts, that we find St Peter immediately declaring, (z) Lord, it is good for us to be here; and, if thou wilt, let us make here three Tabernacles, one for thee, and one for Moſes, and one for Elias. For the Deſign of theſe Words is, not only to ſecure his Maſter, by ſtaying in that Retreat, from the Sufferings and Death, which would be the Conſequence of his going up to Jeruſalem, (as St Chryſoſtom and others underſtand it) but to expreſs likewiſe the Pleaſure and Satisfaction he took in this Transfiguration, and glorify'd Company; and how he reſum'd freſh Spirits, and Comforts from a Miracle, which was emblematical of the glorious State, not of Chriſt only, but of all good Chriſtians, after their Reſurrection.

Why on a Mountain.

THE only Inſtance we have in Scripture of any Transfiguration like unto this, is in the Caſe of Moſes, (a) after he had been forty Days and forty Nights with God on Mount Sinai; for, upon this Deſcent, we are told, that the Skin of his Face ſo ſhone, that the Children of Iſrael were afraid to come nigh him, and therefore he put a Veil on his Face, while he talked with them. That our Bleſſed Lord in the Act of his Transfiguration, might probably have reſpect to this preceding one of Moſes, and, both in the Nature of the Change, and the Place where 'twas wrought, deſign ſome Conformity thereunto, is what we are at Liberty to ſuppoſe; and, conſequently, can account, why the Scene of this Tranſaction was in a Mountain, rather than a Valley: And why the three Apoſtles, Peter, James, and John, and not the whole Multitude, were allow'd to be Spectators of it, we have ſeveral Reaſons to alledge.

Why the three Apoſtles, and not the Multitude admitted to it.

FOR, beſides that this was a Vouchſafement, fit only to be communicated to ſuch, as were of his more immediate Confidence, and ſtood in the higheſt Degree of his Eſteem; to ſuch, as, for their Zeal

* This is the proper Meaning of the Word μεταμορφώθη. For μορφὴ, both in the Old and New Teſtament, doth not ſignify the Eſſence, or conſtituent Properties of a Man, but only his external Shape or Appearance: As, when it is ſaid of Balſhazzar (Dan. v. 10.) and of Daniel (Chap. vii. 28.) that ἡ μορφὴ ἠλλοιώθη, their Forms were changed; of Nebuchadnezzar, that ἡ μορφή μου ἐπέστρεψεν ἐπ' ἐμέ, my Form returned to me (Dan. iv. 36.) and of Chriſt, that he appear'd to two of his Diſciples, ἐν ἑτέρᾳ μορφῇ in another Form, (Mark xvi. 12.) and therefore, the Word, which is deriv'd from it, can extend no farther, than to a Change of the outward Form or Appearance only. Whitby, on Phil. ii. 6.

Zeal and Affection to him, were honour'd and diſtinguiſh'd (b) with a peculiar Title, and, after his Reſurrection, appointed by Providence to be the great Pillars of his Church; and beſides, that it would have look'd like Vanity and Oſtentation in him, to have taken the Multitude into the Mount, and there made a publick Sight of his Miracles, which was the Thing he always carefully declin'd: Beſides this, I ſay, there ſeems to be ſomething in the Transfiguration itſelf, which might have been of dangerous Conſequence for the Multitude to have been admitted to.

Shewn, from the Nature of it.

St PETER, who himſelf was one of thoſe, who were with him on the Holy Mount, gives us this Account of it. (c) We have not followed cunningly deviſed Fables, ſays he, when we made known unto you the Coming of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, but were Eye-Witneſſes of his Majeſty; for he received, from God the Father, Honour, and Glory, when there came ſuch a Voice to him from the excellent Glory, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleaſed. Now, (d) by his Majeſty, in this Place, moſt properly is to be underſtood that Luſtre and Radiancy, wherein he appear'd, when his Face ſhone as the Sun, and his Garments (pierc'd through with the Beams, that were darted from his Body) became as white as Light: (e) For to ſhine as the Sun, is a Phraſe expreſſing ſomething belonging to celeſtial Majeſty; and white and ſplendid Garments are proper for Kings, and (f) Royal Miniſters of the Heavenly Court. And, in like Manner, by the excellent Glory, from whence the Voice proceeded, can be meant nothing but the bright and ſhining Cloud, that then appear'd, which the Jews call the Shechinah, and is made up (as moſt imagine) of an Hoſt of Angels, the conſtant Symbol of the Divine Preſence; and how great and magnificent this Symbol is, we may, in ſome Meaſure learn from the Viſion of the Prophet Daniel (g): The Antient of Days did ſit, whoſe Garment was white as Snow, and the Hair of his Head like pure Wool. His Throne was like the fiery Flames, and his Wheels as burning Fire. A fiery Stream had Iſſue from before him; Thouſands of Thouſands miniſtered unto him, and ten Thouſand Times ten Thouſand ſtood before him.

SUPPOSING then, that this was the Manner of our Saviour's Transfiguration; that not only, in his own Perſon, he was array'd with all his Glory and Luſtre, but had likewiſe an Angelick Hoſt ſurrounding him, two of the greateſt Prophets of ancient Ages attending him, and a Voice from Heaven, declaring him to be the well-beloved Son of God: While the Multitude ſtood by, and ſaw and heard all this, it would have been almoſt unavoidable, but that, upon ſuch Conviction of his being the Meſſiah, (h) they would have taken him by Force, and made him a King. But ſince (as our Saviour tells us) his (i) Kingdom was not of this World, nor to come with the Pomp and Obſervation, which the Jews expected; and ſince one of his great Concerns was, that no Diſturbance of the Civil Government ſhould be occaſion'd by him, or laid to his Charge, he wiſely made choice of three only, (but theſe the principal of his Apoſtles) to whom he exhibited a Specimen of his future Glory; which had he done to the Multitude, it might probably have occaſioned a general Inſurrection; and, as he came down from the Mount, he charg'd them that they ſhould tell the Viſion to no Man, till after his Reſurrection.

That Moſes and Elias were perſonally there.

FROM the Word ὅραμα, which we render Viſion, ſome have ſuppos'd, that Moſes and Elias were not there in their proper Perſons, but that the Apoſtles, in their Fancy and Imagination, had only a ſtrong Idea, or Impreſſion of them; or, at moſt, that their Spectres, or ſome ſhadowy Reſemblances of them only were there. Since the Evangeliſts, however, ſpeak of them in a perſonal Character and Capacity;

Capacity; ſince they repreſent them, as talking with Chriſt, and ſpeaking of his Deceaſe, which he was to accompliſh at Jeruſalem; ſince they tell us, that, when they were come out of the Extaſy, into which this Viſion had caſt them, they ſaw two Men ſtanding with him; it is much more probable to think, that Moſes and Elias were really there, and that God had, ſomewhere or other, from the Time of their Departure out of this World, preſerv'd both their Bodies, to this End. The Scriptures, indeed, are expreſs as to Elias, that he was tranſlated into Heaven, by the Miniſtry of Angels, reſembling (k) a Chariot of Fire, and Horſes of Fire; and it is a pretty general Opinion, (l) both among Jewiſh and Chriſtian Authors, taken (as is ſuppos'd) from ſome Apocryphal Book, that Moſes did not die, but was tranſlated into Heaven, or ſome Terreſtrial Paradiſe, in the ſame Manner as were Enoch and Elias. There is a Paſſage in St Jude, where (m) Michael the Archangel is ſaid to contend with the Devil, and diſpute about the Body of Moſes, which (if taken in a literal Senſe) will greatly favour this Opinion; for if we can but ſuppoſe that (n) the Conteſt between this good and evil Angel concerning Moſes's Body, related not to its Burial, as ſome will have it) but its Aſſumption into Heaven, or ſome other Place of Happineſs, which the Devil might oppoſe, and urge the Obligation of his dying the common Death of all Men, for this Reaſon more eſpecially, becauſe he had once taken away the Life of an Egyptian: If we can but ſuppoſe, I ſay, that the Conteſt aroſe upon this Subject, then may we eaſily conceive, both how Moſes might ſubſiſt in a ſeparate State, from the Time of his Aſſumption; and how he, together with Elias, might be diſpatch'd from thence upon this Occaſion, to ſet off the Luſtre of our Lord's Transfiguration, by their appearing, at the ſame Time, in their reſplendent Robes of Glory.

From Matth. xii. 1. Mark ii. 23. Luke vi. 1. John v. 1. to Matt. xvii. 14. Mark ix. 14. Luke ix. 37. John vii. 1.

And what Subjects they diſcours'd on.

And, indeed, if this was the Purpoſe of their Errand, what Subject can we ſuppoſe ſo proper, and ſo well becoming the Converſation of three ſuch illuſtrious Perſons, as the Redemption of Mankind by the Death and Paſſion of the Son of God? What theſe two antient Prophets had, in their Times, imperfectly revealed; nay, what the Angels of Heaven deſire, at all Times, to look into, viz. the Harmony of the Divine Attributes in this ſtupendous Work, (o) the Depth of the Riches, both of the Wiſdom and Knowledge of God, and (p) the Breadth and Length, and Depth, and Height of the Love of Chriſt, which paſſeth Knowledge; (q) Myſteries, which have been hid from Ages, and from Generations, but are now made manifeſt to the Saints: Theſe were the ſublime Subjects (for theſe are imply'd in (r) their ſpeaking of Chriſt's Deceaſe) of their Converſation at this Interview; and, in Compariſon of theſe, how jejune and worthleſs are all the wiſe Sayings of Philoſophers, or Compoſitions of human Wit? With good Reaſon, therefore, might the great Apoſtle of the Gentiles, (who himſelf was no mean Proficient in what the World falſely calls Knowledge) inſtead of the (s) Excellence of Speech and Wiſdom, determine to know nothing among his Corinthians, but Jeſus Chriſt, and him crucified: For (t) we preach Chriſt crucified, ſays he, unto the Jews a Stumbling-Block, and unto the Greeks Fooliſhneſs; but unto them, which are called, both Jews and Greeks, Chriſt the Power of God, and the Wiſdom of God; for (u) of God he is made unto us Wiſdom, and Righteouſneſs, and Sanctification, and Redemption.

Why the Baptiſt ſent to enquire concerning Jeſus.

Saviour's Divine Miſſion; that he exhorted thoſe, who came to him, to reſt their Faith, not on himſelf, but on him, that ſhould come after him; and that, as ſoon as he was acquainted who he was by a viſible Deſcent of the Holy Ghoſt, and a Voice from Heaven, he made it his Buſineſs to diſpoſe the Jews in general, and his own Diſciples in particular, to receive and reverence him, by teſtifying every where, that he was the Son of God, the Lamb of God, who came from above, and ſpake the Words of God, and to whom God had not given the Spirit by Meaſure. And yet, after all this, (x) ſome are of Opinion that the Baptiſt might have the ſame Conception of Chriſt's Temporal Kingdom, that the reſt of the Jewiſh Nation had; and that his long and irkſome Impriſonment might, by this Time, have tempted him to doubt, whether he, who by Birth was his Relation, and from whoſe Aſſiſtance, very probably, he expected a Deliverance, was, in Reality, the Meſſiah. (y) It ſeems however not a little injurious to the Character of the Baptiſt to ſuppoſe either his Conſtancy ſo ſhaken, or his Behaviour ſo inconſiſtent with itſelf, as, after ſuch open and ſolemn Declaration, to admit of any Doubt, whether our Lord were he, that ſhould come, i. e. the long promis'd, and univerſally expected Meſſiah. And therefore † the ſafeſt Way is, to conclude, that he did not ſend this Meſſage, with a Deſign to ſatisfy any Scruples of his own, but purely for the Sake and Conviction of his Diſciples, who brought it; to ſet them right in their Notions, and confirm them in the Belief of Jeſus, and ſo turn them over to their proper and better Maſter, now that himſelf was upon the Point of leaving the World. And this was the rather neceſſary, becauſe their immoderate Zeal, and partial Reſpect for the Baptiſt, had hitherto made them averſe to Jeſus, and envious at his Honour and Miracles. What John had diſcours'd to them formerly upon this Subject had made but little Impreſſion upon them; and therefore, in Compaſſion to their Infirmities, he condeſcended to have their Scruples propounded in his own Name: And our Saviour's Method of reſolving them (which was by ſhewing them, that the Miracles, which he wrought, were the ſame, in Kind, that the Meſſiah was to do) gave ſo great Satisfaction, that, when their former Maſter was gone, they repair'd to him with the melancholy News of his Death, and (according to the receiv'd Tradition) for ever after became his conſtant Diſciples.

† There are three other Opinions, which have their Followers among the Antients. One is mention'd by the Author of the Queſtions, that go under the Name of Juſtin Martyr, viz. That the Baptiſt was not in the leaſt doubtful, whether Jeſus was the true Meſſiah, but only was deſirous to know whether he, of whom he had heard ſo many wonderful Things, (whilſt under Confinement, and unable to ſatisfy himſelf) was the ſame Perſon of whom he had given Teſtimony, and declar'd to be the Meſſiah. Others think, that the Meaning of the Queſtion was, whether Jeſus ſhould die for the Redemption of Mankind. But ſurely he, who, long before, had ſtiled him the Lamb of God, that takes away the Sin of the World, John i. 29. with Alluſion, no doubt, to the Sacrifices ſlain under the Jewiſh Law, gave ſufficient Intimation, that he was not ignorant of this great Truth. Others again imagine, that the Senſe of this Enquiry is, ——— Whether Jeſus ſhould come to the Hades, or Place of Souls departed, (whither the Baptiſt foreknew that himſelf was ſhortly to go) and whether he ſhould preach his Coming, and be his Forerunner there, in the like Manner, as he had been upon Earth. But this is an Imagination, too extravagant to receive any Countenance from the preſent, whatever it might meet with in former Ages. Calmet's Commentary, Whitby's Annotations, and Stanhope, on the Epiſtles and Goſpels, Vol. I.

* The Jews, above all Nations, delighted in this Way of Reaſoning. Their Books, at this Day, are full of ſuch Parables, as our Saviour us'd, and are generally introduc'd in a Form of Speech, not unlike his; Whereunto ſhall I liken ſuch or ſuch a Thing? Nay, in the Talmudical Treatiſe, ſuch as the Treatiſe Killaim, there is a Diſpute of ſowing upon the Rocks and Stones, and of mixing Wheat and Tares together; and in Peah, (a Tract in the Jeruſalem Talmud)

Ignorance, who pretends to aſſert, that our Bleſſed Saviour attempted any Innovation, when he firſt began to inſtruct the People in a parabolical Way; ſince ſeveral of his Diſcourſes of this Kind, particularly that (z) of the rich Glutton, and (a) of the fooliſh Virgins, (b) are acknowledg'd to be borrow'd from the Writings of their Rabbins.

THE Truth is, (c) the Eaſtern Way of Reaſoning was ſo different from that of the Weſt, that the ſoundeſt Philoſophy of Greece, or Rome, would have been mere Jargon, and Cant at Jeruſalem. The only Method of Reaſoning, which was agreeable to the Jewiſh Taſte, was to uſher in an handſome Simile, or Story, appoſite to the Matter in Hand; to apply a ſmart Saying of ſome ancient Worthy; or to bring good Proof from their Law, or ancient Tradition; but to go to prove Morality to them (as Plato, or Tully do) from the eternal Rules of Juſtice, from the Rectitude and Honourableneſs of Virtue, and the Pravity and Turpitude of Vice, would have been ſuch a Way of talking, as the wiſeſt Men of their Way of Education would have greatly deſpis'd; and therefore, our Bleſſed Saviour (who was well acquainted with the Temper and Cuſtoms of the People, with whom he convers'd) took care, that his Way of inſtructing them ſhould be ſuch, as was moſt agreeable to their Education, and conſequently ſuch, as would tend more to their Edification, than if he had introduc'd the philoſophic Method of Morality, which was only in uſe in ſuch Nations, as were deſtitute of the Benefits of a Divine Revelation.

From Matth. xii. 1. Mark ii. 23. Luke vi. 1. John v. 1. to Matth. xvii. 14. Mark ix. 14. Luke ix. 37. John vii. 1.

And not obſcure.

THE Heathens indeed couch'd their religious Myſteries under Fables and Allegories, out of a Principle both of Fear and Policy, to conceal them from the Contempt of the Vulgar, and to excite the Study and Curioſity of the Learned: But in this latter Deſign they ſeem to be miſtaken, becauſe the Learned could no ſooner look into the Matters hid under theſe Fables, but they muſt have diſcover'd their Shame, Abſurdity, and Ridiculouſneſs. The Deſign of our Lord's ſpeaking to the People in Parables was quite contrary to this, as himſelf declares, viz. (d) becauſe they ſeeing ſee not, and hearing they hear not, neither do they underſtand, which Words, * both in ſacred and profane Authors, are a proverbial Expreſſion, concerning Men ſo wicked, and ſo ſlothful, that either they attend not to, or will not follow the cleareſt Intimations, and Convictions of their Duty; and therefore, to awaken their Attention, and make the ſtronger Impreſſion upon them, our Saviour was forc'd to have recourſe to Parables.

there is mention made of a Tree of Muſtard-Seed, which one might climb up into, like other Trees. So that our Saviour was, by no Means, to blame, but rather highly to be commended, for purſuing this parabolical Way of teaching Morality, which was the moſt celebrated Method among the Jews. For his farther Vindication, however, ſome have obſerv'd, that, what our Saviour deliver'd in this Manner, did not contain the fundamental Precepts and Doctrines of the Goſpel (for theſe were taught with ſufficient Clearneſs in the vth, vith, and viith Chapters of St Matthew) but only the Myſteries, relating to the Progreſs of the Goſpel, and the Event of it among Jews and Gentiles; and the Jews themſelves acknowledge, that the Predictions of this Nature were uſually taught in allegorical and emblematical Expreſſions, being not ſo neceſſary to be known, as were the fundamental Rules of Faith and Manners. Lightfoot's Harmony of the New Teſtament, Page 30, Nichols's Conference, Part iii. * To this Purpoſe the Prophet Jeremiah, to a revolting and rebellious People, which had caſt off the Fear of God, ſpeaks in this wiſe; Hear now this, ye fooliſh People, and without Underſtanding, which have Eyes, and ſee not, which have Ears, and hear not, Chap. v. 21. and in like Manner God ſpeaks to Ezekiel: Son of Man, thou dwelleſt in the Midſt of a rebellious Houſe, which have Eyes to ſee, and ſee not; that have Ears to hear, and hear not, for they are a rebellious Houſe, Chap. xii. 2. Philo uſes the Phraſe in the ſame Signification; for, ſpeaking of thoſe, that were addicted to Wine, and ſenſual Pleaſures, he ſays, ὁρῶντες, οὐχ ὁρῶσι, καὶ ἀκούοντες, οὐκ ἀκούουσι. They ſeeing, ſee not, and hearing, do not hear; and Demoſthenes mentions it as a common Proverb, ὁρῶντας, μὴ ὁρᾶν, καὶ ἀκούοντας, μὴ ἀκούειν. Whitby's Annotations on Matth. x.

THIS Paſſage indeed, in the other Evangeliſts that mention it, ſeems to bear a different Senſe, (e) unto them that are without all theſe Things are done in Parables, that ſeeing they may ſee, and not perceive, and hearing they may hear, and not underſtand: Or, as it is in St Luke, (f) that ſeeing they might not ſee, and hearing they might not underſtand: As if our Lord had ſpoken to the Multitudes in Parables, i. e. in a plain and familiar Way, on Purpoſe that they might not underſtand him, which, beſides the Contradiction, ſeems to include a Spice of Malevolence, where there never was any. (g) But all this is occaſion'd by the Miſtake of our Tranſlators, who both in St Mark, and St Luke, have render'd the Word ἵνα, by that, which ſhould have been becauſe; for this gives the Words a quite different Turn: In St Mark, becauſe ſeeing they do ſee, and not perceive, and, in St Luke, becauſe ſeeing they ſee not, and hearing they underſtand not. The natural Import of which is this, ——"That the Jews, by Reaſon of their Prejudices, not being able to underſtand the great Myſteries of the Goſpel, our Saviour, out of Love to their Souls, accommodated himſelf to their Capacities, by ſpeaking to them in Parables, i. e. in Metaphors, and Similitudes, borrow'd from Things temporal and corporeal, in order to bring them to a more competent Underſtanding of his Doctrine."

(h) To you it is given to know the Myſteries of the Kingdom of Heaven, but not to them, does not therefore imply, that our Saviour's Parables were dark and obſcure, and that, by ſpeaking to the People in this Manner, he had a Deſign to conceal any Truth, that was requiſite for them to know; but only, that he made a fuller Diſcovery of his Doctrine to his Diſciples, than it was neceſſary, at that Time, to make to the Multitude; that he inſtructed them in private, and enlarg'd upon the Senſe of his Parables, and let them into the Knowledge of ſeveral Things, that were not yet proper to be communicated to all, becauſe they were his peculiar Friends, and his conſtant Companions; were more diſpos'd to receive his Doctrine; were afterwards to be the Preachers of it; and, at length, to ſeal the Truth of it with their Blood.

From Matth. xii. 1. Mark ii. 23. Luke vi. 1. John v. 1. to Matth. xvii. 14. Mark ix. 14. Luke ix. 37. John vii. 1.

THEY were honeſt and well-deſigning Men; but it would be doing too great a Compliment to their Underſtanding, to ſay, that there was any thing extraordinary (until they were endu'd from above) in their Sagacity and Penetration: And therefore, we are not to impute it to the Obſcurity of our Saviour's Parables, that we find his Diſciples ſo frequently at a Loſs for the Meaning of them (ſince ſome of them were quoted from Jewiſh Authors, and many of them taken from the moſt obvious and common Things) but we ſhould rather impute it to their natural Dulneſs and Want of Apprehenſion, as we find our Saviour himſelf does, when, upon their requeſting him to expound the plain Parable of the Sower, he could not forbear ſaying, with Admiration, (i) Know ye not this Parable, and how then ſhall ye know all Parables?

Why he would not ſhew a Sign from Heaven.

IT was not then to cloud and obſcure, but rather illuſtrate and inforce his Meaning, that our Lord deliver'd himſelf ſo frequently in Parables; and the Reaſon why he refus'd to gratify the Phariſees in their Deſire of a Sign from Heaven, was, becauſe he had already done Miracles enough to ſatisfy them, had not their Obſtinacy been Proof againſt all Conviction. In that very Chapter (k), wherein they make this inſolent Demand, they had ſeen, before their Faces, (l) a wither'd Hand made whole, and, (m) upon the Ejection of a Devil, a blind and dumb Man reſtor'd to his Sight and Speech; but, obſerve the Turn, which their reſolute Infidelity gives to the Miracles; (n) This Fellow does not caſt out Devils, but by Beelzebub, the Prince of the Devils: And yet theſe theſe very Men have the Modeſty, in a few Verſes after, to come to the Perſon, they had, juſt before, reviled and blaſphem'd at this rate, with this arrogant Demand, (o) Maſter we would ſee a Sign from thee. After ſuch an Affront, would it have become the meekeſt Man upon Earth, to gratify theſe Men in any Requeſt whatever? But much more, would it have become the Majeſty of the Son of God to proſtitute his Divine Power, merely to ſatisfy the Curioſity (for that was all they wanted to have ſatisfy'd) of ſuch abandon'd Miſcreants?

THE Sign, which they wanted to ſee, may be ſuppos'd to be, either ſuch (p) a Shower of Manna, as Moſes; or ſuch (q) a Clap of Thunder, as Samuel; or (r) ſuch a Fall of Fire, as Elijah; or (s) ſuch an Arreſt of the Sun, as Joſhua once called for. Now, ſuppoſing that our Saviour had been flexible enough to humour them in their unreaſonable Requeſt, (t) what Grounds have we to think, that theſe aërial or celeſtial Prodigies would have wrought in them any more Conviction, than thoſe Miracles, which were inconteſtable, done in their Preſence, within their Feeling, and Compaſs of Examination? Theſe, we ſee, they imputed to a diabolical Power, and much more might they do it to thoſe, that were at ſo vaſt a Diſtance, ſince they could not be ignorant of what is ſaid of the Prince of the Power of the Air, in the Book of Job, viz. That the Fire, which fell from Heaven, and conſum'd that holy Man's Subſtance, as well as the Wind, which overturn'd the Houſe, where his Children were met together, were the Effects of Satan's procuring.

WHAT Notions the ancient Jews had of the Power of Magick, we cannot poſitively ſay; but it is certain, that the Heathen Magicians made it their Boaſt, * that they could ſtop the Courſe of the Sun, Moon, and Stars, turn them into Darkneſs, as they pleas'd, and make them obey their Voice: And, if the Phariſees had the like Notions of theſe Things, their demanding a Sign from Heaven was to no Manner of Purpoſe, becauſe upon their own Suppoſition, that our Lord acted by a magical Power, what they deſir'd him to do, was not above the Sphere of his Ability, and, if they thought it ſo, it could never have wrought in them any good Conviction; becauſe the ſame Hardneſs of Heart, and Hatred of him, would have kept them under the ſame Perſuaſion ſtill, that all his Wonders, whether above or below, whether in Heaven, or on Earth, whether on human or celeſtial Bodies, were done by the Aſſiſtance of the Devil.

The Significancy of the Sign of Jonas.

SINCE then no Sign, that the Phariſees could aſk, (even had our Saviour condeſcended to work it) would have been effectual to their Conviction, our Saviour was not unkind in remitting them to one, that would not fail of convincing them, that what he did was not by a diabolical, but Divine Power. For, ſince it was agreed on all Hands, that a Perſon, when dead, (whatever he had in his Life-Time) could not then have the Devil at his Command; if, after they had crucify'd him, they ſhould find him reſtor'd to Life again, this would be a Sign, wherein there could be no Fallacy; that, as his Reſtoration was from the Hand of God, ſo his Commiſſion had all along been from the ſame; and (u) that, as Jonas's miraculous Eſcape from the Whale's Belly (wherewith the Ninevites were doubtleſs acquainted) was a powerful Means to confirm to them the Truth of his Prophetick Office; ſo now, tho' all Chriſt's Miracles, while living, prevailed but little, yet, after his Death, and Reſurrection from the Grave, he would then be credited, in the ſame Manner as Jonas was; (x) he would then draw all Men

Men after him, and the very Phariſees themſelves would be prevailed upon to acknowledge his Divine Miſſion. This is the Senſe of his comparing himſelf ſo often with the Prophet Jonas: And that the chief Prieſts and Phariſees underſtood the Compariſon in this Senſe, is manifeſt from what they ſay to Pilate; (y) Sir, we remember that that Deceiver ſaid, while he was yet alive, after three Days I will riſe again; for I no where remember, that he made any Declaration to the chief Prieſts and Phariſees (tho' he did it frequently to his Apoſtles) of his intended Reſurrection after three Days, but only in this Compariſon of himſelf to Jonas.

Why Chriſt made choice of mean Men to be his Apoſtles.

Had human Wiſdom indeed been conſulted in the Election of Chriſt's Apoſtles, it would have made choice of the profoundeſt Rabbins, the acuteſt Philoſophers, and the moſt powerful Orators, who, by the Strength of Reaſon, and Arts of Eloquence, might have triumph'd over the Minds of Men, grappled with the Stubbornneſs of the Jews, and baffled the fine Notions and Speculations of the Greeks and Romans; but then it muſt be allow'd, that one Argument for the Proof of the Divinity of the Chriſtian Religion had been loſt. Nay, it might have been objected, "That no Wonder, indeed, that this Religion ſhould thrive ſo well in the World, when it had all human Advantages to aſſiſt it, and was ſupported, and carry'd on by the united Force of the Reaſon and Eloquence of ſuch renown'd Scholars." But now by making choice of weak and illiterate Perſons, to be his Apoſtles, and firſt Publiſhers of the Goſpel, our Lord has taken an effectual Means, that (z) our Faith ſhould not ſtand (as St Paul expreſſes it) in the Wiſdom of Men, but in the Power of God, becauſe their Speech and their Preaching was not with enticing Words of Man's Wiſdom, but in the Demonſtration of the Spirit, and of Power.

From Matth. xii. 1. Mark ii. 23. Luke vi. 1. John v. 1. to Matt. xvii. 14. Mark ix. 14. Luke ix. 37. John vii. 1.

And, indeed, what leſs than a Divine Power could have enabled a few illiterate Mechanicks, who had no Art, no Addreſs of their own, to propagate a new and unheard-of Religion, contrary to the Laws every where eſtabliſh'd, and contrary to Mens natural Paſſions and Appetites, with ſuch a wonderful Succeſs, as, in the Space of twenty or thirty Years, to extend it over all the principal Parts of the Roman Empire, and, in the next Age, to fill all Places, Cities and Iſlands, Caſtles and Boroughs, Palaces and Senates, Courts and Camps, with Multitudes of Converts, as the great Apologiſt, Tertullian, juſtly glories? Doubtleſs, if ever there was an Intervention of Divine Power in human Affairs, it was here, when (a) God choſe the fooliſh and weak Things of the World to confound the Wiſe and Mighty, and when Simplicity and Ignorance not only had the Advantage, but abſolutely triumph'd over all the Wit, and Learning, and Power, and Policy of the World.

That therefore the mighty Force of Chriſtianity, to make its Way through the greateſt Obſtacles, might more evidently appear, the Inſtruments, which our Saviour employ'd in the Propagation of it (ſo far as their own Abilities, either natural or acquir'd, were concern'd) were the meaneſt that can be imagin'd, but, by an extraordinary Communication of his Bleſſed Spirit to them, he inſpir'd them with the Gift of Languages, that they might be able to addreſs themſelves to People of all Nations; with the Power of working Miracles, that they might be able to confirm the Truth of the Doctrine which they taught; and, upon all Emergencies, (b) with ſuch a Mouth and Wiſdom, as all their Adverſaries were not able to gainſay or reſiſt.

Why Learning, &c. is requir'd in Chriſt's Miniſters now.

These, and ſeveral other Gifts extraordinary, did more than ſupply the natural Defects, which the Apoſtles labour'd under in the Execution of ſo great a Work; but now, that theſe Gifts are withdrawn, our Religion eſtabliſh'd, and the Canon of the Holy Scriptures compleated, their Succeſſors have a different Province to manage. Inſtead of travelling all the World over, over, and compaſſing Sea and Land, to gain Proſelytes to the Chriſtian Faith, their Duty is, to keep in Order the Things that are ſettled, and (c) to feed the Flock of God, that is among them, taking the Overſight thereof, not for filthy Lucre, but of a ready Mind; not as Lords over God's Inheritance, but as Enſamples to their Flock; and, inſtead of delivering to their reſpective Churches ſuch Writings, as might, in all Ages, be the Pillar and Foundation of Truth, their Buſineſs is to ſtudy the Scriptures, which they have receiv'd, to defend their Authority, and expound their Senſe; (d) to preach the Word; (as the Apoſtle to Timothy ſpecifies their Office) to be inſtant in Seaſon, and out of Seaſon; to reprove, rebuke, and exhort, with all long Suffering and Doctrine; and what Compaſs of Learning, and Share of Influence among the People, are requiſite to a due Diſcharge of all this, (as (e) a Workman, that needeth not to be aſhamed, rightly dividing the Word of God) wants no Detail of Arguments to prove, ſince we find the great Apoſtle St Paul, amidſt all the Gifts, that were then diſpens'd to the Church, and the particular Revelations, which were vouchſaf'd him, upon the Conſideration of the Weightineſs of his Office, crying out, and ſaying, (f) who is ſufficient for theſe Things? Upon the Whole therefore, we may obſerve, that it was highly requiſite, that the Apoſtles, and firſt Publiſhers of the Goſpel, and the preſent Miniſters and Preachers of it, ſhould be Men of different Characters and Abilities; that the former of theſe (for the more effectual Diſcharge of their Office) ſhould have ſeveral Kinds of Gifts ſupernatural, the latter, no more than was the Product of their own Labour and Acquiſition; or (to ſpeak in the Phraſe of the Scripture) that, as, at firſt, our Saviour (g) gave ſome Apoſtles; ſome Prophets; and ſome Evangeliſts; ſo, now, he ſhould appoint ſome Rulers, ſome Paſtors, and ſome Teachers; for the Perfecting of the Saints, for the Work of the Miniſtry, for the Edifying of the Body of Chriſt; till we all come, in the Unity of the Faith, and of the Knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect Man, unto the Meaſure of the Stature of the Fulneſs of Chriſt.

Why our Saviour might be innocently angry with the Phariſees.

(h) THAT Anger, conſider'd in itſelf, and upon all Occaſions whatever is unlawful, neither the moſt rigid Philoſophers, nor the moſt ſevere Chriſtians, have ever been able to prove. It is one of thoſe Paſſions, that are implanted in us by the God of Nature. The firſt Motions of it ſeem to be mechanical, and the Haſtineſs, or Slowneſs, of it depends, in a great Meaſure, upon the Temper of the Body, and the animal Spirits: So far then as it is natural, we dare not account it criminal, for Fear of making God, who hath implanted it in us, the Author of Sin. Thoſe, who define it a Deſire of Revenge, or of doing Evil to another, purely becauſe he has done ſo to us, make it indeed a ſinful Paſſion, and a plain Violation of that Command, which requires us (i) not to avenge ourſelves, but rather to give Place unto Wrath; but if it be conſider'd, (k) as proceeding upon a Deſire of obtaining Satisfaction for ſome Injury done to us, or to thoſe for whom we are concern'd, the Honour of God, the Reverence due to the Laws, the Love of Virtue, and the Protection of good Men, may make this not only innocent, but highly neceſſary, and commendable. There is a Tameneſs of Spirit, that juſtly deſerves Cenſure; and, in ſome Caſes, we even do not well, unleſs we are angry: And, for this Reaſon, I make no doubt, it was, (l) that our Bleſſed Saviour, on ſome Occaſions, ſuffer'd himſelf to be ſeen in ſome Degrees of this Paſſion, namely, to evince the Lawfulneſs of it, and, by his Example, to confute the Doctrine of thoſe Heathen Stoicks, who condemn'd the Uſe of all Paſſions, and were for making thoſe natural natural Tendencies, which God has given us, altogether ſuperfluous.

For Religion admits of no ſuch paradoxical Notions: When it requires us to be (m) ſlow to Wrath, it allows of the Paſſion upon a juſt Provocation, and only blames him, (n) who is angry with his Brother without a Cauſe; and, when it gives us this Caution, (o) be angry, and ſin not, let not the Sun go down upon your Wrath, it ſuppoſes the Thing itſelf warrantable, and only prohibits the Exceſs, or long Duration of it. 'Tis the raſh, cauſeleſs, and continu'd Anger, that our Holy Religion condemns: But who ſhall ſay, that our Saviour's Reſentment to the Phariſees was not upon good Grounds, when they, by their Traditions, had made void the moral Law, excus'd Men from doing what God had commanded, and laid upon them other unneceſſary Burthens, which he had no where enjoin'd? When the Pride and Arrogance of their Sect, and their Contempt and Hatred of all that contradicted them, made it neceſſary for him to uſe ſome Smartneſs in his Reprehenſions, thereby to excite them to a Senſibility of their Errors? They (p) had conſulted with the Herodians how they might deſtroy him; the Works which he did by the Finger of God, they had aſcrib'd to a Diabolical Power; and therefore no Wonder, that he ſhould look upon them with Indignation, becauſe of the Hardneſs of their Hearts. But, when there was no ſuch Cauſe for any Degree of Anger, and where the Glory of God was not immediately concern'd, his whole Life was the moſt perfect Pattern of Meekneſs and Patience, according to that Prediction concerning him, (q) He ſhall not cry, nor lift up, nor cauſe his Voice to be heard in the Streets; a bruiſed Reed ſhall he not break, and a ſmoaking Flax ſhall he not quench.

What is meant by our Saviour's being beſide himſelf.

But how comes it then, that St Mark, in his Goſpel, repreſents our Saviour as a Perſon, that was ſuppos'd (r) to be beſide himſelf? Various are the Significations, which are given to the Word ἐξέστη in this Place, but there are three, that bid faireſt for the Solution of that Difficulty. (s) In the preceding Verſe it is ſaid, that the Multitude came ſo faſt upon him, that he had not Time to take any Food to recruit his Spirits; and thereupen ſome Interpreters would have the Word ſignify his Fainting through Hunger, or being in Danger of falling into a Deliquium by ſpending his Spirits, and taking no Manner of Refreſhment to revive them. (t) Others had rather mean by the Word ſuch an Extaſy, or Tranſport of Mind, as thoſe, who are mov'd with a vehement Zeal, or Prophetick Spirit, are wont to be affected with, and, conſequently, that his Friends Apprehenſions were, that, in the Execution of his Prophetick Office, i. e. in his preaching and inſtructing the People, he expended his Strength too much, forgetful of that Care, and Preſervation, which he ought to have had of himſelf. But, for my Part, I cannot ſee why the Word may not here be taken, in its common and ordinary Senſe, for what is called Madneſs and Diſtraction. We acknowledge indeed, that our Lord, neither in his Actions or Geſtures, ſhew'd ever any Symptoms of a diſorder'd Mind, nor could his Relations, from any Behaviour of his, conceive any ſuch Thing of him; but then the Words in the Text ἔλεγον γὰρ, for they ſaid, may not relate to his Friends, but to other People, who had rais'd this Report of him. The Phariſees had given out that he had a Devil, and did all theſe Miracles by a Confederacy with him; and others, who did not run to this Length of Blaſphemy, ſaid nevertheleſs, that he was mad, and his Head turn'd; and when this came to his Friends Ears, they, out of a charitable Deſign perhaps, went to apprehend him, ſuppoſing that he might poſſibly be under ſome ſuch Diſorder; and not rightly underſtanding the End of his Miſſion, as the Evangeliſt (u) informs us that ſome of his Kindred did not not believe in him. And indeed (x) if we conſider with ourſelves, how common a Thing it is to look upon thoſe, who think, or ſpeak, or act in a Manner different from other People, as Fools and Mad-men; how this was the Fate (y) of the young Prophet before Jehu's Companions, and of St Paul (z) before Feſtus; we ſhall not think it ſtrange, that our Lord ſhould fall under the ſame opprobrious Imputation, or that his Relations (who had no true Conception of him, or his Office) hearing of this Rumour, ſhould endeavour to get him into their Cuſtody, and ſo prevent this expoſing himſelf to the Scorn and Deriſion of thoſe, that hated him. For tho' ſome of the People were of Opinion, that he ſpake, as never Man ſpake (a) yet many of them ſaid, he has a Devil and is mad, why hear ye him?

Chriſt's Promiſe to Peter explained.

The Name of Peter, or Cephas (as it is in the Syriack) our Bleſſed Lord gave to Simon, when his Brother Andrew firſt brought them together; and, in Alluſion to this Name it is, that he calls him the Rock, or Stone, upon which he intended to build his Church. Some indeed by this Rock think, that our Saviour intends himſelf, (b) and that, in uttering theſe Words, he pointed at his own Perſon, as he ſeems to have done upon another like Occaſion, when he ſpeaks to the Jews, (c) deſtroy this Temple (meaning his own Body) and in three Days I will raiſe it up: But the Senſe ſeems abſtruſe, and the Tranſition abrupt, that our (d) Saviour, ſpeaking to Peter, and calling him a Rock, ſhould, with the ſame Breath, paſs to himſelf, and yet not ſay, upon myſelf, but upon this Rock (and St Peter was the only Rock he mention'd) will I build my Church. Others therefore would rather have St Peter's Faith and Confeſſion to be the Rock here ſpoken of, as it muſt be acknowledg'd indeed, that, in this Confeſſion of his, the Sum and Subſtance of the Chriſtian Doctrine is compris'd; but then it ſhould be conſider'd, that as our Lord, without all Doubt, meant to ſay ſomething ſingular to St Peter, as a Reward of his frank Confeſſion of him, if this Confeſſion was all the Rock he intended, here was nothing particular ſaid to the Apoſtle, and yet, at the ſame Time, the whole Grace of the Alluſion to his Name was entirely loſt. It is reaſonable therefore to think, (e) that, as our Saviour here directs his Speech, not to the whole College of the Apoſtles, but to St Peter only, and ſeems to promiſe him ſomething peculiar, as the Reward of his liberal Confeſſion, the Senſe of the Expreſſion ſhould be, that he would, in a more eminent Manner, make uſe of his Miniſtry, in laying the firſt Foundation of the Chriſtian Church, both among the Jews and Gentiles; as we find he did the former (f) in his moſt efficacious Sermon at the Day of Pentecoſt, and the latter, (g) in the Converſion of Cornelius and his Company.

What is meant by the Keys of the Kingdom of Heaven.

There is a Paſſage in Iſaiah, which (as ſome imagine) helps us to the Knowledge of what our Saviour means by the Keys of the Kingdom of Heaven; 'tis, where God foretels Eliakim, (h) that he will call him, and cloath him with the Robe of Shebna (who (i) was over the Houſhold) and ſtrengthen him with his Girdle, and commit his Government into his Hand, and lay the Key of the Houſe of David † upon his Shoulder, &c. Now, becauſe the Key was an Enſign of great Honour and Power, and what the chief Stewards in Princes Palaces uſually wore, as an Indication of their Office, our Saviour makes uſe of this Expreſſion, to denote that Authority and Juriſdiction, wherewith he inveſted the Apoſtles, and their Succeſſors, in the Adminiſtration of the Affairs of his Church. But, beſides the Key of Government, there is (k) the Key of Knowledge, which the Scribes and Phariſees are blam'd for having taken away; and therefore, as the Uſe of a Key is to open a Door or Gate, we ſhould rather think the Import of Chriſt's Promiſe here to Peter is, (l) that he ſhould be the Perſon, who ſhould firſt open the Myſteries of the Goſpel Diſpenſation, both to Jew and Gentile; by the Power of his Preaching, make the firſt Converts among both; and, by the Rite of Baptiſm, receive ſuch Converts into the Pale of the Chriſtian Church: And by the binding and looſing which follow, (tho' † ſome are willing to extend them to the Power of Excommunication and Abſolution) I ſhould rather be inclin'd to think, that, according to the Language then in Uſe among the Jews, our Saviour means the forbidding, or permitting ſuch and ſuch Things; that (m) he is here declaring his Will, that his Apoſtles ſhould ſettle the Affairs of his Church by Virtue of their infallible Spirit; ſhould determine what was lawful or unlawful for Chriſtians to do, and that ſuch their Determinations ſhould be ratify'd in Heaven: "Whatſoever thou ſhalt "bind on Earth, i. e. declare to be forbidden, ſhall expoſe the Man, that "commits it, to Puniſhment; and whatſoever thou ſhalt looſe on Earth, or declare to be lawful now (tho' formerly "forbidden) ſhall be allow'd to be done, "without any one's incurring my Diſpleaſure:" So that, in this Senſe, the Words are a Foundation of our Faith and Obedience to the Doctrines and Commands of the Apoſtles, and of the Ceſſation of the ritual Precepts of the Law of Moſes.

From Matth. xii. 1. Mark ii. 23. Luke vi. 1. John v. 1. to Matth. xvii. 14. Mark ix. 14. Luke ix. 37 John vii. 1.

According to this Expoſition, the Senſe of our Lord's Promiſe to Peter (ſuppoſing it perſonal and directed to him only) will be this —— (n) "Thy Name ſignifies a Rock, and, ſuitable to that Name, "ſhall be thy Work and Office; for upon "thee, i. e. upon the Strength of thy "Preaching, ſhall the Foundation of my "Church be laid. Thee I will appoint "to make the firſt Converts, both of Jews "and Gentiles, to my holy Religion, "and, by the Ordinance of Baptiſm, to "admit them into the Communion of "Saints; and to Thee I will give Power "to enact Laws, for the good Government of my Church; to determine what "is proper or improper to be done, and "to releaſe my People from the Obſervation of Legal Ceremonies."

Which gives him no Superiority over the other Apoſtles.

This is the full Force of our Saviour's Speech to Peter; and yet it neither denotes, nor implies any œcumenical, paſtoral Power in him (much leſs in his Succeſſors) above the reſt of the Apoſtles. For, if he be here called the Rock, or Foundation-Stone, the ſame Honour is attributed to the reſt, where it is ſaid, that (o) we are built upon the Foundation of the Prophets and Apoſtles, Jeſus Chriſt himſelf being the chief Corner-Stone. If he had the Power of the Keys intruſted with him, and thereby admitted the firſt Converts, both Jews and Gentiles, into the Chriſtian Church; both James and John exercis'd the ſame Office, in converting thoſe of the Circumciſion; and

† This indeed is the common Acceptation of the Words; and our learned Archbiſhop Potter, in his Diſcourſe of Church Government, Chap. v, looks upon this binding and looſing, when apply'd to Things, and not Perſons, not only as a manifeſt Force upon the Words, which the Scriptures never uſe in any ſuch Senſe; but falſe in Fact likewiſe, becauſe the Apoſtles had no Power, either to make or declare any Thing to be unlawful, which was not before made and declared by Chriſt to be ſo: And therefore, tho' he owns, that, in the Text, Things, and not Perſons, are expreſs'd, yet he nevertheleſs affirms, that it is very common to put Adjectives of the neuter Gender, inſtead of Subſtantives, and ſo to expreſs Things, when Perſons are underſtood. This Manner of expreſſing Subſtantives, by neuter Adjectives, can hardly be conteſted; but then we cannot but think, that the Word binding, when put for impoſing Laws or injunctions upon us, is no uncommon Phraſe in Scripture, ſince we find our Saviour complaining of the Scribes and Phariſees, for binding heavy Burthens, and grievous to be borne, and laying them on other Mens Shoulders, Matth. xxiii. 4. Nor can we ſee, how the Apoſtles (who had no Precept from their Maſter to that Purpoſe) could have abſolv'd Proſelytes from the Obſervation of the Jewiſh Law, Acts xv. 28, 29. had they not had a Power and Authority given them by the Holy Ghoſt, to declare ſome Things, which Chriſt had not declared before.

and St Paul open'd the Kingdom of Heaven to many more Gentiles, than ever he did. If he had Authority to diſcharge the Converts he made, from the Obſervation of the Ceremonial Law; St Paul, without doubt, had the ſame with regard to this, and perhaps, a clearer Notion of the Chriſtian Liberty, than St Peter ſeems to have had, when he gave occaſion to the other to (p) withſtand him to the Face, and ſo frequently to declare, that we are not juſtified by the Works of the Law, but by the Faith of Jeſus Chriſt: And, whatever the Senſe of binding and looſing may be, 'tis certain, that the ſame Power and Authority was given, in as ample a Manner, to all the Apoſtles in general, where it is ſaid, (q) Whatſoever YE ſhall bind on Earth, ſhall be bound in Heaven, and whatſoever YE ſhall looſe on Earth, ſhall be looſed in Heaven: And again, (r) Whoſeſoever Sins YE remit, they are remitted unto them, and whoſeſoever Sins YE retain, they are retained. So wiſely did our Bleſſed Saviour ſettle an * Equality among his Apoſtles, that (s) there might be no Schiſm in his Church, but that (t) in him all the Building fitly framed together (as the Apoſtles continues the Metaphor) might grow unto an holy Temple in the Lord!

Several Notions about the Sin againſt the Holy Ghoſt.

NOTHING certainly can be plainer in Scripture, than that the Sin againſt the Holy Ghoſt, which our Saviour mentions as a Sin unpardonable, is to be underſtood of the Phariſees imputing the Miracles, which he wrought by the Power of the Holy Ghoſt, to the Power of the Devil; and yet, I know not how, a great many learned Men have made ſhift to miſtake it. (u) A Denial of Chriſt's Divinity, a Denial of his Religion for Fear of ſuffering, a wilful Oppoſition to the Truth, a malicious envying other Mens Graces, groſs Relapſes into Sin, or final Impenitence, and Perſeverance therein, have ſome by one, and ſome by others, been made the Characteriſticks of this Sin; and yet the very Occaſion of our Saviour's Diſcourſe concerning it cannot but give us quite different Conceptions.

From Matth. xii. 1. Mark ii. 23. Luke vi. 1. John v. 1. to Matth. xvii. 14. Mark ix. 14. Luke ix. 37. John vii. 1.

What it really is.

(x) HE had juſt now healed one poſſeſſed of a Devil, blind and dumb, whereat the People were much amaz'd, and began to ſay among themſelves, Is not this the Son of David? i. e. the promis'd Meſſiah: Which when the Phariſees underſtood, they gave this vile and malicious Turn to the Miracle, This Fellow does not caſt out Devils, but by Beelzebub, the Prince of the Devils. This Calumny our Saviour undertook to confute, by ſhewing how unlikely a Thing it was, that the Devil ſhould lend him his Power to uſe it againſt himſelf; and then proceeds to diſcourſe of this Sin, (y) Where fore I ſay unto you, all Manner of Sin and Blaſphemy (which is of another Nature) ſhall be forgiven unto Men, but the Blaſphemy againſt the Holy Ghoſt ſhall not be forgiven unto them. The Phariſees therefore are the Perſons charg'd with the Sin, and the Sin is, their attributing what was done

* It is certain, that the reſt of the Apoſtles did not conceive any peculiar Power or Pre-eminence to have been given to Peter, becauſe, after this Promiſe made to him, James and John deſir'd to be next in Dignity to our Lord, as alſo, among them and the other Apoſtles, there was a Contention who ſhould be greateſt; which could not well have happen'd, if they had underſtood that this Honour had been already granted to Peter. It cannot be deny'd, indeed, but that ſome of the Apoſtles were ſuperior to others, both in Perſonal Merit, and Order of Place. St Paul ſpeaks of ſome, viz. James, Peter, and John, who ſeem'd to be Pillars, Gal. ii. 9. i. e. principal Supporters of the Church, and were accounted chief Apoſtles, 2 Cor. xi. 5. and, it is remarkable, that, in all the Catalogues of the Twelve Apoſtles, which are extant in the Scriptures, Peter is conſtantly plac'd the firſt, as Judas is the laſt: From whence we may obſerve, that, as Judas, who kept the Bag, and was a Thief, John xii. 6, was laſt of all the Twelve, ſo Peter, who had the firſt Place, does all along, through the whole Hiſtory of the Goſpel, ſhew a greater Zeal for our Lord's Honour and Service, than any of the reſt, vid. Page 1317, in the Notes. But, whatever might be the true Reaſon of this Order, 'tis certain, that nothing more was founded on it, than a mere Priority of Place, and that neither Peter, nor any other Apoſtle had any Power or Authority over the reſt, according to that of St Cyprian, de Unitate Eccleſiæ, hoc erant utique & cæteri Apoſtoli, quod fuit Petrus, pari conſortio præditi & honoris & poteſtatis. done by the Finger of God to a diabolical Power.

Dr Whitby's Notion groundleſs.

(z) A Learned Annotator of our own is of Opinion, that, tho' our Saviour enter'd upon this Diſcourſe, becauſe the Phariſees imputed his Miracles to a Confederacy with Satan, yet his chief Deſign was to deter his Hearers from blaſpheming the enſuing Diſpenſation of the Holy Ghoſt, which, upon his Reſurrection, and Aſcenſion, he had promiſ'd to ſend down from Heaven: So that this Sin againſt the Holy Ghoſt neither was, nor could be committed, when our Saviour ſpake theſe Words, not until the Time, that its Miraculous Gifts were communicated to the Apoſtles, which was on the Day of Pentecoſt. But (beſides that our Bleſſed Saviour had not as yet made mention either of his own Aſcenſion, or of the Miſſion of the Holy Ghoſt) ſince the Power, whereby both he and his Apoſtles wrought their Miracles, proceeded from the ſame Divine Spirit, a reviling this Power, when our Saviour did the Miracle, muſt be Blaſphemy againſt the Holy Ghoſt, as much as it was, when his Apoſtles did it; and ſo the Difference amounts to nothing.

The Heinouſneſs of the Sin.

(a) Our Bleſſed Lord indeed, to ſhew that he was ſent from God, wrought Miracles, ſuch as did plainly evince a Divine Power and Preſence accompanying him. Theſe Miracles (to which he frequently appeals) the Phariſees were Eye-witneſſes of, and therefore could not deny them; yet ſuch was their Hatred and Oppoſition to him and his Doctrine, that, rather than allow his Divine Miſſion, they were reſolv'd to aſcribe all he did to the Power of the Devil. Their Deſign in this was to deſtroy the whole Credit of Chriſtianity, and, by making him a Confederate with Satan, to repreſent his Religion as the Work and Contrivance of Hell, and ſuch only as would tend to the Miſchief and Deſtruction of Mankind. To ſlander and calumniate the Son of Man, was a great Sin no doubt, but ſuch as might more eaſily be forgiven them, becauſe of his State of Humiliation, and poor Appearance, which might occaſion their Diſeſteem: But to repreſent the Spirit of God as an apoſtate Angel, and, whatever he did for the Good and Salvation of Mankind, as the Work and Intrigue of the Devil, is a Sin of ſuch horrid Nature, as may well deſerve a particular Exemption from the general Promiſe and Covenant of Pardon.

And why it is unpardonable.

(b) God, no doubt, can, if he will, work ſo powerfully upon the Minds of Men by his Grace, and Spirit, as to convince the moſt obſtinate; and, ſuppoſing them to be convinc'd, and repent, it cannot be deny'd, but that they would be forgiven: And therefore, when our Saviour ſays, that ſuch, as blaſpheme againſt the Holy Ghoſt, ſhall not be forgiven, it is reaſonable to ſuppoſe, that he means, that when Men are come to ſuch a Degree of inveterate Malice, God (as he juſtly may) will withdraw his Grace from them, and leave them to the Bent of their perverſe Minds, which will inſenſibly engage them in a farther Oppoſition to the Truth, and ſink them finally into Perdition; ſo that being deſerted of God, and, for Want of the neceſſary Aid of his Grace, continuing finally impenitent, they become incapable of Forgiveneſs, both in this World, and in that which is to come. The ſhort then of all this is, that the Sin againſt the Holy Ghoſt is unpardonable, not becauſe there is not a Sufficiency of Merit in Chriſt to atone for it, or of Mercy in God the Father to forgive it, but becauſe thoſe, who commit it, are of ſuch a refractory and incorrigible Spirit, that they reſiſt the laſt and utmoſt Means of their Conviction, and, conſequently, neither will, nor can repent; eſpecially, if God in Judgment, (as it ſometimes happens) and (c) becauſe they received not the Love of the Truth, that they might be ſaved, ſhould ſend upon them a ſtrong Deluſion, that they might believe a Lye.

The Meaning of eating Chriſt's Fleſh and drinking his Blood.

THAT, which has made ſome Paſſages in the vith Chapter of St John's Goſpel, and eſpecially the Command of (d) eating the Fleſh, and drinking the Blood of the Son of Man, a Matter of ſo much Perplexity, is the Want of attending to the Occaſion of his Diſcourſe, and the figurative Forms of Expreſſion, that were then in Uſe in the Eaſtern Nations. Our Lord, it ſeems, but the Day before, (e) had fed a great Number of People with a very ſmall Matter of Proviſions. The Day following they reſort to him, in Hopes of the ſame bounteous Supply. Our Lord, who knew their Deſign, rebuk'd their greedy Appetite. They, in Return, reminded him of Moſes's Liberality (much ſuperior to his) in providing them Manna for the Space of forty Years. Hereupon, our Lord took occaſion to acquaint them, (f) that he was the Bread of God, which came down from Heaven, highly preferable to Manna; foraſmuch as that gave only their Forefathers a tranſitory, but this an everlaſting Life to the whole World: For (g) he that cometh to me (continues he) ſhall never hunger; and he that believeth in me, ſhall never thirſt; and, again, (h) I am the living (or rather Life-giving) Bread, which came down from Heaven; if any Man eat of this Bread, he ſhall live for ever, and the Bread that I will give him is my Fleſh, which I will give for the Life of the World: (i) For my Fleſh is Meat indeed, and my Blood is Drink indeed. He that eateth my Fleſh, and drinketh my Blood, hath eternal Life, and I will raiſe him up at the laſt Day.

NOW, whoſoever conſiders the Genius of the Eaſtern Languages, abounding in lofty, and ſometimes abſtruſe Figures, and how common a Thing it was, among the Jews eſpecially, to uſe the Metaphors of eating and drinking in a ſpiritual Senſe, viz. to denote the Exerciſe, or Improvement of any of the intellective Faculties of the Soul, will not be much ſurpriz'd at our Saviour's expreſſing himſelf in this Manner. (k) Ho, every one that thirſteth (ſays the Prophet, exhorting the People to hear his Inſtructions) come ye to the Waters, and he, that hath no Money, come ye, buy and eat; yea, come buy Wine and Milk, without Money, and without Price; and eat ye that, which is good, and let your Soul delight itſelf in Fatneſs. To the ſame Purpoſe, we frequently find Philo calling Wiſdom and Virtue the Food of the Soul, which nouriſhes it to eternal Life; and (l) the Talmudiſts telling us, that all the Eating and Drinking, which is mentioned in the Book of Eccleſiaſtes, relates to the Obſervation of the Law, and good Works: Nay, Manna, in particular (according to the Senſe of ſome Jewiſh Authors) was an eminent Type of Chriſt; and therefore the good Man, (m) ſays Philo, lifts up his Eyes to Heaven, looking to the Manna, the divine and heavenly λόγος, the incorruptible Food of the Soul, that loves God; and, if this was the Jews Senſe of Things, our Saviour was guilty of no Preſumption in ſtiling himſelf the true Bread, which came down from Heaven, nor of any Abſurdity, in inſiſting upon a Metaphor, which ſo frequently occurr'd in the beſt of their Authors. The only Queſtion is, whether our Saviour's Words in this Place are to be taken in a literal or metaphorical Senſe, i. e. whether they relate to a corporeal or ſpiritual Eating his Fleſh.

From Matth. xii. 1. Mark ii. 23. Luke vi. 1. John v. 1. to Matth. xvii. 14. Mark ix. 14. Luke ix. 37. John vii. 1.

Not to be taken in a literal Senſe.

THERE is ſomething ſo ſhocking in the very Notion of one Man's eating the Fleſh of another, that, when the Jews heard our Saviour (as they imagin'd) diſcourſe at this rate, they might well ſay, (n) How can this Man give us his Fleſh to eat? "(o) Will he cut it in Pieces, and diſtribute to every one of us a Share? 'Tis " no agreeable Thought to eat human " Fleſh, but (ſuppoſing we could bring " ourſelves to that) how could he multiply himſelf into ſo many Parts, as that " each

“ each of us might have one? Or, how “ could himſelf ſubſiſt, if he ſhould, in “ this barbarous and inhuman Manner, “ cut and mangle his own Body?” This ſeems to be the Reaſoning of the Jews upon the Caſe: (p) But, on all Hands, it is agreed, that they miſtook the Senſe of our Saviour's Words, and fancy'd ſuch a Meaning in them, as he never intended; whereas, had the literal Senſe been the proper and intended Meaning, 'tis certain, that they impos'd no falſe Conſtruction upon what he ſaid; ſince, upon this Suppoſition, he intended, that this human Fleſh ſhould properly be eaten, and they, in their queſtioning the Truth of what he ſaid, meant no more.

We may obſerve farther, that, when our Saviour knew within himſelf, that the Abſtruſeneſs of his Diſcourſe upon this Subject had given ſome Diſguſt to his Diſciples, (q) he ſaid unto them, does this offend you? What, and if ye ſhould ſee the Son of Man aſcend up where he was before? The only Senſe of which Words can be, “ (r) Are you offended that I thus ſpeak “ of giving you my Fleſh to eat? Do you “ look on this Expreſſion now as a Thing “ ſo very abſurd, and unintelligible? “ What then will you think of it, when “ this Body is remov'd hence into Hea“ven? i. e. How will you then be ſcar'd, “ and think it ſtill more difficult, and “ more impoſſible to apprehend, how ye “ ſhall then eat my Fleſh, and drink my “ Blood, provided ye go on to underſtand “ my Words in a groſs and carnal Man“ner?” For St Athanaſius has well obſerv'd, that our Saviour here mentions his Aſcent into Heaven, that he might divert his Diſciples from entertaining a carnal Senſe of his Words: And, therefore, his Argument is, —— Since it will be then impoſſible for you to eat my Fleſh corporeally, when it is ſo far remov'd from you; by this you may perceive, that my Purpoſe is, that you ſhould underſtand my Words in a ſpiritual Senſe.

We may obſerve again, that when ſeveral Diſciples revolted upon the Account of this hard Saying, (as (s) it is called) and our Saviour was apprehenſive that his Apoſtles might do the like, St Peter, in the Name of the reſt, anſwers him, (t) Lord, to whom ſhall we go? Thou haſt the Words of eternal Life: Whereas, had he underſtood our Saviour as ſpeaking here of oral Manducation, his Anſwer, very probably, would have been to this Effect: “ Whatſoever Appearance there may be of In“humanity, Abſurdneſs, and Impoſſibility “ in eating thy natural Fleſh, and drink“ing thy Blood, yet we believe it, be“cauſe thou haſt ſaid it, who art Truth “ itſelf, and able to make good thy Words.” But, ſince we hear nothing from him of this Tendency, we may reaſonably conclude, that he had no ſuch Notion of our Saviour's Words. And, indeed, our Saviour, one would think, had done enough to explain his own Meaning, when he tells us, that the Eating, which he intends, is (u) Believing on him, and that it was ſuch an Eating, as would make a Man (x) live for ever; that (y) Fleſh (if we could eat it) profiteth nothing, ſince the Soul can only be nouriſh'd by ſpiritual Food; and that therefore the Words, which he ſpake unto them, were Spirit, i. e. were to be underſtood in a ſpiritual Senſe, otherwiſe they would not be conducive to eternal Life: And therefore (z) Euſebius introduces our Saviour, as thus addreſſing his Diſciples, “ Do not think, that I ſpeak of “ that Fleſh, wherewith I am compaſs'd, “ as if you muſt eat of that; neither ima“gine, that I command you to drink my “ bodily Blood, but underſtand well, that “ the Words, which I have ſpoken unto “ you, they are Spirit and Life.” For, (as St Auſtin (a) lays down the Rule for the Expoſition of Scripture-Phraſes) If the Saying be preceptive, either forbidding a wicked wicked Action, or injoining a good one, it is no figurative Speech; but if it ſeems to command any Wickedneſs, or to forbid what is profitable and good, it is figurative. Accordingly, this Saying, except ye eat the Fleſh of the Son of Man, and drink his Blood, ſeems to command a wicked Thing, and is therefore a Figure, injoining us to communicate in the Paſſion of our Lord, and ſweetly and profitably remember, that his Fleſh was wounded and crucified for us. (b) In this Senſe his Fleſh and Blood are ἀληθῶς, truly, Meat and Drink; becauſe the Eating of this Fleſh by Faith in his ſalutary Paſſion doth nouriſh the Soul to Life eternal; and the drinking of his Blood by Faith, as that, which was ſhed for the Remiſſion of Sins, does refreſh the Perſon, thirſting after Righteouſneſs, and convey into him a Principle of living well, and of living for ever.

Thus we have gone through the ſeveral Objections, that are uſually made to the Facts contain'd in the Evangelical Hiſtory of this Period; and (if it would be of any farther Satisfaction to thoſe, that delight to make them) we might ſhew, that whatever is recorded of our Bleſſed Saviour, the like, in one Inſtance or other, the Heathens themſelves have acknowledg'd in their deify'd Heroes, and great Men: (c) That the ſame Power of curing all Kinds of Diſeaſes the Greeks aſcribe to their Æſculapius, and the Egyptians to their Serapis and Iſis: That Hadrian (according (d) to Spartianus) was cur'd of a Fever by the Touch of a certain blind Man: That Seſoſtris, King of Egypt, upon offering a Sacrifice to the God Mnevis, was reſtor'd to his Eye-ſight: That Veſpaſian (if we may believe Tacitus) cur'd a Man of his Lameneſs, and another of his Blindneſs, by anointing his Eyes with Spittle, in the Manner, that our Saviour did; and that Apollonius Tyanæus (whom (e) Philoſtratus ſets up as a powerful Rival of our Lord's Miracles) cur'd a young Man, that was poſſeſs'd with a Devil; and, when he had reſtor'd him to his right Senſes, receiv'd him into the Number of his Diſciples. Simplicius, in his Diſſertations upon Epictetus, ſeems to promiſe to all pious and Wiſe-Men the Power of calming the Waves of the Sea; and how Neptune rebuk'd and allay'd the Winds, which, without his Permiſſion, had rais'd a tempeſtuous Storm, is a Story well known, and well ſet off in (f) Virgil. Every Poet almoſt mentions this ſame Neptune's riding in his Chariot on the Surface of the Sea; and the Tradition is, that to his Son Euphemus, and his Nephew Orion, he gave the Faculty of walking upon it, without Fear of ſinking. Nothing can be more common among the Fictions of theſe Writers, than the Transfiguration of their Gods upon one Occaſion or other; and, that our Saviour's Method of electing his Diſciples might not want a Precedent in profane Hiſtory, (g) we are told that the famous Eaſtern Philoſopher Confuſius, out of the three Thouſand Followers that he had, made choice of Seventy-two of principal Note, and, out of theſe, of twelve only to be his more immediate Companions, and to whom he committed the hidden Myſteries of his Philoſophy: But our Happineſs is, that the Credibility of the Scripture-Hiſtory wants no ſuch weak Supports as theſe.

DISSERTATION II.

Of the Prophecies relating to the MESSIAH, and their Accompliſhment in our BLESSED SAVIOUR.

The Completion of Prophecies a Proof of the Truth of the Chriſtian Religion.

ONE great Evidence of our Saviour's Divine Miſſion, and, conſequently, of the Truth of his Religion, is the Completion of the antient Prophecies, relating to the Meſſiah, in his Perſon, Doctrine, and Miracles. He indeed makes more frequent Appeal to his Miracles; (b) The Works, which the Father hath given me to finiſh, ſays he, the ſame Works, that I do, bear Witneſs of me, that the Father hath ſent me: But, ſince, at the ſame Time, he lays Claim to the Character of being the Perſon, ſpoken of by Moſes and the Prophets, when he bids the People (i) ſearch the Scriptures, becauſe they teſtified of him; 'tis certain, that his Title to the Meſſiahſhip muſt be try'd by the Teſtimony of the Prophets, and that all the miraculous Works, which he did, will not prove him to be the Meſſenger of the Covenant, whom God was to ſend, unleſs the ſeveral Predictions, which his Servants the Prophets gave of that renown'd Perſon, are found to unite and agree in him. It can hardly be thought, but that God Almighty, who deſign'd ſuch an ineſtimable Benefit for Mankind, as the ſending his own Son into the World for the Redemption of it, ſhould give ſome previous Notice of his Coming, and draw his Picture (as it were) ſo much to the Life and Likeneſs, that, when the Original ſhould be brought to view, it might be known, and diſtinguiſh'd by it. It is acknowledg'd, I think, on all Hands, that the Prophets, at ſundry Times, and in divers Manners, have done this; (k) that each of them, in his Turn, have drawn a Feature, (if I may ſo ſay) and left ſome maſterly Stroke behind him of this great Perſonage, that was to come from Heaven; that one has deſcrib'd his Parentage, another the Time, another the Place, and another the uncommon Manner of his Birth; that ſome have taken notice of the moſt remarkable Actions and Events of his Life, and ſeveral of the moſt minute, and altogether-ſingular Circumſtances of his Death; that by ſome his Reſurrection is foretold, by others his Aſcent to the Throne of God, and by others the perpetual Duration of his Kingdom: And, if the Prophets are allow'd to have done this, our only Enquiry is, whether the Lineaments, which they, in their ſeveral Capacities, have drawn of the promis'd Meſſiah, (when all brought together) be anſwerable to the Account, which the Evangeliſts have given us in their Hiſtory of the Bleſſed Jeſus.

Tho' they be obſcure.

WE readily own indeed, that there is a great Obſcurity in the antient Prophecies. They are generally penn'd in a very exalted Stile, and abound with ſo many bold Metaphors, and hyperbolical Expreſſions, ſo many Allegories, and Parables, and other abſtruſe Forms of Speech, as make it very difficult for the Interpreters of Scripture to diſcover their true Scope or Meaning. The Prophecies relating to the Meſſiah are ſtill more obſcure, becauſe, as they conſider him in the different Capacities of his Humiliation, and Exaltation, unleſs this Diſtinction is taken along with us, when we apply them to one and the ſame Perſon, they will ſeem to load his Character with Contradictions. But ſtill, ſince it is acknowledg'd, that the great Deſign of Prophecy was to acquaint the World

World with the Meſſiah, and that, upon whatever particular Occaſions God ſent his Meſſengers, he always made this one Part of their Errand, we can hardly believe, that he would multiply theſe Meſſages to no Purpoſe; or, when he pretended to reveal this Matter to them, mock them, with unintelligible Words, and leave them as much in the Dark, as he found them. He might indeed, for wiſe Purpoſes, (l) multiply Viſions, and uſe Similitudes, and (m) dark Speeches, by the Miniſtry of the Prophets; but, in this grand Diſcovery of all, he certainly left ſuch Indications, as enabled thoſe, who, looked for the Redemption of Iſrael, (and, accordingly, made it their Buſineſs to ſearch the Scriptures, and enquire into the Marks of the Meſſiah) to attain a competent Knowledge of them: Nor can it well be doubted, but that the Jews had ſome fix'd and well-known Rules, (tho' they have not deſcended to us) whereby they diſtinguiſh'd the Paſſages in the Prophetick Writings, which related to this important Subject, from any others, becauſe we find, that, (n) when Herod ſummon'd the Sanhedrim together, and demanded of them where Chriſt was to be born, they readily reply'd at Bethlehem in Judea, having the Prophecy of Micah (o) to that Purpoſe ready to produce.

And deliver'd at ſeveral different Times.

We acknowledge again, that the Prophecies concerning the Meſſiah were deliver'd, not only in an obſcure Manner, but in different Proportions, and at very diſtant Times. Thus to Adam and Eve he was promis'd in general, (p) as a Man; to Abraham, (q) as his Poſterity; to Jacob, (r) as deſcending from the Tribe of Judah in particular; to David, that he ſhould be of his Family, and (s) the Fruit of his Body; to Micah, that he ſhould be born at Bethlehem (t); to Iſaiah, that his Birth ſhould be miraculous, and his Mother a Virgin (u); to the ſame Prophet, that his Death ſhould be for (x) the Redemption of Mankind; to Daniel (y), when the preciſe Time of his Suffering ſhould be; to Haggai, laſtly, and Zechariah and Malachi, that (z) all theſe Events ſhould be accompliſh'd before the Deſtruction of the ſecond Temple. (a) Now, (not to mention any more) if we compute the Seaſons of theſe few, the general Prediction of a Saviour in human Nature will be found to bear Date, before that of his being Abraham's Seed, about two Thouſand and fourſcore Years; from this, to the Declaration of his particular Tribe, were two hundred and fourſcore Years; thence to the Prophecy of his particular Family, above ſix hundred Years; after that, to the Signification of his miraculous Nativity, more than three hundred Years; and from thence to the Time of his publick Appearance in the World, three hundred and fifty Years, or thereabouts. Now ſince theſe Prophecies were thus deliver'd by Degrees, and at ſuch diſtant and different Times, it may eaſily ſo happen, that, conſidering them ſingly and apart, we may find ſome other Perſon and Event, to which they may be adapted, without any great Violence to the Text; but then the right Way in this Caſe to make a Judgment is not by ſeparate and particular Paſſages, but by the Connection of the Whole, by the exact Coincidence, and entire Agreement of all the Prophecies, which, at ſeveral Times, denoted the Meſſiah, brought into one Point of Light, and laid together. This is the only Method we have to determine the Matter: And, accordingly, let us now look into ſome of the principal Paſſages of our Saviour's Life, as it is recorded by the Evangeliſts, and ſo ſee, whether they do not exactly agree with the ſeveral Characters, which the Prophets have given us of the Meſſiah.

The Prophecies relating to the Meſſiah fulfilled in our Saviour.

OUR Lord Jeſus, we are told, (b) was conceiv'd, and born of a pure Virgin, without the Concurrence of any Man; for ſo the Prophecy had foretold, that (c) the Seed of the Woman ſhould bruiſe the Serpent's Head, and that (d) a Virgin ſhould conceive, and bear a Son, and call his Name Immanuel. He was deſcended (e) of the Family of David, and born (f) at the Town of Bethlehem; becauſe, in Favour to that King, God had promis'd that (g) he would eſtabliſh his Seed for ever, and that (h) out of Bethlehem a Ruler of Iſrael ſhould come, whoſe Goings-forth had been from Everlaſting: And he was born (i) in the Reign of King Herod i. e. before the total Diſſolution of the Jewiſh Government, and during the Standing of the ſecond Temple, becauſe one Prophecy ſays, that (k) the Sceptre ſhould not depart from Judah until Shiloh come; and another, that (l) the Deſire of all Nations ſhould come, and, by his Preſence, make the Glory of God's latter Houſe greater than that of the former.

WELL: But, before his Appearance in the World, (m) John the Baptiſt was appointed his Forerunner, and came to bear witneſs of him, becauſe the Lord, by the Mouth of his Prophets, had ſaid, (n) Behold, I ſend my Meſſenger, and he ſhall prepare the Way before me; (o) he ſhall cry in the Wilderneſs, Prepare ye the Way of the Lord, make ſtraight an High-Way for our God. When he made his Appearance in the World, he took up his chief Reſidence (p) in the Province of Galilee, becauſe the Prophet, ſpeaking of the Inhabitants of that Country, tells us, that upon them, (q) who dwelt before in the Land of the Shadow of Death, did a great Light ſhine, when they had it to ſay, unto us a Child is born, unto us a Son is given, and the Government ſhall be upon his Shoulder, &c. When he came to converſe in it, ſuch was his quiet and inoffenſive Temper and Behaviour, that the Prophet did not miſrepreſent him, when he ſtiled him (r) the Prince of Peace, and one, who (s) would not cry, nor cauſe a Voice to be heard in the Streets. When he enter'd upon his publick Miniſtry, the very Actions, which the Evangelical Prophet had foretold of the Meſſiah, he perform'd to a Tittle; For (t) he preached good Tidings to the Meek, and proclaimed Liberty to the Captives; he (u) opened the Eyes of the Blind, and unſtopped the Ears of the Deaf; he made the lame Man to leap as an Hart, and the Tongue of the Dumb to ſing.

From Matth. xii. 1. Mark ii. 23. Luke vi. 1. John v. 1. to Matt. xvii. 14. Mark ix. 14. Luke ix. 37. John vii. 1.

BUT, during the Courſe of his Miniſtry, our Saviour, we read, liv'd in a very mean, obſcure Condition, and ſuffer'd at laſt a violent Death: And why ſo? Becauſe of the Meſſiah it was foretold that (x) he ſhould be deſpiſed, and rejected of Men, a Man of Sorrows, and acquainted with Grief; who ſhould be cut off from the Land of the Living, and pour out his Soul unto Death. But, for whom ſhould he ſuffer all this? (y) For us Men, and our Salvation: For ſo it was appointed, that the Meſſiah ſhould (z) bear our Griefs, and carry our Sorrows; that he ſhould be wounded for our Tranſgreſſions, and bruiſed for our Iniquities; becauſe the Lord would lay upon him the Iniquities of us all. And in what Manner was he to ſuffer? With a Patience and Meekneſs anſwerable to the Prophecy, (a) He was oppreſſed, and he was afflicted, yet he opened not his Mouth; he was brought as a Lamb to the Slaughter, and as a Sheep before her Shearers is dumb, ſo he opened not his Mouth.

IT might ſeem a little ſtrange, that our Lord, who, all his Life-time, affected no Popularity, ſhould, a little before his Death, (b) make his publick Entry into Jeruſalem, and in a Manner ſo very ſingular, had not the Prophet called upon the the Daughter of Zion (c) to rejoice greatly, becauſe her King was coming unto her, bringing Salvation, lowly, and riding upon an Aſs, and a Colt, the Foal of an Aſs. Strange, that (d) he ſhould be betray'd by his own Diſciple, to whom he had been ſo very kind, had not the Pſalmiſt foretold it in theſe Words, (e) Mine own familiar Friend, in whom I truſted, which did eat of my Bread, hath lift up his Heel againſt me: And ſtrange, that, of all other Deaths, he ſhould be ſentenc'd to Crucifixion, which was neither a Jewiſh Puniſhment, nor proper to be inflicted (f) for the Crime of Blaſphemy, (g) that was alledg'd againſt him, had not the ſame Royal Prophet determin'd the Matter in theſe; (h) Thy pierced my Hands, and my Feet; they ſtand ſtaring, and looking upon me.

Such then was the Will of God, that the Saviour of the World ſhould be cruciſy'd; but in what Company did he ſuffer? The Goſpel tells us, (i) between two Thieves, becauſe the Prophecy had declar'd, that he ſhould (k) be numbered with the Tranſgreſſors. But how did the Spectators behave while he was thus hanging upon the Croſs? Juſt in the Manner, that the Pſalmiſt deſcrib'd; (l) All they, that ſee me, laugh me to Scorn, they ſhoot out the Lip, and ſhake the Head, ſaying, he truſted in the Lord, that he would deliver him, let him deliver him, if he would have him. What did they give him to drink in the mean Time? * A narcotick Potion was generally allow'd, in ſuch Caſes, to ſtupify the Senſe of Pain, but, in his, nothing but Vinegar was allow'd, becauſe the Prophecy before had ſpecify'd the Liquor; (m) They gave me Gall to eat, and when I was thirſty, they gave me Vinegar to drink: And what became of his Cloaths? All diſpos'd of according to the Prophecy; (n) they parted my Garments, among them, and upon my Veſture did they caſt Lots.

But under all theſe Provocations and Indignities, what did he do? Why he pray'd to God for the Forgiveneſs of his Crucifiers, becauſe the Prophet had foretold, that (o) while he poured out his Soul unto Death, he ſhould alſo make Interceſſion for the Tranſgreſſors. In his greater Agonies what were his Ejaculations to God? The ſame, that the Royal Pſalmiſt, perſonating the Meſſiah in his Extremity, has left upon Record: (p) My God, my God, look upon me: Why haſt thou forſaken me, and art ſo far from my Help, and from the Words of my Complaint? What the Words, wherein he gave up the Holy Ghoſt? The very ſame, that the Pſalmiſt, in another Place, had preſcrib'd; (q) Father, into thy Hands I commend my Spirit. But, after our Saviour's Death, in what Manner was his Body diſpos'd of? Contrary to the Cuſtom of the Romans, who left thoſe, that ſuffer'd in this Manner, hanging upon the Croſs, until they were conſum'd; and contrary to the Intention of his Enemies, who wiſh'd him no better than a Malefactor's Funeral, he was honourably and nobly interr'd, becauſe it was pre-ordain'd, that (r) he ſhould make his Grave with the Rich in his Death. After his Burial, what became of his Body? It was rais'd again, and reſtor'd from the State of the Dead, becauſe, in Confidence of this, he laid down his Life, that (s) God would not leave his Soul in Hell, nor ſuffer his Holy One to ſee Corruption. After his Reſurrection, and Continuance for ſome Time upon Earth, what did he do next? In the Sight of

of his Diſciples, and ſeveral other Spectators, aſcend triumphantly into Heaven; for ſo the Divine Order was, (t) Lift up your Heads, O ye Gates, and be ye lift up, ye everlaſting Doors, that the King of Glory may come in. After his Aſcenſion into Heaven what did he finally do? Send down the Holy Ghoſt upon his Apoſtles, to enable them to propagate his Religion all the World over; for ſuch is the Purport of the Prophecy, (u) Thou art gone up on high, thou haſt led Captivity captive, and received Gifts for Men, that (x) the Mountain of the Lord's Houſe might be eſtabliſhed on the Top of the Mountains, and exalted above the Hills, and that all Nations ſhould flow unto it.

And that by a viſible Interpoſition of Providence.

Upon the Whole then, we may perceive, that the ſeveral Things, which the Prophets had foretold of the promiſ'd Meſſiah, were fulfilled in the Perſon and Actions of our Bleſſed Saviour; but then, there is ſomething farther to be conſider'd in this Matter, and that is, the viſible Interpoſition of an over-ruling Providence, in the Completion of theſe Predictions. (y) For, that our Lord ſhould be born of a Virgin, contrary to the known Laws of Nature; at the City of Bethlehem, when he was conceiv'd at Nazareth; and under the Declenſion of the Jewiſh Polity, as it was predicted; that, upon the Cruelty of Herod, he ſhould be carry'd into Egypt; upon the Succeſſion of Archelaüs, return into Judea, and ſettle his Abode in the obſcure Country of Galilee, whence no good Thing, much leſs ſo eminent a Prophet, could have ever been expected to come: That the Judge, who pronounc'd him innocent, ſhould deliver him to Death; and to the Death of the Croſs, who (had he been guilty) muſt, by the Law of the Land, have been ſton'd: That he, who had ſo many Enemies, ſhould be betray'd by one of his Diſciples; and by a Diſciple, who carry'd the Bag, and, conſequently, all his Maſter's Riches, for a vile Sum of Money; and that this Money, the Price of Blood, ſhould be employ'd in a Work of Charity, to buy a Field to bury Strangers in: That he, who ſpent all his Time in doing good, ſhould be doom'd to ſuffer among Thieves and Malefactors; and the Multitude, who were wont to pity dying Criminals, ſhould inſult, and deride him in his greateſt Miſery: That, in the Diviſion of his Cloaths, they ſhould caſt Lots for his Coat, and, contrary to the Uſage of the Country, in the Midſt of his Agonies, give him Vinegar to drink: That, contrary to the Practice of the Romans, he, that was crucify'd, ſhould be permitted to be bury'd, and, altho' he died among Malefactors, have Perſons of the firſt Rank and Character joining together in his honourable Interment: Theſe, and ſeveral other Particulars, that might be produc'd, are ſo very ſtrange and ſurpriſing, that they muſt needs ſtrike every pious and devout Soul with a profound Senſe of the unſpeakable Wiſdom, as well as Goodneſs of God, in accompliſhing in Jeſus what he had promiſ'd and foretold of the Meſſiah, by Ways and Means to human Wiſdom very unlikely, and very diſproportionate. And, if the Predictions relating to the Meſſiah have, in this wonderful Manner, and by the particular Direction and Appointment of Providence, thus met in the Bleſſed Jeſus, like Lines in one common Center, the natural Reſult of this Contemplation is, that Jeſus is the Chriſt, the Son of the Living God.

Which is a certain Proof of our Saviour's Divine Miſſion.

(z) For, can it be imagin'd, with any worthy Conception of God, that a Work of Love and Wonder, ſo great as the ſending his Son to redeem the World, ſhould be in Agitation for full four Thouſand Years; that each ſucceeding Age, in this long Space, ſhould have ſome Notices of it; that the ſeveral Characters, he was to ſuſtain, ſhould be deſcrib'd by different Prophets, living at Times and Places ſo remote, that no Confederacy could be ſuſpected; that each of theſe Prophets ſhould draw, ſome one Line of him, and ſome another, another, and point him out, ſome in one Capacity, and ſome in another; and, above all, that every one of theſe Strokes or Lineaments ſhould be directed by the unerring Hand of God, to make at laſt one finiſh'd Picture, on Purpoſe that the Original, when it appear'd, might be found out, and diſtinguiſh'd by it; can it be imagin'd, I ſay, that a God of infinite Truth, Wiſdom, and Goodneſs, would have ever permitted, much leſs appointed, that our Bleſſed Lord ſhould, in every Part and Line, be ſo exactly like that Piece, unleſs he intended, that we ſhould receive him as the true Original? Unleſs we can entertain a Thought ſo unworthy of God, I ſay, as that he deſign'd to impoſe upon us in this whole Diſpenſation, we cannot but conclude, that he would never have permitted all the Marks belonging to the Meſſiah, to have concurr'd in the Life of our Bleſſed Saviour, and, by theſe Marks, have ſuffer'd ſo many Millions of Souls to have been miſtaken in the Object of their Faith and Worſhip, and thereupon, without any Fault of theirs, deluded into the heinous Sin of Idolatry, had he not appointed the Man Chriſt Jeſus to be the great Saviour of the World, and the Lord of Life and Glory.

An Objection.

"BUT, you are frequently miſtaken, (ſays the Jew, to avoid the Force of this) in your Application of theſe Prophetical Paſſages to your Jeſus, which properly belong'd to another Perſon, and in him receiv'd their utmoſt Accompliſhment. The xxiid Pſalm, for Inſtance, which complains of the Sufferings and Indignities, which its Author endur'd, you refer to the Meſſiah, and thence apply to your Jeſus; whereas it relates entirely to David, and the Troubles he underwent, under the Perſecution of Saul. (a) The Prophecy of Micah, which makes mention of a Ruler, whoſe Goings-forth had been from everlaſting, (whatever Uſe you make of it) was only intended of Zerubbabel, who was ſprung from the ancient Houſe of David; and that famous liiid Chapter of Iſaiah, which is ſo frequently cited by the Apoſtles, when rightly enquir'd into, is nothing elſe, but a lively Deſcription of the Sufferings of the Jews, under the Babyloniſh, or ſome other Captivity. Thus, by miſapplying, and miſinterpreting ſeveral Texts, in ſuch a Senſe, as the Jewiſh Church never receiv'd, and the Spirit of God never intended, you bedeck your Jeſus with Feathers, that are none of his own, and then cry out, How well he becomes them, and how exactly they befit him!"

From Matth. xii. 1. Mark ii. 23. Luke vi. 1. John v. 1. to Matth. xvii. 14. Mark ix. 14. Luke ix. 37. John vii. 1.

Anſwer'd, by ſhewing, that the Chriſtian Interpretation of the Prophecies is true.

THE Completion of Prophecies, in the Perſon of our Saviour Chriſt, is one of the moſt general Arguments, that the firſt Chriſtians made uſe of, in order to convert ſuch as were perſuaded of their Divine Authority. St Peter, (b) in his firſt publick Sermon that he made, out of the xvith and cxth Pſalms, cites two Paſſages, which, he plainly ſhews, could not be intended of the Patriarch David, to prove our Lord's Reſurrection, and Exaltation to Glory. (c) St Paul, who, by being brought up at the Feet of Gamaliel, underſtood the Force of this Argument, uſes more Proofs of this Kind, than any other Writer of the New Teſtament, as the leaſt Caſt of an Eye into his Epiſtles to the Romans, Galatians, and Hebrews, will ſhow: (d) And St Matthew, who wrote his Goſpel for the Uſe of the Jews more particularly, and for that Reaſon (as ſome imagine) in the Hebrew Tongue, is more expreſs and copious in his Application of the Prophecies to our Bleſſed Saviour, than any of the other Evangeliſts.

Now, (to mention no more than theſe) how abſurd would it have been for theſe Apoſtles, who were no Strangers to the Jewiſh Way of arguing, to alledge any Paſſage in the Prophets, as relating to the Meſſias, which properly belong'd to another another Perſon, in whom it had its Accompliſhment? Such a Method of proceeding could not fail of diſcovering their Confidence and Folly, of expoſing them to the Scorn and Ridicule of their Adverſaries, and, inſtead of gaining Proſelytes, of ruining the Cauſe, which, by ſuch unfair Practices, they endeavour'd to maintain. 'Tis but ſuppoſing then, that theſe Apoſtles were Men of common Senſe, and deſirous to promote the Cauſe, that they had taken in hand, and then we can hardly think, that they argu'd from any Prophecies concerning the Meſſiah, but ſuch as really belong'd to him, and ſuch, as the whole Jewiſh Church acknowledg'd ſo to do.

St PETER, by Virtue of the Sermon, which he preach'd on the Day of Pentecoſt, made about three Thouſand Converts to the Chriſtian Faith, and yet, it is obvious, that the whole Hinge of his Diſcourſe turns upon the Teſtimony of the Prophets: Had he therefore apply'd this Teſtimony, either to Perſons, to whom it did not belong, or in a Senſe contrary to its true Intendment, his Doctrine muſt have been exploded at once, and could never have met with ſuch uncommon Succeſs. And, in like Manner, as to the ſubſequent Converſions, which the Apoſtles made, (e) how can we imagine, that ſuch a Number of Jews of all Degrees, Rulers, Prieſts, and Scribes of all Sects, Men of Learning, and who, by their Station and Profeſſion, were oblig'd to know the Scriptures, ſhould forſake the Religion, they were accuſtom'd to, upon the Authority of Paſſages, which, in their proper Meaning and Intendment, were ſo far from countenancing, that they openly confronted the new Religion, they were to embrace; and all this, without any View of worldly Intereſt, with the certain Hazard of their Lives here, and the Loſs of God's Favour hereafter, in caſe of Inſincerity?

UPON the whole therefore, we may conclude, that every Jew, converted to the Chriſtian Faith, is an implicit Proof, that the Apoſtles Allegations of the ancient Prophecies, both as to the Ground and Senſe of them, were agreeable to their receiv'd Notions of them; inſomuch, that, were we at leiſure to enter into Particulars, we might ſhew, that it is hardly poſſible to name one ſingle Prediction, of the many apply'd to the Bleſſed Jeſus, which one or other of their moſt celebrated Writers do not acknowledge to belong to the Meſſiah.

Why the modern Jews have departed from it.

THE modern Jews, it muſt be own'd, have fallen off from the Notions of their more ingenuous Anceſtors, and do deny the Prophecies, quoted in the New Teſtament, thoſe Views, that we would aſcribe to them: (f) But whoever conſiders the Deſtruction of their City and Polity, which confounded all their Expectations of a glorious Meſſiah, and put them upon new Meaſures in the Application of ſuch Predictions, as they ſaw muſt needs have been fulfilled, while their State and Temple ſtood: Whoever conſiders the Darkneſs and Ignorance, that would neceſſarily enſue upon their long Diſperſion, and many ſad Calamities, when they fell into the Hands of perſecuting Powers, who hated them and their Religion moſt implacably: Whoever conſiders their Neglect of applying themſelves to the Study of the written Law, and attending wholly to their oral, and affecting to be curious in Ceremonies, while they continu'd careleſs of their Doctrines: Whoever conſiders their violent Prejudice againſt Jeſus, and his Diſciples, which, as it ſtuck at nothing, tho' never ſo falſe or wicked, to oppoſe them, might eaſily put them upon tampering with the Scriptures, and by Interpolations, or Defalcations, labouring to make them look another Way: And, laſtly, whoever conſiders that judicial Blindneſs, and Hardneſs of Heart, ſo often and expreſsly threaten'd, and ſo viſibly and lamentably inflicted upon this once elect People of God: [May he, in his infinite Mercy, ſo open their Eyes, that they may ſee the wonderous Things of the Law, and its Agreement

Agreement with the Bleſſed Goſpel!] Whoever conſiders theſe Things, I ſay, will not be at a Loſs for Reaſons, why the preſent Synagogue have departed from the Sentiments of the ancient, and are ſo earneſt to apply to David, Solomon, Hezekiah, Zorobabel, or any other Perſon of Note, what their Anceſtors never thought of attributing to any other, than the promiſ'd Meſſiah.

The xxiid Pſalm not applicable to David.

(g) ONE of their famous Interpreters, in his Comment upon the xxiid Pſalm, after ſome feeble Efforts to wreſt that Evidence out of our Hands, makes at length this ample Confeſſion: Our great Maſters, (h) ſays he, have interpreted this Pſalm of Meſſiah the King, but I ſhall interpret it of David himſelf, that we may have wherewith to anſwer the Hereticks. But, with all his Art and Subtlety, he can never make it out, how David, with any Propriety, can ſay of himſelf, (i) As for me, I am a Worm, and no Man, the very Scorn of Men, and the Out-caſt of the People. The greateſt Affliction, that ever befel that Prince, was his Expulſion from his capital City, upon the Rebellion of his Son Abſalom, and (k) Shimei's curſing and upbraiding him may ſeem perhaps to countenance this Complaint, (l) All they that ſee me, laugh me to Scorn, they ſhoot out their Lips, and ſhake their Heads; but we no where read in his Hiſtory, that his Enemies ever (m) pierced his Hands or his Feet, much leſs that, after they had made an End of him, they parted his Garments among them, and caſt Lots upon his Veſture. It was our Bleſſed Saviour alone, in whom this Prediction was verify'd; of him alone, that his Enemies took up the taunting Proverb, and ſaid, (n) He truſted in God, that he would deliver him, let him deliver him, if he would have him; to him alone, that theſe Words can, with any tolerable Conſtruction, belong, (o) Many Oxen are come about me, fat Bulls of Baſan cloſe me in on every Side; they gape upon me with their Mouths, as it were a ramping and roaring Lion; as he indeed appropriates the whole Pſalm to himſelf, when, in his dying Minutes, he utters this Citation, (p) My God, my God, why haſt thou forſaken me?

DAVID indeed, in all his Troubles, had no occaſion to make this Lamentation; for, tho' the Malice and Perſecutions of Saul were upon him, yet he had always abundant Reaſon to ſay of God, (q) Thou art my ſtony Rock, and my Defence, my Saviour, my God, and my Might; my Buckler, the Horn alſo of my Salvation, and my Refuge: Therefore, will I follow upon mine Enemies, and overtake them, neither will I turn again till I have deſtroyed them. His Splendor and Greatneſs, his Victories and Conqueſts, the Reduction of his Foes, and the Enlargement of his Kingdom, made him a proper Emblem of our Saviour's Exaltation, and Triumph over our ſpiritual Enemies; but there are few Paſſages in his Life reſemblant of his Sufferings, and none at all, that will juſtify this Complaint, (r) I am poured out like Water, and all my Bones are out of Joint; my Strength is dried up like a Potſherd, and my Tongue cleaveth to my Gums: So true is that Obſervation of Grotius, (s) "That Partiality was the Cauſe of theſe new Explications among the Jews, and that thoſe, which they formerly receiv'd, agreed very well with the Senſe of Chriſtians."

Nor the Propheſy of Micah indeed to Zorobabel.

UPON the Decree of Cyrus for the Reſtoration of the Jews, we find Zorobabel, among other Princes of the People, ſuperintending Matters, and taking upon him the Government of the Tribe, to which he belong'd; but that he ſhould be the Perſon intended by Micah's Prophecy, is a Thing impoſſible, becauſe he was not born in Bethlehem, which is the Place aſſign'd for the Birth of a Ruler, that the Prophet mentions, but in Babylon, as his Name imports. That it was was eſſentially neceſſary for the Meſſiah to be born in (t) Bethlehem, and no where elſe, is plain, from the Anſwer, which the Scribes and Phariſees make Herod, upon his conſulting them, and their Quotation of Micah for the Proof of it; is plain, from the general Notion, which not only the Learned, but the Vulgar, at this Time, had imbib'd, viz. (u) That Chriſt was to come of the Seed of David, and out of the Town of Bethlehem, where David was born; and is plain, from the Petition in their Liturgy, wherein they ſtill pray for the Advent of the Meſſiah, in theſe Terms: (x) Shake thyſelf from the Duſt, ariſe, put on thy beautiful Garments, O my People; by the Hand of Benjeſſe, the Bethlehemite, bring Redemption near to my Soul: So that the Prophecy, in all Reaſon, muſt be apply'd to the Perſon that was born there, and not to one, whoſe Place of Nativity was in a diſtant Country. It is to be obſerv'd farther, that Zorobabel was never any Ruler of Iſrael; for tho' he might be at the Head of the Captivity for ſome Years, yet it was without the Title and Authority of a Governor, and when he had executed his Commiſſion, he return'd to Babylon, and there dy'd. But, even ſuppoſing he were never ſo much a Governor, 'tis certainly carrying the Matter too far, to ſay of him, that he (y) ſhould ſtand and rule in the Strength of the Lord, and in the Majeſty of the Lord his God; much more it is ſo, to ſay, that the Going-forth, or Birth of this Ruler was of old, and from the Days of Eternity, (as the Marginal Note has it) which is only applicable to the Meſſiah, and, in a proper Senſe, only verify'd in our Bleſſed Saviour, (z) who in the Beginning was with God.

Nor that of Iſaiah to the Jewiſh People

AND, in like Manner, if we conſider the Words of the Prophet Iſaiah, in the liiid Chapter, and compare them with our Lord's Hiſtory, as the Evangeliſts have recorded it, we ſhall ſoon perceive, that they are applicable to none, but our Bleſſed Saviour only, for (to wave other Arguments that might be drawn from them) with what Propriety of Conſtruction can any of theſe Paſſages, (a) he was wounded for our Tranſgreſſions, he was bruiſed for our Iniquities, the Chaſtizement of our Peace was upon him, and by his Stripes we are healed, be apply'd to the Jewiſh Nation? Whenever did we hear, that the Jews bore the Griefs, and carried the Sorrows of others; that they were wounded for other Mens Tranſgreſſions, and bruis'd for Iniquities not their own? The publick Calamities, which God, at any Time, ſent upon them, are, by all the Prophets, imputed to their own Sins; but the Perſon here afflicted is ſaid to have done no Violence, neither was any Deceit found in his Mouth; and does this Character ſuit them under any Captivity or other Sort of Calamity, that the Prophet might have in View? If we will believe him, 'tis plain, that he had another Opinion of them, when, in the very Beginning of his Prophecy, we find him lamenting them and their Captivity in theſe Words, (b) Ah ſinful Nation! A People laden with Iniquity, a Seed of Evil-Doers, Children that are Corrupters; they have forſaken the Lord, they are gone backwards; wherefore your Country is deſolate, your Cities are burnt with Fire, your Land Strangers devour it in your Preſence, and it is deſolate, as overthrown by Strangers.

THE Sum of our Anſwer is this. If our Saviour and his Apoſtles cannot be ſuppoſ'd, with any Juſtneſs of Reaſoning, or Proſpect of Succeſs, to alledge Prophecies concerning the Meſſiah, which the Jewiſh Church, at that Time, did not acknowledge to be intended of him; if all the Prophecies, thus alledg'd, do even yet appear, by ſeveral of their moſt renown'd Doctors, to be interpreted of the Meſſiah; if the xxiid Pſalm cannot, with any Propriety of Conſtruction, be apply'd apply'd to David; nor the ivth Chapter of Micah, to Zorobabel; nor the liiid of Iſaiah, to the Jewiſh Nation in general; and if good Reaſons may be aſſign'd, why the preſent and antient Doctors of the Jewiſh Church do differ in the Manner of applying the Predictions of the Prophets; then is the Chriſtian Interpretation of them, which appears to be plain and natural, and has Antiquity on its Side, not to be leſs eſteem'd, becauſe ſome, out of Partiality and Prejudice, have forc'd their Wits to invent another.

Why we Chriſtians ought to adhere to the preſent Application of the Prophecies.

Nay, even ſuppoſing, that there were more Grounds, than what hitherto have appear'd, to diſpute the Juſtneſs of the Allegation of any Prophecy, yet ſtill we Chriſtians muſt aver, that the Application of Chriſt and his Apoſtles is to be preferr'd before that of any other, becauſe it was attended with ſuch irreſiſtible Proof of its Truth and Fidelity, as muſt overbear all Objections to the contrary. (c) For, upon a Diſpute of the Application of ſome Paſſage, or a Competition of two different Senſes of the ſame Paſſage, can any Thing in Nature be more deciſive, than the Teſtimony of God? And, can the Teſtimony of God appear by any ſtronger Evidence, than by the Power of Miracles, ſupporting the Allegation? God certainly knew the Intention of every Prophecy deliver'd by his Spirit; and therefore, if Chriſt and his Apoſtles, when they apply'd any Prophecy to the Meſſiah, gave the beſt Proof that could be given, of their being ſent by God, and of their ſpeaking and acting by his Commiſſion, God himſelf muſt be underſtood as confirming their Application. The Authority of the Application, or of the Expoſition, muſt, in ſuch a Caſe, be equal to that of the Prophecy; for there cannot be a better Proof, that the Prophet was ſent from God, than the Expoſitor gives of his Miſſion; and the Reaſon for his aſſenting to the one, as well as the other, is on both Sides the ſame.

The Reſult of this whole Enquiry is this,——That, ſince our Bleſſed Saviour appeals to the Writings of the Prophets, for the Proof of his being the Meſſiah, or Meſſenger ſent from God to deliver his Will to Mankind; and ſince the Marks and Characters, which the Prophets give of the Meſſiah, are found all to agree and unite in him, according to the Account which the Evangeliſts give us of his Life, we have all the Reaſon in the World to believe, that he was really the Perſon he pretended to be, that his Doctrine, conſequently, is the Word of God, and his Religion (d) The Grace of God, that bringeth Salvation, and hath appeared unto all Men; teaching us, that denying Ungodlineſs, and worldly Luſts, we ſhould live ſoberly, righteouſly, and godly, in this preſent World; looking for that Bleſſed Hope, and the glorious Appearing of the Great God, and our Saviour JESUS CHRIST.

Matt. xvii. 4. Mark. ix. 14. Luke ix. 37.

Our Saviour cures the Lunatic who was likewiſe a Demoniac.

From Matth. xii. 1. Mark ii. 23. Luke vi. 1. John v. 1. to Matt. xvii. 14. Mark ix. 14. Luke ix. 37. John vii. 1.

THE Day following our Lord's Tranſfiguration, (for that Tranſaction was, very probably, in the Night-time †) as he came down from the Mount, he perceived the Scribes in deep Debate † with the Apoſtles, he had left behind him, and while he was enquiring into the Subject of their Diſpute, a certain Man, breaking through the Crowd, came, and fell proſtrate at his Feet, and beſought him to have Pity upon his only Son, a deplorable Object, a Lunatic ‖ and poſſeſs'd, deaf and dumb, often thrown upon the Ground, and into the Fire and Water, rack'd with violent Convulſions, accompany'd with diſmal Out-cries, Foamings, Bruiſes, and Torments, and every Way in ſo deſperate a Condition, that his Diſciples, in his Abſence, were not able to cure him. Our Lord, upon hearing of this, was † not a little griev'd

† The Evangeliſt acquaints us, that, while our Saviour was at Prayer on the Mount, St Peter, and they that were with him, were heavy with Sleep, Luke ix. 32, which, in ſome Meaſure, confirms the Conjecture, that the Transfiguration was in the Night; a Time much more proper for the Diſplay of the Luſtre of ſuch an Appearance, than if it had happen'd in the broad Day-light. Calmet's Commentary.

† What the Subject-matter of this Debate was, the Evangeliſts have not inform'd us; but it ſeems not unlikely, that the Scribes were diſputing with the Apoſtles about their Maſter's Method of ejecting Devils, and the Power, which, in that Matter, he had conferred upon them; becauſe, in the Caſe before them, they ſaw them nonpluſs'd, and not able to caſt a Devil out of one, who, in his Abſence, was brought to them. This is the rather probable, not only becauſe our Saviour's diſpoſſeſſing Devils was what gravell'd, and vex'd the Scribes and Phariſees more, than all his other Miracles, and forc'd them to the ſorry Refuge of——He caſteth out Devils by Beelzebub, the Prince of Devils; but becauſe, upon his coming to the timely Relief of his Apoſtles, and demanding of the Scribes, what they were queſtioning and diſputing about, it immediately follows, One of the Multitude anſwered and ſaid, Maſter, I have brought unto thee my Son, which hath a dumb Spirit:——And I ſpake to thy Diſciples, that they ſhould caſt him out, and they could not, Mark ix. 17, 18. Pool's Annotations.

‖ The Word σεληνιάζεται, coming from σελήνη, the Moon, anſwers exactly to the Engliſh Lunatic, from Luna; but there is a Miſtake in rendering it: For, whereas the Engliſh Word Lunatic is commonly taken for a Mad-man, ſuch a one eſpecially, whoſe Diſtemper grows worſe towards the Full of the Moon, 'tis plain, from all Symptoms, ſuch as being convuls'd, foaming at the Mouth, grinding his Teeth, falling into the Fire, and bruiſing and tearing himſelf, &c. that the Diſorder, under which this Perſon labour'd, was an Epilepſis, or the Falling-ſickneſs. Now the Reaſon, why this Diſeaſe is expreſs'd by the Word σεληνιάζεται, is, becauſe the Moon has the ſame Influence on it, that it has in Madneſs. Both Diſtempers lie in the Brain, and the Changes of the Moon affect thoſe, that are ſubject to the one, as well as the other. When therefore the Evangeliſts tell us of this Epileptic, that the Devil took him, that he threw him down, caſt him into a Fit, and made him tear and bruiſe himſelf, the Meaning of all this is, that as, in thoſe Days, it was a common Thing for the Devil to have Power over Mens Bodies, which Power he employ'd in bringing Diſeaſes upon them; ſo it was in the preſent Caſe. The Devil, that poſſeſs'd this young Man, caſt him into frequent Fits of the Falling-ſickneſs (as all Demoniacs, we find, have one Diſtemper or other attending them) of which there was no Way to cure him, but by caſting out the Devil. Hammond's Annotations.

† The Rebuke, which our Saviour utters upon this Occaſion, O faithleſs and perverſe Generation, how long ſhall I be with you? &c. Matth. xvii. 17. ſeems to be intended for the whole Company, and every one to have a Share in it, in griev'd at the Want of Faith in his Diſciples, but order'd the Child to be brought to him. As he was drawing near, the Devil began to rack him with Convulſions, which put the Father in a terrible Fright; and, when our Lord commanded the evil Spirit to depart out of the young Man, and never to moleſt him more, after ſome hideous Out-cries, he tore and diſtorted him to ſuch a Degree, that he left him breathleſs on the Ground, ſo that many concluded he was quite dead: But Jeſus, taking him by the Hand, lifted him up, and deliver'd him to his Father, perfectly cur'd, to the great Aſtoniſhment of all the Spectators. And, when his Diſciples in private deſir'd to know the Reaſon, why they could not caſt out this Spirit, he imputed it, partly to their Want of Faith, and partly to this Spirit's being of a Kind †, which was not to be ejected without Faſting and Prayer.

in Proportion to their Deſerts. The Diſciples are not exempted; for they are charg'd with Infidelity, ver. 20. The Father of the Patient is pointed at, for his Faith was wavering, Mark ix. 21, &c. And the whole Nation of the Jews is included in it; for this was expreſsly their Character of Old, A very froward and perverſe Generation, and Children, in whom is no Faith, Deut. xxxii. 5, 20. Beauſobre's Annotations.

† Joſephus, who himſelf was a Phariſee, and well acquainted with the Notions of every Sect among the Jews, gives it for a current Opinion, that the Demons, in his and ſome preceding Ages, were nothing elſe, but the Souls of wicked Men, who, after Death, took poſſeſſion of the Living, and were continually either afflicting and tormenting, or exciting and ſolliciting them to ſuch Sins, as they found were agreeable, and complexional to them; and that, according to their different Ways of vexing or tempting thoſe, that they poſſeſs'd, they had different Appellations given them, an unclean Spirit, a deaf and dumb Spirit, a Spirit of Infirmity, &c. In Conformity to this Notion perhaps it is, that our Saviour here takes notice of the different Kinds of evil Spirits, and, as among wicked Men, there are different Degrees of Impiety, and ſome are more harden'd and profligate, than others; ſo he ſeems to intimate, that ſome of theſe Spirits are more deſperate and malicious than others, Matth. xii. 45. But all of them obſtinate enough, and (might they have their own Option) unwilling to leave the Bodies, they have taken poſſeſſion of. Here they think themſelves ſafe, and, in ſome Meaſure, ſcreen'd from the Divine Vengeance; and therefore, we find them, at ſome Times, crying to our Lord, Let us alone; what have we to do with thee? Art thou come to torment us? Matth. viii. 29. And, at others, when commanded to depart, tearing and torturing the Poſſeſs'd, and quitting their Habitation not without much Reluctancy, Mark ix. 26. The Apoſtles, no doubt, had conjur'd this evil Spirit before in their Maſter's Name, and, on ſeveral Occaſions, had found the prevailing Power of Faith, even when theirs was not ſo well improv'd, as it was at preſent; and yet, how Faith becomes neceſſary in the Exorciſm of Devils, when we find Strangers doing it in the Name of Chriſt, Mark ix. 38; or how the Faith of the Apoſtles came to be defective now, when, not many Days before, it was ſo very effectual; why ſome evil Spirits were Proof againſt the Name of Chriſt, whilſt others fled at the bare Mention of it; and why ſome ſurrendered at the firſt Summons, while Faſting and Prayer were the only Artillery that could diſlodge others: Theſe, and many more Queſtions, that might be rais'd from our Saviour's Words, are Points, wherein the beſt Commentators, we have met with, have not once attempted to give us any Satisfaction. Calmet's Commentary.

† The Words in the Text are, They underſtood not this Saying, and it was hid from them, Luke ix. 45. They underſtood our Saviour's Words, no doubt, and what the Import was of his being delivered into the Hands of Men, and put to Death; but then they could not comprehend, how their Maſter, whom they knew to be the Meſſiah, and Son of God; and whom, conſequently, they believ'd to be immortal and eternal, could poſſibly be put to Death, or ſuffer the Affronts and Outrages of Men. Theſe Notions to them ſeem'd incompatible, and therein they conceiv'd a Myſtery, which they could not underſtand: But the modern Jews have endeavour'd to reconcile theſe two Notions, by inventing the Diſtinction of Meſſiah Ben Joſeph, who was to die, and Meſſiah Ben David, who was to triumph, and live for ever. Calmet's Commentary, and Whitby's Annotations.

‖ There is ſome ſmall Difference in the ſeveral Ways, wherein the Evangeliſts have related this Matter. St Matthew tells us, that the Diſciples came to Jeſus, ſaying, who is the greateſt in the Kingdom of Heaven? Chap. xviii. 1. St Mark, that Chriſt put this Queſtion to them, and they held their Peace, Chap. ix. 34. and St Luke, that they had been diſputing this Point among themſelves, and Jeſus, perceiving the Thought of their Hearts, took a Child, &c. Chap. ix. 46, 47. Now, to reconcile this ſeeming Repugnancy, we muſt obſerve, that, as our Saviour was going to Capernaum, his Diſciples follow'd him, diſcourſing among themſelves (as St Mark has it) who of them was to be the greateſt ſhould have the chief Place of Dignity † in their Maſter's Kingdom, ſtill dreaming of a temporal Sovereignty. This our Saviour by his Divine Spirit knew; and therefore, to give an effectual Check to their ambitious Thoughts, he firſt informed them, that the only Way for any Man to become great in his Kingdom, was to be lowly in his own Eſteem; and then, calling a little Child †, and ſetting him in the Midſt of them, he propos'd him, as a Pattern of Meekneſs and Humility; recommended ſuch Children, and, in them, all humble Chriſtians, to the Favour of Mankind; caution'd them againſt doing any Injury †, or giving any Offence to ſuch, becauſe of their Guardian-Angels *; and, in the Kingdom of Heaven; that, when they came to him in the Houſe, having ſtill the ſame ambitious Notion in their Minds, he aſk'd them, What was it, that you diſcourſed of in the Way? But they, being aſham'd to tell him, held their Peace; and that then our Saviour, who well underſtood what the Subject of their Diſcourſe had been, endeavour'd, by the Example of a Child, to cure their Diſtemper, and to inform them what Diſpoſition of Mind was proper to qualify them both for his Kingdom of Grace here, and his Kingdom of Glory hereafter. St Matthew indeed, according to our Tranſlation, repreſents the Thing, as if the Diſciples had put the Queſtion to their Maſter, who ſhould be greateſt in the Kingdom of Heaven? But, that the Participle λέγοντες relates not to Jeſus, but to the Diſciples, and means not the external Speech, but the inward Reaſoning of their Minds, is obvious from their Silence, which St Mark takes notice of, and our Saviour's perceiving the Thoughts of their Hearts, which St Luke remarks: For, had themſelves propounded the Queſtion to our Saviour, (as the Verſion in St Matthew ſeems to imply) we cannot ſee, why they ſhould not anſwer his Demand, which tended to the ſame Purpoſe; nor can we imagine, why he ſhould be repreſented, as perceiving the Thoughts of their Hearts, had they already declared theſe Thoughts in plain Words. Whitby's Annotations.

† The Apoſtles, as well as the other Jews, had imbibed the Notion (which they never got quit of, until the Deſcent of the Holy Ghoſt inſtructed them better) that the Meſſiah, when he came upon Earth, ſhould erect a temporal Kingdom; and (as the Jews in general expect) that they ſhould then be conſtituted Lords over all other Nations; ſo the Apoſtles (who believ'd their Maſter to be the Meſſiah) were naturally led to think, that they ſhould have the Preference before all other Jews; and that, ſince the King Meſſiah (according to the Cuſtom of other Sovereigns) was to have ſome Officers of the higheſt Rank, they made no Queſtion, but that ſome of them would be made choice of, tho' they were not ſo well agreed, who were the fitteſt, or moſt deſerving of theſe high Poſts of Honour. Some of them were our Lord's Relations, and others had Parts and Endowments extraordinary; of ſome he had given high Commendations; and others he had admitted to a Participation in his moſt ſecret Retirements. Theſe Things might poſſibly raiſe ſome Emulation among them: And therefore, as our Saviour's Dominion was not of this World, he plainly tells them, that all ſuch worldly Deſires and Expectations were inconſiſtent with that ſpiritual Kingdom, which he was to erect, and wherein he, who deſired to be firſt, was to be laſt of all, and Servant of all, Mark ix. 35. Whitby's and Pool's Annotations.

† Some of the Antients are of Opinion that this Child was St Ignatius, who was afterwards Biſhop of Antioch, and famous in the Chriſtian Church for his writing, and dying in the Defence of the Truth. However this be, 'tis certain, that a Child, who has no Concern for Dominion or Empire over others, who is free from all covetous Deſires of Wealth, and knows nothing of what a Poſt of Honour means, was, in this Caſe, a very proper Emblem of that Simplicity, Innocence, and Humility, that our Lord requires in all his Diſciples. Calmet's Commentary, and Whitby's Annotations.

† The Words in the Caution are, —— Whoſo ſhall offend one of theſe little Ones, which believe in me, it were better for him, that a Milſtone were hanged about his Neck, and that he were drowned in the Depth of the Sea, Matth. xviii. 6. To offend, or ſcandalize, is to diſcourage Men in the Profeſſion and Practice of Religion, and, by Indignities and Perſecutions, as well as by bad Examples, to occaſion their Apoſtatizing from the Faith: For we can hardly imagine, that ſo ſevere a Puniſhment, as is here threaten'd, ſhould be inflicted for a Crime of leſs Aggravation, than what this amounts to. Grotius, upon the Place, is of Opinion, that the Milſtone about the Neck alludes to a Cuſtom of drowning among the Syrians. But St Jerome thinks, that this Manner of Execution was in Uſe among the Jews; for (according to Dr Alix) it was cuſtomary for them to caſt execrable Men into the Dead-Sea, with a Stone tied to them. 'Tis certain from Diodorus Siculus, and others, that, among the Greeks, this was the antient Puniſhment for ſacrilegious Perſons; and from Suetonius we may learn, that, for the Pride and Covetouſneſs, wherewith ſome in publick Offices had infeſted the Province, where they liv'd, Auguſtus had them caſt into the River, with great Weights about their Necks. Whitby's Annotations.

* It were too nice perhaps, to ſay, that every diſtinct Man has his diſtinct Guardian-Angel. It may be true, ſometimes, that many have but one, and it may be true, at other Times, that one has many, as we find Jacob had at Mahanaim, and Elias at Dothan; but this we may ſafely affirm, that no good Man is without an Angel, to inſpect his Behaviour, and to ſollicit his Well-being. To this Purpoſe Abraham tells his Servant, travelling to Nahor; The Lord will ſend his Angel with thee, and proſper thy Way, Gen. xxiv. 40. and Jacob makes mention of one, who had redeemed him from all Evil, and wiſhes the ſame Protection to his Children, Gen. xlviii. 16. The Pſalmiſt gives us expreſs Teſtimony, that the Angel of the Lord ſtandeth round about thoſe, that fear him, Pſam xxxiv. 7. And that Paſſage, which the Devil applies to our Saviour, he ſhall give his Angels Charge over thee, and keep thee in all thy Ways, is deliver'd by the Pſalmiſt as true of every Servant of Chriſt, as well as of Chriſt himſelf; for they are all miniſtring Spirits ſent forth to miniſter for them, who ſhall be Heirs of Salvation. Young's Sermons, Vol. II.

and, to remove the Occaſion of all ſuch Offences, exhorting them to mortify their inordinate Affections, tho' they were as dear to them as an Eye, an Hand, or a Foot, becauſe his heavenly Father, (like a diligent Shepherd, that delights in the Recovery of a Stray-Sheep) was unwilling that any Believer ſhould periſh. Together with theſe Reaſons againſt Scandal and Offences, he preſcrib'd ſome excellent Rules, in relation to brotherly Reproof, Church-Cenſures, and Forgiveneſs of Injuries; and, for the Enforcement of this laſt Duty, he propounded the Parable of a certain King, who, calling his Servants to Account, found that one of them ow'd him an immenſe Sum, no leſs than Ten Thouſand Talents †, which, upon his Inſolvency, and humble Petition, he freely forgave; and yet this very Wretch was no ſooner out of the King's Preſence, than he ſeiz'd upon his Fellow-Servant for a Trifle of a Debt, a Debt of a hundred Pence only, and caſt him into Priſon, even tho' he had us'd the ſame pathetick Intreaties to him, that himſelf had done to the King his Maſter: Which when the King came to underſtand, he ſent for the ungrateful Villain; upbraided him with his Baſeneſs and Cruelty; and then, in great Rage, order'd him to Priſon, until he ſhould diſcharge the whole Debt. And † ſo likewiſe ſhall my heavenly Father (ſays our Lord in the Application) deal with all ſuch, as will not forgive their Brother's Treſpaſſes from their Hearts.

While he was giving theſe Inſtructions to his Diſciples, he was interrupted by John, the Son of Zebedee, informing him of a certain Stranger, ‡ who caſt out Devils in his Name, but, becauſe he was not of their Fraternity, that he had forbidden him; which Conduct Jeſus by no Means could approve of, becauſe he look'd upon it, as a ſure Argument, that whoever did Miracles in his Name, could be no Enemy to his Perſon.

He pays the Tribute Money by a Miracle.

With this Diſcourſe they arriv'd to Capernaum, where the Collectors † of a certain Tribute for the Uſe of the Temple, came to Peter, and aſk'd him if his Maſter was accuſtom'd to pay it? And, when Peter went in to acquaint him with the Officers Demands, Of whom, (ſays our Lord, preventing him) do the Kings of the Gentiles take Tribute? Of their own Children, or of Strangers? Peter anſwer'd, Of

† Which, in our Money, amount to one Million eight hundred and ſeventy five thouſand Pounds; whereas the hundred Pence, that his Fellow-Servant was indebted to him, was but about three Pounds two Shillings and Six-Pence.

† The doctrinal Obſervation, that properly reſults from the Text, is this, ——— That our Sins, once forgiven, may, by a Forfeiture of that Pardon by our future Miſbehaviour, be again charg'd upon us; for God's Pardons in this Life are not abſolute, but conditional only. According to the Petition of the Lord's Prayer, they are anſwerable to our Dealings with others, and are likely to be no longer continu'd to us, than we perform the Conditions. Whitby's and Hammond's Annotations.

‡ That this Man did truly caſt out Devils, our Lord's Anſwer ſuppoſes, and his Diſciples ſaw with their Eyes: But then the Queſtion is, ——— How a Perſon, who did not follow Chriſt, could caſt out Devils in his Name? To which it may be anſwer'd, 1ſt, That this Perſon might believe in Jeſus, without being one of his Retinue, and follow his Doctrine, tho' he did not his Perſon. 2dly, He might do Miracles in the Name of Jeſus Chriſt, without being one of his true Diſciples, even as Judas is ſuppos'd to have done, and thoſe others, to whom our Lord will profeſs, I never knew you; depart from me, ye Workers of Iniquity, Matth. vii. 23. Or, 3dly, He might be a Diſciple of John the Baptiſt, and ſo do his Miracles in the Name of Chriſt, ſhortly to come. But, by what Means ſoever it was, that he did them, 'tis no ſmall Confirmation of the Truth of Chriſtianity, that our Saviour's Name was thus powerful, even among thoſe, that did not follow him, and therefore were incapable of doing any Thing, by Way of Compact with him. Whitby's and Pool's Annotations, and Calmet's Commentary.

† Every Jew, that was twenty Years old, was oblig'd to pay annually two Attick Drams, or half a Shekel, (about fifteen Pence, of our Money) for the Uſe of the Sanctuary, Exod. xxx. 13, 16. or to buy Sacrifices, and other Things, neceſſary for the Service of the Temple: And that this was the Tribute, which the Collectors here demanded, and not any Tax, payable to the Roman Emperors, (as ſome imagine) is evident, not only from our Saviour's Argument, viz. That he was the Son of that heavenly King, to whom it was paid, and, conſequently, had a Right to plead his Exemption; but from the Word διδραχμα which, according to Joſephus [Antiq. lib. xviii. c. 12.] was the proper Word of the Capitation-Tax, that was paid to the Temple at Jeruſalem; whereas the Cæſarean Tribute Money was the Denarius, a Roman Coin, and would have been gather'd by the uſual Officers, the Publicans, and not by the Perſons, who are here ſtiled (as by a known Title) they, that receiv'd the διδραχμα. Hammond's and Whitby's Annotations.

Of Strangers: If ſo, (rejoin'd our Saviour) then are the Children free; meaning, that ſince Gentile Kings did not exact Tribute of their own Houſhold, this Tribute, which was paid to God for his Temple, was not due from him, who was his Son, nor from them, who were his Domeſticks; however, to avoid all Occaſions of Offence, he order'd him to go, and caſt a Hook into the Sea, becauſe in the Mouth of the firſt Fiſh, that he caught, he would find a Piece of Money †, juſt of proper Value to give to the Collectors for them both: Which, accordingly, came to paſs.

Refuſes to deſtroy the City of Samaria, which would not receive him in his Journey to Jeruſalem.

About this Time the † Feaſt of Tabernacles drew near; and ſome of our Lord's Relations (out of Vanity, more than good Will) were very earneſt with him to go up to Jeruſalem at this great Concourſe of People, in order to ſhew his Miracles in the Capital, which hitherto (as they ſaid) had been concealed in an obſcure Part of the World: But our Lord, for the preſent †, would not yield to their Importunity, tho', in a ſhort Time, he ſet forward to Jeruſalem, but in a very private Manner, for Fear of awakening the Jealouſy of his Enemies. As he was to paſs through the Province of Samaria †, he ſent ſome of his Apoſtles to provide him Lodgings † in one of the Villages; but the Inhabitants, perceiving that he was going to Jeruſalem to the Feaſt, * were ſo uncivil, as to refuſe him Entertainment.

† This Piece of Money is called ςατὴρ, which amounted to four Drachmas, or one Shekel, in our Money about half a Crown; and the Reaſon, why our Saviour paid for none of the Apoſtles, but St Peter only, was, becauſe theſe Receivers demanded it only of thoſe, that dwelt at Capernaum, (as our Saviour and St Peter did) leaving the other Apoſtles to pay it in the ſeveral Places of their Abode. Hammond's Annotations.

† The Feaſt of Tabernacles, kept in Commemoration of the Iſraelites ſojourning in the Wilderneſs, and living in Tents for the Space of forty Years, was one of the three great annual Feſtivals, wherein all the Males were oblig'd to appear at Jeruſalem. It began to be celebrated on the fifteenth Day of the Month Tizri, (which anſwers in Part to our October and September) and is the firſt Month of their Civil, and the ſeventh in their Sacred Year. Calmet's Commentary.

† Our Saviour's Words upon this Occaſion are,——Go ye up unto this Feaſt: I go not up yet to this Feaſt, for my Time is not yet fully come, John vii. 8. Here Grotius takes notice, that the Particle οὔπω, which anſwers to not yet, was not originally in the Text, becauſe (according to St Jerome, contra Pelag. lib. ii.) Porphyry accuſes Chriſt of Inconſtancy and Mutability, in ſaying, I go not up to the Feaſt, when afterwards he went; and therefore, he very modeſtly concludes, that this Particle was added by ſome Chriſtians, to avoid the Force of this Objection. But why muſt Chriſtians be accus'd of altering the Scriptures, merely to ſave the Credit of an Heathen, and profeſs'd Enemy to Chriſtianity, who might either read negligently, or meet with a deficient, or corrupt Latin Copy? Eſpecially ſince it is certain, that St Chryſoſtom reads this Particle; that the Syriack and Arabick Verſions, the Alexandrian, and moſt other ancient Manuſcripts, have it; and that it entirely agrees with the Senſe both of the preceding and ſubſequent Words. Whitby's Annotations.

† Samaria was a Province, that lay between Galilee and Judea, and our Saviour's neareſt Way to Jeruſalem was through it. But then it may be queſtion'd, why the Samaritans, who liv'd at a leſs Diſtance from Jeruſalem, than the Galileans, came to be more corrupted in their Religion? To which the moſt probable Anſwer is,——That, when the King of Aſſyria had taken Samaria, and carry'd away the People captive, 2 Kings xvii. in their Room he planted Colonies of his own Subjects, who were groſs Idolaters, and more eſpecially in the Country of Samaria properly ſo called, becauſe it was a Province, which lay in the Heart of his new Conqueſt, and might therefore keep the others, that depended on it, in Subjection. Now theſe Idolaters, mixing with the Jews, that were left behind, made up a a ſtrange Medley of Religion, which was not quite reform'd, even in our Saviour's Time; and therefore he tells the Samaritan Woman, at Jacob's Well, ye worſhip ye know not what, John iv. 22. whereas the People of Galilee, having few of the Aſſyrians planted among them, kept their Religion more pure and unmix'd, and, after the Deſtruction of the Temple of Gerizzim by John Hyrcanus, held conſtant Communion with the Temple of Jeruſalem, even tho' Gabinius, when he was Governor of Syria, had built the Samaritans another; and in Relation to this Communion it is, that our Saviour tells the ſame Woman, (ſpeaking of himſelf, among other Galileans) we know what we worſhip; for Salvation is of the Jews.

† The great Multitude, that accompany'd our Saviour, and the little or no Proviſion, that he uſually carry'd with him, made it neceſſary for ſome to go before to make preparation for his Reception; and his two Apoſtles, James and John, are ſuppos'd to be the Perſons employ'd in this Capacity, becauſe we find them, in particular, reſenting the Indignity put upon their Maſter. Calmet's Commentary.

* Joſephus tells us,——" That, as it was an uſual Thing for the Galileans to travel by the Way of Samaria " to Jeruſalem, upon the Celebration of their Feſtivals, one Time, as they paſs'd by a Village, called Nais, under " the Juriſdiction of Samaria, and ſituated in the great Plain, there happen'd a Quarrel between the Paſſengers and " Villagers, wherein ſeveral of the Galileans were ſlain, and which afterwards occaſion'd a Civil War between theſe

THIS Indignity put upon their Maſter ſo exaſperated James, and his Brother John, that they deſir'd Leave of him (in Imitation of † Elias) to command Fire down from Heaven, to conſume ſuch inhoſpitable Wretches; but, inſtead of giving any ſuch Permiſſion †, our Saviour took care to inform them, that the Marks of a Chriſtian were Meekneſs and Love, not Fury and Revenge; that the true End and Deſign of his coming into the World was not to deſtroy, but to ſave Mens Lives; and (that he might prove his Doctrine by his Practice) when ten leprous Perſons, who came out of the Neighbourhood, where he had been ſo rudely treated, preſented themſelves with loud Cries to him for Help, his Compaſſion was as ready to relieve, as their Neceſſity to aſk; for, while they were going to † ſhew themſelves to the Prieſt, (as he directed them) they all found themſelves cur'd. "two Provinces." And as it was a common Thing for the Samaritans to be angry with the Galileans in general for paſſing by their Temple to go to Jeruſalem; ſo they might much more reſent it in our Saviour, becauſe, as he was accounted a Prophet ſent from God, by this Action he plainly decided the Controverſy between them and the Jews, touching the Place which God had appointed for his religious Worſhip. Joſeph. Antiq. lib. xx. c. 5. Jewiſh Wars, lib. ii. c. 11. and Whitby's Annotations.

† The Hiſtory of Elias (to which the Apoſtles refer us) is doubtleſs that, where, by the Direction of God, that Prophet called for Fire from Heaven to deſtroy thoſe Captains and their Companies, whom King Ahaziah ſent out to apprehend him, 2 Kings i. 10, &c. And when theſe two Apoſtles deſir'd the like Judgment upon the Village of Samaria, for refuſing to receive their Maſter, they verify'd their Name of being Sons of Thunder, which, upon Account of their fiery Zeal, their Maſter had before given them, Mark iii. 17.

† What the two Apoſtles had to alledge, in Behalf of their intended Severity againſt theſe Samaritans, was, —— That they were Schiſmaticks, and had ſet up another Temple, in Oppoſition to that at Jeruſalem; that they were Hereticks, and, together with the Worſhip of the God of Iſrael, had mix'd that of Pagan Idols; that the Perſon, whom they had affronted, had a Character much ſuperior to that of Elias, and that, by an exemplary Puniſhment inflicted on this Village, they might convince the reſt of the Samaritans of God's Diſpleaſure againſt their Way of Worſhip, and of the Divine Miſſion of their Maſter, who was the true Meſſiah. But, notwithſtanding theſe plauſible Allegations, our Saviour rebuk'd them, and, in his Rebuke, gave them to underſtand, that a Spirit of Severity towards erroneous Perſons, in whomſoever it is found, is highly oppoſite to the calm Temper of Chriſtianity, which is pure and peaceable, gentle and eaſy to be intreated, full of Mercy, and good Works, James iii. 17. and that it was repugnant to the End, for which he came into the World, which was to diſcountenance all Fierceneſs and Rage, and furious Zeal, that occaſion ſo many Miſchiefs among Mankind, and to beget in all his Followers ſuch a Diſpoſition, as exerts itſelf in Love, Peace, Long-ſuffering, Gentleneſs, Goodneſs, and Meekneſs, Gal. v. 22, 23. even to thoſe, of the moſt contrary Tempers and Perſuaſions. Whitby's Annotations.

† By the Prieſts, to whom our Saviour remits theſe Lepers, we are to underſtand the Prieſts at Jeruſalem; for we can hardly ſuppoſe, that he would ſend them to thoſe of Mount Gerizzim, when himſelf, both in his Words and Practice, had ſufficiently declar'd the Illegality of their Inſtitution: And therefore, by ſending them to Jeruſalem, where they were to make their Offerings for their Cleanſing, Lev. xiv. 2, &c. He not only decided the Controverſy between the Jews and the Samaritans, but gave them likewiſe to underſtand, that, before they reach'd Jeruſalem, he would undoubtedly heal them. Whitby's Annotations, and Hammond's Paraphraſe.

† Thoſe, who would have it, that theſe Miſſionaries were choſen according to the Number of the Sanhedrim, imagine, that they were ſeventy-two, tho' the round Sum only be mention'd; but the general Teſtimony of the Antients is, that they were no more than ſeventy. What their Names were, is a Thing unknown, only we have an uncertain Account of twenty-eight of them out of Euſebius, Epiphanius, and Papias, and theſe are, —— Matthias, Mark, Luke, Barnabas, Stephen, Philip, Prochorus, Nicanor, Timon, Parmenas, Nicholas, Juſtus, Apelles, Soſthenes, Rufus, Niger, Cephas, Thaddæus, Ariſtion, John, Barſabas, Andronicus, Junius, Silas, Lucius, Manaen, Mnaſon, and Ananias. Now, whereas ſome compare the Biſhops to the Apoſtles, and theſe ſeventy to the Preſbyters of the Church, and thence conclude, that theſe two Orders in the Miniſtry, one inferior to the other, were inſtituted by Chriſt himſelf, there is this Difference in the Matter, —— That the LXX receiv'd not their Miſſion (as Preſbyters do) from Biſhops, but immediately from our Lord, as the Apoſtles did, and were ſent upon the ſame Errand, and with the ſame Powers. There is however, I think, this Foundation for that, wherein St Chryſoſtom, and others, place the Superiority of Biſhops over Preſbyters, viz. that the Power of Ordination belongs to them alone: For, tho' the Commiſſion to preach the Goſpel belong'd to the LXX, as well as to the Twelve Apoſtles, yet the Power of conferring the Holy Ghoſt by the Impoſition of Hands, was peculiar to the Twelve, Acts viii. 14, &c. and this ſeems to be the Reaſon, why the Conferring of the Holy Ghoſt, for the Uſe of the Miniſtry, (which is done by the Impoſition of his Diſciples, by † two and two together, (in the ſame Manner as he had ſent his twelve Apoſtles) into thoſe Places, which he himſelf, in a ſhort Time, intended to viſit, and gave them Inſtructions, much of the ſame Import, with what, upon the like Occaſion, he had given his Apoſtles.

John vii. 10. His appearing, and preaching at the Feaſt of Tabernacles; and the Deſigns of the Sanhedrim againſt him.

The Feaſt of Tabernacles always continu'd eight Days, but, for ſome Time after his Arrival, our Saviour did not appear publickly, which occaſion'd no ſmall Enquiry, and various Diſcourſes concerning him; ſome ſaying, that he was a good Man, and others, an Impoſtor, who deluded the People. At length, when every one began to deſpair of ſeeing him, about the Middle of the Feaſt, he ſhew'd himſelf openly, and went and taught in the Temple, to the great Admiration of the Jews, who were not a little ſurpris'd to find him, whoſe Education had been deſtitute of all Learning, ſo perfect in the Scriptures: But, to obviate this Exception, he gave them to underſtand, that the Doctrine, wherein he inſtructed them, was not of human Acquiſition, but Divine Inſpiration; and that it was a very baſe and ungenerous Thing in them, to endeavour to take away the Life of one, who taught them nothing, but what was agreeable to the Law of Moſes, whereof they made ſo loud a Profeſſion. In this Manner he preach'd to the People for the remaining Part of the Feaſt; and, † on the laſt and greateſt Day thereof, took occaſion from the Cuſtom of fetching Water from the Fountain of Siloah in great Pomp, and pouring it upon the Altar of Burnt-Offerings in great Abundance, to acquaint them with the future Effuſion of the Holy Ghoſt, which he intended to ſend down upon all thoſe, that believ'd in him.

Thoſe, who knew the great Hatred which the ruling Part of the Nation had conceiv'd againſt him, admir'd to hear him ſpeak with ſo much Freedom and Intrepidity; and thoſe, who had ſeen the Number and Greatneſs of his Miracles, were by them convinc'd that he was the true Meſſiah; but the Prejudice of his being a Galilean, and not acknowledg'd by any of their Rulers and learned Rabbies, led others into a contrary Perſuaſion. In the Concluſion, Officers were ſent from the Sanhedrim to apprehend him, but they were ſo taken with his Perſon and Preaching, that they became his Diſciples; for, upon their Return, they told the Council, that they could not execute their Office, becauſe † never Man ſpake like him; ſo that the Phariſees, who were Part of the Aſſembly, being more enrag'd at their Reaſon,

† That they might be of mutual Aſſiſtance to each other, and their Teſtimony of more Force and Validity. Pool's and Beauſobre's Annotations.

† From the xxixth Chapter of the Book of Numbers we learn, that, on the firſt Day of this Feaſt, thirteen Bullocks were to be offer'd; on the ſecond, twelve; on the third, eleven; on the fourth, ten; on the fifth, nine; on the ſixth, eight; on the ſeventh, ſeven; and on the eighth, or laſt, only one; ſo that, in Regard to the Sacrifices, the laſt Day was the leaſt of all, and yet the Jews accounted it the greateſt, becauſe on that Day the King of Iſrael (as the Talmudiſts love to ſpeak) was entertain'd by his own People only, and not by thoſe of any other Nation. For their Tradition is, that, on the firſt Day of the Feaſt, their Anceſtors (when the Temple was ſtanding) ſacrific'd ſeventy Bullocks for the ſeventy Nations, (for they ſuppoſe juſt ſo many) that are upon the Face of the Earth; but on the laſt Day, no more than one, but that, in the Name of the People of Iſrael only. And, as they imagine, that an earthly Prince may ſometimes (inſtead of a vaſt Entertainment) deſire but a ſmall Collation with his firſt Favourite, that they may have an Opportunity of ſome familiar Converſe together; ſo, upon the Account of the intimate Friendſhip with God, which the Jews, on that Day, thought themſelves admitted to, and the exceſſive Joy, which, from the Senſe of that Friendſhip, they expreſs'd in all the outward Significations of Muſick, Singing, and Dancing, the laſt Day of the Feaſt of Tabernacles was always accounted the greateſt. Surenhuſii Conciliationes in Loca V. T. apud Johan.

† In theſe Words there are two Things remarkable, 1ſt, The Power of Chriſt's Preaching to change the Frame and Temper of Mens Spirits; for theſe Men came with Hearts alienated from Chriſt, and with Intention to apprehend, and carry him before the Chief Prieſts, but return'd with great Admiration of his Excellency and Worth. 2dly, The Honeſty and Integrity of theſe Men is very remarkable; for they do not return with a Pretence, that they fear'd the Multitude, and therefore thought it dangerous to apprehend him, but ingenuouſly confeſs, that they could not prevail with themſelves to lay violent Hands upon a Perſon, whoſe Diſcourſes were ſo excellent and divine. Whitby's Annotations.

The Scribes and Pharises brought unto him a Woman taken in Adultery. And Jeſus said, he that is without Sin among you, let him first cast a Stone at her.

St. John, Chap. VIIIth. ver: 3d. & 7th.

Reaſon which they gave, than the Neglect of their Duty, upbraided them for being ſo eaſily ſeduc'd, and for following the Error of an ignorant Mob; until Nicodemus, who had formerly converſ'd with our Lord, and was indeed a ſecret Diſciple of his, ſeeing with what Violence his Enemies were bent againſt him, could not forbear interpoſing in his Behalf, by urging the Unlawfulneſs of condemning a Perſon, without hearing; ſo that, after ſome Reflections thrown upon him, as a Favourer of this Galilean †, who could have no Pretenſions, (as they ſaid) to the Title of a Prophet, the Aſſembly † broke up, without proceeding any farther againſt him, becauſe, indeed, as yet his Time was not fully come.

John viii. 1.
His Conduct towards the Woman taken in Adultery.

IN the Evening, Jeſus repair'd to the Mount of Olives, about a Mile from the City, and where he ſometimes uſ'd to paſs the Night with his Apoſtles. Early next Morning he return'd to the Temple, and, as he was teaching the People, that were gather'd about him, the Scribes and Phariſees brought in a Woman, taken in the Act of Adultery, and deſir'd him to give his Judgment in the Caſe. Their Purpoſe was to find an Occaſion of accuſing him, either of aſſuming a judicial Power, if he condemn'd her, or of nulling the Law, if he acquitted her: But he (as if he had not much minded them) ſtoop'd down, and wrote † ſomething with his Finger upon the Duſt of the Pavement; till, upon their importuning him for an Anſwer, he rais'd himſelf up, and ſaid, † He that is without Sin among you, let him caſt the firſt Stone, and ſo, ſtooping down, wrote, as before. This unexpected Anſwer baffled theſe inſidious Accuſers, who, thoroughly convinc'd of their own Crimes, retir'd, one by one, and || left the Woman alone; ſo that, when our Lord lift up himſelf again, and found none but the Woman ſtanding by him, he aſk'd her, what was become of her Accuſers, and whether any one had condemn'd her? And, when he underſtood, by her Anſwer, that no one had, † neither do I condemn thee, ſaid he, go, and ſin no more.

---

† Our Bleſſed Saviour was neither by Birth, nor by Deſcent, a Galilean; but, admitted he had been ſo, 'tis a falſe Aſſertion to ſay, that no Prophet ever aroſe out of Galilee, ſince Nahum, tho' originally of the Tribe of Simeon, (according to the Teſtimony of St Jerome, who himſelf was a Galilean) was born in that Province, and in Elciſi, the ſame Town which that Father came from; ſince Jonas was undoubtedly of Gath-hepher, in the Tribe of Zebulon, which lay in the Land of Galilee, 2 Kings xiv. 25. and, in the Opinion of ſeveral, Malachi was of the ſame Tribe, and born in the City of Sapha: For, as there can be no Reaſon in Nature, ſo is there no Declaration of the Divine Will, why a Galilean ſhould not be inſpir'd with the Gift of Prophecy, as well as any other Jew. Pool's and Beauſobre's Annotations, and Calmet's Commentary.

† Some are of Opinion, that the Party of Sadducees in the Council, who held the Rites and Traditions of the Phariſees in great Contempt, join'd with Nicodemus, in not having Chriſt condemn'd without a fair Hearing, which was no more than what the Law requir'd, Deut. i. 16, 17. Pool's Annotations.

† It is generally agreed, that, upon this Occaſion, our Lord wrote ſome memorable Sentence, or other, but what that Sentence was, the Conjectures of learned Men have been various. Some have imagin'd, that it was the Reproof againſt a rigid and uncharitable Temper, which occurs in his Sermon on the Mount; Why beholdeſt thou the Mote, that is in thy Brother's Eye, but conſidereſt not the Beam that is in thine own Eye? Matth. vii. 3. others, that it was the very Words, which, upon his raiſing himſelf up, he pronounc'd to the Woman's Accuſers; He that is without Sin among you, let him firſt caſt a Stone at her, John viii. 7. and others again, that it might rather be that Paſſage in the Pſalmiſt, Unto the Ungodly ſaid God, Why doſt thou preach my Laws, and takeſt my Covenant in thy Mouth? Whereas thou hateſt to be reformed, and haſt caſt my Words behind thee. When thou ſaweſt a Thief, thou conſentedſt unto him, and haſt been Partaker with the Adulterers, Pſal. l. 16, &c. But all this is mere Gueſs-Work: And it ſeems more prudent to ſay nothing of the Actions of our Saviour, when we are not admitted to the Reaſons of them. Calmet's Commentary, and Beauſobre's Annotations.

† The Rabbinical Writers tell us, that, when a Man or Woman was convicted of Adultery, they were led out to the Brow of an Hill, with their Hands ty'd behind their Backs, where their Accuſers puſh'd them down Head-long; that, if with the Fall they were killed, there was no more done to them; but, if they were ſtill alive, the ſame Accuſers were to roll great Stones upon them, and, if theſe did not diſpatch them, the Company then all took up Stones, and quite overwhelm'd them with them. But we have nothing of all this in the Law of Moſes. In all the Places, where he makes mention of this Puniſhment, we only find, that the Criminal was to be led out of the City, and ſtoned with Stones till he died, and that the Hands of the Witneſſes ſhould be firſt upon him, to put him to Death, and afterwards the Hands of all the People, Deut. xvii. 7. 'Tis in Alluſion to this Paſſage that our Saviour ſays, Let him, that is without Sin among you, caſt the firſt Stone, becauſe it badly becomes thoſe, who are guilty, either of the ſame, or greater Crimes, to be ſo very zealous for the Puniſhment of others. This however hinders not, but that Magiſtrates, who are intruſted with the Execution of the Laws, ſhould put them in Force againſt Malefactors, even tho' themſelves are not entirely exempt from Sin; but ſtill it reminds them, that they ſhould execute Judgment with Compaſſion and Tenderneſs, and as much Moderation, as the Law will allow them; conſidering that they themſelves are not free from Guilt, but as obnoxious to Puniſhment for other Sins, as thoſe poor Creatures are, who have fallen into Crimes, that are puniſhable by human Judicatures. Calmet's Commentary, and Pool's Annotations.

John viii. 11. His preaching to the People the Myſteries of Chriſtianity.

After this Interruption, Jeſus returned to the Buſineſs of inſtructing the People, and, in a ſublime Diſcourſe, open'd ſeveral great Myſteries of Chriſtianity, viz. his Divine Miſſion, his Co-equality with the Father, his Ability to give eternal Life to his Followers, and the Neceſſity of believing in him, which would be more evident after his Crucifixion; and thence taking Occaſion to expoſe the Wickedneſs, and Degeneracy of thoſe, who ſought to take away his Life, and how unlike to the Behaviour of the Sons of God and Abraham, (whom they boaſted themſelves to be) ſuch cauſeleſs and inveterate Malice was, he ſo provok'd them with his ſevere Reflections, and eſpecially with the Superiority which he claim'd above Abraham, that they took up Stones to caſt at him, had he not miraculouſly convey'd himſelf out of their Hands.

Luke x. 17. Promiſing eternal Life to his Diſciples.

Before our Lord left Jeruſalem, the Seventy Diſciples, whom he had ſent to preach the Goſpel, return'd from their Journey, and Miniſtry, greatly rejoicing, becauſe the very Devils, by Virtue of his Name †, were ſubjected to them; whereupon, our Lord promis'd them ſtill greater Succeſs; inveſted them with Power to tread upon the moſt venomous Beaſts †, and all the malignant Inſtruments of Satan, without

---

|| In the very next Words it is ſaid, that the Woman ſtood in the midſt of the People, and our Lord's Apoſtles, who were his conſtant Attendants, were doubtleſs not far from him; the Meaning therefore of the Expreſſion muſt be, that ſhe was left without any of her Accuſers, who, out of Shame, ſneek'd away, being convicted in their Conſciences, that, whatever the Woman was, they were no proper Evidences againſt her: For, non modo accuſator, ſed ne objurgator quidem ferendus eſt (ſays Tully, in Verron. Orat. v) is, qui, quod in alio reprehendit, in eo ipſe reprehenditur. Nor is it to be wonder'd, that, upon this Occaſion, all the Woman's Accuſers departed from her, ſince the Jews themſelves own, that Adulteries did multiply under the ſecond Temple, when their Rabbins came to permit every one to have four or five Wives, and ſaid, that they ſinn'd not, if, after the Example of the Patriarchs, when they ſaw a beautiful Woman, they deſir'd to have her. Juſt. Mart. Dial. pag. 363. Calmet's Commentary, and Whitby's Annotations.

† Both Selden and Fagius are of Opinion, that this Woman might come under the Number of them, whoſe Caſe is thus repreſented in the Words of Deuteronomy: If a Damſel, that is a Virgin, be betrothed to an Huſband, and a Man find her in the City, and he lie with her, then ye ſhall bring them both out unto the Gate of the City, and ye ſhall ſtone them with Stones, that they die; the Damſel, becauſe ſhe cried not, being in the City; and the Man, becauſe he hath humbled his Neighbour's Wife, Deut. xxii. 23, 24. The Puniſhment of ſtoning, which this Law mentions, and the Accuſers of this Woman here inſiſt on, ſeems to favour this Notion; and the Indulgence, which our Saviour ſhew'd her, looks, as if ſhe had ſuffer'd ſome Kind of Violence, tho' ſhe was not entirely innocent. Our Saviour, however, could not act in the Capacity of a Judge, becauſe that was no Part of his preſent Miniſtry: Tho' therefore he was ſo far from approving her Conduct, that he ſufficiently blam'd her, in bidding her ſin no more, yet was he reſtrain'd from pronouncing any Sentence of Condemnation upon her, becauſe the End of his Coming at this Time into the World was, not to judge the World, but to ſave it, John xii. 47. Selden, Uxor. Heb. lib. iii. c. 11. Fagius in Deut. xxii. 22. and Calmet's Commentary.

† The Power, which our Saviour gave to the LXX, when he ſent them out to preach the Goſpel, was only that of healing the Sick wherever they went, Luke x. 9. but finding that, upon naming their Maſter's Name, they were able likewiſe to cure thoſe, that were poſſeſs'd of Devils, this they made the greater Matter of their Joy, and, at their Return, told it with more Pleaſure, becauſe it was no Part of their Commiſſion. It is to be obſerv'd, however, that our Lord himſelf caſt out Devils by a Divine Power reſiding in himſelf; his Diſciples only, in Virtue of his Name, or by a Power deriv'd from him. Seeing then that this Power accompany'd them in all Parts of the World, 'twas neceſſary that Chriſt's Preſence ſhould be with them every where, and ſuch a Preſence was a certain Proof of his being God. Whitby's Annotations, and Hammond's Paraphraſe.

† Theſe Words ſeem to have a plain Alluſion to thoſe in the Pſalmiſt, where under the Metaphor of treading on the Scorpion and Baſiliſk, Pſal. xci. 13, God promiſes the good Man a more than common Protection from all Sorts of Dangers and Enemies. But there is no Reaſon however, I think, why our Saviour's Words may not here be taken in a literal Senſe, ſince they agree ſo well with what he promiſes all true Believers in another Place, they ſhall take up Serpents, (as we find one faſten'd upon St Paul's Hand without doing him any Harm, Acts xxviii. 3.) and, if they drink any deadly Thing, it ſhall not hurt them, Mark xvi. 18. Whitby's Annotations, and Calmet's Commentary.

without the leaſt Harm; and, at the ſame Time, gave them Aſſurance of a Bleſſing more peculiarly theirs, viz. that their † Names were recorded in Heaven; and ſo broke out into a Rapture of Joy, glorifying God for concealing the Myſteries of the Goſpel from the Great and Wiſe, and revealing them to the Simple and Ignorant, and to his Diſciples more eſpecially, who, in Virtue of that Revelation, enjoy'd an Happineſs, which many Kings and Prophets had in vain deſir'd.

Luke x. 25. And ſtating the true Notion of a Neighbour.

Our Lord had ſcarce ended his Diſcourſe, when a Doctor of the Law ſtood up, and enquir'd of him, what was neceſſary to be done for the Attainment of that eternal Life †, which he was ſo very liberal in promiſing to his Followers. Whereupon, our Lord remitted him to the Law, which, according to the Doctor's own Account, conſiſted chiefly in the Love of God, and the Love of our Neighbour. But, when he demanded farther, what the Notion of a Neighbour † imply'd? Our Lord thought proper to anſwer this Queſtion by telling him —— "That, once upon a Time, a certain Jew, as he was travelling in the Road between † Jeruſalem and Jericho, was robbed, ſtripped, barbarouſly us'd, and left almoſt dead with his Wounds; that by Chance a Prieſt † came that Way, and ſaw the poor Wretch weltering in his Blood, but the Horror of the Sight did not affect him, he paſs'd along unconcern'd; that next came a Levite, but he too was as void of Tenderneſs and Compaſſion, as was the Prieſt, tho' both of them were of the ſame Country with the Sufferer; that, at laſt, a Samaritan, a Stranger, and one abhorr'd by the Jews, ſeeing this diſtreſs'd Perſon,

† The Words allude to a known Cuſtom in well govern'd Cities, where Regiſters are kept of the Names of their Inhabitants, and do plainly denote the Title which Believers have to eternal Happineſs; but by no Means an abſolute Election to it. For, as a Citizen, when he miſbehaves egregiouſly, and thereupon becomes infamous, has his Name raz'd out of the City-Regiſter, and is himſelf diſinfranchiſed of all his Privileges; ſo we read of ſome, whom Chriſt threatens to blot their Names out of the Book of Life, Revel. xxii. 19. For, as Men are written in this Book, (ſays St Baſil in Iſaiah iv. 3.) when they are converted from Vice to Virtue, ſo are they blotted out of it, when they backſlide from Virtue to Vice. Of the Twelve we read that one was certainly a Reprobate, and tho' it becomes us to hope better of the LXX, yet our Saviour's Words give us no Room to think, that they all were predeſtinated to eternal Life, ſince his Meaning only is, that his Diſciples, inſtead of eſtimating their Happineſs from the Power of working Miracles, ſhould rather make it conſiſt in this,———That he had called, choſen, and ſeparated them from great Numbers, that would periſh; that he had given them the Grace of Faith and Admiſſion to the Chriſtian Covenant, but that, on themſelves it was incumbent, by the Preſervation of their Faith, and the Practice of good Works, comporting therewith, to make their Calling and Election ſure. Hammond's and Whitby's Annotations, and Calmet's Commentary.

† The Law of Moſes does no where expreſsly promiſe eternal Life to thoſe that obſerv'd its Precepts. It is wholly taken up with temporal Bleſſings and Proſperities; and yet the Generality of the Jews were not deſtitute of the Hopes of another Life, becauſe their Writers, a little before, and after the Captivity, are very full of it, ſo that it became the prevailing Opinion of the whole Nation, and was receiv'd by their two principal Sects, the Phariſees and Eſſenes; for, as for the Sadducees, who had other Notions of the Matter, their Religion was very little, and their Principles purely Epicurean. Calmet's Commentary.

† In our Saviour's Time, the Phariſees had reſtrain'd the Word Neighbour to ſignify thoſe of their own Nation, their own Religion, and their own Friends only; and all, who differ'd from them in any of theſe Reſpects, they indulg'd the People the Liberty to hate, nor would they permit them to extend the leaſt Office of common Civility to any ſuch. But our Saviour overthrew theſe falſe Maxims of the Jewiſh Doctors, and reduc'd the Precept of univerſal Charity to its firſt Intention, when, in this Parable of the Jew and the Samaritan, he plainly demonſtrated that no Difference of Nation or Religion, no Quarrel or Reſentment, no Enmity or Alienation of Affections can exempt us from owning any Perſon to be our Neighbour. Whitby's Annotations.

† Between Jeruſalem and Jericho (which were about ſeven Leagues diſtant) the Road was very infamous for Murthers and Robberies, for in it was a Place called the Valley of Adommim, or of Bloody Men, becauſe of the great Quantity of Blood that was there ſpilt; and for this Reaſon it is, that our Lord lays the Scene of his Parable in this Place. Calmet's Commentary.

† To make the Deſcription more lively, our Saviour inſtances in two Men, a Prieſt and a Levite, who took no Pity of this Jew in Diſtreſs, tho' they were of the ſame Religion and Country, nay, tho' they were the Miniſters and Teachers of the Religion which he profeſs'd, and might therefore be preſum'd, even in Virtue of their Office and Education, to have more extenſive Notions, and Hearts more capable of tender Impreſſions, than the ruder Vulgar: And, for the ſame Reaſon, he introduces a Samaritan, as acting a different Part, and taking all imaginable Care of this wounded Jew, tho' between Jews and Samaritans there was a moſt inveterate Hatred.

From which plain Narration, the Doctor himſelf † could not but conclude, that the Samaritan was the Neighbour to the Perſon in Diſtreſs, and, conſequently, that the Notion of a Neighbour comprehended Men of all Nations, and all Religions whatever.

Luke x. 38. He prefers Mary's Choice; and both teaches and encourages his Diſciples to pray.

As ſoon as the Feaſt of Tabernacles was ended, our Lord departed from Jeruſalem, and, in the Beginning of his Journey, went to a ſmall Village called Bethany, about two Miles Eaſt of Jeruſalem, where he was joyfully receiv'd by a Woman nam'd Martha, who, with her Siſter Mary, and her Brother Lazarus, was highly in Favour with him. While Martha was buſy in making Preparation for his Entertainment, her Siſter Mary ſat with the Company, liſtening to his Inſtructions; and when Martha complain'd to him, that her Siſter had left the whole Burthen of the Buſineſs upon her, and thereupon deſir'd him to ſend her to her Aſſiſtance, our Lord commended Mary's Choice, and, tho' he did not ſlight Martha's Civility, yet her Siſter's Devoutneſs and Attention to his Doctrine († which was one Thing chiefly neceſſary) he preferr'd before it.

Luke xi. 1.

Upon his Return to Galilee, as he was one Day praying with his Diſciples in a private Place, † they, taking it into Conſideration, how neceſſary it was for them to be directed in the right Performance of that Duty, deſir'd of him to compoſe a Form of Prayer for their Uſe, as the Baptiſt had done for his Diſciples: Whereupon he not only gave them the ſame excellent Form, (called the Lord's Prayer) which he had given them, above eighteen Months before, in his Sermon on the Mount, but encourag'd them likewiſe, from the Conſideration of God's Goodneſs, and fatherly Affection, (far more indulgent to his Children, than any earthly Parents were to theirs) to be conſtant in their

† The Words in the Text are, pouring in Wine and Oil; Oil, to eaſe and aſſuage the Pain; and Wine, to cleanſe and heal the Wound: And theſe Things the good Samaritan had about him, becauſe the Inns in the Eaſtern Countries (even as it is ſtill) afforded nothing, but barely Houſe-room; and therefore the Cuſtom was, for the Traveller to carry all Kinds of Neceſſaries, both for his Bed and Board, along with him. Calmet's Commentary.

† The Words in the Text are,——when he departed, he took out two Pence, Luke x. 35. The δηνάριον, which we render a Penny, was a Kind of Roman Coin, much about ſeven Pence Half-Penny of our Money. In the New Teſtament (for it never occurs in the Old) it is uſually put for a Piece of Money in general, i. e. for a Shekel, which was the moſt common Coin among the Jews, before they became ſubject to the Greeks and Romans; ſo that, in this Senſe, what the Samaritan gave the Hoſt amounted to five Shillings, or thereabout, which is more conſiſtent with the reſt of his Character, than that he ſhould leave ſo ſmall a Matter behind him. Calmet's Commentary.

† Had our Saviour propounded the Parable in this Manner,——That a certain Samaritan fell among Thieves, and that a Prieſt and a Levite paſs'd by without offering him any Help, this Doctor of the Law might have reply'd, that he did nothing but right, becauſe the Samaritan was no Neighbour of theirs: But now, as he makes a Jew the Subject of the Parable, and the Object of the Samaritan's Compaſſion, he draws him in to acknowledge the Voice of Nature, which declares, that every Man is Neighbour to his Fellow-Creature, and that the Law of Moſes has not annull'd, but perfected the Law of Nature, by commanding us to love our Neighbour as ourſelves, Levit. xix. 18. Calmet's Commentary.

† Interpreters have given themſelves ſome Trouble in determining what that one Thing is, which our Saviour accounts needful. Some of the Antients are of Opinion, that our Lord, in this Expreſſion, told Martha, that one Diſh was enough. But, beſides the Lowneſs of the Senſe, the great Company, that attended our Lord, ſeventy Diſciples, and twelve Apoſtles, to be ſure, if no more, ſhews the Incongruouſneſs of it. Others will have this, one Thing needful to be a Life of Meditation and Contemplation, which Mary had all along addicted herſelf to; but her chuſing to take the Advantage of our Saviour's Company, to hear him for an Hour or two, rather than prepare a Supper from him, is not Foundation enough for this Conjecture; and therefore we cannot but think, that the moſt general Interpretation, concerning the Care of the Soul, with Reference to Eternity, is the beſt. Pool's Annotations.

† Theſe Diſciples muſt have been ſome of the LXX, who were not preſent, when our Lord deliver'd his Sermon on the Mount, wherein he firſt of all preſcrib'd to his Apoſtles this Form of Prayer. Beauſobre's Annotations.

Luke xii. 13.

Preaches againſt Covetouſneſs, and exhorts to Watchfulneſs, a Preparation for Death and Judgment, and for a timely Repentance.

One of the Company however, ſeeing with what Authority he reprov'd, and determin'd among the People, deſir'd of him † to arbitrate between him and his Brother, concerning an Eſtate, which had lately fallen to them: But this Office he choſe to decline, and thence took occaſion to preach againſt Covetouſneſs, or placing our Felicity in worldly Poſſeſſions; and to enforce this, he propounded the Parable of a certain rich Man, who, when he had acquir'd Eſtate enough, propos'd to indulge himſelf in Voluptuouſneſs, but was ſadly diſappointed by the Intervention of a ſudden Death. He therefore exhorted his Diſciples not to be too anxious about the Things of this Life, but to caſt their Care upon God's Providence, who, having promis'd them a Kingdom in Heaven, would not fail of ſupplying them with what was neceſſary here. He exhorted them to Charity, to Watchfulneſs, to Preparation againſt the Day of Judgment, or the Arreſt of Death, and (under the Emblem of Stewards, or Governors in great Mens Houſes) recommended Gentleneſs and Temperance, and caution'd them againſt indulging themſelves in any Kind of Exceſs, upon the Confidence of their Lord's Abſence, or Delay.

Luke xiii. 1.

While he was thus diſcourſing to his Diſciples, News was brought him of * the Maſſacre,

† The Word ἀναιδεία properly ſignifies Impudence, and might here be us'd, in Conformity to that Saying of the Jews; the impudent Man overcomes the Modeſt and the Baſhful, how much more God, who is Goodneſs itſelf? Whitby's Annotations.

† The Practice among the Jews, of referring Civil Matters to Eccleſiaſtical Perſons, as Judges, began in the Captivity of Babylon, when, by this Means, the Jews avoided the bringing their Differences before Heathen Judges. Under the Dominion of the Romans, they were indulg'd a greater Liberty, and had Civil Courts made up of Perſons of their own Religion. In Caſes of private Difference between Man and Man, it was uſual to make either the Conſiſtory of three, or ſome others choſen, by the contending Parties, Arbitrators. Whether both theſe Brothers had agreed to refer their Difference to our Lord's Determination, or this one of them only deſir'd him to interpoſe his Authority, if not to enjoin, at leaſt to perſuade his Brother to come to an Accommodation, 'tis difficult to ſay, becauſe the Scripture is ſilent: But this we may obſerve, that the ordinary Rule of Inheritance among the Jews was, for the eldeſt Son to have a double Portion of his Father's Eſtate, and the reſt to be divided equally among the other Children; but, in what came by the Mother, the eldeſt had no Prerogative above the reſt; the Diviſion among them was equal. Whatever then the Controverſy between theſe Brothers was, our Saviour might very juſtly refuſe to intermeddle in it, and that, not only becauſe it was inconſiſtent with his Deſign of coming into the World, which was to promote Mens ſpiritual, rather than their temporal Intereſts, but becauſe it might probably have drawn upon him the Envy and Calumny of the Jewiſh Rulers, who might be apt to ſay, that he took upon him an Office, to which he had no Call, in Prejudice to them, who were legally appointed to it. Pool's and Whitby's Annotations, and Calmet's Commentary.

* The general Opinion is, that this Piece of Hiſtory relates to the Sedition which Judas Gaulonites rais'd againſt the Roman Government in Judea, when he, and one Sadducus, a Phariſee, poſſeſs'd the People with a Notion, "That "Taxes were a Badge of their Slavery; that they ought to acknowledge no Sovereign, but God himſelf; nor pay any "Tribute

Every Sabbath-Day our Lord's Cuſtom was to preach in one of the Jewiſh Synagogues, and, while he was thus employ'd, he obſerv'd a Woman, who, for the Space of eighteen Years, had labour'd under a Spirit of Infirmity, which bow'd down her Body ſo, that ſhe was not able to lift herſelf up. Here was a proper Object for his Compaſſion and Power to exert themſelves; and therefore, calling the Woman to him, he laid his Hands upon her, and immediately ſhe became ſtrait, and glorify'd God. At this the Ruler of the Synagogue † became ſo very envious and diſpleas'd, that he told the People,—— There were ſix Days in the Week allow'd by

"Tribute, but to his Temple." 'Twas in Galilee, very probably, where this Judas firſt broach'd theſe Sentiments, and there acquir'd ſuch a Multitude of Followers and Abetters, as made Joſephus call him Galilæus, as well as Gaulonites, Antiq. lib. xviii. c. 2. Nay, all his Followers in general, tho' they were of different Provinces by Birth, obtain'd the ſame Name. But when they came to Jeruſalem, at one of the great Feſtivals, and began to ſpread theſe ſeditious Notions againſt Cæſar, Pilate, who was then the Roman Governor, having had Intelligence of it, caus'd a conſiderable Number of them to be ſlain in the Temple, while they were ſacrificing. Whitby's and Beauſobre's Annotations.

† The Fountain of Siloam roſe at the Foot of the Wall of the Eaſt Part of the City of Jeruſalem. The Tower, called after its Name, was doubtleſs built upon the Wall, not far from it; and, being now become ancient, might fall upon ſuch a Number of People, either paſſing by, or ſtanding under it. But how this Accident came to paſs we have no Manner of Certainty, becauſe this Paſſage in St. Luke is the only Place, where we find any Mention made of this Piece of Hiſtory. Calmet's Commentary.

* To verify this Prediction of our Saviour's upon the impenitent Jews, we may remember what Joſephus has told us of them, viz. that, under the Government of Cumanus, Twenty thouſand of them were deſtroy'd about the Temple, Antiq. lib. xx. c. 4. That, upon the Admiſſion of the Idumæans into the City, Eight thouſand and five hundred of the High-Prieſt's Party were ſlain, inſomuch, that there was a Flood of Blood quite round the Temple, de Bello Jud. lib. iv. c. 7. That, upon the threefold Faction, that happen'd in Jeruſalem, before the Siege of the Romans, the Temple was every where polluted with Slaughter; the Prieſts were ſlain in the Exerciſe of their Function; many, who came to worſhip, fell before their Sacrifices; and the dead Bodies of Strangers and Natives were promiſcuouſly blended together, and ſprinkled the Altar with their Blood, de Bello Jud. lib. vi. c. 1. and that, upon the Romans taking the City and Temple, Mountains of dead Bodies were piled up about the Altar; Streams of Blood ran down the Steps of the Temple; ſeveral were deſtroy'd by the Fall of Towers; and others choak'd in the ſultry Ruins of the Galleries over the Porches, de Bello Jud. lib. vii. c. 10.

† Some of the Ancients are of Opinion, that, by theſe three Years, we are to underſtand the three Diſpenſations, under which Mankind have liv'd, viz. under the Natural Law, from the Beginning of the World, to the Time of Moſes; under the Written Law, from Moſes to Jeſus Chriſt; and under the Evangelical Law, from Jeſus Chriſt to the End of the World. Others rather mean by them the three Kinds of Government, under which the Jews had liv'd, viz. the Government of Judges, from Joſhua to Saul; the Government of Kings, from Saul to the Babyloniſh Captivity; and the Government of High-Prieſts, from the Captivity to the Time of Jeſus Chriſt. But theſe Explications are a little too arbitrary; nor will the three Years of our Saviour's Preaching among the Jews come up to the Point, becauſe the Jews were not deſtroy'd the next Year, (as the barren Fig-Tree was to be cut down) but forty Years after our Lord's Aſcenſion. All that is meant by the Expreſſion therefore is, that God gave them all the Time, and all the Means, that could be deſir'd, to make them inexcuſable; and the Term of three Years ſeems rather to be mention'd, becauſe the Fruit of ſome Fig-Trees come not to Maturity till the third Year. Calmet's Commentary, and Whitby's Annotations.

† In every Synagogue there was a conſiderable Number of Doctors of the Law, who, in the Goſpel, are frequently called Rulers or Governors, and over theſe there was uſually one chief Preſident. But the Perſon here ſeems not to have by God for Labour, and that, on thoſe they might come for Cure, but not on the Sabbath, which was a Day appointed for Reſt. But our Lord ſoon made him aſham'd of his Hypocriſy † by an Argument drawn from their own Practice of looſing an Ox, or an Aſs from the Stall, on the Sabbath-Day, and leading them away to watering; and much more then might he be permitted to cure, on that Day, a Daughter of Abraham, whom Satan, for ſo many Years, had afflicted with a ſore Diſeaſe. Whereupon his Adverſaries were ſilenc'd, but the People were all glad, and rejoiced at his glorious Actions.

have been the chief Preſident, but one of the ſubordinate Rulers, becauſe we find him, not addreſſing himſelf directly to Chriſt, (which, not improbably, had he been the Preſident, he would have taken courage to do) but only to the People in general; tho' by them he obliquely ſtruck at our Saviour. Beauſobre's Annotations, and Calmet's Commentary.

† Our Saviour declar'd this Ruler of the Synagogue to be an Hypocrite, partly, becauſe he plac'd his Holineſs in the Obſervation of the Ritual Precepts of the Law, (ſuch as bodily Reſt on the Sabbath-Day) to the Diſparagement of the Works of Mercy, and other great Matters of eternal Obligation; and, partly, becauſe he pretended to a great Zeal for the Performance of God's Commands, when, all the while, he was rather acted by a malevolent Envy to the Glory of Chriſt, which he, to whom his Heart was open, perfectly knew. Whitby's Annotations.

† When Judas Maccabæus had cleans'd the Temple, which had been polluted by Antiochus Epiphanes, he again dedicated the Altar, (1 Maccab. iv. 59. and 2 Maccab. x. 8.) and this is ſuppos'd to be the Dedication, in Memory of which the Jews continued to celebrate a Feaſt, which fell out in the Winter, in the Month Ciſleu, between the 13th and 14th of our November; and, being the ſame, in all Probability, with what, in the Goſpel, is called τὰ ἐγκαινία, was honour'd and approv'd by our Saviour's Preſence, tho' but of human Inſtitution. Whitby's Annotations, Hammond's Paraphraſe, and Echard's Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory, lib. i. c. 5.

† It has been obſerv'd before, that our Saviour made choice of the Sabbath-Day, as a Day, wherein he did many of his mighty Works. It was on this Day, that he cur'd the impotent Man, who lay at the Pool of Betheſda, John v. 10. On this Day, that he healed him, who had the withered Hand, Matth. xii. 10. and now on this Day likewiſe, that he gave Sight to the Man, who was born blind, John ix. 14. and poſſibly he might chuſe this, becauſe it was the Day, whereon he ordinarily preach'd that heavenly Doctrine, which he confirm'd by theſe miraculous Works; or perhaps, that he might inſtruct the Jews (if they would have receiv'd Inſtruction) in the right Obſervation of the Sabbath, and arm his Diſciples againſt that pernicious Doctrine of the Phariſees, viz. that it was not lawful to do Good, or perform Works of Mercy and Compaſſion on that Day. Pool's and Whitby's Annotations.

* What the Diſciples might mean by the Sin of the blind Man's Parents is no hard Matter to ſolve, conſidering the ſtrict Prohibition in the Law, Levit. xx. 18. of not coming near a menſtruous Woman, which was thought to have ſo ill an Influence upon the Child, as to make it obnoxious to Leproſy, or Mutilation, and might, conſequently, be the Cauſe of this Perſon's Blindneſs: But what we are to underſtand by his own Sin, before he was born, is not ſo eaſy to be determin'd. That it cannot relate to the Original Sin, which he brought into the World with him, is evident, becauſe all Mankind (our Lord only excepted) are equally guilty of this; nor does this entail upon them any corporeal Imperfection: And therefore the Sin, here intended, muſt be ſomething ſpecial and perſonal. Now, whoever conſiders, that the Opinion of the Platoniſts and Pythagoreans concerning the Pre-exiſtence of Souls, their Tranſmigration from one Body to another, and being ſent into Bodies better or worſe, according to their Merit, or Demerit, had obtain'd among the Jews, and more eſpecially among the Phariſees, need not much wonder to find our Lord's Diſciples infected with it, or, at leaſt, deſirous to know their Maſter's Sentiments about it. The Author of the Book of Wiſdom, where ſpeaking of himſelf, he tells us, that, being good, he came into a Body undefiled, i. e. free from any notable Infirmity, Chap. viii. 20. gives countenance to this Doctrine; and, in the Writings of Philo, (de Gigant. p. 285. & de Somniis, p. 586.) and of Joſephus, (de Bello Jud. lib. ii. c. 12.) we have it confirm'd to us: And therefore the Diſciples may well be ſuppos'd to enquire here, whether our Lord allow'd of the prevailing Notion, viz. That the Soul of this Man might be put into this imperfect Body, for the Puniſhment of what he had done, either in, or out of the Body, in a pre-exiſtent State. Whitby's and Hammond's Annotations, and Calmet's Commentary.

† It muſt not be thought, that God did any ways actively concur to make this Man blind, tho', in his Wiſdom, he thought fit to leave this Imperfection in the plaſtick Matter, whereof he was form'd, unrectify'd, that thereby he might ſhew his miraculous Power in giving Sight to ſuch an one, for the Confirmation of Chriſt's Doctrine; thereby diſplay his Goodneſs, in illuminating both the Soul and Body of this Man at once; and thereby give all others, who beheld this miraculous Cure, a powerful Motive to believe. Whitby's Annotations.

Thoſe, who were averſe to believe the Miracle, or in Hopes of making the Thing look intricate, ſent for the Parents of the Man, that was cur'd, and aſk'd them theſe three Queſtions. Whether he was their Son? Whether he was born blind? And whether they knew how, and by whom he was cur'd? To the two firſt Queſtions they anſwer'd directly that he was their Son, and was born blind; but, as to the laſt, they referred them to him, who, (as they told them) was of Age to anſwer for himſelf; not daring to ſay any more for Fear of the Sanhedrim, who had made an Order † to excommunicate any Perſon, who ſhould acknowledge Jeſus to be Chriſt. Him therefore they began to examine; and, to draw him from the good Opinion, he had conceiv'd of his Phyſician, bid him aſcribe the Glory of his Cure wholly to God, and not to look upon Jeſus with any Veneration, who was a Sinner, and Sabbath-Breaker, and conſequently, could not come from God. To which the Man boldly reply'd, "That it was very "unaccountable, that they ſhould not per"ceive from whence the Man was, whom "God had endu'd with ſuch a miracu"lous Power of opening the Eyes of one "born blind, † a Thing that was never "heard of before, ſince the World began; "and that ſince it was a certain Truth, "‖ that God heareth not Sinners, if he "were not ſent, and impower'd by God,

† We read of nothing medicinal in this Water, only our Lord was pleas'd to ſend the blind Man to waſh his Eyes here as a Probation of his Faith and Obedience, in the ſame Manner, as, of old, Naaman the Syrian was ſent to waſh in the River Jordan, 2 Kings v. 10. Pool's Annotations.

† And yet they themſelves acknowledge, that a Prophet might do, and command Things contrary to the Reſt requir'd by the Sabbath, which they alſo prove by the Example of Joſhua, who commanded, that the Ark ſhould be carried round Jericho, the armed Men going before, and after it, ſeven Days, one of which muſt be the Sabbath, Joſh. vi. How then could that, which Prophets, by the known Principles of the Jews, were allow'd to do, prove that Jeſus was no Prophet, eſpecially if we conſider, that, by theſe Actions of Mercy and Goodneſs, he did not indeed violate the Reſt of the Sabbath, but only their corrupt Traditions concerning it. Whitby's Annotations.

† The general Opinion is, that, among the Jews, there were three Kinds of Excommunication; that the firſt was called Niddui, that is to ſay, Separation, which laſted for thirty Days, and ſeparated the Perſon from the Uſe of all Things holy: The ſecond was called Cherem, or Execration, which excluded the Perſon from the Synagogue, and depriv'd him of all civil Commerce: And the third, Shammatha, or Exciſion, which remov'd him from all Hopes of returning to the Synagogue any more. But Selden (de Synedr. Hebr.) maintains, that theſe three Terms, Niddui, Cherem, and Shammatha, are ſometimes ſynonymous, and that the Jews, properly ſpeaking, never had more, than two Sorts of Excommunication, the greater and the leſs; tho' moſt are agreed, that it was the greater Sort of Excommunication, which the Sanhedrim threatened to any one, that ſhould confeſs that Jeſus was the Chriſt, becauſe the Parents of the blind Man were ſo fearful of it, that they durſt not ſpeak out. Calmet's Dictionary, under the Word Excommunication.

† They who loſe their Sight by a Diſeaſe, may be cur'd; but no Man, no not Moſes, or any of the Prophets ever did, or ever could, without the Aſſiſtance of a Divine Power, give Sight to one born blind; for which Reaſon the Jews reckon this among the Signs of the Meſſiah, that he ſhould open the Eyes of the Blind. Whitby's Annotations.

‖ But doth not God hear Sinners? Then whom can he hear, ſince no Man liveth, and committeth not Sin againſt God? 'Tis true indeed. But then, the Sinners, which the poor Man may be ſuppos'd here to mean, are not thoſe, who become ſuch thro' Ignorance, Weakneſs, or human Infirmity, but ſuch notorious and preſumptuous Sinners, as go on in their Impieties, with an high Hand, and an hardened Heart, of whom the Spirit of God declares, when they ſpread forth their Hands, I will hide myſelf from them, and, when they make many Prayers, I will not hear, Iſa. i. 15. The Maxim however is here to be underſtood, not in a general, but reſtrained Senſe, viz. that God uſeth not to honour notorious and flagitious Sinners (eſpecially when they pretend to come with a Meſſage from him) by giving them a Power to work Miracles, in order to confirm the Truth of what they ſay. For this is the Force of the poor Man's Argument,——That Chriſt could not be ſuch a notorious Sinner, as he was repreſented to him, becauſe it was inconſiſtent with the Attributes of God, to honour ſuch Perſons with his Preſence and Aſſiſtance, in doing ſuch Works, as none could do, without a Divine Power committed to them. Pool's Annotations.

† That this Alluſion was very proper and pertinent, with Regard to the Perſons, to whom our Saviour addreſs'd his Diſcourſe, the Condition and Cuſtom of that Country may convince us. For the greateſt Part of the Wealth and Improvement there conſiſted in Sheep; and the Examples of Jacob and David in particular are Proofs, that the keeping of theſe was not uſually committed to Servants and Strangers, (as it is among us) but to Men of the greateſt Quality and Subſtance. The Children of the Family, nay, the Maſters and Owners themſelves made it their Buſineſs, and eſteem'd the looking to their Flocks a Care, and Employment, in no Caſe below them. Hence probably came the frequent Metaphor of ſtiling Kings the Shepherds of their People. Hence the ancient Prophets deſcribe the Meſſiah in the Character of a Shepherd; and our Bleſſed Saviour, to ſhew that he was the Perſon intended by the Prophets, applies the ſame Character to himſelf, thereby to repreſent his Government of the Church, and tender Concern for Mankind. He ſhall feed his Flock like a Shepherd; he ſhall gather the Lambs with his Arms, and carry them in his Boſom; ſhall ſeek that which was loſt, and bring again that which was driven away; ſhall bind up that which was broken, and ſtrengthen that which was ſick, and gently lead thoſe which were with Young, Iſai. xl. 11, and Ezek. xxxiv. 16. all lively Emblems of our Lord's paſtoral Care, and of the various Methods, which he hath employ'd to accommodate his Diſpenſations to our Wants, in order to promote our eternal Salvation. And, as the Character of a Shepherd did well become our gracious Saviour, ſo there is ſomething in the very Nature and Diſpoſition of Sheep, (which appears ſo innocent and inoffenſive, ſo peaceable and gentle, ſo patient and ſubmiſſive, ſo honeſt and undeſigning) as carries a near Reſemblance to that Plainneſs and Probity, that Modeſty and Humility, that Quietneſs and Submiſſion, which are indeed the firſt Elements of the Chriſtian Religion, as well as the Qualifications requiſite to the Reception of it. It is to be obſerv'd however, that, as the Shepherd's Art in managing his Sheep (in the Eaſtern Countries) was different to what is among us, (to which Purpoſe we read of his going before, leading, and calling his Sheep, and of their following, and knowing his Voice, whereas our Shepherds go after, and drive their Sheep) ſo theſe ſeveral Expreſſions do, in the Moral, denote our Lord's receiving into the Number of Chriſtians all thoſe humble and obedient Souls, that come to him in the Spirit of Meekneſs, not in the Cloathing, but in the real Qualities of his Sheep, and making Proviſion for their Growth in Grace and Improvement in all Virtue and Godlineſs of Living. Stanhope, on the Epiſtles and Goſpels, Vol. III. and Hammond's Annotations.

† According to the primary Inſtitution of God, it was the proper Province of the Sons of Levi to teach the Children of Iſrael all the Statutes, which the Lord had ſpoken unto them by the Hand of Moſes, Levit. x. 11. and therefore it was requir'd, that the Prieſts Lips ſhould preſerve Knowledge, and the People ſeek his Law at their Mouths, Mal. ii. 4, 7. but (however it came about) no ſooner did their Traditions grow in Eſteem, than the Scribes and Phariſees, not only took upon them to be the Guides and Teachers of the People, but maintain'd likewiſe, that others were to receive Authority to teach from their Commiſſion, and Ordination to that Office, tho' we no where find that they receiv'd any ſuch Authority from God; for which Reaſon our Saviour repreſents them as a Plantation, which his Father had not planted, Matth. xv. 13. and bids his Diſciples beware of their Doctrine, Matth. xvi. 12. becauſe they taught for Doctrines of God the Commandments of Men, and made void the Commandments of God by their Traditions, Matth. xv. 6, 9. Whitby's Annotations.

† In ſeveral of the Greek Copies, as well as the Syriac, Perſian, and Gothic, the Words before me (for our Saviour in the Text ſpeaks in his own Perſon) are omitted; and ſome Criticks are of Opinion, that this Omiſſion was early, becauſe the Manichees (according to Theophylact) made no Scruple to infer from hence, that the Prophets of the Old Teſtament had not their Miſſion from God. Our Saviour however, in ſeveral Places, where he quotes them, had ſufficiently eſtabliſh'd the Authority of the Prophets; and by this Paſſage means no more, than that all thoſe, who, before him, had taken upon them the Title and Quality of the Meſſiah, (ſuch as Theudas and Judas Galilæus, whereof we find Mention, Acts v. 36, 37.) where Thieves and Robbers, becauſe they uſurp'd a Character, which they had no Right to; and that all before him, who either had not their Commiſſion from God, or could not prove it by extraordinary Miracles, his own Right to it by an Argument, that no other Shepherd durſt produce, viz. his laying down his Life for his Sheep ‖, which were to conſiſt of Gentiles †, as well as Jews, and all together make up one Flock.

John x. 22.

Before the Concluſion of the Feaſt, as he was walking in Solomon's Porch †, ſeveral of the Jews came, and requir'd him to tell them (in poſitive Terms) whether he was the Meſſiah or not: To which his Anſwer was, that he had already ſufficiently inform'd them of that, but to no Effect; that the Miracles, which he wrought in his Father's Name, were a full Evidence of his Miſſion; that the Reaſon, ‡, why they believ'd him not, was, becauſe they were not of a Diſpoſition proper for his Sheep; that to ſuch as were his Sheep, and follow'd him, he would give eternal Life; and that none could pull them out of his, or his Father's Hands, becauſe he and his Father were one †. Upon this laſt Expreſſion, the Jews racles, (ſuch as the Authors of the Rabbinical Traditions, and of all the other reigning Sects among the Jews) were far from being the true Shepherds of God's People. Calmet's Commentary.

‖ His Sheep are here ſuppos'd by ſome to be his elect and peculiar Friends, and thence they infer, that Chriſt laid down his Life for them only. Now, if we reſpect the Council of God, and the Deſign of Jeſus Chriſt, nothing is more certain, than that he gave himſelf a Ranſom for all, 1 Tim. ii. 6. and taſted Death for every Man, Heb. ii. 9. and was a Propitiation for the Sins of the whole World, 1 John ii. 2. but then, becauſe the World can no otherwiſe lay hold on the Benefits of this Propitiation, than by believing, and being obedient to the Voice of this Shepherd, he therefore is ſaid to do this more eminently for his Sheep. The Apoſtle, I think, has determin'd the whole Controverſy in a few Words,——He died for all, that they, who live, might not live unto themſelves, but unto him, who died for them, 2 Cor. v. 15. ſo that, if any periſh, it is not becauſe he died not for them, but becauſe they will not perform the Conditions requir'd to make his Death efficacious to them; they will not live unto him, who died for them. Whitby's Annotations.

† Theſe our Saviour calls his other Sheep, John x. 16. by Way of Anticipation, becauſe he foreknew that many of them (when once his Goſpel came to be tender'd to them) would give it a ready Reception, be converted, and baptiz'd; and becauſe the Ceremonial Law (which was the Partition-Wall between the Jews and Gentiles) was ſhortly to be broken down, and the Gentiles admitted to the ſame Privileges, with the Jews, that believ'd in his Name. Whitby's Annotations.

† This Porch conſiſted of ſome ſtately Cloiſters on the Eaſt Side of the Temple, and not far from the Court of the Gentiles. It was called Solomon's, either to preſerve the Memory of that great Prince, or becauſe it was built according to the Model of that, which he erected, 1 Kings vi. 3. for both in the Temple, which Zorobabel, and in that, which Herod rebuilt, the Plan of Solomon's was chiefly obſerv'd, tho' ſome Variations might be allow'd of: And in this Porch our Saviour was walking, becauſe, at this Time, it was Winter, and here he found a Cover from the Inuries of the Weather; whereas, in the Summer Seaſon, it was cuſtomary for the Jews to walk in the open Courts of the Temple. Echard's Ecclefiaſtical Hiſtory, lib. i. c. 5. Whitby's Annotations, and Calmet's Commentary.

‡ Some are of Opinion, that the Words in the Text ȣ γὰρ, which we render becauſe, are not rational, or do not render a Reaſon for theſe People's Infidelity, but only intimate, that their Infidelity was conſequential to their not being his Sheep; or, in other Words, that they could not believe, becauſe they were not elected. But, to obviate this, we muſt obſerve, that the Reaſon which our Lord here aſſigns for this Defect of Faith, is doubtleſs ſuch, as made it a great Crime in them; for ſure that muſt be ſuch, for which they were to die in their Sins, John viii. 24. It is therefore certain, that this Unbelief cannot be reſolv'd into any natural Defect of Knowledge on their Part, nor any Act of Reprobation on God's Part, but purely to the Want of a teachable and well-diſpos'd Mind. For, were it the ſame Thing to be one of Chriſt's Sheep, and to be predeſtinate to Faith and Salvation, the Import of our Saviour's Words muſt be this,——Ye therefore believe not, becauſe ye are not of the Number of the Elect, but of thoſe, whom God hath, from Eternity, rejected. Now, by this Account of the Matter, our Saviour would not have accus'd, but excus'd the Infidelity of the Jews, and they, with as good Reaſon, might have reply'd to him,——"We "therefore believe not, becauſe God, by his Act of Reprobation, hath ſhut the Door of Faith againſt us, and ſo our "Infidelity is not to be imputed to us, but God." Whitby's Annotations.

† That is, one in Eſſence and Nature; one in Authority and Power, and not barely one in Will and Conſent: And that this is the genuine Signification of the Words, appears 1ſt, from the Original Text, where it is not ſaid, I and my Father are one εἷς, Perſon, in the Maſculine Gender, but ἓν, one Thing, in the Neuter. Now, if that Thing be not the Divine Being, they cannot be one; for, ſince the Father is confeſs'd to be God, the Son cannot be one Thing with the Father, if he be not God too. 2dly, It appears from the Context, where our Saviour, having, in the preceding Verſes, aſcrib'd the Preſervation of his Sheep to the Power of his Father, None is able to pluck them out of my Father's Hands, John x. 29, aſcribes the ſame alſo to his own Power, Neither ſhall any pluck them out of my Hand, Ver. 28. plainly intimating, that his Sheep were equally ſafe in his own Hand, as in his Father's, becauſe, ſays he, I and my Father are one, Ver. 30. And, 3dly, It appears from the Verſes, which immediately follow; for when the Jews took up Stones to ſtone him, as guilty of Blaſphemy, becauſe he made himſelf God, he does not evade the Charge, by ſaying, that he only conſpir'd with the Will of God, as all true Prophets did; but appealed to the Works, which

A. M. 4035, &c. Ann. Dom. 31, &c.

Jews concluded him to be a Blaſphemer, and were going to ſtone him; and tho' he reminded them of the many good Actions, he had done for them in his Father's Name, and endeavour'd to apologize for his calling himſelf the Son of God, (even becauſe in Scripture we find Judges and Magiſtrates frequently ſo ſtiled, and much more then might he, who was conſecrated, and ſent by God, aſſume that Title) yet all this would not appeaſe their Rage, ſo that he was forc'd to leave the City, and went thence over Jordan to Bethabara, where John had formerly baptiz'd; where great Multitudes reſorted to him, both to hear his Inſtructions, and to be healed of their Diſeaſes; and where he made many Diſciples, because the Place put the People in Mind that whatever John had reported of him was true. Shews the Difficulty of attaining Salvation, and the Wretchedneſs of the Jews in rejecting it.

While he continu'd in theſe Parts, a certain Perſon put a curious Queſtion to him †, concerning the Number of thoſe, that ſhould be ſav'd: Whereupon he took occaſion to admoniſh his Hearers, "That "they ought to uſe their utmoſt Endea"vours to enter in at the ſtrait Gate * of "Salvation, becauſe the Number of thoſe, "who ſhould not attain it, would be large; "that they ought to do it with all Expe"dition, becauſe, when once the Gate "was ſhut, and the Means of Salvation "withdrawn, all Pretences of having heard "the glad Tidings of the Goſpel, and of "having been converſant with him upon "Earth, would gain them no Admit"tance; that all Workers of Iniquity "ſhould be utterly excluded; and there"fore the Jews, in particular, would have "Cauſe to lament, when they ſhould ſee "many Heathens, from all Parts of the "Earth, poſſeſs'd of the Glories of Hea"ven, with Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, "and all the ancient Prophets, while "themſelves (who were the Heirs of the "Kingdom) ſhould be thruſt out, and ſo "made the laſt, who were once the firſt." which he perform'd by the Power of the Father reſiding in him, which plainly carries it to an Unity of Power, not of Will only; and then St. Chryſoſtom's Inference is undeniable, that, if the Power be the ſame, the Eſſence alſo is the ſame. Whitby's Annotations.

† The Man, who propos'd this Queſtion to our Saviour, had doubtleſs in his Thoughts the common Opinion of the Jews, that all Iſraelites (how much ſoever they may ſuffer in this) might have their Portion in the World to come; but this was a Queſtion of too much needleſs Curioſity for our Saviour to anſwer, becauſe it is no Part of our Concern, how many ſhall be ſav'd? But only how, and by what Means, we are to work out our own Salvation: And therefore he took occaſion from hence to inſtruct the Man (and in him all others) in what might be of much more ſubſtantial Benefit to him. Whitby's Annotations.

* This Expreſſion of our Bleſſed Saviour's, whether it was borrow'd from the Heathen Sages, or no, is extreamly like them: For Cebes tells us, that, at the firſt Entrance upon a Courſe of Virtue, there is a little Gate; that, after we have paſs'd this Gate, there is a narrow Aſcent; and that the Way following is rough and rugged, becauſe it is not much frequented; but that, after we have got up to the Top of the Hill, the reſt is ſmooth and eaſy, free from all Obſtructions, and leading to the Regions of Felicity. Nay, Heſiod, who was much older than Cebes, has given us the ſame Deſcription of the Paths of Virtue:

——— Μακρὸς δὲ καὶ ὄρθιος οἶμος ἐπ' αὐτὴν,
Καὶ τρηχὺς τὸ πρῶτον ἐπὴν δ' εἰς ἄκρον ἵκηαι
Ῥηϊδίη δ' ἤπειτα πέλει, χαλεπή περ ἐοῦσα. Oper. & Dier. Lib. i. Lin. 288.

And hence we may perceive, to our Comfort, that tho' the Ways of Virtue and Religion are not, at their firſt Entrance, ſo very agreeable, yet, in Proceſs of Time, they will be found to be Ways of Pleaſantneſs, Chriſt's Yoke eaſy, and his Commandments not grievous. Cebetis Tab. Calmet's Commentary, and Whitby's Annotations.

‖ But, whether they came upon their own Account, or by the Inſtigation of Herod, is the Queſtion. ——— If they came upon their own Account, 'tis certain, that they came not out of any Kindneſs to our Saviour; becauſe the whole Hiſtory of the Goſpel informs us, that they were far from having any Affection for him, and therefore they muſt come with a Deſign, either to ſcare him out of Galilee, where he had been too popular for them, or to drive him into a Trap, which they had laid for him in Judea. This ſeems to be a genuine Interpretation enough of the Senſe of the Evangeliſt; and therefore, in our Hiſtory, we have follow'd it: But ſtill it ſeems not improbable, that, conſidering the preſent Circumſtances, Herod was under, he might ſend theſe Meſſengers to our Saviour. He had, but lately, gain'd himſelf

Galilee, which was Part of his Dominions: But, far from betraying any Fear upon ſuch Information, he let the Phariſees know, that, having but a few Days longer to live, he was determin'd to devote them to the Relief of the Diſtreſs'd, the curing Diſeaſes, and caſting out Devils; and as to Herod's † Subtlety, and Deſigns againſt his Life, they were altogether ſuperfluous, becauſe he foreknew, that he was to ſuffer Death at Jeruſalem †, which was the Place appointed (as it were) for the Slaughter of all the Prophets; and hereupon he broke out into a moſt pathetick Exclamation againſt the Inhabitants of that unhappy City, reproaching them with their rejecting the kind Offers of the Goſpel, and with their killing the Meſſengers ſent from God, and then denouncing their ſad approaching Deſtruction and Calamity.

Luke xiv. 1. Cures the dropſical Man, recommends Humility, and repreſents the different Succeſs of the Goſpel.

One Sabbath-Day, when Jeſus was invited by a Phariſee of ſome Diſtinction to dine with him, a Man diſtemper'd with a Dropſy came after him; and, when ſeveral of the Company narrowly obſerv'd, how he would behave upon this Occaſion †, he firſt cur'd the poor Man, and then juſtify'd his doing ſo, by the ſame Argument, he made uſe of to thoſe, who reprehended him for curing the crooked Woman on the Sabbath-Day. Obſerving however how eager the Gueſts were to take every one the uppermoſt Places at the Table, he endeavour'd to convince them, how commendable it was for a Man to ſeat himſelf in a Place below, rather than above his Rank and Condition, becauſe daily Experience ſhew'd us, that Humility was a Virtue, which was ſo far from debaſing, that it rais'd and exalted the Perſon, who practis'd it. And then, turning his Diſcourſe to the Maſter of the Houſe, whom he found too regardleſs of the Poor and Needy, he gave him (and in him all others) the good Advice ‖ of inviting the Poor, himſelf no good Reputation among the Jews, by murthering John, whom all the World look'd upon as a Prophet: And therefore, ſeeing that our Saviour excelled John, eſpecially in the Fame and Renown of his Miracles, he was unwilling to augment the Odium, which already lay upon him, by any freſh Acts of Violence to a Perſon, that was reputed a Prophet, much ſuperior to the Baptiſt, whom he had ſlain: He had got a Notion too, that the Baptiſt, at leaſt the Soul of the Baptiſt, in another Body, was riſen from the Dead, and what the Effect of his Ghoſt's haunting his Dominions might be, he could not tell; and therefore he might think it convenient to put theſe Phariſees upon ſome Expedient to get our Saviour (whom poſſibly he might take for John revivify'd) remov'd farther from him. However this be, 'tis certain, that either he, or the Phariſees, or both, had a Mind to have him gone ſomewhere elſe, and that, for this Purpoſe, the Meſſage was brought him. Pool's Annotations.

† The Subtlety of that Prince is imply'd in the Anſwer, which our Saviour makes to the Phariſees, and which looks indeed, as if they had been ſent from him, Go tell that Fox, Luke xiii. 32. The Expreſſion however may be taken, either in a mild, or an harſher Senſe. If a mild, it may denote that exquiſite Policy, wherewith this Prince conducted his Affairs all his Life-Time, ſiding ſometimes with the Jews, ſometimes with the Romans, ſometimes with the Phariſees, and ſometimes with the Sadducees, juſt as it ſuited his Intereſt: But, ſuppoſe it be taken in an harſh Senſe, it will no Ways affect our Saviour's Character, nor infringe the Command of not ſpeaking Evil of the Ruler of the People, ſince our Lord was a Prophet ſent from God, and the Office of a Prophet is, not to ſpare Kings, when they reprove their Offences, Jer. i. 15. Whitby's Annotations, and Calmet's Commentary.

† Some are of Opinion, that, becauſe the Jews had referr'd to the Sanhedrim, which ſat at Jeruſalem, the whole Cognizance and Trial of Prophets, therefore a Prophet was not to ſuffer out of that City; but this Interpretation ſeems to enervate our Saviour's Sentiment, whoſe Deſign certainly was to repreſent the City of Jeruſalem, ſo accuſtom'd to ſhed the Blood of the Prophets, that there was ſcarce a Poſſibility for any Prophet's dying out of it. Calmet's Commentary.

† The Preſence of the dropſical Man, and its being the Sabbath-Day, would involve our Saviour (as they thought) in this Difficulty, ——— That either, by forbearing to heal at that Time, he would betray his Fear, and ſtrengthen their Superſtitions with Regard to ſuch ritual Obſervances; or elſe, that, by doing it, he muſt incur the Cenſure and Odium of a Sabbath-Breaker, and a Contemner of the Law: But he, who was well aware what Spies he had upon him, ſo order'd the Matter, as to accompliſh what he ſaw fit, without any Opportunity given for his Enemies to compaſs their Ends by it. Stanhope, on the Epiſtles and Goſpels, Vol. III.

‖ Whether this Precept is to be underſtood in a literal Senſe or no, may, in ſome Meaſure, admit of a Debate, Our Saviour, when he acted the Part of a rich Man, in feeding the Multitude, had People of the meaneſt Rank, and, among theſe, the Poor, the Maimed, the Lame, and the Blind, (who daily reſorted to him for Cure) for the chief of his Gueſts: But moſt Men think, that theſe extraordinary Actions of his were no proper Patterns for us in the Diſpenſation

At the hearing of theſe laſt Words, one in the Company repeated that common Saying among the Rabbins, Bleſſed is he, that ſhall eat Bread † in the Kingdom of God; whereupon our Lord took Occaſion to repreſent the different Succeſs of the Goſpel, the Rejection of the Jews, and the Call of the Gentiles, under the † Emblem of a Feaſt, to which thoſe that were invited, upon ſundry Pretences, refus'd to come, ſo that the Maſter of the Houſe was obliged to ſend out into the Streets, and Lanes of the City, and into the High-Ways, and Hedges, to collect a ſufficient Complement of Gueſts, being determin'd, that none of thoſe, who were firſt invited, ſhould taſte of his Supper.

‡ The Words in the Text are, When thou makeſt a Dinner, or a Supper, call not thy Friends, nor thy Brethren, neither thy Kinſmen, nor thy rich Neighbours, Luke xiv. 12. It is to be obſerv'd, in our expounding of Scripture, that, as comparative Particles are ſometimes us'd in a Senſe negative, (for ſo we find the chief Prieſts moving the People, ἵνα μᾶλλον Βαραββᾶν ἀπολύσῃ αὐτοῖς, that he ſhould rather releaſe Barabbas to them, i. e. that he ſhould releaſe Barabbas, and not Jeſus.) ſo negative Particles are oft us'd in a Senſe comparative; as, when we read in Prov. viii. 10. Receive my Inſtructions, and not Silver, and in Joel, ii. 13. Rend your Hearts, and not your Garments, the Meaning is, rather than Silver, or your Garments; in like Manner as here, Call not thy Friends, nor thy Brethren, i. e. be not ſo much concern'd to call them, as the Poor. For it can hardly be thought, that our Saviour's Intent in this Precept was abſolutely to forbid all Invitations of our Neighbours, or Friends, to dine, or ſup with us. This is an Act of Kindneſs and Civility, and of good Tendency ſometimes to maintain and promote Amity and Friendſhip, among Neighbours and Acquaintance; but his only Meaning is, that we ſhould not invite them, out of a Proſpect of a Compenſation from them again, which is making a Kind of Traffick, with our Generoſity; but, inſtead of this, that we ſhould expend our Money, in the Exerciſe of Charity to ſuch, as are in no Condition to make us a Retribution. Whitby's and Pool's Annotations.

† From the enſuing Parable it appears, that the Kingdom of God here does not ſignify the Kingdom of Heaven, in its moſt exalted Senſe, but only the Kingdom of the Meſſiah, whereof his carnal Jew here ſpeaks according to the receiv'd Senſe of his Nation, as of a glorious temporal Kingdom, in which the Jews ſhould lord it over the Gentile World, enjoy their Wealth, and be provided with all thoſe earthly Bleſſings and Delights, in which they plac'd their Felicity. Whitby's Annotations.

† If we compare this with another Paſſage elſewhere, Matth. xxii. 2. we may be farther ſatisfy'd, that, by the Kingdom of Heaven, is here repreſented the Goſpel-Diſpenſation; and this, as it miniſters true Plenty and Pleaſure, all that Men can want, and all that they can wiſh, to render them perfectly happy, is compar'd to a Supper. The Bounty and infinite Love of Almighty God are ſignify'd by the Greatneſs of that Supper, and the Multitudes bidden to it. The firſt Bidding implies all the previous Notices of the Meſſiah, by which the Law and the Prophets were intended to prepare the Jews for the Reception of him and his Doctrine. The ſecond Bidding, when all Things were ready, ſeems to import all that Jeſus did, and taught, and ſuffer'd for their Converſion and Salvation, and all the Teſtimonies and Exhortations of his Apoſtles, and other Preachers of the Goſpel, to the ſame Purpoſe. The Excuſes ſent for their Abſence are the Prejudices, and Paſſions, and worldly Intereſt, which did not only hinder thoſe Jews from coming into the Faith, but diſpos'd them likewiſe to treat all Attempts to win them over with the utmoſt Obſtinacy and Contempt. The Gueſts brought in from abroad to ſupply their Places, are the Gentile World, to whom (after that the Jews had thruſt it from them) the ſubſequent Tenders of this Grace and Salvation were made: And the declaring that none of thoſe, who were bidden, ſhould taſte of this Supper, denotes the giving thoſe Jews over to a reprobate Senſe, and leaving them under that Infidelity and Perverſeneſs, in which they continue harden'd to this very Day. Stanhope, on the Epiſtles and Goſpels, Vol. III.

† It was a Cuſtom of the Jewiſh Doctors to lay down before their Proſelytes what Inconveniencies would attend upon their Precepts; and, in Conformity to this, our Saviour acquaints his Diſciples with two Things, that would be a Means to deter them from embracing his Religion, viz. the Difficulty of the Duties, that would be requir'd of them; and the Greatneſs of the Sufferings, to which they would be expos'd.

‡ The Words in the Text are,——If any Man come to me, and hate not his Father, and Mother, and Wife, and Children, and Brethren, and Siſters, yea, and his own Life alſo, he cannot be my Diſciple, Luke xiv. 26. But their Meaning in this Place is not, that a Man ſhould, properly ſpeaking, hate his Father and his Mother; for certainly our Bleſſed Lord, renounce even ſome of their moſt lawful Affections, and prepare themſelves to undergo the moſt unjuſt Perſecutions, if they thought of making Profeſſion of his Religion; and therefore (that they might not fail in the Day of Trial) he adviſ'd them to conſider well before-hand, what ſuch a Profeſſion would coſt them; "For, as "he, who begins to build, and has not "Money to accompliſh it, leaves his Work "imperfect, and himſelf becomes ridiculous; or as he, that deſigns a War, and "has not Men and Money enough to go "through with it, had better never have "engag'd in it; ſo he that undertakes to "be a Chriſtian, muſt reſolve to renounce "all that is precious, and to bear all "that is afflictive to him in this World, "or elſe he will never be able to hold "out."

† The Scribes and Phariſees look'd upon the Publicans as unfit to be convers'd with upon any Account, even tho' it was to reclaim them from their evil Courſes. Our Saviour had told them, that he convers'd among ſuch People, as their Phyſician, and not as their Companion, and that therefore his proper Buſineſs was among ſuch Patients, Matth. ix. 12, 13. but this Apology would not ſilence their Murmurings, becauſe their Opinion was, that God had caſt off all Care of them, and never intended to grant them Repentance unto Life. Burkit, and Whitby's Annotations.

† Here Chriſt ſets ninety and nine juſt Perſons in Oppoſition to one Sinner, not that it is ſo in Proportion; for there are very few, who live according to the Rule, that is preſcrib'd them; but becauſe, even upon a Suppoſition, that it were ſo, ſuch is the Value of our immortal Souls, that great Care and Pains ought to be taken even for the Sake of one. Grotius in Locum.

† A Sheep, when once it has ſtray'd away, is a Creature remarkably ſtupid and heedleſs. And ſuch, in Truth, is the Condition of People addicted to Vice, when they have broken out of God's Fold, and forſaken the pleaſant Paſtures, which he provides for them. They grow careleſs and inconſiderate, and are expos'd to Snares and Temptations every Moment. They are harden'd by Cuſtom; are deprav'd in their Affections and Judgment; are neither diſpos'd to grow wiſer, nor of themſelves capable of conquering inveterate Habits of Vice, tho' they ſhould now and then ſhew ſome good Inclination to attempt it. Stanhope, on the Epiſtles and Goſpels, Vol. III.

† By this Compariſon of a loſt Piece of Money, we are given to underſtand, that God eſteems the Souls of Men precious, and reckons them among his Wealth, and his Treaſures. And this indeed they are; made and form'd by his own Hand; impreſs'd with his own Image and Superſcription; and from that Stamp, which carries a Reſemblance to the great King of the whole World, deriving all their Currency and Value. But, when they abandon God's Laws, and forſake the divine and rational Life, a Life of Goodneſs and Wiſdom, renounc'd for one of Senſuality, and Madneſs, and Miſchief, then they are loſt; loſt to themſelves; loſt to God. Then this Coin is debas'd; the Impreſſion obliterated and gone; and that Piece of Money, as to the Worth and Uſe of it, is in a Manner as if it were no longer in Being. Stanhope, on the Epiſtles and Goſpels, Vol. III.

† This Parable is deſervedly reckon'd a Maſter-Piece in its Kind, and what cannot be parallelled by any of the Apologues, or allegorical Writings of Heathen Authors. It is adorn'd and beautify'd with the moſt glowing Colours, and lively Similitudes. It is carry'd on, and conducted with admirable Wiſdom, and Proportion, in the Parts, as well as in the Whole, and there is ſo exact a Relation between the Things repreſented, and the Repreſentations of them, that the moſt elevated Underſtanding will admire, and the loweſt Capacity diſcover the excellent and moſt uſeful Moral, that lies under ſo thin and fine a Veil.

returning prodigal Son with all the Indications of Joy and Tenderneſs, notwithſtanding the Remonſtrances of his elder Brother: For, under the Name of the elder Brother, he reprov'd the unjuſt Murmurings of the Phariſees, who were diſpleas'd at his entertaining Sinners, tho' the Salvation of ſuch was the main End of his coming into the World.

Luke xvi. 1. Shews the Manner, in which we are to employ our Riches, and the miſerable Conſequence of Uncharitableneſs.

HAVING thus expoſ'd the Pride and Envy of the Phariſees, he proceeded, in the next Place, to reprove their Covetouſneſs, and, at the ſame Time, to inſtruct his Diſciples, what the proper Uſe was, that they were to make of their Riches. To this Purpoſe he introduces an unjuſt Steward †, who, after having abus'd his Truſt, and waſted his Maſter's Subſtance, is contriving what Proviſion to make for himſelf (which he does by abating his Maſter's Debtors in their Bills) when he came to be remov'd from his Place; and thereupon he teaches his Diſciples, not to imitate the Injuſtice, but the Forecaſt and Policy of this Steward, by employing their earthly † Riches to make them Friends in the Perſons of the Poor, that, when they came to leave this tranſitory World, they might, by this Means, be receiv'd into everlaſting Habitations in Heaven; and ſo the Children of Light become as prudent in Things, relating to their Salvation, as the Children of this World were, in the Management of their temporal Affairs.

Luke xvi. 14.

THIS Diſcourſe made little or no Impreſſion upon the Phariſees; and therefore (to awaken their Attention) he propounded to them the Parable of a certain rich Man †, living in Pride, and Eaſe, and Luxury, who, after his Death, was carry'd into the diſmal Regions of the Damned;

---

† There is a good deal in this and the following Parable, that alludes to the Notions of the Jewiſh Rabbins, and their Manner of expreſſing them. "The Fruits of the Earth (ſays one of their Doctors) are like a Table, ſpread in "an Houſe; the Owner of this is God; Man in this World is, as it were, the Steward of this Houſe: If he behaves himſelf well, he will find Favour in the Eyes of his Lord; if otherwiſe, he will be remov'd from his Stewardſhip." Kimchi, on Iſaiah xl. and ſo the Scope of this following Parable, ſeems to be this. ——— That we are to look upon ourſelves, not as Lords of the good Things of this Life, as tho' we might uſe them at our Pleaſure; but only as Stewards, who muſt be faithful in the Adminiſtration of them. The Parables indeed make mention of no other Goods, but thoſe of Riches; but we muſt not therefore imagine, that rich Men only ſtand in the Capacity of Stewards, ſince every Advantage of Nature, or of Grace, as well as thoſe of Fortune, our Life, our Health, our Strength, our Wit, and Parts, our Knowledge natural and acquir'd, our Time, our Leiſure, our every Ability, our every Opportunity, our every Inclination to do well, are all our Maſter's Goods; all intruſted with us; all capable of benefiting others; and will all, at laſt, be brought to our Account. Whitby's Annotations, and Stanhope, on the Epiſtles and Goſpels, Vol. III.

† The Words in the Text are,———Make yourſelves Friends of the Mammon of Unrighteouſneſs, Luke xvi. 9. Now Mammon, or Mammona, is a Syriack Word, and properly denotes Riches, or Treaſure. It comes from an Hebrew Root, which ſignifies to be hid, and is therefore thought to comprehend, not only Gold, Silver, and other Metals, that are hid in the Bowels of the Earth, but Stores likewiſe of Corn, Wine, and Oil, (a great Part of the Riches of the Eaſtern People) which they often bury'd in ſubterraneous Caverns, to conceal them from their Enemies. Theſe are called the Mammon of Unrighteouſneſs, becauſe they frequently occaſion much Iniquity in the World, and are often acquir'd by very indirect Means; but our Lord, by this Expreſſion, muſt not be ſuppos'd to command Alms to be given of that, which is gotten by Fraud or Injuſtice, becauſe ſuch Charity can never be acceptable to God. No; the Duty of thoſe, who have acquir'd Wealth unrighteouſly, is, to make Reſtitution to the Perſons, they have injur'd; if theſe be dead, then to their Heirs or Executors; and the Poor are only then Receivers of the Fruits of Injuſtice, when a Perſon is conſcious that he has been unjuſt, but does not know the Perſons, to whom he has been ſo. Calmet's Commentary, and Beauſobre's Annotations.

† Whether this Repreſentation, which our Saviour here makes of the different Fates of the rich Man, and the poor, be a Parable, or a real Hiſtory, is a Matter, wherein ſeveral Commentators are not agreed. We are told however, that, in ſeveral Manuſcripts, both Greek and Latin, there are theſe Words in the Beginning of the 19th Verſe, He ſpake to them another Parable, and that this very Parable is in the Gemara Babylonicum, from whence it is cited by the learned Sheringham, in the Preface to his Ioma; as indeed, if we look into the Circumſtances of it, ſuch as the rich Man's lifting up his Eyes in Hell, and ſeeing Lazarus in Abraham's Boſom, his Diſcourſe to Abraham, his Complaint of being tormented with Flames, and his Deſire that Lazarus might be ſent to cool his Tongue, or, at leaſt, to convert his ſurviving Brethren: If (together with the great Gulph, that is fix'd between the two Places of Bliſs and Torment) we do but conſider theſe Particulars, I ſay, we muſt needs conclude, that, as they cannot be underſtood of any departed Soul in a literal Senſe, they muſt be an allegorical Repreſentation of Things inviſible, by Terms, in ſome Meaſure, ſuitable to the Opinion of the Jews concerning the State of Souls after Death. Calmet's Commentary, and Whitby's Annotations.

Of this laſt Sort were the Scribes and Phariſees, who, taking the Queſtion of Divorces † to be ſomewhat intricate, put it to our Saviour; but he, limiting † Lazer, which, according to moſt, is but a Contraction from Eleazer, is the very ſame with Ani-achad, a poor Man in the Gemara, and properly ſignifies, one without Help, or rather, one, that has God only for his Help: But, in the Times of our Bleſſed Saviour, we may obſerve, that it was a common Name among the Jews, and given to Men of ſome Diſtinction, as we find it was to the Brother of Martha and Mary. Whitby's Annotations, and Calmet's Commentary.

† The Garden of Eden and Paradiſe, the Throne of Glory, and Abraham's Boſom, were common Expreſſions among the Jewiſh Doctors, to denote a future State of Felicity; for ſo Joſephus, in his Diſcourſe of the Maccabees, ſays of good Men, that they are gathered to the Region of the Patriarchs, and that Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob do receive their Souls: And they tell us farther, that the Souls of ſuch Men are carry'd thither by Angels; for ſo the Targum on Cant. iv. 12. ſays, that no Man hath Power to enter into the Garden of Eden, but the Juſt, whoſe Souls are carried thither by the Hands of good Angels. Our Commentators however have perceiv'd ſomething peculiar in the Phraſe of Abraham's Boſom. They imagine, that the Jewiſh Notion of Paradiſe was, a Place abounding with Delights, and perpetual Feaſtings, where Abraham, the great Founder of their Nation, enjoys the uppermoſt Place at the Table, and while all his Children ſit down with him, ſome at a nearer, and ſome at a farther Diſtance from him, he, who has the Honour to recline upon his Boſom, (as Lazarus is here repreſented) is in a higher Degree of Felicity, than ordinary. But others deride all this Notion, and aſſert, that Abraham's Boſom was ſo called, not from any Poſture of Gueſts at Table, but from little Children, whom their tender Parents do ſometimes take in their Boſom, and ſometimes cauſe them to ſleep there. For, ſince thoſe that die in the Lord, ſay they, are ſaid to ſleep, or reſt from their Labours, where can they be ſaid to enjoy this Reſt or Sleep better, than in the Boſom of the Father of the Faithful? Beauſobre's and Whitby's Annotations, and Calmet's Commentary.

† A good deal of this is to be taken in a figurative ſenſe, but our Saviour might poſſibly inſert this Paſſage in the Parable, on Purpoſe to ſtrike at a vain Imagination, which ſome of the Jews were apt to entertain, viz. that Hell-Fire had no Power over the Sinners of Iſrael, becauſe Abraham and Iſaac came down thither to fetch them from thence, which could not fail of being effectually confuted, when they heard Abraham, as it were, with his own Mouth, declaring, that no Help was to be expected from him, when once they were got into that Place. Whitby's Annotations.

† Moſes and the Prophets comprehend all the ſeveral Diſpenſations of God's Mercy, as expreſs'd either in the Old, or New Teſtament. They ſignify the whole revealed Will of God, and whatever he hath ſet down therein, as neceſſary to our attaining eternal Life and Happineſs. Whatever Doctrine can be prov'd out of them, we are bound to embrace it without a new Miracle; as, on the other Hand, whatever Doctrine is inconſiſtent with them, we muſt reject, tho' an Angel from Heaven, or one from the Dead, ſhould come and preach it to us. Biſhop Sharpe's Sermons.

† One riſing from the Dead certainly could not do it, becauſe he could come with no greater Authority, deliver no better Motives to Repentance, nor give Men any greater Aſſurance of the Truth of what he ſaid, than what they had already. That a Reſurrection from the Dead was not ſufficient to convince them, is plain from hence, that our Saviour had rais'd Lazarus, and yet the Phariſees were not the more obedient to his Doctrine. Nay, tho' they had the moſt clear Proofs of his own Reſurrection, from the Teſtimony of their own Prophets, and their Guards, that kept the Sepulchre; from the Teſtimony of their own Senſes, of the Apoſtles, and five hundred Witneſſes at once; and all this confirm'd by miraculous Effuſions of the Holy Ghoſt, and a Multitude of Wonders wrought in his Name; yet all this was inſufficient to reclaim that wicked Generation from their Iniquity, or to provoke them to Repentance. Biſhop Blackall's Sermons at Boyle's Lectures, and Whitby's Annotations.

† The Jews, at this Time, were divided in their Opinions, as to the Matter of Divorces. Some of them, who follow'd limiting the Permiſſion of ſuch Separations to the Caſe of Adultery only, reminded them of that ſtrict and natural Union † between Man and Wife, which God had appointed at their firſt Creation, and was not, conſequently, to be diſannulled by any human Inſtitution. Here the Phariſees, thinking they had got the Advantage of the Argument, objected the Precept (a) of Moſes, wherein he permitted the Huſband †, in many Caſes, to give a Bill of Divorce to the Wife; but to this our Saviour reply'd, That, tho', under the Moſaical Diſpenſation, God, knowing their Obſtinacy, and perverſe Inclinations, allow'd a Diſpenſation † in this Point, by tolerating Divorces; yet, according to the original Inſtitution of Marriage, it was not ſo; and therefore, to reduce the Matter to its primary Eſtabliſhment, he determin'd, that all Divorces, for any leſs Cauſe, than that of Fornication, were illegal, and, on both Sides, attended with Adultery; which when ſome of the Diſciples heard, and (ſince the Engagement was ſo rigorous) began to expreſs their Diſlike of Marriage, our Lord allow'd it to be true, that in thoſe, who had the Gift of Continency, a ſingle Life was more conducible towards the Attainment of the Kingdom of Heaven, but that thoſe, who had it not, and thought proper to marry, ought, by all Means, to adhere to the firſt Inſtitution.

follow'd the Sentiments of the School of Shammai, held, that the Wife was to be put away only for the Crime of Adultery, becauſe Moſes directs, that this might be done, in Caſe the Huſband had found ſome Uncleanneſs in her, Deut. xxiv. 1. But others, who adher'd to the Notions of the School of Hillel, (and they by much were the greater Number) maintain'd, on the contrary, that this was permitted to be done for any Cauſe whatever; becauſe, in the ſame Verſe, it is expreſs'd, that, if ſhe found not Grace in her Huſband's Eyes, ſhe was divorceable. This was the Queſtion which the Phariſees brought to our Saviour, thinking, that he muſt have decided it, either againſt the Law of Moſes, or againſt the Determination of one of theſe two famous Schools, and, one Way or other, have become offenſive to the People; but our Saviour evaded all this, by reducing Matrimony to its original Inſtitution. Whitby's and Beauſobre's Annotations.

† This is a Matter, which the Heathens themſelves ſeem'd not unacquainted with; and therefore it is ſaid in Hierocles, that Nature prompts us to Marriage, in that ſhe hath made us ſo, that two ſhould live together, and have one common Work to beget Children; and that Tale of Plato, in his Convivium, "That Man, at firſt, was made Male and "Female, and that, tho' Jupiter cleft them aſunder, there was a natural Love towards one another, and an Inclination "to heal human Nature, by making one again of two," ſeems to be only a Corruption of the Account in Geneſis of Eve's being made out of Adam's Rib. Whitby's Annotations.

(a) Deut. xxiv. 1, &c.

† The Phariſees, in their Reply to our Saviour, ſeem to intimate, that the Lawfulneſs of Divorces was founded upon a Divine Command: Why then did Moſes command to give her a Bill of Divorcement and put her away? Mark x. 4. But Moſes no where commands, but only, in ſome Caſes, permits the doing of this; nor is the Deſign of the whole Precept to give any Encouragement to this Practice, but only to provide, that (in Caſe Men will be ſo perverſe and hard-hearted, as to turn away their Wives upon every ſlight Occaſion) the Thing might be done in a proper and publick Manner, not by Word of Mouth, but by Bill of Divorcement, deliver'd in Form, that, when the Woman is thus diſmiſs'd, ſhe may not be quite ruin'd, but left at her Liberty to become another Man's Wife. Deut. xxiv. 2.

† But here the Queſtion is, —— Whether this Diſpenſation excus'd the common Divorces among the Jews, (which our Saviour looks upon as an Infringement upon the primitive Inſtitution of Marriage) from all Sin, eſpecially that of Adultery in the Sight of God? 'Tis granted indeed, that theſe Divorces were contrary to the Equity and genuine Intention of God's firſt Inſtitution of Marriage, but then it muſt be added, that God, by his Servant Moſes, had diſpens'd with his own Inſtitution; that, under ſuch his Diſpenſation, there could be no Prohibition, and that, where there was no Prohibition, there could be no Tranſgreſſion; unleſs we can ſuppoſe, that God could forbid, and permit the ſame Thing, at the ſame Time. Our Saviour indeed, upon this Occaſion, preſcribes a new Law, which had not before obtain'd among the Jews; he retracts the Diſpenſation, that Moſes had given; he reduces Marriage to its primitive Inſtitution; and, except in Caſes of Adultery, allows of no Divorces, but accounts them all null and invalid: However, under the Moſaick Diſpenſation, it was not ſo. From the Permiſſion given to the Women, when they were thus divorc'd, to be marry'd to others, it is evident, that theſe Divorces quite diſſolv'd the Bond of Matrimony, otherwiſe we muſt ſay, that God gave theſe Women, when they marry'd again, a Toleration to live in a State of Adultery, and ſo, at long Run, the whole Common-wealth of Judea muſt, by a Divine Permiſſion, have been filled with Adulteries, and a ſpurious Offſpring, which is incongruous to the Wiſdom and Purity of Almighty God to imagine. Whitby's Annotations.

Luke xvii. 20.

The Phariſees, who waited for the Coming of the Meſſiah, and had drawn up a Romantick Scheme of his appearing with the utmoſt Glory of a temporal Prince, came, about this Time, and demanded of him, when the Kingdom of God [†], whereof he had told them ſo much, was to appear? To which he gave them in Anſwer, "That it ſhould not appear with any outward Pomp or Splendor, as they vainly imagin'd; and that, in Truth, it was already begun among them, tho' they had no Perception of it:" And then, turning to his Diſciples, he ſtrictly caution'd them, not to be deluded by falſe Chriſts, and falſe Prophets [*], who would pretend to ſhew them the Kingdom of God, where it was not; that, before he could enter into his glorify'd State, he was to ſuffer many Things, and be rejected by the Jews; but that, after his Death, he would give inconteſtable Proofs of his Power and Dominion, by the wonderful Propagation of his Goſpel, and by the ſpeedy, and amazing Vengeance, which he intended to take of that Nation. He therefore exhorted them, not to imitate the Security of the People in Noah's Time, or of the Inhabitants of Sodom, nor to expreſs any Concern for the Deſtruction of their Country, as did Lot's Wife for the burning of Sodom †; but to uſe their utmoſt Care and Diligence (when they ſaw the Roman † Armies advancing) not to be involv'd in the general Calamity: And becauſe, in involving ſome, and preſerving others, there would be much of God's diſtinguiſhing Providence concern'd, he therefore exhorted them to pray without fainting, or being diſcourag'd at any Thing; and, to this Purpoſe, propounded a Parable of a poor Woman, who, by her continu'd Importunity alone, prevailed with an unjuſt Judge † to vindicate her Luke xviii. 2. [†] The Phariſee's Temper is ſufficiently diſcover'd in the Form of his Prayer: God, I thank thee, that I am not as other Men are, Extortioners, Unjuſt, Adulterers, or even as this Publican, Luke xviii. 11. The Stile is inſolent and boaſting; that of an Herald, rather than a Supplicant; and does not ſo much render God his Praiſes, as proclaim his own. But, admitting this lofty Opinion of his own Excellencies to be never ſo juſt, yet what Warrant or Privilege could he have, to diſparage and vilify his Brethren? I am not as other Men: What could be more fulſome Vanity, than thus to ſet himſelf off, as an Exception to a whole World at once? Or even as this Publican: To break that bruiſed Reed, and, with ſcornful Reproaches, to fall foul on a wounded Soul, whoſe penitent Sorrow called for the Compaſſion of every Stander-by. The Publican, quite contrary, in all his Expreſſions, in all his Deportment, ſpeaks nothing but Shame and Confuſion, the tendereſt Contrition, and moſt profound Humility. He ſtands afar off, as not preſuming upon a nearer Approach to the Preſence of ſo holy a Majeſty. He lifts not up ſo much as his Eyes to Heaven, but, by the Guilt and Melancholy of his Countenance, takes to himſelf the ignominious Titles, ſo liberally beſtow'd by his ſcornful Companion. He ſmites upon his Breaſt, as conſcious of the Pollutions lodg'd there; looks not abroad, but confines his Thoughts to his own Miſery; alledges nothing in his own Behalf, no Mixture of Good to mitigate the Evil of his paſt Life; feels no Comfort, ſeeks no Refuge, except in the Mercy of a forgiving God; brings no Motive to incline that Mercy, but a ſorrowful Senſe of his own Unworthineſs, and an humble Hope in God's unbounded Goodneſs: And therefore upon this, this ſaving, this only ſupporting Attribute, he caſts himſelf entirely, with a God, be merciful to me a Sinner! Stanhope, on the Epiſtles and Goſpels, Vol. III.

[†] Whether the Phariſees put this Queſtion to our Saviour in Deriſion, becauſe, in his Diſcourſes, he had ſo often mention'd the Kingdom of God, or in ſober Seriousneſs, becauſe, at this Time, they were in ſtrong Expectations of the Coming of the Meſſiah, and his erecting a ſecular Kingdom among them, is not ſo eaſy a Matter to determine. Their contemptible Opinion of Chriſt inclines ſome to think the former; but their generally receiv'd Opinion about the Meſſiah gives ſome Countenance to the latter: But, in whatſoever Senſe they intended the Queſtion, our Saviour's Anſwer perfectly fits them. Only we may obſerve, that, by the Kingdom of God here, the Phariſees and our Saviour meant two very different Things: The Phariſees, a flouriſhing Kingdom, wherein the Meſſiah was to reduce all other Nations under the Jewiſh Yoke; but our Saviour, a Kingdom of Wrath and Vengeance, which he deſign'd to exerciſe even upon the Jews themſelves; and withal a ſpiritual Kingdom, which he intended to erect in the Hearts of Men by the kindly Operations of his Word and Spirit, when his Goſpel ſhould be more fully propagated. For this is the Meaning of that Compariſon, As the Lightning, which ſhineth from one Part of Heaven to the other Part under Heaven, ſo alſo ſhall the Coming of the Son of Man be in his Day, Luke xvii. 24. He had told them, that the Kingdom of God was already come among them, and had appear'd in the Purity of his Doctrine, and the Miracles, which he had wrought to confirm it, tho' not in that glaring Light, as to make them take a proper Notice of it; and here he tells them farther, that, after his Reſurrection, it would ſhine with ſuch a freſh and glorious Brightneſs, by the Effuſion of the Holy Ghoſt on his Diſciples, as would render it equal to the Splendor of the Sun, ſhining from one Part of Heaven to the other, and cauſe it to be propagated, almoſt as quick as Lightning, through the World; and that then this Son of Man, ſo ſcornfully rejected by them, would alſo appear ſuddenly, and glorioully, to revenge upon them their Infidelity, and the Affronts, which they had offer'd to him. Pool's and Whitby's Annotations.

[*] The Diſtinction between falſe Chriſts and falſe Prophets is, that the former took upon them to be Chriſt, and came under that Name; the latter were ſuch, as promis'd and foretold falſe Things. Among the Number of the falſe

The Egyptian Jew, who, in the Government of Felix, drew Thirty thouſand after him to the Mount of Olives, where he promis'd, by his Prayers, to make the Walls of Jeruſalem (as thoſe of Jericho once did) fall flat on the Ground; thence drive the Roman Forces; and there fix the Seat of his Empire, de Bello Jud. lib. ii. A certain Magician, who, in the Government of Feſtus, led great Numbers of Jews into the Deſert, and promis'd them a Deliverance from all their Troubles, Antiq. lib. xxii. And ſeveral others, (as the ſame Hiſtorian informs us, de Bello. Jud. lib. vii.) who taught the Jews, even to the laſt, to expect Help and Deliverance. Good Reaſon, therefore, had our Bleſſed Saviour, to caution his Diſciples againſt all ſuch Pretenders to a Divine Miſſion, ſince, according to his Prediction, and, as the ſame Hiſtorian expreſſes it, the Land, at this Time, was quite over-run with Impoſtors, and Seducers, who drew the People after them in Shoals, tho' the Roman Governors were ſo very ſevere, that there hardly a Day paſs'd without the Execution of ſome of them. Antiq. lib. xx. c. 6.

† Inſtead of making haſte to ſave herſelf, as the Angel had commanded her, ſhe, out of a vain Curioſity, muſt needs look back, either regretting what ſhe had left behind her in the City, or concern'd for thoſe, that were deſtroy'd in it, till ſhe was overtaken with the Flames, and chang'd into a Statue of Salt, or into the Condition of a Corps ſalted and embalm'd, which continu'd as a Monument of her Diſobedience, for many Ages after. And, in like Manner, if any of our Saviour's Diſciples neglected the Advice, which he here gave them, and continu'd in Jeruſalem, when the Roman Army had cloſely inveſted it, they, very likely, were involv'd in the common Deſtruction. Calmet's Commentary.

† The Words in the Text are, ——— Whereſoever the Body, or the Carcaſe is, there will the Eagles be gathered together, Matth. xxiv. 28. Luke xvii. 37. Theſe Words, which our Saviour here makes proverbial, ſeem to have been borrow'd from that Paſſage in Job, where he ſpeaks of the Eagle in this Manner; She dwelleth, and abideth on the Rock, upon the Crag of the Rock, and the ſtrong Place; from thence ſhe ſeeketh the Prey, and her Eyes behold afar off. Her young ones alſo ſuck up Blood; and where the Slain are, there is ſhe, Job xxxix. 28, &c. Upon the Account of the Swiftneſs, the Strength, and Invincibleneſs of this Bird, no doubt it was, that the Romans made the Eagle their Enſign in War: And therefore our Saviour, by making uſe of this Expreſſion, gives us to underſtand, that the Romans would come upon the Jews with a ſudden Deſtruction; ſurround them ſo, that there ſhould be no eſcaping their Hands; and, in whatſoever Country they found them, there put them all to the Sword. For the Eagle, mention'd in Job, our Tranſlators have render'd by a Word, which ſignifies a Vulture, a Bird conſecrated to Mars, becauſe it loves to feed upon Man's Fleſh, and therefore, by a Kind of natural Inſtinct, travels along with Armies, in Expectation of the Carcaſſes that fall there. Nor is it an uncommon Thing for the Prophets to expreſs the Day of God's Vengeance under the Idea of a Feaſt, which he hath prepar'd for the ravenous Birds, and Beaſts of the Field; for thus ſaith the Lord, Speak unto every feathered Fowl, and to every Beaſt of the Field; aſſemble yourſelves, and come, gather yourſelves on every Side to my Sacrifice, that I do ſacrifice for you, even a great Sacrifice upon the Mountains of Iſrael, that ye may eat Fleſh, and drink Blood, even the Fleſh of the Mighty, and the Blood of the Princes of the Earth, Ezek. xxxix. 17, 18. Vid. Iſaiah xxxiv. 6. and Jer. xlvi. 10. Hammond's Annotations, and Calmet's Commentary.

Matt. xix. 13. Mark x. 13. Luke xviii. 15.

He receives the little Children kindly, and ſhews the Danger of Riches, and the Rewards of a faithful Adherence to him, and his Religion.

From Matth. xii. 1. Mark ii. 23. Luke vi. 1. John v. 1. to Matth. xvii. 14. Mark ix. 14. Luke ix. 37. John vii. 1.

SHORTLY after this, Jeſus croſſed the River Jordan into Perea †, where he was follow'd again by vaſt Multitudes of People, whom he both taught, and cur'd of ſuch Diſtempers as they had, inſomuch, that ſeveral of the Company, perceiving how ready he was to do good to all that came unto him, brought their little Children † with them, in order to partake of his Divine Benediction; but his Diſciples, thinking it below the Dignity of their Maſter to be diſturbed and interrupted by Infants, at firſt refus'd Admittance to thoſe, who brought them, until Jeſus, having reprov'd them for ſo doing, and withal recommended the Innocence and Simplicity of theſe Babes, as a Pattern for their Imitation, commanded them all to be introduc'd, and, taking them up in his Arms, he laid his Hands upon them, and bleſs'd them, and ſo departed from the Place where this Tranſaction happen'd.

Matt. xix. 16. Mark x. 17. Luke xviii. 18.

As he was on his Journey, a young Perſon of Diſtinction, who was very rich and wealthy, deſir'd to know of him, what he was to do in order to attain eternal Life. Our Saviour propos'd to him the Obſervation of the Moral-Law, and remitted him in particular, to the Commandments of the ſecond Table †, as a certain Sign of his keeping thoſe of the firſt; but when the young Gentleman told him, that all theſe he had made it his Study to obſerve from his Youth, and our Lord, who knew his covetous Temper, and was willing to touch the ſecret Sore of his Mind, told him, that if he aim'd at Perfection in Religion, his only Way would be to ſell his Eſtate †, and give it to the Poor, in Hopes of a greater Treaſure in Heaven, and to come, and learn from the Nature of the Parable, that, if a Perſon, who neither fears God, nor regards Man, who had neither any Senſe of Religion or Humanity, may be ſuppos'd to be ſo far prevailed upon by the earneſt Prayer of a miſerable neceſſitous Creature, as to grant the Requeſt made to him, and to adminiſter Relief to the Supplicant, merely upon the Continuance and Importunity of the Petitions that are put up; how much more ought we to think, that God, who is infinite Goodneſs itſelf, who is always kind and bountiful to his Creatures, who delights to do them good, even without their deſiring it, and who is able to do them good, with much leſs Pains, than they can requeſt it; how much more ought we to think, I ſay, that this God, upon our earneſt and hearty Prayer to him, (eſpecially if we be importunate, and perſevering in our Devotions) will return us a kind Anſwer, and grant us ſuch Supplies, ſuch Protection or Aſſiſtance, as ſhall be needful for us. Biſhop Smalridge's Sermons.

† This Word is derived from the Greek ϖέραν, beyond, and ſignifies the Country beyond Jordan, or on the Eaſt Side of that River. It was bounded (according to Joſephus) to the Weſt, by Jordan; to the Eaſt, by Philadelphia; to the North, by Pella; and to the South, by Macheron; and was a fruitful Country, abounding with Pines, Olive-Trees, Palm-Trees, and other Plants, that grew up and down in the Fields, in great Plenty and Perfection; and, in the exceſſive Heats, was well watered and refreſhed with Springs, and Torrents from the Mountains, de Bello Jud. lib. iii. c. 2.

† The Parents, who brought their Children to Chriſt, were doubtleſs ſuch as believ'd him to be a Prophet ſent from God, and were perſuaded, that the Touch or Impoſition of his Hand would be of great Benefit to them, both to draw down a Bleſſing from Heaven upon them, and to preſerve them from Diſeaſes, which they ſaw him cure in Perſons more advanc'd in Years. We may obſerve therefore, that tho' theſe Children were no more than Infants, (as appears by our Saviour's taking them up in his Arms, Mark x. 16.) yet their Parents thought them capable of ſpiritual Bleſſings, and of receiving Advantage by our Saviour's Prayers. They however might bring them, with no farther Intent, than what is cuſtomary among the Jews even now; when they preſent their Children to any of their famous Doctors, viz. to obtain his Bleſſing; but by the Reaſon, which our Saviour gives for their Admiſſion into the Kingdom of Heaven, it appears, that he perceiv'd ſomething in them, (beſides their being Emblems of Humility) that qualified them to come unto him; and what could that be, but a Fitneſs to be dedicated to the Service of God, and to enter into Covenant with him early (as the Jewiſh Children did) by the Rite of Baptiſm, (which was his Inſtitution) even as the other did by that of Circumciſion? Calmet's Commentary, and Whitby's Annotations.

† We muſt not imagine, becauſe our Saviour refers this young Man to the Precepts of the ſecond Table only, that therefore they are of more Obligation to us, than thoſe of the firſt, or that, by performing them alone, we may attain eternal Life: Our Lord has elſewhere determined, that the great Commandment of all, is to love the Lord our God with all our Hearts; and here he inſtances in thoſe of the ſecond Table, not only becauſe the Love of our Neighbour is an excellent Evidence of our Love to God, but becauſe the Phariſees (of which Sect very probably this Perſon was one) thought theſe Commandments of trivial Account, and eaſy Performance, and yet by ſome of theſe it was, that our Saviour intended, by and by, to convince this Inquirer, that he neither had, nor could keep them. Pool's Annotations.

† Since our Bleſſed Saviour here requires of this young Man, not only to withdraw his Heart from an inordinate Love of his Poſſeſſions, but to ſell them all, and give the Money to the Poor, we may be ſure, that this was a particular Command and be one of his Diſciples; the young Man went away very penſive and melancholy, being loth to part with his preſent Poſſeſſions for any Treaſure in Reverſion. Whereupon our Lord, turning to his Diſciples, began to declare, what an inſurmountable Obſtacle Riches, without the Grace of God, were to any Man's Salvation, and that it was eaſier (according to the Hebrew Proverb) for a Camel to go through the Eye of a Needle †, than for a rich Man to enter into the Kingdom of Heaven: At which Expreſſion when his Diſciples were not a little ſtartled, to remove their Fears, but let them know that the Salvation of the Rich (tho' a Matter of ſome Difficulty) was not impoſſible with God, who could change the Hearts and Affections of Men, as he pleas'd.

Matt. xix. 27. Mark x. 28. Luke xviii. 28.

When the Apoſtles heard their Maſter bidding the young Man ſell all, and give it to the Poor, and follow him; and promiſing him, for a Reward, a Treaſure in Heaven; they began to think, that poſſibly it might be their Caſe, and the Promiſe, in like Manner, concern them; and therefore, when (in the Name of the reſt) Peter deſir'd to know of him what Reward they were to expect, who had actually relinquiſh'd all, and follow'd him; his Reply was, that, at the general Reſurrection †, when himſelf ſhould be ſeated upon his Throne of Glory, they alſo ſhould ſit upon twelve Thrones †, judging the twelve Tribes Command to him, in order to convince him of the Inſincerity of his pretended Love to Life eternal, and not a Precept common to all Chriſtians. That there were rich Men in the Church, we learn from ſeveral Paſſages in Scripture, 1 Tim. vi. 17. James i. 10. and ii. 2. St Peter, in his Speech to Ananias, permits Chriſtians to retain what is their own, Acts v. 4. and St Paul does not enjoin the Corinthians to ſell all, and give Alms, but only requeſts them to adminiſter to their Brethrens Wants out of their Abundance, 2 Cor. viii. 14. So that, if Riches fall into the Hands of one, who knoweth how to uſe them to God's Glory, and the Relief of indigent Chriſtians, as well as to ſupply his own Needs, it ſeems a Contradiction to conceive, that God requires him to part with them, and ſo diveſt himſelf of any farther Opportunity of promoting his Glory, and doing Good to his needy Members. This Precept therefore of ſelling all we have can only take place, when we are in the ſame Situation with this young Man, i. e. have an expreſs Command from God ſo to do, or when we find that our Riches are an Impediment to the ſecuring of our eternal Intereſt; for, in that Caſe, we muſt part with a Right-Hand, or a Right-Eye, the neareſt and deareſt Things we have, rather than be caſt into Hell-Fire. Whitby's Annotations.

† There are three different Opinions among Interpreters concerning the Meaning of this proverbial Saying. Some imagine, that, at Jeruſalem, there was a Gate, ſo very low and narrow, that a loaded Camel could not paſs through it, and that, by reaſon of its Littleneſs, it was called the Needle's Eye; but all this is a mere Fiction, devis'd on Purpoſe to ſolve this ſeeming Difficulty. The Jews indeed, to ſignify a Thing impoſſible, had a common Proverb among them, that an Elephant cannot paſs through the Eye of a Needle. Now our Saviour, ſay ſome, was pleas'd to change this Proverb from an Elephant (which was a Beaſt, that few had ſeen) to a Camel, a Creature very common in Syria, and whoſe Bunch on his Back hindered him from paſſing through any ſtrait Entrance. But others, not able to diſcern any Analogy between a Camel and a Needle's Eye, think that the Word, Κάμηλος, here ſignifies a Cable, or thick Rope, which Mariners uſe in caſting their Anchors; and that the rather, not only becauſe there is ſome Similitude between a Cable and a Thread, which is uſually drawn through the Eye of a Needle, but becauſe the Jews (as the learned Buxtorf acquaints us) have a Proverb of the like Import, relating to the Cable, as they have to the Elephant; for ſo they ſay, that as difficult is the Paſſage of the Soul out of the Body, as that of a Cable through a narrow Hole. Whether of theſe two Interpretations takes Place, 'tis a Matter of pure Indifferency: Only we may obſerve, that the Application of the Proverb to the rich Man's entering into the Kingdom of Heaven muſt not be underſtood abſolutely, but only ſo, as to denote a Thing extremely difficult, if not impoſſible, without an extraordinary Influence of the Divine Grace. Calmet's Commentary, Hammond's and Pool's Annotations.

† The Word, in the Original, is παλιγγενεσία, which properly ſignifies a new and ſecond State, and is us'd among the Pythagoreans for the Return of the Soul, after it had left one Body, to take Poſſeſſion of another: And, agreeably hereunto, it is us'd, by ſacred Writers, to denote, either the future Reſurrection, which will be the Re-union of the Soul and Body, or that great Change, which was to be effected in the World, by the Preaching of the Goſpel, and, more eſpecially, by the Miſſion of the Holy Ghoſt, after our Lord's Aſcenſion into Heaven. Hammond's Annotations.

† Some Interpreters refer theſe Words to that Authority, both in Matters of Diſcipline and Doctrine, which the Apoſtles, after the Deſcent of the Holy Ghoſt upon them, were, by our Lord's Commiſſion and Appointment, to exerciſe in the Chriſtian Church; but moſt underſtand them of the Honours, that are to be conferr'd upon them in a future State. And here ſome have taken great Pains to determine what Judgment theſe Perſons ſhall paſs; as, that they ſhall condemn the Errors of wicked Men by their Doctrines, and the Malice and Obſtinacy of Infidels by their Perſecutions, &c. while others have undertaken to aſſign them their Parts in the Proceſs of the laſt great Day, and repreſent

Upon the News of Lazarus's Sickneſs, our Saviour goes to Bethany.

Our Saviour had not been long in Perea, before he receiv'd a Meſſage out of Judea, from two Siſters in Bethany †, Martha and Mary, of the dangerous Sickneſs of their Brother Lazarus, a Perſon highly belov'd, and eſteem'd by him; but he propoſing, on this Occaſion, to manifeſt the Glory of God, as well as his own Divine Power and Miſſion, by a greater Miracle, than a ſimple Cure would be, delay'd his going until Lazarus was dead †, and then ſet forward.

repreſent them, as ſo many Aſſeſſors, to the ſupreme Judge, ſitting upon the Examination and Tryal of Mankind, while all the reſt ſtand at the Bar. But, tho' we are well aſſur'd, that ſuch a Judgment ſhall be, yet, as to the particular Circumſtances and Formalities of it, the Scripture ſeems to give us but a ſlender Inſight; and therefore, ſetting aſide all dark Conjectures about this Matter, the moſt ſafe and probable Way of applying this Paſſage, is, to look upon it as ſpoken after the Manner of Men, to ſignify, in general, a brighter Crown, or more exquiſite Degree of Happineſs and Glory. The Apoſtles accompany'd and ſtuck cloſe to Chriſt, in his low Eſtate. They kept the Faith, under the greateſt Preſſures and Temptations. They were indefatigably diligent, undauntedly conſtant in their Labours and Sufferings for the Truth, and moſt eminently ſerviceable in advancing the Kingdom of Chriſt upon Earth; and therefore they ſhall receive an eminent Diſtinction in the Kingdom of Heaven. Stanhope, on the Epiſtles and Goſpels, Vol. IV.

† That is, the Comforts of an upright Conſcience, a full Content of Mind, the Joys of the Holy Ghoſt, Increaſe of Grace, and Hopes of Glory. They ſhould have God for their Father, and Chriſt for their Spouſe, and all good Chriſtians for their Friends, and Brethren, who would honour, ſuccour, and ſupport them more, than thoſe, that were ally'd to them by the ſtricteſt Bonds of Nature. Whitby's Annotations.

† This Parable is, in a great Meaſure, taken from the Jeruſalem Talmud, where we have an Account of a King's hiring Labourers, and paying one, for a few Hours Work, the whole Day's Hire, which occaſion'd great Murmuring among the reſt. It is our Saviour's Cuſtom, we may obſerve, to make frequent Uſe of Jewiſh Proverbs in his Diſcourſes, and ſome learned Men have taken notice, that the Form of Prayer, which he taught his Diſciples, is chiefly compiled from the Jewiſh Liturgies. Since therefore he was to teach the People in a parabolical Way, he thought it no Diſparagement to his Parts to employ ſuch of their Parables, as were proper to his Purpoſe of illuſtrating the ſpiritual Matters of his Kingdom; as well knowing, that theſe Parables, which were in common Uſe, and familiar to them, would be leſs offenſive, and better remember'd by them, than thoſe of his own Invention. Whitby's and Hammond's Annotations.

† Bethany took its Name from the Tract of Ground wherein it ſtands, ſo called from the Word ἀθηνή, which ſignifies the Dates of Palm-Trees, that grew there in great Plenty. It was a conſiderable Place, ſituated at the Foot of the Mount of Olives, about fifteen Furlongs, or near two Miles, Eaſtward from Jeruſalem; but at preſent it is but a very ſmall Village. One of our modern Travellers acquaints us, that, at the firſt Entrance into it, there is an old Ruin, which they call Lazarus's Caſtle, ſuppoſed to have been the Manſion-Houſe, where he and his Siſters liv'd. At the Bottom of a ſmall Deſcent, not far from the Caſtle, you ſee his Sepulchre, which the Turks hold in great Veneration, and uſe it for an Oratory, or Place of Prayer. Here, going down by Twenty-five ſteep Steps, you come, at firſt, into a ſmall ſquare Room, and from thence creep into another, that is leſs, about a Yard and a half deep, in which the Body is ſaid to have been laid. About a Bow-Shot from hence, you paſs by the Place, which, they ſay, was Mary Magdalen's Habitation; and then, deſcending a ſteep Hill, you come to the Fountain of the Apoſtles, which is ſo called, becauſe (as the Tradition goes) theſe holy Perſons were wont to refreſh themſelves here, between Jeruſalem and Jericho, as 'tis very probable they might, becauſe the Fountain is both cloſe to the Road's Side, and is very inviting to the thirſty Traveller. Whitby's Alphabetical Table, Wells's Geography of the New Teſtament, and Maundrell's Journey from Aleppo to Jeruſalem.

† Our Saviour's Stay for two Days after the Meſſage, and modeſt Addreſs of the two mournful Siſters, kept them indeed a little longer in Suſpence and Grief, but it ſhew'd his perfect Wiſdom and Goodneſs, as it made the wonderful Work more remarkable, and conducive to the fuller Conviction of the Spectators. Had he gone before Lazarus was dead, they might have attributed his Recovery, rather to the Strength of Nature, than to Chriſt's miraculous Power; or had he rais'd him as ſoon as he was dead, they might, peradventure, have thought it rather ſome

WHILE he was in his Journey, he took his Apoſtles aſide, and [†] told them ſtill more plainly what the Event of it would be; namely, that at this Time of his going to Jeruſalem, the Chief-Prieſts and Scribes would apprehend and condemn him, and then deliver him to the Gentiles, who would ſcourge, and mock, and crucify him; but that, on the third Day, he would riſe again. Biſhop Blackhall's Sermons.

[†] In the Courſe of the Goſpel, we find our Lord forewarning his Diſciples, no leſs than three Times, of his approaching Sufferings and Reſurrection. The firſt Intimation of this Kind was, in the Coaſts of Cæſarea Philippi, when, after St Peter's Confeſſion of him to be the Chriſt, the Son of the Living God, he began to ſhew unto his Diſciples, how that he muſt ſuffer many Things, &c. Luke ix. 22. The next, we meet with, was immediately after his Transfiguration in the Mount, when, as he came down from thence, with the three Apoſtles, who were the Companions of his Privacies, he reminded them of what he had told them before, viz. That the Son of Man ſhould be delivered into the Hands of Men, Luke ix. 44. The third Warning was that, which he gave his Apoſtles apart, when he was going to Jeruſalem to ſuffer, or, as ſome rather think, when he was going to Bethany, in order to raiſe Lazarus from the Dead: And 'tis obſerv'd of theſe ſeveral Warnings, that they riſe by Degrees, and grow more full and diſtinct, in Proportion as the Things drew nearer. Thus, the firſt is deliver'd in general Terms: The Son of Man muſt ſuffer many Things, and be rejected, and ſlain, and raiſed the third Day. The ſecond is enforc'd with this ſolemn Preface, Let theſe Sayings ſink down in your Ears, Luke ix. 44. and the third deſcends to a more particular Deſcription of that tragical Scene, He ſhall be delivered to the Gentiles, and mocked, and ſpitefully entreated, and ſpitted on; and they ſhall ſcourge him, and put him to Death, and the third Day he ſhall riſe again, Luke xviii. 32, 33. Now, whether we conſider the Danger the Apoſtles were in of being oppreſs'd with an Affliction, ſo ſenſible, as the Death of their Maſter; or the general Miſtake, wherewith they were infected, concerning the Splendor and worldly Pomp of the Meſſiah's Kingdom, or the Scandal, that would neceſſarily ariſe from the Notion of a crucified Saviour, this Method of forewarning his Diſciples of what was to come upon him was highly requiſite, to ſuſtain them in their Tribulation, to rectify their Sentiments, and remove all Offences; as it ſhew'd, that his Death was voluntary, conſonant to the Predictions of the Prophets, and agreeable to the Counſel and Appointment of God, and the Shame of his Crucifixion abundantly recompens'd by the Glories of his Reſurrection. Stanhope, on the Epiſtles and Goſpels, Vol. II.

[†] This their Mother might be encourag'd to aſk, upon the Account of her near Relation to the Bleſſed Virgin, her conſtant Accompanying our Saviour, and diligent Attendance upon him; and might conceive ſome Hopes of her Son's future Exaltation, from the pompous Name, which our Lord had given them, and the great Privilege to which he had admitted them (but excluded others) of attending him in his Privacies. Whitby's Annotations, and Stanhope, on the Epiſtles and Goſpels, Vol. IV.

[*] It was anciently the Cuſtom, at great Entertainments, for the Governor of the Feaſt to appoint to each of his Gueſts the Kind and Proportion of Wine, they were to drink, and what he had thus appointed them, it was thought a Breach of good Manners, either to refuſe, or not drink up. Hence a Man's Cup, both in ſacred and profane Authors, came to ſignify the Portion, whether of Good or Evil, which befals him in this World. Homer introduces Achilles, thus comforting Priamus for the Loſs of his Son:

> Δοιοὶ γάρ τε πίθοι κατακείαται ἐν Διὸς οὔδει
> Δώρων οἷα δίδωσι, κακῶν, ἕτερος δὲ ἑάων

Not unlike what we meet within the Pſalmiſt, In the Hand of the Lord there is a Cup, and the Wine is red; it is full mixed, and he poureth out of the ſame: As for the Dregs thereof, all the Ungodly of the Earth ſhall drink them out, Pſal. lxxv. 9, 10. And, what our Saviour means by the Expreſſion, we cannot be to ſeek, ſince, in two remarkable Paſſages, Luke xxii. 42. and John xviii. 11. he has been his own Interpreter; for Lethale poculum bibere, or to taſte of Death, was a common Phraſe among the Jews, and from them we have Reaſon to believe that our Lord borrow'd it. Stanhope, on the Epiſtles and Goſpels, Vol. IV. and Whitby's Annotations.

[†] This Prediction was literally fulfilled in St James, who was put to Death by Herod, and ſo, in the higheſt Senſe of the Words, was made to drink of our Lord's Cup; and, tho' St John was not brought to ſuffer Martyrdom, yet his being ſcourged and impriſoned by the Council at Jeruſalem, Acts v. 18, 40. put into a Cauldron of burning Oil at Epheſus, Euſeb. lib. iii. c. 18. and baniſh'd into Patmos for the Word of God, and for the Teſtimony of Jeſus Chriſt, Rev. i. 9. may well be the Indignation of the other ten Apoſtles, he declar'd to them all, that his Kingdom [†] was far different from thoſe of this World, whoſe Princes and Governors ſtrove to exerciſe their utmoſt Power and Dominion over their Subjects; whereas whoever expected to be great and chief among his Followers, muſt be a Servant to the reſt, according to his own Example, who came, not to take State upon him, but to ſerve others, and even to lay down his Life for their Redemption.

Matth. xx. 29. Mark x. 46. Luke xviii. 35. As he drew near to Jericho, attended with a numerous Company, one Bartimeus, who had long ſat by the Way-Side begging, hearing the Noiſe of a vaſt Crowd of People paſſing by, and being inform'd, that Jeſus of Nazareth was among them, (with [†] another blind Man, who begg'd along with him) called aloud upon Jeſus to have Mercy upon him. The People, who accompany'd our Lord, ſuppoſing that the Man aſk'd an Alms, bad him ceaſe his Noiſe; but the Benefit, which he deſir'd, was of greater Moment, and therefore he rais'd his Voice, and, with more Importunity, cry'd, Thou Son of David, have Mercy upon me! Which when our Lord perceiv'd, he commanded both him and his Companion to be brought before him; and, upon their declaring what Favour they expected, he touch'd their Eyes, and immediately they receiv'd their Sight, and follow'd him, glorifying God, as indeed all the Company did, who had been Eye-Witneſſes of this Miracle.

Luke xix. 1. As our Lord was paſſing thro' Jericho, a certain Man, nam'd Zaccheus, of great Wealth and Figure among the Publicans, was not a little deſirous to ſee him; but, as he was a Man of a low Stature, and could not gratify his Curioſity in the Crowd, he ran before, and climb'd up into a Sycamore Tree, where he could not fail of having a full View of him. When our Saviour came near the Place, he called ſuppos'd to be ſome Part of that bitter Cup, which our Saviour drank, and that he, who underwent ſuch Torments, as nothing but a Miracle could deliver him from, may, with very great Juſtice, be eſteem'd a Martyr. Stanhope, on the Epiſtles and Goſpels, Vol. IV.

[†] The Words in the Text are,——The Princes of the Gentiles exerciſe Dominion over them, and they, that are great, exerciſe Authority upon them; but it ſhall not be ſo among you: But, whoſoever will be great among you, let him be your MINISTER, Matth. xx. 25, 26. and from hence ſome have inferr'd, that our Saviour forbids them, who will be his Diſciples, or the Subjects of his Kingdom, the Exerciſe of all Civil and Eccleſiaſtical Dominion. But if it be conſider'd, that Civil Government was, from the Beginning of the World, inſtituted by God (and therefore called his Ordinance, Rom. xiii. 2.) for the Puniſhment of Evil-Doers, and for the Defence of thoſe that do well; that Chriſtianity, when it came into the World, made no Alteration in Things of this Nature, but left the Magiſtrate, after his Converſion, ſtill bearing the Sword, in the ſame Manner as he did before; and that the Exerciſe of his Power is a Thing ſo ſacred, as to intitle, not only Princes, but even their deputed Miniſters of Juſtice, to the Stile of Gods in Scripture; it muſt needs be allow'd, that what is reputed ſo honourable, and found ſo beneficial, ſo ſtrict a Bond of human Virtue, and ſo firm a Guard againſt all Kinds of Wickedneſs, can never be forbidden in any Chriſtian Commonwealth. And, in like Manner, ſince among the Gifts, diſtributed for the Uſe of the Church, we read of Governments, 1 Cor. xii. 28. and find Mention made of thoſe, who are ſet over us in the Lord, 1 Theſſ. v. 12. to whom we muſt yield Obedience, and ſubmit ourſelves, Heb. xiii. 7, 17. ſince we find that the Apoſtles had the Rod, 1 Cor. iv. 21. and Power given of the Lord, to deliver to Satan, 1 Cor. v. 5. and to revenge all Diſobedience, 2 Cor. x. 6. and ſince, in the Nature of the Thing, it is every Whit as impoſſible for a Church to ſubſiſt without Eccleſiaſtical Government, as it is for a State without Civil, it muſt needs follow, that the one is as neceſſary, and of Divine Inſtitution, as much as the other. All therefore that our Saviour can be preſum'd to forbid in theſe Words, is ſuch a Dominion, whether in Church or State, as is attended with Tyranny, Oppreſſion, and a Contempt of the Subjects, that live under it. Such, for the moſt Part, was the Government, that obtain'd in Eaſtern Countries; and therefore, in Contrapoſition to this, our ſpiritual Rulers are put in Mind, that they feed the Flock, which is among them, taking the Overſight thereof, not for filthy Lucre, but of a ready Mind, neither as being Lords of God's Inheritance, but Enſamples to the Flock, 1 Pet. v. 2, 3. that their higheſt Station in the Church is not ſo much a Place of Dignity, as a Charge, and Office, which ſubjects them to the Wants and Neceſſities of thoſe, they rule over; and that the moſt honourable Poſt, they can have in Chriſt's Kingdom, is only a larger Miniſtry, and Attendance upon others; for, Who is Paul? Who is Apollos? But Miniſters by whom ye believed, 1 Cor. iii. 4. For we preach not ourſelves, (ſays the Apoſtle to the Corinthians) but Chriſt Jeſus the Lord, and ourſelves your Servants for Jeſus's Sake. 2 Cor. iv. 5. Whitby's and Beauſobre's Annotations.

[†] St Mark and St Luke both make mention only of one blind Man, the Son of Timeus, upon this Occaſion; but this they doubtleſs did, becauſe he was better known than the other, and bore the greater Part in this Tranſaction. Beauſobre's Annotations.

called him by his Name, and bad him come down, becauſe he intended to be his Gueſt that Day: Whereupon Zaccheus receiv'd him with the greateſt Expreſſions of Joy and Reſpect, whilſt others could not forbear reflecting upon him, for entering the Houſe of a Man of ſo ſcandalous a Profeſſion. But, notwithſtanding all their Cenſures, our Saviour, who, for the Intuition of his Heart, as well as his own Declaration, knew him to be a juſt and charitable Man, pronounc'd him, and his Family, in a State of Salvation, and that he, tho' a Publican, and an Alien to the Commonwealth of Iſrael, was nevertheleſs one of thoſe, to whom the Promiſes [†] made unto Abraham did belong.

Matth. xxv. 14. Luke xix. 12.

The nearer they came to Jeruſalem, the more the Diſciples began to think, that their Maſter had taken that Journey to the Paſſover, on Purpoſe to ſeat himſelf upon his Throne, and aſſume his regal Authority; and therefore, to cure their Minds of all ſuch Thoughts, he propounded a Parable [†] to them, "of a certain "great Man, born Heir to a Kingdom, "and going into a far Country to take "poſſeſſion of it; but before he departed, "calling his Servants together, and giving "each a Sum of Money to trade withal, "until he ſhould return. The Reaſon of "his Journey to this foreign Land was, "becauſe his own Countrymen over "whom he had a Right to reign, were "obſtinately ſet againſt him, and diſclaim'd him for their King: When "therefore he had obtain'd his new Kingdom, and was return'd home, he firſt "called his Servants, with whom he had "intruſted his Money, to an Account, "rewarding the Diligent with Gifts proportionate

From Matth. xii. 1. Mark ii. 23. Luke vi. 1. John v. 1. to Matth. xvii. 14. Mark ix 14. Luke ix. 37. John vii. 1.

[†] Whether Zaccheus was a Jew or Gentile, our Commentators are not agreed. The Majority of them account him a Jew; but the Words of our Bleſſed Saviour, This Day Salvation is come to this Houſe, foraſmuch as he alſo is the Son of Abraham, Luke xix. 9, do very much incline us to think the contrary. Abraham believed, we are told, and it was imputed to him for Righteouſneſs, Rom. iv. 22. And therefore Zaccheus is here called his Son, becauſe he readily believ'd in the Divine Miſſion of our Saviour Chriſt: For the Seed of Abraham was not that only which is of the Law, but that alſo, which is of the Faith of Abraham, who is the Father of us all, Rom. iv. 16. 'Tis not to be doubted therefore, but that this Day, in Purſuance of our Lord's Declaration, Zaccheus was fully converted to the Chriſtian Faith, but whether he was afterwards ordain'd by St Peter to be Biſhop of Cæſarea in Paleſtine, is not ſo very clear from Church-Hiſtory, but that they, who advance this Notion, may be ſuppos'd to have confounded him with another Zaccheus Biſhop of that Church, who liv'd in the ſecond Century. Calmet's Commentary.

[†] This Parable, we may obſerve, conſiſts of two Parts. The former of which is contain'd in Luke xix. 12, 14, 15, to 27. and relates to the rebellious Subjects of this Prince, who went into a far Country to receive a Kingdom; the latter is included in the 13th, 15th, and ſo on to the 27th Verſe, and relates to this Prince's Servants, to whom he had committed his Money for them to improve in his Abſence; and the Explication of the whole is generally ſuppos'd to be this, ——— The Nobleman, or Prince here, is our Lord himſelf, the eternal Son of God; his going into a far Country to receive a Kingdom, is his Aſcenſion into Heaven, to ſit down at the Right-Hand of the Divine Majeſty and take poſſeſſion of his mediatorial Kingdom; his Servants may be either his Apoſtles and Diſciples, who, upon his Return, were to give an Account of the Progreſs of his Goſpel, or Chriſtians in general, who, for every Talent, whether natural or acquir'd, are accountable. His Citizens are, queſtionleſs, the Jews, who not only rejected him with Scorn, but put him to an ignominious Death; and his Return is the Day of his fierce Wrath, and Vengeance upon the Jewiſh Nation, which came upon them, about forty Years after this Time, and was indeed ſo very terrible, as to be a Kind of Emblem and Repreſentation of that great Day of Accounts, when he will render to every one according to his Works. It is obſerv'd however, by ſome Commentators farther, that our Lord took the Riſe of this Parable from the Cuſtom of the Kings of Judea, (ſuch as Herod the Great, and Archelaüs his Son) who uſually went to Rome to receive their Kingdom from Cæſar, without whoſe Permiſſion and Appointment they durſt not take the Government into their Hands. In the Caſe of Archelaüs indeed, the Reſemblance is ſo great, that almoſt every Circumſtance of the Parable concurs in him. He was this εὐγενὴς, or Man of great Parentage, as being the Son of Herod the Great. He was oblig'd to go into a far Country, i. e. to Rome, to receive his Kingdom of the Emperor Auguſtus. The Jews, who hated him becauſe of his cruel and tyrannical Reign, ſent their Meſſengers after him, deſiring to be freed from the Yoke of Kings, and reduc'd to a Province of Rome. Their Complaint however was not heard: He was confirm'd in the Kingdom of Judea; and, when he return'd home, tyranniz'd for ten Years over thoſe, that would have ſhook off his Dominion: But then there is this remarkable Difference between his Caſe, and That in the Parable, that the Jews, upon their ſecond Complaint to Cæſar, prevailed againſt him, and procur'd his Baniſhment to Vienna. Calmet's Commentary, Beauſobre's, and Whitby's Annotations.

John xi. 17. He raiſes Lazarus from the Dead, which brought the Sanhedrim to a Reſolution to cut him off.

By the Time that our Lord arriv'd at Bethany, Lazarus had now been four Days dead † and bury'd; and ſeveral Friends and others, from Jeruſalem, were come to condole † with the two Siſters, Martha and Mary, for the Loſs of their Brother. Upon the firſt News of our Lord's Approach, the two Siſters, attended with ſome of the Company that was in the Houſe, went out to meet him; and, pouring out a Flood of Tears for the Loſs of their dear Brother, fell proſtrate at his Feet, and wiſh'd, over and over again, that he had come a little ſooner; for then they were certain, that he would not have dy'd. The Sight of their Tears and Sorrows, accompany'd with the Lamentations of their Followers, affected the Son of God ſo, that he groan'd within himſelf; and then demanding where they had laid the Body †, he follow'd them to the Place, ſympathizing with their Sorrow, and weeping as well as they, which made ſome of the Company remark, how well he lov'd him, and others wonder why he did not prevent his Death †. When he was come to the Grave †, and had order'd the Stone to be remov'd from it, (after a ſhort Addreſs of Adoration and Thankſgiving to his Father,

† It was cuſtomary among the Jews (as Dr Lightfoot tells us from Maimonides and others) to go to the Sepulchres of their deceas'd Friends, and viſit them for three Days; for ſo long they ſuppos'd that their Spirits hover'd about them: But when once they perceiv'd that their Viſage began to change, as it would in three Days in theſe Countries, all Hopes of a Return to Life were then at an End. After a Revolution of Humours, which, in ſeventy-two Hours, is compleated, their Bodies tend naturally to Putrifaction, and therefore Martha had Reaſon to ſay, that her Brother's Body (which appears by the Context to have been laid in the Sepulchre, the ſame Day that he dy'd) would now, in the fourth Day, begin to ſtink. Whitby's and Hammond's Annotations.

† The Time of mourning for departed Friends was anciently, among the Jews, of longer Continuance. For Jacob they mourn'd forty Days, Gen. l. 3. and for Aaron and Moſes thirty, Numb. xx. 29. and Deut. xxxiv. 8. For Perſons of an inferior Quality, the Days, very probably, were fewer, but ſome they had for all, and the general Term, both among the Jews and Gentiles, was ſeven; for ſo Ovid brings in Orpheus lamenting the Death of his Wife:

> - - - - - - - - - - - - Septem tamen ille diebus
> Squalidus in ripâ, Cereris ſine munere, ſedit:
> Cura, dolorque animi, lacrymæque, alimenta fuêre. Metam. lib. x.

An Expreſſion not unlike That in the Royal Pſalmiſt, ——— My Tears have been my Meat Day and Night, Pſalm xlii. 3. During this Time, their Neighbours and Friends came to viſit them, and to alleviate their Sorrows with the beſt Arguments they could. They pray with them; they read with them the xlixth Pſalm: Pray for the Soul of the Dead, and diſtribute their Comforts in Proportion to their Loſs; but No-body open'd his Mouth until the afflicted Perſon had firſt ſpoke, becauſe Job's three Friends, who came to comfort him, we find did the ſame, Job ii. 13. All which Ceremonies made the Concourſe to Martha's Houſe, at this Time, the greater, and gave more Jews an Opportunity to be the Eye-witneſſes of her Brother's Reſurrection. Pool's and Beauſobre's Annotations, and Baſnage's Hiſtory of the Jews, lib. v. c. 23.

† This our Saviour could not but know, who knew all Things, even the Secrets of Mens Hearts; yet he thought proper thus to aſk, that, being conducted by them to the Sepulchre, there might be no Reſemblance of any Fraud or Confederacy. Whitby's Annotations.

† The Words in the Text are, ——— Some of them ſaid, could not this Man, who opened the Eyes of the Blind, have cauſed, that even this Man ſhould not have died? John xi. 37. which ſome imagine were ſpoken, only in Admiration, that having given Sight to a blind Man, that was a mere Stranger to him, he did not cure his ſick Friend: But others conceive a vile Sarcaſm in the Words, as if they went about to weaken his Reputation, in a Miracle wherein he had manifeſtly ſhewn his Divine Power, becauſe he did not preſerve his Friend from dying. Pool's Annotations.

† The common Form of a Burial-Place, among the ancient Jews, was a Vault, hewn out of a Rock, ſix Cubits long, and four broad, in which eight other little Cells, or Niches (or, as ſome ſay, thirteen) were uſually made, as ſo many diſtinct Receptacles for the Bodies, that were to be laid in them. The Mouth, or Entrance, of this Vault was clos'd with a large Stone, which, whenever they bury'd any, was remov'd; and our Saviour here order'd the Removal of That which lay upon Lazarus, to make the Miracle appear more evident, becauſe it would have look'd more like an Apparition, than a Reſurrection, had Lazarus came forth, when the Door of his Sepulchre was ſo firmly ſhut. Goodwin's Jewiſh Antiquities, and Pool's Annotations.

Father †, for his continual Readineſs to hear him) he cry'd with a loud Voice, Lazarus, come forth; whereupon he, that was dead, immediately aroſe from his Bed of Darkneſs, and in ſuch ſound Health, that, when his grave Cloaths were unloos'd, he was able to walk along with them to Bethany.

John xi. 45.

THIS great and apparent Miracle caus'd the utmoſt Surprize and Aſtoniſhment among all the Spectators, and the greateſt Part of them was, from that Time, convinc'd, and believ'd on him; but others, more obſtinate, went, and reported the Thing to the Phariſees at Jeruſalem, who thereupon called together their Sanhedrim, where, after ſome ſolemn Debate, it was concluded, “ That, whether the Man “ was a Prophet ſent from God, or not, “ for Fear of giving any Umbrage to the “ Roman Powers †, it was highly expedi-“ ent that he ſhould die, rather than that “ the whole Nation, for his Sake, ſhould “ incur the Danger of being ruin'd:” And, from that Time, they enter'd into a Combination to have him apprehended, and put to Death; but, as his Hour was not yet come, at preſent he declin'd their Fury by retreating from the Publick, and retiring to a little Place, called Ephraim †, in the Tribe of Benjamin, where he continu'd, for a few Days, with his Apoſtles, until the Time of the Paſſover was approaching.

John xii. 2. He ſups at Bethany with Lazarus, where Mary anoints him with Spikenard, at which Judas repines, but he vindicates her.

SIX Days before that ſolemn Feaſt began, our Lord, in his Way to Jeruſalem, called at Bethany, where he was kindly entertain'd at Supper † by the two Siſters of Lazarus, Martha, and Mary. Martha, according to her Cuſtom, dreſs'd the Supper, but Lazarus, whom he had rais'd, was one of the Company, that ſat at Table with him, while Mary, to expreſs her Love and Bounty, took a Vial of the moſt valueable

† As our Bleſſed Saviour, in Virtue of his Union with God the Father, had naturally, and in himſelf, a Power of working Miracles, there was no Need for his addreſſing himſelf to Heaven every Time that he did any: However, upon this and ſome other Occaſions, we find him praying to God, under the Title of his Father, that all the Company might know, that what he did was by a divine, not diabolical Power, and that God, in granting his Petition, acknowledg'd him to be his Son. Beauſobre's Annotations.

† The Jews, ſeeing the Miracles, which Jeſus did, (this eſpecially of raiſing Lazarus) did greatly fear, leſt, taking upon him the publick Character of the Meſſiah, he would attempt to make himſelf King, and by the Admiration, which he had gained among the People, be quickly enabled to accompliſh his Ends, unleſs he was timely prevented. If then he was permitted to go on in his Pretenſions, the Conſequence ſeem'd viſible to them, that the Romans, to whom they were already ſubject, would look upon this as a Rebellion, and ſo be provok'd to come with an Army, and deſtroy them utterly. That this was their Fear, is evident from the many groundleſs Objections, which they made againſt our Saviour, as that, He forbad to give Tribute to Cæſar, and that he made himſelf a King, and ſo oppos'd the Title of Tiberius. Not that they deſir'd the Continuance of Cæſar's Dominion over them, but the Apprehenſion of a ſtill farther Conqueſt from the Romans made them unwilling to provoke them, and that more eſpecially, becauſe they had an ancient Tradition, that one Armolus, (which is, by an eaſy Change, Romulus) before the End of the World, would come, and deſtroy them. This ſeems to be but the Depravation of ſome Prophecy from God, which foretold the Coming of the Romans, in the laſt Days (meaning thereby the Days of the Meſſiah) to deſtroy them. It demonſtrates however, that they both believ'd, and expected, that the Romans were the People, from whom the Change of their Religion and the total Subverſion of their Government were to come, and for this Reaſon they were, upon all Occaſions, ſo very fearful to offend them. But herein they were ſadly miſtaken: For the Prophecy of the Romans coming to deſtroy their Temple and Nation was fulfilled, not by their letting Chriſt alone, or believing in him, but by their thus oppoſing and conſpiring againſt him. Hammond's Annotations.

† Some Interpreters are of Opinion, that this was the ſame Supper, which our Saviour was invited to in the Houſe of Simon the Leper; that St John has related it in its proper Place, as a Thing, which happen'd ſix Days before the Paſſover; but that the other Evangeliſts have mention'd it, by Way of Recapitulation, to ſhew what might be the probable Occaſion of Judas's Treachery, even his Vexation for being diſappointed of the Money, that might have been made of this precious Ointment, had it been ſold, and put in the Bag for him to purloin. But others ſuppoſe, that this Supper was different from That, which is mention'd, Matth. xxvi. 6. and Mark xiv. 3. 1ſt, Becauſe this was in the Houſe of Lazarus, John xii. 2. that, in the Houſe of Simon the Leper, Matth. xxvi. 6. 2dly, Here Mary anoints the Feet of Chriſt, John xii. 3. there a Woman not nam'd pours Ointment on his Head, Matth. xxvi. 7. 3dly, This Supper was ſix Days before the Paſſover, John xii. 1. that, only two, Matth. xxvi. 2. Mark xiv. 1; and, if the Suppers were not the ſame, the Mary that anointed Chriſt's Feet here, and the Woman that anointed his Head there, were not the ſame. Calmet's Commentary, Beauſobre's and Whitby's Annotations.

While they were ſitting at this Supper, great Numbers of Jews, out of Curioſity, came to Bethany, not only to have a Sight of Jeſus, but of Lazarus likewiſe, whom he had rais'd from the Dead; but, when the Sanhedrim underſtood that the Reſurrection of Lazarus occaſion'd many People to believe on Jeſus †, they conſulted how to deſtroy him likewiſe.

The Indian Nard (if it be right) muſt be of a yellowiſh Colour, inclining towards Purple, with long Spikes, and the Briſtles of its Spikes large and odoriferous. Of the Blade, or Spike of this Nard, the Ancients were us'd to make a Perſume of great Eſteem, and, when genuine, very precious. Pliny tells us, [Nat. Hiſt. lib. xii.] there were nine ſeveral Herbs, which imitated Nard, and that the great Price, it carry'd, tempted many to adulterate it; but, where it was found pure and unſophiſticated, there it obtain'd the Name of Nardus piſtica, which is the Epithet, that occurs in Mark xiv. 3. and John xii. 3. unleſs, as ſome think, it may be a Miſtake in the Copiers for Spicata. Calmet's Dictionary, under the Word, and Whitby's and Hammond's Annotations on Mark xiv. 3.

† As the Roman Penny was ſeven Pence half-penny of our Money, ſo Three hundred Pence muſt amount to nine Pounds ſeven Shillings and Six-pence.

† It was a Cuſtom, in theſe Eaſtern Countries, for Kings and great Perſons, to have their Bodies, at their Funerals, embalm'd with Odours, and ſweet Perfumes; and, in Alluſion hereunto, our Saviour here declares of Mary, that ſhe, to teſtify her Faith in him, as her King and Lord, had, as it were before-hand, embalm'd his Body with precious Ointment for his Burial.

† Never was there Rage and Malice more unreaſonable than this: for admitted that Chriſt had broke the Sabbath, and ſpoken Blaſphemy, yet what had Lazarus done? No Crime was ever alledg'd againſt him; and yet theſe Rulers of the People conſpire to put him to Death, merely to preſerve their own Honour and Reputation. But ſee the Providence of God, which, notwithſtanding all their Contrivances, was pleas'd to preſerve him as a Monument of his Glory, and a Teſtimony of the Miracle, which Jeſus perform'd on him, thirty Years after our Saviour's Death. Pool's and Whitby's Annotations, and Taylor's Life of Chriſt.

† Bethphage ſignifies the Houſe of Figs, or Dates, and might, very probably, have its Name from the ſeveral Trees of theſe Kinds that grew there. It was a ſmall Village of the Prieſts, ſituate in Mount Olivet, and, as it ſeems, ſomewhat nearer Jeruſalem than Bethany. Beauſobre's Annotations, and Wells's Geography of the New Teſtament.

† This Place, doubtleſs, had its Name from the great Number of Olive-Trees, that grew upon it. It lay a little without Jeruſalem, on the Eaſt Side of it, about five Furlongs from the City, ſays Joſephus; but he muſt be underſtood of the very neareſt Part of it, ſince St Luke makes the Diſtance to be a Sabbath-Day's Journey, i. e. eight Furlongs or a Mile, unleſs we ſuppoſe, that he means the Summit of the Hill, from which our Saviour aſcended, Acts i. 12. Mr. Maundrell tells us, that he, and his Company, going out of Jeruſalem at St Stephen's Gate, and croſſing the Valley of Jehoſaphat, began immediately to aſcend the Mountain; that, being got above two Thirds of the Way up, they came to certain Grottos, cut with intricate Windings and Caverns under Ground, which were called the Sepulchres of the Prophets; that a little higher up were twelve arch'd Vaults, under Ground, ſtanding Side by Side, and built in Memory of the Apoſtles, who are ſaid to have compiled their Creed in this Place; that, ſixty Paces higher, they came to the Place, where Chriſt is ſaid to have utter'd his Prophecy concerning the final Deſtruction of Jeruſalem; and, a little on the Right-Hand, to another, where he is ſaid to have dictated, a ſecond Time, the Lord's Prayer to his Diſciples; that, ſomewhat higher, is the Cave of a Saint, called Pelagia; a little above that, a Pillar, denoting the Place, where an Angel gave the Bleſſed Virgin three Days Warning of her Death; and, at the Top of all, the Place of our Bleſſed Lord's Aſcenſion. Wells's Geography of the New Teſtament.

* It is well remark'd by Grotius, that ſuch Animals, as were never employ'd in the Service of Men, were wont to be choſen for ſacred Purpoſes, inſomuch, that the very Heathens thought thoſe Things and Sacrifices moſt proper for the Service of their Gods, which had never been put to profane Uſes. Thus the Philiſtines return'd the Ark, in a new Cart, drawn by Heifers, that had never before undergone the Yoke, 1 Sam. vi. 7. and thus Apollo's Prieſt admoniſh'd Æneas:

> Nunc grege de intacto ſeptem mactare juvencos
> Præſtiterit, - Æn. vi.

But the chief Deſign, that our Saviour might have, in the Orders, which he gave his Diſciples, was, that the Prophecy might, by this Means, receive its full Completion: Tell ye the Daughter of Sion, behold thy King cometh unto thee, meek, and ſitting upon an Aſs, and a Colt, the Fole of an Aſs. The former Part of the Verſe is taken from Iſa. lxii. 11. and the latter, from Zech. ix. 9. Both by the Jews are acknowledged to relate to the Meſſiah, and, with Regard to the latter, R. Joſeph was wont to ſay, May the Meſſiah come, and may I be worthy to ſit under the Shadow of the Tail of his Aſs! Whitby's Annotations, and Surenhuſii Concil. in Loc. ex. V. T. apud Matthæum.

(b) Iſa. lxii. 11. Zech. ix. 9.

|| A great Conteſt there is among learned Men, whether our Lord rode upon the Aſs, or the Colt, or on both alternately. Thoſe, who contend for his riding upon both, obſerve from the Words of the Prophet Zechariah, Chap. ix. 9. that Mention is made of riding both upon an Aſs, and a Colt, the Fole of an Aſs; and from St Matthew, Chap. xxi. 7, they obſerve farther, that the Diſciples, having brought the Aſs, and the Colt, which our Saviour had ſent them for, put on them their Clothes, and ſet him thereon. Since therefore the Relation of St Matthew thus literally agrees with the Prophecy of Zechariah, and both expreſsly aſſert, that our Saviour did ride upon the Aſs, as well as the Colt, they ſee no Reaſon, why theſe Texts ſhould not be taken in their moſt plain and obvious Meaning, and do thence infer, that, for the more exact Fulfilling of the Prophecy, our Saviour did actually ride, Part of the Way upon the one, and the remaining Part upon the other. The Generality of Interpreters however are againſt this. They ſuppoſe that, as there was no Occaſion for our Saviour's riding upon both in ſo ſhort a Journey, and as the other three Evangeliſts only make mention of the Colt, there ſeems to be a Neceſſity for admitting of the Figure, called Enallage Numeri, in this Place; and that, as when we read, that the Ark reſted upon the Mountains of Ararat, Gen. viii. 4, we underſtand only upon one of them; ſo here, when St Matthew tells us, that the Diſciples brought the Aſs, and the Colt, and put their Clothes on them, by ἐπάνω αὐτῶν, he muſt neceſſarily mean ἐπάνω ἑνὸς αὐτῶν, upon one of them, i. e. the Colt, as the Words of the Prophecy itſelf will fairly bear: Nor was there any other Reaſon, for bringing the Mother along with it, but that Foles will not uſually go without their Dams. Wells's Geography of the New Teſtament, Part i. and Surenhuſii Concil. in Loca ex V. T. apud Matthæum.

† Very remarkable is our Saviour's Preſcience, even as to the moſt minute Matters, in the Orders, which he gives his Diſciples, viz. 1. You ſhall find a Colt; 2. On which no Man ever ſat; 3. Bound with his Mother; 4. In Bivio, or where two Ways meet; 5. As you enter into the Village; 6. The Owners of which will, at firſt, ſeem unwilling that you ſhould unbind him; 7. But when they hear, that I have Need of him, they will let him go. And no leſs remarkable is the chearful Obedience of theſe Diſciples to a Command, which carnal Reaſoning might have ſtarted many Objections againſt, and which nothing leſs than a ſtedfaſt Perſuaſion, that he, who ſent the Meſſage, would be ſure to give Succeſs to it, could have prevailed upon them to execute, as they did without any Demur, or Delay. Whitby's Annotations, and Stanhope, on the Epiſtles and Goſpels, Vol. I.

† At the Feaſt of Tabernacles, it was a Cuſtom among the Jews, not only to ſing Hoſannas with the greateſt Joy, but alſo to carry Palm-Branches in their Hands, Lev. xxiii. 40. and to deſire, (as the Jews ſtill wiſh at the Celebration of this Feaſt) that they may rejoice in this Manner, at the Coming of the Meſſiah. Nor was it only at this Feſtival, but upon any other Occaſion of ſolemn Rejoicings, that the Jews made uſe of this Ceremony: For ſo we find, that, upon the Enemies evacuating the Tower of Jeruſalem, Simon, and his Men, entered into it, with Thankſgiving, and Branches of Palm-Trees, and with Harps, and Cymbals, and with Viols, and Hymns, and Songs, 1 Maccab. xiii. 51. Nay, the very ſame Manner of expreſſing their Joy prevailed among other Nations, as well as the Jews; for ſo Herodotus relates, that they, who went before Xerxes, as he paſs'd over the Helleſpont, ſtrowed the Way with Myrtle-Branches: And therefore we need leſs wonder, that we find ſuch of the Company, as were by our Bleſſed Saviour's Miracles convinc'd of his being their King, and the promis'd Meſſiah, teſtifying their Joy upon this his Inauguration into his Kingdom, in ſuch a Manner as they, as well as other Nations upon ſuch joyful Occaſions, were accuſtom'd to. Whitby's Annotations, and Surenhuſii Concil. ex V. Luke xix. 37. In this triumphant Manner they advanc'd, till they came to the Deſcent of Mount [†] Olivet, when the whole Body of Diſciples, being tranſported with the Honours ſhewn to their Maſter, broke out into Raptures of Thankſgivings, and loud Doxologies to God, for all the mighty Works, which they had ſeen; while the whole Body of the People, as well thoſe, that went before, as thoſe, that follow'd after, join'd with the Diſciples in their Hoſannas and Acclamations; ſo that, when ſome Phariſees, being envious of his Glory, deſir'd him to command their Silence, if they ſhould be ſilent, he told them, [†] the very Stones would proclaim his Praiſe.

But, notwithſtanding all this glorious Proceſſion, as he advanc'd nearer to Jeruſalem, ſo as to have a full View of the City and Temple, he paus'd, and look'd ſtedfaſtly on the City, and then, with Tears in his Eyes [†], made this Lamentation over it: Oh! that thou hadſt known, at leaſt in this thy appointed Day, the Things conducing to thy Peace; but now, alas! they are hidden from thine Eyes. For the fatal Time ſhall come, when thy Enemies [*] ſhall throw up Trenches about thee, hem thee in on every Side, deſtroy thy Children,

[*] It was a common Practice among the People of the Eaſt, upon the Approach of their Kings and Princes, to ſpread their Veſtments upon the Ground, for them to tread, or ride over. In Conformity to which Cuſtom, we find the Captains, when they proclaim'd Jehu King, putting their Garments under him, 2 Kings ix. 13. and Plutarch relating, that, when Cato left his Soldiers, to return to Rome, they ſpread their Clothes in the Way, which was an Honour (as he obſerves) then done to few Emperors. But the Jews, that accompany'd our Saviour at this Time, look'd upon him, as greater than any Emperor; as a Prince, that was come to reſcue them from the Roman Yoke, and reduce all Nations under their Subjection; and therefore, in this Manner they choſe to teſtify their Homage and Veneration of their univerſal Monarch, making now a publick Entry into his Capital of Jeruſalem. Whitby's Annotations.

[†] Hoſanna, or rather Hoſa-na, is an Hebrew Word, which ſignifies, Save, I beſeech thee, and was a common Acclamation, which the Jews us'd in their Feaſt of Tabernacles, not only in Remembrance of their paſt Deliverance from Egypt, but in Hopes likewiſe of a future one, by the Coming of the Meſſiah. Now the Reaſon, why the Acclamations, upon this Occaſion, ran rather in theſe Words, than in the common Form of Long live the King, or the like, was, becauſe, in the Character, which the Prophet gives of the Meſſiah, he is called a Saviour, or one bringing Salvation to them, Zech. ix. 9. And therefore, to ſhew the Excellency of this, above all other Kings, the People addreſs him in Words, taken from the Pſalmiſt, Help us now, O Lord, ſend us now Proſperity, Pſal. cxviii. 25. But becauſe Hoſanna is likewiſe a Form of Bleſſing, and, in the Inauguration of Princes, People are always pleas'd with the rightful Succeſſion; therefore they adjoin Hoſanna to the Son of David, i. e. the Lord proſper, and heap Favours and Bleſſings upon him. Now, becauſe God had promis'd the Jewiſh Nation a King deſcended from that Royal Line, therefore they continue their good Wiſhes, Bleſſed is he, that cometh in the Name of the Lord; and becauſe again it is natural for Men, in ſuch Tranſports, to reiterate their joyful Acclamations, even as if they deſir'd to make them reach Heaven, as well as Earth, therefore it is added, Hoſanna in the Higheſt. Hammond's and Beauſobre's Annotations, and Surenhuſii Concil. ex V. T. apud Matthæum.

[†] Between this Mount and the City of Jeruſalem, there lay nothing, but only the Valley of Jehoſaphat, thro' which ran the Brook Kedron. Calmet's Commentary.

[†] This is a proverbial Expreſſion, and ſignifies no more, than that God was determin'd to glorify our Saviour that Day, and therefore, if theſe his Followers ſhould be prevailed upon to hold their Peace, and ſay nothing in his Praiſe, God would find out ſome other Means (tho' not ſo competent perhaps) to make it effectually be known. Beauſobre's and Whitby's Annotations.

[†] The Tears, which our Saviour ſhed upon this Occaſion, were ſuch as proceeded from a profound Charity, and deep Commiſeration of the Evils, that were coming upon Jeruſalem, in both which Virtues he came to be an Example to us, and therefore his Behaviour in this Reſpect could not be unworthy of himſelf. They farther ſhew, that the Calamities, which befel that impious City, might have been avoided, had they made a right Uſe of the Time of their Viſitation; otherwiſe, his Tears may rather be look'd upon as the Tears of a Crocodile, than thoſe of true Charity and Commiſeration. Whitby's Annotations.

[*] How exactly this Prediction was fulfilled by the Romans, we may learn by the Jewiſh Hiſtorian, who not only tells us, that, in this very Mount Olivet, where our Lord ſpake theſe Words, the Romans firſt pitch'd their Tents, when they came to the final Overthrow of Jeruſalem; but that, when Veſpaſian began the Siege of it, he encompaſs'd the City round about, and kept them in on every Side; that to this Purpoſe (how impracticable ſoever the

The Objection.

“And a ſtrange Viſitation, no doubt, it was, when the great and long expected King of the Jews made his ſolemn Entry into the Capital of his Dominions, in ſo inglorious and abſurd a Manner. Had he been carry'd indeed in a triumphal Chariot, with the Nobles of the Nation attending him, and Heralds before proclaiming his great and wonderful Acts; nay, had he been but mounted upon a tolerable Horſe, with a little riding Furniture to ſet him off, and a Company of honeſt Yeomen, each on his own Steed, to make up the Cavalcade, ſomething then might have been ſaid to the Matter: But, to repreſent him riding upon an Aſs, the moſt contemptible of all Creatures, without either Bridle or Saddle, and nothing, but an old Coat or two thruſt under him; without one Perſon of Figure in his Retinue, and nothing, but a noiſy Rabble, running before, and bauling out, Hey for our King, for our King for ever; this is making ſuch a Farce of the whole Matter, and ſetting our Saviour out in ſo ridiculous a Dreſs, as badly comports with the Gravity of his Behaviour upon all other Occaſions. Well might the Town be in an Uproar, to ſee a King inaugurated in this mock Manner; and well might the Mob, when the Ferment of their Joy was over, reflect on what they had done, and turn their Hoſannas into crucify him: But, what Colour of Excuſe can we make for the Four Evangeliſts, who have all related this Part of our Saviour's Hiſtory ſo much to his Diſadvantage, and (c) thence given occaſion to ſuch an Exceſs of profane Wit and Ridicule?

“Well had it been for their Credit, if the three firſt had omitted this Account of our Saviour's Entry, as they have done that of his raiſing up Lazarus from the Dead. In this St John ſtands alone, but not without ſome Suſpicion of the Truth of his Narrative, when he repreſents the very Perſon, whom (in the Beginning of his Goſpel) he extolled ſo gloriouſly, ſinking into a Paſſion, below the Dignity of ſome Heathen Sages, and fooliſhly (d) weeping for the Loſs of a Friend, whom, that very Moment, he was going to reſtore; and when he repreſents his Friend, who was dead, coming forth from his Sepulchre, tho' (e) bound “Hand

* How exactly this was likewiſe fulfilled, the ſame Hiſtorian relates, viz. That Titus, having order'd the Soldiers to lay the City level with the Ground, and to leave nothing ſtanding, but three of the moſt famous Turrets, that overtopp'd the reſt, as Monuments to Poſterity of the Romans Power, and Conduct in taking the Place, his Orders were ſo punctually executed, and all the reſt laid ſo flat, that the Place look'd, as if had never been inhabited. Joſeph. de Bello, lib. vii. c. 18.

“ THESE Circumſtances look a little oddly, and ſeem to impair the Strength of the Miracle; as our Saviour's (f) curing the Man, that was born blind, (another Piece of Hiſtory, wherein St John ſtands alone) by a Kind of whimſical Eye-Salve made of Dirt and Spittle, ſounds not a little romantick, unleſs we may ſuppoſe, (g) that, underhand, he made uſe of a proper Medicine, and had privately in his Mouth ſome ſanative and balſamick Matter, which, diſſolv'd in Spittle, might effect the Cure.

“ THE Truth is, whatever high Commendations may be given of the Goſpel of St John, as an Hiſtory greatly conducive to our Saviour's Honour, and calculated on Purpoſe, as it were, to aſſert the Doctrine of his Divinity, yet it is no ſmall Objection to its Authority, that the whole Account of the Woman taken in Adultery, and brought before him, is ſuppos'd to be a Forgery, and therefore omitted in the beſt Copies; and, if we look into ſome other Paſſages during the ſame Period, we ſhall ſoon perceive, that it falls infinitely ſhort of the orthodox Character, which ſome have given it.

“ FOR, when (according to St John) we find Chriſt declaring, that (h) He was to work the Work of him that ſent him; that (i) the Doctrine, which he taught, was not his own, but His, that ſent him; and that he (k) ſpake not of himſelf, but as his Father had taught him, ſo he ſpake; can we think otherwiſe, than that he acknowledges his Inferiority to the Deity, (l) as ſubject to the Command of another, which the true God can never be; and as receiving his Inſtructions from another, which, had he a Divine, beſides the Human Nature, he muſt have been the prime Author of.

“ THE very Socinians allow, that, in Reſpect of the Commiſſion, which he had from God, the Scriptures might indulge him with a Title extraordinary; and, when (m) the Jews took up Stones to ſtone him, for aſſuming (as they thought) a Co-Equality with God, how is it, that this beloved Apoſtle of his brings him off? Why; by making him acknowledge himſelf to be God, in the ſame Senſe, that Judges and other great Magiſtrates are ſo called, viz. (n) In Virtue of the Divine Authority wherewith they are inveſted.

“ NAY, well it were, if St John were the only ſacred Penman, who ſeems to impair the Truth of Chriſt's Divinity: But, if we look into two other Evangeliſts (o), we ſhall find them, on a very remarkable Occaſion, doing the ſame Thing. For, when the two Sons of Zebedee came and requeſted of our Lord to have a certain Pre-Eminence in his future Kingdom, theſe Writers make him modeſtly decline all Power of conferring ſuch like Honours and Dignities, as the peculiar Prerogative of God alone: (p) To ſit at my Right-Hand, and my Left, is not mine to give; but it ſhall be given to them, of whom it is prepared of my Father: Words, that he never would have ſpoken, ſay the antient Arians, had he not been conſcious of an Inferiority.

“ BUT, even beſides theſe, there are other Difficulties, in the Compaſs of this Part of the Evangelical Hiſtory, that we cannot ſo well account for. But now that the Courſe of his prophetick Office was finiſh'd, and the Time of his leaving the World, and returning to his Father, ſo near at Hand, he thought it not amiſs to accept of their Readineſs to acknowledge and proclaim his Royal Dignity, and himſelf to go up to Jeruſalem in a more publick Manner than uſual, that thereby he might exaſperate his Blood-thirſty Enemies, and ſo draw on his intended Paſſion.

To exaſperate his Enemies indeed, a more pompous Appearance might have been more conducive, and more agreeable to his Regal Dignity; but in this our Saviour was not left to his own Option. Since the Prophet, ſo long before, had preſcrib'd the Form of his Entry into Jeruſalem, as a Characteriſtick of his being the true Meſſiah, there could be no deviating from it, even tho' he could have procur'd his numerous Guards, and triumphal Chariots, ſplendid Attendants, and other Enſigns of Royalty, to adorn the Day of his Inauguration. (x) Rejoice greatly, O Daughter of Zion, ſhout, O Daughter of Jeruſalem, *behold thy King cometh unto thee! The Reaſon of the Prophecy relating to this Matter explain'd.

To this Purpoſe we may obſerve, (with a learned Prelate (y) of our own) that the Law, which God gave to the Kings of Iſrael (whenever there ſhould be any) (z) not to multiply Horſes to themſelves, was founded upon a ſpecial Promiſe, that he would continue to be (as he had all along been) (a) their Defence againſt their Enemies; that this was a Law, wherein every Prince, that was to ſucceed to the Government of Iſrael, was concern'd, and deſign'd for a ſtanding Trial, both of Prince and People, whether they had Truſt and Confidence in God; that, while this Law was obſerv'd, the Troops of Iſrael were victorious, and, tho' few in Number, and ſeemingly unfit for Action, prov'd an Over-Match for Royal Armies; that, when it came to be laid aſide, and Kings, as they declin'd in their Confidence

From Matth. xii. 1. Mark ii. 23. Luke vi. 1. John v. 1. to Matth. xvii. 14. Mark ix. 14. Luke ix. 37. John vii. 1.

Confidence towards God, began to multiply their Horſes and Chariots of War, and ſoon ſunk in their military Succeſſes, till, at length, the whole Land was carry'd away captive: And therefore, (b) Woe unto them, ſays the Prophet, that ſtay on Horſes, and truſt in Chariots, becauſe they are many, and in Horſemen, becauſe they are ſtrong, but look not unto the Holy One of Iſrael, neither ſeek the Lord.

And apply'd.

Now to apply this to the Prophecy before us. Since the Kings of Iſrael were oblig'd to renounce the Aſſiſtance of Horſes and Horſemen, and to depend on God for Succeſs in the Day of Battle; and, ſince thoſe, who did ſo, were their Nation's Deliverers, and thoſe, that did otherwiſe, were Deſtroyers of it; under which of theſe Capacities, think we, ſhould the King, whom God promis'd to the Daughter of Jeruſalem, come? Should he appear (as ſome of the late Kings of Iſrael did) in all the Pomp and Pride of War, ſurrounded with Horſes and Chariots, in direct Oppoſition to the Law of God? Or ſhould he appear, like ſome of the ancient Worthies, (c) who by Faith ſubdued Kingdoms, and out of Weakneſs were made ſtrong? Kings, who fear'd God, and therefore fear'd no Enemy, and who, tho' mounted on Aſſes, were able to put to Flight the Thouſands and Ten Thouſands of Chariots and Horſes, that came againſt them? To reſolve us in this Enquiry, the Prophet himſelf comes into our Aid: For, immediately after his Deſcription of the promis'd King, he adds, (d) and I will cut off the Chariot from Ephraim, and the Horſe from Jeruſalem; plainly ſhewing, that the Character given of the Meſſiah, viz. That he ſhould ride on an Aſs, was in Oppoſition to the Pride of their warlike Kings, who, by their Strength in Chariots and Horſes, had ruin'd themſelves and their People.

An Aſs no improper Creature for our Saviour to ride upon.

Thus neceſſary it was for the promis'd Meſſiah, and for our Saviour, conſequently, who came in that Character, to approach the Daughter of Zion, riding on an Aſs, even tho' it were a Creature more deſpicable than we imagine it. But, after all, it is mere Prejudice, and too fond an Attachment to the Manners and Cuſtoms of our own Country, that make us conceive any Thing contemptible in an Aſs, or any Thing ridiculous, or inconſiſtent with the Gravity and Dignity of our Bleſſed Saviour, in riding upon one. For, (e) if we look into other Countries, particularly into Judea, we ſhall find Perſons of the higheſt Diſtinction uſually ſo mounted. We ſhall find (f) the chief Governours of Iſrael, deſcrib'd in the Song of Deborah, as riding on white Aſſes; and (g) the thirty Sons of Jair, who was Judge and Prince of the Country for two and twenty Years, riding upon as many Aſſes and commanding in thirty Cities. Nay, we ſhall find Abſalom, (tho' in other Reſpects (h) a Man of Pomp) in the very Day of Battle, (i) mounted on a Mule, the Colt of an Aſs, and, on his Coronation-Day, Solomon provided with no better Equipage. And therefore, we can never account it any Reproach, for the meek and humble Jeſus, to ride into Jeruſalem on the Fole of an Aſs, when David, the greateſt of his Anceſtors, and Solomon, the wiſeſt, (as long as he was wiſe) rode in the ſame Manner.

The Perſons that attended him.

(k) The Perſons, who attended him in this Proceſſion, were a mix'd Multitude, conſiſting of Diſciples, and common People, ſuch as were mov'd to do thus, from the Doctrines and Miracles, which they had heard and ſeen, and were forward to pay him what Honour they could. They had no Quality, or outward Splendor indeed, no Titles, or eminent Poſts to recommend them, but they were very remarkable for their Sincerity, and honeſt Zeal, their hearty Affection to Chriſt, Chriſt, and firm Perſuaſion of his being the true Meſſiah; and theſe, to him, who is no Reſpecter of Perſons, and who came to ſet up a Kingdom not of this World, render'd thoſe Tributes of Praiſe and Acknowledgement (tho' from Men mean and inſignificant as to any temporal Reſpects) more acceptable, more becoming his Character, and more truly for his Honour, than any diſſembled, or intereſted Homage of Rulers or Rabbins, the greateſt or wiſeſt of the Sanhedrim, could have been; for external Advantages are of no Conſideration with God, while they want good Diſpoſitions within to recommend them.

And the Reaſon of their turning ſo ſuddenly againſt him.

WHETHER this was the ſame Multitude, or not another ſpirited up, that clamour'd ſo loudly againſt our Bleſſed Saviour but five Days after theſe joyful Exclamations, 'tis much to be queſtion'd; but, ſuppoſing it was, whoever conſiders the ſubtle-Management of Men in Poſt and Power, and the Eaſineſs, and ſervile Fears uſual in thoſe of a mean, depending Condition, will not be much ſurpris'd at ſuch a ſudden Change. Popular Applauſe is at all Times a very fickle and uncertain Thing: But, in the Caſe before us, there were ſome Incidents, which might occaſion this Inſtability. Our Saviour, after his triumphant Entry into Jeruſalem, ſeem'd to aſſume a Kind of Sovereignty: He purg'd the Temple from its Abuſes, healed the Diſeaſes of the People, receiv'd the Hoſannas of the Children, and, for ſome few Days, preach'd, exhorted, and rebuk'd with all Authority; ſo that, during this Time, no one almoſt doubted, but that he was the mighty Prince, who was to gird his Sword upon his Thigh, and bring Salvation unto Iſrael. But when, inſtead of this, they ſaw him fallen into the Hands of his Enemies, and quite deſerted by his Friends; apprehended by the publick Officers as a common Malefactor, haled from one High-Prieſt to another, and there blindfolded, ſpit upon, buffeted, and inſulted; when, in the Midſt of all this Diſtreſs, they ſaw him left alone, without any Diſciple to ſtand by him; any Meſſenger from Heaven, (as they might expect) or any Exertion of his own Power, to reſcue him; nay, on the contrary, when they ſaw that one of his own Servants had ſold and betray'd him, another deny'd and abjur'd him, and all unanimouſly had fled and forſook him, and yet, theſe were the Perſons, who, for ſome Years, had been his conſtant Companions, and, conſequently, were the beſt Judges of his Merit and Pretenſions: When the Multitude, I ſay, ſaw Matters reduc'd to this Extremity, and that Terror and Deſertion was on every Side, while the Rulers conſpir'd to take away his Life, it is no Wonder, that, at the Inſtigation of theſe Rulers, they chang'd their Tone, as they ſaw the Scene change, and their Hopes vaniſh, and ſtruck in with the prevailing Party: For, whoever has ſeen a great Man diſgrac'd at Court, (even tho' before he was the Nation's Darling) may eaſily ſatisfy himſelf, what very Reeds the Affections of the Populace are; how apt they are to bend to every Wind of Faction and Intereſt, and to be ſway'd by every Calumny, or malicious Inſinuation, even when moſt zealous, and ſeemingly moſt ſincere.

Why three of the Evangeliſts have omitted the Account of Lazarus's Reſurrection.

IF we take a View of the vaſt Extent of the Subject, which the Evangeliſts had before them, and the intended Brevity of their Books to make them more uſeful to the Generality of Mankind, we cannot but perceive, that it was abſolutely neceſſary for them to omit ſeveral Things, which muſt have occurr'd to their Remembrance. The whole four Goſpels, bound together, make not a large Volume, but each ſingly is a very ſmall Book; and yet, beſides the Miracles of our Saviour, attended, as they are, with the Circumſtances of Place and Time, the Names of the Perſons and the Occaſions of their being wrought, they have, in theſe ſmall Tracts, inſerted an Account of the wonderful Manner of our Saviour's Birth, the Dangers of his Infancy, the miraculous Appearances of Providence dence, in his Favour, and his Removals, and Journeyings from one Place and Country to another. They have recorded the Subſtance of his Doctrine in plain Terms; have ſet down many Parables, ſpoken by him, together with their Explications; and given us a full Account of the Miſſion of his twelve Apoſtles, and the other ſeventy Diſciples. The Cavils and Queſtions of the Phariſees, Sadducees, and Herodians, together with his Anſwers and Solutions; the Obſervations and Reflections of the People; his publick Diſcourſes before all, and his private Inſtructions to his Diſciples; his Predictions of his own Sufferings; of the Deſtruction of Jeruſalem, and many other Events; a long and particular Account of his Proſecution, Condemnation, and Crucifixion; as alſo of his Reſurrection and Aſcenſion; (not to mention the Hiſtory of the Birth, Preaching, Baptiſm, and Sufferings of John the Baptiſt, his Fore-runner) are all compriz'd in a ſhort Volume. And therefore, having ſuch Plenty of Matter before them, they were oblig'd to be ſilent as to ſome Particulars, after they had related others of the like Nature, for fear of incurring that Prolixity, which they had determin'd to avoid. And hence it is eaſy to ſuppoſe, in Behalf of the three firſt Evangeliſts, that, when they came to a certain Period in their Hiſtory of the Miniſtry of Jeſus, and obſerv'd, that they had given a ſufficient Account of his Doctrine and Miracles, being to reſerve a Space for his laſt Sufferings and Reſurrection, they thought proper to paſs over in Silence whatever happen'd between that Period and his laſt Journey to Jeruſalem. Thus ſome have obſerv'd, that, from the Time, when our Saviour return'd into the Coaſts of Judea beyond Jordan, which (as St John (m) tells us) was ſoon after the Feaſt of the Dedication, (and that was always obſerv'd in Winter) to the Time of his laſt going up to Jeruſalem, a little before Eaſter, theſe three Evangeliſts make no Mention at all of any Journies, or Movings from thence; and yet from this Country (according to St John's Account) it was, that Jeſus afterwards came up to Bethany, and rais'd Lazarus, and then (n) went into the Country near the Wilderneſs, into a City, called Ephraim, and there continued with his Diſciples. And therefore, ſince theſe ſacred Penmen, for the Avoidance of Prolixity, thought it not proper to take any Notice of what paſs'd in this Interval of Time, they could not (with any Juſtneſs or Propriety) introduce into their Goſpels an Account of the Reſurrection of Lazarus.

But there is a farther Reaſon, which ſome learned Men (o) have given us for their Silence in this Reſpect. They tell us, that, according to an antient Tradition, Lazarus liv'd thirty Years, after his being rais'd from the Dead, and that, as the lateſt of theſe three Evangeliſts wrote but fifteen Years after our Lord's Aſcenſion, they might think it a needleſs Matter to mention a Miracle concerning a Perſon, living ſo near Jeruſalem, when the Fame of it was ſo great, and ſo many Witneſſes living to atteſt it: Nor can they ſuppoſe, but that, in Point of Prudence, the Evangeliſts declin'd mentioning this Story, for fear of exaſperating the Jews, and giving their Rage and Malice a freſh Provocation to cut off Lazarus. But now St John, undertaking to write his Goſpel, on purpoſe to ſupply the Omiſſions of the former Evangeliſts, above ſixty Years after our Lord's Aſcenſion, when, by the Death of Lazarus, and moſt of the Witneſſes, who were preſent at his Reſurrection, the Fame of it might be much impair'd, had good Reaſon to pepetuate its Memory by a full and particular Rehearſal.

Why our Saviour wept at his Grave.

He had not, however, given us ſo fair and unexceptionable an Account of the Matter, had he not repreſented our Bleſſed Saviour compaſſionating the Circumſtances of his Friends, and weeping upon ſo ſo ſad an Occaſion, as the Death of Lazarus. For “ there is ſomething in human Nature (as an ingenious Author (p) elegantly expreſſes it) reſulting from our very Make and Conſtitution, while it retains its genuine Form, and is not alter'd by vicious Habits, or oppreſs'd by Stupidity, which renders us obnoxious to the Pains of others, cauſes us to ſympathize with them, and almoſt comprehends us in their Caſe. This Compaſſion appears eminently in thoſe, who, upon other Accounts, are juſtly reckon'd among the beſt of Men. They, who (of all Writers) undertake to imitate Nature moſt, often introduce even their Heroes weeping. The Tears of Men are, in Truth, very different from the Cries and Ejaculations of Children; they are ſilent Streams, and flow from other Cauſes; commonly ſome tender and perhaps Philoſophical Reflections.” And, in the Caſe now before us, there might be other Conſiderations, beſides the Loſs of Lazarus, and the Lamentation of his Friends, that might draw from our Saviour theſe Tears of Compaſſion.

HE might, at that Time, be affected with the Thought of the many Afflictions, to which human Nature is liable in this imperfect State; and his Groans and inward Grief might proceed from the Want of Faith obſervable in the Siſters, and Company attending them, and a Diffidence of his Ability to raiſe the Dead, notwithſtanding they had ſeen ſo many, ſo frequent Manifeſtations of a Divine and Omnipotent Power reſiding in him. He knew, that the Obſtinacy, and inveterate Prejudices of ſome of the Spectators, and of the Generality of the Jewiſh People, was ſuch, that the aſtoniſhing Miracle, he was going to work, would not have its due Effect upon them. This recalled to his Mind that Scene of Miſery and Deſolation, which he foreſaw would overtake them, and therefore he griev'd, and ſigh'd deeply at the Proſpect of the Calamities, which that perverſe People were bringing upon themſelves, and which all his Endeavours, his Miracles, and Sufferings could not prevent. So that, upon the whole, the Concern, which our Lord expreſs'd upon this Occaſion, proceeded from the nobleſt Motives, Wiſdom, Goodneſs, Friendſhip, Compaſſion, and every View, that is juſt and laudable, when he ſymphathiz'd with his Friends, and griev'd for his Enemies.

No Deception in the Miracle of his Reſurrection.

WITH theſe genuine Expreſſions of ſolemn Grief and Sorrow, our Saviour drew near to his Friend's Sepulchre, which (as we may conjecture) was an hollow Place hewn in a Rock, whoſe Entrance (which was clos'd with a Stone) lay level with the Surface of the Earth: But then we have ſo imperfect an Account of the funeral Habits, that were in Uſe among the Jews, that we can form no Notion, how far Lazarus, when reviv'd, and ſet upon his Feet, might be able of himſelf to walk to the Mouth of his Tomb. In this however, we may ſatisfy ourſelves, that our Saviour, who was able to recal his Soul from its ſeparate State, and convey freſh Life into his Body almoſt putrify'd, could give that Body, tho' bound Hand and Foot, a Power of moving forward, even tho' we ſuppoſe, (as moſt of the Antients do) that herein he put himſelf to the Expence of a ſecond Miracle, becauſe the proper Demonſtration of the Reality of the Reſurrection was, not to ſend any Body into the Tomb to unbind him, which might occaſion a Suſpicion of ſome clandeſtine Practice, but to have him come forth alive, in the Preſence of all the Spectators, fairly, and without any Change or Alteration in his Funeral Dreſs, but what was made before the People themſelves, by our Saviour's ſaying, Looſe him and let him go.

THAT ſome or other in the Company was ready enough, upon this Occaſion, to obey our Lord's Commands, can hardly be doubted; and therefore, it is very wonderful, that (had there been any Colluſion in the Matter) among ſo great a Multitude, no one ſhould have had Sagacity enough to find it out. But the Truth is, they none of them ſuſpected any ſuch Thing. They none of them thought, that, when a Man had been four Days bury'd, there wanted any Proof of his being dead. They none of them thought, that Chriſt was only a pretended Worker of Miracles; for, how unwilling ſoever they were to own him for their Meſſiah, by long Experience they were convinc'd, that he was a Perſon mighty in Word and Deed.

Nor in that of his curing the Man, that was born blind.

Of all the wonderful Deeds, that we find recorded of him, there is none, I think, that is related ſo fully, and ſet off with ſo many Circumſtances, to prevent the leaſt Suſpicion of Fraud, as that of his curing the Man, who was born blind. The Evangeliſt has expended a whole Chapter upon it, and therein acquainted us with ſome previous Queſtions of his Diſciples, which led to it; the uncommon Manner of his performing it; the Surprize and Aſtoniſhment of the blind Man's Neighbours, when they ſaw ſuch an Alteration wrought in him; the Man's open and undiſguis'd Relation of the Matter, and repeated Atteſtation of the Greatneſs and Reality of the Cure; the great Diſturbance and Perplexity, which it gave the Jews; their examining, and croſs-examining the Man, who ſtill continu'd firm, and uniform in his Account; their tampering with his Parents, who avow'd the Truth of his being born blind; and, at laſt (when they ſaw that they could prevail nothing, but the more they examin'd, the more Evidence they found) their Rage and Malice, which carry'd them to ſuch a Degree, as to excommunicate the poor Man, and caſt him out of their Synagogue. Theſe, and ſome more Circumſtances, are told in ſuch a plain, convincing Manner, as ſhews the whole Story to be too well founded, for any Cavils, or Fictions, to weaken or impair.

Our Saviour might have had ſome ſanative Balſam in Reſerve; but what would all the Balſam in the World have availed towards the Cure of the Diſtemper, we are now conſidering? Phyſitians and Surgeons, who have ſtudied the Texture of the Eye, and made the Cure of its Maladies their chief Employ, may give us indeed ſomething, that will ſtrengthen the Optick Nerves, when weaken'd or relax'd; or, by ſome outward Operation, may remove ſuch Obſtructions, as would otherwiſe impede the Sight: But, (q) ſince the World began, (as the poor Man here excellently argues) was it ever heard, that any Man opened the Eyes of one, that was born blind? And (as he might have added) by a Medicine, ſo incongruous, as a Plaiſter of Clay; becauſe the Uncommonneſs of the Application is ſo far from diminiſhing, that it rather raiſes the Credit and Reputation of the Miracle: At leaſt, it muſt be allow'd to be as great and triumphant a Diſplay of a ſupernatural Power, to work a Cure by Means, that have no Fitneſs to that End, as it is to do it without any Means at all. In the former Caſe, the Perſon, who undertakes the Cure, has only the Diſtemper to contend with; but, here, he has a double Difficulty to conquer, and muſt not only controul the Power of the Diſeaſe, but change the repugnant Qualities of Bodies, and make them productive of quite contrary Effects. (r) The Fathers here ſay, that Chriſt, to illuſtrate his miraculous Power, us'd that, to anoint the blind Man's Eyes with, which was the greateſt Impediment to Seeing, and moſt pernicious to the Eyes. But, tho' all muſt allow, that the Method, which he here made uſe of, was of no Significance, as to the Cure of the Man's Blindneſs, yet, was it, nevertheleſs, highly pertinent, in order to convince the Spectators, as well as the Patient himſelf, of his ſovereign Virtue, Virtue, which could produce ſuch a wonderful Effect, by no other Application, but what was indifferent, if not obſtructive to the Cure.

Why the Hiſtory of the Woman taken in Adultery came to be diſputed.

SOME of the ancient Fathers were ſo rigid in their Cenſures againſt Adultery, that they would not admit any Perſons, convicted thereof, into the Communion of the Church, even after the longeſt Penance; and carried their Zeal and Reſentment to ſuch an Height, as to think it no great Harm to kill them. No Wonder then, if Men of ſuch ſevere Opinions were unwilling to receive into the Canon of Scripture the Hiſtory of the Woman, taken in this Crime, becauſe, as they imagin'd, it gave Permiſſion to Lewdneſs, ſince our Saviour ſent her away without condemning her; whereas, (s) in his preſent Circumſtances, he had no Commiſſion to paſs Sentence upon her, tho', in bidding her (t) go, and, for Fear of the divine Judgment, repent, and ſin no more, he ſufficiently declar'd himſelf againſt all ſuch Practices.

Its Genuineneſs.

* UPON a different Perſuaſion however it was, that this Paſſage came, at firſt, to be mark'd as dubious, and, in Time, was quite thrown out, as ſpurious, in many ancient, eſpecially Greek Copies: But, in Oppoſition to this, we need only obſerve, (u) that this Part of Hiſtory was found in the ſixteen Manuſcripts, which Stephanus, in all the ſeventeen, (ſave one) which Beza, and in that infinite Number, which our learned Mills has made uſe of; that Tatian, who liv'd in the Year 160, i. e. ſixty Years after the Death of St John, and Ammianus of Alexandria, who flouriſh'd about the Year 220, and made their ſeveral Harmonies of the Goſpel out of the Copies then in Uſe, do both (as appears from the Canons of Euſebius) relate it; that moſt of the Copies of the Eaſt (according to Selden's Report) retain it; and, tho' it be not found in ſome Manuſcripts, (as the Greek Code, cited by Cotelerius, expreſſes the Matter) yet it is entire in the ancient Manuſcripts, and all the Apoſtles make mention of it in the Conſtitutions, which they ſet forth for the Edification of the Church.

Chriſt's ſpeaking and acting not of himſelf.

THIS is enough to vindicate the Truth and Sincerity of this Part of St John's Hiſtory from the Cenſures of Criticks, who ſuſpect it; and, to reſcue his Doctrine from ſuch falſe Conſtructions, as the Adverſaries of our Lord's Divinity would put upon it, we need only be mindful to diſtinguiſh between his divine and human Nature, and not to apply ſuch Words and Actions of his, as relate to the one, to the Prejudice of the other. Thoſe, who deny the Deity of Chriſt, do nevertheleſs acknowledge, that he was a Prophet ſent from God, and inveſted with an high Commiſſion. Now, under this Character, he could only appear and act, in Virtue of his human Nature, and muſt thereupon be deem'd ſubſervient to the Orders and Commands of his heavenly Father: And therefore, as the very Office of a Prophet requires, that he ſhould ſpeak nothing of himſelf, not deliver his own Mind or Doctrine, nor ſeek his own Glory, but ſpeak all Things in the Name, and do all Things for the Glory of him, that ſent him: So are we not to wonder, that we find our Bleſſed Lord, tho' he had in him all the Fulneſs of the Godhead, yet, in his Prophetical Capacity, ſpeaking and acting, as if he had no Power, but what was given him from above, (even as Embaſſadors here on Earth are oblig'd to purſue their Maſter's Inſtructions) and therefore profeſſing ſo frequently, that he deliver'd no Doctrine of his own Invention, nor did any Thing, but what he had a Commiſſion to do.

His calling Judges and Magiſtrates Gods.

The Socinians indeed allow, that the Commiſſion, wherewith our Saviour was ſent into the World, to do and reveal God's Will, was Reaſon enough to entitle him to the Appellation of the Son of God, and that this is all, that he pretends to, when he ſeems to clear himſelf to the Jews from any higher Aſſumption. But now (x) it appears, from a due Inſpection of the Context, that Chriſt did not intend to ſay, or prove, that he was the Son of God, as being only his Embaſſador, extraordinarily inſtructed, and ſo ſent into the World; but on a far more excellent Account, viz. that, before he came into the World, he was with God the Father, and ſo was his true and eſſential Son, as being God of God, and partaking of the ſame Nature, as a Son does with his Father. From the 25th to the 30th Verſe incluſively, 'tis manifeſt, that our Lord diſcours'd to the Jews in ſuch a Manner, that they ſtill thought he was aſſerting his Godhead, and therefore (y) we ſtone thee, ſay they, becauſe thou, being a Man, makeſt thyſelf God, viz. by calling God ſo emphatically, and with ſuch Peculiarity his Father, as that he was ſo to him alone, and ſo, that (z) he and his Father were one. But to this our Saviour does not anſwer by denying, either that he was God, or that he had ever challeng'd to himſelf that Dignity, which (had he been only Man) had been the moſt proper Thing he could have ſaid to take off the Objection of his Blaſphemy; but, inſtead of that, he ſeems rather to argue, that he was ſo the Son of God, as to have the Divine Nature in him: "For, if Judges "and Magiſtrates, ſays he, are called "Gods, from an imperfect Reſemblance, "and Participation of the Divine Authority, how much more may I be "called God, who am both by Nature "the Son of God, and, in the moſt excellent Manner, authoriz'd by him?" For this he ſignifies by ſaying, that (a) his Father had ſanctified him, and ſent him into the World; wherein he ſtill declares that God was his Father, and that he was firſt ſanctified, and then ſent, which plainly implies, that he was the Son of God in Heaven, before his Miſſion into the World; and therefore, as an additional Proof of his Divine Original, he appeals to the Divine Operations he perform'd: (b) If I do not the Works of my Father, believe me not; but if I do, though you believe not me, believe the Works; that ye may know, and believe, that the Father is in me, and I in him.

And ſeeming to deny his having any Hand in diſpenſing the Rewards in Heaven, no Argument againſt his Divinity.

When therefore our Bleſſed Saviour ſays of himſelf, that (c) All Power was given unto him both in Heaven and Earth; and that unto his Diſciples (d) he had appointed a Kingdom, even as his Father had appointed unto him; when St Paul ſtiles him the (e) righteous Judge, who ſhall give a Crown of Righteouſneſs to all, that love his Appearance; and St Matthew, (f) that King, who ſhall ſeparate the Sheep from the Goats, and (g) reward every one according to his Works; it can hardly be thought, that, to diſtribute Rewards in the Kingdom of Glory, is a Prerogative peculiar to the Father alone, and ſuch as no Way belongs to the Son; becauſe our Saviour, in his Reply to Zebedee's Children, tells us, (h) that to ſit on his Right-Hand, and on his Left, was not his to give, but it ſhall be given to them, for whom it was prepared of his Father; ſince the whole and only Deſign of the Paſſage is to ſhew, that thoſe Rewards ſhall not be diſtributed, upon ſuch Conditions, and in ſuch a Manner, as theſe Petitioners vainly imagin'd. (i) To this Purpoſe we may obſerve, that the Words, ſhall be given to them, are only a Supplement made by the Tranſlators, for they are not in the Original, which is literally thus,——To ſit on my Right-Hand, and on my Left, is not mine to give, but, or except to them alone, for whom it is prepared of my Father: And this this means no more, than that the Honours and Degrees of Happineſs in the other World are not the Son's to give, in the Senſe, that theſe Apoſtles fancy'd, i. e. he does not give them abſolutely, and arbitrarily; he is not led by Partiality, and Fondneſs, and Reſpect of Perſons; he is not carry'd by Humour, or vanquiſh'd by the Importunity of Friends and Suiters, as earthly Princes are, but is limited by the Conſiderations of Equity and ſtrict Juſtice, from which it can never be conſiſtent with the Perfections of his Nature to depart: For, that the whole Proceſs of the final Judgment, and, conſequently, the Diſpenſation of future Rewards and Puniſhments, is to be tranſacted by our Bleſſed Saviour, we have this expreſs Teſtimony in Scripture, (k) The Father judgeth no Man; but hath committed all Judgment to the Son, that all Men ſhould honour the Son, even as they honour the Father.

Why the Joy in Heaven for a converted Sinner is ſo very great.

Tho' we are not much acquainted with the Condition of Angels, or the Ingredients of their Happineſs, yet thus much the Scripture has inform'd us concerning them, that (l) they are miniſtring Spirits, ſent out to miniſter for them, that ſhall be Heirs of Salvation; and therefore, we may reaſonably preſume, that they are full of Tenderneſs for their Charge, ſollicitous for their particular Safety, and extremely glad of any Good, that befals them. (m) How theſe Heavenly Hoſts were affected with the Salvation of Mankind in general, is evident from the Hymn, with which they attended at the Birth of Chriſt, to welcome him into the World; and though their Nature be far diſtant from us Mortals, and their Bliſs exquiſite, beyond what we are able to conceive; yet, in Regard, that both their Nature and their Bliſs are finite, their Joy may certainly admit of an Increaſe; and, as often as a Sinner is converted from the Evil of his Ways, there may ſpring up a freſh Object, and a large and literal Addition to it.

But can this properly be ſaid of God too, whoſe Perfection of Happineſs allows no ſuch Accumulation? No, doubtleſs; and therefore, with Reſpect to him, we muſt interpret this, as Reaſon and Religion oblige us to underſtand many ſuch like Paſſages, where human Parts and Paſſions are attributed to him. As therefore the Holy Ghoſt, meaning to repreſent his Diſpleaſure, and our Baſeneſs, does it, by ſaying, that we provoke him to Anger, kindle his Fury, grieve and weary his Spirit, and the like; ſo here, by ſaying, that God rejoiceth over a repenting Sinner, is intended, that ſuch Repentance is highly agreeable to him, and that, were his Nature capable of the ſame unequal Motions with ours, the Joy of a Father or a Friend, for retrieving the Perſon he loves beſt, and had been moſt in Pain for, would be but a feeble and a very faint Image of that Satisfaction, which this excites in Him, who loves us better, than the tendereſt Parent, or moſt affectionate Friend upon Earth does, or can do.

But why ſhould the Degree of Joy be ſo intenſe upon this Occaſion? Why ſhould the Reformation of one Sinner raiſe it above the Safety of many Souls, who never fell from their Integrity? And the ninety-nine Sheep, which never ſtray'd, excite leſs of it, than one poor, ſilly Wanderer? In order to reſolve this Difficulty, we muſt obſerve, (n) that, in the Parables of the Goſpel, it is uſual to repreſent all of the ſame Kind, tho' they be ſometimes the greater Number, by one Man. Thus, in the Parable of the Marriage-Supper, the Man, who had not on his Wedding-Garment, (according to the Senſe of moſt Interpreters) repreſents all wicked Men; and, in that of the ſeveral Talents, the ſlothful Servant, who hid his in a Napkin, is ſaid to be one, whereas they, who improv'd theirs are three; and yet it can hardly be doubted, but that there are fewer, who receive the Grace of God to any good Purpoſe, than they, who receive it in vain; and, in like Manner, though, in the preceding Parables, there is Mention made of but one loſt Piece of Silver, and of one ſtray'd Sheep, yet is that one the Repreſentative of the whole Tribe of Sinners, which do certainly out-number the few, that are righteous; and therefore, according to this Acceptation, the Joy in Heaven may be allow'd to be greater, becauſe the Objects, that give occaſion to it, are more.

BUT even if this were not, as theſe Words were ſpoken of God after the Manner of Men, ſo are they to be underſtood in a Senſe agreeable to human Paſſions. Now in ourſelves we perceive, that, in obtaining what we paſſionately deſir'd, in regaining what we look'd upon as loſt, and in ſecuring what was in great and imminent Danger, our Joy is ſtrong, and our Delight tranſporting. The Surprize of an Eſcape, which we did not expect, and the regaining of a Treaſure, we had given over as gone, is entertain'd with Rapture, becauſe it is a Kind of new Acceſſion to our Fortunes, and like a Thing we never enjoy'd before. A loving Father, no doubt, finds great Comfort in ſeeing all his Children in a perfect State of Health; but if one of them chance to fall ſick, beyond Expectation of Recovery, to ſee him out of Danger adminiſters more preſent Joy, than does the conſtant Health of all the reſt; and, in like Manner, tho' a continu'd Courſe of Goodneſs be in itſelf moſt valuable, yet the Recovery of a loſt Sinner, the reviving one dead in Treſpaſſes and Sins, the ſeeing him ſnatch'd as a Fire-brand out of the Fire, when he was juſt going to fall into it, gives a more freſh and lively Joy; and therefore, (o) it is meet, ſays the Father in the Parable, that, upon this Occaſion, we ſhould make merry and be glad; for this thy Brother was dead, and is alive again; was loſt, and is found.

God's Juſtice clear'd in the Diſtribution of Rewards.

SOME Interpreters are of Opinion, that the Parable of the Lord of the Vineyard, paying all his Labourers alike, is to be underſtood of the Gift of Grace, or firſt Admiſſion to the Privileges of the Goſpel, and not of the Fruition of Glory; becauſe the Wages, here mention'd, are given to the Envious and Unthankful. But allowing this to be no more than a Paſſage inſerted for Ornament and Illuſtration only, or that it may mean a Reward ſo ſurprizingly great, as, among Men, would provoke the Envy of others; yet, if we ſtate the Caſe of the ſeveral Labourers in the Parable, as it includes the Jews and Gentiles in general, and private Chriſtians in particular, we ſhall find no Injuſtice in what the Lord of the Vineyard did unto them.

(p) TO the Jews God was pleas'd to make the firſt expreſs Diſcoveries of his Will by a written Law: In Proceſs of Time the like Benefit was extended to the Gentiles. They readily accepted it, and, by ſo doing, became Partakers of the ſame Grace and precious Promiſes with thoſe, who had long been brought up under the Legal, and, from that, remov'd ſooner under the Evangelical Diſpenſation. The Apoſtles left all and follow'd Chriſt. The Primitive Chriſtians gave in their Names to his Doctrine, and continu'd ſtedfaſt in it, at the certain Peril of their Liberties, their Fortunes, their Lives; and yet, in any After-Ages of Chriſtianity, they, who live and die (tho' quietly and peaceably) in the ſincere Profeſſion of this Religion, are promis'd the Kingdom of Heaven, as a Reward for their Faith and Obedience.

IN like Manner, ſome have the Happineſs of a pious Education, and carry on their early Virtue through the ſeveral Stages of Life; others, who either wanted that Advantage, or have neglected to improve it, run into the ſame Exceſs of Riot with the unthinking Part of the World; and yet, if theſe, tho' late, ſee their their Follies, and effectually forſake them, the Promiſe of God ſtandeth ſure, (q) that, at what Time ſoever the wicked Man turneth away from the Wickedneſs he hath committed, and doth that which is lawful and right, he ſhall ſave his Soul alive. This is the whole Senſe of the Parable, and theſe are the common Caſes, to which it is apply'd: But we miſtake the Meaning of it widely, if we think that it denotes an Equality of Rewards in the Kingdom of Heaven, ſince we have this Aſſurance given us, that as there (r) is one Glory of the Sun, another Glory of the Moon, and another Glory of the Stars, ſo alſo is the Reſurrection of the Dead. Thoſe, that are rais'd to everlaſting Life, ſhall indeed be all glorious, but ſtill the Glory of ſome ſhall be greater than that of others. Every good Chriſtian ſhall, no doubt, be admitted to a State of Felicity, but when we conſider theſe Words of our Saviour, (s) I have appointed unto you a Kingdom, that ye may eat and drink at my Table in my Kingdom, and ſit on Thrones, judging the Twelve Tribes of Iſrael, we cannot but infer, that there are ſome particular Marks and Inſtances of Glory, wherewith the Apoſtles of our Lord will be honour'd above other Chriſtians: And, in like Manner, tho' a late Penitent (if he be ſincere) ſhall be receiv'd to Mercy at laſt, yet he has not ordinarily any Reaſon to expect a Degree of Glory equal to his, who has never ſwerv'd from his Duty, or quickly return'd to it. His Bliſs ſhall be perfect indeed, tho' it be not the moſt exalted, and tho' he be leſs happy than ſome other Chriſtians, yet he ſhall be much happier than he deſerves.

Why the Samaritans would not receive our Saviour.

From Matth. xii. 1. Mark ii. 23. Luke vi. 1. John v. 1. to Matth. xvii. 14. Mark ix. 14. Luke ix. 37. John vii. 1.

THO' the Difference between the Jews and Samaritans, in Matters of Religion, was great, and no ſmall Obſtruction to all Civil Intercourſe, yet it was not at all Times carry'd to ſuch an Height, as to deny to each other the common Rights of Hoſpitality. Our Saviour himſelf was, once upon a Time, (t) when he met the Samaritan Woman at Jacob's Well, kindly receiv'd by the People of Sychar, for the Space of two Days, but then he was returning out of Judea, whereas he was now going up to Jeruſalem with a Purpoſe to celebrate the Feaſt of Tabernacles. The Samaritans had likewiſe a Feaſt of the ſame Kind, tho' not obſerv'd at the ſame Time, (u) of as old a Date, as the firſt Separation under Jeroboam, and inſtituted both in Imitation of, and in Oppoſition to, the great Feſtival, that our Lord was now going to ſolemnize; and therefore, (x) this travelling through their Country, with a ſet Purpoſe to do this, was look'd upon as an Affront to their Way of Worſhip: For it argu'd our Lord's Judgment in this Caſe to be, that Jeruſalem was the only Place, where theſe Feaſts could be regularly celebrated, and, conſequently, that the keeping them on Mount Gerizzim, and the Temple there, was a preſumptuous Innovation, directly contrary to the Will and Law of God.

"BUT why was our Saviour alone "treated in this rude Manner, when every "Traveller to Jeruſalem, upon the like "Occaſion, declar'd againſt the Samaritan Schiſm as much as he did, and yet, "for any Thing we find, met with better "Entertainment?" Now this different Sort of Treatment can be reſolv'd into nothing, but the different Character of the Travellers. The Samaritans might think, that the Opinions and Practices of common People were not worth their Regard, but that it would be of mighty Conſequence, if a Perſon, ſo eminent as Jeſus, ſhould declare againſt them; and therefore, ſince his going to worſhip at Jeruſalem, on this ſolemn Occaſion, would, in all common Acceptation, bear this Meaning, they contriv'd to prevent, as much as in them lay, the Influence, which that ſuppos'd Indignity might have, by revenging it with with another, of not receiving him; becauſe ſuch Refuſal, they thought, was a conſtructive Diſowning of his Authority, and a plain Declaration to all People, that, whatever Eſteem and Veneration others might have for this fam'd Man, they themſelves took him for no Prophet.

What is meant by Rivers of Waters flowing out of the Belly.

(y) In the Feaſt of Tabernacles, it was a Cuſtom among the Jews, (deriv'd, as ſome imagine, from the Inſtitution of their Prophets Haggai and Zechariah) on the laſt Day more eſpecially, to fetch Water from the Fountain of Siloah in great Pomp and Solemnity, with Trumpets, and other muſical Inſtruments going before them. At ſuch Fountains, it was uſual to build Receptacles, or Wells, and, in the Middle of them, to have Pipes and Ciſterns laid, through which the Water paſs'd, and, coming out at Cocks, was receiv'd in Urns, or large big-belly'd Veſſels, and ſo carry'd to the Temple. The Water thus carry'd was given to the Prieſts, who, mixing it with the Wine of the Sacrifices, offer'd it to God by Way of Interceſſion for the Bleſſing of Rain againſt the approaching Seed-Time: And, during the whole Feſtivity, they read the lvth Chapter of the Prophet Iſaiah, which begins with theſe Words, Ho! every one, that thirſteth, come ye to the Waters, and he, that hath no Money, &c.

Now, whoever looks into the Method of our Saviour's Preaching, may eaſily perceive, that it was cuſtomary with him to take occaſion, from ſome obvious Thing or other, to diſcourſe of ſpiritual Bleſſings, and frequently to make uſe of Phraſes metaphorically taken from the Matter in Hand. Purſuant hereunto we find him, in Alluſion to the Cuſtoms of this Feaſt, beginning his Invitation with Words, not unlike what we have cited from the Prophet, (z) If any Man thirſt, let him come unto me, and drink. Water is, by God himſelf, repreſented as no bad Emblem of the Diſpenſation of Grace; for (a) I will pour Water, ſays he, upon him, that is thirſty, and Floods upon the dry Ground. Which he explains in this Manner, —— I will pour my Spirit upon thy Seed, and my Bleſſing upon thine Offspring; and (b) the frequent Libations, in the Feaſt of Tabernacles, were ſuppos'd, by the Jewiſh Doctors themſelves, to have had a myſtick Senſe in them: And therefore, the Meaning of our Saviour's Words is this, —— "That "whoever was deſirous of the ſpiritual "Bleſſings, which were prefigur'd in this "feſtival Rite, if he would become his "Diſciple, and believe in him, as the pro-"mis'd Meſſiah, he would communicate "to him ſuch Gifts of the Holy Ghoſt, and "in ſuch a plentiful Meaſure, as the World "was not yet acquainted with; for (c) out "of his Belly ſhall flow Rivers of living "Water."

Whence it is, that our Saviour borrow'd this metaphorical Expreſſion, is a Matter not ſo well agreed by the Learned. Some think from the Proverbs of Solomon, (d) The Words of a Man's Mouth are as deep Waters, and the Well-ſpring of Wiſdom a flowing Brook. Others, from the xxxiid of Iſaiah, (e) Behold a King ſhall reign in Righteouſneſs, and Princes ſhall rule in Judgment, and a Man ſhall be as Rivers of Waters in a dry Place: And others (with more Probability) from the lviiith of that Prophet, (f) Thou ſhalt be like a watered Garden, and like a Spring of Water, whoſe Waters fail not. However this be, 'tis certain, (g) that our Saviour, taking the Riſe of his Diſcourſe from the cuſtomary Libations at this Time, had under his View and Conſideration the Make and Figure of the Water-Veſſels, that were us'd on this Occaſion, which, by Reaſon of their large Bellies, being able to hold a great Quantity of Water, were therefore proper Emblems of that plentiful Effuſion of the Holy DISSERTATION III.

Of our Bleſſed Saviour's Miracles, and their Excellency.

The Evidence of Miracles.

THAT the Accompliſhment of antient Prophecies, in the Perſon and Actions of our Bleſſed Saviour, was one of the external Evidences of his Divine Miſſion, and, conſequently, of the Truth of our moſt holy Religion, was the Subject of our laſt Diſſertation; and how far the Evidence of the Miracles, which he wrought, is available to the ſame great End, we ſhall now endeavour to ſet before our Reader.

What a real Miracle is.

(i) To this Purpoſe we muſt obſerve, that a true Miracle is properly ſuch an Operation, as exceeds the ordinary Courſe of Things, and is repugnant to the known Laws of Nature, either as to its ſubject Matter, or the Manner of its Performance. For, tho' we readily acknowledge, that there are Beings in the ſpiritual World, which are able to perform Things, far exceeding the Power of Men, and therefore apt to beget Wonder and Amazement in us; yet, that any created Beings, and, conſequently, Agents of a limited Power, are capable of working ſuch Miracles, as our Saviour did; are capable of controuling the Courſe of Nature, of ſupplying Mens natural Defects, of giving Sight to the Blind, Speech to the Dumb, and Life to the Dead, (which are Miracles relating to the ſubject Matter) or of doing any of theſe Things, in an Inſtant, by a Touch, by a Word, at a Diſtance, and without any Kind of outward Means, (which are Miracles regarding the Manner of their Performance) is a Thing impoſſible; unleſs we can ſuppoſe, that limited, inferior, and created Beings have an equal Power of creating, controuling, and reſtoring with Almighty God, which is Contradiction enough in all Conſcience.

Miracles, a ſufficient Teſtimony of a Divine Miſſion.

It was upon this Perſuaſion therefore, viz. that true Miracles are the ſole Operation of God, that the World has, all along, agreed to acknowledge, and accept of Miracles, as an authentick and indiſputable Teſtimony, that the Perſons, entruſted with ſuch Power, were certainly ſent, and commiſſion'd by God. To this Purpoſe we find Pharaoh's Magicians confeſſing, (k) that the Miracles, which Moſes and Aaron exhibited, were the Finger of God; and, in the Controverſy between Elijah and the Prieſts of Baal, it was readily accepted as a fair Propoſal, that he, (l) who anſwered by Fire from Heaven, ſhould be unanimouſly ſerv'd, and worſhipped as God. The leſs Reaſon have we then to wonder, that we hear a learned Ruler of the Jews accoſting our Lord in theſe Words, (m) Rabbi, we know know that thou art a Teacher ſent from God; for no Man can do thoſe Miracles, that thou doſt, except God be with him; or that a mean Man, who had been born blind, ſhould confront the whole Aſſembly of the Phariſees, with this one Argument, (n) Since the World began, was it not heard, that any Man opened the Eyes of the Blind; if this Man were not of God, he could do nothing; or, that our Bleſſed Saviour himſelf ſhould ſo frequently appeal to the Miracles, he wrought, as proper Teſtimonies of his Divine Miſſion, (o) The Works, which my Father hath ſent me to finiſh; The Works, which I do in my Father's Name, the ſame bear witneſs of me, that my Father ſent me.

That the Meſſiah was to work Miracles.

Our Saviour indeed, and his Apoſtles both, do often appeal to the Predictions of the Prophets relating to the promis'd Meſſiah, as fulfilled and accompliſh'd in him; and the Truth is, unleſs the Validity of this Appeal can be ſupported, Miracles alone, or excluſive of this Teſtimony, would not be a ſufficient Evidence of our Lord's Commiſſion: But then it ought to be conſider'd, that, when, among the particular Predictions of a Perſon promis'd to the Jews as their Meſſiah, it was foretold, that he ſhould (q) be like unto Moſes; that (r) the Spirit of the Lord ſhould reſt upon him; that (s) he ſhould open the Eyes of the Blind, and unſtop the Ears of the Deaf; and that he ſhould make the Lame to leap as an Hart, and the Tongue of the Dumb to ſing; Miracles became then an eſſential Ingredient of his Character, and a ſure Teſt of his being a Prophet ſent from God.

(t) Some modern Jews indeed, when preſs'd with the Evidence of our Saviour's Miracles, make this their Subterfuge, —— That the Meſſiah, at his Coming, was not to perform any Wonders of this Kind, but only to manage the Lord's Battles, and to overcome the People, that were round about him. But that this was not of old the Senſe of the Jewiſh Nation, is evident from the Words of the People in our Saviour's Time: (u) When Chriſt cometh, will he do more Miracles, than theſe, which this Man hath done? Nay, (x) an Author of theirs of no great Antiquity, (after his having mention'd the three glorious Gifts, viz. Prophecy, Miracles, and the Knowledge of God, which the Iſraelites, in the Time of their Captivity, had loſt) gives us to underſtand, that, upon the Appearance of the Meſſiah, the Return of Miracles was juſtly to be expected, in Completion of this Prophecy, —— (y) I will pour out my Spirit upon all Fleſh, and your Sons and your Daughters ſhall propheſy, your old Men ſhall dream Dreams, and your young Men ſhall ſee Viſions.

And our Saviour aſſuming that Character.

Since the Meſſiah then was to work Miracles, when he came into the World, if we conſider the Deſign of our Bleſſed Saviour's Miſſion, viz. (z) that he was a Teacher ſent from God to aboliſh a Form of Worſhip, which had inconteſtably been eſtabliſh'd by the Power of Miracles in Moſes, and to introduce a new Religion, repugnant to the Wiſdom of the World, in many myſterious Doctrines, and abhorrent to the vicious Inclinations of Men, in all its righteous Laws and Precepts; that he was appointed, in ſhort, to deſtroy the Kingdom of the Devil, and, upon its Ruins, to erect a Kingdom of Righteouſneſs; there was an abſolute Neceſſity for him to be inveſted with a Power of working Miracles: Otherwiſe, his Pretenſions to this high Character had been ridiculous, and the Jews, with good Reaſon, might have demanded of him, (a) Maſter, we would ſee a Sign from thee; what Sign therefore doſt thou do, that we may ſee, and believe? But this Demand is effectually ſilenc'd by our Saviour's being able to make the Reply, —— (b) If I had not done among you the Works, which

JOHN the Baptiſt, who was born a little before our Saviour, was his Forerunner. (c) He appear'd at the Time, when the Meſſiah was expected; and, being much fam'd for his Virtue and Sanctity of Life, was follow'd by the People, who were prone to take him for the Prophet who was to come, as there was not indeed, at that Time, a greater Perſon born among Women: And yet the Divine Providence ſo order'd the Matter, that, as great as he was, he wanted this Character of the true Meſſiah, viz. the working of Miracles; and therefote, out Saviour, comparing himſelf with the Baptiſt, a burning and a ſhining Light indeed, but who himſelf did no Miracles, (d) I have a greater Witneſs, ſays he, than that of John; for the Works, which my Father hath given me to finiſh, the ſame Works, that I do, bear Witneſs of me, that I am the Meſſiah, or (which is all one) that my Father hath ſent me.

The Nature of the Miracles.

AND well indeed might our Lord be allow'd to claim a Pre-eminence, not above the Baptiſt only, but above every Prophet, that went before him; when, upon ſo many Occaſions, he exerciſ'd a Power and Authority, not inferior to that of God; when, by the ſame Omnipotence wherewith he created all Things at firſt, he multiply'd a few Loaves, and two Fiſhes, into a Sufficiency to feed five Thouſand; when, at his Command, the Wind and the Sea grew ſtill, and unclean Spirits departed from Mens Bodies, confeſſing him to be the Son of God; when acute Diſeaſes, and chronical Griefs, (e) ſuch as no Length of Time, no Skill, no Remedies, no Expence could aſſuage, were equally cur'd with a Touch, nay with the Touch of his Garment, with a Word, nay, with a Word, that operated effectually upon the Abſent, and at a Diſtance; when Perſons at Death's Door, nay, actually dead, and dead for ſome Time, were commanded back to Life and Health; and himſelf, when ſlain by the Jews, and committed to the Grave, was (according to his own Prediction) rais'd from the Dead, by the ſame Divine Spirit, whereby He quickeneth and enliveneth all Things.

Which were ſuitable to the Character he aſſum'd.

THESE, and many more Actions of the like Nature, recorded in the Goſpel, are plain Demonſtrations of a Divine Power reſiding in our Bleſſed Saviour: But then there is ſomething farther to be ſaid, concerning theſe miraculous Acts of his, viz. that they were exceedingly well choſen to characteriſe the Meſſiah, in Regard of their Suitableneſs to the End and Deſign of his Coming.

(f) THE Law was enacted with a very terrible Pomp, ſuch as ſpoke it to be (what indeed it was) a Diſpenſation of Servitude and great Severity. But the Goſpel is a Covenant of Reconciliation and Peace, of Friendſhip, nay, of Sonſhip with God, intended, not ſo much to ſtrike Awe upon Mens Minds, as to charm and win them over by all the endearing Methods of Gentleneſs and Love; and therefore, the Wonders, that bore Teſtimony to its Truth, were Works of Mercy and Kindneſs, ſuch as never wrought any Harm, but always brought Comfort and Advantage to the Needy and Diſtreſs'd; (g) Suſtenance to the Hungry, Supplies to thoſe in Want, Safety to them that were ready to periſh, Speech to the Dumb, Hearing to the Deaf, Eyes to the Blind, Underſtanding to the Diſturb'd, Strength to the Impotent, Limbs to the Maim'd, Health to the Sick, Life to the Dead, and Releaſe to Souls and Bodies held in Bondage by the Devil. Theſe, theſe are the Wonders, by which our Jeſus prov'd his Miſſion, Wonders of Gentleneſs and Pity, of Beneficence and Love, wherein he manifeſtly excels, and, as it were, triumphs over all the Prophets, that went before him. They prov'd their Commiſſion by Acts of Divine Vengeance, and ſore Plagues, as well as by Cures, and corporal Deliverances; whereas our Bleſſed Lord (k) went about always doing Good; healing Diſeaſes and Infirmities, but inflicting none; and releaſing from Death, but never haſtening it; inſomuch, that, through the whole Courſe of his Miniſtry, we have not one Inſtance of his Power exerted in the Suffering, or Annoyance even of his bittereſt Enemies.

WHEN John the Baptiſt had heard of the Works, which (l) Chriſt did, he ſent two of his Diſciples, with this Meſſage to him, Art thou he that ſhould come, (i. e. the promis'd Meſſiah) or look we for another? To whom our Lord return'd this Anſwer, Go, and ſhew John again theſe Things, which ye do hear, and ſee; the Blind receive their Sight, and the Lame walk; the Lepers are cleanſed, and the Deaf hear, and the Dead are raiſed up. The Anſwer is, in a great Meaſure, taken from the Prophet Iſaiah (m), deſcribing the great Operations of the Meſſiah; and, by remitting the Baptiſt to them, our Saviour intended to ſhew, that he muſt of Neceſſity be the Perſon, he ſent to enquire after, becauſe he had not only the Power of doing Miracles, but even of doing the ſelf-ſame Miracles, that the Evangelical Prophet had predicted of the Meſſiah.

And therefore, a Proof of his Divine Miſſion,

(n) NOW, of all the great Attributes of God, there is none, that ſhine brighter, and more amiable in our Eyes, than Truth and Goodneſs: The former cannot atteſt a Lye, nor the latter ſeduce Men into dangerous and deſtructive Miſtakes. And yet, if God ſhould communicate any Part of his Power to an Impoſtor, to enable him to work Miracles, and ſuch Miracles, in Kind, as were foretold of the true Meſſiah, in Confirmation of his Pretences, what would become of theſe two ſacred Attributes? To ſuſpect, I ſay, that Almighty God is capable of employing his infinite Power, with a Deſign to miſlead and delude Mankind, in what relates to their eternal Concerns, is to deſtroy and ſubvert his very Nature, and to leave ourſelves no Notion at all of ſuch a Being. Nay, for him to permit the ſame Evidences to be produc'd for Errors, as for Truth, is, in Effect, to cancel his own Credentials, and to make Miracles of no Significance at all. And therefore, how artfully ſoever ſome Impoſtors may contrive their Deluſions, yet we are not to doubt, but that, if we examine, 1ſt, The Works themſelves, and their Manner of being done, and 2dly, The Perſons themſelves, and the Ends, for which they do them, we ſhall be able to diſcern the Difference between real Miracles, and lying Wonders.

Becauſe they had all the Marks of true Miracles.

(o) 1ſt, THEN, in Relation to the Works themſelves, it is requir'd, that they be poſſible, ſince no Power whatever can effect that, which is ſtrictly impoſſible; that they be probable, ſince the Divine Power will hardly concern itſelf in in what ſavours of Fable and Romance; that they be not below the Majeſty of God, as he is the Ruler and Governor of the World, nor inconſiſtent with his Character, as he is a good and gracious Being; that they be done openly, before a ſufficient Number of Witneſſes; readily, without any previous Forms or Ceremonies, which may make them look like Incantation; and upon all proper and important Occaſions, to denote the Permanency of that Divine Power, by which they are effected.

2dly, IN Relation to the Perſon pretending to a Divine Miſſion, it is requir'd, that he be a Man of good Report for his unblamable Converſation; that he be in the perfect Exerciſe of his Reaſon and Senſes, and conſtant and uniform in the Meſſage he delivers; that the Doctrine, which he endeavours to eſtabliſh by his Miracles, be conſiſtent with the Principles of true Reaſon, and natural Religion, conſiſtent with right Notions and Worſhip of of God, and conſiſtent with the former Revelations, he hath made of his Will; of a Tendency to deſtroy the Devil's Power in the World, to recover Men from their Ignorance, to reform them from their Vices, to lead them into the Practice of Virtue and true Godlineſs, by proper Motives and Arguments, and, in ſhort, to advance the general Welfare of Societies, as well as every Man's particular Happineſs in this Life, and in his Preparation for a better. And now to obſerve a little how all theſe Characters meet in the Bleſſed Jeſus.

THAT Jeſus of Nazareth was a Perſon of great Virtue and Goodneſs, in full Poſſeſſion of his Reaſon and Senſes, and conſtant and uniform in the Meſſage, he deliver'd to Mankind, not only the whole Tenor of his Conduct, as it is recorded by the Evangeliſts, but the Nature of his Doctrine, and Excellency of his Precepts, the Manner of his Diſcourſes to the People, and the Wiſdom of his Replies to the inſidious Queſtions of his Adverſaries, are a plain Demonſtration: And that (p) this Jeſus was a Man approved of God by Miracles, Wonders, and Signs, which God did by him in the Midſt of all the People, is manifeſt, not only from the Teſtimony of his Friends and Diſciples, but (q) from the Conceſſion of Heathen Hiſtorians, as well as the Traditions of the Jewiſh Talmud, wherein the Memory of them is preſerv'd.

THESE Miracles indeed were above the Skill of Men or Angels to effect; but they were not therefore impoſſible, becauſe ſubject to the Power of Almighty God; for the ſame Agent, who form'd the Eye, could reſtore the Blind to Sight; he, who wrought the whole Frame of our Bodies, could as eaſily cure the Maim'd, or heal the Diſeas'd; and he, who cauſes the Rain to deſcend, and to water the Earth, that it may miniſter Bread to the Eater, and Seed to the Sower, could be at no Loſs to change Water into Wine, or to multiply the Loaves and Fiſhes for the Relief of the Hungry.

THESE Miracles again, being Acts of Mercy, as well as Power, were not conſiſtent with the Character of an Impoſtor, or the Agency of any wicked Spirit; but that God ſhould have Compaſſion on his Creatures, and exerciſe his tender Mercies over the Works of his own Hands; that he ſhould give Bread to the Hungry, Limbs to the Maim'd, and Releaſe to ſuch, as were under the Captivity of Satan, is no improbable Thing at all. Theſe were Actions ſuitable to his Majeſty, and highly comporting with his Wiſdom and Goodneſs, ſince they naturally tended, both to beget Reverence in the Minds of Men towards his Meſſenger, and to reconcile them to the Belief and Obedience of his Heavenly Will.

NOW theſe Miracles our Saviour did openly, in the Temple, in the Synagogues, and on the Feſtivals, when the Concourſe of People was greateſt, and when the Doctors of the Law, who came on purpoſe to enſnare him, were ſitting by, and beholding what was done. Theſe he did readily, and with a Word's Speaking: For (r) Peace, be ſtill, quelled the Raging of the Winds and Waves; (s) Young Man, ariſe, reviv'd the Widow's Son; (t) Ephphatha, be opened, gave the deaf Man Hearing; and (u) Lazarus, come forth, rais'd him from the Grave, who had been four Days dead. Theſe he did frequently, and upon all proper Occaſions; for, from the Time that he enter'd upon his Miniſtry, ſcarce a Day paſs'd without ſome freſh Inſtance of his Power and Goodneſs, inſomuch that, if all his Actions of this Kind, had been particularly recorded, (x) the World itſelf (as St John, by an elegant Hyperbole, declares) would not contain the Books, which ſhould be written: And (what crowns all) theſe he did with a Deſign to eſtabliſh a Religion, whoſe Buſineſs it is, to give Men the moſt exalted Thoughts of God and his Providence, and the greateſt Certainty of future Rewards and Puniſhments; to oblige them, by the ſtrongeſt Motives, to obſerve and practiſe whatſoever Things are true, and honeſt, and juſt, and pure, and lovely, and of good Report; to perſuade them to mortify every inordinate Affection, and to attain thoſe excellent Diſpoſitions of Mind, which will make them reſemble God, and beſt prepare them for future Happineſs; in a Word, to eſtabliſh the Practice of the two great Virtues, the Love of God, and the Love of our Neighbour, upon theſe two excellent Principles, of Faith in God, as the Rewarder of thoſe that ſeek him, and Faith in Jeſus Chriſt, as the Saviour and Judge of Mankind.

Were perform'd without Aſſiſtance.

AND, if ſuch be the End and Deſign of the Chriſtian Religion, there is little Reaſon to ſuppoſe (as the Jews are very willing to object) that the Devil could have any Hand, in aſſiſting our Saviour to effect ſuch Miracles, as gave Credit to the firſt Appearance, and Strength and Succeſs to the Propagation of thoſe Doctrines, which were calculated on Purpoſe to deſtroy his Dominion in the World, and, upon its Ruins, to erect the Kingdom of God, and his Chriſt. The Devil is not ſo ſilly a Being, as to join Forces with his avowed Enemy, in order to ruin and depoſe himſelf: And, if our Saviour could hope for no Aſſiſtance from that Quarter, the Pretence of his doing his Miracles, † by Virtue of the Name Jehovah, ſtolen out of the Sanctuary, and uſ'd as a Charm, is a Fiction too groſs, and palpable, to ſtand in need of any Confutation.

And beyond the Competition of any other.

† The Account, which ſome later Jews give us of this Tranſaction, is thus related,——That, in the Time of Helena the Queen, Jeſus of Nazareth came into Jeruſalem, and in the Temple found a Stone, (on which the Ark of God was wont to reſt) whereon was written the Tetragrammaton, or more peculiar Name of God; that whoſoever ſhould get the Name into his Poſſeſſion, and be ſkilled in it, would be able to do what he pleas'd; that therefore their wiſe Men, fearing leſt any of the Iſraelites ſhould get that Name, and deſtroy the World, made two Dogs of Braſs, and plac'd them at the Door of the Sanctuary; that whenever any had gone in, and learn'd that Name, theſe Dogs were wont, at their coming out, to bark ſo terribly, that they forgot the Name, and the Letters they had newly learn'd. But, when Jeſus of Nazareth, ſay they, went in, he not only learn'd the Letters of this Name, but wrote them in a Parchment, and hid it, as he came out, in an Inciſion, which he had made in his Fleſh; and, tho' through the Barking of the Dogs, he had forgot the Name, yet he learn'd it afterwards from his Parchment: And it was by Virtue of this, ſay they, that Jeſus reſtor'd the Lame, healed the Leprous, rais'd the Dead, walked upon the Sea, and did all his other miraculous Works. Pug. Fidei, Part II. cap. viii. ſect. 6. as quoted in Kidder's Demonſtration Part I. p. 40.

† This Apollonius is, by the Enemies of Chriſtianity, ſet up as a Rival to our Bleſſed Saviour, in Point of his Life, Miracles, and Predictions; and therefore, it may not be improper, in this Place, to give our Reader a ſhort Sketch of ſome of the principal Incidents of his Life and Tranſactions. About three or four Years before the Vulgar Chriſtian Æra, he was born at Tyana, a Town of Cappadocia, (from whence he was nam'd Tyaneus) of an antient Family, and rich Parents; but to make his Birth more reſemble our Saviour's, 'tis ſaid, that Proteus, under the Form of a Sea God, acquainted his Mother, that he himſelf was to be born of her, and that, at the ſame Time, ſhe was ſurrounded with Swans, which aſſiſted at her Labour, and, by their Singing and Gaiety, ſeem'd to preſage the Infant's future Glory. However this be, while he was a Youth, he was obſerv'd to have a great natural Genius, an excellent Memory, and was in his Perſon ſo very beautiful, that he drew the Eyes of all Men upon him. When he was fourteen Years of Age, his Father ſent him to Tarſus in Cilicia, in order to ſtudy Rhetorick, but he choſe rather to apply himſelf to Philoſophy, and, in a few Years, profeſs'd himſelf of the Pythagorean Sect. Purſuant to this, he abſtain'd from the Fleſh of all Animals, as reputed impure, liv'd upon nothing but Fruits and Vegetables, and, tho' he did not condemn the Uſe of Wine, yet he choſe rather to abſtain from it, as being apt to diſturb the Serenity of the Mind. He was a Perſon of great Mortification and Abſtinence, renounc'd Marriage, and profeſs'd Continence, and affected to live in the Temple of Æſculapius, to make it be believ'd, that he was his peculiar Favourite, and, by his Aſſiſtance, was enabled to perform Cures. Before he appear'd in a publick Character, he kept Silence for the Space of five Years; but, as he did not totally refrain from Company, he uſually ſpoke by Signs, or, when there was a Neceſſity for it, wrote ſome Words. After this five Years Silence, he came to Antioch, and there endeavour'd to improve upon the Pagan Religion. The Doctrines which he taught were deliver'd in a plain, perceptive Manner, and with a better Grace and Authority, than the Philoſophers at that Time were accuſtom'd to. After ſome Stay at Antioch, he undertook a long Journey, in order to converſe with the Brachmans of India, and, in his Way, to viſit the Perſian Magi. At Nineveh he contracted him up for a great Worker of Miracles; and ſome, of late Times, have been bold enough to name him in Competition with our Bleſſed Saviour. But, beſides that this Hiſtory of Apollonius has no other Voucher than his Servant Damis, (who was confeſſedly a weak and ignorant Perſon, and, conſequently, very capable of being impoſ'd upon by the artful Juggles of his Maſter) the very Miracles, related therein, are, for the moſt part, ridiculous, unworthy the Character of a Prophet, an Acquaintance with one Damis, who attended him ever after, and wrote an Account of his Life, Sayings, and Actions, which have been tranſmitted to us in the Hiſtory of Philoſtratus the Sophiſt. Upon his Return from the Indies he went to Epheſus, where he was receiv'd with all the Tokens of Reſpect imaginable, was follow'd and admir'd by People of all Ranks and Conditions, and, by making his Obſervations upon the Chirping of a Bird, which came to call its Companions to pick up ſome Corn, which happen'd to be ſpilt, gain'd himſelf the Reputation of a very great Prophet. From Epheſus he remov'd to Athens, where he inſtructed the People in the Ceremonies of their Religion; in the Manner, and Time, and Place of their offering up Sacrifices, Libations, and Prayers, with other ſuperſtitious Rites; and where, by commanding a Devil to go out of a young Man, and, in Token of his being diſpoſſeſs'd, to overturn a Statue, which ſtood by, he obtain'd the Character of a mighty Worker of Miracles. In the twelfth Year of Nero he came to Rome, where, having ſpoken ſome diſreſpectful Words againſt the Emperor, he was proſecuted by his Favourite Tigellinus, but, to his great Surprize, when his Proſecutor open'd the Bill of Accuſation againſt him, he found nothing but a fair Piece of Paper, without one Word written in it; and not long after, upon his reſtoring a young Woman, who ſeem'd to fall down dead as ſhe was going to be marry'd, to Life again, he was accounted by all a great Magician at leaſt, if not a Perſon ſent from Heaven. When Nero order'd all Philoſophers to depart from Rome, he left the Place, and (to paſs by other Circumſtances of his itinerant Life) he was in Aſia Minor, when Domitian order'd him to be apprehended for ſpeaking with ſome Freedom againſt his Tyranny, and ſent to Rome; where, notwithſtanding the Emperor's cruel Uſage of him, he behav'd with incredible Magnanimity, and, upon his Trial being honourably acquitted, immediately vaniſh'd out of the Court, and was that very Day ſeen at Puteoli, which is very near fifty Leagues from Rome. When Domitian was ſlain, he reſided at Epheſus; and, as he was then diſcourſing to the People, he gave them to underſtand, that the fatal Stab was that Moment given him, which accordingly prov'd true; for not long after an Expreſs arriv'd, that Domitian was diſpatch'd in the Manner he had mention'd, and Nerva unanimouſly declar'd Emperor. Nerva, upon his Acceſſion to the Throne, is ſaid to have ſent Apollonius a Letter, deſiring him to come and aſſiſt at his Councils, to which he return'd an Anſwer by his Servant Damis, but before Damis came back his Maſter was dead; tho', as to the Place and Manner of his Death, we have no certain Account. After his Death however, he had Statues erected, and Divine Worſhip paid to him; but, as he left few or no Diſciples behind him, his Memory, which for a little while was greatly honour'd, dwindled away by Degrees, and, upon the Downfal of Idolatry, utterly ceas'd.

an

This Account we have from Philoſtratus, who, from the Commentaries of Damis, and a Book of one Maximus, which he happen'd to light on, wrote the Life of Apollonius, above an Hundred and Twenty Years after his Death; but whoever looks into it, will ſee how much his fabulous Hiſtory falls ſhort of the Gravity and Simplicity of the Goſpel. The Truth is, Julia, the Wife of the Emperor Severus, affected to be thought a learned Woman, and, therefore, ſhe ſet up for a Wit, which was attended with an immoderate Deſire, and Thirſt after Novelty. She was continually ſurrounded with Poets, Sophiſts, Grammarians, &c. Philoſtratus made one of the Number, and, from her he had the Memoirs of Damis, to which he added, either from common Fame, or his own Fancy, whatever he thought would hit the Taſte of the Empreſs, or work himſelf into the Favour of Caracalla, who had Apollonius in high Eſteem, and were both great Admirers of the Marvellous. So that, wherever the Subject came not up to the Magnificence, which the Author deſir'd, he uſually added all the Ornaments, which his Imagination could invent, and, without any Regard to Truth, or even Probability itſelf, (witneſs the Converſation between Apollonius and the Ghoſt of Achilles, and the long Digreſſions on the Panthers of Armenia, the Elephants, the Phœnix, the Satyrs, the Pygmie, &c.) made it not ſo much an Hiſtory, as a wild Romance; in which Light all the great Men, not only Chriſtians, but Pagans, and Ancients as well as Moderns, that have had occaſion to mention it, look upon it. Philoſtratus, however, might have a farther Deſign in writing the Life of Apollonius: For, as the Chriſtian Religion, by the Strength of its Miracles, had now made its Way in the World, thoſe, who endeavour'd to oppoſe it, and yet could not deny the Reality of its Facts, were at length reduc'd to this Expedient, viz. to produce Miracles in Paganiſm, and every other Argument, that they thought Chriſtianity could boaſt of, by Way of Contrapoſition. As therefore the Actions of Jeſus were handed down to us by the Four Evangeliſts, who wrote an Account of the principal Occurrences of his Life; ſo they, in like Manner, ſet about writing the Lives of their Philoſophers, in Hopes of finding their Account in thus oppoſing Miracles to Miracles, and Magick to the Power of God: And, for this Reaſon, they have been more eſpecially careful to accommodate the Tranſactions of their great Men to the more remarkable Paſſages in our Saviour's Life, as the learned Huetius ſhews, in many Inſtances relating to Apollonius, and thereupon concludes in theſe Words, "Id præterea ſpectaſſe videtur Philoſtratus, ut invaleſcentem jam Chriſti fidem & doctrinam "deprimeret, oppoſito hoc omnis doctrinæ ſanctitatis, & mirificæ virtutis fictitio ſimulacro. Itaque ad Chriſti exem"plar hanc expreſſit effigiem, & pleraque ex Jeſu Chriſti Hiſtoriâ Apollonio accommodavit, ne quid Ethnici Chriſtianis "invidere poſſent." Vid. Huet. Demonſt. Evang. Prophet, and (as the learned Photius ſpeaks) full of Follies, and monſtrous Tales. Nay, in the higheſt Inſtance of his miraculous Power, viz. his raiſing a dead Woman to Life again, (y) Philoſtratus himſelf ſuſpects (as he ſays the Company did) that there was ſome Confederacy and Colluſion in the Matter; but, if even it were not ſo, the Doctrines, which Apollonius taught, and the Zeal he profeſs'd for the Pagan Idolatry, together with his exceſſive Pride, Ambition, and vain Affectation of divine Honours, are a plain Indication, that his Miracles were falſe, and his moſt ſurprizing Performances, either the Effects of Magick, or downright Cheat and Impoſture.

TACITUS (z) indeed tells us of two Cures, one of a blind, and the other of a lame Perſon, which Veſpaſian pretended to work at Alexandria; but whoever reflects on the Situation of his Affairs at that Time, will perceive ſome Reaſon to ſuſpect a Colluſion. He was now in a Diſpute with himſelf what to do, whether to aſſume the Roman Empire, or reſtore the ancient Form of Government, a Commonwealth. The Reſtoration of the latter was what Dion and Euphrates, two eminent Philoſophers, adviſ'd; but Apollonius (whom he likewiſe conſulted upon this Occaſion) with great Vehemence perſuaded the contrary, and (being himſelf accuſtom'd to ſuch Artifices) might, not improbably, ſuggeſt to Veſpaſian the Neceſſity of ſome Miracle or other, in order to recommend him to the People as a Perſon highly favour'd by the Gods.

AND, indeed, if we conſider what an obſcure Perſon, and of what mean Original Veſpaſian was, there ſeems to be the greater Reaſon, why Apollonius, and others of that Party, ſhould think of ſome Expedient or other, to raiſe him a Reputation in the World, anſwerable to the new Station of Life, they had adviſ'd him to accept: And whoever conſiders farther (a) what various Artifices were, at that Time, made uſe of, to procure an Opinion of Divinity in the Emperors, will not much wonder, that ſuch Reports ſhould be ſpread of them, or that certain Perſons ſhould be ſuborn'd to feign ſuch Diſtempers, and then to give it out, that the Touch of the Emperor's Hand had cur'd them; tho' it muſt be confeſs'd, (b) ſome are of Opinion, that what is reported by Veſpaſian to this Purpoſe, cannot fairly be deny'd, and might perhaps be providentally intended, to give ſome Dignity and ſuperior Character to a Perſon, who (in Conjunction with his Son Titus) was appointed by God to be a ſignal Inſtrument of the Divine Vengeance on the Jewiſh Nation.

Eſpecially in the Number of them.

ALLOWING then, that God, for wiſe Ends of his Providence, might, now and then, permit ſome eminent Perſon to do a real Miracle; yet what is this to that vaſt Number, and great Variety recorded of our Saviour, who, in the ſmall Space of his Miniſtry, did more wonderful Works of this Kind, than what Moſes, and all the Prophets put together, from the earlieſt Account of Time, that we read of, are known to have done?

(c) THE Jews indeed, to ſwell the Account of Moſes's Miracles, reckon each of thoſe, that he did in Egypt, double; one, as a Miracle of Juſtice, in puniſhing Pharaoh and his People; and the other, as a Miracle of Mercy, in preſerving the Iſraelites from the like Deſtruction. But, after all their Pains and Contrivance, the Sum amounts to very little, in Compariſon to the many, that are recorded of our Bleſſed Saviour. The Miracles of all the Prophets put together, by the Jews own Computation, do not equal thoſe of Moſes; and yet we muſt remember, that Moſes liv'd an hundred and twenty Years, forty of which were one continu'd Scene of Action; and that the Compaſs of the Prophets, from the Creation of the World, to the Deſtruction of the ſecond Temple, includes Three Thouſand and ſome Hundreds.

hundreds. Lay this together, and it evidently follows, that ſuch extraordinary Demonſtrations of the Divine Preſence and Power were very thin, and ſparingly exhibited, when ſet againſt the innumerable Inſtances of them, in the three, or (at moſt) four Years Preaching of the Bleſſed Jeſus. And, if the Wonders related by the Evangeliſts, as done by himſelf, in ſo ſhort a Time, do far exceed what both Moſes and all the Prophets did, what ſhall we ſay to thoſe many more, that are not related? What to the infinitely more ſtill, that were done by the Apoſtles and Diſciples, in Confirmation of the Doctrine, he had taught? Doubtleſs, the miraculous Power, which he communicated to them, was infinitely great, when, in order to obtain Cures, (d) the People brought forth the Sick into the Streets, and laid them on Beds, that at leaſt the Shadow of Peter paſſing by might over-ſhadow ſome of them; and when, from (e) Paul's Body were brought unto the Sick Handkerchiefs and Aprons, and the Diſeaſes departed from them, and evil Spirits went out of them.

To ſum up what hath been ſaid on this Subject. Since a real Miracle is ſuch an Operation, as can be done by none but God, or ſuch as are appointed by him, and was therefore, in all Ages, acknowledged as an authentick Proof of a Divine Miſſion; ſince the Prophets, in their Predictions of the Meſſiah, repreſent him, as working Miracles of a kind and merciful Nature, and our Saviour, when he enter'd upon his Miniſtry, and aſſum'd that Character, diſplay'd a wonderful Power in Works of the ſame Kind; ſince that Power could proceed from no other Cauſe, but a Communication from God, and yet, to imagine, that God would communicate any Part of his Power to give Sanction to an Impoſtor, is a Thing repugnant to his ſacred Attributes; ſince, upon Examination, it appears, that all the Marks and Characters of true Miracles concur in the Works of Jeſus, but violent Suſpicions of Trick and Artifice in thoſe, that are nam'd in Competition with him; ſince, beſides theſe Characters of their Truth, the Number of thoſe, which he did, (beſides thoſe, that were done by Perſons, acting in his Name, and by his Authority) was greater, than what all the true Workers of Miracles, viz. Moſes and the Prophets, had done, through the whole Compaſs of the Old Teſtament: Since theſe Things appear to be thus, I ſay, we are under a Neceſſity to conclude, that our Bleſſed Saviour muſt have been the true Meſſiah, promis'd to the Jews, and characteriz'd in the Writings of their Prophets; that he was the great Meſſenger of the Covenant, ſent from God; for, (f) if he had not been of God, he could have done nothing; and, conſequently, that the Meſſage, which he deliver'd to us, containing this Covenant, or (what is all one) that the Religion, which he hath ſettled in the World, and confirm'd by ſo many inconteſtable Proofs (ſo far as the Teſtimony of Miracles is available) cannot but be true.

Matt. xxi. 10.

Our Saviour drives the Dealers of ſeveral Kinds out of the Temple.

From Matth. xx. 10. to the End, Mark xi. 15. to the End, Luke xix. 45. to the End, and John xii. 19. to the End.

Matt. xxi. 12.
Mark xi. 15.
Luke xix. 45.

UPON our Lord's Entry into Jeruſalem, with ſuch a vaſt Retinue of People, the Citizens were alarm'd, and began to enquire, who this great Perſon was? To which the Multitude, that accompany'd him, anſwer'd aloud, that it was Jeſus, the Prophet of Nazareth, a Town in Galilee. Having therefore permitted his Kingdom and Divine Authority to be thus proclaim'd by others, he proceeded, in the next Place, to exert it himſelf: For, going to the Temple, and there looking about him, he found the Court of the Gentiles notoriouſly profan'd, and diſhonour'd by Trading and Merchandize. That therefore he might end, as he had begun his Miniſtry, with the Reformation of his Father's Houſe, he drove out all the Buyers and Sellers (as he did three Years before) from the ſacred Ground; he overthrew the Tables of the Money-changers †, and the Stalls of thoſe, that ſold Doves; telling them, that they had made the Temple, which was deſervedly called an Houſe of † Theſe Money-Changers were not unlike our Merchants, or Bankers, who deal in Bills of Exchange, and either remit Money to foreign Parts, or anſwer ſuch Draughts, as, by their Correſpondents abroad, are made upon them: And, conſidering that the Jews (how far ſoever they liv'd from it) were oblig'd to repair to Jeruſalem, there to offer their Sacrifices, and pay their half Shekel, for the Uſe of the Temple, Exod. xxx. 13. the Inſtitution of ſuch Dealers in Money was highly neceſſary, that the Jews, in their ſeveral Diſperſions, who were to come up to Jeruſalem to worſhip, paying their Money to Merchants at home, might have it, to anſwer their Occaſions, ſafe from Thieves, and from the Trouble of Carriage, when they arriv'd at Jeruſalem. Whether therefore the Buſineſs of theſe Money-Changers was only to return Money from diſtant Parts, or to change foreign Money into current Coin, or larger Money into leſs Pieces, or perhaps to do all this, there was certainly nothing blame-worthy in the Profeſſion, had it not been for ſome intervening Abuſe. In like Manner, it may be ſaid of thoſe, who bought or ſold Cattle for Sacrifices; ſince it would have been highly inconvenient for every Worſhipper, who liv'd at a conſiderable Diſtance, to bring them up with him, ſuch Men were neceſſary in their Way, as were likewiſe the Sellers of Doves, becauſe every Iſraelite did not keep this Kind of Birds, and yet no one Creature was ſo often requir'd in Sacrifice as they. Our Saviour therefore, in this Tranſaction, muſt not be thought to blame all ſuch Traffick in general, but only to find fault with the People, for having taken up an improper Place for the Exerciſe of their reſpective Callings: And therefore, to let them know, that it was not out of Paſſion, or any peeviſh Reſentment againſt them, but purely in Obedience to a Divine Command, that he made this Reformation, he told them, that it was written, My Houſe ſhall be called an Houſe of Prayer. This is the Character, which the Prophet Iſaiah gives of it, Chap. lvi. 7. and if it be an Houſe appointed for Prayer, and other religious Offices, then is it no proper Place for the Tables of Money-Changers, and the Seats of thoſe, that ſell Doves, who have the Markets of Jeruſalem, and their own Shops and Houſes to trade in. Hammond's and Whitby's Annotations, and Surenhuſii Conciliationes in Loca V. T. apud Matthæum.

of Prayer, a Den of Thieves [†]. And, to let the People ſee, that he had both Commiſſion and Authority to act as he did, he cur'd, in that Inſtant, many blind and lame Perſons, that were brought to him into the Temple.

Matth. xxi. 15.

THE People indeed were filled with Admiration at the Sight of theſe Things; but the Chief-Prieſts and Scribes, when they ſaw the Miracles which he wrought, and heard the Acclamations of the Children, who cry'd out in the Temple, Hoſanna to the Son of David! were greatly enrag'd, and diſcover'd their Anger, by aſking him, If he heard what they ſaid? But he ſilenc'd their Queſtion, by ſhewing them, that, what was ſo diſpleaſing to them, did really fulfil the Scriptures, particularly, that Paſſage in the Pſalmiſt, where it is ſaid, that, [†] out of the Mouth of Babes and Sucklings, thou haſt perfected Praiſe. This Anſwer, however, did but enrage them the more, and put them upon ſeeking all Occaſions to deſtroy him, tho' their Dread of the People, (who heard him with the greateſt Eagerneſs and Attention) was ſome Check upon their Malice.

John xii. 20. Acquaints the People with his approaching Death, and teſtifies his Reſignation to it.

THE Jews were not the only Perſons, who came up to Jeruſalem at the Paſſover; for many devout Greeks [†] us'd likewiſe to reſort

---

[†] This Expreſſion is thought by ſome to be an Alluſion to thoſe Gangs of Robbers, which, at this Time, infeſted Judea, and us'd to hide themſelves in Holes, and Dens of the Mountains, as appears from the Hiſtory of Joſephus in ſeveral Places: But our Lord here plainly refers to that Paſſage in Jeremiah, where the Prophet introduces God complaining, Is this Houſe, which is called by my Name, become a Den of Robbers in your Eyes? Behold, even I have ſeen it, ſaith the Lord, Chap. vii. 11. But how could the Houſe of God become a Den of Robbers? How could ſuch Violence be committed in ſo ſacred a Place? St Jerom, in his Commentary upon Matth. xxi. 12, 13, aſcribes all this to the Avarice of the Prieſts, and gives us a lively Deſcription of the ſeveral Artifices, whereby they endeavour'd to extort Money. " In the Temple of Jeruſalem, ſays he, the fineſt and moſt ſpacious of any in the whole World, " whither Jews aſſembled almoſt from all Countries, Sacrifices of different Kinds, ſome for the Rich, and others for " the poorer Sort, were preſcrib'd by the Law; but, becauſe thoſe, who came from afar, often wanted ſuch Sacrifices, " the Prieſts took the Advantage to buy up all thoſe Beaſts, which were appointed for this Purpoſe, and, having ſold " them to thoſe, that wanted, receiv'd them at their Hands back again. Becauſe ſome, who came to worſhip, were " ſo very poor, that they had not Money enough to purchaſe ſo much as the leſſer Sacrifices, which were Birds; to " remedy this Inconveniency, the Prieſts ſet up Bankers, in one of the Courts of the Temple, to lend them Money upon " Security: But, finding that they could not do this, without tranſgreſſing the Law, which forbad Uſury, they had " recourſe to another Device, which was to appoint a Kind of Pawn-Brokers, inſtead of Bankers, i. e. Men, who, " for the Advance of a ſmall Sum, took Fruits, Herbs, and other Conſumables, inſtead of Uſe-Money. Our Lord " therefore having obſerv'd this Way of Traffick, which the Prieſts had ſet up in his Father's Houſe, not only expelled " their Agents, but arraign'd them likewiſe for a Pack of Thieves; for he is a Robber, ſays the Father, who makes " Lucre of Religion, and whoſe Worſhip is, not ſo much the Veneration he has for God, as the Opportunity of making his " own Intereſt and Advantage." Beauſobre's Annotations, and Calmet's Commentary.

[†] Theſe Words are cited from Pſalm viii. 2. and ſeem to vary a little from the Original, which is thus render'd, ——— Out of the Mouth of the very Babes and Sucklings thou haſt ordained Strength. But, when it is conſider'd, that the only Strength, which can proceed from the Mouth of Children, muſt be Praiſe, or Words put into their Mouths, to celebrate the Praiſes of the Meſſiah, the Phraſe in the Pſalmiſt, and in the Evangeliſt, muſt needs mean the ſame Thing; and our Saviour, in the Application of it to the chief Prieſts and Scribes, ſeems to inſinuate, " That theſe " Acclamations of the Children were not fortuitous, but by a Divine Inſtinct, and for the fulfilling of an antient Prophecy; and that therefore their declaring him to be the Meſſiah, or Son of David, ſhould be look'd upon as a " Kind of Call from Heaven, to inform, and inſtruct others, in what they were to do." Beauſobre's Annotations, and Surenbuſii Conciliat. ibid.

[†] Who theſe Grecians were, the beſt of our Commentators are not agreed. Some are of Opinion that they were meer Gentiles, who, either out of Curioſity, viz. to ſee the Magnificence of the Temple, the Solemnities of the Feaſt, or the Perſon of Jeſus, of whoſe Fame they had heard ſo much, or perhaps out of a Principle of Devotion, and to worſhip the God of Iſrael, might, at this Time, reſort to Jeruſalem: For the Pagan Religion, which admitted a Plurality of Gods, reſtrain'd none from worſhipping the Gods of other Nations, ſo long as they were not thereby tempted to abandon thoſe of their own. Others imagine, that they were real Jews, who being ſcatter'd in Grecian Provinces, after the Conqueſts, which Alexander the Great, and his Succeſſors made upon the Jews, ſtill continu'd in theſe Countries, but kept ſo cloſe to their ancient Religion, as to come in great Numbers, to Jeruſalem, upon the Return of every Paſſover. Theſe were generally called Helleniſts: And, that there was great Plenty of them in ſeveral Provinces of Aſia, is manifeſt from St Peter's Addreſs of his firſt Epiſtle to the Strangers, (as he calls them) who were ſcatter'd through Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Aſia-Minor, and Bithynia, 1 Pet. i. 1. but the moſt general Opinion is, that theſe Greeks were Proſelytes of the Gate, who worſhipp'd the God of Heaven and Earth, liv'd among the Jews, and conform'd to their Political Laws, but would not engage in Circumciſion, or the reſort thither at that Feaſt; and ſome of theſe, being deſirous to have a Sight of Chriſt, addreſs'd themſelves † to Philip, one of the Apoſtles, and he, by the Aſſiſtance of Andrew, had them introduc'd. Our Lord was, at that Time, diſcourſing to the Diſciples of many Things relating to his Paſſion, and, particularly, of the Efficacy of his Death, and what a powerful Means it would prove to convert the World to his Religion, more powerful indeed, than his Life could poſſibly be, even as Corn, tho' it dies in the Ground †, when ſown, riſes again with a vaſt Abundance and Increaſe. While he was thus diſcourſing of his Death, he ſeem'd, on a ſudden, to be ſeiz'd with a natural Horror † of its approaching Hour, and was going to requeſt of God a Reprieve from it; but then recollecting, that for this Purpoſe it was, that he came into the World, he chang'd his Petition, and, with a reſolv'd Acquieſcence in his good Pleaſure, deſir'd of him, in what Method, he ſhould think moſt proper to glorify his Name; whereupon he was anſwer'd by a Voice from Heaven †, which ſome of the Company took for a Clap of Thunder, and others for an Angel's ſpeaking to him) that he had already glorified it †, and would glorify it again.

John xii. 30.

THIS Voice, he told them, was not ſo much for his Information in the Will of Heaven, as it was for their Conviction of his Divine Miſſion; and ſo he went on diſcourſing to them of his Death, and the beneficial Effects of it, until ſome of them, perceiving in what he ſaid an Inconſiſtency (as they thought) with ſome Paſſages of Scripture, told him, that they could not rightly comprehend what he meant by his Death, ſince ſome Prophecies † had aſſur'd them, that the Meſſiah was to live for Obſervance of their Ceremonies; and they came to Jeruſalem at this Time, not becauſe they were permitted to celebrate the Feaſt, along with the Jews, but becauſe they were indulg'd the Privilege to behold their Solemnities, and to pay their Adorations to the Creator of the Univerſe (even while the Jews were in the Height of their publick Worſhip) in the Court of the Gentiles, as appears from the Caſe of the Eunuch of Queen Candace, Acts viii. 27. Baſnage's Hiſtory of the Jews, lib. v. c. 6. Calmet's Commentary. Pool's and Hammond's Annotations.

† Theſe Greeks, ſays Grotius, ſeem to have been Syro-Phœnicians, who dwelt perhaps about Tyre and Sidon, and ſo might eaſily be acquainted with the Galileans, with whom they had Commerce, and with Philip of Bethſaida, to whom they made Application for Acceſs to Chriſt.

† Our Saviour's Words upon this Occaſion are not amiſs paraphras'd in this Manner, ——— "Look, as you "ſee in your ordinary Huſbandry, the Grains of Wheat are firſt bury'd in the Earth, and loſe their Form, before "they ſpring, and ſhoot up again, and bring forth Fruit; ſo it muſt be with me. I muſt be firſt lifted up, before I "ſhall draw Men after me; I muſt firſt be crucify'd, before my Goſpel ſhall be preach'd to all Nations, and the Fulneſs of the Gentiles ſhall come in: But when I am once dead, and have riſen, then ſhall ye ſee this abundant Fruit." Pool's Annotations.

† That Men might not have it to ſay, that our Bleſſed Saviour, in Point of Suffering, was no proper Example for our Imitation, becauſe he had no Dread of Death, or Senſe of Pain, to make Sufferings diſtaſteful to him, whereas we are moſt tenderly affected with theſe Things, he herein ſhews us, that he had the ſame natural Concern for Life, and Dread of Death, that we have, only that he over-rul'd them by a Deſire of promoting his Father's Glory. Whitby's Annotations.

† The only Way of Revelation, which the Jews, ſince the Babyloniſh Captivity, and Extinction of their Prophets, Haggai, Zechariah, and Malachi, pretend to, is that of Bath-Koll, or the Daughter of a Voice, ſo call'd, becauſe it has ſome Reſemblance (tho', as to its Diſtinctneſs, but an imperfect one) of that Voice, which was utter'd from the Holy of Holies, when the Lord ſpake to Moſes, and (according to them) it is the Will of God reveal'd in Thunder from Heaven; and therefore, tho', upon this Occaſion, ſome of the Company thought it thundered, and others, that an Angel ſpake, yet neither of them were miſtaken, becauſe, in this Bath-Koll, there was always Thunder join'd with an articulate Voice. Hammond's Annotations.

† I have glorified it, by cauſing my Glory to be publiſh'd, and proclaimed in the World, by thy Preaching, and by the Miracles, which I have given in Teſtimony of thy Miſſion: And I will glorify it again, by thy Reſurrection and Exaltation to the Right Hand of Glory, by the Miſſion of the Holy Ghoſt upon thy Apoſtles, and by their carrying the Sound of the Goſpel even unto the Ends of the Earth. Pool's and Whitby's Annotations.

† The Prophecies, from whence the Jews may be ſuppoſed to have drawn this Concluſion, are, ——— 2 Sam. vii. 16. where God, by the Mouth of Nathan, promiſes David, Thine Houſe and thy Kingdom ſhall be eſtabliſh'd for ever before thee; thy Throne ſhall be eſtabliſh'd for ever; in much the ſame Words, wherein he had ſworn unto David himſelf, Pſalm lxxxix. 29. His Seed will I make to endure for ever, and his Throne as the Days of Heaven. To the ſame Purpoſe they found the Prophet Iſaiah promiſing, Chap. ix. 7, My Servant David ſhall be their King for ever, and for ever. But to this Objection he made no other Reply, than that it well behov'd them to make good Uſe of his Inſtructions for the ſhort Time they were to have them; and ſo he withdrew from them, as well perceiving, that neither his Divine Diſcourſes, nor miraculous Cures, could gain the Faith of any, except the Populace; for, tho' ſome of their Rulers might believe in him, yet ſuch was their Timidity, that they durſt not declare it openly, for fear of Excommunication, and becauſe they loved the Praiſe of Men, more than the Praiſe of God.

John xii. 44.

TOWARDS the Evening however, he return'd again to the Temple †, and exhorted the People to believe in him, as a Meſſenger ſent from God to offer Salvation to Mankind; and, in caſe that they perſiſted in their Infidelity, he threaten'd them with Divine Vengeance in the laſt Day, when the very Goſpel, which he then preach'd to them, would riſe up in Judgment againſt them, and condemn them; and, with theſe Words, he left the Temple, and, taking his Apoſtles with him, return'd to Bethany, where he lodg'd that Night.

MONDAY in PASSION-WEEK. Matt xxi. 18. Mark xi. 12. Curſes a Fig-Tree, preaches in the Temple, argues with the Chief-Prieſts and Scribes, and reproves their Hypocriſy, &c.

THE next Morning, as he return'd to Jeruſalem, finding himſelf a little hungry, he went to a Fig-Tree, that was in the Way, in Hopes of finding ſome Fruit upon it: But, when he found none, to ſignify his Almighty Power, he curs'd the Tree, and ſo, proceeding to the Temple, began again to clear it of all the Traders, that were got again into it; and there continu'd all the Day long, teaching, and inſtructing the People. While he was doing this, the Chief-Prieſts, Scribes, and Rulers of the People, knowing that he had no Commiſſion from the Sanhedrim †, came, and demanded of him, by what Authority he proceeded in that Manner; but, inſtead of anſwering their Queſtion directly, he put another to them, viz. Whether the Baptiſm of John was of Divine, or only of Human Inſtitution? To ſay that it was of Divine Inſtitution, would be to accuſe themſelves of Impiety and Incredulity; and to ſay that it was purely human, would be to provoke the People (who all look'd upon him as a Prophet) to ſtone them; and therefore, in this Dilemma, they concluded, that Ignorance would be the beſt Anſwer, and thereupon declar'd, that they could not tell; to which our Saviour rejoin'd, "Neither is it neceſſary for me to "give you an Account of my Commiſſion "and Authority, ſince you ſeem to grant, "that a Man may lawfully preach, and "baptize, and entertain Diſciples, as John "did, without the Appointment and Per-"miſſion of the Sanhedrim.", And ſo he proceeded and of his Government there ſhall be no End: But what ſeemed to expreſs the Matter in the cleareſt Terms was this Paſſage in Daniel, Chap. vii. 13, 14. And behold, one like the Son of Man came with the Clouds of Heaven, and came to the Ancient of Days, &c. and there was given him Dominion, and Glory, and a Kingdom, &c. His Dominion is an everlaſting Dominion, which ſhall not paſs away, and his Kingdom that, which ſhall not be deſtroyed. Thus the Jews wrongfully apply'd to the Perſon of the Meſſiah the Things, which related to his Kingdom; but then they gave little or no Heed to what the ſame Prophets ſaid of the Body, wherein the Meſſiah was to ſuffer, and of his Hands and Feet, which were to be pierced, Pſalm xxii. 16.—xl. 6. of his giving up his Life a Sacrifice for Sin, Iſaiah liii. 12. and of his being cut off, but not for himſelf, Dan. ix. 26. all which was not incompatible with his abiding for ever; ſeeing that, after his Sufferings, he was to riſe again. Pſalm xli. 10. and enter into Glory, 1 Pet. i. 11. So that, by comparing theſe Things together, they might have eaſily remov'd this Scruple, eſpecially when he had told them ſo often, and they ſo well remember'd that he had told them, that, after three Days, he would riſe again. Whitby's and Beauſobre's Annotations.

† 'Tis very probable, that the Prieſts, who had the Advantage of letting theſe Shops, and were therefore not ſo well pleas'd with the Reformation, which our Saviour had made, order'd the Traders to re-aſſume their Places, promiſing to know of him, by what Authority he made thoſe Innovations. Calmet's Commentary.

† It is pretended by ſome, that the Perſon, who preach'd in the Temple, was to have a Licence from the Sanhedrim, but that any might ſpeak publickly in the Synagogues without any ſuch Faculty, becauſe we find our Saviour preaching in the latter, almoſt every Sabbath-Day, without any Moleſtation. However this be, 'twas certainly a vain Queſtion, for the Chief-Prieſts and Rulers to aſk our Lord, by whoſe Authority he did thoſe Things; after they had ſeen his Miracles, and knew that he claimed his Commiſſion from God. Calmet's Commentary, and Whitby's Annotations.

(a) Matth. xxi. 28.

† By the Man in the Parable, is ſignify'd God, and by his two Sons, the Jews and the Gentiles. The Jews are the ſecond Son; They promis'd to God a perfect Obedience, and yet did nothing: The Gentiles are the other Son, who, at firſt, refuſed to obey, and gave themſelves up to Idolatry, and all Manner of Wickedneſs, but, upon the Preaching of the Goſpel, repented; and, after their Converſion, apply'd themſelves in earneſt to do the Will of God. The Parable, according to our Lord's own Interpretation of it, Matth. xxi. 32, is applicable likewiſe to two Kinds of Jews,——the Scribes and Phariſees, who pretended to ſo much Religion, and ſuch mighty Zeal for the Performance of the Law, when, in Reality, they obſerved none of its weightier Precepts; and the Publicans and Sinners, who, tho' at firſt, they liv'd in Practices quite abhorrent to the Precepts of Religion, yet, upon the Preaching of John the Baptiſt, were ſeveral of them converted, and attending to the Doctrine of Chriſt, and his Apoſtles, in Proceſs of Time, became obedient to their Heavenly Father's Will. Ver. 31. Calmet's Commentary.

(b) Matth. xxi. 33.

† For the Explication of this Parable we muſt obſerve,——That the Houſeholder here, Matth. xxi. 33, is Almighty God, and the Vineyard is the Jewiſh People, conſider'd in their ſpiritual Capacity; that his planting and hedging it about ſignifies his peculiar Favour and Providence, in communicating to them his Will, and, by Laws, and Ordinances peculiar to themſelves, diſtinguiſhing them from all other Nations to be his own People; that the Wine-Preſs, and Tower, and other ſuitable Conveniencies, denote the Temple and Altar, which he built among them, together with all thoſe Advantages, and Opportunities of ſerving him acceptably, which he afforded them; that the Huſbandmen to whom this Vineyard was let out, were the Prieſts and Levites, the Doctors and Rulers of that Church and People, who are here repreſented as wanting in their Duty, and negligent in cultivating the Vineyard, or inſtructing the People committed to their Charge; that the Fruits are no other than Returns of Duty, proportion'd to the Advantages of knowing and performing it; that the Servants ſent to demand the Fruits were the Prophets, whom God, from Time to Time, commiſſion'd to reprove, exhort, and quicken to their Duty, both Prieſts, and People, by Denunciations of Vengeance, and Promiſes of Reward; that the Son, whom he ſent at laſt, was our Bleſſed Saviour, whom the Jewiſh Prieſts and Rulers treated in no better Manner, than they had done the Prophets of old, but, inſtead of reverencing him as the Son of God, and as he prov'd himſelf to be by divers Manifeſtations of Divine Power, put him to a cruel and ignominious Death; and therefore, well might the Lord of the Vineyard deſtroy theſe wicked Men, &c. as we find from the Jewiſh Hiſtorian Joſephus, as well as other Writers, that God, for their great Impiety, brought the Roman Armies upon that Nation, and, by them, burnt their City and Temple, deſtroy'd and diſpers'd the People, and carry'd his Goſpel to the Gentiles, to other Huſbandmen, who ſhould render him the Fruits in their Seaſons, Ver. 41. Calmet's Commentary. Whitby's Annotations, and Stanhope, on the Epiſtles and Goſpels, Vol. IV.

(c) Matth. xxii. 2.

† The King in this Parable repreſents God the Father; the Son, the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, (who is frequently deſcrib'd as the Spouſe of his Church) and the Marriage-Feaſt, the Diſpenſation of the Goſpel. The Gueſts, that were firſt invited to the Feaſt, were the Jews; the Servants ſent forth to call them, were the Prophets, John the Baptiſt, and the Apoſtles; upon their Refuſal, the other Gueſts, brought in to ſupply their Room, were the Gentiles; and the Perſon, who wanted the Wedding-Garment, is an Emblem of all thoſe, who profeſs and receive, but do not live up to, the Principles of Chriſt's Religion. Calmet's Commentary, and Stanhope, on the Epiſtles and Goſpels, Vol. III.

† The Herodians are commonly, and moſt probably, ſuppos'd to ſignify the Partiſans, and Favourers of Herod; but what their Principle was, as to the other Matter now in hand, is not ſo generally agreed. Some think them Enemies to the Roman Government, and that they only watch'd a favourable Opportunity to make Herod's Family abſolute. Others think them entirely in the Intereſt of the Emperor, as Herod himſelf then was; for having, by his Indulgence, been advanc'd to the Regal State, he acted for, and under him, in collecting the Cuſtoms and publick Dues. This Opinion ſeems the more probable, becauſe it is more agreeable to the Phariſees preſent Deſign: For, had they ſent Perſons all of one Sentiment, Chriſt might have eaſily ſatisfy'd them all; but now, by ſending Men of different Judgments, they made it impoſſible for him to content both Parties, ſince, in determining for the Payment of the Tribute, he muſt have given Offence to the Phariſees, and, in Effect, renounc'd thoſe Liberties and Privileges, which ſome of the Jewiſh Doctors inſiſted upon; and, in pronouncing againſt it, he was ſure to incur the Herodians Diſpleaſure,

UPON the Defeat given to theſe two Parties, the Sadducees came to him with a Queſtion, and a Difficulty, that they thought inſurmountable. For, as they had no Belief of a Reſurrection, they put a Caſe to him of one Woman, who, according to the Direction of their Law, had been marry'd to ſeven Brothers ſucceſſively, and thereupon deſire to know whoſe Wiſe ſhe Diſpleaſure, and make himſelf obnoxious to the Juriſdiction of the Civil Sword. The Herodians therefore may well be preſum'd to have been Perſons of a Principle different to that of the Phariſees, whoſe Addreſs and Cunning upon this Occaſion ſeems to have lain chiefly in the Management of the Meſſengers. Stanhope, on the Epiſtles and Goſpels, Vol. IV.

† The State of the Queſtion, truly taken, ſeems to be this, ——The Government of the Jews had fallen into the Hands of the Maccabees, and, in Succeſſion, to one of them, nam'd Alexander. He had two Sons, Hyrcanus and Ariſtobulus, the younger of which made War upon the elder, and aſſum'd to himſelf the Government. Hyrcanus, and his Party, being not able to reſiſt him, called in the Aſſiſtance of the Romans. Pompey, at their Requeſt, beſieges Jeruſalem, and had the Gates ſurrender'd to him by a Faction within, that favour'd Hyrcanus; but Ariſtobulus and his Adherents fought it out, till, at laſt, they were vanquiſh'd and overpower'd. The Romans put Hyrcanus in Poſſeſſion of the Government; but, at the ſame Time, oblig'd him to hold it by their Favour and Permiſſion, which laid the Foundation of great and laſting Diſſenſions among the Jews; ſome ſubmitting to the Roman Power, as thinking they had a fair Title both by Conqueſt and Surrender; while others objected, that the Surrender was made by a Party only, and not the whole Body of the People; that it was not Conqueſt, but Treachery, which brought Jeruſalem to their Mercy; and, conſequently, that they were Uſurpers, and Hyrcanus and his Followers Betrayers of their Country. That which contributed not a little to make this Controverſy ſtill greater, was, what Joſephus and Euſebius relate concerning Judas the Gaulonite. He, about the Time of the Taxation, in which (as St Luke ſays) our Saviour was born, diſquieted the Minds of many, and repreſented the Decree of Auguſtus for that Purpoſe, as a Mark of Infamy and Servitude not to be borne. This Man is ſaid to have inſtituted a particular Sect, one of whoſe Tenets was, ——That no Jew ought to pay Tribute, or to acknowledge any Sovereign Lord, but God only; and that they were his peculiar People, and therefore bound to maintain their Liberty, eſpecially againſt profane and uncircumcis'd Pretenders, ſuch as the Roman Emperors were. So that the Paying of Tribute to Cæſar was not, at this Time, a Queſtion of mere Curioſity, but a Matter of Moment, with Regard to Practice; nor was it a Point of Bravery only, in the Eſteem of the Phariſees, and others of that Party, but a Scruple of Conſcience, and a Debate of Religion, whether this Tribute ſhould be paid or not. Stanhope, on the Epiſtles and Goſpels, Vol. IV.

† Every one knows, that the Roman Emperors were wont to diſperſe their Money through all the Provinces belonging to their Juriſdiction; that this Money was ſtamp'd with the Image, or Buſt of the Emperor, on one Side, and on the Reverſe, with ſome Figure or other, repreſenting Victory, Plenty, Peace, or the like; and that this Tribute, or Capitation-Tax, (which, according to Ulpian, the Males from ſourteen, and the Females from twelve Years old, were oblig'd to pay) was uſually collected in this Money, and no other, as the only current Coin at Rome. Calmet's Commentary.

† Some Interpreters are of Opinion, that our Saviour's Words do not determine Cæſar's Right to demand Tribute: But, ſince the Jews had now ſubmitted to the Roman Government, (as they had formerly done to the Aſſyrian) which national Submiſſion (with Promiſe of Fidelity) having now obtain'd about an hundred Years, was a juſt Ground for Cæſar's Right; ſince, beſides this, Cæſar had indulg'd them in the Exerciſe of their Religion, and the Enjoyment of their Civil Rights; had fought their Battles, and protected them againſt the common Enemy, the Arabians, and Parthians, and the like; ſince, more eſpecially, it was a receiv'd Maxim among the Jews, that wherever the Money of any Perſon was own'd, as the current Coin of the Kingdom, there the Inhabitants acknowledg'd that Perſon to be their Lord and Governor; and ſince the Jews accepted, and traffick'd with Cæſar's Money, and held it current in all their Payments, our Saviour's Anſwer, Render therefore unto Cæſar, which is founded upon their own Principles, muſt needs be deem'd a poſitive Declaration of Cæſar's Right to receive Tribute, and ſuch other Acknowledgments, as belong'd to the State and Dignity of the Poſt, wherein Providence had plac'd him. It might indeed be objected (ſays Grotius, on Matth. xxii. 20.) that the Romans ruled over the Jews, and Cæſar over the Romans, in Fact only, and without any Right to do ſo; but Chriſt ſhews, that this Objection ſignifies nothing to the Matter in hand: For, ſince Peace cannot be ſecur'd without Forces, nor Forces had without Pay, nor Pay without Taxes or Tribute, it follows, that Tribute ought to be paid to the Perſon actually governing (ſo long as he continues to govern) in Conſideration of the common Safety and Protection, which are ſecur'd by the preſent Poſſeſſor of the Government, whoever that Poſſeſſor be. Whitby's Annotations, and Stanhope, on the Epiſtles and Goſpels, Vol. IV.

† The Diſcourſe of the Sadducees was founded upon this Miſtake, ——— That, if there would be a Reſurrection of Bodies, there would neceſſarily follow a Revival of the ſame Relations likewiſe, and that the State of the World to come would be like the State of this preſent World, in which, for the Propagation and Continuance of Mankind, Men and Women marry, and are given in Marriage; which groſs Notion of theirs our Saviour endeavours to rectify. Pool's Annotations.

† The Words, which our Saviour produces in Proof of the Reſurrection, are thoſe, which God uſes to Moſes, I am the God of thy Father, the God of Abraham, the God of Iſaac, and the God of Jacob, Exod. iii. 6. and the Argument, which is imply'd in them, is this, ——— That, ſince to be the God of any one is a federal Expreſſion, which denotes God to be a kind Benefactor, who either doth, or will do good to ſuch Perſons, as are in his Favour, and under his Protection; ſince God is not the God of the Dead, and can have no Regard or Conſideration for ſuch, as are mere Non-Entitites, or ſo dead, as never to return to Life again; and ſince, in this Life, Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, receiv'd no ſuch ſignal Kindneſſes from the Almighty, as anſwer the emphatical Expreſſion of his being their God, it muſt neceſſarily follow, that God, in declaring himſelf to be their God, did ſolemnly engage himſelf to make them happy after this Life, according to what the Author to the Hebrews obſerves, wherefore God is not aſhamed to be called their God; for he hath prepared for them a City, Heb. xi. 16. This Way of arguing was of great Force againſt the Sadducees, who deny'd the Immortality of the Soul, as well as the Reſurrection of the Body; and, at the ſame Time, it fully proves the Reſurrection of the Body: For, ſince the Souls of Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, were not the entire Perſons of Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, which conſiſted of Bodies, as well as Souls, it would from hence follow, that God could truly be their God, i. e. their Rewarder and bounteous Benefactor, no other Way, than by a Reſurrection of their Bodies, to be re-united to their proper Souls. Pool's and Beauſobre's Annotations, and Tillotſon's Sermons, Vol. I.

‖ The Perſon, whom we here render Doctor, is, by St Matthew, Chap. xxii. 35, called a Lawyer, and by St Luke, Chap. xx. 39, a Scribe; but in this Diverſity of Words there is no Difference of Senſe: For the Scribes were of two Sorts, or had at leaſt two Offices; the one was, to ſit in the Chair of Moſes, Matth. xxiii. 2. i. e. to read and interpret the Law of Moſes to the People; the other, to expound to them the Traditions, which they pretended to have receiv'd from their Fore fathers. The Name of Scribe they ſeem to have deriv'd from Ezra, (about 500 Years before Chriſt) who is ſo frequently ſtiled a Scribe of the Law of the Lord, who read in the Book of the Law, and expounded it, Ezra vii. 12. Neh. viii. 1. and xii. 36. &c. And, becauſe the Traditions, which they taught, and oblig'd the People to obſerve, were called, νόμιμα, or Laws, they thence had the Appellation of νομικοὶ, or Lawyers: And, as ſome of the Scribes were the Perſons appointed to copy out the Bible for ſuch as had Occaſion for it, and to take Care of the Preſervation of the Purity of the Text; ſo others employ'd themſelves, in taking the like Pains about the Traditions of the Elders, and from thence, very likely, (tho' they were all of the ſame Order of Men) they might have different Denominations. Whitby's Annotations, and the Introduction to Echard's Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory.

† This was no frivolous or impertinent Queſtion, but what, at this Time, divided the greateſt Part of the learned Men among the Jews; ſome giving the Preference to the Obſervation of the Sabbath; others to the Ordinance of Circumciſion; and others, to the Precept of Sacrifices; never conſidering the great Command recorded in Deut. vi. 5. Thou ſhalt love the Lord thy God with all thy Heart, and with all thy Soul, and with all thy Might; or that other recorded in Levit. xix. 18. Thou ſhalt Love thy Neighbour as thyſelf, until our Saviour reminded them of them. Whitby's Annotations, and Calmet's Commentary.

† That by our Neighbour here we are to underſtand every other Perſon, who is capable of Kindneſs from us, or ſtands in need of our Help, is evident from our Saviour's Determination in the Caſe of the Jew and the good Samaritan; from the Examples we are called upon to imitate in this Affection, viz. the Love of God, and our Bleſſed Saviour; and from theſe Evangelical Precepts, which extend this Duty to all Men: But by the loving our Neighbour as ourſelves it is not requir'd, either that we ſhould love him from the ſame inward Principles, which excite our Affections to ourſelves, or that we ſhould love him to the ſame Degree and Proportion, that we love ourſelves; but only that we ſhould make the Affection, which we bear to ourſelves, the Rule we are to follow, in expreſſing our Love to him; or, (in other Words) that we ſhould love him in all the Inſtances, wherein we expreſs our Love to ourſelves, tho' not in an equal Meaſure. Whitby's Annotations.

† The Words in the Text are,——— On theſe Two Commandments hang all the Law and the Prophets, Matth. xxii. 40. which are a Metaphor, taken from the Cuſtom, mention'd by Tertullian, of hanging up their Laws in a public Place to be ſeen of all Men; and import, that in them is contain'd all, that the Law and the Prophets do require, in Reference to our Duty to God and Man. For, tho' there be ſome Precepts of Temperance, which we owe to ourſelves, yet are they ſuch, as we may be mov'd to perform from the true Love of God, and of our Neighbour. For the Love of God will preſerve us from all Impatience, Diſcontent, and evil Luſtings. It will make us watchful over ourſelves to keep a good Conſcience, as being ſollicitous for our eternal Welfare: And the Love of our Neighbour will reſtrain us from all angry Paſſions, ſuch, as Envy, Malice, and other Perturbations, which ariſe againſt him; ſo that theſe two Commands may be very juſtly called an Abridgment, or Compendium of the whole Scripture. Whitby's Annotations, and Calmet's Commentary.

(d) Pſal. cx. 1.

† 'Tis remark'd of our Bleſſed Saviour's Miracles, that they were all Works of Mercy and Beneficence; and that, if any of them had a contrary Tendency, they were always ſhewn upon brute and inanimate Creatures, and that too, not without a charitable Intent of conveying ſome ſymbolical Inſtruction to the Spectators, as this Withering of the Fig-Tree was to repreſent to the Jewiſh Nation their approaching Doom. Beauſobre's Annotations.

† The Command to forgive thoſe, that have offended us, before we pray, not only ſhews, that no Reſentments of what our Brother hath done ſhould ſtick long upon our Spirits, becauſe they indiſpoſe us for that Duty, which we ought continually to be prepar'd for; but that there is likewiſe ſome Kind of Forgiveneſs to be exercis'd, even towards him, that does not aſk it, nor ſhew any Tokens of his Repentance, viz. that we ſhould not only free our Minds from all Deſires of Revenge, and ſo far forget the Injury, as not to upbraid him with it; but be inclin'd likewiſe to ſhew him Kindneſs, and ready to do him any good Turn: For what the Law requir'd of a Jew to do to his Enemy's Beaſt, Exod. xxiii. 4, 5, that, without all Controverſy, the Goſpel requires of a Chriſtian to do to his offending Brother. Whitby's Annotations.

† It was a common Saying among the Jews, when they were minded to commend any one of their Doctors for his great Dexterity in ſolving difficult Queſtions, that ſuch an one was a Rooter up of Mountains; and, in Alluſion to this Adage, our Saviour tells his Diſciples, that, if they had Faith, they might ſay to a Mountain, be thou removed, and be thou caſt into the Sea, and it ſhould be done, Matth. xxi. 21, i. e. that, in Confirmation of the Chriſtian Faith, they ſhould be able to do the moſt difficult Things. For, beſides that our Saviour's Words are not to be taken in a literal Senſe, they are likewiſe to be reſtrain'd to the Age of Miracles, and to the Perſons, to whom they were ſpoken, viz. the Apoſtles, and firſt Propagators of the Chriſtian Religion, becauſe Experience teaches us, that this is no ordinary and ſtanding Gift belonging to the Church. Whitby's Annotations.

BEFORE he left the Temple, he took notice how the People threw their Money into the Treaſury †; and among many, who offer'd very plentifully, obſerving a poor Woman caſt in her two Mites, (which amount to no more than a Farthing) he called his Apoſtles, and aſſur'd them, that that poor Widow had been more liberal, than any of the reſt, becauſe their Oblations proceeded from their Superfluity, but ſhe from her Indigence had given all ſhe had.

Matt. xxiv. 1. Mark xiii. 1.

IN the Afternoon, as they were returning to Bethany, his Apoſtles took a View of the ſeveral Buildings of the Temple, and were making their Remarks of the Largeneſs of its Stones *, the Richneſs of its Ornaments *, and the Beauty and Statelineſs of the whole; when our Saviour acquainted them, that, how glorious ſoever it might appear at preſent, it would not be long, before the whole Structure ſhould be ſo entirely ruin'd, that there ſhould * not ſo much as one Stone be left upon another.

† The firſt Inſtitution of this Treaſury we find in 2 Kings xii. 9. where it is ſaid, that Jehoida the Prieſt took a Cheſt, and bored an Hole in the Lid of it, and ſet it beſide the Altar, on the Right-Side, as one goeth into the Houſe of the Lord, and the Prieſts, that kept the Door, put therein all the Money, that was brought into the Houſe. This Money was, at that Time, given for the Reparation of the Temple, and, in After-Ages, the Money caſt into the Treaſury, even in our Saviour's Time, was deſign'd, not only for the Relief of the Poor, but for ſacred Uſes, and the Adorning of the Temple, which might occaſion Joſephus (in Bello. Jud. lib. vi. c. 14.) to ſay, that the Temple was built, not only with the Bounty of Herod, but with the Money contain'd in the holy Treaſury likewiſe, and with the Tributes, which were ſent from all Parts of the World. Whitby's Annotations.

* Joſephus, who gives us a Deſcription of the Temple built by Herod, tells us, among other Things, that the whole Fabrick was made of durable white Stone, ſome of which were five and twenty Cubits long, eight in Height, and twelve in Breadth. Antiq. lib. xv. c. 14.

* Theſe Ornaments were the Spoils, which their Kings had taken in War; the rich Preſents, which foreign Princes, upon certain Occaſions, had made; and the coſtly Gifts, which the Jews, from all Parts of the World, us'd to ſend to the Temple at Jeruſalem. Theſe were called, ἀναθέματα, becauſe they were hung againſt the Walls, and the Pillars of the Temple, for the People to behold; and, when Herod had re-built it, he not only re-plac'd all the former Ornaments, but added ſeveral others, eſpecially the Spoils, which he took in his War with the Arabians, and a Vine of maſſy Gold, of prodigious Weight and Value, which was his own free Gift. Joſeph. Antiq. and Calmet's Commentary.

* This Prophecy of our Bleſſed Saviour was, in a great Meaſure, accompliſh'd about forty Years after, when (as ſeveral Jewiſh Authors tells us) Taurus, i. e. Terentius Rufus, whom Titus left chief Commander of the Army in Judea, did with a Plow-Share tear up the Foundations of the Temple, and thereby ſignally fulfilled the Words of the Prophet, Therefore ſhall Zion for your Sakes be plowed as a Field, and Jeruſalem ſhall become Heaps, and the Mountains of the Lord as the High-Places of the Foreſt, Micah iii. 12. It can hardly be thought however, but that, notwithſtanding this Demoliſhment, there might probably be left one Stone upon another, and therefore ſomething more was wanting towards the literal Completion of our Saviour's Prophecy, to which the Emperor Julian, in ſome Meaſure, contributed: For, having given the Jews Licence to re-build their Temple at Jeruſalem, they took away every Stone of the old Foundation to help to build their new Edifice; but Heaven prevented their Deſign: For Flaſhes of Lightning (as our beſt Hiſtorians tells us) burſt out from the Foundation they had dug, and ſo blaſted and terrify'd them, that they were forc'd to give over their Enterprize, after they had pulled up, and remov'd all the Remains of the old Temple. Whitby's Annotations, and Calmet's Commentary, Vid. *Ammian. * In the fourth Year of Claudius (as Euſebius informs us) there happen'd a great Famine, which oppreſs'd all the Roman Empire, but more eſpecially Paleſtine, where many periſh'd (according to Joſephus) for Lack of Food; (Antiq. lib. xx. c. 3.) And the ſame Hiſtorian informs us, that, when one Niger was ſlain by the Jews, he imprecated Famine and Peſtilence upon their Cities, which God accordingly inflicted. De Bello Jud. lib. iv. c. 23.

* In the Reigns of Claudius and Nero, there happen'd many Earthquakes in Aſia Minor, and the Iſles of the Archipelago, where the Jews inhabited; (Euſeb. Chron. and Tacit. Annal. lib. ii.) and Joſephus acquaints us, that in the Night, when the Idumæans encamp'd before Jeruſalem, there blew a dreadful Tempeſt of Wind and Rain, accompanied with ſuch terrible Flaſhes of Lightning, Claps of Thunder, and Bellowing of Earthquakes, as put all the People to their Wits-End to think, what theſe Prodigies might portend. De Bello Jud. lib. iv. c. 7.

* In his Preface to the Hiſtory of the Wars of the Jews, Joſephus undertakes to record the Miſeries and Calamities, which befel that Nation, and the Signs and Prodigies, which preceded their Ruin. To this Purpoſe he tells us, that, for a whole Year together, a Comet, in the Figure of a Sword, hung over the City, and pointed, as it were, directly down upon it; that there were ſeen in the Clouds Armies in Battle-Array, and Chariots encompaſſing the Country, and inveſting their Cities; that, at the Feaſt of the Paſſover, in the Middle of the Night, a great Light ſhone upon the Temple and Altar, as if it had been Noon-Day; that, at the ſame Feaſt, the great Gate of the Temple, made all of maſſy Braſs, and which twenty Men could hardly ſhut, open'd of itſelf, tho' faſten'd with Bolts and Bars; that, at the Feaſt of Pentecoſt ſoon after, when the Prieſts went into the Temple to officiate, they heard, at firſt, a Kind of confus'd Noiſe, and then a Voice calling out earneſtly, in articulate Words, Let us be gone, let us be gone; and that theſe Prodigies were really ſo, we have the Teſtimony of Tacitus, a Roman Hiſtorian of that Age, who has thus recounted them, ——— Evenerunt Prodigia, viſæ per Cælum concurrerè acies, rutilantia arma, & ſubitò Nubium Igne collucere Templum: Expaſſæ repentè Delubri Forès: Et audita major humanâ vox, excedere Deos; ſimul ingens Motus excedentium. Hiſt. lib. v. and Joſeph. de Bello. Jud. lib. vii. c. 12.

* This Part of our Saviour's Prediction was literally fulfilled before the Deſtruction of Jeruſalem. As ſoon as Chriſtianity began to ſpread, the Jews wrote Letters to every Part of the World againſt the Profeſſors of it, in order to raiſe Perſecutions againſt them. St Paul, before his Converſion, breathing out Threatenings and Slaughter againſt the Diſciples of Chriſt, Acts ix. 1, ſhut up many of them in Priſon, both Men and Women, Acts xxii. 4.—xxvi. 10. himſelf, when converted, and Silas were not only impriſon'd, but beaten in the Synagogue, Acts xvi. 23. as were likewiſe Peter and John, Acts v. 18. Stephen, the firſt Martyr, was ſlain by the Council, Acts vii. 59. James the Greater, by Herod, Acts xii. 1. and James the Leſs, by Ananus the High-Prieſt: Multitudes of Chriſtians were perſecuted to Death by Saul, Acts xxii. 4. by the Jews, as Juſtin Martyr teſtifies, and by the Emperor Nero, as Tacitus relates, Annal. lib. xv. For the Profeſſors of our moſt holy Religion, before the Principles of it came to be enquir'd into, were look'd upon as the common Enemies of Mankind, inſomuch, that whoſoever killed them, thought that he did God Service, John xvi. 2. Whitby's Annotations, and Calmet's Commentary.

* That, before the Diſſolution of the Jewiſh State, the Chriſtian Religion had ſpread itſelf over all the Parts of the then known World, we may reaſonably conclude from the Labours of St Paul, who alone carry'd the Goſpel through Judea, Syria, Arabia, Greece, Macedonia, Achaia, Aſia Minor, Italy, &c. And if the other Apoſtles, whoſe Travels we are not ſo well acquainted with, did the like, there is no Doubt to be made, but that their Sound went into all the Earth, and their Words unto the Ends of the World, Rom. x. 18. St Peter addreſſes his firſt Epiſtle to the Elect, that were in Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Aſia, and Bithynia, and Clemens, who was his Contemporary, and immediate Succeſſor in the See of Rome, in his Epiſtle to the Corinthians, tells us, that the Nations beyond the Ocean were governed by the Precepts of the Lord. An Event this! which he only could foretel, who, having all Power in Heaven and Earth, was able to effect it. Calmet's Commentary, and Whitby's Annotations.

† The Words in the Text are, ——— Immediately after the Tribulation of thoſe Days, ſhall the Sun be darkened, and the Moon ſhall not give her Light, and the Stars ſhall fall from Heaven, and the Powers of the Heavens ſhall be ſhaken, Matth. xxiv. 29. that theſe Words are not to be taken in a literal Senſe, is plain, becauſe that, after the Sackage of Jeruſalem by Veſpaſian's Army, no ſuch Thing, as is here mention'd, happen'd to the Sun, Moon, or Stars. The Expreſſions therefore muſt be metaphorical, and do here denote, as they frequently do in the Writings of the Prophets and other Authors, that entire Deſtruction, and utter Deſolation, which is brought upon any Nation. For in this Language the Prophet Iſaiah ſpeaks of the Deſtruction of Babylon: The Day of the Lord cometh, cruel both with Wrath and fierce Anger, to lay the Land deſolate; and he ſhall deſtroy the Sinners thereof out of it: For the Stars of Heaven, and the Conſtellations thereof ſhall not give their Light; the Sun ſhall be darkened in his Going-forth, and the Moon ſhall not cauſe her Light to ſhine, Chap. xiii. 9. which, according to Maimonides, are proverbial Expreſſions, importing the Deſtruction and utter Ruin of a Nation, and of ſuch Perſons more eſpecially, who, for their State and Dignity, might be compared to the Sun, Moon, and Stars, More Nevoch. lib. ii. and, accordingly, the Senſe of our Saviour's Words muſt be, ——— That, after the taking and deſtroying of Jeruſalem, God's Judgments would ſtill purſue the People, ſo that thoſe, who ſurviv'd the Ruin of their Country, ſhould be diſpers'd into different Regions, ſold for Slaves, or reduc'd to a Condition worſe than Slavery. And ſo the Event prov'd: For thoſe, that Government, he advertis'd them, that, whenever they ſhould ſee the City of Jeruſalem inveſted with Armies, and the Temple polluted with Abominations, they might then conclude, that this Deſolation * was approaching, and that therefore it was high Time for them to provide for their Safety * by a quick Retreat.

And exhorts his Diſciples to Watchfulneſs and Prayer.

Of the preciſe Time of its coming, however, no created Being (as he told them) could certainly know; and therefore, it was incumbent upon them to keep themſelves in a State of perpetual Watchfulneſs, in a faithful Diſcharge of their reſpective Duties, and in a conſtant Perſeverance in Prayer to God; all which he endeavour'd to enforce with ſeveral Parables; ſuch as That of the faithful Servant, whom his Maſter, at his Return from a Journey, found employ'd in his proper Buſineſs, when he of a contrary Character was ſurpriz'd in his Riot and Debaucheries, and accordingly puniſh'd *; That of the wiſe and fooliſh Virgins, who were differently prepar'd at the Coming of the Bridegroom *; and That of the Talents, were carry'd to Rome, ſerv'd only to adorn the Triumph of their Conqueror: Thoſe that fled to Antioch for Shelter, were cruelly maſſacred there: Thoſe, that maintain'd the Caſtle of Maſſada, rather than fall into the Hands of the Enemy, agreed to ſlay one another: Thoſe that eſcap'd to Thebes and Alexandria, were brought back, and tortur'd to Death; and thoſe of Cyrene, who joined a falſe Prophet, nam'd Jonathan, were all cut to Pieces by the Roman General. All this happen'd immediately after the taking of Jeruſalem; and, without any farther Search into their Hiſtory, is enough to verify our Saviour's Expreſſion, that the Sun was darkened, and the Moon gave no Light upon that wretched People. Joſeph. de Bello, lib. vii. c. 24, &c.

* The Deſolation, which the Jews ſuffer'd in this laſt War with the Romans, was ſo vaſtly great, that all Hiſtory can ſcarce furniſh us with an Example of the like Nature. The Number of the Slain was eleven hundred Thouſand; the Number of Priſoners was ninety-ſeven Thouſand. Thoſe, that were above ſeventeen, were ſent into Egypt to work in the Mines; thoſe, that were under that Age, were ſold for Slaves into different Countries; and a great Number of others, were diſtributed in the Roman Provinces to be expos'd to wild Beaſts on the Theatre, and as Gladiators, to kill one another, for the Sport and Diverſion of the Spectators: Until the Cities were waſted without Inhabitants, and the Houſes without a Man, and the Land was utterly deſolate, and the Lord had remov'd Men far away, and there was a great Forſaking in the Midſt of the Land, as the Prophet expreſſes it, Iſaiah vi. 11, 12. Joſeph. de Bello Jud. lib. vii. c. 17.

* Which accordingly they did: For when Ceſtius Gallus had beſieg'd Jeruſalem, and, without any viſible Cauſe, on a ſudden rais'd the Siege, the Chriſtians, that were in the City, took this Opportunity to make their Eſcape to Pella in Paræa, a mountainous Country, and to other Places under the Government of King Agrippa, where they found Safety. Thus punctually were all the Predictions of our Bleſſed Saviour fulfilled; ſo that whoever ſhall compare them (as Euſebius, In his Eccl. Hiſt. lib. iii. c. 7. expreſſes it) with the Account of Joſephus, concerning the War of the Jews, cannot but admire the Wiſdom of Chriſt, and own his Predictions to be divine. Hammond's and Whitby's Annotations.

* The Puniſhment inflicted on the evil Servant is ſaid to be Cutting aſunder, Matth. xxiv. 51. In the ſame Manner as Samuel us'd Agag, 1 Sam. xv. 33. and David the Ammonites, 2 Sam. xii. 31. and Nebuchadnezzar threaten'd the Blaſphemers of the ttue God, Dan. iii. 29. This Puniſhment was, in old Times, inflicted on thoſe, that were falſe to their Creditors, Rebels to their Prince, or Betrayers of their Country; nor was it in Uſe only among the Eaſtern People, but among the Romans, as we learn from Suetonius, in the Life of Caius, and among the Greeks, as Homer, Sophocles, and Ariſtophanes informs us: And therefore this Puniſhment, ſays our Saviour, will I inflict on thoſe, that are perfidious to their Covenant in Baptiſm, and Enemies to my Government. Whitby's Annotations.

* The better to underſtand the Senſe of this Parable, we ſhould do well to obſerve what the Cuſtom at Marriages was, to which our Saviour ſeems to allude. When the Bridegroom was to bring home his Bride, (which was generally the concluſive Ceremony, and done in the Night-Time) the young Women of the Town, to which ſhe was to come, in order to do her Honour, went to meet her with lighted Lamps: She too, according to her Quality and Condition, had her Companions and Servants attending her, and ſome of the moſt beautiful Ladies of the Place, from whence ſhe came, going before her. Statius deſcribes a Marriage, whereat the nine Muſes appear'd with their Lamps:

> Demigrant Helicone Deæ, quatiuntque novenâ
> Lampade ſolemnem thalamis coëuntibus ignem. Sylv. lib. i.

And moſt of our modern Travellers inform us, that among the Eaſtern People, (eſpecially the Perſians) this Way of conducting the Bride home, with Lamps and lighted Torches, ſtill prevails. None need be told, that by the Bridegroom we are to underſtand our Saviour Chriſt; by the Bride, his Church; by the Virgins, Chriſtians in general; and by the Oil in their Lamps, the neceſſary Qualifications of Faith and good Works. Calmet's Commentary.

He ſups with Simon the Leper.

As ſoon as our Lord had finiſh'd this prophetick Diſcourſe, he went, in the Evening, to Bethany, and there ſupp'd at the Houſe of one Simon, whom he had formerly cur'd of a Leproſy. At Supper, Mary, to teſtify her Love and Reſpect, came, and, out of an Alabaſter Cruſe, pour'd a large Quantity of ſuch rich Ointment upon his Head, as filled the whole Houſe with its fragrant Smell. This ſeeming Prodigality rais'd the Indignation of the reſt of the Apoſtles, as well as Judas; and, as they made the ſame Objection, ſo our Saviour's Defence of Mary turns upon the ſame Topicks; only he adds, that, as ſhe had done a great and generous Action, whereſoever his Goſpel ſhould be preach'd through the whole World, there ſhould her munificent Regard to him be likewiſe publiſh'd, to her everlaſting Honour and Renown.

---

† For an Explication of this Parable, we may obſerve, that the Man travelling into a far Country is our Saviour Chriſt, who, by aſcending into Heaven, has depriv'd the Church of his corporal Preſence; that his Servants are Chriſtians in general, or, more particularly, his Apoſtles, and firſt Miniſters, who ſucceeded him in the Propagation of the Goſpel; and that the Talents, committed to their Management, are the ſupernatural Gifts, which he beſtow'd upon them, and all the Endowments both of Body and Mind, all the Helps, and Means, and Opportunities, which he gives us, in order to ſerve him, and to work out our own Salvation. Calmet's Commentary.

† The Reaſon of our Lord's mingling the Signs of the particular Deſtruction of Jeruſalem, and of the general Diſſolution of the World together, was, to engage us, at the Approach of particular Judgments upon Cities and Nations, to be always mindful and prepar'd for the general Judgment of the laſt Day. There is one Thing however peculiar in his Expreſſion upon this Occaſion, viz. that this Generation ſhould not paſs away, until all theſe Things were done, Mark xiii. 30. for if his Words immediately foregoing related to the Coming of the Day of Judgment, and general Diſſolution of all Things, it will be hard to conceive how that great Event ſhould be ſaid to come to paſs, before the Extinction of the Race of Mankind then in Being. But, in Anſwer to this, it may be obſerv'd, that the Jews were wont to divide the Duration of the World into three grand Epochas, which, according to their Stile, were called Generations, each conſiſting of two Thouſand Years; whereof the Firſt was before the Law, the Second under the Law, and the third under the Goſpel; and 'tis to the laſt of theſe Generations, (as they called them) that this latter Part of our Lord's prophetick Diſcourſe does properly belong. A Miſconception of this Expreſſion indeed led ſome Primitive Chriſtians into a Miſtake concerning the Approach of the final Judgment: And as long as that Miſtake had no other Tendency, than to make them more fervent, and zealous, and heavenly-minded; more patient and heroick under Sufferings and Perſecutions; and more fervent and diligent in preaching the Goſpel, &c. the Generality of the inſpired Writers might think this a ſufficient Reaſon to overlook it: But St Peter we find takes particular Care to rectify this Miſtake, and to obviate the Objection, which a Spirit of Infidelity had taken occaſion to raiſe from it, as we may ſee at large in 2 Pet. iii. Univerſ. Hiſt. lib. ii. c. 11.

† That this Throne of Glory will be nothing elſe, but a bright and refulgent Cloud, we have reaſon to believe from the Teſtimony of the Angels, that attended at our Lord's Aſcenſion. For, while the Apoſtles then preſent were looking ſtedfaſtly towards Heaven, as he went up, behold, two Men ſtood by them in white Apparel, who alſo ſaid, Ye Men of Galilee, why ſtand ye gazing up to Heaven? This ſame Jeſus, which is taken up from you into Heaven, ſhall ſo come, in like Manner, as ye have ſeen him go into Heaven, Acts i. 9, 10. which compar'd with our Lord's own Declarations concerning his ſecond Coming, Mark xiii. 26. with what St Paul foretels, 1 Theſſ. iv. 17. and St. John foreſaw, Rev. xiv. 14. are abundantly ſufficient to juſtify the generally receiv'd Opinion, that, as our Bleſſed Saviour went up into Heaven, ſo he ſhall return from thence to Judgment, upon a true and material Cloud. Stanhope, on the Epiſtles and Goſpels, Vol. I.

† The Manner, in which our Saviour expreſſes himſelf upon this Occaſion, ſeems to imply, that the general Judgment is to be held in ſome particular Place; and, from a Paſſage in the Prophet Joel, ſeveral modern, as well as ancient Doctors, are of Opinion, that the Valley of Jehoſhaphat is appointed to be that Place: For I will gather all Nations, ſays God, and will bring them down into the Valley of Jehoſhaphat, and I will plead with them there for my People, and for my Heritage Iſrael, Chap. iii. 2. but, as the Word Jehoſhaphat, in that Text, ſignifies the Judgment of God, the Valley of Jehoſhaphat denotes any Place in general, where God exerciſes his Judgments. The Truth is, if all Nations of the World muſt appear before the Judgment-Seat of Chriſt, and, that they may receive the Things done in the Body, are to be cloath'd with their Reſurrection-Bodies, there muſt neceſſarily be requir'd a very large Space to contain them; and therefore St Paul ſeems to point at the grand Expanſum of the Air, as the moſt convenient for that Purpoſe, 1 Theſſ. iv. 16, 17. Calmet's Commentary.

WEDNESDAY. Next Night with Martha, where, by waſhing his Apoſtles Feet, he teaches them Humility.

Matt. xxvi. 3. Mark xiv. 1. Luke xxii. 1.

WHEN Supper was ended, our Lord repair'd to his uſual Lodgings at Martha's Houſe; and, on the Day following, (in all Probability) continu'd at Bethany, without going to Jeruſalem, as he had done the Days before. In the mean Time, the Sanhedrim [†] aſſembled at the Palace of Caiphas [†], the High-Prieſt, where the Prieſts, Scribes, and Elders of the People, had a ſolemn Debate, and Conſultation, how they might take Jeſus by ſome ſecret Stratagem, and put him to Death. This was the ſecond Council, that they had held upon this Occaſion, and tho' therein it was determin'd that he ſhould die, yet they thought it not ſo adviſable to put the Thing in Execution in the Time of the enſuing Solemnity, leſt it ſhould cauſe a Sedition among the People, who had the higheſt Veneration for him.

John xiii. 1.

WHEN Evening was come, he, with his Apoſtles, ſupp'd (very probably) at Martha's Houſe, and, while they were at Table, conſidering with himſelf, that his Time was now ſhort, he was minded to give them a Teſtimony of his Love, and, from his own Example, teach them two Virtues, which, of all others, were more eſpecially requiſite in their Miniſtry of the Goſpel, Humility and Charity. To this Purpoſe, riſing from the Table, laying aſide his upper Garment, and girding himſelf with a Towel, (as the Manner of Servants then was, when they waited on their Maſters) he pour'd Water into a Baſon, and began to waſh his Apoſtles Feet, and to wipe them with the Towel. Amaz'd at this Condeſcenſion, St Peter (when he came to him) refus'd at firſt to admit of ſuch a ſervile Office from his Heavenly Maſter; but, when he urg'd the Neceſſity, and, in ſome Meaſure, intimated to him the ſymbolical Intent of it, he permitted him to do juſt what he thought fit.

John xiii. 12.

WHEN our Lord had made an end of waſhing his Apoſtles Feet, he put on his Garment, and ſat down at Table again, and began to tell them the Meaning of what he had done, viz. "That ſince he, who was juſtly acknowledg'd to be their Lord and Maſter, had ſo far debas'd himſelf, as to waſh their Feet, they, in Imitation of his Example, ought to think it no Diſparagement to them, to perform the meaneſt Offices of Kindneſs and Charity to one another: For, tho' they were exalted to the Dignity of his Apoſtles, yet ſtill they were but his Servants; and that therefore it would be an high Piece of Arrogance in them to aſſume more State and Grandeur, than their Maſter had done before them."

John xiii. 21. Judas agrees to betray his Maſter, who, in the mean Time, is comforting his other Apoſtles.

SOON after this, reflecting with himſelf, how well he had lov'd, and, upon all Occaſions, how kindly he had treated theſe his Diſciples; he was not a little concerned, that any of them ſhould prove ſo baſe and ungrateful, as to betray him; and when he had declar'd the Thing, and Peter, deſirous to know the Perſon, beckoned to John, who was neareſt his Maſter, to aſk him the Queſtion, he ſignify'd to him, that it was Judas Iſcariot, to whom he gave a Sop, (as he told John he would) and, when he had ſo done, [†] bad him go about what he had to do with all Expedition; which the reſt of the Apoſtles, being ignorant

This Propoſition was highly pleaſing to the Council, who immediately bargain'd with him for Thirty Pieces of Silver [†]; and, when Judas had receiv'd the Money, from that Moment, he ſought an Opportunity to betray his Maſter, in the Abſence of the Multitude.

John xiii. 31. Exhorting them to mutual Love, and reviving them with the Promiſes of a better Life, and the Gifts of the Holy Ghoſt, after his Departure.

WHILE Judas was thus bartering for his Maſter's Blood, his Maſter was preparing the reſt of his Apoſtles for his Departure, and endeavouring to comfort them with this Conſideration, —— That his Death would be a Means to diſplay both his own, and his Father's Glory, as it was a Preliminary to his Reſurrection, and Aſcenſion into Heaven: As therefore it was decreed that he muſt leave them, the ſtronger ſhould their Union be with one another; and therefore, he recommended very earneſtly to them the Duty of mutual Love, a Duty which had hitherto been ſo much neglected, that his enjoining it then might well be accounted a new Commandment, and what was to be the common Badge and Character of his true Diſciples [†] for ever after.

THURSDAY. Matt. xxvi. 17. Mark xiv. 12. Luke xxii. 8.

WHEN the Day [‖] before the Feaſt of the Paſſover was come, our Lord ſent Peter and John to Jeruſalem, to prepare all Things, according to the Law; and, leſt they ſhould want a convenient Room for the Celebration of the Paſchal Supper, he had prediſpos'd the Heart of a certain Hoſt in the City [†] to accommodate them with one. They therefore, having provided a Lamb, ſlain it in the Temple, ſprinkled it's Blood on the Altar, and done every Thing elſe, that was requir'd of them, [†] Theſe Pieces were Staters, or Shekels of the Sanctuary, thirty of which amounted to three Pounds and fifteen Shillings of our Money, the uſual Price, that was given for a Man or a Maid Servant, Exod. xxi. 32. 'Tis hardly ſuppoſable, that any of theſe Pieces are, at this Time, extant, tho', both at Rome, and Paris, there are Pieces ſhewn, which are pretended to be the very ſame, that were Part of the Price of the Purchaſe of our Saviour's Blood; but Perſons well ſkilled in that Art aſſure us, that theſe Pieces are only the ancient Medals of Rhodes on the One-ſide ſtamped with a Coloſs, which repreſents the Sun, and on the other with a Roſe, which was the City-Arms, as we call it. Echard's Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory, lib. i. c. 4, and Calmet's Commentary.

[†] The Diſciples of the Baptiſt were known by the Auſterity of their Lives, and the Diſciples of the Phariſees by their Habit, and Separation from other Men; but our Bleſſed Saviour was willing to have his Diſciples known by their mutual Love, and Affection to each other, which, in the primitive Ages, was ſo great, that it made the Heathens, with Admiration, cry out, See, how they love one another! And even hate and envy them for their mutual Affection. Whitby's Annotations.

[‖] The Words in St Matthew, Chap. xxvi. 17, are, the firſt Day of the Feaſt; but 'tis no uncommon Thing to put the Word firſt for that which properly went before. Thus in the Old Teſtament it is ſaid, that the Hands of the Witneſſes ſhall be firſt upon him that is condemn'd to die, to put him to Death, and afterwards the Hands of all the People, Deut. xvii. 7. but, if the Hands of the Witneſſes ſhould firſt diſpatch him, there would be no Occaſion for the Hands of the People; and therefore the Senſe of the Word firſt in this Place muſt be, that the Witneſſes ſhould ſmite him, before he was deliver'd into the Hands of the People. In the firſt Book of Maccabees it is twice ſaid of Alexander the Great, that he reigned the firſt over Greece, Chap. i. 1. and vi. 2. but every one knows, that, before him, there were ſeveral Kings in Macedonia; and therefore the Meaning of the Words muſt be, that he reign'd in Macedonia, before he reign'd in Aſia: And, to the ſame Purpoſe, in the New Teſtament, we find St Paul ſtiling our Bleſſed Lord the Firſt-born of every Creature, Coloſſ. i. 15. i. e. begotten of the Father before the Production of any Creature; and telling us, that the Huſbandman, that laboureth, muſt firſt partake of the Fruits, 2 Tim. ii. 6. i. e. he muſt labour, before he can reap the Fruits of his Travel; and, in the like Acceptation of the Word, the firſt Day of the Feaſt may be interpreted the Day before the Feaſt, as might be prov'd likewiſe by Examples from Heathen Authors. Calmet's Commentary.

[†] It is to be obſerv'd, that the Houſes in Jeruſalem, at this Time of the Feaſt, were of common Right to any, that would eat the Paſſover in them, and yet it is not unlikely, that our Lord might be well known to the Maſter of this Houſe, who, very probably, took it as an high Honour, that he had made choice of his rather than any other, to eat the Paſchal Supper in. Whitby's Annotations, and Calmet's Commentary.

them, they return'd to their Maſter at Bethany; who, perceiving that his late Diſcourſe about leaving the World and them had blaſted all their Hopes of ſecular Greatneſs, and left them melancholy and diſconſolate, ſtay'd a good Part of the Day with them, in order to raiſe their drooping Spirits with the Aſſurance of an happy Immortality, which (as he told them) he was going before † to prepare for them in Heaven, and wanted not Power to do it, becauſe he and his Father, (as to their Divinity) were perfectly the ſame; and with the Promiſe of ſending them the Holy Spirit from above, which he took care to repreſent, as a Comforter †, to ſupport them in their Afflictions; as a Teacher, to inſtruct them in all neceſſary Truths; and as an Advocate, to plead and defend their Cauſe againſt their Enemies. So that they had no Reaſon to be dejected, becauſe, in this Senſe, he would be always with them; becauſe, whatever they aſk'd in his Name, his Father would give them; and becauſe, when he was gone, they ſhould be enabled to do Miracles, † greater than what they had ſeen him do: (f) And therefore Peace I leave with you, ſays he, taking his Farewel, my Peace I give unto you: † Not as the World giveth, give I unto you; let not your Heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid. John xiv. 16.

† Our Saviour ſpeaks this in Alluſion to Travellers, who ſend generally one of the Company before, to provide good Accommodation for the reſt. Beauſobre's Annotations.

† The Word ϖαράκλητος, in this Place, ſignifies both an Advocate, and a Comforter; and the Holy Spirit, when he deſcended upon the Apoſtles, did the Part of an Advocate, by confirming their Teſtimony by Signs, and Miracles, and various Gifts imparted to them, and by pleading their Cauſe before Kings, and Rulers, and againſt all their Adverſaries, Matth. x. 18. and Luke xxi. 15. and he did the Part of a Comforter likewiſe, as he was ſent, for the Conſolation of the Apoſtles, and all ſucceeding Chriſtians, in all their Troubles, filling their Hearts with Joy and Gladneſs, and giving them an inward Teſtimony of God's Love to them, together with an Aſſurance of their future Happineſs, Rom. viii. 15, 16. Whitby's and Beauſobre's Annotations.

† What Interpreters ſay of Diſeaſes healed by the Shadow of Peter, and by Napkins ſent from St Paul, of more Miracles perform'd throughout the World, and, for the Space of three whole Centuries, Devils ejected every where, is not unfitly mention'd here, as anſwering to our Saviour's Words; and yet we cannot but think, that this ſhould chiefly be referr'd to the wonderful Succeſs of the Goſpel preach'd by the Apoſtles, after the Deſcent of the Holy Ghoſt upon them; to the Gift of Tongues, and the Interpretation of them; of Prophecy, and Diſcerning of Spirits; and the imparting theſe Gifts to others by Baptiſm, and the Impoſition of the Apoſtles Hands. For, as this was a greater Work in our Bleſſed Saviour to aſſiſt ſo many with his mighty Power, when abſent at ſo great a Diſtance, as the Earth is from Heaven, than to do Miracles in their Preſence; ſo to communicate theſe Gifts to Men, and to enable them to transfer them to others, is (as Arnobius expreſſes it) ſuper omnia ſitæ poteſtatis, continentiſque ſub ſe omnium Rerum Cauſas, & Rationum Facultatumque Naturas, lib. i. pag. 32. and eſpecially, when our Lord ſucceeded ſo little in his three Years Preaching here on Earth, and had ſo few ſincere Diſciples, that he ſhould enable his Apoſtles, at one Sermon, to convert ſome Thouſands, and cauſe his Goſpel to fly like Lightning through the World, and beat down all the ſtrong Holds of Oppoſition, this is truly wonderful. Whitby's Annotations.

† At the firſt Inſtitution of the Paſchal Supper the Iſraelites were commanded to eat it in a ſtanding Poſture, and in haſte, Exod. xii. 11. but here we find our Saviour and his Apoſtles eating it lying down, or inclining on their Left-Side, as it was then the Manner of the Jews. When, or upon what Account, this Alteration came to be made, we have no other Information, than what we find in the Writings of their Rabbins, viz. that they us'd this leaning Poſture, as Freemen do, in Memory of their Freedom; and therefore, tho', at their ordinary Meals, they commonly ſat at Table, as we do, yet, whenever they were minded to regale themſelves, they us'd this Poſture of Diſcumbency, and eſpecially at the Paſchal Supper no other was allow'd. Matt. xxvi. 26. Mark xiv. 22. Luke xxii. 19.

WHEN the Paſchal Supper was ended, our Saviour proceeded to the Inſtitution of another, in Commemoration of his own Death and Paſſion. For he took Bread, and when he had bleſſed it, and broke it, he diſtributed it to his Apoſtles, calling it his Body, and, after he had ſo done, he took the Cup of Wine, and having, in like Manner, bleſſed it, he gave it among them, calling it his † Blood of the new Covenant, and commanding them to do the ſame, i. e. to eat Bread, and drink Wine in this Sacramental Manner, even unto the End of the World, in Remembrance of him.

AFTER this Inſtitution of the Form of that Memorial, which his Apoſtles, and their Poſterity were to continue, he gave them to underſtand, that this was the laſt Paſchal Supper, which he ſhould eat, and the laſt Wine, that he ſhould drink with them, until † he drank it new in the Kingdom of God: From which Words ſome of his Apoſtles inferring, that, tho' his Kingdom was not to be then, yet it would not fail to commence immediately after his Reſurrection, they fell into unſeaſonable with a Table before them, whereon they lean'd, they ſtretch'd out their Feet behind them, thereby to remove the leaſt Shew of ſtanding to attend, or to go upon any one's Employment, which might carry in it any Colour of Servitude, or Contrariety to their Freedom. And from this Poſture of ſitting, or leaning upon a Table with their left Elbow one after another, we may rightly underſtand thoſe Texts, which ſpeak of the beloved Apoſtle's leaning on the Boſom, or on the Breaſt of Jeſus, John xiii. 23. and xxi. 20. as the learned Lightfoot, in his Diſcourſe of the Temple-Service, has amply ſhewn. Pool's Annotations.

† It is a great Queſtion among the Antients, whether Judas was preſent at our Lord's Inſtitution of the Sacrament of his Body and Blood, or abſented himſelf before. St Luke's Words, which are ſubſequent to the Inſtitution, Behold the Hand of him, that betrayeth me, is with me on the Table, Chap. xxii. 21, ſeem to imply that he was preſent, and partook of the Euchariſt; but many Commentators are of a contrary Opinion, viz. that, after our Saviour had declar'd him to be the Man, who ſhould betray him, (which was between the Paſchal and Euchariſtical Supper) he immediately left the Company, and went away; and that, conſequently, there is a Miſlocation in St Luke's Words. Calmet's Commentary and Dictionary, under the Word Judas.

† The Reaſon which our Saviour gives for our participating of the Cup, viz. becauſe it is the Blood of the New Teſtament, which is ſhed for the Remiſſion of Sins, concerns the Laity, as well as the Prieſts, becauſe his Blood was equally ſhed for both; and therefore the Command, Drink ye all of this, to which the Reaſon is annex'd, concerns them likewiſe. But there is another Reaſon, why our Lord ſaid to his Apoſtles, Eat this Bread, and drink this Cup, viz. that, by ſo doing, they might remember his Death, his Body broken, and his Blood ſhed for them, ſays St Luke, and ſhew it forth till his ſecond Coming, 1 Cor. xi. 26. Now this, as St Paul demonſtrates, concerns all Believers, as well as Prieſts, and therefore the drinking of the Cup (by which this Commemoration is made) as well as Eating of the Bread, muſt equally concern them. Whitby's Annotations.

† Some are of Opinion, that, by the Kingdom of God here, (as in ſeveral other Places) we are not to underſtand Heaven, or the Happineſs we are there to enjoy, but rather the Goſpel-State, and the Kingdom of Chriſt, which began at his Reſurrection, and was more fully eſtabliſh'd when he ſat down at the Right-Hand of Power, and was made Heir of all Things; and conſequently, that our Lord's Drinking of Wine may then relate to his Eating and Drinking with his Diſciples after he aroſe from the Dead, Acts x. 41. but, becauſe the Felicities of Heaven are frequently repreſented under the Metaphors of eating and drinking, Matth. xxvi. 29. Luke xxii. 18. others make the Senſe of our Saviour's Words to be this,——— "I will not henceforth drink of the Fruit of the Vine, but both you and I, "in my Father's Glory, ſhall be ſatisfy'd with the Rivers of Pleaſure, far ſweeter, and more excellent, than the richeſt "Wines can be." There is however a third Way of interpreting this Paſſage, which, by comparing it with the Words of St Luke, ſeems by much the moſt probable, and that is, by making the Fruit of the Vine ſignify, in a peculiar Manner, the Cup in the Paſſover, or the Cup of Charity, in the Poſtcœnium of the Paſſover, wherein the Sacrament of Chriſt's Body and Blood was founded. For, that Chriſt was now to die, and neither before, or after his Reſurrection, to eat any more Paſſovers with his Apoſtles, or any more to drink this Cup of Charity, now deſign'd to a Chriſtian Uſe, is ſufficiently evident. It is obſervable therefore in St Luke, Chap. xxii. 16, that the Words are directly apply'd to the Paſſover; I have deſir'd to eat this Paſſover, for I will no more eat of it, and by repeating the Cup, Ver. 18, the Evangeliſt muſt mean the Cup of the Paſſover, or the Sacramental Cup of Charity, which ſucceeded it; and conſequently, our Saviour's Meaning muſt be,——— That he would no more uſe theſe typical Adumbrations, being himſelf now ready to perform what was ſignify'd and expreſs'd by them, i. e. to paſs ſuddenly from unſeaſonable Contentions about Priority, or who ſhould have the Office of the higheſt Truſt and Honour about their Maſter, which our Lord endeavour'd to repreſs by the ſame Arguments, that he had employ'd (g) upon the like Occaſion: And then turning to Peter, he appriz'd him of the imminent Danger, which he and his Brethren were in, and what a ſevere Trial the great Enemy of Mankind would very ſpeedily bring upon them; to whom Peter, in Confidence of his own Courage and Reſolution, anſwer'd for himſelf, that he was ready to go with him to Priſon, and to Death; but our Saviour, who beſt knew his Weakneſs, gave him to underſtand, that, † before the Crowing of the Cock, he ſhould deny him thrice.

John xv. 1. After this, our Lord in his final Exhortation to his Apoſtles, reminded them of the Choice, which he had made of them, and the kind Treatment, which he had all along ſhewn them; and that therefore it was their Duty, and their Intereſt both to adhere to him, as the Branch did to the Vine, in order to bring forth the Fruits of Righteouſneſs, and to continue immoveable in the Profeſſion of his Religion, notwithſtanding all the Perſecutions, they ſhould meet with, which indeed would prove ſo violent and outrageous, that ſome Men would think they did God Service in killing them. This however ſhould not utterly deject them, becauſe his Abſence from them would not be long. His Death was but to uſher in his Reſurrection and Aſcenſion; and the Benefits, which would accrue to them from theſe, viz. in the Miſſion of the Holy Ghoſt to be their Guide and Comforter, in his own Interceſſion for them at God's Right-Hand, and in their Prayers and Supplications, which (if offer'd up in his Name) would not fail of Admittance to the Throne of Grace, would abundantly compenſate the Want of his Preſence: And (h) therefore I have told you theſe Things, ſays he, that in me ye might have Peace: In the World ye ſhall have Tribulation; but † be of good Cheer, I have overcome the World †.

† It is commonly remark'd by profane Authors, that the Cock uſually crows twice in a Night; once about Mid-Night, and the ſecond Time at the fourth Watch of the Night, or much about Break of Day; that this latter, as being the louder and more obſervable, is that, which is properly called ἀλεκτοροφωνία, or Cock-crowing; and that, of this Crowing of the Cock, the Evangeliſts are to be underſtood, when they relate Chriſt's Words thus, before the Cock crow (i. e. before that Time of the Night, which is emphatically ſo called) thou ſhalt deny me thrice, appears from St Mark's Saying, that the Cock crew, after his firſt Denial of Chriſt, Chap. xiv. 68. and crew the ſecond Time, after his third Denial, Ver. 72. Whitby's Annotations.

† Tho' to be of good Cheer under Tribulation does by no Means infer that Firmneſs of Mind, (as ſome Philoſophers of old miſ-called it) which preſerves a Man from being at all afflicted with Calamities, or mov'd from his uſual Eaſineſs of Temper; yet thus much it certainly means,———That neither the Sharpneſs of any Affliction we feel, nor the Terror of any we fear, ſhould ſo far vanquiſh our Reaſon and Religion, as to drive us upon unlawful Methods of declining the one, or delivering ourſelves from the other. We are to ſatisfy ourſelves in the Juſtice, the Wiſdom, and Goodneſs of him, who orders all the Events that befal us; to entertain them all with Meekneſs, and much Patience; to bring our Wills into Subjection to the Divine Will; to rejoice in the Teſtimony of a good Conſcience, and preſerve it at any Rate, tho' with the Hazard, nay, certain Loſs of all our worldly Advantages; and to ſet the Supports and Rewards of perſecuted Truth, and afflicted Piety, in Oppoſition to all the Diſcouragements, and Preſſures from abroad, and all the Frailties of feeble and too-yielding Fleſh and Blood at home. Stanhope, on the Epiſtles and Goſpels, Vol. III.

† By the World, in this Paſſage, we are, no doubt, to underſtand the Evil of the World, the Wickedneſs, the Malice, the Temptations, the Troubles, all that we have reaſon to fear, or to flee from, either in this, or the next Life. Now the Wickedneſs of the World Chriſt has overcome, by expiating the Sins of Mankind in the Sacrifice of himſelf upon the Croſs, and by the powerful Aſſiſtance of his Grace, enabling all the Faithful to conquer the Paſſions of corrupt Nature. The Malice of it he overcame, by diſappointing the Deſigns of the Devil, and his wicked Inſtruments againſt himſelf, and his Goſpel, making his own Sufferings fatal to the Contrivers, and ſaving to all penitent Believers. The Temptations of it he overcome, by that ſevere, but ſtill ſocial Virtue, and heavenly Piety, which ſhone ſo bright in all his Converſation: And the Troubles of it, by ſubmitting to Hunger and Thirſt, to These comfortable Exhortations to his Apoſtles were attended with a ſolemn Prayer and Interceſſion to Almighty God; for himſelf, that, as he had executed the Commiſſion, for which he came into the World, he might be re-inſtated in the ſame Glory, which he had with his Father from all Eternity; for his Apoſtles, that they might live in Brotherly Love and Unity, be preſerv'd in all Dangers, and ſanctify'd in their Minds and Converſations; and for all ſucceeding Chriſtians, that they might continue in the Communion of the Saints here, and be admitted to the Sight and Participation of his Glory and Felicity hereafter: And, having concluded all with an Hymn †, which he and his Apoſtles ſung together, he left the City, and, paſſing over the Brook Cedron †, came to a Place, called Gethſemane †, where there was a Garden, well known to Judas, becauſe thither our Lord and his Apoſtles us'd frequently to repair, both for Retirement, and Devotion.

† This Hymn is ſuppos'd by moſt Interpreters to be Part of the great Allelujah, which began at the cxiiith, and ended at the cxviiith Pſalm, and, by the Jewiſh Rituals, was order'd to be ſung conſtantly at the Paſchal Supper. Others think, that it was a different Hymn, compos'd by Chriſt, and accommodated to the particular Inſtitution of the Euchariſt; but Grotius is of Opinion, that it was no other, than that Thankſgiving of his, which St John has recorded in the xviith Chapter of his Goſpel. As our Bleſſed Saviour however, in all his religious Conduct, was no Lover of Innovations, it ſeems more probable, that, upon this Occaſion, he made uſe of the Pſalms, that were then cuſtomary in the Jewiſh Church, in which (as the Jews obſerve) are mention'd the Sorrows of the Meſſiah, and the Reſurrection of the Dead. Howell's Hiſtory, in the Notes, and Calmet's Commentary.

† The Garden of Gethſemane, which took its Name from the Wine-Preſſes in it, (as Mr. Maundrell informs us) is an even Plat of Ground, not above fifty-ſeven Yards ſquare, lying between the Foot of Mount Olivet, and the Brook Cedron. It is well planted with Olive-Trees, and thoſe of ſo old a Growth, that they are believ'd to be the ſame, that ſtood here in our Saviour's Time; but this is hardly poſſible. At the upper Corner of the Garden, is a flat naked Ledge of a Rock, ſuppos'd to be the Place, on which the Apoſtles, Peter, James, and John fell aſleep, during our Lord's Agony; a few Paces from thence is a Grotto, in which he is ſaid to have undergone that bitter Part of his Paſſion; and (what is very remarkable) in the Midſt of the Garden there is a ſmall Slip of Ground, twelve Yards long, and one broad, reputed the very Path, on which the Traytor Judas walked up to Chriſt, when he ſaid, Hail Maſter, and kiſſed him, which the Turks themſelves have walked in, as accounting the very Ground accurſed, on which was acted ſuch an infamous Tragedy. Whitby's Alphabetical Table, and Wells's Geography of the New Teſtament, Part I.

† The Paſſage, to which our Saviour alludes, is this, Awake, O Sword, againſt my Shepherd, and againſt the Man, that is my Fellow, ſaith the Lord of Hoſts. Smite the Shepherd, and the Sheep ſhall be ſcattered, and I will turn my Hand upon the little Ones, Zech. xiii. 7. where we may obſerve, that our Saviour only cites the Words in the Middle of the Verſe, becauſe indeed thoſe, that both preceded, and follow'd them, were not at all to his Purpoſe: And in this he imitated the antient Doctors of the Jewiſh Church, who, in their Allegations of Scripture-Paſſages, were wont to make uſe of no more, than what was ſubſervient to their Argument. Some however imagine, becauſe the Words of Zechariah ſeem primarily to relate to an evil Shepherd, to whom God threatens the Sword, that Chriſt does not mention them, as a Prediction concerning him and his Apoſtles, but only as a Proverbial Expreſſion: But this I think is ſufficiently confuted by our Lord's ſaying, for it is written, Ver. 31. Nor is the Change of the Perſon in the Evangeliſts from what occurs in the Prophet of any Moment, becauſe it was very cuſtomary with the Jewiſh Doctors, in their Citations of Scripture, to make ſuch Alterations. Surenhuſii Concil. in Loc. ex Vet. Teſt. apud Matt. and Whitby's Annotations.

therefore aſſur'd our Lord, that, † tho' all Mankind ſhould forſake him, yet would not he, and, being told again, that he would certainly deny him before the Time of Cock-crowing, with the utmoſt Vehemence he affirm'd, that, tho' he ſhould die, he would not deny him; and the like Profeſſion of undaunted Adherence made all the reſt.

Matt. xxvi. 36. Mark xiv. 32. Luke xxii. 40.

When they were come to the Garden, our Lord order'd the reſt of his Apoſtles to tarry for him at a certain Place, whilſt himſelf, with the three, that were moſt intimate with him, viz. Peter, James, and John, retir'd a while to his private Devotions, and, as they were going along, he requir'd them to join their Prayers with his, that they might not be deliver'd over to Temptation. But they were not gone above the Diſtance of a Stone's Caſt, before he found his Spirits depreſs'd, and his Soul ſadly ſorrowful, even unto Death; which, when he had diſcover'd to the three Apoſtles, and deſir'd them to watch with him a little in this trying and momentous Juncture, he withdrew from them; and, then throwing himſelf proſtrate on the Ground, begg'd of God, "That, if it was poſſible, (as all "Things were poſſible to him) he might "be excus'd from drinking the bitter Potion †, whoſe black Ingredients filled "him with Horror and Amazement; nevertheleſs in This he ſubmitted himſelf "entirely to his Divine Pleaſure." And, having pray'd to this Effect, he return'd to his Apoſtles, but finding them aſleep, he awoke them, and, in a Reproof full of Love, reminded Peter more eſpecially, of his late Promiſes, and preſent Neglect of him, when he moſt of all ſtood in need of his Comfort and Aſſiſtance. He advis'd him therefore to keep himſelf awake, for Fear of the Temptations, that were buſy about him, and added, this compaſſionate Obſervation, that tho' the † Spirit was willing, and ready enough to make good Reſolutions, [yet the Fleſh was weak, and unable very often to put them in Execution.

Matt. xxvi. 45. Mark xiv. 41. Luke xxii. 45. He is comforted by Angels, betray'd by Judas, and apprehended.

THRICE did our Bleſſed Lord retire, and pray in this Manner, but, in the laſt Time, his Senſe of God's Indignation againſt the Sins of Mankind, and the diſmal Proſpect of what he was to ſuffer in the Expiation of them, made his Prayer more vehement, and his Agonies ſo violent, that the Sweat, which fell from his Body, was like large Drops of Blood †; and

† We may be bold to affirm of this Reſolution, that it was as honeſt an one, i. e. both as juſt in the Matter, and as ſincere in the Intention, as ever was made by Man, or ever ſhall be made to the End of the World, and yet this Reſolution miſcarry'd, and ended only in the Shame of the Reſolver. St Chryſoſtom takes notice of three Faults, that may be reckon'd in it. 1ſt, The little Conſideration Peter had of our Saviour's Predictions concerning his Fall. 2dly, The Preference, which he gave himſelf above the reſt of his Brethren. And, 3dly, The Preſumption he plac'd in his own Strength, inſtead of imploring Ability of him, whence all human Sufficiency is deriv'd; and therefore the Son of God, ſays he, ſuffer'd him to fall, in order to cure his Arrogance, and vain Confidence in himſelf. Young's Sermons, Vol. II. and Chryſoſt. in Matth. Hom. lxxxiii.

† What we are to underſtand by the bitter Potion, which our Lord here deprecates, we ſhall explain at large in our Anſwer to the following Objections, and need only here obſerve, that the Afflictions, which God ſends on Men or Nations, are often in Scripture expreſs'd by the Name of a Cup, Ezek. xxiii. 31, &c. Matth. xx. 23. Revel. xiv. 10. and that this is a Metaphor borrow'd from an ancient Cuſtom of giving a Cup full of Poiſon, among Heathen Nations, to thoſe, that were condemn'd to die, and of Gall, on ſuch Occaſions, among the Jews, to leſſen the Pain of the Perſon, that was to ſuffer. Beauſobre's Annotations, and Howell's Hiſtory, in the Notes.

† Theſe Words of our Saviour are not intended as an Excuſe, or Mitigation of the Apoſtles ſinful Neglect of their Maſter, but as a Motive to their Vigilance and Prayer, and ſeem to imply thus much, ——— "You have all made "large Promiſes, that if you ſhould die with me, you would not forſake me, and this you ſaid really, and with a Purpoſe "ſo to do; yet, let me tell you, when the Temptation actually aſſaults; when Fear, Shame, and Pain, the Danger of Puniſhment, and of Death, are within View, and preſent to your Senſe; the Weakneſs of the Fleſh will certainly prevail "over theſe Reſolutions, if you uſe not the greateſt Vigilance, and do not pray with Fervency for the Divine Aſſiſtance." Whitby's Annotations.

† The Words, in the original Text, do not indeed ſignify, that the Matter of this Sweat was Blood, but only that it was thick and viſcous, like Blood falling from the Noſe, in a ſmall Clot, at the End of any one's Bleeding; but, ſince in ſome Diſtempers (as Ariſtotle tells us) it is no uncommon Thing for People to ſweat Blood; and, when Men are bitten with a certain Kind of Serpents in India, (according to the Account of Diodorus Siculus) they are human Nature muſt have been exhauſted under it, had not an Angel † from Heaven been immediately ſent to ſtrengthen and ſupport him. With this Recruit he return'd the third Time to his Apoſtles, but, finding them ſtill in the ſame ſleepy Condition, he told them, that now they might ſleep on, as long as they pleas'd, becauſe he had no farther Occaſion for their Aſſiſtance; that, however, it would not be improper for them to ariſe, becauſe the Traitor, who was to deliver him up to his Enemies, was juſt at hand. Nor were the Words well out of his Mouth, before Judas, accompany'd with † a Band of Soldiers and Officers, together with ſome of the Chief-Prieſts, Phariſees, and Elders of the People, all arm'd with Swords and Staves †, came to apprehend him.

Mat. xxvi. 48. Mark xiv. 44. John xviii. 3.

TO prevent all Miſtakes, the Traitor had given them a Sign, that the Perſon, whom he ſhould kiſs, was the Man, they were to apprehend; and therefore, approaching our Lord with an Addreſs of ſeeming Civility, he ſaluted him, and, in Return, receiv'd a Reproof of his Perfidy †, but in ſuch gentle and eaſy Terms, as ſpake a Mind perfectly calm and undiſturbed; and then ſtepping forward, with an Air of Majeſty, our Lord demanded of the Soldiers, whom they wanted? They told him, Jeſus of Nazareth. He reply'd, that he was the Perſon: But, when they were going to lay rude Hands upon him, the impetuous Rays of Glory, which darted from his Divine Face, ſtruck ſo fiercely upon their Eyes, that they fell to the Ground. However, inſtead of taking the Advantage of their Conſternation to make his Eſcape, (as he had done at other Times) he again demanded of them, who it was they wanted? And, when they again made him the ſame Anſwer, he told them, That, if he was the Perſon, he expected that his Diſciples ſhould depart unmoleſted.

WHEN

tormented with exceſſive Pains, and generally ſeiz'd with a bloody Sweat, we cannot ſee, why this Agony of our Saviour's might not be ſo violent, as to force Blood out of his capillary Veſſels, and mix it with his Sweat. Whitby's Annotations.

† St Luke is the only Evangeliſt, that makes mention of this Angelical Attendance upon our Saviour in this Time of his Agony; and, as there were ſeveral, both Latin and Greek Copies, that, in St Jerom's Time, wanted this Part of Hiſtory, Epiphanius imagines, that this was a Correction of ſome ignorant, tho' perhaps well-meaning Chriſtians, who, being offended at the ſuppos'd Weakneſs, that appears in our Saviour upon this Occaſion, left it out of their Copies; never conſidering, that the Divinity, which dwelt in him, had, at this Time, ſubtracted its Influence, ſo that, being left to his human Nature only, he needed the Comfort of an Angel: Otherwiſe, as with a Word he made the whole Band of Soldiers fall to the Ground, and with a Touch healed the Ear of Malchus, he even now gave ſufficient Indication of the Divinity reſiding in him. Whitby's Annotations, and Calmet's Commentary.

† At the Time of the Paſſover, it was cuſtomary for the Roman Preſident to ſend a whole Band of a Thouſand Men for a Guard to the Temple; and it ſeems to be ſome of theſe, that came to apprehend our Saviour, becauſe, by Judas's giving them a Sign, whereby they might know him, it looks, as if they were Strangers to his Perſon. Whitby's Annotations, and Calmet's Commentary.

† It is probable, that Judas thought they could not do this, but that, as Jeſus had at other Times convey'd himſelf from the Multitude, when they attempted to ſtone him, John viii. 59. and to caſt him down a Precipice, Luke iv. 29. ſo he would have done now; and that, when he found he did not reſcue himſelf, he repented, and went, and hanged himſelf, Matth. xxvii. 5. Whitby's Annotations.

† The Reproof is expreſs'd in theſe Words, ——— Judas, betrayeſt thou the Son of Man with a Kiſs? Luke xxii. 48. 1ſt, To betray, in this Caſe, was equivalent to Murther. It was to deliver him into their Hands, who, he knew, both from common Rumour, and his Maſter's own Words, Matth. xvi. 21. had a Deſign upon his Life; and therefore this could not be done without expreſs Malice; but 2dly, This Betrayer was a Servant; one, who had given up his Name and Faith to our Lord, and done himſelf the Honour at leaſt, if no other Benefit, to preach his Goſpel, and to work Miracles in the Power of his Commiſſion, and therefore, for ſuch an one to betray him, could not be done without great Perfidiouſneſs. 3dly, The Perſon betray'd is called the Son of Man, which is both the humbleſt, and moſt obliging of our Saviour's Titles, and implies, that even to Judas himſelf he had always been a kind and gracious Maſter, had treated him with the ſame Reſpect, and given him the ſame Advice and Overtures, that he had done to the reſt of the Twelve, and therefore to betray him was high Ingratitude. 4thly, and laſtly, To betray him with a Kiſs, which all the World had been us'd to interpret as a conſtant Symbol either of Love, or Homage, (both which his Maſter had ſo well merited at his Hands) and now to make this a Signal of his Treaſon, was to play a Piece of the moſt groſs Hypocriſy. So ſevere is the Accuſation, which our Lord brings againſt his abandon'd Apoſtle, tho' expreſs'd in the mildeſt Terms! Young's Sermons, Vol. II.

John xviii. 10.

From Matth. xx. 10. to the End, Mark xi. 15. to the End, Luke xix. 45. to the End, and John xii. 19. to the End.

When the Multitude began to lay Hands on Jeſus, ſome of his Apoſtles, having Swords † with them, aſk'd their Maſter, if they might draw in his Defence: But, before they had his Anſwer, Peter had drawn his Sword, and, in great Fury, ſtruck at Malchus, one of the High-Prieſt's Servants, with a Deſign to cleave his Head, tho' he happen'd only to cut off his Right-Ear. Our Saviour, however, rebuking his intemperate Zeal, commanded him to put up his Sword †, becauſe he had no Occaſion for any human Aid, who had Legions † of Angels at his Command; and then, having cur'd the Man's Ear with a Touch, he turn'd about, and expoſtulated with the Soldiery the Indignity of apprehending him in ſo ſcandalous a Manner, as if he were a Thief, or ſome vile Malefactor, when they had daily an Opportunity of taking him in the Temple. But, ſay what he would, it availed nothing. They immediately bound him, and led him away.

Mark xiv. 51.

The Apoſtles now, ſeeing their Maſter thus treated, loſt all their Courage, and (as he had foretold them) left him, and betook themſelves to flight. For ſuch was the Violence of the Soldiers, that, ſeeing a young Man † following the Company, with nothing but a Night-Gown on, and ſuppoſing him to be one of our Lord's Diſciples, they laid hold on him; but he, by quitting his Garment, ſlipp'd out of their Hands, and fled away naked.

The

† Before our Saviour left the Houſe, where he ſupp'd, he had ſaid to his Apoſtles, He, that has no Sword, let him ſell his Garment, and buy one, Luke xxii. 36. but that this is no Command to them to buy Swords, or to uſe them in the Defence of their Maſter, when he ſhould be apprehended, is apparent from his Saying, that two Swords were enough, Ver. 38. which certainly could never be ſufficient to repel that Band of arm'd Men, which, he foreknew, would come againſt him; and from his reprehending Peter for uſing one in this Manner, Matth. xxvi. 52. which, if he intended his Words to be underſtood literally, was no diſcommendable Thing. They therefore are only a Monition to his Apoſtles, that Times were now become ſo perilous, that, if Things were to be acted by human Power, there would be more need for Swords, than ever: For ſuch ſymbolical Ways of Expreſſion were very common among the Eaſtern People. Some Annotators however have obſerv'd, that the Reaſon, why any Swords (as we read but of two) were found in our Saviour's Family, was, that thereby they might ſecure themſelves from Beaſts of Prey, which, in thoſe Parts, were very frequent, and dangerous in the Night-Time. Whitby's Annotations, and Taylor's Life of Chriſt, Part ii. Sect. 15.

† Our Saviour's Words to Peter are theſe, ——— Put up thy Sword into its Place, for all, that take the Sword, ſhall periſh by the Sword, Matth. xxvi. 52. But this Rebuke we muſt not ſo underſtand, as abſolutely forbidding all Manner of uſing the Sword among Chriſtians, but only as teaching us the great Duty of Submiſſion to the Powers, that are ſet over us. One private Perſon is, no doubt, in Defence of himſelf againſt the Aſſault of another private Perſon, permitted to unſheathe his Sword; but if it be once granted, that private Perſons, when they think themſelves injur'd by the Magiſtrate, may take up the Sword againſt him, Tumults would be endleſs, and the Authority of the Laws, and the Deciſion of Judges, precarious. "If therefore neither the Malice of the Jews, nor the In" nocence of our Lord; if neither the Truth of our Religion, perſecuted in its Founder, nor the apparent Marks " of Malice and Envy, of Violence and Oppreſſion, which appear'd in the whole Courſe of their Perſecution of " him, were ſufficient to warrant St Peter to draw the Sword in his Defence, againſt that legal Authority, by which " they acted; we muſt conclude, that neither will any of theſe Pretences ſuffice to juſtify any other Chriſtians, in " the like Circumſtances, now: But, if it pleaſe God, at any Time, to permit the lawful Powers to be againſt us, we
" muſt ſubmit patiently to their Authority, and not, with this warm Apoſtle, draw the Sword againſt thoſe, to whom " God has committed the Power of the Sword." Archbiſhop Wake's Sermons. It may be queſtion'd however, whether this is the true Import of the Words, which Grotius and ſome others have thus interpreted, ——— "Put up
" thy Sword? There is no Need for thy uſing it in my Defence againſt the Injuries of the Jews; for, by God's Sen" tence and Decree, they, who take the Sword, to ſhed the Blood of the Innocent, ſhall periſh by the Sword; and
" this the Jews ſhall find by the tremendous Vengeance, which the Sword of the Romans ſhall execute upon them for
" this Fact." Which Interpretation is confirm'd by what we read in Revel. xiii. 10. He that killeth with the Sword, muſt be killed with the Sword. Here is the Ground of the Faith and Patience of the Saints, viz. that that God, to whom Vengeance belongs, will plead their Cauſe, and recompenſe Vengeance to their Enemies, Rom. xii. 19. Whitby's Annotations.

† A Legion, in the Roman Militia, was a Body of Men conſiſting of Six Thouſand, compos'd each of ten Cohorts, as a Cohort was of fifty Maniples, and a Maniple of fifteen Men; ſo that twelve Legions would amount to Seventy Thouſand Angels; but in this our Saviour means no more, than a great Number. Calmet's Commentary, and Beauſobre's Annotations.

† Who this young Man was, has been a Matter of ſome Diſpute among the Ancients. Epiphanius, and St Jerom, are of Opinion, that it was James the Brother of our Lord; but, upon our Lord's being apprehended, he, among the reſt, forſook him, and fled, and we hear nothing of his Return. From Matth. xx. 10. to the End, Mark xi. 15. to the End, Luke xix. 45. to the End, and John xii. 19. to the End.

Is brought before the Sanhedrim, examin'd, convicted, and groſsly inſulted.

Matt.xxvi.57. Mark xiv. 53. Luke xxii. 54. John xviii. 12.

The Company, thus carrying away Jeſus, brought him firſt before Annas ‡, who was Father-in-Law to Caiphas, the High-Prieſt, and had formerly borne the ſame Office: But Annas ſent them to Caiphas, in whoſe Palace the Sanhedrim was ſtill ſitting, even tho' it was thus late at Night. Caiphas examin'd him a great deal concerning both his Doctrine, and Diſciples; but, when our Saviour anſwered, "That, ſince he had always taught "in the moſt publick Manner, in the Synagogues, and in the Temple, he ſhould "rather enquire of thoſe, who had been "his conſtant Hearers," an Officer †, ſtanding by, gave him a Blow on the Face, pretending that he had not us'd the High-Prieſt with Reſpect enough; to which, our Lord only reply'd, that (k) if he had ſaid any Thing amiſs, the Law was open, and he might implead him, but if not, † he had no Cauſe or Authority to ſtrike him.

Matt.xxvi.59. Mark xiv. 55.

The Council, perceiving, that, from his own Confeſſion, they could raiſe no Accuſation againſt him, called over the falſe Witneſſes, that they had procur'd; but theſe either diſagreed in their Stories, or came not ſufficiently up to the Point. Two Perſons, indeed, were conſiſtent in what they depos'd, viz. that they had heard him ſay, that he would pull down the Temple of God, and in three Days rebuild it. But, as this Accuſation (l) was falſe in Fact, and founded only upon a figurative Expreſſion of our Saviour's, it was not thought to amount to any Thing capital.

Matt.xxvi 62. Mark xiv 60. Luke xxii. 62.

All this while our Saviour made no Manner of Reply to the Evidences that were produc'd againſt him; whereof when the High-Prieſt aſk'd him the Reaſon, and ſtill he continu'd ſilent, having one more Queſtion in Reſerve, which, if he anſwered in the negative, would (according to his Notion) make him an Impoſtor, if in the affirmative, a Blaſphemer, he ſtood up, and, in the Name of the Living God, † adjur'd him to declare, whether he was the Meſſiah, the Son of God, or not. The Reverence which our Lord paid to that Sacred Name, made him immediately anſwer, and that in direct Terms, That he was; and that of this they would be convinc'd, ſtrong Imagination that it was John, the belov'd Apoſtle; but John, we read, was with Chriſt in the Garden cloath'd, and cannot therefore eaſily conceive how he came to fly away naked. It ſeems moſt probable therefore, that this young Man might be no ways related to our Saviour, but, hearing a Noiſe in the Garden, which might not be far diſtant from the Houſe where he lodg'd in the Village of Gethſemane, he aroſe, and follow'd the Company in his Night-Gown, (as we have render'd it) in pure Curioſity to ſee what was the Matter, and that, when the Guards were for ſeizing him, he fled away naked, i. e. with nothing but his Shirt on; for ſo the Expreſſion may be underſtood. Calmet's Commentary, Whitby's and Beauſobre's Annotations.

‡ Annas (who by Joſephus is called Ananus) had been High-Prieſt, enjoying that Dignity for eleven Years; and, even after he was depos'd, retain'd ſtill the Title, and had a great Share of the Management of all publick Affairs. When John the Baptiſt enter'd upon the Exerciſe of his Miniſtry, he is called the High-Prieſt in Conjunction with Caiphas, Luke iii. 2. tho', at that Time, he did not act in this Character; and, when our Saviour was apprehended, he was firſt brought to his Houſe, according to St. John, Chap. xviii. 13, 14. tho' the other Evangeliſts paſs that over in Silence, becauſe there was nothing done to him there, and it looks, as if he were only there detain'd, until the Council, met at the Houſe of Caiphas, was ready for him. Calmet's Dictionary, and Whitby's Annotations.

† Some of the Ancients are of Opinion, that this Officer was Malchus, the ſame Perſon, whoſe Ear our Lord had healed in the Garden. The more ungrateful he! And Selden pretends, that, in this Act, he did nothing contrary to the Law of his Country, which allow'd every Iſraelite, by what they call the Judgment of Zeal, to avenge, upon the Spot, all publick Injury done to God, or his Temple, to the Nation in general, or the High-Prieſt in particular. De Jure Nat. & Gent. lib. iv. c. 5.

(k) John xviii. 23.

† From this Defence, which our Saviour makes for himſelf, we may learn, that we are not literally to underſtand his Precept of turning the other Cheek to him, that ſmites us, ſince, inſtead of doing this, we find him endeavouring to vindicate the Innocence of his Words; and from hence we may obſerve likewiſe, that to ſtand upon the Defence of our own Innocency cannot be contrary to the Chriſtian Duties of Patience and Forgiveneſs. Whitby's Annotations.

(l) John ii. 19.

† The Jews in general, but eſpecially their Judges and Magiſtrates, had a Cuſtom of conjuring by the Name of God, or of exacting an Oath of thoſe, whoſe Crimes did not ſufficiently appear by the Evidence of Witneſſes, or any other Means. The Perſon, thus interrogated, was oblig'd to ſpeak Truth, and, in all doubtful Caſes, his Confeſſion or Denial was deciſive, either to acquit or condemn him. Calmet's Commentary.

convinc'd, when they ſhould ſee him ſitting on the Right-Hand of the Almighty, and coming in the Clouds of Heaven. Whereupon the High-Prieſt, in Teſtimony of his Abhorrence, rent his Cloaths [†], as if he had heard the groſſeſt Blaſphemy [†], and then, addreſſing himſelf to the Council, told them, that there was no Occaſion for any farther Witneſſes, becauſe what the Priſoner had ſaid was palpable Blaſphemy, and ſo demanded their Opinion, who unanimouſly agreed, that, according to their Law, he was guilty of Death.

WITH this Reſolution they repair'd to their reſpective Homes, (for now it was late) and left our Lord to the Mercy of the Soldiers, and the High-Prieſt's Servants, who offer'd all the Acts of Inſolence, and Affrontery, that they could invent to his Sacred Perſon, whilſt ſome ſpit on him, others buffeted him, others blind-folded him, and others again, ſmiting him with their Fiſts, called on him to propheſy [†] who it was, that ſtruck him; with many more Indignities, and abominable Blaſphemies, which muſt have been greater than all Patience, had his Meekneſs and Patience been leſs than infinite.

And denied by Peter three Times.

Matth. xxvi. 58, &c. Mark xiv. 54, &c. Luke xxii. 54, &c. John xviii. 18, &c.

DURING this melancholy Scene, Peter, whoſe Fears had made him flee from his Maſter in the Garden, having a little recover'd his Spirits, and hoping to paſs undiſcover'd in the Throng, ventur'd in among others, to ſee the Iſſue of this fatal Night, and by the Intereſt of his Fellow Diſciple, John (who went with him) was let in by a Maid-Servant to the High-Prieſt's Palace. [†] It was now cold Weather; and, the Servants and Officers having kindled a Fire in the Common-Hall, Peter went in, and ſat down among them to warm himſelf; when the Maid, who let him in, fixing her Eyes upon him, was confident ſhe knew him, and, accordingly, told the Company that he was a Diſciple of Jeſus of Nazareth, which he poſitively deny'd to them all, and, as he withdrew into the Porch, heard the Cock crow [*], but his troubled Thoughts took no Notice of it.

WHILE he was in the Porch, another Maid charg'd him with the ſame Thing; but he deny'd it again, not only with the ſame Confidence, but with the Solemnity of an Oath; and, about an Hour after, when another inferr'd from his Dialect [†], that he muſt neceſſarily be a Galilean, and a Relation of the Man, whoſe Ear he had cut off, ſtrongly affirmed, that he ſaw him in the Garden, this ſo intimidated him, that, with horrid Oaths [†] and

Imprecations

[†] The Rending the Cloaths was a Token of Indignation, holy Zeal, and Piety, among the Jews, expreſs'd on ſeveral Occaſions, eſpecially of Grief, in Humiliation; and of Anger, in hearing any blaſphemous Speech. This however was forbidden the High-Prieſt, not only as to his Sacerdotal Veſtments, but alſo as to his other Garments, Lev. xxi. 10, becauſe he was not to appear before God in the Habit of a Mourner; but they, by their Traditions, had ſo qualify'd that Precept, as to allow him to rend his Cloaths at the Bottom, tho' he was permitted to do it from the Top to the Breaſt. Beauſobre's and Whitby's Annotations.

[†] From hence we may obſerve, that the Jews of that Age did not think, that the Meſſiah was to be God, but only a Man, who could not challenge to himſelf Divinity; ſeeing they never concluded our Lord to be a Blaſphemer, becauſe he ſaid he was the Chriſt, but only becauſe he ſaid he was the Son of God, and thereby made himſelf equal with God, John v. 18. Whitby's Annotations.

[†] By this Kind of Inſult they tacitly reproach'd him with being a falſe Prophet. Calmet's Commentary.

[†] The Jews themſelves allow, (as Dr Lightfoot informs us) that there might be Froſt and Snow at the Time of the Paſſover; and a common Thing it was for great Dews to fall then, which would make the Air cold, until the Sun had exhaled them. Whitby's Annotations.

[*] It is reported of St Peter, that, ever after, when he heard the Cock crow, he wept, remembering the old Inſtrument of his Repentance and Converſion, and his own Unworthineſs, for which he never ceas'd to do Acts of Sorrow and Penance. Howell's Hiſtory, in the Notes.

[†] The Galileans ſpake the ſame Language, that the reſt of the Jews did; but then they had a certain uncouth Accent, and Manner of Expreſſion, which diſtinguiſh'd them from others, and made them be contemned, and ridiculed by the Natives of Judea. Calmet's Commentary, and Beauſobre's Annotations.

[†] Some of the Antients have taken great Pains to extenuate this Fault of Peter's. St Ambroſe on Luke, and Hilary on Matthew, both aſſert, that the Apoſtle did not lye, in ſaying, I know not the Man, but only diſguis'd the Truth, renouncing Chriſt in the Quality of a Man, but not as the Son of God: But this (according to St Jerom) is to defend the Servant, by accuſing the Maſter of a Lye, for, if St Peter did not actually deny him, our Lord muſt have falſly Imprecations upon himſelf, he deny'd the Matter, till the Cock crew the ſecond Time, and our Saviour, (who was then in the Hall) turning to Peter, gave him ſuch a Glance, as reminded him of his Prediction, and the Foulneſs of his own Crime; whereupon, being ſtung with Compunction, and ſadly oppreſſed with Shame and Grief, he went out, and wept; he wept abundantly, he wept bitterly.

The Sanhedrim condemns him, and Judas the Traitor hangeth himſelf. GOOD FRIDAY.

Luke xxii. 66.

EARLY next Morning the Sanhedrim † met again in a full Body at their Room in the Temple, whither they order'd Jeſus to be brought; and, having again enquir'd of him, whether he was the true Meſſiah, and the Son of God, and again receiv'd the ſame Anſwer from him, they adjudg'd him guilty of Blaſphemy; and, accordingly, having condemn'd him, carry'd him to the Palace † of the Roman Governor, whoſe Name, at that Time, was Pontius Pilate †, deſiring of him to ratify their Sentence, and demanding a Warrant † for his Execution.

affirm'd, thou ſhalt deny me thrice. The Opinion of thoſe therefore is rather to be embrac'd, who acknowledge, that St Peter, by denying Chriſt with his Mouth, committed a mortal Sin, and fell from Grace; and, as it is certain, that, by confirming this Denial with an Oath, and adding horrid Execrations to it, his Sin was highly aggravated; inſtead of accounting (as ſome do) his Denial a Sin of Infirmity, wherein his Heart was true, tho' his Mouth falſe, we can hardly think, that he could do all this without great Checks of his Conſcience, and that, conſequently, for the preſent, he was in a State of Defection, though his bitter Weeping, and quick Repentance, after that Chriſt had look'd upon him, might make an Atonement for his Tranſgreſſion. Calmet's Commentary, and Whitby's Annotations.

† The Aſſembly, which was held the Night before, and wherein our Saviour was declar'd worthy of Death, was neither general, nor judicial, according to the Senſe of the Law, which did not allow of Juſtice to be adminiſter'd in private, or in the Night-Time: And therefore the High-Prieſts and Rulers met again in the Morning, in the Council-Chamber in the Temple, (which they could not do the Night before, becauſe the Temple was then always ſhut) there to re-examine our Saviour, and condemn him in Form. Calmet's Commentary.

† At Jeruſalem the People ſhew you, at this Time, the Palace of Pilate, or rather the Place, where they ſay it ſtood; for now an ordinary Turkiſh Houſe poſſeſſes its Room. In this pretended Houſe, (which ſtands not far from St Stephen's Gate, and borders on the Area of the Temple, on the North-Side) they ſhew you a Room, in which Chriſt was mocked with the Enſigns of Royalty, and buffeted by the Soldiers; and, on the other Side of the Street, (which was antiently another Part of the Palace) is the Room, where they ſay our Lord was ſcourg'd. Wells's Geography of the New Teſtament, Part I.

† It is not certainly known of what Family, or Country, this Governor was, tho' it is generally believ'd that he was of Rome, at leaſt of Italy. He ſucceeded Gratus in the Government of Judea, in which he continu'd fourteen Years, i. e. from the twelfth to the twenty-ſecond of Tiberius, and is repreſented by Philo (de Legatione ad Caium) as a Man of an impetuous and obſtinate Temper; and a Judge, who us'd to ſell Juſtice, and for Money pronounce any Sentence, that was deſir'd. The ſame Author makes mention of his Rapines, his Injuries, his Murthers, the Torments he inflicted upon the Innocent, and the Perſons, he put to Death, without any Form of Proceſs. In ſhort, he deſcribes him as a Man, that exercis'd an exceſſive Cruelty, during the whole Time of his Government, from which he was depos'd by Vitellius, the Pro Conſul of Syria, and ſent to Rome to give an Account of his Conduct to the Emperor. But, tho' Tiberius dy'd before Pilate arriv'd at Rome, yet his Succeſſor Caligula baniſh him to Vienne in Gaul, where he was reduc'd to ſuch Extremity that he killed himſelf with his own Hands. The Evangeliſts call him the Governor, (tho', properly ſpeaking, he was no more than the Procurator of Judea) not only becauſe Governor was a Name of general Uſe, but becauſe Pilate, in Effect, acted as one, by taking upon him to judge in criminal Matters, as his Predeceſſors had done, and other Procurators, in the ſmall Provinces of the Empire, where there was no Pro-Conſul, conſtantly did. Calmet's Dictionary under the Word Pilate, Echard's Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory, lib. ii. c. 2. and Beauſobre's Annotations.

† Not that the Romans had, at this Time, taken from the Sanhedrim the Power of Life and Death; for, about a Year after this, we find the Proto-Martyr, Stephen, regularly try'd, condemn'd, and ſton'd by their ſole Authority: But therefore the Jewiſh Rulers deſir'd the Concurrence of the Roman Governor, that they might make our Saviour undergo a more ſevere and ignominious Puniſhment, than they could have inflicted upon him by their own Power, becauſe Crucifixion was a Death, that their Law had not preſcrib'd. To this Purpoſe we may obſerve, that, to induce the Governor to comply with their Demand, the Accuſation, which they brought againſt him, was of a Civil Nature, and ſuch as would conſign him to the Puniſhment they deſir'd: We found this fellow perverting the Nation, and forbidding to give Tribute to Cæſar, Luke xxiii. 2. Univerſal Hiſtory, lib. ii. c. 11.

of his Treaſon, went to the Council, * and threw it among them, declaring openly, that he had acted very wickedly in betraying the innocent Blood: But, (as People that employ ſuch Inſtruments, have no Regard to what becomes of them) all the Comfort that he had from them was, that, ſince it was his own Act and Deed, † it was his Buſineſs to look to it, not theirs; ſo that, being tortur'd with the Agonies of Guilt, and finding no Relief any where, he went, and hang'd himſelf ‖; but in his Death there was ſomething ſo particular, that it made all the Inhabitants of Jeruſalem take notice of it. The Money however, which he threw among the Council, the Prieſts thought not proper to put in the Treaſury, becauſe it was the Price of Blood †; and therefore they purchas'd with it a Spot of Ground, then called the Potters Field †, (but afterwards the (m) Field of Blood) for a Place of Interment for Strangers †.

* Such is the Purchaſe of Treaſon, and the Reward of Covetouſneſs. It is cheap in its Offers, momentary in the Poſſeſſion, unſatisfying in its Fruition, uncertain in its Stay, ſudden in its Departure, horrid in the Remembrance, and a Ruin, a certain and miſerable Ruin in the Event. Taylor's Life of Chriſt, Sect. iii.

† As if the Crime of the Traytor was nothing to thoſe, who put him upon the Treaſon; or the Condemnation of an innocent Perſon, declar'd to be ſuch even by the Wretch, who had betray'd him, was only a Matter of Sport with them. Calmet's Commentary.

‖ Tho' the original Word perhaps may mean no more, than his falling into a violent ſuffocating Fit of Sadneſs and Deſpair, which might ſtop all his natural Paſſages, and ſo, for Want of Vent, make him burſt aſunder, and his Guts break out at his Navel; yet to me the moſt natural and obvious Signification of the Word is preferable. The only Difficulty is, how to reconcile his Hanging of himſelf with what is elſewhere recorded of him, viz. that, falling headlong, he burſt aſunder in the Midſt, and all his Bowels guſhed out, Acts i. 18. But to this Purpoſe the Conjectures of ſeveral have been various. Some think, that he hanged himſelf on a Tree, but that, the Branch yielding, and bending to the Ground, he was not, at that Time, ſtrangled, but afterwards fell into a Dropſy, of which he burſt and dy'd. Others imagine, that he threw himſelf from ſome Place, higher than that, on which he intended to hang himſelf, and that, by the Force of the Swing, when he caſt himſelf off, the Rope broke, ſo that he fell to the Ground, and burſt. Others ſuppoſe, that, as he might hang himſelf in ſome private Place, he probably there continu'd, until his Belly ſwell'd, (as it commonly happens to ſuch as die in that Manner) and, in a ſhort Time, his Bowels burſt out: And for this they have the Authority of ſome Copies, which, inſtead of πρηνὴς γενόμενος, falling down headlong, have ἀποκρεμάμενος, thus hanging, he burſt aſunder, and all his Bowels guſhed out. But, in whatever Manner this came to paſs, I cannot ſee, why, in this extraordinary Inſtance, we may not admit of a more than ordinary Providence, to make the Death of this Traitor more remarkable. Le Scene's Eſſay, Part II. c. vii. Calmet's Commentary, Hammond's and Whitby's Annotations.

† It was a Cuſtom among the Jews, which was afterwards imitated by the firſt Chriſtians, that it ſhould not be lawful for Executioners to offer any Thing, or for any Alms to be receiv'd from them; and ſo, by Analogy, any Money, with which a Life was bought, was not to be put into the Treaſury. Hammond's Annotations.

† The Valley of Jehoſhaphat runs croſs the Mouth of another Valley, called the Valley of Hinnon, lying at the Bottom of Mount Sion. On the Weſt Side of this Valley is the Place, called the Potters Field, where, not improbably, the People of that Trade were us'd to dry their Pots, before they bak'd them. It was afterwards called the Field of Blood, for the Reaſon, that the Evangeliſt aſſigns; but at preſent, from that Veneration, which it has obtain'd among Chriſtians, it is nam'd Campo Sancto, or the Holy Field. It is a ſmall Plat of Ground, not above thirty Yards long, and about half as much broad, and one Moiety of it is taken up by a ſquare Fabrick about twelve Yards high, built for a Charnel-Houſe, and cover'd over with a Vault, in which are ſome Openings, to let down the Bodies, that are to be buried there. The Earth muſt certainly be impregnated with a very corroſive Salt, if what ſome tell us be true, viz. that it can diſſolve a Body in the Space of four and twenty Hours. Thoſe however, who have look'd down through theſe Openings, tell us, that they could ſee many Bodies under ſeveral Degrees of Decay, from whence they conjectur'd that this Grave does not make ſuch quick Diſpatch with the Corpſes committed to it, as is commonly reported. The Armenians have the Command of this Burying-Place, for which they pay to the Turks the Rent of a Zequin a Day, and, a little below the Campo Sancto, is ſhewn an intricate Cave, or a Sepulchre, conſiſting of ſeveral Rooms, one within another, in which the Apoſtles are ſaid to have hid themſelves, when they forſook their Maſter, and fled. Wells's Geography of the New-Teſtament, Part I.

(m) Acts i. 19.

† The Strangers here meant may be either Men of other Nations, with whom the Jews would have no Commerce, even when they were dead, and therefore provided a ſeparate Burying-Place for them; or they might be Jews, who, coming from far to Jeruſalem to ſacrifice, dy'd there, before their Return Home, and ſo the Prieſts provided a Burying-Place for them. Hammond's Annotations.

Pilate endeavours to ſave him.
John xviii. 28.

WHEN the Members of the Sanhedrim came to the Governor's Palace, they refus'd to go into the (n) Judgment-Hall †, for Fear of contracting ſome Pollution, and therefore Pilate went out to them; and as he underſtood, that they had already paſs'd Sentence upon him, he demanded the Grounds of their Accuſation againſt him: But, being unwilling that any Enquiry ſhould be made into the Particulars of their Proceedings, they anſwer'd in general, that, † if he were not a Criminal, they would not have brought him to him. Imagining therefore that the Proſecution was about ſome Matters relating to their Religion, the Governor deſir'd, they would take him, and judge him according to their own Law; but to this they reply'd, † that it was not permitted them to put any Man to Death.

BY

(n) John xviii. 28.

† Becauſe in the Governor's Palace there was a Guard of Roman Soldiers, and a great Company of Servants, and, as they were Heathens, they thought, that, by touching any of them, they ſhould be defiled, and, conſequently, made incapable of eating the Paſſover, of which no unclean Perſon was to partake. By the Paſſover however, here in St John, Chap. xviii. 28, we are not to underſtand the Paſchal Lamb, which the reſt of the Jews, as well as our Saviour, had eaten the Night before, but the Chagigah, or Peace Offering, i. e. the Sheep and Oxen, that were offer'd all the ſeven Days of the Feaſt, and are expreſsly called the Paſſover, Luke xxii. 1. Thus the Jewiſh Doctors remark upon Deut. xvi. 2. Thou ſhalt ſacrifice the Paſſover to the Lord, of the Flock, and of the Herd, that the Flock ſignifies the Lambs, which were eaten on the 14th, and the Herd, the Offerings of the Chagigah, which were conſum'd on the 15th Day of the Month Niſan. The Jewiſh Rulers therefore would not go into the Judgment-Hall, that they might not be unfit to eat the Paſſover, i. e. thoſe Paſchal Offerings of the Herd, which were holy Things, and of which none might eat in their Defilement. Whitby's Annotations and Appendix to St Mark. Vid. Calmet's Commentary upon this Paſſage of St John, where he oppoſes this Opinion with Reaſons, that ſeem to have ſome Weight in them.

† By this Anſwer they ſeem willing to make Pilate, not ſo much a Judge of the Cauſe, as an Executor of their Sentence: But there cannot poſſibly be an higher Act of Injuſtice, than to deſire, that a Judge ſhould ſuppoſe the accus'd Perſon guilty of the Crime, without any farther Examination. It is no ſtrange and extraordinary Thing to ſee innocent Perſons oppreſs'd by arbitrary Proceedings, without any legal Proceſs; but for a Man to be brought before a Judge, in order to be deliver'd up directly to Execution, without any Proof of his Crime, or any Examination concerning it, is a new Way of Oppreſſion, firſt invented and contriv'd againſt the Saviour of the World. Calmet's Commentary.

† Whether the Jews had, at this Time, the Power of Life and Death, is a Point, much controverted among the Learned. The Anſwer, which the Jewiſh Rulers here give to Pilate, and the general Opinion of their Rabbins, who ſuppoſe, that their Rulers loſt the Power about Forty Years before the Deſtruction of Jeruſalem, ſeem to incline to the Negative; but thoſe, who take the other Side of the Queſtion, argue thus, —— That the Jews, when reduc'd to a Roman Province, had ſtill the Privilege granted them, to uſe the ſacred Inſtitutions and Cuſtoms, that were deriv'd to them from their Fathers; Joſeph. Antiq. lib. xiv. c. 17. that it was granted to Hyrcanus, the High-Prieſt, if any Controverſy ſhould ariſe concerning their Diſcipline, that the Judgment of it ſhould be referr'd to him; that, purſuant to this Grant, we find the High-Prieſt and his Council ſtoning Stephen, not by the Rage of Zealots, (as ſome conceive) but according to the Law, which requires, that the Blaſphemer ſhould be ſton'd, Levit. xxiv. 16. that Saul, arm'd with the Power of the High-Prieſt and Elders, perſecuted the Jewiſh Chriſtians unto Death, and led them bound to Jeruſalem to be puniſh'd, Acts xxii. 4, 5. that the Jews would have judg'd Paul after their own Law, Acts xxiv. 6. and have put him to Death, Acts xxiii. 27. had not Lyſias, the chief Captain, reſcu'd him from their Hands, which they ſay he did by Violence, i. e. by an Invaſion of their Rights, but he affirms he did it, becauſe he underſtood that Paul was a Roman: And from hence they conclude, that they ſtill retain'd the Power of judging, and condemning thoſe to Death, who were Jews by Nature and Deſcent, and by their Laws deſerv'd to die, tho', as to ſome Perſons, and in ſome Caſes, they had not that Power. Thus, when Annas, or Ananus, the High-Prieſt, killed James, the Brother of our Lord, and ſton'd many other Chriſtians, as Tranſgreſſors of the Law, the wiſeſt Part of the Nation (ſays Joſephus) diſlik'd his Proceedings, becauſe he ſhould not have called a Council concerning Life and Death, without Licence from Albinus, the Roman Preſident. From whence we may infer, that the Power of inflicting capital Puniſhments, even upon the Jews, converted to the Chriſtian Faith, was then ſo far taken from them, that they could not regularly do it, without firſt obtaining Leave from the Roman Governor: And, in the Caſe of our Bleſſed Saviour, the Jews had debarr'd themſelves from the Power of putting him to Death, after they had accus'd him before Pilate, not of Crimes committed againſt their Law, but of Sedition, and aſpiring at a Kingdom, to the Prejudice of Cæſar and the Roman Government, whereof it belong'd to Pilate, and not to them to judge and determine. And therefore their ſaying to him, It is not lawful for us to put any Man to Death, John xviii. 31, is look'd upon, either as a Kind of Complaint of the Encroachments, which the Romans had made upon their Civil Conſtitution, or as a mere Pretence, ſince Pilate gave them Power enough, when he bad them take him, and judge him according to their Law; and that the true Reaſons of their bringing him before the Roman Tribunal were, that he might be condemn'd for Sedition, which would be a Means to ſecure them from the Rage of the People, and that he might be crucify'd, which was a Roman Death, and generally inflicted on thoſe, that were found tampering againſt the Government. Calmet's Commentary, Whitby's and Beauſobre's Annotations.

Luke xxiii. 5.

By theſe reſerv'd Anſwers Pilate, perceiving that their Intention was to make him the Inſtrument of their Malice againſt an innocent Man, refuſ'd to intermeddle in the Affair, unleſs they would exhibit ſome Articles of Accuſation againſt him. Knowing therefore that Pilate was a Creature of the Roman Court, and a Slave to its Greatneſs, they alledg'd againſt our Lord, —— That ‡ he was guilty of ſeditious Practices, of diſſuading the Payment of the Tribute to Cæſar, and of ſetting himſelf up for a King. Pilate, hearing the Name of a King, thought himſelf concern'd to examine that Point; and therefore, returning to the Judgment-Hall, and ſeating himſelf upon the Tribunal, he aſk'd Jeſus whether he was the King of the Jews? Which our Lord never pretended to deny, but then he inform'd the Governor, that † his Kingdom was not of this World, and could therefore give no Umbrage to the Romans; for that, had it been a worldly Kingdom, his Subjects and Followers would have certainly fought for him, and ſav'd him from the Hands of the Jews. When Pilate heard that he diſclaim'd all Right to ſecular Kingdoms, he thought he had nothing to do to examine him about the Nature of his ſpiritual Empire; and therefore, withdrawing from the Court into the Veſtibulum, (where his Accuſers were impatiently expecting the Ratification of their Sentence, in order to Execution) contrary to their Hopes, he plainly told them, that he found nothing worthy of Death in him.

Upon this Diſappointment, the Chief-Prieſts and Elders grew exceedingly fierce and clamorous, repreſenting our Lord as a turbulent Mover of the People, and charging him with the ſpreading of ſeditious Principles through all † Galilee, and Judea, even as far as Jeruſalem. Pilate, hearing them name Galilee, and underſtanding that he was a Galilean, and, conſequently, belong'd to † Herod's Juriſdiction; in order to get rid of the Importunity of the Jews, and withal to free himſelf from this odious and puzzling Affair, ſent him immediately to Herod, who was then at Jeruſalem, upon the Occaſion of the Feaſt. Herod was no leſs proud of the Honour done him by Pilate, than glad of having this Opportunity to gratify his Curioſity. For, having heard much of our Saviour's Fame, he expected to ſee ſome Miracle or other done by him, but found himſelf ſadly diſappointed. For, tho' the Scribes and Rulers purſu'd him with their Accuſations to Herod's Palace, and Herod, in hearing the Cauſe, aſk'd him ſeveral Queſtions, yet he would not vouchſafe ſo much as one Anſwer; which made the Tetrarch look upon him as an inſignificant, deſpicable Perſon; and, accordingly,

‡ When our Lord's Accuſers came before Pilate, they ſaid nothing of his pretended Blaſphemy, his Deſtruction of the Temple, or Violation of the Law of Moſes, becauſe they were Queſtions, that the Governor, they knew, would not concern himſelf with; and therefore they forg'd ſuch Accuſations againſt him, as they thought might make him odious and ſuſpected to the Roman Government, and oblige Pilate to be ſevere againſt him. Calmet's Commentary.

† Not of human Original, but from Heaven, and ſo meddled not with the Affairs of this World; that it had none of the Pomp and Splendor of the World annex'd to it; none to fight for it with Carnal Weapons, and exercis'd no Dominion over Mens Bodies, but over their Souls only; that its Regiment was ſpiritual, and its Judicatories the Courts of Conſcience; its Tribute a Conformity to the great Laws of Faith, Hope, and Charity; and its only Imposts, the Duties of an holy Spirit, and the Expreſſes of a religious Worſhip, a reſign'd Will, and a conſenting Underſtanding, in which Pilate ſoon perceiv'd that the Intereſt of Cæſar could not be invaded. Whitby's Annotations, and Taylor's Life of Chriſt, Part iii. Sect. 15.

† Here they artfully make mention of Galilee, to incite Pilate againſt him, as a ſeditious Perſon, and to confirm their own Suggeſtion, that he was ſo; for they give him to think, that, as he was a Galilean, he might probably embrace the Opinion of Judas Gaulonites, who held it was not lawful to pay Tribute to Cæſar; a Notion, which the Inhabitants of Galilee had generally imbib'd, and upon that Account were always prone to Sedition and Rebellion, for which ſome of them, not long before, had been ſet upon, and ſlain by Pilate. Whitby's Annotations.

† Pilate's Government did not extend to Galilee; it included Judea only. Herod Antipas, the Son of Herod the Great, was, at this Time, King, or Tetrarch of Galilee; Jeſus, conſequently, was his Subject; and therefore, according to the Roman Laws, it was Pilate's Duty to ſend him to his proper Sovereign, eſpecially as he was accus'd of Rebellion, and a Deſign to make himſelf a King. Calmet's Commentary, and Grotius on Luke xxiii.

accordingly, having committed him to the Deriſion and Inſults of his Guards, who us'd him with the utmoſt Indignity, he ſent him back again to Pilate, array'd in a white Robe †, whether it was to make a Mock of him, or to indicate his Innocence, or both; but ſo it was, that, from that Time, Herod and Pilate († who before were at great Variance) were, upon this Occaſion, perfectly reconciled.

Pilate's Speech to the Rulers in Favour of our Lord, and the People's Clamours againſt him. Luke xxiii. 13.

When our Lord was remanded back in this Manner, Pilate addreſs'd himſelf to the Prieſts and Rulers of the People, telling them, "That, tho' they had brought "this Man before him, as a ſeditious "Perſon, and a Seducer of the People, "yet, upon Examination, he could not "find him guilty of any of the Crimes, "that were laid to his Charge; that this "was not his own Opinion only, but that "Herod (who was a more competent "Judge of the Affair, and to whom he "he had ſent him, on Purpoſe to take cognizance of it) had no ways ſignify'd that "his Crimes were capital; and therefore, "inſtead of taking away his Life, he propos'd ſome leſſer Puniſhment, if they "thought fit, ſuch as † ſcourging him a "little with Whips, and ſo diſmiſſing "him:" But this Lenity was ſo diſagreeable to their enrag'd Temper, that they peremptorily demanded Execution, ſaying, Crucify him, crucify him. Pilate, ſtill tender of ſhedding innocent Blood, expoſtulated the Matter with them, deſiring to know what Evil he had done; for, as for his Part, he could find no Fault in him, much leſs any Crimes deſerving of Death; but this did but the more exaſperate, and make them more clamorous for ſpeedy Execution.

Mat. xxvii. 15. Mark xv. 6. John xviii. 39.

The Governor had one Expedient more, which he thought would not fail him. Every Paſſover † he was oblig'd by a certain Cuſtom to pardon one Criminal, whom the Jews ſhould nominate, and therefore, when the People came, and were urgent with him to grant them that uſual Favour, he propos'd two Perſons to them, Barabbas, a notorious Malefactor, who, in an Inſurrection with ſome other ſeditious Perſons, had committed Murther, and Jeſus, who was called Chriſt; never doubting, but that the Populace, who, he knew, were better inclin'd to our Lord, than their Rulers, would have preferr'd an innocent Man, before a Thief and a Murtherer: But, at the Inſtigation of their Prieſts, and others in Authority, they requir'd, that the Favour might be granted to Barabbas. Hereupon, when the Governor deſir'd to know, what he was to do with the Perſon, whom they called Chriſt, they, one and all, cry'd out, Crucify him,

† The original Words mean properly a ſplendid Robe, and do not relate ſo much to the Colour, as the Richneſs of the Habit. Calmet's Commentary.

† It is generally thought, that the Cauſe of this Difference between them was the Maſſacre, that Pilate made of ſome Galileans, at Jeruſalem, in the Time of the Paſſover, Luke xiii. 1. which Herod reſented, as an Indignity put upon him, and an Invaſion of his Authority, who was at that Time Tetrarch of Galilee. Beauſobre's Annotations.

† This Chaſtiſement (as Pilate calls it) was not in order to his Crucifixion, and therefore was not that Puniſhment, which the Romans us'd to inflict upon Malefactors, as a Preparative to their Execution, for Pilate intended it as a Means to procure his Releaſe; and therefore, he ſeem'd willing to conſent to it as a Puniſhment, which the Jews ſo commonly inflicted upon thoſe, who had acted perverſly againſt their Law, and their Traditions, that he might exempt him from that Sentence, which they were ſo urgent with him to pronounce. But the Reſult of this his Compliance was, that he neither ſav'd our Lord, nor preſerv'd Juſtice. Inſtead of one Puniſhment, the Innocent was made to ſuffer two, being at laſt both ſcourg'd, and crucify'd. Whitby's Annotations, and Calmet's Commentary.

† As the Feaſt of the Paſſover was celebrated by the Jews in Memory of their Deliverance from Egyptian Bondage, it was very agreeable to the Nature of that Feaſt, and therefore cuſtomary at that Time (tho' practiſed on no other Feſtivals) to make this Releaſe. It is obſerved, however, that this Practice was no Cuſtom of the Jews, even when they had the Civil Adminiſtration in their Hands, but a Piece of Popularity, or Favour of the Procurator, firſt brought in by Pilate, and afterwards continu'd by ſome Chriſtian Emperors, who, by a general Law, commanded the Judges, that, on the firſt Day of the Paſſover, all Jewiſh Priſoners, except ſuch, as were committed for particular Crimes, ſhould be diſcharg'd. Whitby's and Hammond's Annotations.

him, crucify him; and as he ſtill inſiſted on his Innocence, and propos'd ſome lighter Puniſhment, (which was all, to be ſure, that he could deſerve) they began to redouble their Clamours, and, in the moſt tumultuous Manner, imaginable, demand that he might be crucify'd.

Matth. xxvii. 19.

He orders him to be ſcourg'd, on Purpoſe to move the People's Pity, but in vain.

The Governor, in the mean Time, receiv'd a Meſſage from his Wife †, deſiring him, by no Means to condemn the innocent Perſon, that was then before him, becauſe, upon his Account, ſhe had had that Night many frightful and uneaſy Dreams, which made him the more earneſt to releaſe him, or at leaſt to ſpare his Life; and therefore, in Hopes of pacifying the People's Rage, he order'd him to be ſcourg'd. The Soldiers, who were to do this, thinking it not enough to execute his Orders, took him into the Common-Hall, where, ſtripping him of his own Cloaths, they put a looſe purple Coat about him, for a Robe; a Wreath of Thorns upon his Head, for a Crown; and a Reed in his Hand, for a Sceptre; and then, in Deriſion, ſaluted him, and, bowing their Knees, mock'd him with the ſham Profeſſion of Allegiance. After this, they ſpit in his Face, ſmote him on the Cheek, and (to make his Crown of Thorns pierce the deeper) ſtruck him on the Head with his phantaſtick Sceptre; and then leading him to a Pillar, (where they ty'd him faſt) they ſcourg'd him with Whips, and with ſuch unrelenting Cruelty, that his tender Fleſh was torn in Pieces, and the Pavement crimſon'd with his moſt precious Blood.

In this piteous Plight, with his Head, Face, and Body embrew'd in Blood, and with all his mock Ornaments on, Pilate, in Hopes of moving the People's Compaſſion, order'd him to be brought forth; and when he appear'd, See the Man! ſays he, this rueful Spectacle of ſuffering Innocence! But ſo far were they from melting at the Sight of ſo deplorable an Object, that they rais'd their Cries ſtill louder and louder for his Crucifixion; and, when the Governor ſtill inſiſted on his Innocence, (a) we have a Law †, ſaid they, and by our Law he ought to die, becauſe he made himſelf the Son of God.

John xix. 8.

After all his Endeavours to ſave him, he is compelled to pronounce Sentence againſt him.

These laſt Words rais'd ſome Terror in Pilate, and gave him more Uneaſineſs: For, taking them in ſuch a Senſe, as an Heathen might well put upon them, he began to apprehend, that, if he ſhould proceed to Sentence againſt him, he might deſtroy, not only an innocent Perſon, but poſſibly ſome Hero, or mighty Demi-God, and ſo at once commit an Act of Injuſtice and Impiety both. He therefore, returning with Jeſus to the Judgment-Seat again, began to enquire into his Original and Pedigree: But, as it was no Part of our Saviour's Intention to eſcape Death, he thought it not proper to ſay any thing in his own Juſtification; until, his Silence having given the Governor ſome Offence, (inſomuch, that he put

† From the Time of Tiberius, the Governors of Provinces were allow'd to take their Wives along with them, which was a Privilege not granted them before. This Wife of Pilate's, according to the general Tradition, was nam'd Claudia Proſcula; and, in Relation to her Dream, ſome are of Opinion, that, as ſhe had Intelligence of our Lord's Apprehenſion, and knew, by his Character, that he was a righteous Perſon, her Imagination, being ſtruck with theſe Ideas, did naturally produce the Dream we read of. But, as our Saviour was apprehended about Midnight, out of the City, and without Pilate's Privity, and detain'd in the Houſe of Annas, until it was Day, there was no Poſſibility for her having any Notice of it, before ſhe went to ſleep, and therefore we have the juſter Reaſon to believe, that this Dream was ſent providentially upon her, for the clearer Manifeſtation of our Lord's Innocence. Calmet's Commentary.

(a) John xix. 7.

† When the Jews perceiv'd that Pilate look'd upon the Accuſations, which they brought againſt Jeſus, of his being a ſeditious Perſon, and one who aim'd at a Kingdom, as idle Suggeſtions, and what had no Shadow of Probability in them, they had recourſe to another Allegation, viz. his being a Violater of the Laws of their Nation, and guilty of Blaſphemy, which (as they were allow'd to be govern'd by their own Law) they had a Right to demand of their Governor to ſee puniſh'd, and, accordingly, did it with Arrogance enough. Calmet's Commentary.

put him in Mind, that his Life or Death, his Releaſe or Crucifixion, depended upon him) he then reply'd, that ſuch Power he could not have over him, were it not permitted him from above; and that therefore, they, who had delivered him up, had the greater Sin † to anſwer for, than he.

John xix. 12.

THIS Reply made Pilate ſtill the more deſirous to releaſe him, which when the Jews perceiv'd, they found out at laſt this Expedient to work upon his Fears, by telling him plainly, that, if he did not puniſh a Man, who ſet himſelf up for a King, he was an Enemy to the Emperor; a Menace, which he, * who knew the jealous Temper of his Maſter Tiberius full well, and how eaſily a wrong Repreſentation of theſe Proceedings might prove his Ruin, had not the Courage to withſtand: And therefore, returning to the Hall, he order'd Jeſus to be brought, in the ſame Habit, to his publick Tribunal, which ſtood in a pav'd Place, called Gabatha †, and, before he gave Sentence, calling for Water, and waſhing his Hands * before all the People, he ſolemnly declar'd, that he was innocent of the Blood of that juſt Man, Matth. xxvii. 24.

† Pilate indeed ſinned heinouſly, in abuſing his Power, to the Condemnation of the Innocent: But Judas ſinned more, in delivering him up to the Chief-Prieſts, and the Chief-Prieſts, in delivering him up to Pilate, than Pilate himſelf, whom they made a Tool to ſerve their Malice and Revenge. They had better Means of Knowledge than he, and ſo ſinned againſt mere Light, and, conſequently, their Guilt was greater, and their Condemnation heavier than his. Beauſobre's Annotations.

* This Threat ſeems to be the Reaſon, why Pilate (as he is quoted by ſeveral of the antient Fathers) ſent an Account of our Saviour and his Crucifixion to the Emperor Tiberius, in order to clear himſelf from ſo unjuſt a Deed, and to throw the Odium of it upon the Jewiſh Sanhedrim. For, as it was cuſtomary for all Governors to ſend an Account of the moſt memorable Tranſactions, that happen'd in the Time of their Adminiſtration; the Crucifixion of a Perſon of our Saviour's Character was of too ſignal a Nature, not to be tranſmitted to Rome: And, accordingly, the Subſtance of what is contain'd in the Acts of Pilate (as they are called) relating to this Matter, may be compriz'd in ſuch Words as theſe:

Pilate to Tiberius, &c.

" I have been forc'd to conſent at length to the Crucifixion of Jeſus Chriſt, to prevent a Tumult among the Jews, " tho' it was very much againſt my Will: For the World never ſaw, and probably never will ſee, a Man of " ſuch extraordinary Piety and Uprightneſs. But the High-Prieſts and Sanhedrim fulfilled in it the Oracles of " their Prophets, and of their Sybils. Whilſt he hung on the Croſs, a horrid Darkneſs, which cover'd the Earth, " ſeem'd to threaten its final End. His Followers, who pretend to have ſeen him riſe from the Dead, and aſcend " into Heaven, and acknowledge him for their God, do ſtill ſubſiſt, and, by their excellent Lives, ſhew themſelves " the worthy Diſciples of ſo extraordinary a Maſter. I did what I could to ſave him from the Malice of the Jews, " but the Fear of a total Inſurrection made me ſacrifice him to the Peace and Intereſt of your Empire, &c." Univerſal Hiſtory.

† The Word Gabatha, in the Syriack, (for that is the Language, which was then commonly ſpoken, and which the Writers of the New Teſtament do therefore call the Hebrew) ſignifies an Elevation; and therefore the Place, where Pilate had his Tribunal erected, was probably a Terras, a Gallery, or Balcony belonging to his Palace, and pav'd with Stone, or Marble, as the Word λιθόστρωτος imports.

* Waſhing of Hands, with a Deſign to denote Innocency, was not only peculiar to the Jews, but cuſtomary among other Nations, becauſe by the Element of Water 'tis natural to ſignify Purity and Cleanneſs; but then the Queſtion is, whether, in Conformity to the Jews or Gentiles, it was, that Pilate made uſe of this Ceremony. To expiate an unknown Murther, the Elders of the next adjacent City were wont to waſh their Hands, and ſay, Our Hands have not ſhed this Blood, Deut. xxi. 6, 7. And the Pſalmiſt, having renounc'd all Confederacy with wicked and miſchievous Men, makes this Reſolution, I will waſh my Hands, in Teſtimony of my Innocency, Pſal. xxvi. 6. From which Paſſages Origen is of Opinion, that Pilate did this in Compliance with the Manners of the Jews, that by Actions, as well as Words, he might declare to them the Opinion he had of our Lord's Innocence. But, as Pilate was a Roman, others are rather inclin'd to think, that, in this Action, he conform'd himſelf to the Manners of the Gentiles. The Scholiaſt upon Sophocles (in Ajace) informs us, that it was the Cuſtom, among the Antients, when they had killed a Man, or ſhed Blood, to waſh their Hands in Water, thereby to purify them from their Defilement; and to the ſame Purpoſe Virgil introduces Æneas ſpeaking:

> Me, bello è tanto digreſſum & cæde recenti,
> Attrectare nefas; donec me flumine vivo
> Abluero. Æneid. ii. ver. 718.

Nay, Clemens Romanus informs us, (lib. ii. c. 52.) that when Judges were going to pronounce Sentence of Death, they uſually lifted up their Hands to Heaven, thereby to denote their own Innocency; and 'tis not improbable, that they waſh'd their Hands, before they did ſo, that they might lift them up with the more Purity. Whitby's Annotations, and Calmet's Commentary.

Man, and that they muſt anſwer for it; whereupon the whole Body of the People cry'd out, May his Blood fall upon us, and our Poſterity! An Imprecation, as black as Hell, and what has been too long (may it pleaſe the Almighty to ſhorten their Puniſhment!) verify'd upon them.

Our Saviour is carry'd out to be crucify'd.

BARABBAS being thus releas'd, and Jeſus condemn'd to the Croſs, the Soldiers and Officers, after they had acted over again their former Inſults and Indignities, took off the purple Coat, and put his own Garments on him, and, having laid an heavy Croſs upon his Shoulders [†], led him away to his Crucifixion [†]: But, when they came to the Gate of the City, his Strength was ſo entirely exhauſted, that he was not able to ſtand under it any longer, and therefore they compelled one Simon [†], a Cyrenian, the Father of Alexander and Rufus, to bear it the reſt of the Way.

Matth. xxvii. 31. Mark xv. 20. Luke xxiii. 26. John xix. 16.

AMONG the vaſt Throngs, that follow'd to this Execution, there were many People, (eſpecially ſome pious Women (who could not behold this ſad Spectacle, without the higheſt Grief and Lamentation; which, when our Saviour obſerv'd, lifting up his Face, all bloody, and disfigur'd, "Weep not for me, ſaid he, but weep for "yourſelves, and your Children; for it will not be long, before thoſe ſhall be accounted happy, who ſhall have no Poſterity [*] to inherit the Miſeries, that

[†] It was a Cuſtom, that he, who was to be crucify'd, ſhould bear his own Croſs to the Place of Execution: But, whereas it is generally ſuppos'd, that our Lord bore the whole Croſs, i. e. the long and tranſverſe Part both, this ſeems to be a thing impoſſible; and therefore Lipſius, in his Treatiſe (de Supplicio Crucis) has ſet the Matter in a true Light, when he tells us, that Jeſus only carry'd the tranſverſe Beam, becauſe the long Piece of Timber, or Body of the Croſs, was either fix'd in the Ground before, or made ready to be ſet up, as ſoon as the Priſoner came; and from hence he obſerves, that Painters are very much miſtaken in their Deſcription of our Saviour carrying the whole Croſs.

[†] A Death, the moſt dreadful of all others, both for the Shame, and Pain of it. So ſcandalous, that it was inflicted as the laſt Mark of Deteſtation, upon the vileſt of People. It was the Puniſhment of Robbers and Murtherers, provided that they were Slaves too; but otherwiſe, if they were free, and had the Privileges of the City of Rome, this was then thought a Proſtitution of that Honour, and too infamous a Puniſhment for ſuch an one, let his Crimes have been what they would. The Form of a Croſs was that of two Poſts, cutting one another at right Angles. On that, which ſtood upright, the Body was faſten'd, by nailing the Feet to it, and on the other tranſverſe Piece, by nailing the Hands on each Side. Now, becauſe theſe Parts of the Body, being the Inſtruments of Action and Motion, are provided by Nature with a much greater Quantity of Nerves, than others have occaſion for; and, becauſe all Senſation is perform'd by the Spirit contain'd in theſe Nerves, it will follow, that, wherever they abound, the Senſe of Pain muſt needs, in Proportion, be more quick and tender. But, tho' the Pain of this kind of Death was exceedingly ſharp, yet, as none of the Vitals were immediately affected, the Body continu'd, thus ſtretch'd out and hanging upon the Nails, that faſtened it to the Croſs, until Exceſs of Anguiſh had, by Degrees, quite exhauſted the Spirits, and driven out the Soul, which muſt needs make the Death, which our Saviour ſubmitted to for our Sakes, ſlow and lingering, as well as painful and ignominious: So lingering, that St. Andrew was two whole Days upon the Croſs, and ſome other Martyrs have been rather ſtarv'd, and devour'd by Birds, than killed with the Torments of the Tree. Stanhope, on the Epiſtles and Goſpels, Vol. II. and Howell's Hiſtory, in the Notes.

[†] Libya in its proper Acceptation, denotes thoſe Parts of the African Continent, which lie about the Mediterranean-Sea, from Egypt Eaſtward, to the greater Syrtis, or Gulf of Sidra Weſtward. In the Weſtern Part of this Libya ſtood Cyrene, a City of great Note, and once of ſuch Power, as to contend with Carthage for ſome Pre-eminences: But whether this Simon, whom the Soldiers compelled to carry our Saviour's Croſs, was a Jew or Pagan, is a Queſtion, that has been diſputed among the Antients. Several Fathers have thought that he was a Gentile, and that herein he was a Type of that idolatrous People, who were afterwards to be called to the Profeſſion of the Goſpel, and to carry the Croſs after Chriſt. But others, from his Name, rather imagine that he was a Jew, and that as there were great Numbers of that Nation in Egypt, and the neighbouring Countries, this Simon might be one, whoſe Habitation was at Cyrene in Libya, but was now coming up to Jeruſalem, at the Time of the Paſſover. He is called by St. Mark, Chap. xv. 21, the Father of Alexander and Rufus, becauſe theſe two Perſons were become famous in the Chriſtian Church, at the Time, when this Evangeliſt wrote his Goſpel; but whether he himſelf was, at this Time, a Diſciple of Chriſt, and afterwards Biſhop of Boſtres in Arabia, where he ſuffer'd Martyrdom, by being burnt alive by the Pagans, is much to be queſtion'd, tho' ſome have aſſerted it, but not, I fear, from ſufficient Authority. Wells's Geography of the New Teſtament, Part I. and Calmet's Commentary, and Dictionary, under the Word Simon.

[*] This they undoubtedly had occaſion to think at the Siege of Jeruſalem, and during the War againſt the Romans, not only, on Account of the Loſs of their Children, and the Sale of them, who were under ſeventeen, for Bond-Slaves; but chiefly on the Account of that Famine in Jeruſalem, which forc'd Mary the Daughter of Eleazer, a Woman of ſome Figure and Quality, to eat her own ſucking Child: Upon which (ſays Joſephus) the Dread of Famine made Men

WHEN he came to the Place of Execution, which was called Golgotha †, or Mount Calvary, the Soldiers, before they nail'd him to the Croſs, offer'd him a Potion ‡ of Wine mix'd with Gall, which, when he had taſted it, he refus'd to drink. They then ſtripp'd off his Cloaths; and, having, with four great Nails, faſten'd his Hands and Feet, with his Body ſtretch'd out, to the Croſs; they ſo rais'd it up, and fix'd it in the Ground. To ſtain his Innocence, and to put him to the greater Shame, they crucify'd him between two common Malefactors †; but weary of their Lives, and the Living envied the Dead, that were taken away, before the Extremity came to this Height. De Bello Jud. lib. vii. c. 8.

† That this is a proverbial Expreſſion, which the Prophet Hoſea, Chap. x. 8, makes uſe of, to denote the utter Deſpair of a People, when they ſee unavoidable Calamities coming upon them, cannot be doubted; for ſo the Targum upon Hoſea explains it, “He will bring ſuch Judgments upon them, as will render their Condition as miſerable, as if “the Mountains ſhould cover them, and the Hills fall upon them.” Iſaiah ſpeaks of the Wicked, that they ſhould go into the Holes of the Rocks, and into the Caves of the Earth, for Fear of the Lord, Iſa. ii. 19. And, accordingly, Joſephus relates of the Jews, that, after the Taking of Jeruſalem, many of them hid themſelves in Vaults and Sepulchres, and there periſh'd, rather than ſurrender to the Romans. De Bello, ibid.

† Golgotha in the Syriack (vulgarly called the Hebrew Tongue) ſignifies the ſame that Calvary does in Latin, and was ſo called, either becauſe the Form of the Mount did ſomewhat reſemble a Man's Skull, or rather, becauſe, it being the common Place of Execution, a great Number of dead Men's Skulls was uſually to be ſeen there. It is a ſmall Eminency, or Hill, upon the greater Mount of Moriah; and, as it was antiently appropriated to the Execution of Malefactors, it was therefore ſhut out of the Walls of the City, as an execrable and polluted Place; but, ſince it was made the Altar, on which was offer'd up the precious and all-ſufficient Sacrifice for the Sins of the whole World, it has recover'd itſelf from that Infamy, and has been always reverenc'd, and reſorted to by Chriſtians, with ſuch Devotion, as has drawn the City round about it; ſo that it ſtands now in the Midſt of Jeruſalem, and a great Part of the Hill of Sion is ſhut out of the Walls, to make room for the Admiſſion of Mount Calvary: And this the rather, becauſe it was a Tradition, generally received by the primitive Chriſtians, that the firſt, as well as the ſecond Adam, was bury'd here, and that this was the Place, where Abraham was about to have offer'd his Son Iſaac, the Type of our Bleſſed Lord. Wells's Geography of the New Teſtament, Part I.

‡ Interpreters and others vary very much about this Paſſage, taking it two different Ways, as St Matthew, Chap. xxvii. 34. and St Mark, Chap. xv. 23. ſeem to expreſs it. Some will have it, that, in St Matthew's Senſe, Vinegar, mingled with Gall, was a bitter poiſonous Draught, to ſtupify the Perſon, who drank it, that, by benumbing his Senſes, he might feel leſs Pain. Thoſe, that differ from this, ſay, that, by the Piety of ſome of the Diſciples, and, not improbably, of ſome of thoſe good Women, who uſed to miniſter to Jeſus, there was prepar'd Wine mingled with Myrrh, which, according to Pliny, was an excellent and pleaſant Mixture, and ſuch as the Piety and Indulgence of thoſe Nations uſed to adminiſter to condemn'd Perſons, to fortify their drooping Spirits againſt the Terrors of approaching Death. As the Deſign of this Mixture however was, in ſome Meaſure, to intoxicate the Sufferer, and to make him leſs ſenſible of his Pain, our Bleſſed Lord might therefore refuſe to drink it, becauſe it became him, who was then going to offer himſelf a free and voluntary Sacrifice to God for the Sins of Men, and was to ſhew them a Pattern how to bear Afflictions with due Reſignation to the Divine Will, to avoid a Thing, which might too far diſcompoſe his Thoughts, and ſhew too ill a Precedent to his Followers. To reconcile the Difference then between the two Evangeliſts, ſince the former affirms, that the Potion offer'd to our Saviour was Vinegar mingled with Gall, the latter, Wine mingled with Myrrh; the eaſieſt Way is to ſay, (with our learned Dr Lightfoot) that there were two Cups offer'd to our Lord at the Time of his Paſſion; one of Wine mixed with Myrrh, by ſome of his Friends, before he was nailed to the Croſs, and the other of Vinegar, by the Soldiers, in a ſcoffing and inſulting Manner, after he was nailed to the Croſs; which is better than to aſſert, with ſome great Names, that the antient Tranſlator of St Matthew from the Hebrew or Syriack, miſtaking the Word Marra, which properly ſignifies Bitterneſs, might put Gall (which, in Syriack, is Marar, and deriv'd from the ſame Root) inſtead of Myrrh. Howell's Hiſtory, in the Notes, Whitby's Annotations, and Calmet's Commentary.

† The Malefactors here mention'd were probably ſome of thoſe factious and ſeditious Gangs, which Judea, at this Time, was full of. Under Pretence of publick Liberty, they committed all Manner of Violence and Outrage; and, ſtirring up the People againſt the Roman Government, drew upon the Nation all the Calamity, which afterwards befel it. As it was cuſtomary to crucify ſeveral Malefactors at the ſame time, eſpecially if convicted of the ſame Crimes, our Saviour, who was accus'd by the Jews of ſeditious Practices, had two, who were really guilty of that Crime, executed with him, and him they plac'd in the Midſt; as in the moſt honourable Place, purely in Deriſion, and with the ſame malevolent Spirit, that made them array him in a purple Robe, a Sceptre, and a Crown. Beauſobre's Annotations.

but what might make an Amends for that, was the Inſcription, which Pilate order'd to be fix'd on the Top of his Croſs, JESUS OF NAZARETH, THE KING OF THE JEWS, in the three moſt general Languages, † Hebrew, Greek, and Latin, then in Vogue. This the High-Prieſts would gladly have had him alter; but, either out of Spite to them, who had forc'd him upon an unjuſt Act, or out of Honour to our Lord, whom he knew to be a righteous Perſon, he poſitively refus'd to do it.

† Some of the Fathers are of Opinion, that this Coat of our Saviour's was made of two Pieces of woollen Stuff, wove in a Loom, and ſo fine-drawn, that the Joining could not be perceiv'd. Others will have it, that it was all Needle-Work, i. e. knit, not wove from Top to Bottom: But Braunius, in his Treatiſe de Veſtitu Sacerdotum Hebræorum, has plainly prov'd, that the Antients had the Art of weaving any Habit, of what Make or Sine ſoever, all of one Piece in a Loom; that, in ſeveral Eaſtern Countries, the Art is ſtill preſerv'd and practis'd; and that himſelf made a Machine, (which Calmet, in his Dictionary, under the Word Veſtments, has given us) wherein ſuch an Habit might be wrought. As it was cuſtomary formerly for Women to weave Stuffs and Cloth, not for their own wearing only, but for their Huſband's and Children's Uſe, (for ſo the Character of the virtuous Woman in Solomon, Prov. xxxi. 13, and the Practice of Penelope, the Wife of Ulyſſes, ſhew) it was an antient Tradition, that the Bleſſed Virgin herſelf wove her Son's Coat; but, that ſhe made it for him, when he was young; that it grew with him as he increas'd in Stature; and continu'd always freſh, without Decay, is a mere Fiction, in order to aſſimulate it to the Habits, which the Iſraelites wore in the Wilderneſs: Nor can it be eaſily credited, that the holy Coat, which is kept in the Cathedral Church at Treves, is the very ſame, that our Saviour had on before his Crucifixion. Calmet's Commentary and Dictionary.

(b) Pſal. xxii. 18.

‖ If we compare Matth. xxvii. 44. where it is ſaid, that the Thieves, who were crucified with Jeſus, caſt the ſame in his Teeth) with what we find in Luke xxiii. 39. (where 'tis ſaid, one of the Malefactors, that was hanged, reviled on him) we may be apt to fancy ſome Contradiction in the Evangeliſts: But this the Commentators reconcile, by ſhewing, that it is a very common Thing, in the Hebrew Stile, to uſe the plural Number inſtead of the ſingular: As, when it is ſaid, that the Ark reſted on the Mountains of Ararat, Gen. viii. 4. i. e. on one of the Mountains, and that God overthrew the Cities where Lot dwelt, Gen. xix. 29. when he could only dwell in one at a Time, with ſeveral other Examples both in the Old and New Teſtament. But I ſee no Reaſon why we may not underſtand this Paſſage, as St Chryſoſtom and St Jerom have done, viz. "That both of the Thieves did, at firſt, rail on Jeſus, probably thinking, by that Artifice, to "obtain ſome Help towards procuring their Pardon, but being diſappointed of their Hopes, and hearing Jeſus pray for "his Crucifiers, one of them was thereby prevailed upon, and converted:" Eſpecially, ſince, according to this Interpretation, the Operations of God's Grace upon this Man's Mind were more ſudden and ſtrong, and his Converſion more miraculous. Whitby's and Hammond's Annotations, and Stanhope, on the Epiſtles and Goſpels, Vol. II.

† This Thief is called by ſome Authors Dimas, or Diſmus, and, out of the falſe Goſpel of Nicodemus, they produce many Fables concerning him, but too abſurd to be here related. Several of the Fathers however give him the Title of a Martyr, becauſe of the Teſtimony which he bore to Truth, even when it ſeem'd to be utterly deſerted by every one elſe. Calmet's Commentary.

† The Word Paradiſe comes from the Hebrew, or rather from the Chaldee, Pardes; and, according to the Force of the Original, it ſhould properly ſignify an Orchard, or Plantation of Fruit-Trees, as in ſome Paſſages of the Old Teſtament, particularly in Neh. ii. 8, it denotes a Foreſt. The Septuagint make uſe of the Word Παράδεισος, when they ſpeak of the Garden of Eden, which the Lord planted, in the Beginning of the World, and therein plac'd our firſt Parents. The Jews commonly call Paradiſe the Garden of Eden, and they imagine, that, at the Coming of the Meſſiah, they ſhall there enjoy an earthly Felicity, in the Midſt of all ſorts of Delights, and, till the Reſurrection, and the Coming of the Meſſiah, they think their Souls ſhall abide here in a State of Reſt. In the Books of the New Teſtament, the Word Paradiſe is put for a Place of Delight, where the Souls of the Bleſſed enjoy everlaſting Happineſs; but where our Lord promiſes the penitent Thief, that he ſhould be with him in Paradiſe, 'tis thought by the Generality of the Fathers, that he meant Heaven itſelf; tho' modern Commentators make no more of it, than that State of Felicity, which God has appointed for the Reception of the Pious, until the Time of the general Reſurrection. Whether the Place of departed Souls is above, within, or beneath the higheſt Heavens; whether there is one common Receptacle for the Souls of the Righteous and Unrighteous, till the Reſurrection; or whether, from their Departure out of their Bodies, they dwell in ſeparate Manſions, (as is more probable) are Speculations, we are no Ways concern'd to be inquiſitive about, whilſt we are ſatisfy'd with this main Truth, that the Righteous are, in the intermediate Time between their Death and Reſurrection, in a State of Happineſs, and the Wicked in a State of Miſery. For, as far as our Apprehenſions of theſe Matters go, a material Place can no ways contribute, either to increaſe, or to diminiſh the Happineſs, or Miſery of an immaterial Spirit. Spirits, that are diveſted of Fleſh and Blood, wherever they are, carry Heaven or Hell along with them. The good Angels are as happy here upon Earth, whilſt they are employ'd in the Execution of God's Will, as whilſt they are converſant in the Regions above, becauſe they do always behold the Face of God, in whoſe Preſence is Fulneſs of Joy; and Satan was no more happy, when he came among the Sons of God to preſent himſelf before the Lord, Job i. 6. than he was when he was going to and fro in the Earth. The Happineſs and Miſery of pure Spirits hath no Relation, that we know of, to the Place, where they are; but the Happineſs and Miſery of embodied Spirits, or of Men, who are made up of Souls and Bodies, have a Dependance upon the Place of their Abode; and therefore we are ſure, that wherever ſeparate Souls are lodg'd till the Reſurrection, after the Reſurrection, righteous and wicked Men ſhall have Places allotted to them, ſuitable to their different States; the former ſhall be carry'd up to the higheſt Heavens, and the latter ſhall be thrown down to the nethermoſt Hell. Calmet's Commentary, and Biſhop Smalridge's Sermons.

† That Alphæus and Cleophas were one and the ſame Perſon, is plain from hence,——That James, who is called the Son of Mary, the Wife of Cleophas, is the ſame with James, the Son of Alphæus; as indeed, in the Hebrew Tongue, Alphæus and Cleophas differ only in the Manner, in which the Greeks have written, or pronounc'd theſe two Names. 'Tis thought, that ſhe was the Siſter of the Holy Virgin, and the Mother of James the Leſs, of Joſes, of Simeon, and of Judas, who in the Goſpel are called the Brethren of our Lord, i. e. his Couſin-germans. When, or where ſhe died, is a Matter of much Uncertainty: But the Greeks keep the eighth of April in Memory of the holy Women, who brought Perfumes to embalm the Body of Chriſt, and pretend, at this Time, to have their Bodies at Conſtantinople, in the Church of the Holy Virgin, built by Juſtin II. tho' others talk of the Tranſlation of her Body in particular, into the City of Veroli, near Rome; while others again pretend, that it is in a little City of Provence, called the three Mary's, on the Banks of the Rhone, and of the Sea. All Fictions equally credible! Calmet's Dictionary, under the Words Mary of Cleophas.

† The Generality of Commentators do infer from hence, that her Huſband Joſeph was, at this Time, dead, and therefore our Lord took care, that ſhe ſhould not be deſtitute, by charging his beloved Diſciple to treat her as his Mother; and he, accordingly, not only receiv'd her into his own Houſe, as long as he continu'd in Paleſtine, but, when he remov'd to Epheſus, took her along with him, where (according to the Account of the Fathers of the Council held there) ſhe is ſaid to have dy'd, and been bury'd in a very old Age. Others however maintain, that ſhe dy'd, and was bury'd at Jeruſalem, and they farther add, that the Apoſtles, being diſpers'd in different Parts of the World to labour in the Preaching of the Goſpel, were, all on a ſudden, miraculouſly tranſported to Jeruſalem, that Time forward, he took her to his Houſe, and, all along, paid her the Reſpect due to a Parent.

DURING theſe melancholy Tranſactions, the whole Frame of Nature began to be chang'd: The Sun withdrew its Light †; the Stars appeared; and the Eclipſe was the more remarkable, becauſe the Moon, being then at Full, could not be in Conjunction. This Eclipſe began about Twelve, and laſted till Three in the Afternoon; when all Things were full of Horror and Amazement. Men's Hearts began to relent, and, inſtead of their former Inſults, they ſtood in ſilent Expectance of what would be the Iſſue. All this while our Bleſſed Lord continu'd meek and ſilent, tho' languiſhing and waſting under the Agonies, which his Body endur'd, and the heavy Load of the Divine Indignation againſt Sin; till, in the Words of the Pſalmiſt, he complain'd at laſt, Eli! Eli! Lamaſabacthani, i. e. † My God, my God, why haſt thou forſaken me?

ONE of the Soldiers, hearing the Word Eli, or Elohi, out of Ignorance of the Hebrew Tongue, thought, that he called for Elias to help him in his Diſtreſs; and, thereupon dipping a Spunge in Vinegar †, put it on a Reed, which St John calls a Stalk of Hyſſop ‡, and (as he complain'd of being thirſty) gave it him to drink. that they might be preſent at the Deceaſe of the Bleſſed Virgin; that, after her Death, they bury'd her in the Valley of Gethſemane, where, for three whole Days, were heard Concerts of heavenly Singers; and that, at the End of the three Days, when the Concert ceas'd, and St Thomas, who had not been preſent at the Burial, was deſirous to ſee her Corpſe, they open'd her Tomb again; but, not finding the Body there, they thence concluded, that God had been pleas'd to honour it with Immortality, by a Reſurrection previous to that of other Men. But theſe are Traditions, that (to ſpeak the ſofteſt Thing of them) deſerve no Regard at all. Calmet's Dictionary, under the Word Mary.

† Whether this Darkneſs was confin'd to the Land of Judea, or extended itſelf much farther, even over the whole Hemiſphere, where it happen'd, is a Queſtion, wherein the Antients are not ſo well agreed. Origen, and ſome others, are of the former Opinion; but the Majority differ from them, and for this they quote Phlegon, the famous Aſtronomer under the Emperor Trajan, affirming, that, in the fourth Year of the CCIId Olympiad, (which is ſuppos'd to be that of the Death of CHRIST) there was ſuch a total Eclipſe of the Sun at Noon-Day, that the Stars were plainly to be ſeen; and from Suidas they likewiſe cite Dionyſius the Areopagite, then at Heliopolis in Egypt, expreſſing himſelf to his Friend Apollophanes, upon this ſurprizing Phænomenon, Either that the Author of Nature ſuffer'd, or that he was ſympathizing with ſome one, who did: For, whereas in common Eclipſes the Sun's total Darkneſs can continue but twelve, or fifteen Minutes at moſt, this is recorded to have laſted no leſs than Three full Hours, Matth. xxvii. 45. Univerſal Hiſtory, Lib. ii. c. 11.

† In the Hebrew Way of ſpeaking, 'tis certain, that God is ſaid to leave or forſake any Perſon, when he ſuffers him to fall into great Calamities, and lie under great Misfortunes, and does not help him out of them. To this Purpoſe Zion, having been long afflicted, is brought in by the Prophet complaining, the Lord hath forſaken me, the Lord hath forgotten me, Iſaiah xlix. 14. and as the Royal Pſalmiſt is very frequent in ſuch Complaints, ſo he explains the Senſe of them, when he addreſſes himſelf to God, why art thou ſo far from my Prayer, ſo that, tho' I cry in the Day-time, thou heareſt not? Pſal. xxii. 1, 2. That David was not fallen into any Deſpondency, is manifeſt from his calling God ſo fiducially his God; and that our Bleſſed Saviour was not (as ſome think) under any Failure of his Truſt in God, or any Perturbation of Spirit from the Senſe of Divine Wrath, is evident from his ſaying of his ſuffering Condition, It is finiſhed, and from the very Words, wherein he breath'd his laſt, Father, into thy Hands I commit my Spirit. The Truth is, this very Thing ſhews the great Compoſure of his Mind, that, while he was hanging upon the Croſs, he was ſo far Maſter of himſelf, as to repeat the Twenty-ſecond Pſalm, whereof the Title, or firſt Words are, Eli, Eli, &c. a Pſalm, which is allow'd by all Commentators to relate to the Meſſiah; which contains a moſt lively Deſcription of all the remarkable Particulars of his Paſſion, and, for that Reaſon, was a Portion of Scripture, which he thought proper to recite upon this mournful Occaſion. Upon the Suppoſition then, that our Lord was now repeating that noble Pſalm, which, after a Capitulation of his Sufferings, concludes with very comfortable Promiſes both to him and his Followers; this ſhews, that he was far from being under any Doubt or Deſpair, that he kept his Mind indeed all along calm and ſerene, and, under the Preſſure of whatever he ſuffered, ſupported himſelf with the comfortable Proſpect of what was to follow. Whitby's Annotations, and Univerſal Hiſtory, lib. ii. c. 11.

† The Vinegar and Spunge, in Executions of condemn'd Perſons, were ſet ready, to ſtop the too violent Flux of Blood, that the Malefactor might be the longer in dying, but to the Bleſſed JESUS they were exhibited in ſcorn; for, being mingled with Gall, the Mixture was more horrid and unpleaſant. Howell's Hiſtory, in the Notes.

‡ It may be pretended perhaps, that a Branch of Hyſſop might not be long enough to reach our Saviour's Mouth, as he was hanging upon the Croſs; but, beſides that Croſſes were not, in ſome Places, erected ſo high, but that Beaſts of Prey could reach the Bodies, that were faſten'd to them; and that Hyſſop, in theſe Countries, as well as Muſtard-Seed, was of much longer Growth, than it is with us; I cannot ſee, why the Perſon, that offer'd our Saviour this Vinegar, might not make uſe of a Ladder, if the Croſs was ſo high, that he could not fairly reach him.

A. M. 4037, &c. Ann. Dom. 33, &c.

Others however were for letting it alone, to ſee whether Elias † would come and help him; but when he had taſted the Vinegar, and now knew that all the Types and Prophecies concerning him were fulfilled, his Father's Wrath appeas'd, and the great Work of Man's Redemption accompliſh'd, he ſaid, It is finiſhed, and then, bowing down his Head, he recommended his Soul into his Father's Hands, and ſo gave up the Ghoſt †.

Nor is the Difference in St Matthew's calling that a Reed, which St John calls Hyſſop, of any Manner of Moment, becauſe the Greek Word Κάλαμος is put to ſignify a Stalk, a Shoot, or Branch of any Kind; ſo that St Matthew ſpeaks of that in the general, which St John ſpecifies in particular. Calmet's Commentary.

† There was a Tradition among the Jews, that it was Elias's proper Office to come, and ſuccour ſuch, as were in Miſery: And, accordingly, ſome of the Jews, either deceiv'd with the Reſemblance of the Words, thought that our Lord called Elias to his Help; or, giving a malicious Turn to the Senſe of the Words, which they well enough underſtood, did thereby inſult him for his calling in vain Elias to his Help. Beauſobre's Annotations.

† The original Phraſe may denote a delivering up, or (as our Saviour expreſſes it, Luke xxiii. 46.) a committing his Spirit into the Hands of God, as a ſacred Truſt to be reſtor'd again, and united to his Body, at the Time prefix'd by his own infinite Wiſdom; and plainly implies ſuch a Diſſolution, and actual Separation of Soul and Body, as every common Man undergoes, when he dies: But herein is a remarkable Difference, that what is in other Men the Effect of Neceſſity, was in Jeſus a voluntary Act, and the Effect of his own free Choice. Hence the Generality of Interpreters have thought, that St John takes notice, that Chriſt bowed his Head, before he gave up the Ghoſt, whereas, in common Caſes, the falling of the Head follows after the Breath's going out of the Body: And hence alſo St Mark obſerves, that Jeſus's crying out with ſo loud and ſtrong a Voice, immediately before his expiring, was one Reaſon, that moved the Centurion to think him an extraordinary Perſon; for this ſhewed, that it was not the Exceſs of Pain and Sorrow, that had tired out Nature, and haſtened his Death, but that he, who (as himſelf profeſſes, John x. 18.) had Power to lay down his Life, and could not have it taken from him without his own Permiſſion and Conſent, did freely and voluntarily lay it down, at ſuch a Time, as himſelf ſaw convenient. Stanhope, on the Epiſtles and Goſpels, Vol. II.

† Some are of Opinion, that this was the ſame Earthquake, that happen'd in the Reign of Tiberius Cæſar, and was the greateſt, that ever was known in the Memory of Man. Both Pliny and Macrobius make mention of it; and the latter informs us, that it deſtroy'd no leſs than twelve Cities in Aſia: But, by the ſacred Text, it appears, that the Earthquake, here mention'd, affected only the Temple of Jeruſalem, and the Parts which are there ſpecify'd, the Vail, the Ground, the Rocks, the Tombs, &c. Nor does it ſeem improbable, that this Prodigy was ſhewn particularly in this Place, to foretel the Deſtruction of the Temple, and its Worſhip, upon the People's ſad Impiety in crucifying the Lord of Life. Hammond's Annotations.

† In the ſecond Temple, between the Holy Place and the Moſt holy (ſays Maimonides) there was no Partition-Wall, tho', in the firſt Temple, there was one, built of the Thickneſs of a Cubit. The Diviſion between them was made by two Vails, one from the Extremity of the Holy Place, and the other from the Extremity of the Moſt holy, with a void Space of a Cubit between. The like Form of Separation was obſerv'd in the Temple, which Herod rebuilt, as Joſephus informs us, (de Bello Jud. lib. vi. c. 14.) and therefore it muſt be a Miſtake in thoſe, who think, that this Vail was a Partition-Wall of Stones. Whether of the two Vails, that which belong'd to the Holy Place, or that which hung in the Moſt holy, was, at this Time, rent in twain, is a Queſtion among the Antients, tho' the Words of the Author to the Hebrews, where he tells us, that Chriſt, as our High-Prieſt, has conſecrated for us a new Way, through the Vail, ſo that we may with Boldneſs enter into the Holieſt by the Blood of Jeſus, Heb. x. 19, &c. ſeems to be a pretty clear Determination of it. Whitby's Annotations, and Calmet's Commentary.

† In the Church of the Sepulchre (which ſtands on Mount Calvary) is ſtill to be ſeen that memorable Cleſt in the Rock occaſion'd, as 'tis ſaid, by the Earthquake, which happen'd at our Lord's Crucifixion. This Cleft (as to what now appears of it) is about a Span-wide at its upper Part, and two deep. After this it cloſes: But then it opens again below, and runs down to an unknown Depth of Earth. That this Rent was made by the Earthquake, which happen'd at our Lord's Paſſion, there is only Tradition to prove: But that it is a natural and genuine Breach, and not counterfeited by any Art, the Senſe and Reaſon of every one, that ſees it, may convince him; for the Sides of it fit like two Tallies to each other, and yet it runs in ſuch intricate Windings, as could not be well counterfeited by Art, or perform'd by any Inſtrument. Wells's Geography of the New Teſtament, Part I. and Mr Maundrell's Journey, &c.

Some think, that the Man after God's own Heart, King David, or ſome of the antient Patriarchs, might beſt deſerve this Pre-eminence: But, on the Day of Pentecoſt, St Peter tells the Jews plainly, that Theſe Prodigies, which attended our Lord's Death, ſtruck the Spectators with ſuch Amazement, that, as they return'd home, they ſmote upon their Breaſts, and, with great Lamentation, declar'd, that the Perſon, who had ſuffer'd that Day, was innocent. that the Body of David was ſtill in its Sepulchre, and not aſcended into Heaven, Acts ii. 29, 34. and St Paul, in his Epiſtle to the Hebrews, tells us of the Patriarchs, that they had not received the Promiſe, God having deſigned, that they, without us, ſhould not be made perfect, Heb. xi. 39, 40. The moſt probable Conjecture therefore is, that they were ſome of thoſe, who believ'd in Jeſus, (as old Simeon did) and died a little before his Crucifixion; becauſe of theſe Perſons it is ſaid, that they went into the Holy City, and appeared to many, and ſo, very probably, were well known to thoſe, to whom they appear'd, as having been their Contemporaries. Calmet's Commentary, and Whitby's Annotations.

† This Officer, according to ſome, was nam'd Longinus, and the Tradition is,—— That, upon his Converſion to the Chriſtian Faith, being expelled from the Roman Army, wherein he ſerv'd, he return'd to Cappadocia, where he began to preach Jeſus Chriſt, but was there beheaded, and his Head carry'd to Pilate. But all this ſeems to be a Fable, for which there is no Foundation in Hiſtory. Calmet's Commentary.

† That the Son of God did not always ſignify one, who was ſo by an eternal Generation, but only one, that was his beloved and adopted Son, is apparent from hence, that what is here called the Son of God, is, in St Luke, Chap. xxiii. 47, ſaid to be a juſt Man. For, tho' the Jews very well knew, from the Second Pſalm, that their Meſſiah was to be the Son of God; yet, that they did not know him to be ſo, in the higher Senſe of the Word, ſeems to be evident, becauſe they did not know how David could call him Lord, Matth. xxii. 45.

† The Jews had a ſtrict Injunction in their Law, that the dead Bodies of thoſe, who were executed, ſhould not hang all Night, but by all means be buried that Day, Deut. xxi. 22, 23. but the Romans us'd to do otherwiſe. They ſuffer'd the Bodies to hang upon the Croſs always until they were dead, and, in ſome Caſes, a conſiderable Time longer. On this Occaſion it ſeems, as if the Jews had left the Romans to follow their own Cuſtom, in relation to the crucify'd Perſons, and were in no Concern to have them taken down, had it not been for the near Approach of their Paſſover, whoſe Joy and Feſtivity they thought might be dampt by ſo melancholy a Sight. Upon this Account they petitioned Pilate to have them remov'd: And the Reaſon, why Pilate might be rather induc'd to grant their Requeſt, was, that the Romans themſelves had ſuch Reſpect for the Feaſts of their Emperors, that, on thoſe Days, they always took down the Bodies from the Croſs, and gave them to their Parents. Calmet's Commentary.

† The Prophecy, which foretold, that a Bone of him ſhould not be broken, is uſually referr'd to the Command, concerning the Paſchal Lamb, Thou ſhalt not break a Bone of it, Exod. xii. 46. But, as David was likewiſe a Type of Chriſt, we cannot ſee, why it may not refer to theſe Words of his, He keepeth all his Bones, ſo that none of them is broken, Pſal. xxxiv. 20. or why the Promiſe, which reſpects all righteous Perſons, might not more particularly be fulfilled in the juſt One. Whitby's and Beauſobre's Annotations.

† The Man, who did this, was not one of the Horſe, (as he is uſually painted) but of the Foot Soldiers; becauſe a Spear, or ſhort Pike, was one Part of the Armour belonging to the Roman Infantry; and the Reaſon, why this was done, was not only, that a Prediction concerning him might be fulfilled, (Zech. xii. 10. which the Jews apply to the Meſſiah) but that his Death might be put beyond all Diſpute, which, had it been doubtful, muſt have made his Reſurrection (upon which the Truth of our Religion depends) remain doubtful likewiſe. Calmet's Commentary, and Whitby's Annotations.

† St John, the Evangeliſt, who was an Eye-witneſs of this Paſſage, affirms it in a particular Manner, Chap. xix. 35. and, in his firſt Epiſtle, Chap. v. 6, makes it a Matter of great Moment, when he tells us, This is he, that came by Water and Blood; not by Water only, but by Water and Blood. The Force of whoſe Reaſoning (according to the learned Hammond) is this,—— "That, as Water was the Emblem of our Saviour's Purity, and Blood, the Evi"dence of his Fortitude and Patience, and both of theſe proceeded from his Side, they jointly evince the Neceſſity of
"ſuch Purity and Patience, in every one, that claims a Right in Chriſt." The Jewiſh Doctors have a Tradition, (as Dr Lightfoot acquaints us) that, when Moſes ſmote the Rock, there firſt came forth Blood, and then Water. Whether the Apoſtle might have reſpect to that Tradition, when he calls Chriſt that Rock, 1 Cor. x. 4, is uncertain; but,

Mat. xxvii. 57. Mark xv. 43. Luke xxiii. 50. John xix. 38.

From Matth. xx. 10. to the End, Mark xi. 15. to the End, Luke xix. 45. to the End, and John xii. 19. to the End.

Among the Diſciples of our Lord, there was one nam'd Joſeph, a Man of great Wealth and Honour †, born in Arimathæa †, and not improbably, one of the Council of the Sanhedrim, but who ſtood in ſome Fear of them, while our Saviour was alive. After his Death † however, he took Courage, and, going to Pilate, begg'd Leave of him to let him take down the Body of Jeſus, and bury it. The Governor was ſurpriz'd to hear that he was dead ſo ſoon; but being inform'd by the Centurion, that it actually was ſo, he order'd the Body to be deliver'd to Joſeph, who, for the preſent, wrapp'd it up in fine Linnen Cloaths, which he had provided for that Purpoſe; and, at the ſame Time, Nicodemus † (another private Diſciple of our Lord's) brought a Mixture of Myrrh and Aloes, with other Spices, and Perfumes, to embalm his Body, according to the Manner of the Jews.

Not far from the Place of Execution, there was a Garden † belonging to Joſeph, where among the many other important Deſigns of this Water and Blood, the Ancients have well obſerv'd, that, by a ſpecial Act of God's Providence, there flow'd, at this Time, from our Saviour's Side, the two Sacraments of his Church, Baptiſm and the Supper of the Lord. As to the natural Reaſon of this Flux of Water and Blood from our Lord's Body, Anatomiſts tells us, that there is a Capſula, near the Heart, called the Pericardium, which hath Water in it, of continual Uſe to cool the Heart, and that the coming out of Water here with the Blood was a ſure Evidence of the wounding his very Heart, and, conſequently, of the Certainty of his Death. Hammond's Annotations, and Howell's Hiſtory, in the Notes.

† His Riches and honourable Station are mention'd, not out of any Vanity and Oſtentation, that a Perſon of ſo conſiderable a Figure ſhould pay reſpect to the Body of our Bleſſed Lord; but, chiefly, to ſhew how ſtrangely God brought about an ancient Prophecy concerning the Meſſiah, viz. that, notwithſtanding the infamous Manner of his Dying, he ſhould make his Grave with the Rich at his Death, Iſa. liii. 9. which, in itſelf, was a moſt unlikely Thing, not only, becauſe the Bodies of them, that were crucify'd, did, by the Roman Laws, hang upon the Gibbet ſometimes until they were conſum'd; but, becauſe the Jews (tho' they did not allow of this Severity to the Dead) did nevertheleſs always bury their Malefactors in ſome publick, neglected, and ignominious Place; and ſo, in all Probability, muſt our Saviour have been treated, had not Joſeph apply'd himſelf to the Governor, in whoſe Diſpoſal the Bodies of executed Perſons were. Stanhope, on the Epiſtles and Goſpels, Vol. II.

† Ramatha (from whence Arimathæa is form'd) ſignifies Height. It is plac'd by St. Jerom between Lydda and Joppa, but modern Travellers ſpeak of it, as lying between Joppa and Jeruſalem, and ſituated on a Mountain, tho' very different from Ramathiam-Zophim, the Place where Samuel was born, 1 Sam. i. 1. and which lay to the North, whereas Arimathæa was to the Weſt of Jeruſalem. Calmet's Dictionary, under the Word.

† It may well ſeem ſtrange, that Joſeph, who never durſt openly profeſs a Regard to Jeſus, while living, ſhould now, when he had ſuffer'd all the Ignominy of a Malefactor, not ſtick to intereſt himſelf for his honourable Interment. But, beſides, that this might be an Inſtance of the Efficacy of thoſe Impreſſions, which God makes upon Mens Minds, even at the moſt unlikely Seaſons of prevailing; the Deſire, which Pilate had expreſs'd, to ſave our Lord's Life, and avow'd Unwillingneſs to condemn him, together with the Prodigies, that had accompany'd his Crucifixion, and made now every Heart relent, might be Motive enough for him to go in boldly to Pilate, (as St Mark expreſſes it) and beg the Body of him, before it was taken from the Croſs. According to the Miſhna, the neareſt Relations of thoſe, that ſuffer'd as Criminals, were not permitted to put their Bodies into their Family-Tombs, until their Fleſh was all conſum'd in the publick Sepulchres: And this might poſſibly be the Reaſon, why Joſeph made ſuch Haſte with his Requeſt to the Governor, viz. that he might prevent our Lord from being caſt into one of the publick Charnel-Houſes, appointed for the Reception of Malefactors Bodies. Stanhope, on the Epiſtles and Goſpels, Vol. II. and Calmet's Commentary.

† This is the ſame Ruler of the Jews, and Maſter of Iſrael, as the Evangeliſt calls him, John iii. 1, 10. who, at our Lord's firſt Coming to Jeruſalem, after he had enter'd upon his Miniſtry, held a private Conference with him, and for ever after was his Diſciple, tho' he made no open Profeſſion of it, 'till after his Paſſion. Whether it was before, or after this Time, that he receiv'd Baptiſm from ſome of Chriſt's Diſciples, it is a Thing uncertain; but there is Reaſon to believe, that the Jews when they came to be inform'd of this, depos'd him from the Dignity of a Senator, excommunicated him, and drove him out of Jeruſalem. Nay it is farther ſaid, that they would have put him to Death, but that, in Conſideration of Gamaliel, who was his Uncle, or Couſin German, they contented themſelves with beating him almoſt to Death, and plundering his Goods. 'Tis added likewiſe, that Gamaliel convey'd him to his Country-Houſe, where he provided him with Things neceſſary for his Support, and, when he dy'd, bury'd him honourably by St Stephen. Calmet's Dictionary, under the Name.

† This Garden has been long ſince converted into a Church, called the Church of the Sepulchre, as being built over the Place, where our Lord's Sepulchre was. To fit this Place for the Structure of a Church, the firſt Founders were oblig'd to reduce it to a plain Area, which they did, by cutting down ſeveral Parts of the Rock, and by elevating others: But, in this Work, Care was taken, that none of thoſe Parts of the Place, which were more immediately concern'd in our Lord's Paſſion, ſhould be either alter'd or diminiſh'd; inſomuch, that that Part of it, where Chriſt is ſaid to have been faſten'd to, and lifted upon the Croſs, is left entire, ſtanding, at this Day, eighteen Steps above the where he had lately hewn out of a † Rock a Sepulchre † for his own proper Interment. Having therefore embalm'd our Saviour's Body, and wound it up in the Linnen Cloths, here they bury'd it, and, with a large Stone cut out of the Rock for that Purpoſe, clos'd the Mouth of the Sepulchre: But Mary Magdalen, and the other Women, who were preſent at his Death, and aſſiſted at his Burial, having taken good Notice of the Place, where he was laid, went, and prepar'd freſh Spices for his farther Embalment, as ſoon as the Sabbath-Day was over.

The Sepulchre guarded.
SATURDAY.
Matth. xxvii. 63, 64.

On the Sabbath-Day the Rulers of the Jews came to Pilate, and informing him, "That our Lord (whom they called an "Impoſtor) having, in his Life-Time, "made it his Boaſt, that, on the third "Day, he would riſe again from the "Dead, they therefore requeſted of him, "that he would order the Sepulchre to "be kept under a ſtrong Guard, until "that Day was paſs'd, leſt his Diſciples "ſhould ſteal him away by Night, and "then give it out, that he was riſen from "the Dead, which might prove a more "dangerous Seduction to the People, "than any Thing, they had yet fallen "into." Whereupon he gave them Leave to take a Detachment of the Guard † of the Temple, and to poſt them near the Sepulchre; which, accordingly, they did; and, to ſecure it againſt all private Attempts, ſet a Seal † on the Stone, that was at the Mouth of it.

EASTER-SUNDAY.
Our Saviour's Reſurrection notify'd by Angels, and teſtify'd by Mary Magdalen, but not believed.

Early next Morning, even juſt as the Sun was riſing, Mary Magdalen, and the other Women, who, on Friday Evening, had prepared Spices and Perfumes, went to the common Floor of the Church, and the holy Sepulchre itſelf, which was at firſt a Cave, hewn into a Rock under Ground, having had the Rock cut away from it all around, is now, as it were, a Grotto above Ground. Wells's Geography of the New Teſtament, Part i.

---

† There are ſeveral Circumſtances, in the Deſcription of our Saviour's Tomb, which contribute very greatly to the Confirmation of the Truth of his Reſurrection. As 1ſt, The Place of his Interment was near adjoining to the City, that thereby the Miracle of his Reſurrection might be better known to all the Jews, and his own Apoſtles, more eſpecially. 2dly, His Tomb was a new one, wherein never Man before was laid, and therefore, when his Body left this Sepulchre empty, no Suſpicion could remain of its being any other Body, than that which Joſeph had taken down from the Croſs, and diſpos'd of in that Place. 3dly, It was hewn out of a Rock, uncapable of being undermin'd, or dug through; and therefore there was no poſſible Way for the Perſon, depoſited in a Place ſo contriv'd, to get out again, except only at the Mouth, or Door of the Cave. And yet, 4thly, A large Stone, which (according to Mr Maundrell, who ſaw it) is two Yards and a Quarter long, one broad, and one thick, clos'd up the Entrance of it, all which were watch'd by a ſtrong Guard of ſixty Soldiers: So that, as the Centry would not ſuffer the Body to be convey'd out by this Way, the Nature of the Place would not allow it by any other; and therefore, had not our Lord been more than Man, he could never have forc'd his Paſſage out. Of ſuch mighty Significance it is to us, that ſo punctual a Deſcription is given the World of our Bleſſed Lord's Burial, and all the Circumſtances relating to it, ſince they all contribute great Strength to theſe two moſt important Articles of the Chriſtian Faith, the Death and Reſurrection of Jeſus. Stanhope, on the Epiſtles and Goſpels, Vol. II. and Whitby's Annotations.

† This Sepulchre of Joſeph's, which fell to our Lord's Share, (according to the Deſcription of thoſe, that have lately ſeen it) is a Kind of ſmall Chamber, almoſt ſquare within, whoſe Height, from Bottom to Top, is eight Feet and an Inch; its Length, ſix Feet and an Inch; and its Breadth, fifteen Feet and ten Inches. Its Entrance, which looks towards the Eaſt, is but four Feet high, and two Feet four Inches wide. The Place within, where our Lord's Body was laid, takes up a whole Side of the Cave. The Stone, which was laid to ſecure the Door of his Sepulchre, is ſtill remaining even to this Day, but the particular Parts of it are not viſible, being all incruſted over with white Marble, except in five or ſix little Places, where it is left bare, to receive the Kiſſes, and other Devotions of Pilgrims. Mark Lucas's Voyage to Aſia Minor, Vol. II. p. 12. and Maundrell's Journey from Aleppo to Jeruſalem.

† 'Tis generally ſuppos'd, that this Guard of the Temple was a large Detachment of Roman Soldiers, who, in the Time of the Feaſt, kept Century in the Gates of the Temple, to prevent ſuch Diſorders, as might very well happen among ſuch a large Concourſe of People: For, by the Sequel of their Story, it appears, Matth. xxviii. 11. that they depended upon Pilate, were ſubject to his Correction, and, conſequently, were not Levites, (as ſome imagine) but Roman Soldiers. Calmet's Commentary.

† When Daniel was caſt into the Lions Den, 'tis, ſaid, That the King ſealed the Stone, that was laid upon the Mouth of it, with his own Signet, and with the Signet of his Lords, that the Purpoſe might not be changed concerning Daniel, Chap. vi. 17. and from hence, ſome have ſuppos'd, that the Stone, wherewith our Lord's Sepulchre was clos'd, was ſealed with Pilate's Signet, becauſe it was a Matter of publick Concern, as others have fancy'd, that it was farther ſecur'd by a great Chain, that went acroſs it, and that the Marks thereof were viſible in the Venerable Bede's Time. All Fables. Calmet's Commentary.

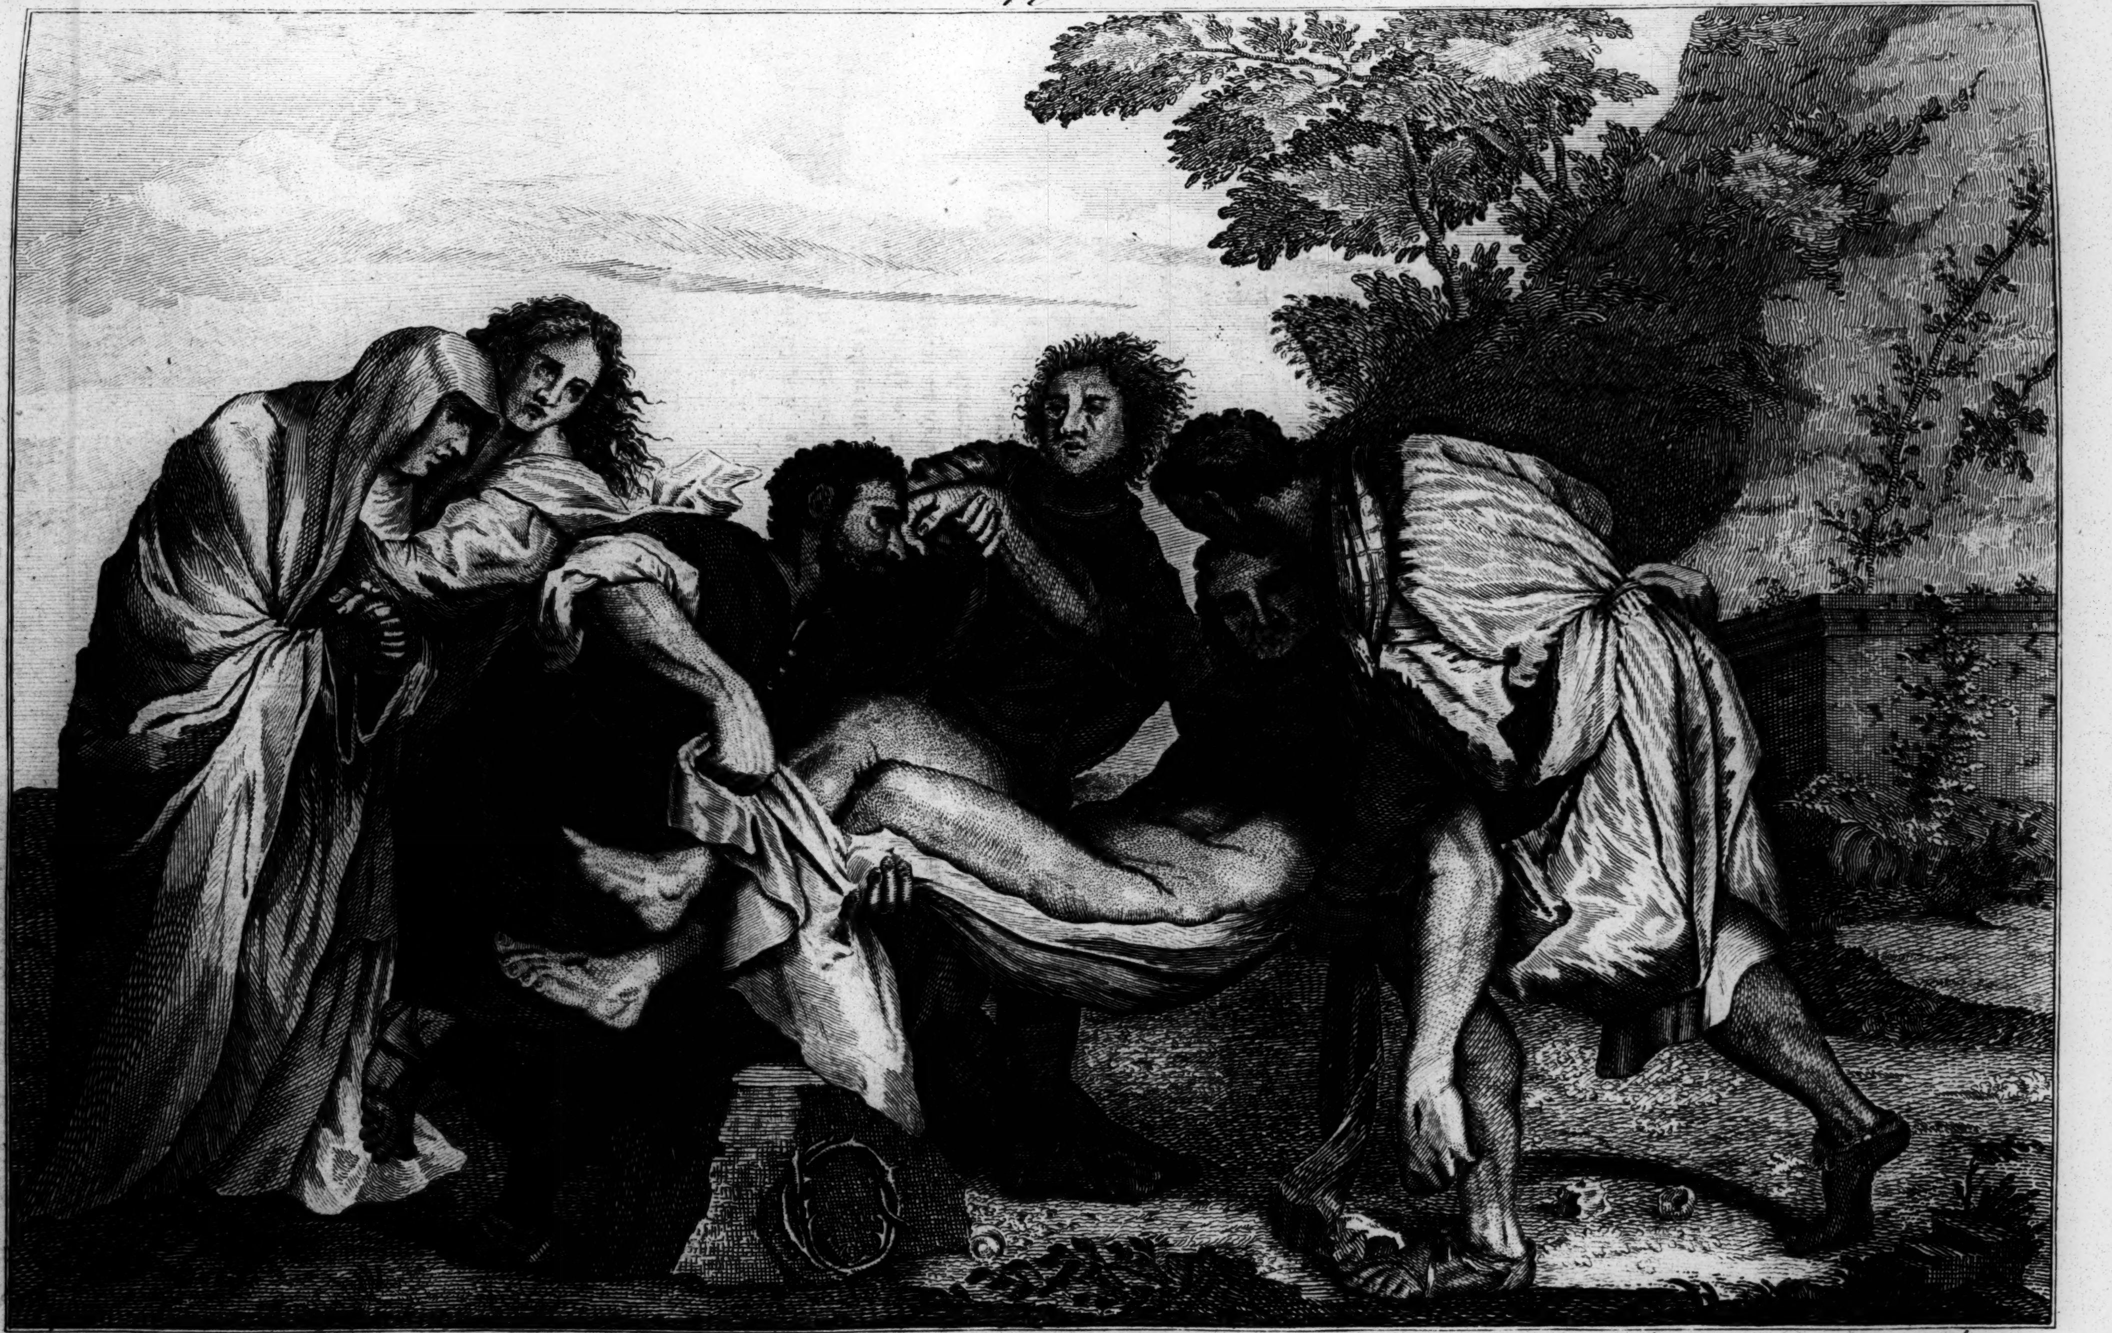
The Burial of Jesus Christ.



Joseph of Arimathea took the Body of JESUS. And there came also Nichodemus & brought a mixture of Myrrh & Aloes. Then took they the Body of JESUS & wound it in Linnen Cloths, with the Spices, as the manner of the Jews is to Bury. And laid him in a new Tomb, which was hewn out of a Rock. And Mary Magdalene, & Mary the Mother of JOSES beheld where he was laid.

to the Sepulchre, to embalm again our Saviour's Body, ignorant of the Guard, that was plac'd there. Their whole Care and Conſultation in the Way, was, how they might get the large Stone, that was at the Entrance, remov'd. But, before they arriv'd at the Place, an Angel from Heaven had rolled it away, ‖ and ſat upon it; at the Sight of whom, (for his Countenance was like Lightning) and at the Noiſe of the Earthquake, which accompany'd his Appearance, the Guards fell down, like ſo many dead Men, ſo that the Women had free Entrance into the Sepulchre, but were not a little aſtoniſh'd to ſee the Body gone, and an Angel, in a refulgent Habit, ſitting in the Place, where it had laid. Frighten'd at this Apparition, they made all the Haſte they could out of the Sepulchre, but were met by another Angel, in the like glorious Apparel, who not only acquainted them with our Lord's Reſurrection, according to what he had foretold his Diſciples, but (to give them a fuller Conviction) reconducted them into the Sepulchre; ſhew'd them, that the Place, where he laid, was empty; and order'd them to go immediately, and carry the Apoſtles, (but more eſpecially † Peter) the News thereof. The Women, accordingly, filled with Fear, and Joy, and Wonder, all together haſten'd to find out the Apoſtles, to whom they related what they had heard and ſeen; but, inſtead of believing them, they look'd upon this, as no more, than the Product of a weak and frighten'd Imagination.

‖ The ſeeming Oppoſition between what is recorded in the xvith Chapter of St Mark's Goſpel, concerning ſome Circumſtances, that happen'd at our Lord's Sepulchre, and the Narrations of the other Evangeliſts, made ſome of the Antients (as St Jerom inform us, Epiſt. ad Hebid.) call in queſtion its Authority. But, as this Chapter was own'd in the Times of Irenæus, (lib. iii. c. 11.) and is quoted in the Apoſtolick Conſtitutions, (lib. vi. c. 15.) a ſmall Matter of diſtinguiſhing, added to what Dr Whitby has done, by Way of Appendix to it, will be a Means ſufficient to reconcile them. As to the Difference between the Account in St Luke, who mentions the Viſion of Angels to Mary Magdalen, before her going to Peter, and that in St John, who makes it ſubſequent to it, our learned Hammond is of Opinion, that this, and ſeveral other Inconſiſtencies, may be adjuſted by this one Conſideration, —— That St Luke, writing from Notes, which he had collected from Eye-Witneſſes, and not from his own Knowledge, obſerves not ſo exactly the Order of Time, when Things were done and ſpoken, but oftentimes, in another Method, puts together Things of Affinity to one another, tho' not done or ſaid at the ſame Time. For ſo, in relation to the Tranſactions at our Lord's Sepulchre, he firſt ſets down all that belongs to the Women together, and then, that which concerns Peter, tho' Part of that, which concern'd the Women, was done after what is mention'd of St Peter: For the punctual Obſervation of Order (ſays our Annotator) is not neceſſary, when the Things themſelves are truly recited. The right Order of the Story he therefore ſuppoſes is this, ———— "Mary and the other Women came to the Sepulchre, but found "that, before their coming, an Angel, with an Earthquake, had rolled away the Stone, and that the Body was gone. "Upon this, Mary returns to Peter and John; tells them what ſhe had ſeen; and they, to ſatisfy themſelves of the "Truth of her Report, haſten to the Sepulchre; and, having found Things juſt as ſhe told them, went away again. In "the mean Time, the Women ſtay at the Sepulchre, wondering at this ſtrange Event; and then follows the Viſion of "Angels, ſitting upon the Stone, and within the Sepulchre, ſpeaking to the Women, and aſſuring them of the Reality "of Chriſt's Reſurrection; upon which they depart the ſecond Time, to tell the Apoſtles the News." Hammond's Annotations, on John xx. 11.

† Peter is here nam'd, not as the Prince of the Apoſtles, but (as the Fathers ſay) for his Conſolation, and to take off the Scruple, which might lie upon his Spirits, whether, after his threefold Denial of his Maſter, (with ſuch horrid Aggravations attending it) he had not forfeited his Right to be one of our Lord's Diſciples. Whitby's Annotations.

† The Cuſtom of Interment among the Jews, was, to roll the dead Body (as we read our Saviour's was, John xix. 39, 40.) up in Spices, which, tho' they preſerv'd it in ſome Meaſure from Corruption, by their glewy Nature, could not but make the Cloaths, that were us'd with them, cling ſo cloſe to the Skin, as not to be drawn off without a great deal of Time and Difficulty. When therefore theſe Coverings were found regularly pulled off, wrapp'd up, and laid by, this plainly ſhews, that the Diſciples could have no Hand in ſtealing away their Maſter's Body. For, do Thieves, after they have rifled an Houſe, uſe to ſpend Time in putting Things in Order again? Or can it enter into any ſober Man's Thoughts, that they, who came by Stealth, and in Danger of their Lives, (as the Diſciples certainly muſt have done upon ſuch an Adventure) ſhould thus ſtay, to awaken the Guard, and trifle away their Time, in ſuch hazardous and unneceſſary Niceties? Had they been really engag'd in this Affair, they certainly would have taken away the Body

Cloaths lying on the Ground; and the Napkin, that was about his Head, very carefully folded, and laid by itſelf. Notwithſtanding this, ſuch was their Incredulity [*], that they return'd home, never ſuppoſing any Thing elſe, but that ſomebody had taken him away. Mary Magdalen, who, by this Time, was again return'd to the Sepulchre, ſtay'd behind the two Apoſtles weeping; and, as ſhe ſtoop'd down to look in, ſaw two Angels in bright Apparel, ſitting where the Body had lain, one at the Head, and the other at the Feet. As the Angels were enquiring of her the Occaſion of her Tears, and ſhe telling them, that it was the Loſs of her Lord's Body, ſhe happen'd to turn herſelf round, and ſaw Jeſus himſelf; but, ſuppoſing him to be the Maſter of the Garden, (where the Sepulchre was) ſhe deſir'd of him, that, if he had remov'd the Body any where, he would be ſo kind as to let her know, that ſhe might take care of it. Hereupon, our Lord calling her by her Name, ſhe immediately knew him, and, throwing herſelf at his Feet, was going to embrace him; but he forbad her, upon the Account, that [†] he had not, as yet, aſcended to his Father, and only requir'd her to acquaint his Apoſtles with his Reſurrection, and immediate Aſcenſion into Heaven; which ſhe failed not to do, but ſtill they gave no Credit to her Report.

The Soldiers that reported it, brib'd and corrupted. Matth. xxviii. 11.

In the mean Time, ſome of the Guards, in a great Fright, fled into the City, and related all that had happen'd to the Chief-Prieſts and Rulers, who immediately aſſembled themſelves to conſult upon this important Affair, and came at length to this Revolution, viz. "to bribe the Soldiers with a large Sum of Money, and thereby engage them to give it out among the People, that, while themſelves were aſleep, the Diſciples of Jeſus came, and ſtole him away; promiſing them withal, that, in Caſe this their pretended Neglect ſhould come to the Governor's Ears, they would take care to pacify him." The Soldiers accordingly took the Money, and obey'd their Orders; and this [†] Report was current among the Jews for many Years after.

Body at once, without tarrying to unbind and undreſs it. And therefore, the Condition, in which the Sepulchre was found, to every conſiderate Man muſt be a ſufficient Confutation of that idle Pretence of the Jews, His Diſciples came, and ſtole him away. The literal Senſe of the Scriptures vindicated, Page 383.

[*] The Remark of one of the Ancients upon this Subject is very good, Nos de illorum Dubitatione ſolidari, that their Doubting is the Confirmation of our Faith; and the more Difficulty, they ſhew'd in believing Christ's Reſurrection, the greater Reaſon have we to believe it; becauſe the Teſtimony of thoſe, who themſelves believe not, till after full Conviction, is, upon that Account, much more credible. Whitby's Annotations.

[†] Various are the Senſes, which Interpreters have been pleas'd to affix to the Reaſon, which our Lord here aſſigns, for his rejecting this Woman's Homage and Embraces, I am not yet aſcended to my Father. Some imagine, that Mary, ſtill retaining her Notions of a temporal Kingdom, concluded, that our Lord was now riſen on Purpoſe to aſſume it, and therefore fell down to adore him; but that he, willing to raiſe her Mind to ſpiritual and celeſtial Thoughts, gave her to underſtand, that, as yet, it was not a proper Time for her to make her Addreſſes to him, becauſe he was not yet aſcended into Heaven, from whence he was to adminiſter his Kingdom, and to ſend down the Holy Ghoſt, in order to form a ſpiritual Communion between him and his true Diſciples. Beauſobre's Annotations. Others ſuppoſe, that this Woman imagin'd, that our Lord was riſen again, in the ſame Manner that Lazarus did, viz. to live upon Earth, as he had done before; and that therefore, to convince her of the contrary, he bid her not touch him, as a mortal Man, becauſe I am not yet aſcended into Heaven, but, in a ſhort Time, ſhall, and that is the Place, where you are to pay me your Homage and Adorations. Calmet's Commentary. Others again ſay, that by a Figure, common enough among Grammarians, who frequently change one Tenſe for another, our Saviour's Words may denote, that he was not then about to aſcend, but to ſtay many Days upon Earth, ſo that Mary might have Space and Opportunity enough to pay her Adorations, and to ſatisfy herſelf in the Truth of his Reſurrection. Whitby's Annotations. But theſe, and ſeveral other Interpretations of the like Kind, are far from being natural, and ſeem calculated on Purpoſe, to exclude the Notion of our Saviour's frequent Aſcenſions, during his Stay upon Earth after his Reſurrection, which, in the Courſe of the ſubſequent Anſwers, we hope to evince to be true.

[†] Some are of Opinion, that the Report, which the Evangeliſt ſpeaks of, as current among the Jews, was, not, that our Lord's Diſciples came, and ſtole him away, but that the Soldiers were corrupted by the High-Prieſts to ſay ſo. This indeed gives a quite different Turn to the Thing, and is very favourable to the Chriſtian Cauſe; but yet, whoever conſiders the circular Letters, mention'd by Juſtin Martyr, which the Rulers in Jeruſalem ſent to the principal Luke xxiv. 13.

From Matth. xx. 10. to the End, Mark xi. 15. to the End, Luke xix. 45. to the End, and John xii. 19. to the End.

On this ſame Day of Chriſt's Reſurrection, as two of his Diſciples were taking a Walk in the Afternoon, to a Town called Emmaus †, and diſcourſing, as they went along, of what had lately happen'd; Jeſus join'd himſelf to their Company, † but they knew him not; and obſerving, that they look'd melancholy, he aſked them the Subject of their Diſcourſe, and what it was, that made them ſo diſconſolate? To which one of them reply'd, "† That the Subject of their Diſcourſe was too notorious even to eſcape the Knowledge of the greateſt Stranger; that it was concerning Jeſus of Nazareth, who indeed was a great Prophet; one, whom they expected would have been the King, and Redeemer of Iſrael, but, to their great Diſappointment, had, of late been deliver'd to Death by their Rulers, and crucify'd. And, what is more aſtoniſhing, continu'd he, this very Day (which is the Third ſince his Death) ſome Women of our Company, having been early at the Sepulchre, and not finding the Body, ſurpriz'd us with an Account, that they had ſeen a Viſion of Angels, who aſſur'd them, that he was alive; which, in part, was confirm'd by ſome of our Men too, who went to the Sepulchre, and found it empty, but did not ſee him."

Hereupon our Lord took occaſion to reprove their Incredulity, and, from the Teſtimony of the Prophets, to convince them, that it was highly neceſſary the Meſſiah ſhould ſuffer Death, and riſe again, in order to a glorious Exaltation. As they drew near to the Village, where they intended to ſpend that Night, Jeſus † ſeem'd as if he had farther to go; but, being unwilling to loſe his good Converſation, they, with ſome Entreaty †, prevailed with him to ſtay. He did ſo: And, as he was ſitting at the Table with them, took Bread, bleſſed it, brake it, and deliver'd it to them, as he was wont to do; whereupon their Eyes were open'd, and Jews all the World over, concerning this Fact, and the great Pains, which (as Tertullian informs us) they every where took to propagate it, together with the Care, which he and the other ancient Apologiſts employ'd to confute this ſenſeleſs, but malicious Lye, muſt needs be of a contrary Opinion, viz. that the Report was ſpread, not againſt the Jewiſh Rulers, but the Chriſtian Diſciples, and was not quite extinct, when St Matthew wrote his Goſpel, Chap. xxviii. 15. which was much about eight Years after Chriſt's Death. Calmet's Commentary.

† Emmaus (which was afterwards made a City, and called Nicopolis) was, at this Time, a ſmall Village, about ſeven Miles diſtant from Jeruſalem to the Weſt, where it is ſuppos'd, (by Bede and others) that either Cleophas, or his Companion, had an Houſe; which, by their importuning Jeſus to go with them, ſeems not improbable, becauſe they could not propoſe to entertain him ſo commodiouſly, or hoſpitably, in an Inn. Wells's Geography of the New Teſtament, Part i. and Howell's Hiſtory, in the Notes.

† Whether it was, that, after his Reſurrection, his Perſon was ſo conſiderably chang'd, that thoſe, who knew him before, could not eaſily diſtinguiſh him; or that he appear'd in an Habit quite different from what he us'd to wear, which, for ſome Time, might hinder them from recollecting who he was; or that he ſuſpended the Operation of their Senſes, that he might have a better Opportunity to inſtruct their Underſtandings; or that, by an extraordinary Power, he with-held their Eyes from perceiving him, by which, upon removing of that Impediment, they immediately knew him. Any of theſe Cauſes will anſwer the Purpoſe better, than that we ſhould impute (as ſome do) their not knowing their Maſter to their exceſſive Grief and Sorrow. Calmet's Commentary, and Whitby's Annotations.

† He, who was the Spokeſman upon this Occaſion, is ſaid to be Cleophas, Luke xxiv. 18. who was the Brother of Joſeph, the Huſband of the Virgin Mary, and ſo the reputed Uncle of Chriſt, whoſe Son Simeon, (ſays Euſebius, lib. iii. c. 10.) by the joint Conſent of the Apoſtles then living, was made Biſhop of Jeruſalem, after St. James, as being the neareſt of Kin to our Saviour. Howell's Hiſtory.

† And ſo very probably he would have done, had not the Diſciples preſs'd him to ſtay with them: But, ſuppoſing he had been reſolved to abide with them, and was minded to try the Temper of his Fellow-Travellers, we cannot from hence charge him either with Diſſimulation, or Deceit; becauſe, tho' our Words ought to be the certain Interpreters of our Thoughts, and are therefore not to be employ'd ſo, as to deceive any, yet Walking hath no certain Signification, nor was it ever inſtituted to be an Indication of the Mind. Whitby's Annotations.

† The Original Word, in St. Luke, is παρεβιάσαντο, which our Tranſlation has render'd they conſtrained him, in Terms literal indeed, but, in this Place, a little too harſh; becauſe it is very improbable, (eſpecially if we conſider the Context) that theſe two Diſciples ſhould offer any Force or Violence to Jeſus, to make him go with them. Howell's Hiſtory, in the Notes.

and they knew him, but immediately he vaniſh'd † out of their Sight.

As ſoon as the two Diſciples had recover'd from their Surprize, they haſten'd to Jeruſalem, where the Apoſtles were met together, who, upon their Arrival, inform'd them, that their Lord was certainly riſen, and (o) had appear'd unto Peter; whilſt they, in their Turns, related what had happen'd to them in the Country, how Jeſus had walk'd, and convers'd with them, and how they came to know him by breaking of Bread. But, notwithſtanding all theſe Teſtimonies, ſeveral among them remain'd ſtill incredulous.

Mark xvi. 14. Luke xxiv. 36. John xx. 19.

For Fear of the Jews the Apoſtles had ſhut the Door, and were now ſat down to Supper in a private Room, late in the Evening, when our Bleſſed Saviour came in, and ſaluted them; and, that they might not take him for a Spirit, or Phantom, but for the very Perſon, that was crucify'd in their Sight, he ſhew'd them the Wounds in his Hands, his Feet, and his Side. Nay, that he might cure them of all Scruple and Doubtfulneſs, he eat a Piece of a broiled Fiſh †, and ſome Honey-Comb before them all, and then, having a little upbraided them with their Unbelief, he gave them ſeveral great and weighty Inſtructions, an Ability to underſtand the Scriptures † more perfectly, a Renovation of their Commiſſion to preach to all Nations †, a Power and Authority to remit or retain Sins, a Communication of the Bleſſed Spirit by breathing on them, and a Promiſe of ſending him more plentifully, (to enable them to be Witneſſes † of his Reſurrection) before they were to depart from Jeruſalem. And thus ended the Firſt Day of the Week, which, in † Origen is of Opinion, that our Bleſſed Lord, for the forty Days, that he was upon Earth after his Reſurrection, could make himſelf viſible, or inviſible, when, and to whom he pleas'd. It is not to be doubted, but that he had the ſame Body, that was depoſited in the Grave; but then, what the Powers of a rais'd and glorify'd Body (eſpecially when in Conjunction with the Deity) are, we cannot tell; only we may infer, that our Saviour could, at leaſt with the ſame Facility, diſappear to his Diſciples now, as he did to the Jews, when they were about to ſtone him, John viii. 59. which, it is generally ſuppos'd, he did, by the Medium of a Cloud caſt over his Body. Calmet's Commentary, and Whitby's Annotations.

(o) 1 Cor. xv. 5.

† This he did, not to ſatisfy any Hunger, that his Body could ſuffer after its Reſurrection, but to prove to them that his Body was truly rais'd, and himſelf was really preſent. And, ſince it cannot be ſuppos'd, that Chriſt in this Action deſign'd any Illuſion, it follows from his very Eating, that his Body had thoſe Parts, by which we chew our Meat, and withal a Stomach to receive it. Whitby's Annotations.

† This, the Evangeliſt tells us, our Saviour did, by opening their Minds, Luke xxiv. 45. for, 'tis one Thing, to open the Scriptures themſelves, or to explain them; and another, to open their Underſtandings to perceive them; and Chriſt, very probably, did the latter, by giving them now ſome Firſt-Fruits of that Spirit of Prophecy, which fell more plentifully on them at the Day of Pentecoſt. Whitby's Annotations.

† Tho' the Word ἔθνη does, in ſome particular Places, ſignify the Tribes and Families of the Jews, excluſive of other People, and, in very many Places, the Nations of the Heathen World, in Oppoſition to the Jews; yet this we are to obſerve, that wherever Mention is made of preaching the Goſpel, in order to gain Converts to the Chriſtian Faith, the Word relates, primarily, to the ſeveral Parts of Judea, and to the Jews, whereſoever they are in their Diſperſions abroad; then, ſecondarily, to the Gentiles mingled with the Jews; and, finally, to the whole Gentile World, when, upon the Jews rejecting the Goſpel, the Apoſtles were forc'd to depart from them; for ſuch the Tenor of their Commiſſion, and ſuch their conſtant Practice was. It was neceſſary, (ſay Paul and Barnabas to the Jews) that the Word of God ſhould firſt have been ſpoken to you, (which refers, I ſuppoſe, to ſome Precept of Chriſt (vid. Matth. x. 6. and xv. 24.) which made it neceſſary) but, ſeeing ye have put it from you, lo, we turn to the Gentiles, Acts xiii. 46. Hammond's Annotations.

† As Chriſt's Reſurrection was a Matter of Fact, it muſt be prov'd by the Teſtimony of Eye-Witneſſes, who, if, they be honeſt Men, and ſuffer the greateſt Prejudices in their Fortunes, Reputation, and Life, for this Teſtimony, give us the greater Reaſon to believe it. For their Honeſty will not ſuffer them, upon any Account whatever, to deviate from the Truth; their Intereſt and Prudence will not permit them (without any Neceſſity laid upon them) to teſtify a Falſhood, much more the groſſeſt Falſhood, to their utmoſt Damage, and without any Proſpect of Advantage; and then, if they confirm this their Teſtimony by all Kinds of Signs, Miracles, and wonderous Powers, exercis'd by themſelves, and others, who embrac'd their Teſtimony; and if this be done in all Places, and on all Perſons, for a whole Age, or Ages; this makes it a Thing impoſſible, that they ſhould thus atteſt a Lye: And therefore, our Lord bids his Apoſtles ſtay at Jeruſalem, till they were thus impower'd, by Virtue from on High, to confirm this Teſtimony, Acts i. 8. Whitby's Annotations.

Honour of our Bleſſed Saviour's Reſurrection, has, ever ſince, been kept as the Sabbath * among Chriſtians.

On the Sunday following, he appears again, and convinces Thomas, who was abſent before, of the Reality of his Reſurrection. John xx. 24.

At the abovemention'd Appearance of our Bleſſed Saviour, all the Apoſtles (except Thomas †) were preſent; and, when they recounted to him every Particular, that had happen'd in his Abſence, ſo far was he from giving his Aſſent to them, that he openly declar'd, that, unleſs he had the utmoſt Evidence * of Senſe, by putting his Finger into the Holes in his Hands and Side, he would not believe a Word of what they told him. On the Sunday following therefore, when, in the ſame Place, they were all met together with the Doors ſhut for Fear of the Jews, and Thomas was with them, Jeſus came, and, ſtanding in the Midſt of them, ſaluted them, as formerly, with the Bleſſing of Peace. After that, turning, to Thomas, he offer'd him the Satisfaction, which he deſir'd, viz. the feeling his Hands, and his Side, where the Nails and the Spear had pierc'd; which when the Apoſtle had done, and, upon Conviction, cry'd out in Tranſport, My God, and my Lord! † our Saviour gave him to underſtand, that his believing, after ſuch a demonſtrative Evidence, was neither ſo praiſe-worthy, or rewardable, as was the Faith of thoſe, who had not the like Conviction.

* The Jewiſh Sabbath was, at firſt, inſtituted, not barely in Commemoration of God's creating the World, but (as there is another Reaſon ſubjoin'd) in Memory of their Deliverance from the Egyptian Bondage: For remember, that thou waſt a Servant in the Land of Egypt, therefore the Lord thy God commandeth thee to keep the Sabbath-Day, Deut. v. 15. Now this Bondage of theirs was an Emblem of our Captivity under Sin, and their Deliverance a Type of our ſpiritual Redemption. When therefore our Redemption was accompliſh'd, it became proper, that the Day of Sabbath ſhould be alter'd, eſpecially, when the wiſe Providence of God had ſo order'd Matters, that the old Jewiſh Sabbath i. e. the ſeventh Day, ſhould be paſs'd over, and the firſt made choice of, to be honour'd with two ſuch glorious Miracles, as the Reſurrection of our Bleſſed Lord from the Dead, and the Coming of the Holy Ghoſt from Heaven. After this indeed, we find the Apoſtles frequenting the Synagogue on the Jewiſh Sabbath, but, from the Time of their Lord's Reſurrection, they never did it (as they did before) according to the Commandment, Luke xxiii. 56. but according to Cuſtom, or as the Manner was, Acts xvii. 2. and therefore we have Reaſon to believe, that, from the very firſt, they look'd upon the antient Sabbath ſuperſeded by this other, which from the Beginning they called, ἡ Κυριακὴ, the Lord's Day, and from the Beginning employ'd in Acts of religious Worſhip: To which Purpoſe we find Ignatius exhorting Chriſtians, not to ſabbatize with the Jews, but to live according to the Lord's Day, in which our Life aroſe with him, Epiſt. ad Mag. 9. Stanhope, on the Epiſtles and Goſpels, Vol. III. and Whitby's Annotations.

† What might be the Occaſion of this Apoſtle's Abſence is variouſly conjectur'd. Some are of Opinion, that as all fled from their Maſter, when he was apprehended in the Garden, they did not ſo ſoon aſſemble again, but by degrees dropped in, one by one, as they recover'd from their Fright; and that therefore, at this Time, Thomas was not return'd to the Company. But others from the natural Temper of this Apoſtle (as it appears from the Scripture-Paſſages, wherein he is concern'd, to be very ſcrupulous, and hard of Belief) do rather think, that taking Offence at the Apoſtles eaſy Credulity, (as he deem'd it) and looking upon all that the Women from the Sepulchre, and the two Diſciples from Emmaus had ſaid, as ſo many idle Tales, he left the Company, in pure Diſguſt, not long before our Saviour came in. Calmet's Commentary, and Young's Sermons, Vol. II.

* The Manner, by which the Apoſtle might bring himſelf to this Reſolution, might poſſibly be by ſome ſuch Arguments as theſe: ——— "Jeſus of Nazareth was put to Death upon the Croſs; and, being dead, was laid and "ſealed up in a Sepulchre, which was ſtrictly watch'd by a Guard of Soldiers: But I am told, and requir'd to believe, "that, notwithſtanding all this, he is riſen, and indeed alive. Now ſurely, Things ſuitable to the ſtated Courſe of "Nature ſhould be believ'd, before ſuch, as are quite beſide it; and for a dead Man to return to Life is preternatural, but that thoſe, who report this, may be miſtaken, is very natural and uſual. Dead I ſaw him; but, that "he is riſen, I only hear. In what I ſee with mine own Eyes, I cannot eaſily be [illegible]'d; but in what I only hear, "I may, and often am. Here being two Things then propos'd to my Belief, my Reaſon tells me, that I ought to "chuſe that, which is more credible; but it ſeems more credible, that a ſmall Number of Witneſſes (frighten'd and "diſturb'd as they are) ſhould be deceiv'd, or (as honeſt as once they were) may conſpire to deceive me, than that one "ſhould riſe from the Dead; and therefore, except, &c." Young's Sermons, Vol. II.

† This is a noble Confeſſion of the Apoſtle's Faith, wherein he not only recognizes Jeſus for the Meſſiah, the very ſame Lord, to whom he had been a Servant and Companion, during the Space of his Miniſtry, but owns likewiſe, and proclaims his Divine Nature. For the Original here is in Terms ſo ſtrict, and with ſuch an Addition of the Greek Article, as the very Hereticks, and Enemies to Truth, confeſs to be the Character of the Word God, when taken in its moſt proper Senſe, and intended of the true God only. Nor can the Words (if put for a Note of Admiration only) be of Force ſufficient to expreſs any Conviction in Thomas; becauſe Expreſſions of Wonder, tho' they properly ſpeak Aſtoniſhment and Surprize, do not always imply Belief, and may therefore import the Strangeneſs, without the Truth of the Thing; whereas our Saviour, in his Anſwer to Thomas, becauſe thou haſt ſeen, thou haſt believed, John xx. 29. accepts this as a full and ſufficient Declaration of his Aſſent; and therefore, to make it ſuch, we muſt admit of that Paraphraſe, which ſome antient Tranſlations ſupply it with, by reading, Thou art my Lord, thou art my God. Stanhope, on the Epiſtles and Goſpels, Vol. IV.

He appears to Peter, and others, as they were fiſhing; eats with them, and diſcourſes with Peter more particularly. John xxi 1.

AFTER this Appearance to the Apoſtles in a full Body, they all reſolv'd (purſuant (p) to their Lord's Directions) to leave Judea, and return into their own Province of Galilee. They had not been long there, before Peter, and ſeveral others of them, went a fiſhing † in the Lake, or Sea of Tiberias, but, after much toiling all Night, they caught nothing. In the Morning, as they were making to Shore, a Perſon †, unknown to them, being inform'd of their ill Succeſs, advis'd them to caſt their Net on the right Side of the Ship, which when they had done, they inclos'd ſo great a Number of large Fiſhes, as made John ſuſpect, that the Perſon on Shore might poſſibly be their Maſter. This he no ſooner ſuggeſted to Peter, but Peter, impatient of Delay, throws on his Coat †, and jumps into the Sea, and gets to Land, while the other Apoſtles had much ado to hawl the Veſſel, and the Net ſo loaded with Fiſh, ſafe to Shore. The Number of the Fiſhes was an hundred and fifty: But (what was more ſurprizing) at their landing, they found a Fire ready made, Fiſh broiling on it, and Bread ſtanding by. This notwithſtanding, our Lord order'd them to bring ſome of thoſe, which they had caught, and, having † aſk'd them to ſit down with him, he not only diſtributed to them, but eat † ſome of the Bread and Fiſh himſelf, to give them a ſtill farther Aſſurance of the Reality of his Reſurrection.

John xxi. 15.

WHEN Dinner was ended, he enter'd into Converſation with Peter; and having thrice demanded † of him, if he lov'd him,

(p) Matth. xxvi 32.—xxviii. 7.

† The Apoſtles, as ſuch, had nothing to do, until the Holy Ghoſt ſhould deſcend upon them; and, among the Jews, it was accounted a Diſgrace to be idle. Since Fiſhing therefore was the ordinary Occupation of ſeveral of them, in this intermediate Time, they thought it the beſt Way to betake themſelves to it, and that, not only to keep themſelves employ'd, but to ſupply their own Want of Neceſſaries likewiſe, until they ſhould have a proper Call to the Miniſtry, when, in all Probability, they gave over the Labours of their ſecular Employs, and devoted themſelves entirely to that Work. Grotius's Annotations.

† By this one would think, that our Bleſſed Lord, after his Reſurrection, was not a little chang'd in his outward Appearance, ſince his Apoſtles (notwithſtanding more Interviews than one) could not ſo readily diſtinguiſh him, either by his Voice, or Looks. Upon this Occaſion, however, he ſeems, by his Queſtion, John xxi. 5, to perſonate one, who might be come to buy ſome Fiſh of them, and under that Guiſe, (whilſt they were buſy and employ'd) might more eaſily paſs upon them. Calmet's Commentary.

† The Text tells us, that he was naked before; but what is called naked ſignifies only to have Part of the Body uncover'd, or to be without a Gown, or upper Garment, according to the Cuſtom of the Eaſtern People, and of the Romans, who, when they went abroad, or made any publick Appearance, wore a long upper Garment, called, in Latin, Toga. Of this Kind was what the Evangeliſt calls a Fiſher's Coat; and, from hence it ſeems pretty plain, that Peter did not ſwim, (as 'tis uſually thought) but wade to Land; ſince, if Decency was the Motive of putting on his Coat, he could not have preſerv'd that Decency, had he come dripping wet (as he muſt have done, upon the Suppoſition of his ſwimming) into his Maſter's Preſence. Howell's Hiſtory, in the Notes, and Calmet's Commentary.

† The Fire, Fiſh, and Bread on the Shore were all created, and produc'd by Chriſt out of nothing, to evidence, at this Time, his Divine Power; but, leſt there ſhould be thought any Deluſion in theſe, he order'd likewiſe ſome of the others, that were juſt then taken, to be dreſs'd; and, that they might not take him for an Apparition only, he invited them to dine with him. As therefore, by the Miracle of creating, and miraculouſly catching the Fiſhes, he prov'd himſelf to be a God; ſo, by his preſent eating of the Fiſh, he evidenc'd himſelf to be a Man, and, conſequently, teacheth us, that our exalted High-Prieſt continues our Kinſman in Heaven. Hammond's and Burkitt's Annotations.

† 'Tis not indeed ſaid expreſsly, that, at this Time, he did eat; but, ſince St Peter tells us, that they did eat and drink with him, after he roſe from the Dead, Acts x. 41. and St Luke teſtifies, that, on another Occaſion, he did eat before them, Chap. xxiv. 42, 43. as he did it then for the Confirmation of his Reſurrection, 'tis hardly to be doubted, but that he did it now for the ſame End. Whitby's Annotations.

† Our Saviour's Words to Peter are, Simon Son of Jonas, loveſt thou me more than theſe, John xxi. 15. More than theſe, what? Some will tell us, that our Saviour, here pointing at the Nets and Fiſhing-Boats, demanded of Peter whether he lov'd him, and his Service, better than his ordinary Employment and Occupation; but this is a forc'd and jejune Expoſition. The Apoſtle, to be ſure, before our Lord's being taken into Cuſtody, had been

him, and thrice receiv'd a Declaration that he did, he, each Time, enjoin'd him to take care of the Flock, which he had committed to him. After this, in a figurative Speech, he ſignified to him, by what Manner of Death he was to glorify God, even by Crucifixion *; but, when Peter deſir'd to know the Fate of his favourite Apoſtle, St John, inſtead of gratifying his Curioſity, he requir'd him rather to attend to his own Concerns, and, as he was to reſemble him in the Manner of his Death, ſo to endeavour to imitate him in his Deportment under it; (q) If I will that he ſtay till I come †, what is that to thee? Follow thou me. This Anſwer of our Saviour's however gave occaſion to a Report among the reſt of the Diſciples, † that John was never to die; but (r) himſelf refuted that Opinion, in his Goſpel, and, by ſurviving the Fate of Jeruſalem, verify'd what our Saviour meant.

AFTER this, our Lord, having appointed a ſolemn Meeting of as many of his Diſciples, as could conveniently be got together, and nam'd a certain Mountain in Galilee † for that Purpoſe, he there appear'd, not only to the eleven Apoſtles, but (s) to five hundred Brethren at once. Here he acquainted his Apoſtles, that all Power, both in Heaven and Earth, was given to him; commanded them to inſtruct all Nations, and to baptize them in the Name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghoſt, and to preſs them to the Obſervation of all his Precepts; foretold them what mighty Signs † and Wonders been very liberal in his Profeſſions of Love to him. He had promis'd to go with him to Priſon and to Death; and, to ſhew how much he ſurpaſs'd the reſt of his Brethren, tho' all ſhould be offended becauſe of thee, ſays he, yet will not I, Matth. xxvi. 33. and yet, upon the Approach of the firſt Danger, he forgot all his Promiſes, and behav'd more ingloriouſly than the reſt. 'Tis in Alluſion therefore to this, that our Lord begins this Diſcourſe with Peter; that he calls to his Mind his former Speeches, and contrary Performances; and, by thrice repeating this Queſtion, Peter, loveſt thou me? in reſpect of his three Denials, and, at firſt, adding the Words more than theſe, in regard to his magnifying his Love, above all others, he now engages him, by the Senſe and Conſideration of his Fall, to a better Diſcharge, and a more conſtant Expreſſion of his Love, in converting Men to the Faith of Chriſt. Whitby's and Hammond's Annotations.

* The Occaſion of his being put to Death is generally reported to be———That he, aſſiſted by St Paul, had, at Rome, confounded the diabolical Illuſions of Simon Magus: Whereupon Nero, who was a Favourer of Magicians, being provok'd, (or, as others think, to ingratiate himſelf with the People of Rome, after he had fir'd their City, gave Orders for his being put to Death, which the Prefects (in the Emperor's Abſence) took care to ſee executed upon him, and St Paul, at the ſame Time. The Latter, as a Denizen, was beheaded with a Sword; but St Peter, who had no Claim to the like Privilege, was ſentenc'd to Crucifixion. This, and the Torments preparatory to it, he underwent with marvellous Patience, and, as a Mark of his Humility, requeſted, and obtain'd to have his Body faſten'd to the Croſs, with his Head downward, as judging it too great an Honour to ſuffer in the ſame Manner, and Poſture, that his Lord had done before him. Stanhope, on the Epiſtles and Goſpels, Vol. IV.

† i. e. Come in Judgment, to take Vengeance on the Jews. For tho' there are but two perſonal Advents mention'd in Scripture; the firſt, when our Lord came into the World to redeem it; and the ſecond, when he ſhall return again to judge it; yet this is no Objection againſt his intermediate Advent, which was not perſonal by any viſible Deſcent of his from Heaven, but virtual, and effected by his ſending the Roman Army againſt the Jews, and giving Signs from Heaven, and in the Clouds, of their approaching Ruin. So that the Senſe of our Saviour's Words is,———If my Pleaſure is, that he live till the Diſſolution of the Jewiſh State: And, accordingly, we find, that, tho' Peter was put to Death under Nero, yet St John continu'd even to the Time of Trajan's Reign, above an hundred Years after our Saviour's Birth, and ſo thirty Years after that this Coming of his was paſt. Whitby's and Hammond's Annotations.

† Becauſe the Chriſtians, at that Time, by the Coming of Chriſt, underſtood the laſt Judgment; whereas our Saviour intended it of the Deſtruction of Jeruſalem, which, in Effect, was a full Emblem of the final Diſſolution of all Things. Beauſobre's Annotations.

† We are not to ſuppoſe, however, that our Lord promis'd the Gift of Miracles to every Chriſtian Convert; ſince this would have made Miracles (which ſhould only be employ'd on important Occaſions, where the Glory of God, or the Good of Mankind is concern'd) too common, and, conſequently, of no Validity at all. So that this Promiſe,

FORTY Days was the Time pre-ordain'd for our Lord's Continuance upon Earth after his Reſurrection. Theſe Days were now almoſt expir'd, when the Apoſtles (according as they were order'd) with ſome of their ſelect Friends, return'd to Jeruſalem, and there aſſembled themſelves in a private Place. Our Bleſſed Saviour came to them; and, among other Things, (t) relating to the Government of his Church, gave them particularly in Charge, that they ſhould not depart from † Jeruſalem, until they had receiv'd that miraculous Effuſion of the Holy Ghoſt †, which he

And from St Paul it appears, that this Promiſe was literally fulfilled, when, after a Viper had faſten'd upon his Hand for ſome Time, he ſhook it off into the Fire, without receiving any Hurt, Acts xxviii. 5. and, as to the drinking of deadly Poiſons, we have it recorded by Papias, of Barſabas, ſirnam'd the Juſt; by Ado, in his Martyrology, of the Cæcilian Soldier; and by Gregory of Tours, of Sabinus, Biſhop of Canoſo; that they three did this without any Miſchief to themſelves. But, as Miracles of this Kind were more liable to Exceptions, than ſuch as were performed upon Unbelievers, (Men being apt to think, that there might be ſome Antidotes againſt the Venom of theſe Beaſts, or the pernicious Effects of theſe Draughts) it muſt be own'd, that Providence thought fit to be more ſparing in affording theſe. Calmet's Commentary, Hammond's and Whitby's Annotations.

† Our Saviour's Words are,——Lo, I am with you always to the End of the World, Matth. xxviii. 20. where we muſt obſerve, that this Promiſe was made, not to all Chriſtians in general, but only to thoſe, whom Chriſt authoriz'd to teach and baptize in his Name, as the Words themſelves, and the Occaſion of ſpeaking them, plainly ſhew: And it contains a full Declaration of our Lord's Intention, that they ſhould always be ſucceeded by others in the ſame Office. For, ſince the Apoſtles all died within the Compaſs of Fourſcore Years, after this extenſive Promiſe was made, it could no Ways be fulfilled, but by our Lord's being with their Succeſſors in the Goſpel-Miniſtry until the World's End. For what ſome imagine, that the συντελεία τοῦ αἰῶνος relates to the End of the Jewiſh Age, or OEconomy, which laſted (as they ſay) to the Deſtruction of the Temple under Veſpaſian, and ſo confine this Promiſe to the Perſons of the Apoſtles only, is void of all Foundation, unleſs we can ſuppoſe, that all ſacred Functions were to ceaſe; neither Baptiſm to be adminſter'd, nor the Goſpel preach'd, after the Deſtruction of Jeruſalem, which is falſe in Fact: And therefore, if we may be allow'd to explain the Deſign and Meaning of this Promiſe by the Manner of its Completion, we muſt conclude, that our Lord here engages himſelf to BE PRESENT with his Miniſters, both by his ſpecial Grace, and by his Authority, after the End of the Jewiſh OEconomy, as well as 'till that Time: And hence we may aſſure ourſelves, that the Miniſtry of the Word, and Adminiſtration of the Sacraments, are a ſtanding and perpetual Ordinance, to continue in the Chriſtian Church throughout all Ages; and that all the faithful Miniſters of Chriſt, in what Part of the World ſoever God ſhall caſt their Lot, and in what Time ſoever they ſhall happen to live, may comfortably expect Chriſt's gracious Preſence with their Perſons, and his Bleſſings upon their Labours. Archbiſhop Potter's Church Government, c. iv. and Burkitt's Annotations.

(t) Acts i. 3.

† Of all Places, the Apoſtles would leaſt of all have choſen Jeruſalem to tarry in, had not our Lord poſitively commanded them to continue there. For Jeruſalem was now a Place juſtly abhorr'd and deteſted by them, as reeking freſh with the Blood of the holy and innocent Jeſus; and yet Jeruſalem is the Place, choſen by Chriſt for the pouring forth of his Holy Spirit upon his Apoſtles; becauſe there was the greateſt Company of Spectators to behold it, and to be wrought upon by it; and becauſe there had been the Scenes of his greateſt Humiliation, and therefore, there he was minded to ſhew forth his Power and Glory. Burkitt's Annotations.

† The Reaſons, aſſignable for this wonderful Diſpenſation, are, 1ſt, To enable them to be powerful Witneſſes of our Lord's Reſurrection, Luke xxiv. 48. and, conſequently, that he was the true Meſſiah, or the Prophet, who was to come into the World, and was to be the Saviour of it: And therefore St Peter ſpeaks thus to the Jews, Ye have killed the Prince of Life, whom God hath raiſed from the Dead, of which we are Witneſſes, Acts iii. 15. 2dly, To enable them to give an exact Account (as far as Divine Wiſdom ſaw it neceſſary) of what our Saviour did, and taught; and therefore himſelf tells them, that the Spirit of Truth, which proceedeth from the Father, ſhould teſtify of him, and bring all thoſe Things to their Remembrance, which he had ſaid unto them, John xv. 26.—xiv. 26. and, 3dly, To make them able Miniſters of the New Teſtament, i. e. able to acquaint Chriſtians with all ſaving Truths, and to teach them all Things, that Chriſt had commanded to be obſerv'd, throughout all the Ages of the Church; and, upon the Strength of this Promiſe, all Chriſtians in all Ages have believ'd, that the Apoſtles, and Writers of the New Teſtament, both ſpake, and wrote, as they were mov'd, or directed by the Spirit of God, and, accordingly, have receiv'd their Doctrines, not as the Words of Men, but, as they were in Truth, the Word of God, 1 Theſſ. ii. 13. Whitby's Annotations.

he had promiſ'd, and would ſhortly ſend down upon them. This Effuſion of the Spirit the Apoſtles imagin'd might poſſibly be an Introduction to his temporal Dominion, which ſtill ran in their Heads; and therefore they aſk'd him, whether he intended, at that Time, to reſtore the Kingdom to Iſrael? But he check'd their Enquiry, and gave them to underſtand, that, after the Deſcent of the Holy Ghoſt upon them, they would have juſter Notions of theſe Matters, and be ſufficiently enabled to be the authentick Witneſſes of his Life and Actions, * all the World over; and with theſe Words he led all the Company out of the City, to that Part of Mount Olivet, which was neareſt to Bethany; and there, as he was lifting up his Hands, and giving them his Benediction †, while they continu'd all in an adoring Poſture, he was parted from them gradually, taken up in a Cloud, and carry'd triumphantly into Heaven †, where he now ſitteth at the † Right-Hand of God, (u) God Bleſſed for ever. Amen.

* Thus the Apoſtles preach'd in the moſt conſiderable Cities of the then known World, as at Antioch, Alexandria, and even at Rome itſelf, as well as at Jeruſalem and Samaria. They taught at Athens, and Corinth, and throughout all Greece, in ſuch Towns, as were moſt learned, moſt corrupt, and moſt idolatrous. It was in the Preſence of all Nations, of Greeks and Barbarians, of the Learned and the Ignorant, of Jews and Romans, of Princes and their People, that the Diſciples of JESUS CHRIST gave Witneſs of the Wonders, they had ſeen with their Eyes, heard with their Ears, and touched with their Hands, and particularly of their Lord's Reſurrection: Which Teſtimony they ſupported, without any Intereſt, and againſt all the Reaſons of human Prudence, even to their laſt Breath, and ſealed it with their Blood. Such was the Eſtabliſhment of Chriſtianity! Fleury's Church-Hiſtory.

† The Cuſtom among the Jews was, to give the Benediction to a good Number, or Congregation of People, with an Elevation, and Extenſion of the Hands, as appears from the Practice of Aaron, Lev. ix. 22. But to any particular Perſon the Bleſſing was given with the Impoſition of Hands, as the Example of Jacob, with regard to Ephraim and Manaſſeh, plainly ſhews, Gen. xlviii. 14. Calmet's Commentary.

† This muſt be underſtood of his human Nature only, becauſe the Divine Nature fills all Places, both in Heaven and Earth, and is, at all Times, incapable of that, which we properly call Motion. The ſame Body of Chriſt therefore, which was born, and ſuffer'd, and died, was actually carry'd up thither, and ſo our Saviour's Aſcenſion was no imaginary and figurative, but a real, proper, and corporal Aſcent into Heaven, and that, in the moſt elevated Part, and nobleſt Signification, that this Word, at any Time does, or can poſſibly admit: And therefore, he is ſaid to have entered into the Holy Place, Heb. ix. 12. and to have aſcended up far above all Heavens, Eph. iv. 10. into the Preſence of God, and where he was before, John vi. 62. ſo that, whatever Heaven is higher than all the reſt, which are called Heaven; whatever Sanctuary is holier than all, which are called Holies; whatever Place is of greateſt Dignity in all thoſe Courts above, into that Place, did our Saviour aſcend, where, in the Splendor of his Deity, he was before he took upon him our Humanity; as our Learned Biſhop Pearſon fully and elegantly expreſſes it. Art. vi. and Stanhope, on the Epiſtles and Goſpels, Vol. III.

† This is one of thoſe Expreſſions, wherein the Holy Ghoſt condeſcends to our Capacity, by attributing to God the Parts, and Geſture of an human Body. The Hand is the chief Inſtrument of exerting our Strength, and therefore often us'd to denote the Power of God. The Right Hand is the uſual Place of Honour and Reſpect, and therefore this denotes the higheſt Dignity. Sitting, in like Manner, intimates a State of Eaſe and Reſt, and is properly the Poſture of thoſe, that are in Power and Authority, of Kings upon their Thrones, and Magiſtrates in Courts of Juſtice; and therefore Chriſt's Sitting at God's Right-Hand implies thus much, ——— "That the ſame Bliſs, " Glory, and Power, which, as the Son of God, he did, before his Incarnation, enjoy with his Father from all " Eternity, his human Nature is now made Partaker of, in the higheſt Heavens. That this God Man is inveſted with " an abſolute Authority, and boundleſs Dominion, and does now, in both Natures, rule, as he ſhall one Day judge, " the whole World; and that, till that Day come, it is the Duty of us, and all Mankind, to reverence and obey, to " truſt in, and pray to him, as our only Head and King, our rightful and univerſal Lord." Stanhope, on the Epiſtles and Goſpels, Vol. III.

The OBJECTION.

"BUT ſurely it muſt be deem'd ſome Argument againſt this Divinity of Jeſus, that, on ſeveral Occaſions, we find him diſclaiming all Pretenſions to it; owning himſelf to be no more than (a) the Son of Man; acknowledging (b) an Inferiority between him and the only true God; and, in ſome of the moſt momentous Paſſages of his Life, diſcovering himſelf to be no more than Man, a Man of the like Paſſions and Infirmities with us, but, in many Caſes, far ſhort of that Bravery and Fortitude of Mind, which has been conſpicuous in ſome Heathen Sages.

"THE hypoſtatical Union, ſo much talked of, (had there been any Reality in it) muſt have certainly given Jeſus a Fore-knowledge of all Events, tho' never ſo contingent, never ſo uncertain; and yet we find him declaring, that (c) of that Day and Hour (viz. either of the Deſtruction of Jeruſalem, or his Advent to the General Judgment) knoweth no Man, neither the Angels, which are in Heaven, nor the Son, but the Father only.

"'TIS a known Attribute of God, that, as he is a ſelf-exiſtent and independent Being, the Power, which he has, he had from all Eternity, inherent in himſelf, and deriv'd from none other; but the Caſe muſt have been quite otherwiſe with Jeſus, as appears by his coming to his Apoſtles, and, with great Joy, telling them, that (d) all Power was given to him in Heaven and Earth: For when was it given? Not 'till after his Reſurrection, not until (e) he had been obedient unto Death, even the Death of the Croſs, for which God highly exalted him; and therefore this is no obſcure Intimation, that he had no Share of this Divine Power committed to him before.

"THE moſt obvious Notion we have of a Deity reſiding in human Nature, is, that the Perſon, vouchſafed that Dignation, ſhould be (if not exempt from all Kind of Miſeries) enabled at leaſt to bear them without Anxiety: But what became of the Power of this hypoſtatical Union, when we find our Lord (f) filled with Fear and Anguiſh, and, in the utmoſt Conſternation of Mind, telling his three Apoſtles (whom he deſir'd to watch with him) that (g) his Soul was exceeding ſorrowful, even unto Death: When we find him in the Garden, (h) praying with ſuch ſtronge Cries and Tears, and in ſuch an Agony both of Soul and Body, that (i) his Sweat was like great Drops of Blood, falling down to the Ground: And, above all when we find him reduc'd to ſuch Extremity, that (k) an Angel was detatch'd from Heaven to ſupport and ſtrengthen him; which certainly there would have been no Occaſion for, (l) had the Fulneſs of the Godhead (of much ſuperior Efficacy, one would think, than any created Angel) dwelt in him bodily.

"WHERE was this hypoſtatical Union, we may aſk, when our Lord, as he was hanging on the Croſs, ſadly complain'd, (m) My God, my God, why haſt thou forſaken me? And much more may we aſk, where it was, when he lay bury'd

" bury'd in the Grave, a pale, ſenſeleſs Corps, (n) wrapp'd in Linnen-Cloaths, and embalm'd with Spices? 'Tis the Union of the Soul, we know, that prevents the Death of the Body, and much more muſt our Lord's Death have been prevented by (o) ſuch a Conjunction of the Divine Nature, unleſs we can ſuppoſe that Nature at any Time torbid and unactive, which, in a Divine Principle, is hardly within the Compaſs of Suppoſition.

" HOWEVER, ſince our Saviour was to ſuffer, and for this Purpoſe came into the World, that he might (p) taſte Death for every Man, how is it, that he happen'd to be more troubled at the Apprehenſion of it, (q) than was Socrates, and many other Philoſophers, of old, who had learned not to be much afflicted with Calamities, and ſuffered Torments with an undaunted Courage? He certainly knew what God had decreed, and himſelf had conſented to, before his Incarnation; and therefore, when he came to the Point, for what Reaſon was it, that he alter'd his Purpoſe, and deſir'd of his Father a Removal of the bitter Cup?

" IF the Ingredients of it were ſo very bitter, we cannot ſee, what Occaſion there was for his drinking it at all, or why he ſhould doubt of the Poſſibility of its paſſing from him. For might not God forgive the Sins of Mankind without any ſuch penal Exactions? Or, if a Sacrifice was to be offer'd, might not the Death of a common Man (admitted as a publick Repreſentative) have done as well? When the Love of God would have roſe, in Proportion to the Lowneſs of the Satisfaction he accepted, why ſhould he be at the Expence of parting with his only Son, and of redeeming us with the Blood Royal of Heaven?

" BUT, after all, it is much to be queſtion'd, whether we are really redeem'd or no. For, even allowing, that our Proxy, Chriſt Jeſus, was the Son of God, (r) yet were not his Sufferings equivalent to the Sins of Mankind, foraſmuch as the Death, which he underwent, was only temporal, whereas the Puniſhment, which our Sins deſerv'd, and we, in our own Perſons, ſhould have ſuffer'd for them, was Death eternal.

" IF the Satisfaction however, hereby given to the Divine Juſtice, was ſufficient and compleat, we ought not to make ſuch an heavy Out-Cry againſt Judas, for being an Inſtrument in this Tranſaction, eſpecially ſince what he did he was in a Manner compelled to do. (s) We read of this Fact of his in a Prophecy, as high as the (t) Pſalmiſt, who not only points out the Thing, but likewiſe the Perſon, that was to do it; from whence it muſt follow, that this Fact muſt have likewiſe been pre-ordain'd, and made neceſſary to come to paſs by the Fate of a Decree; and, if he was neceſſitated by the Force of irreſiſtible Decree, wherein was he to be blam'd for the doing it, ſince, where there is a Fatality in acting, there can be no Choice, and, where there is no Choice, there can be no Guilt?

" BUT even, ſuppoſing that Judas was guilty of an heinous Offence in betraying his Maſter, yet we cannot but think, that St Peter was every whit as culpable (u) in denying him, in denying him three Times, with the ſad Formality of repeated Oaths and Imprecations; and yet it would make one wonder, why the one's Repentance was accepted merely (x) for weeping a little at the Remembrance of his Offence, when the other's deep Sorrow and Remorſe for his Crime, his returning the Wages of Iniquity openly,

“ his publick Declaration of our Saviour's Innocence, owning his Baſeneſs, and taking the whole Shame of his Fault upon himſelf, met with no Grace, but ended in his everlaſting Perdition.

“ Well was it for the penitent Thief, that he had better Fate, (y) whoſe Repentance, though begun upon the Croſs, and even after he had join'd in reviling our Saviour, was immediately rewarded with a glorious Reception into Paradiſe. And this may teach us, that (whatever ſome may talk of the Invalidity of a late Death-Bed Repentance) God is diſpos'd to receive the greateſt Sinners into the Arms of his Mercy, even tho' they be at their laſt Gaſp.

“ But, tho' we are oblig'd to St Luke for this comfortable Account of the penitent Thief, yet we cannot but acknowledge, that St Matthew (z) has committed an egregious Blunder, when, in relation to the thirty Pieces of Silver, that were given for our Saviour's Blood, inſtead of Zechariah (a), in whom alone the Prophecy is to be found, he cites Jeremiah, who has not one Word concerning the whole Matter.

“ But a Miſ-Quotation in the Evangeliſts may be eaſily excus'd, were they not chargeable with a Miſ-Repreſentation of Facts; as they certainly are, (b) when they talk of a total Eclipſe of the Sun, at the Time of our Lord's Crucifixion, for three whole Hours together, when 'tis confeſs'd, that the Sun and Moon were in no Conjunction then, and (even if they had been ſo) a Darkneſs of ſo long Continuance in any Eclipſe whatever is known to be contrary to the Laws of Nature: As they certainly are, when they reſolve the Infidelity of God's People, not into the Perverſeneſs of their own Wills, but (c) either into the Divine Predictions, or a judicial Blindneſs and Obduration brought upon them: (d) When they introduce our Lord, with no more than a Whip in his Hand, (e) driving all the Buyers and Sellers out of the Temple; (f) curſing the poor Fig-Tree, for having nothing but Leaves upon it, when (according to their own Acknowledgment) (g) the Time of Figs was not yet; and (what is more ſtill) curſing the (h) Scribes and Phariſees, and giving them ſuch hard Names, when he could not but know, that this was a groſs Violation (i) of his great Precept of loving one another; tho', how he comes to call this (k) a new Commandment, we cannot well conceive, ſince it is manifeſtly as old as Moſes, in whoſe Laws 'tis expreſly requir'd, (l) Thou ſhalt love thy Neighbour as thyſelf. I am the Lord.

“ Whatever our Saviour might mean by (m) the Abomination of Deſolation (ſpoken of by Daniel the Prophet) ſtanding in the Holy Place, (which has occaſion'd no ſmall Perplexity to Interpreters) 'tis certain, that, in the Commiſſion, which he gives his Apoſtles, he has furniſh'd the Antipædobaptiſts with an Argument, that will not eaſily be wreſted from them, when he bids them (n) go, and teach all Nations, before they baptize them; and that the Romaniſts have too much to ſay for themſelves, in Behalf of the Real Preſence, when, after the Conſecration of the Elements, (o) he calls the Bread his Body, and the Wine his Blood. But the great Point of all is our Saviour's Reſurrection; and happy had it been for the Chriſtian Cauſe, if the Proofs of it had been made a little more publick and convincing. For, whatever may be ſaid in Apology for St Thomas's Incredulity, (which if

“ it was cauſeleſs, was certainly very culpable) it cannot be doubted, but that, had our Lord appear'd perſonally to the High-Prieſts and Rulers, after he was riſen; made an open and triumphant Entry into Jeruſalem; and frequented the Temple, and other Places of publick Concourſe, that every Eye might ſee him, and receive full Conviction for the Time that he abode upon Earth; it cannot be doubted, I ſay, but that, in this Method, he would have given the World fuller Satisfaction, than in remitting us to the Teſtimony of his Apoſtles, who were all his own Creatures, and, conſequently, Evidences, againſt whom we may make a juſt Exception.

“ THE Materiality of our Lord's Reſurrection-Body, and the Reality of his Aſcenſion into Heaven, are two Points more, that, in this Part of the ſacred Hiſtory, we think, we have Reaſon to call in Queſtion. For ſince (o) one known Property of a Body is, that it cannot penetrate through Matter, without either cutting it, or being cut; if Jeſus, at his Reſurrection, aſſum'd the ſame Body, that died on the Croſs, and was laid in the Sepulchre, how come we to read, that (p) on the firſt Day of the Week, when the Doors were ſhut, he came in to his Diſciples, more than once, and ſtood in the Midſt of them? If his Body, at this Time, was real Fleſh and Blood, it could never have penetrated through a more ſolid Subſtance than itſelf; and therefore we have Reaſon to preſume, that it was no more than a light aërial Vehicle, that could paſs through any Crack, or Key-Hole, and appear, or diſappear as it pleas'd.

“ AND, in like Manner, when we read in the ſame Evangeliſt, (q) Touch me not; as our Saviour ſays to Mary Magdalen) for I am not yet aſcended to my Father; but go to my Brethren, and ſay to them, I aſcend to my Father, and your Father, to my God, and your God; upon the Suppoſition that his Body was material, we muſt from theſe Words infer, that he aſcended inſtantly after his Reſurrection, and, as the Joys of Heaven and the Boſom of his Father would not well fail to detain him, we muſt from hence conclude, that his ſeeming Aſcent from the Mount Olivet afterwards was perform'd by ſome airy Form or other, which he appointed to perſonate him upon this Occaſion.”

Anſwer'd, by ſhewing, why our Lord called himſelf the Son of Man.

St PAUL, in his Epiſtle to the Philippians, argues, from the Majeſty of Chriſt's Divine Nature, to the Greatneſs of his Condeſcenſion in becoming the Son of Man, (r) who being in the Form of God, (as he expreſſes it) thought it no Robbery to be equal with God, but made himſelf of no Reputation, and took upon him the Form of a Servant, and was made in the Likeneſs of Man, and being found in the Faſhion of a Man, he humbled himſelf, and became obedient unto Death. In this State of Humiliation, it was highly proper and ſuitable to his Character, to ſpeak modeſtly of himſelf, and to make uſe of the loweſt Title, that he had, as beſt becoming his preſent Condition.

BUT there is another Reaſon, which ſome have aſſign'd for the frequent Uſe, that he makes of this Appellation, and that is, its being a Prophetick Name, whereby Daniel has thought fit to deſcribe the promis'd Meſſiah. (s) I ſaw in the Night Viſions, ſays he, and behold one, like the Son of Man, came with the Clouds of Heaven, and came to the Ancient of Days, and there was given him Dominion, and Glory, and a Kingdom, that all People, Nations, and Languages ſhould ſerve him: 'Tis in Alluſion to this therefore, (as theſe Men think) and in order to aſſert his Claim to the Office of the Meſſiah, that our Saviour ſo commonly calls himſelf by that Name.

HOWEVER this be, 'tis certain, that he is not ſo fond of the Name of the Son of Man, as not to deſire to be conſider'd in the Capacity of the Son of God likewiſe. For, when he put the Queſtion to his Diſciples, (t) Whom ſay ye that I am? And Peter, in the Name of the reſt, reply'd, Thou art Chriſt, the Son of the Living God, he is far from being diſpleas'd with the Anſwer, when he returns the Apoſtle this Compliment, Bleſſed art thou, Simon Bar-jona; for Fleſh and Blood hath not revealed this unto thee, but my Father, that is in Heaven.

(o) Whitby's Annotations on John xx. 19. (p) John xx. 26. (q) Ibid. ver. 17. (r) Philip. ii. 6, &c. (s) Dan. vii. 13, 14.

And yet declares himſelf the Son of God.

OUR Saviour indeed was ſo far from making any unneceſſary Declarations of himſelf, that, (u) on ſome Occaſions, we find him labouring to conceal his Divine Character, and charging his Diſciples to ſay nothing of it, until his Reſurrection; but, notwithſtanding this, whenever he was fairly called upon, and eſpecially by Perſons inveſted with Authority, he never concealed it. When (x) the Jews came round him in Solomon's Porch, and ſaid unto him, how long doſt thou make us doubt? If thou be the Chriſt, tell us plainly; his Anſwer is expreſs: I told you, and you believed not; the Works, that I do in my Father's Name, they bear witneſs of me; for I and my Father are one. When he ſtood before the Judgment-Seat, and the High-Prieſt demanded of him, (y) I adjure thee by the Living God, that thou tell us, whether thou be the Chriſt, the Son of God, his Reply is, Thou haſt ſaid, or, (as St Mark (z) expreſſes it) I am; and ye ſhall ſee the Son of Man ſitting on the Right-Hand of Power, and coming in the Clouds of Heaven. Nay, there are ſome Inſtances, wherein, of his own Accord, and without any Demand of this Kind, he freely diſcovers who he was: For, having cur'd the Man, that was born blind, and afterwards meeting him accidentally, (a) Doſt thou believe on the Son of God? ſays he; whereupon the Man aſking, Who is the Son of God, that I may believe on him? our Saviour replies, Thou haſt both ſeen him, and he it is, that talketh with thee.

In what Senſe he is inferior to the Father.

THO' therefore our Bleſſed Saviour delighted much in the Appellation of the Son of Man, yet, as he did not, upon that Account, decline the Title of the Son of God, and had, conſequently, two Natures united in the ſame Perſon, our Buſineſs muſt be, to diſtinguiſh between theſe two Natures, and then we ſhall ſoon perceive the Reaſon of our Saviour's informing his Apoſtles, that his Father was greater than him, viz. greater, with reſpect to the Son's Humanity, tho', as touching their Divinity, they are perfectly equal; or greater, as he is the Father, and, conſequently, the Fountain and Original of the God-head, tho' their Nature and Eſſence be one and the ſame.

(b) IN the very Notion of Paternity and Filiation, there is ſome Kind of Subordination imply'd; but then we are to obſerve, that this is not a Subordination of Nature and Subſtance, no, nor of eſſential Attributes, or natural Properties, but merely a perſonal Subordination, founded on the perſonal Properties: And, to be ſatisfy'd in this, we need only conſider, that the Communication of the Eſſence, upon which this Subordination is grounded, is only a perſonal Action, and not an Act, or Attribute of the Divine Eſſence. To generate, and to be generated, are not eſſential Attributes of the Divine Nature, but merely perſonal Acts of the Father and Son; and, conſequently, the ſole Foundation of this Subordination being merely in perſonal Properties, the Subordination itſelf, founded therein, can only relate to the perſonal, and not at all to the eſſential Properties; for, notwithſtanding the Son's perſonal Subordination, he ſtill continues, with the Father in Subſtance equal, in Majeſty Co-eternal.

In what Senſe he ſeems to be ignorant of ſome future Events.

WHEN therefore our Saviour ſeems to own his Inferiority of Knowledge, and to profeſs himſelf ignorant of ſome future Events, that the Father had reſerv'd to himſelf, himſelf, the Meaning muſt be, —— (c) Either that, as Man, he did not know beyond the Capacities of an human and finite Underſtanding, and not what he knew, as God; or that, as a Prophet ſent from God, he had no Commiſſion to declare it, and what was no Part of his Prophetick Office, he knew nothing of, i. e. had no Inſtructions to reveal it. For, that in this Senſe † the original Word is ſometimes taken, we may learn from that Paſſage to the Corinthians, where St Paul tells his Diſciples, that (d) he had determined not to know any Thing among them, i. e. not to teach, or inſtruct them in any Point of Doctrine, ſave Jeſus Chriſt, and him crucify'd.

"It is one Thing therefore (ſays the learned (e) Lightfoot) to underſtand the Son of God, barely, and abſtractly, for the ſecond Perſon in the Holy Trinity, and another, to underſtand him for the Meſſiah, or ſecond Perſon incarnate. To ſay, that the ſecond Perſon in the Trinity is ignorant of any Thing, is blaſphemous: But to ſay ſo of the Meſſias (tho' he be that ſecond Perſon in the Trinity) is not ſo. For, tho' the ſecond Perſon, abſtractly conſider'd, according to his mere Deity, be co-equal with the Father, co-omnipotent, co-omniſcient, co-eternal with him; yet the Meſſias, who is God-Man, conſider'd as the Meſſias, was a Servant and a Meſſenger to the Father, from whom he receiv'd Commands and Authority," as himſelf frequently declar'd, (f) that he ſpake nothing of himſelf, but that the Father, who ſent him, gave him Commandment, what he ſhould ſay and what he ſhould ſpeak. Tho' therefore it plainly appears, both from the many Prognoſtics, which he mentions, and the exact Deſcription, which he gives of the Deſtruction of Jeruſalem, that our Saviour could not but know the preciſe Day and Hour of its happening, yet this he might call one of (g) thoſe Times and Seaſons which the Father had put in his own Power, becauſe he had receiv'd no Order or Direction for him to reveal it.

From Matth. xx. 10. to the End, Mark xi. 15. to the End, Luke xix. 45. to the End, and John xii. 19. to the End.

The Generality of the Antients, however, run into the other Notion, which ariſes from the Conſideration of the two Natures in Chriſt, and therefore (with Cyril of Alexandria) they ſay, that he ſometimes declar'd himſelf as God, and ſometimes as Man, thereby to ſhew, that he was very God, and very Man; that as he was pleas'd, in reſpect of his Manhood, to ſuffer Hunger and Thirſt, and other Inconveniencies of that Kind, ſo he condeſcended to take upon him the innocent Infirmities of it, (among which Ignorance of future Events is one) but this without any Diſparagement to his (h) Godhead, wherein are hid all the Treaſures of Wiſdom and Knowledge; and that, in ſhort, he both knew, and knew not, when the Day and Hour, here ſpoken of, would come; the former, with reſpect to his Divine, and the latter, to his Human Nature.

This Solution however does not pleaſe ſo well. For, if we refer the Day and Hour (as they were primarily intended) to the Deſtruction of the Temple and City of Jeruſalem, what Signs and Prognoſtics does our Saviour give his Diſciples of this great Event? Why he foretells them, —— that not one Stone of all thoſe glorious Buildings ſhould be left upon another; that there ſhould be Wars and Rumours of Wars, when Nation ſhould riſe againſt Nation, and Kingdom againſt Kingdom; that there ſhould be Famines, Peſtilences, and Earthquakes in divers Places; that falſe Prophets and falſe Chriſts ſhould ariſe, who ſhould amuſe them with deſtructive Hopes of imaginary Deliverances; that Jeruſalem ſhould be encompaſſed with a foreign Enemy, who ſhould at laſt make a final Deſtruction of it, and of all that was therein; that the Abomination of Deſolation ſhould ſtand in the Holy Place, where, of all Places in the World, it ought not to have ſtood; and that all theſe Things ſhould come to paſs, while ſome of the preſent Generation were ſtill alive. (i) Now, ſince all theſe Things did literally come to paſs, as our Lord forty Years before had foretold that they ſhould; ſince, at the Time of his foretelling them, the Romans were in peaceable Poſſeſſion of Judea, nor was there any Proſpect at all of the Troubles and Commotions which afterwards enſu'd; and ſince the Completion of theſe Prophecies is preſerv'd to us by a Jewiſh Writer, who himſelf was concern'd in theſe very Troubles, and did not record them with any Deſign to gratify us Chriſtians; can we imagine, that Jeſus Chriſt, who was this Prophet, could poſſibly be ignorant of the Day and Hour when theſe Predictions ſhould be compleated? Or rather ought we not to think, that all he intended by that Expreſſion was to ſignify to his Hearers, that it was then an improper Time for him to reveal the particular Period, when that Cataſtrophe was to overtake them? But two Days after this his Diſciples own his Divinity, and acknowledge, that (k) he knew all Things, and (l) all Things that he had heard from the Father, or had a Commiſſion to declare from the Father, himſelf avers, that he had not failed to make known unto them; and therefore we may well preſume, that the individual Day and Hour, when Jeruſalem was finally to be deſtroy'd, as it was a Matter of no Concern for them to be acquainted with, ſo was it no Part of his Inſtructions from Heaven to let them into a minute Knowledge of it; that in the Signs and Forerunners, which he had diſcover'd to them, he had ſaid enough to put them, and all conſidering Men upon their Guard; that fuller and more particular Indications of the Time (as Things then ſtood) were by no Means proper, for, tho' they might poſſibly be able to (m) bear his Words, yet others might be tempted to make an ill Uſe of them, contrary to his original Meaning.

(c) Kidder's Demonſtration of the Meſſias, Part II. p. 60.

† The Learned have obſerv'd, that the ſame Verb, according to its ſeveral Conjugations, (as the Hebrew Grammarians call them) may either ſignify an Action, or the neceſſary Concurrence of the Author of that Action, and, that the Conjugation Hiphil, which properly ſignifies the Concurrence of the Author of the Action with the Action itſelf, is often us'd for the Conjugation Kal, by which the Action barely, and the Perſon or Perſons, who did it, are ſpecify'd, without any additional Senſe, by which their ſpecial Concurrence is to be underſtood. Thus Jada, the Root in Kal, is only he knew, but Hodia in Hiphil, is he made known, and ſo on, thro' the ſeveral Tenſes or Times, paſt, preſent, and to come. So that, according to this Acceptation, what our Lord deſign'd to acquaint his Diſciples with in Mark xiii. 32. was no more than this, ——That neither the Angels, nor the Son intended then to make that Day and Hour known, but that the Father would in his proper Time reveal it. Wotton's Omniſcience of the Son of God, &c.

To have all Power given him.

It is to be obſerv'd however, that, in regard our Bleſſed Saviour had the Divine and Human Nature both united in one Perſon, great Caution muſt be us'd, in obſerving his Actions and Affections, that we do not miſtake in aſſigning any of them to a wrong Principle. (n) For, as thoſe Works of Wonder, which exceeded or controlled all the Powers of created Nature, muſt be attributed to a Principle omnipotent and divine; ſo in thoſe others, which relate either to Joy or Sorrow, Subjection or Exaltation, he muſt be underſtood to proceed upon a Principle purely human, and that the Faculties of the Divine Nature were, in ſuch Caſes, totally ſuſpended.

Now, it is certain, that the Perfections of the Divine Nature will admit of neither any Increaſe or Diminution of its Power and Greatneſs. The Author to the Hebrews (o) applies to our Saviour Chriſt theſe Words of the Pſalmiſt (p), Thou, O Lord, in the Beginning, haſt laid the Foundation of the Earth, and the Heavens are the Work of thy Hand; and ſurely he, who created the World, and (q) without whom not any Thing was made, that was made, could not fail of having, from all Eternity, a ſovereign Power both in Heaven

Heaven and Earth. 'Tis not in Reſpect of his Divinity therefore, that our Lord ſpeaks of his Enlargement of Power, but of his Human Nature, which, in Reward of his Obedience and Humiliation, (r) was highly exalted, and obtain'd God a Name, which is above every Name; that at the Name of Jesus every Knee ſhould bow, of Things in Heaven, and Things in Earth, and Things under the Earth, and that every Tongue ſhould confeſs, that Jeſus Chriſt is Lord, to the Glory of God the Father.

And to have been exceeding ſorrowful.

It is equally certain, that the Divine Nature is not capable of any Grief or Sorrow, or other Perturbation of Mind, ariſing from an Apprehenſion of ſome imminent Danger, or a Senſe of ſome incumbent Calamity; and therefore, when our Saviour complains of the vaſt Load of Sorrow, that lay heavy upon his Spirits, and almoſt quite ſunk them down, this he muſt be ſuppos'd to ſay with regard to his Human Nature only, becauſe his Divine was exempt from all ſuch Suffering. But then, the Queſtion is, from what particular Cauſe it was, that all this Sorrow, and Fear, and Conſternation of Mind (for † ſo the original Words import) could poſſibly ariſe.

From whence this Sorrow, and other Infirmities did ariſe, various Opinions.

(s) Those, who impute all this to nothing more, than a natural Dread of Pain and Death, have this Difficulty to contend with, that how grievous ſoever theſe Things may be, eſpecially to ſinful Fleſh and Blood, yet they are ſuch, as have been corrected by Reaſon, and, in their moſt tremendous Shapes, borne with great Patience and Reſignation of Mind; and therefore, it can hardly be imagin'd, that the Proſpect of a Crucifixion could have rais'd ſuch Commotions in a Soul, which had the Teſtimony of a good Conſcience to ſupport it, and a glorious Reward ſet before it, to make a full Recompence for what it ſuffer'd.

(t) Others are of Opinion therefore, that this exceſſive Sorrow and Dejection of Mind were occaſion'd by the perfect and penetrating Light, which then diffus'd itſelf in our Saviour's Mind all at once, concerning the Guilt of Sin, and the Wrath of an incens'd God; that the Horror of theſe fill'd and amaz'd his vaſt apprehenſive Soul; and that theſe Apprehenſions could not but affect his tender Heart, full of the higheſt Zeal for God's Glory, and the moſt relenting Compaſſion for the Souls of Men: "For, if "the true Contrition of one ſingle Sinner, "(u) ſay they, bleeding under the Sting "of the Law, only for his own Iniquities, cannot be perform'd, without great "Bitterneſs of Sorrow and Remorſe, what "Bounds can be ſet to that Grief, what "Meaſure to that Anguiſh, which pro"ceeded from a full Apprehenſion of all "the Tranſgreſſions of ſo many Millions "of Sinners?"

(x) This is the moſt common Solution: And yet there is ſomething in the Context, which has induced others to think, that, on this Occaſion, the Devil and his Angels had collected all their Forces, in order to fill our Saviour's Mind with the moſt diſmal, terrifying Scenes of Horror, thereby to divert him from his intended Enterprize. For, 1ſt, we may obſerve, that, before he entered the Garden, where this Agony ſeiz'd him, he expected ſome terrible Aſſault from theſe infernal Powers, and therefore, he tells his Diſciples, the Prince

(r) Philip. ii. 9, &c.

† The Words in the Original are three,———λυπεῖσθαι, ἐκθαμβεῖσθαι and ἀδημονεῖν. The firſt λυπεῖσθαι is of a known and ordinary Signification, but, in this Caſe, it is to be rais'd to the higheſt Degree of Significancy, as appears by the Words which follow, περίλυπός ἐστιν ἡ ψυχή μου ἕως θανάτου, Matth xxvi. 38. So that it does not only ſignify an Exceſs of Sorrow, ſurrounding and encompaſſing the Soul, but alſo ſuch, as brings a Conſternation and Dejection of Mind, bowing the Soul under the Preſſures and Burthen of it. The ſecond ἐκθαμβεῖσθαι, in the vulgar Latin, is pavere, but according to the Greek Idiom bears a much ſtronger Senſe, and ſignifies indeed the higheſt Degree of Fear, Horror, and Amazement. The third ἀδημονεῖν denotes the Conſequences of exceſſive Fear and Sorrow, i. e. Anxiety of Mind, Diſquietude, and Reſtleſſneſs. Pearſon, on the Creed.

(x) Scot's Mediator.

Prince of the World cometh (y) i. e. is now muſtering up his Legions, to make his laſt Effort upon me; but this is my Comfort, that he will find nothing in me, no ſinful Inclination to take part with him, no guilty Reflection to expoſe me to his Tyranny. 2dly, That, when the Diſciples enter'd the Garden with our Lord, he gave them a ſtrict Charge (z) to watch and pray, that they might not enter into Temptation; which plainly implies, that, in that Time and Place, there was ſome Occaſion for a more than ordinary Application to theſe Duties; and this cannot ſo well be imputed to any Thing elſe, as thoſe Numbers of evil Spirits, who were going furiouſly to aſſault their Maſter, and would not altogether ſpare them. And, 3dly, That, when the three elect Apoſtles were a little advanc'd with him into the Garden, he earneſtly intreated them to watch with him; and yet we find them ſuddenly aſleep, and, no ſooner awoke, but aſleep again, and again; for the Text tells us, (a) that their Eyes were heavy; which prodigious Drowſineſs of theirs, upon ſo momentous an Occaſion, cannot be aſcrib'd to any Thing ſo well, as to a preternatural Stupefaction of their Senſes, by ſome of theſe infernal Spirits now conflicting with their Maſter, and who perhaps, to deprive him of the Solace of their Company, did, by their diabolical Arts, produce that extraordinary Stupor, which oppreſſed them, that ſo, having him alone, they might have the greater Advantage to tempt and terrify him.

THESE Obſervations make it highly probable, that this his laſt Agony was occaſion'd by a mighty Struggle and Conflict with the Powers of Darkneſs, (b) who, having, by God's Permiſſion, muſtered up all their Strength, intended once more to try their Fortune againſt him, and, to this Purpoſe, ſurrounding him, very probably, with a mighty Hoſt, exerted all their Power and Malice, in perſecuting his innocent Soul; in diſtracting it with horrid Phantaſms; in afflicting it with diſmal Suggeſtions; in vexing and tormenting it with dire Imaginations, and dreadful Spectacles; and, in ſhort, in practiſing all the Arts and Machinations, that their Malice and Subtlety could invent, to tempt and deter him, if poſſible, from his gracious Deſign of redeeming Mankind.

The Quieſcence of the Divinity accounts for other Things relating to our Saviour.

(c) HAD our Lord indeed, in this Conflict, being aſſiſted with any Succour from his Divinity, this would have ſet him far above the Oppoſition of any created Power; but (that the ſecond Adam might make a Reparation for the Fall of the firſt, and, in that very Nature, left to itſelf, and, unaſſiſted by any foreign Aid, vanquiſh the Enemy, that had given it ſo grievous a Foil before) the Divine Perfections lay by, as it were, and forbore to engage: They withdrew their Influence for that Time, and, ſuſpending their Operation, left him to encounter, as Man, tho' much more perfect than any other Man.

PUTTING all theſe diſmal and diſtracting Things together then, the Apprehenſion of a cruel and ignominious Death, the Senſe of the Guilt and heinous Nature of Sin, the Proſpect of God's Wrath, the Combination of Devils, and the Suſpenſion of the Divine Power and Protection, we need not much wonder, that we find our Bleſſed Saviour in the Garden complaining, that his Soul was exceeding ſorrowful, even unto Death; or, on the Croſs, crying out, My God, my God, why haſt thou forſaken me? That we find him, in the Midſt of his Agony, ſweating out Blood in great Abundance; deprecating Death with more Vehemence, than ſome Heathen Sages, and many Chriſtian Martyrs did; and when his Spirits were thus depreſs'd, his Human Nature quite exhauſted, and no Relief from the Divine afforded him: That an Angel ſhould be ſent from Heaven to revive and ſtrengthen ſtrengthen him. For when the Divinity, which reſided in him, had either ſuſpended, or ſubtracted its Influence, he, who, in reſpect of his Manhood, (d) was made a little while inferior to the Angels, and, in reſpect of his Sufferings, was now in a more diſtreſs'd Condition, than ever Man knew, being left to his Human Nature alone, could not but ſtand in need of the Comfort and Conſolation of an Angel.

All this while the Divine Nature of Chriſt (tho' it did not think fit to exert itſelf) (e) was inſeparably united to the Human; nor can we conceive, why it ſhould not ſtill continue, even after Death, in the ſame Manner united, ſince no Power has any Force againſt Omnipotence, nor could any finite Agent work any Alteration in that Union. To underſtand the Nature of this Union, we muſt obſerve, (f) that in the Perſon of Chriſt, after the Aſſumption of our Nature, there were two different ſubſtantial Unions; one, of the two Parts of his Humanity, his Soul and Body, whereby he was truly Man; and the other, of his Divine and Human Nature, whereby he was both God and Man in one Perſon; and that, tho' at his Death the conſtituent Parts of him as Man, i. e. his Human Soul and Body were parted, and ſo continu'd for ſome Time, yet the Union of his two Natures ſtill remain'd; * Death made no Alteration in that, nor were his Soul and Body ever ſeparated from the Godhead, but, as the Divine Nature ſtill ſubſiſted, they ſtill continu'd in Conjunction with it: Upon which Account, as we are taught to believe, that God redeem'd us with his Blood, ſo has it been the conſtant Language of the Church, that God died for us, which in no Senſe could be true, unleſs our Bleſſed Saviour's Soul and Body, in the Inſtant of Separation, and until their Conjunction again, were united to the Deity. And therefore, when we hear him crying upon the Croſs, (g) My God, my God, why haſt thou forſaken me? He means the ſame Thing, as when he calls upon us to (h) behold, and ſee, if there be any Sorrow like unto my Sorrow. For from the Words we can infer no more than this,——that he was then bereft of ſuch Joys and Comforts as he expected from the Deity, to aſſuage and mitigate the Acerbity of the Torments, he was under. The Truth is, what ſeems to ſolve all Difficulties beſt, is the antient Notion of the Godhead's being quieſcent, and not exerting its Power and Efficacy in ſuch Inſtances, where the Humanity is known to have ſuffer'd. In this Manner, it confeſſedly withdrew at his Death; otherwiſe we cannot ſee how he could have dy'd at all; and in this Manner, by Parity of Reaſon, it might continue its Quieſcence, during the whole Space of his Interment, and until its Power and Operation were requiſite, in order to effect his Reſurrection.

Why he pray'd againſt what was coming upon him.

As our Bleſſed Saviour then was both God and Man in one Perſon, and the Efficacy and Myſtery of Man's Redemption conſiſted in this Union; (i) it was neceſſary, that there ſhould be a clear and undoubted Demonſtration given of the Reality of both theſe Natures. But, ſince the diſtinguiſhing Marks of Human Nature lie chiefly in the Soul, there had not been that Demonſtration given of our Saviour's perfect Humanity, unleſs he had diſcover'd, in his Conduct, an exact Reſemblance to us, in all the natural Paſſions, and Inclinations Inclinations of our Souls. Now, in this Soul of ours, there is a twofold Principle, Senſe and Reaſon. Senſe catches at the preſent; purſues Eaſe and Safety; and induſtriouſly conſults the Preſervation and Advantage of the Body; whereas Reaſon enlarges our Proſpect; takes into Conſideration diſtant and future Objects; and perſuades the foregoing ſome Satisfactions, the running ſome Hazards, and enduring ſome Difficulties in the Diſcharge of our Duty, and the Expectation of a greater Good in Reverſion. Under the former of theſe are comprehended all our natural Paſſions, which are the ſecret Springs, that move us to what we do; under the latter are the Underſtanding and Judgment, which direct, and regulate, and bound, and overrule theſe Paſſions. But ſtill both theſe are conſtituent Parts, and as neceſſary to make a perfect Soul, as the rational Soul and human Body are to make one perfect Man; and from hence it follows, that the Weakneſs and Corruption of our Nature (as it ſtands deprav'd by Sin) does not conſiſt in our being tenderly touch'd with the Fear of preſent Evil, or the Deſire of preſent Good, but only in ſuffering theſe Fears and Deſires to prevail, and take place, againſt the Dictates of Reaſon and Duty.

Aversion to Pain and Conflict, to Sorrow and Death, and whatever is ſhocking and frightful to human Nature, are Affections interwoven with our original Frame and Conſtitution. Adam, in his State of Innocence, felt them; and therefore, it is no juſt Reflection upon the ſecond Adam, that he, in like Manner, felt them too. Infirmities indeed, theſe Averſions may be called, in Compariſon of thoſe Perfections, which belong to God, and unbodied Spirits; but then they are ſuch Infirmities, as all, who partake of Bodies, muſt have, and which if our Saviour had been deſtitute of, he could not have been truly Man.

From Matth. xx. 10. to the End, Mark xi. 15. to the End, Luke xix. 45. to the End, and John xii. 19. to the End.

Now, if Chriſt, as Man, could not be altogether indifferent and unconcern'd at ſuch ſevere Trials, as the Impoſition of the Burthen of our Sins, the Infliction of Pain and Torment, his approaching Conflict with the Powers of Darkneſs, and the utter Subduction of all Divine Aid and Aſſiſtance, muſt neceſſarily bring upon him; then ſurely it could not miſbecome him, to uſe all poſſible Means for declining them, and, conſequently, to expreſs his Concern by praying againſt them, but with this modeſt Reſerve and Limitation, (k) Nevertheleſs not my Will, but thine be done. For it was no Diſparagement either of his Obedience to God, or Love to Mankind, that he had an Averſion to Death, and Pain, and Sufferings, but, in Truth, an higher Commendation to both, ſince, notwithſtanding ſo tender a Senſe of what he was to ſuffer, he offer'd himſelf to undergo whatever God, for their Benefit and Salvation, ſhould think proper to lay upon him. So that the more paſſionate his Wiſhes were for a Releaſe, the more meritorious was his Submiſſion; and the ſtronger his Averſions were, the more was the Reſignation of his own Will, and, conſequently, the more acceptable was his Compliance with that of his Heavenly Father.

Why God would not diſcharge Mankind without his dying for them.

His Heavenly Father, no doubt, could (l) have exempted Mankind from Puniſhment, without an equivalent Compenſation for their Guilt. As an All-wiſe Being, he could have invented many Methods of Salvation, without the Sacrifice of his beloved Son; and, as a ſupreme Lawgiver, he might have extended Mercy to whom, and upon what Terms, he thought fit: But then, as he was the ſupreme Lawgiver, and Governor of the World, it was conſiſtent with his Juſtice, and his infinite Wiſdom, we may ſay, requir'd it of him, to vindicate the Authority of his Laws, and to ſee Sin puniſh'd, in ſuch an exemplary Manner, as to deter, if poſſible, his Subjects from it for the future.

Now this was the State and Condition of Mankind, when God's infinite Wiſdom contriv'd contriv'd the Scheme of their Redemption. They had alienated themſelves from him; were under Sin, under Condemnation, under the Curſe of the Law, under the Sentence of Death. In this Condition however they were not to be left to periſh; God's infinite Goodneſs would not permit that: But then, how to accompliſh their Recovery, and preſerve his Attributes inviolate, this was the Difficulty. For how, in Conſiſtence with the Glory, and Juſtice, and Sanctity of God, could ſuch Enemies be reconciled, and ſuch Offenders pardon'd? Would omnipotent Majeſty think of any Treaty, without an Advocate and Interceſſor? Would the ſovereign Ruler of the World ſuffer his Honour to be ſlighted, without a proper Vindication? Would the great Patron of Juſtice relax the Terms of it, and permit Wickedneſs to paſs unpuniſh'd? Would the God of Truth reverſe his Decree, and ſtop the Sentence of Death from falling upon Sinners? Or would the God of Righteouſneſs omit any Opportunity of expreſſing the Love he bore to Innocence, and Abhorrence to Iniquity? How then could we well be clear'd from our Guilt, without an Expiation; or reinſtated in Freedom, without a Ranſom; or exempted from Condemnation, without ſome vicarious Puniſhment? No, God was pleaſ'd ſo to proſecute his Deſigns of Goodneſs and Mercy, as not in the leaſt to impair and obſcure, but rather advance and illuſtrate the Glories of his ſovereign Dignity, of his ſevere Juſtice, of his immaculate Holineſs, and Immutability both in Word and Purpoſe.

He was willing to liſten to a Treaty, but from the Mouth of no Mediator, but ſuch as was of equal Dignity with himſelf. He was willing to remit the Puniſhment due to our Sins, but not without a Sacrifice, that would make full Atonement for them. He was willing to give us back our Lives again, but not without a Subſtitution of another Life equivalent to them all. But now, how could theſe Things be done? Where could we find a Mediator, proper and worthy to intercede for us, and to negotiate a new Covenant, whereby God might be ſatisfy'd, and we ſav'd? Who could offer for us a Sacrifice, of Value ſufficient to atone for Sins, ſo vaſtly numerous, and all committed againſt infinite Majeſty? Or who could undertake for the everlaſting Redemption of all the Souls, ſince the firſt Creation, and lay down a competent Price for them? Nothing on Earth, nothing in Heaven was found able to do this.

Man, the moſt innocent and upright Man, could, by no Means redeem his Brother, or give to God a Ranſom for him. Angels have Obligations enough of their own to diſcharge, and cannot be ſolvent for any more, than the Debt of their own Gratitude and Praiſe. The brighteſt of that heavenly Hoſt cannot, over and above this, make Compenſation for one human Sin; but, for the Sins of the whole World united, there was no Propitiation to be found, until the Son of God offer'd himſelf, and was accepted by the Father. Our Humanity he aſſum'd, to enable him to ſuffer, and intereſt us in what he did; but the Divinity, which he had with the Father from the Beginning, this he brought with him, to derive an infinite Value upon his Sufferings, and to make the Ranſom and Oblation, which he paid down for us, a full Satisfaction for Sins innumerable, and infinitely heinous.

That his Death was equivalent to the Puniſhment, which the Sins of all Mankind deſerv'd.

In the Expiation of theſe Sins, we own, that the Puniſhment, which our Saviour ſubmitted to, was but temporal, whereas that, to which Sinners are obnoxious, is eternal; but for that ſeveral good Reaſons may be alledg'd. The Author to the Hebrews, in his Compariſon between the Levitical and Chriſtian Diſpenſations, tells us, that (m) ſuch an High-Prieſt became us, who is holy, harmleſs, undefiled, ſeparate from Sinners, and who needed not daily, (as the High-Prieſts under the Law) to offer up Sacrifices, firſt for his own Sins, and then for thoſe of the People; ſo that what qualify'd him to offer a Sacrifice for the Sins of Mankind was his perfect Innocence; for had he been, in any Degree, a Sinner himſelf, he muſt have ſuffer'd for, his own Offences, and, conſequently, been incapable of effecting an Expiation for ours.

(n) Now, if our Bleſſed Saviour was entirely innocent and holy, it was impoſſible that he ſhould ſuffer the ſame Puniſhments, which, by the juſt Decree of God, are due to wilful and impenitent Sinners. (o) He could not do it in his Body; for that could only die by what he ſuffer'd on the Croſs: And he could not do it in his Soul; for how could that Soul, which knew no Sin, be under a Remorſe of Conſcience for any Thing, that he had done? How could he, (p) who, for the Joy that was ſet before him, endured the Croſs, lie under any Senſe of God's unchangeable Diſpleaſure? Or he, who knew that (q) his Soul ſhould not be left in Hades, nor his Body ſee Corruption, be ſeiz'd with an abſolute Deſpair of any better State, or an uneaſy Apprehenſion of no Releaſe from what he was to ſuffer? The Puniſhments of the Damn'd are without End, and without Hope: But everlaſting Miſery and Deſpair could never be conſiſtent with the Condition of one, who had not deſerv'd them, and whoſe Innocence ſecur'd and preſerv'd him from them. Theſe are the Conſequences of Sin and Rebellion againſt God: But the Sufferings of Jeſus were the greateſt Proof of an entire Obedience, in the moſt difficult Inſtance of Submiſſion, and ſo far from incurring the Divine Diſpleaſure, that, for this very Cauſe, (r) God hath highly exalted him.

But tho', from the Nature and Reaſon of the Thing, it appears, that our Lord neither did, nor could ſuffer ſuch Puniſhments, in Kind and Meaſure, as were due to Sinners; yet it muſt be obſerv'd, that he underwent ſuch Things, as bore ſome Analogy to what Sinners are to ſuffer, and what he would not have ſuffer'd, had he not been puniſh'd for our Trangreſſions.

(s) For, whereas Sinners lie under the Sentence of Condemnation, and are ſure to find a publick exemplary Judgment; ſo was our Saviour ſolemnly condemn'd and ſentenc'd as a Malefactor, a ſeditious Perſon, a Perverter of the Nation, a Rebel againſt Cæſar, and a Blaſphemer againſt GOD. Whereas Sinners will be expos'd to Shame and Ignominy, at the great Day of Judgment, before Men and Angels; ſo our Lord ſuffer'd a very ſhameful and ignominious Death, and that, attended with all the Mockeries, Affronts, and Obloquies, that the Malice of his Enemies could caſt upon him. And whereas Sinners are obnoxious to very grievous Torments both of Body and Soul, and theſe inflicted by the Hand of an enrag'd God; ſo, in his Perſon, our Lord ſuffered a Death, painful to ſuch a Degree, as to make the moſt exquiſite Tortures be called Cruciatus, from the Croſs; and, in his Mind, ſuch a Load of Grief and Anguiſh, as might well juſtify the mournful Complaint of the Prophet, (t) All ye, that paſs by, behold, and ſee, if there be any Sorrow like unto my Sorrow, wherewith the Lord hath afflicted me, in the Day of his fierce Anger.

Now, from this fair Reſemblance between what our Lord actually ſuffer'd, and what Sinners had deſerv'd to ſuffer, there ſeems to be ſufficient Ground to ſay, that he bore the Puniſhment of our Iniquities, and ſuffer'd in our Stead; tho' what he underwent was not, in every Point, the ſame, that we (had it not been for his Interpoſition) muſt have been oblig'd to ſuffer.

(u) All that was requiſite indeed in his Sufferings was, that the Injuries, and Affronts, Affronts, offer'd to the Divine Juſtice, by the Provocation of wicked Men, ſhould receive a ſufficient Compenſation; that the Honour of God and his Laws ſhould be vindicated; and Sin made as terrible, and full of Diſcouragement, as it could poſſibly be, tho' no ſuch Method of Mercy had ever been deviſ'd. Now all theſe Ends were fully ſatisfy'd by the Son of God condeſcending to ſuffer in our Stead; and, if there was any Thing wanting in the Duration, or Extremity of his Sufferings, That was abundantly made up by the Dignity of the Perſon, who through the eternal Spirit, i. e. the Divine united to our Human Nature, (x) offered himſelf without Spot to God, and, in Virtue of that Union, exalted the Value of his Oblation to an infinite Degree, and paid a Ranſom to offended Juſtice of more Worth, than an hundred Thouſand Worlds.

The Aggravation of Judas's Sin.

But, how great ſoever the Benefit was which accru'd to Mankind from the Death of our Saviour Chriſt, there is no apologizing for thoſe, that were the bloody Inſtruments of it, and leaſt of all for Judas. For, beſides the Aggravation of his being a Diſciple, a Friend, a conſtant Companion, one, that had been taught and ſuſtain'd by him, and not only an Hearer of his Doctrine, and an Eye-Witneſs of his Miracles, but, in Virtue of the Commiſſion receiv'd from him, a Preacher of the Goſpel, and a Worker of Miracles himſelf; beſides all this, I ſay, 'tis evident, that his Wickedneſs was not the Effect of a ſudden Surprize, or Want of Recollection, but the Work of Deliberation, and long Contrivance, and ſolemn Debate. For he conſulted with the High-Prieſts and Elders, concerning the Time, the Place, and every Circumſtance, for the moſt convenient Execution of his Villainy. After ſuch Conſultation, he continu'd his Attendance upon his Maſter, that, under the Diſguiſe of Friendſhip, and by much labour'd Hypocriſy, he might better carry on his Deſign to deſtroy him; and, as his Deſign was advancing to Maturity, he had all along had broad Hints and Monitions given him, that his Plot was diſcover'd, and many Warnings of the Sin and Danger, he was running into, but none of theſe alter'd his Purpoſe. So that, in this Act of his, there is a Complication of Ingratitude and Perfidy, Hypocriſy and Malice, and a ſettled inflexible Reſolution to do wickedly, beyond the Power of Advice and Warning, and the moſt awful Menaces to controul it: And this might be ſome Reaſon, why his Repentance met not with Succeſs, as it is evident it did not, from our Lord's calling him (y) the Son of Perdition, and declaring, that (z) it had been better for him, if he had never been born.

The Invalidity of his Repentance.

(a) The Evangeliſts indeed tell us, (b) that he repented himſelf, but then it is evident, that by repenting is not every where intended a Change of Heart and Life; nor the whole of that, which Repentance ſtrictly ſignifies, when made the Condition of Pardon and Salvation, but only ſome Part and imperfect Degree of it. Judas found that Matters were grown to ſo deſperate an Height, that there was no probable Appearance of his Maſter's eſcaping the Malice of the Jews; and recollected, very likely, the Predictions of our Lord, concerning the dreadful Vengeance, which ſhould overtake the Perſon, that betray'd him to Death. Theſe, and probably many other dreadful Reflections, working together with all that Confuſion, which Fear and Guilt are known to create in Men's Minds, ſeem to have made up that Concern, which the Text hath expreſs'd by repenting himſelf; a Concern, reſulting from a Principle of Self-Preſervation, in the moſt carnal Senſe of the Word: But we find not in him any due Senſe of the Villainy of the Fact, nor any condemning himſelf, as the baſeſt, the moſt ungrateful, the moſt abandon'd Wretch

Wretch alive; one, that had violated the Laws of God, and Society, and Nature, and caſt all Fidelity, and Gratitude, and common Humanity behind his Back. All which, and a great deal more, were not only Aggravations due to his Crime, but the very propereſt Occaſions of Remorſe.

He felt indeed ſome Regret for what he had done, (as an awaken'd Conſcience cannot fence off ſuch Reflections) and he wiſh'd perhaps he had never done it: But the Regret, which he felt, ſeems rather to have been the Effect of Confuſion and Rage, than any godly Relenting; the Agonies of Frenzy, and Amazement, and Deſpair, which are the moſt diſtant Things in the World from that ſober and regular Sorrow, (c) which worketh Repentance unto Salvation, not to be repented of.

And upon what Account it was ſo.

Herein then lay the Defect of Judas's Repentance, that the Horror of his Sin led him into Deſpair. For Repentance, we muſt know, does not barely conſiſt in Sorrow for Sin, but in ſuch a Sorrow, as is temper'd, and ſupported with Hope; not in a mere Confeſſion of our Tranſgreſſions, but in ſuch a Confeſſion, as truſts and depends on Forgiveneſs; and, as it imports a Change of Manners, unleſs we are firſt perſuaded that our ſincere Endeavours for the future will be kindly receiv'd, and our former Tranſgreſſions generouſly paſs'd over, all Ground and Encouragement for ſuch a Change is utterly taken away.

Reason indeed cannot lead us to infer, that Sorrow for the paſt, or Amendment for the Time to come, can be any equivalent Satisfaction for our Offences; but Revelation aſſures us, that God may be appeas'd, and it hath told us withal, in what Manner he is appeas'd, even by the precious Blood of his Son, who came to give his Life a Ranſom for many. In this Matter God hath declar'd himſelf ſo fully, that the very Heinouſneſs of our Sins is not a greater Provocation, than the Diſtruſt of Mercy (which, in Effect, is making God a Lyar, and diſparaging the Merits of Chriſt's Sacrifice) after we have committed them. So that, Hope of Mercy, and Faith in the Promiſes, and Satisfaction of Chriſt, are the very Life and Spirit of true Repentance, eſſential, and indiſpenſably requiſite, to quicken and recommend every Part of it. And therefore no Wonder, if Judas's Repentance prov'd ſo ineffectual, which was plainly deſtitute of theſe neceſſary Qualifications.

If it be enquir'd, how Judas came to be wanting in this Point? The immediate Cauſe, no Queſtion, was, that God had forſaken him, and withdrawn his Grace from him. But then, if we purſue this Enquiry ſtill farther, and drive it up to its true Fountain-Head, the Matter will fall upon Judas himſelf, as the proper and original Cauſe of his own Miſery and Deſtruction.

Judas's Crime not neceſſitated.

For, whatever we may think of the Doctrine of Predeſtination, 'tis certain, that the miſerable Judas was not aware of any Power in it to ſuſtain his Mind, when he came to reflect on what he had done. He could not interpret, that the Fore-knowledge of God had any Cauſality, or Influence upon his Sins, becauſe he found Cauſe enough for that ariſing from his own Deportment: (d) For, having given way to a covetous Deſire, and harden'd his Heart by a ſinful Indulgence of it againſt all Impreſſions of wholſome Counſel, he was convinc'd, that the Prophecy of his Treaſon could not fail of its Event, becauſe, when the Temptation offer'd, he could not chuſe but do what he did. He had indeed loſt all his Power and Liberty to do better, tho' ſtill the Neceſſity, which he then lay under, was not fatal, but natural; not of God's decreeing, but of his own procuring. Under theſe juſter Apprehenſions of his Crime, he is ſaid to have repented, in the worſt Senſe of the Word, i. e. he griev'd, he deſpair'd, and then he hang'd himſelf: And tho' we allow, that his Paſſions tranſported him too extravagantly in theſe theſe latter Violences, yet, even from what was rational in his Grief, we may learn this Leſſon, —— "That, when "an awaken'd Conſcience comes to "eſtimate the Nature of its Guilt, there "will be found but poor Shelter in all "thoſe Palliations, that can be form'd "by human Subtlety, and licentious "Wit."

The Aggravations of St Peter's Crime.

The Aggravations of St Peter's Offence, in denying our Lord, are much of the ſame Kind with that of Judas in betraying him. That a Perſon, who, for the Space of three Years, and more, had the Honour of our Lord's Converſation, the Conviction of his Miracles, and the Inſtruction of his Doctrine; who had been let into the Knowledge of thoſe Myſteries, which, for wiſe Reaſons, were deliver'd in Parables, and concealed from others; admitted to his Transfiguration upon the Mount, his Converſe with Moſes and Elias, and to hear that Voice from God's excellent Glory, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleaſed (e), as himſelf teſtifies; that a Perſon, who, hereupon, had made Confeſſion of his Maſter's Divinity, and receiv'd his Commendations for it; had been choſen a Companion of his Agonies, and forewarn'd frequently of the great Danger of denying him; and hereupon grown ſo very reſolute, that he offer'd (f) to go with him into Priſon, and to Death, and, to diſtinguiſh himſelf above any of his Brethren, (g) Tho' all ſhould be offended, ſays he, becauſe of thee, yet will not I be offended, and tho' I were to die with thee, yet would not I deny thee: That a Perſon, I ſay, plac'd in this Rank and Elevation, ſhould fall off in the Time of Trial; ſhould deny and abjure his Maſter, whoſe greateſt Honour it was to own, implies a Guilt ſtill more heinous, the more his Knowledge and former Conviction, the more his Warning and long Experience, the more his Profeſſions and boaſted Firmneſs of Mind were conſpicuous.

The Difference between him and Judas.

This however may be ſaid with Relation to the Difference between the Crime of Judas, and that of St Peter, that the former proceeded from a Spirit of Malice, and fix'd Reſolution to do Evil, occaſion'd by a ſordid and covetous Temper: that it was nouriſh'd up by long Contrivance and Deliberation, was carry'd on by Hypocriſy and deep Diſſimulation, was executed with Perfidy and great Violence, and ended, at laſt, in the Agonies of Horror and Deſpair; whereas St Peter's Crime (tho' a very great one) was but of a ſhort Continuance, and never in his Intention at firſt; was indeed the Effect of Fear and human Infirmity, occaſion'd, in a great Meaſure, by Surprize, and Want of Recollection; not ſo much the Act of the Man, as it was the Force of the Temptation he was under; and therefore, when he (h) came to remember the Words, which Jeſus had ſaid unto him, and thereupon to conſider, how ſhamefully he had fallen from his Courage and Conſtancy; how eaſily he had been betray'd into a Crime, he thought himſelf not capable of; how baſe he had been to ſo kind a Maſter, how falſe to his Promiſes, how regardleſs of Truth, how peremptory in a moſt notorious Falſhood, and how profane and profligate in his Oaths and Curſes; when he came to conſider all this, I ſay, a godly Sorrow ſwell'd his Heart, and Tears guſh'd out of his Eyes: He went out and wept bitterly.

The Sincerity of St Peter's Repentance.

JUDAS, in like Manner, might weep for his Tranſgreſſion perhaps, but his Tears muſt have been ineffectual, becauſe the Seaſon of that Grace, which he had long reſiſted and defeated, was departed from him, and God provok'd to give him over to his own Perverſeneſs; whereas our Saviour, who foreſaw from what Principle St Peter's Offence would ariſe, and how ſudden his Converſion would be, (i) had prayed for him, that his Faith might not fail, and thence his Recovery did proceed. We ſhould be injurious however to the Memory of this Apoſtle, if we ſhould here neglect to relate how his After-behaviour ſhew'd the Sincerity of his Repentance, and made an ample Amends for the Scandal of his Offence.

(k) It was this ſame St Peter, who, after our Lord's Reſurrection, return'd to the Fervour of Affection, for which he was remarkable before; that ſo exerted himſelf at the Day of (l) Pentecoſt, and prov'd, by irrefragable Arguments, that Jeſus Chriſt was the Son of God; that maintain'd his Point againſt the Jewiſh Rulers, (m) deſpiſing their Rebukes, and angry Menaces, and telling them plainly, (n) that God was to be obeyed rather than Man; that confirm'd his Brethren by his reſolute Behaviour, and (o) made it a Matter of rejoicing, that he was accounted worthy to ſuffer Shame for the once-abjur'd Name of Chriſt. In a Word, 'twas he, who, after a long Labour of preaching, and Perſecutions of all Kind, at length finiſh'd his Courſe, and glorify'd God by the ſame Sort of Death, that his Bleſſed Son condeſcended to undergo for our Sakes. So that St Peter was not more different from himſelf, when trembling at the Voice of a ſilly Damſel, than the ſame St Peter afterwards, the glorious and invincible Apoſtle, before the Council, in Priſon, and upon the Croſs, was from the cowardly and infamous Renegade, in the High-Prieſt's Palace. This ſettled and deliberate Fidelity was a noble Compenſation for the Infirmity and Tranſports of this Fall. This ſhew'd what the Man was, when perfectly himſelf, and ſupported by the Grace of God, as the other did, what he was, when naked, and deſtitute of heavenly Succours, depending upon his own Strength, and left in the Hand of his own Paſſions.

The Caſe of the penitent Thief every Way extraordinary.

St PAUL (p) repreſents our Saviour, as a merciful High-Prieſt, becauſe he was touched with a Feeling of our Infirmities; and as it is natural for us to compaſſionate thoſe, that are in the ſame State of Miſery with ourſelves, ſo might our Lord, from the Society of ſuffering, be induc'd, at this Time, to admit the Penitent upon the Croſs into a Participation of Bliſs, who, at another Time, would not have met with ſo ready a Reception. (q) It might therefore be no ſmall Advantage to the penitent Thief, that he happen'd to die in Company with Chriſt, tho' it is certain, that the good Diſpoſition, which he diſcover'd in his Behaviour and Confeſſion, was enough to recommend him to the Divine Mercy.

'Tis highly probable, that this Man never knew any Thing of Jeſus before, otherwiſe than by common Fame; nay, that he was prepoſſeſs'd againſt him, as an Impoſtor, and join'd with his Companion in reviling him at firſt; and therefore the greater was his Virtue in overcoming theſe Prejudices ſo ſoon, and in ſuffering the Meekneſs and Patience, the Charity and Piety of our Lord's miraculous Death to diſabuſe him. This is ſo far from making him a late Penitent, that it gives him the Glory of an early Convert; one, whoſe Heart was open to the firſt Impreſſion of Grace, and wanted not ſo much the Inclination, as the Opportunity of embracing the Truth before.

But, admitting that he had ſeen and heard of Chriſt before, yet, that he ſhould now come in to the Acknowledgment of him, and believe him to be the Saviour of the World, when one of his Diſciples had betray'd, another had deny'd, and all of them had forſook him; and to be the Son of God, and Lord of Life, when he was hanging on the Croſs, ſuffering the Pangs of Death, and ſeemingly deſerted by his Father: That he ſhould take Sanctuary in a dying and univerſally deſpis'd Man, publiſh his Innocence in the Face of triumphant Malice, and, through the thickeſt Cloud of Shame and Suffering, that ever intercepted the Glories of the Son of God, diſcover his Divine Power, acknowledge his celeſtial Kingdom, throw himſelf upon his Protection, and call upon him, as the great Diſpoſer of Rewards and Happineſs after Death. This was a Confeſſion ſo reſolute, ſo ſingular, ſo illuſtrious, as never was out-done, as never can, in all Reſpects, be equalled, except the ſame Jeſus were again to be crucify'd: For no Man's Converſion ever had, ever can have, upon other Terms, ſuch diſadvantageous and diſcouraging Circumſtances, as this Man labour'd under, and yet ſo generouſly overcame.

And therefore no Encouragement to a late Repentance.

WELL therefore might (r) St Chryſoſtom (as he does with great Force and Eloquence) rebuke the Impudence of thoſe late Penitents, who preſume to take Sanctuary in this Example: For what Affinity, what Shadow of Reſemblance is there, between a Man ſubmitting to the firſt Impreſſion, and accepting of Offers, as ſoon as made; and one, who has liv'd under the Miniſtry of the Goſpel, and enjoy'd both the outward Calls of God's Word, and the inward Sollicitations of his Spirit, but turn'd the deaf Ear continually to both? Between a Man, who to our Lord paid the higheſt Degree of Homage and Reſpect, even when he had made himſelf of no Reputation, and appear'd in the Guiſe of the vileſt Malefactor; and one, who, notwithſtanding his Reſurrection from the Dead, and Exaltation to Glory, notwithſtanding the Conqueſt made by the Goſpel, and the Infamy of denying him now, continues ſtill to injure and affront, to deſpiſe and defy him in his moſt proſperous and triumphant Condition?

IN a Word, no Chriſtian, who hath liv'd under the Diſpenſation of the Goſpel, can, at the End of his Days, plead the ſame ready Compliance to the Calls of Grace, and no Man whatever can have the Opportunity of exerting the ſame vigorous Faith; becauſe Chriſt could die but once, and 'twas his Shame and Suffering alone, that made the Confeſſion of this Penitent ſo peculiarly glorious, and ſuch, as the whole Series of a pious Life in other Men can hardly parallel. So that, if we are allow'd to make any uſe, or to draw any Conſolation from this Example, it can be no more than this,—— That Repentance, when true, is never too late, and therefore the Thief upon the Croſs is a ſovereign Antidote againſt Deſpair. But Men may out-ſtay the Day of Grace: They may not go about the Work, until it is too late; until they have loſt both the Will and the Power to repent; and therefore this Example, when truly conſider'd, is an excellent Preſervative likewiſe againſt Preſumption.

Jeremiah not falſly quoted by St Matthew, prov'd ſeveral Ways.

IT may be deem'd perhaps ſome Miſtake in the Evangeliſt, or rather a Diſparagement to the Holy Spirit, by whoſe Direction, we ſay, it was he wrote, that St Matthew cites Jeremiah for a Paſſage, which no where occurs, but in the Prophet Zechariah; but then it ſhould be prov'd, that St Matthew does actually cite Jeremiah. (s) In moſt of the Latin and Greek Copies indeed, we have the Word Jeremiah at preſent, but it is much to be queſtion'd, whether it was in the Original, ſince the Syriack and Perſick Verſions mention no Name, but barely the Prophet; and thoſe Copies (in (t) St Auſtin's Opinion) are moſt to be rely'd on, which have not the Name of Jeremiah inſerted in them, becauſe this might poſſibly proceed from the Ignorance, or Careleſſneſs of ſome Tranſcriber. (u) Some of our modern Reconcilers have another Way of accounting for this. They endeavour to prove, (x) from the Writings of the Jewiſh Rabbins, that, both before, under, and after the ſecond Temple, the Order of the ſacred Books was ſeveral Times tranſpos'd, and that, in the Time, when St Matthew wrote his Goſpel, the Book of Jeremiah, (as does now that of Iſaiah) ſtood firſt in the Volume of Prophets, and ſo became the running Title of all the reſt. For, that that the firſt Book in a Volume may give the Name to the reſt, is obvious, ſay they, from the Words of our Saviour's telling his Diſciples, that (y) all Things muſt be fulfilled, which were written in the Law of Moſes, and in the Prophets, and in the Pſalms, concerning him: Where, by the Word Pſalms, he means all the Hagiographa, conſiſting of Hymns to God, and Documents of Life, and are all ſo called, becauſe, in that Part of the Diviſion of the Old Teſtament, they had obtain'd the firſt Place.

BUT, as there are no Words cited, in the like Manner, from any other Prophet in the whole New Teſtament, (z) others have imagin'd, that the Paſſage, which St Matthew quotes, was originally in the authentick Copies of Jeremiah, but that, by the Malice of the Jews, it was eras'd, becauſe it was look'd upon as too plain a Prophecy of this Circumſtance of our Saviour's Life; or rather, that it was recorded in a certain Apocryphal Book of Jeremiah's, from whence St Matthew took it. That there was ſuch a Book extant is evident from the Teſtimony of St Jerom (a), who expreſsly tells us, that he read the very Words, here quoted, in an Hebrew Volume, communicated to him by a Jew of the Nazarene Sect: And, that it was no Diſparagement to cite an Apocryphal Book, is manifeſt from the Practice of the Apoſtles, who make mention (b) of Jannes and Jambres, tho' they no where occur in Canonical Scripture; who quote (c) the Prophecy of Enoch, though generally reputed an Apocryphal Book; nay, and produce the Sayings of Aratus (d), Epimenides (e), and Euripides (f), tho' theſe were profane Heathen Authors: For tho' ſuch Books, ſay they, were not receiv'd into the Canon, yet they might nevertheleſs contain ſuch Truths, as were worthy of Belief.

THOSE however, who have compar'd the Writings of theſe two Prophets together, have obſerv'd, that Zechariah was ſo cloſe an Imitator of Jeremiah, as to give juſt Occaſion for the Saying of the Jews, viz. that the Spirit of Jeremy had paſſed into Zechary, and ſo, both together, made but one Prophet: And from hence others have concluded, that the ixth, xth, and xith Chapters of Zechariah were not wrote by him, but by Jeremiah, tho' at preſent they go under the other's Name. The Book of Pſalms we know, tho' the whole Collection be called David's, contains many Pieces, that were not of his Compoſition. In that of Proverbs, there are ſeveral wiſe Sentences (beſides thoſe of Solomon) aſcrib'd to (g) Agur, the Son of Jaketh, and to (h) the Mother of King Lemuel; and, by Parity of Reaſon, theſe Chapters of Zechariah might originally have been written by the Prophet Jeremiah, though, in Proceſs of Time, they happen'd to creep in among the Works of his great Imitator.

AND indeed, whoever looks into the Contents of theſe Chapters will ſoon perceive, that ſuch Things are related in them, as are inconſiſtent with the Time, wherein Zechariah liv'd, but very well agree with that of Jeremiah: That what he ſays (for Inſtance) (i) of the Pride of Aſſyria being brought down, and the Scepter of Egypt being departed, could not be foretold by him, becauſe theſe Events were then paſs'd and gone, but might very well be predicted by Jeremiah; that what he ſays (k) of Gaza and Aſkelon, as Cities then in Being, could not be recorded of him, foraſmuch as theſe Places were deſtroy'd long before his Days, but might properly enough be mention'd by Jeremiah, becauſe, in his Time, they were ſubſiſting; and that the Earthquake (l), which he alludes to, in the Days of Uzziah, was of too diſtant a Date to be remember'd in his Time, tho' it is not unlikely, that Tradition might have tranſmitted the Report of it down, as far as the Days of Jeremiah.

If then there be found in Zechariah Things inconſiſtent with his Time, but ſuch as comported very well with the Period, wherein Jeremiah liv'd, 'tis natural to think, that, tho' the whole Book went under another's Name, yet ſtill ſuch Parts of it as contain'd thoſe Things, muſt have been wrote by a Perſon, with whom they were co-incident, and that therefore St Matthew is ſo far from committing any Blunder, that he makes a very valuable Diſcovery, in aſcribing the Prophecy now before us to its proper Author.

How our Lord might be able to drive the Buyers and Sellers out of the Temple.

THUS, take it which Way we will, we cannot juſtly accuſe the Evangeliſt of any Miſ-quotation, and much leſs can we charge him with any Miſ-repreſentation of a Matter of Fact, in his making our Bleſſed Lord able enough to drive all the Buyers and Sellers out of the Temple. St Jerom, (m) indeed, reckons this one of the greateſt Miracles, that ever our Saviour did, and imputes his Ability to do it to a certain Divine Majeſty, which, at that Time, appear'd in his Looks, and ſtruck the Company with ſuch a reverential Awe and Reſpect to his Perſon, as reſtrain'd them from making any Oppoſition: But, without having recourſe to any Thing miraculous in this Tranſaction, we need only remember, that our Lord was juſt now come up from Bethany to Jeruſalem in a Sort of Royal and Triumphant Proceſſion; that he was attended, on the Road, and into the City, with (n) a very great Multitude, nay, with Multitudes, that went before, and followed after; that theſe all went along with him into the Temple, and proclaim'd (as they had done on the Road) Hoſanna to the Son of David; and that the Concourſe, in ſhort, was ſo great, that (o) all the City was moved, and even the Chief-Prieſts were afraid of him, and of the People too, becauſe they took him for a Prophet, and (p) were attentive to hear him.

NOW it is no hard Matter to imagine, that the People, ſeeing our Saviour proceed to the Temple in this triumphant Manner, might ſeaſonably enough call to mind the Prediction of the Prophet Malachi, (q) The Lord whom ye ſeek, ſhall ſuddenly come to his Temple, even the Meſſenger of the Covenant, in whom ye delight, and he ſhall purify the Sons of Levi, that they may offer to the Lord an Offering of Righteouſneſs; and that, from the Remembrance of this Prophecy, they might be encourag'd to abet his Reformation of the Temple. (r) Nor is it to be doubted, but that a Conſciouſneſs of Guilt in the Profaners themſelves might, in ſome Meaſure, contribute to their Submiſſion and Acquieſcence, even in the ſame Manner, as his Enemies were ſtruck backwards with the Senſe of their own Guilt, as well as the Majeſty of his Appearance, and fell to the Ground, when they came to apprehend him in the Garden. So that, upon the whole, we are to conſider our Saviour, in this Action, not in the Form of a deſpis'd Man, but of a triumphant Monarch rather at the Head of an infinite Number of People, all rejoicing in the Completion of an ancient Prophecy, all acknowledging him for their Meſſiah and King, and thereupon all ready to ſupport him in any Reformation, that he ſhould think proper to attempt.

The Reality of the Darkneſs at our Lord's Crucifixion.

THE like is to be ſaid of the Relation, which the Evangeliſts give us of the Darkneſs, which happen'd at our Lord's Crucifixion; that it is far from being a Miſrepreſentation of the Matter of Fact, ſince we have it confirm'd (s) by the Teſtimony of Phlegon, who, in the xivth Book of his Chronicles, tells us, that, in the 4th Year of the CCIId Olympiad, (which anſwers exactly to that of our Lord's Death) there was the greateſt Eclipſe of the Sun, that had ever been before, inſomuch that, at Noon-Day, the Stars were ſeen in the Sky; by the Authority of Thallus (t), a Greek Hiſtorian, who, in his third third Book, ſpeaks of the Darkneſs, that accompany'd our Saviour's Death, and which he, in like Manner, called an Eclipſe; by the Appeal, which Tertullian (u), and others, make to the Roman Archives (where the Account, that Pilate ſent to Tiberius, of the Miracles, which happen'd at our Lord's Paſſion, was depoſited) for the Truth of this prodigious Darkneſs; and, (x) laſtly, by the general Conſent of all Chriſtian Authors, for the Space of the ſix firſt Centuries, who, in treating this Subject, have conſtantly made mention of this Teſtimony of Phlegon and Thallus, together with this Appeal to the Roman Records, without the leaſt Heſitation, or Diffidence of their Truth: So that the only Difficulty is, to know by what Means this ſtrange Phænomenon was effected.

In what Manner it was effected, various Opinions.

PHLEGON and Thallus indeed, as they are cited (y) by Chriſtian Writers, ſeem to make this Darkneſs a common Eclipſe, occaſion'd (as others are) by an Interpoſition of the Moon, between the Sun and the Earth, and thence ſome have inferr'd, that there was nothing extraordinary in it: But, as it is a Thing very well known, that the Paſſover (when our Lord ſuffer'd) was always appointed at the Full of the Moon, and a Thing naturally impoſſible, that an Eclipſe ſhould happen, when the Moon is in this Condition, we have Reaſon to think, that this was an haſty Concluſion, which theſe two Authors made, without ever bethinking themſelves of the Rules of Aſtronomy; that, finding, in the publick Records of the Time of Tiberius, an Account of a prodigious Darkneſs, which, at Noon-Day, made the Stars appear in the Firmament, this they ſuppos'd could have been effected only by an Eclipſe of the Sun, and, upon ſuch Suppoſition, affirm'd that it was ſo: But, for one Circumſtance unwarily advanc'd, it were Madneſs to reject their Teſtimony, which, in other Reſpects, exactly agrees with the Account of the ſacred Writings.

OTHERS, by the Manner of their Expreſſion, ſeem to imply, that the Sun, upon this Occaſion, with-held its Rays, and, as it were, eclips'd itſelf, by reſtraining its Luſtre from iſſuing forth; never conſidering, that Light in the Sun is no accidental Thing, nor any Quality, which it can ſuppreſs, or exert, as it thinks proper. To ſhine is as neceſſary to it, as is its Being: Nor can its Rays meet with any Obſtruction, but when ſome opaque Body or other intervenes between us and them; and therefore, when the Fathers, in Conformity to the Stile of the Scripture, ſay, that the Sun, or the Stars, withdrew their Shining, this muſt be look'd upon as a figurative and popular Manner of Expreſſion, which ſeems to give theſe Celeſtial Bodies a Kind of free Action, thereby to make us more ſenſible of the Abſence, or Suſpenſion of their Effects.

OTHERS therefore, with more Probability, think, that, as the ſacred Hiſtory ſays nothing of the Sun, this Darkneſs, which it takes notice of, was occaſion'd by a great Number of condens'd Clouds, which, gathering in the Air, intercepted the Light of the Sun, and, for the Space of three Hours, produc'd the ſame Effect, that once happen'd in the Land of Egypt, a Darkneſs that might be felt. This Hypotheſis makes the Matter very eaſy, by placing the whole Miracle in the quick Formation of the Clouds at ſuch a Point of Time, and the ſpeedy Diſperſion of them, after ſuch a Continuance; only we muſt ſuppoſe, that (z) by the whole Earth, which the Evangeliſt tells us was cover'd with this Darkneſs, we are to underſtand, the Land of Judea only, in which Senſe the Phraſe does not unfrequently occur in Scripture.

AND indeed, (a) as the other wonderful Things, which came to paſs at our Saviour's Paſſion, ſuch as the trembling of

of the Earth, the rending of the Rocks, the opening the Graves, and tearing the Vail of the Temple, were tranſacted at Jeruſalem, or at moſt in Judea only; ſo have we Reaſon to believe, that the Darkneſs, which accompany'd theſe Miracles, was of no greater Extent than they; becauſe the chief Deſign of this uncommon Appearance in the Heavens was, to convince the Jews, who blaſphem'd our Lord, and his Diſciples, who believ'd on him, both then preſent at his Crucifixion, that, notwithſtanding all the Humiliation, to which he voluntarily ſubmitted, he was in Reality the great Creator of the Univerſe, and * even, while he was hanging on the Croſs, the Ruler and Director of all its Elements and Motions.

That the Preſcience and Predictions of God did not neceſſitate the Infidelity of the Jews.

GOD indeed, as he is an omniſcient Being, cannot but foreknow all the Actions of Mankind, and therefore, when he pleaſes, may foretel any of them; but then, (b) if his Fore-Knowledge, or Predictions, did ſo far influence the Will of Men, as to lay them under a Neceſſity of doing what he foreknows, or has foretold they ſhall do, all Freedom in human Actions muſt be deſtroy'd; conſequently, all Vice and Virtue muſt be empty Names, becauſe no one can be blam'd for doing what he could not help, nor does any one deſerve to be prais'd, who does only that, which he cannot avoid: And conſequently again, all future Rewards and Puniſhments muſt be diſcarded; becauſe as it would be unjuſt to puniſh one Man for that, which was not in his Power to avoid, ſo it would be unreaſonable to reward another, for doing ſuch Actions, as he found himſelf conſtrain'd and compell'd to do.

WHEN therefore we find the Evangeliſt declaring, that (c) the Jews could not believe, becauſe Iſaiah (d) had ſaid, God had blinded their Eyes, and hardened their Hearts, we muſt not ſuppoſe, that this Prophecy was either the Cauſe or Motive of their Infidelity. It was ſimply a Prediction; and, as ſuch, laid upon them no Manner of Neceſſity, or Compulſion. Such Prophecies, indeed, always include a tacit Condition, which preſerves to Man the Liberty of Choice; and, if in their Event they prove certain and infallible, 'tis only becauſe God certainly and infallibly foreknows the future bad Diſpoſitions of the People, of whom he ſpeaks; and has a clear Proſpect of that Blindneſs and Obduration, which their Perverſeneſs brings upon them.

IN relation to the Jews in particular, 'tis certain, that our Bleſſed Saviour did not think, that his Heavenly Father had, by any Action or Prediction of his, made it impoſſible for them to believe on him; (e) for, had he thought ſo, he would never have exhorted them (as we find he does in the Verſes juſt going before) (f) to walk in the Light, and believe in the Light, whilſt they had it; and that to this good Purpoſe, that they might become the Children of Light: Becauſe every Exhortation to do a Thing, which we know to be impoſſible, muſt not only be vain and deluſory, but (if we know that Impoſſibility to proceed from a Divine judicial Act) repugnant likewiſe to the Will of God, which to ſuppoſe our Lord capable of is the Height of Blaſphemy.

SINCE therefore, in the Eaſtern Phraſe, a Perſon is ſaid to do that, which he only permits to be done, God's blinding the Eyes, and hardening the Hearts of the Jews, muſt mean no more, than his ſuffering them to blind their own Eyes, and harden their own Hearts; which, upon the mere Subduction of his Grace, without the Infuſion of any perverſe Inclinations from him, they would not fail to do. And, accordingly, we may obſerve, that the ſame Evangeliſt, in another Place, ſpeaks of their Obduration and Blindneſs, as their own Act and Deed; for (g) this People's Heart is waxen groſs, ſays he, and their Ears are dull of hearing, and their Eyes have they cloſed, leſt, at any Time, they ſhould ſee with their Eyes, and hear with their Ears, and underſtand with their Hearts, and ſhould be converted, and I ſhould heal them.

* From the aſtronomical Tables, ſome, that are verſ'd in this Kind of Knowledge, have inform'd us, that, on the ſame Day, when our Saviour dy'd, about three in the Afternoon, i. e. immediately after the miraculous Darkneſs, which began at Noon, and laſted three Hours, there was a natural Eclipſe of the Moon, in which Half of its Orbit was obſcur'd: So that this Day produc'd a literal Accompliſhment of two remarkable Prophecies; that of Joel, The Earth ſhall quake before them, the Heavens ſhall tremble, the Sun and the Moon ſhall be dark, and the Stars ſhall withdraw their Shining, Chap. ii. 10. and that of Amos, In that Day, ſaith the Lord, I will cauſe the Sun to go down at Noon, and will darken the Earth in the clear Day, and I will turn your Feaſts into Mourning, and all your Songs into Lamentation, Chap. viii. 9, 10. Calmet's Commentary.

Our Lord's Miracle on the barren Fig-Tree vindicated.

Whoever conſiders the Series of the Sacred Hiſtory, may ſoon convince himſelf, that the Miracle, which our Saviour wrought on the barren Fig-Tree, happen'd about the eleventh Day of the Jewiſh Month Niſan, on Tueſday, very probably, before the Paſſover; for the Paſſover, we know, was kept on the fourteenth Day of Niſan, which anſwers to the latter End of our March. And that, at this Time, there were Figs in Judea ripe, and fit for gathering, we have ſome Authority to believe.

When Moſes ſent away the Spies to ſearch the Land of Canaan, it was, we are told, (h) in the Time of the firſt ripe Grapes, and (i) they returned from ſearching, after forty Days, and brought from thence (k) Pomegranates and Figs, as well as Cluſters of Grapes. Now the Septuagint Verſion ſays, that it was in the Spring, when theſe Spies ſet forward, and Philo, in his Life of Moſes, ſeems to be of the ſame Opinion. Suppoſing then, that it was about the Middle of the Spring, (which, in Judea, began about the Middle of January) that the Spies ſet out, and that they were gone forty Days, it will follow, that they return'd ſome Days before the Paſſover; and if the Figs, which they brought, as well as the Grapes, were ripe, and full-grown, then were they ripe in Judea, in the very ſame Time, that our Saviour is here ſaid to look for them.

SOLOMON, in his Book of Canticles, gives us a lively Deſcription of the Spring, and, among other Signs of its being come, makes mention of this, —— That (l) the Fig-Tree putteth forth her green Figs, and the Vines, with their tender Grape, give a good Smell, or (as it may more literally be render'd) the Fig-Tree hath begun to give a Flavour to her young Figs, and the Vines a good Smell to the tender Grape. Now, if, in the Middle of our January, the Figs were ſo forward, as then to give a Flavour, 'tis reaſonable to think, that, in ſo warm and fruitful a Climate, as Judea was, there might be ripe ones, about the latter End of March, which is the preciſe Time, when our Saviour ſought for them upon this Fig-Tree.

The Truth is, there were in Judea Fig-Trees of different Kinds; and, beſides the ordinary Sort, (which, (m) according to our Saviour, did not put forth its Leaves, until the near Approach of Summer) the Jewiſh Writers make mention of one early Kind in particular, (called by them Banoth-ſhuath) which never wanted Leaves, and very ſeldom Fruit. Nay, Pliny (n) tells us of ſome Sort of Fig-Trees in Syria, (under which Name he frequently comprehends Judea) that had always Leaves, and, when the Fruit of the preceding Year was gathered, the new Fruit began immediately, and was growing all the Winter long; and therefore, we need leſs wonder at what the Emperor Julian aſſerts, viz. that, at Damaſcus, in Syria, there was a Sort of Fig-Tree, whoſe Fruit, both old and young, grew together, and laſted beyond the Year: From all which we may be allow'd to conclude, that there might be Figs in Judea fit to eat, at the Time when our Saviour went to look for ſome on this Tree: And, for this Reaſon, ſome have (o) imagin'd, that without offering any great Violence to the Text, the Original Words ȣ̓ γὰρ ἦν καιρὸς σύκων for where he was, or, in the Place he then was in, the Time of Figs was come. And this, by the Way, is enough to vindicate our Saviour in what he did, ſince there could be no Injuſtice to the Owner, (as ſome would ſuggeſt) in ridding the Ground of a Tree, which only encumber'd it, and ſuck'd its Nouriſhment from it, without making any Return.

Without entering into * any other Solutions: If there were two Sorts of Fig-Trees in Judea, the one much earlier than the other, and thence two Seaſons of ripe Figs, the one much later than the other, and (as 'tis natural to ſuppoſe) the later much more common, and plentiful than the former; the later was properly called the Time of Figs, and the Evangeliſt might very truly ſay, that at the Time of the Paſſover, it was not yet come, i. e. the common and ordinary Seaſon for Figs was not come; tho', admitting this to be one of the early Kind, our Lord might well expect to find ſomething upon it, ſince, by the Speciouſneſs of its Leaves, it look'd ſo promiſing at a Diſtance.

He, without all doubt, knew perfectly well, before he went up to it, whether it had any Fruit on it, or no; but, as he intended to work a Miracle upon it, and, by its ſpeedy withering away, emblematically to ſhew his Diſciples the near approaching Ruin of the Jewiſh Nation, be it what it would, it anſwer'd his main End; but then it could not have been ſo fit a Type and Reſemblance of the Jews, had it not been barren, nor exhibited their Fate in ſo lively a Manner, had it not been curs'd, and ſo wither'd away.

From Matth. xx. 10. to the End, Mark xi. 15 to the End, Luke xix. 45. to the End, and John xii. 19. to the End.

His ſharp Reproof of the Scribes and Phariſees vindicated from any Breach of Charity.

The Jewiſh Nation indeed, at our Saviour's Coming, was, in all Degrees and Orders of Men, ſadly corrupted; but in none ſo much, as in the Scribes and Phariſees, who, pretending to be the Doctors and Expounders of the Law, had vacated the Obligation to almoſt all moral Honeſty, by the Introduction of their falſe Gloſſes and Comments. Their great Shew of outward Sanctity however, much Oſtentation in their Prayers and Piety, and punctual Performance of the ceremonial Part of their Religion, gave them great Authority among the People, and as high a Conceit of themſelves; inſomuch, that they expected a blind Submiſſion to their Injunctions, and all imaginable Tokens of Reſpect and Veneration, whenever they appear'd in Publick: Tho', all this while, their pretended Sanctity was but a Veil to cover their Vices, and inward Impurity; an Art to gain a Reputation, by making the beſt of the Shadow, while they wanted the Subſtance of Godlineſs.

Now, if ſuch was the Depravity of the Scribes and Phariſees, when our Saviour liv'd among them, none can doubt, but that, as he was a Teacher ſent from God, he had a proper Authority to reprove them, ſince, under the Moſaick Law, this was a Duty incumbent even on private Perſons, and what they could not, without a manifeſt Breach of Charity, decline: For (p) thou ſhalt not hate thy Brother in thy Heart: Thou ſhalt in any wiſe rebuke thy Neighbour, and not ſuffer Sin

---

* There is one however, which we muſt not in this Place forget to mention, viz. That, by the Time of Figs, may well be underſtood the Time of gathering them, when they were full ripe, and muſt be gather'd, otherwiſe they would fall from the Tree; and that the Words, for the Time of Figs was not yet, do not refer to thoſe immediately foregoing when he came to it, he found nothing but Leaves, (which ought to be included in a Parentheſis) but to the Sentence that went before he came, if haply he might find any Thing thereon, as he might very reaſonably expect, becauſe the Fig-Time, i. e. the Seaſon, when Figs were wont to be gather'd, was not yet come, i. e. he came to the Tree, before People had gather'd their Figs. For we muſt obſerve further, that, on the ſecond Day of unleavened Bread, i. e. about five or ſix Days after our Saviour's coming to this Tree, the Firſt-Fruits of all, that were then ripe, were ſolemnly preſented in the Temple; nor were the Owners of any Trees permitted to gather in their Fruits, until that Day was come, and, conſequently, if no Fruit-Trees were as yet gather'd, (upon Suppoſition that this Fig-Tree was of the early Kind) our Saviour is not to be cenſur'd for expecting to find ſomething on it. Kidder's Demonſtration of the Meſſiah, Part ii.

(p) Levit. xix. 17.

Sin upon him: Where we may obſerve, that, in the Eye of this Law, not to rebuke our Brother is interpretatively to hate him; and therefore our Saviour ſtands in need of no farther Apology for reproving the Scribes and Phariſees, who had ſuch a Number of Sins upon them, ſince there was no omitting that, without violating this Command.

In his Rebukes indeed, there ſeems to be a Spirit of Severity, ſomething that looks like Anger, and ſeveral Terms of Diminution and Diſreſpect. But then it ſhould be conſider'd, that, as Anger is a Paſſion implanted in human Nature, in itſelf, and, upon all Ocaſions, it cannot be unlawful; nay, when employ'd about proper and deſerving Matters, ſuch as the Honour of God, and Reverence due to his Laws, the Love of Virtue, and the Correction of Vice, it is not only innocent, but highly neceſſary and commendable. For there is a Tameneſs of Spirit, which deſerves Cenſure; and, in ſuch Caſes as theſe, we even do well, when we are angry.

(q) In like Manner, it may be obſerv'd, that Terms of Diſparagement and Reproach are, in ſome Caſes, allowable, and, more particularly, when Men (as St Paul expreſſes it) (r) are rebuked ſharply, to render them ſound in the Truth. From a Mouth of a Superior they are often of Uſe, ſometimes of Neceſſity, to rouze, and awaken ſtupid Men; to make them more effectually both ſenſible, and aſham'd of their Follies; to expoſe the horrible Abſurdity of pernicious Opinions, or the flagrant Enormity of wicked Practices, and, in ſhort, are hardly ever diſcommendable, where Charity is at the Bottom, and an high Authority in the Reprover gives ſuch Language Countenance.

Now, as none can call in Queſtion our Saviour's Authority, if he thought it convenient to make uſe of ſuch Severity in his Reproofs of a Set of People, that moſt juſtly deſerv'd it; ſo need not any be offended at his denouncing ſo many Woes againſt them, when he finds God giving the Prophets of old, ſent to his Prieſts, who were negligent in their Duty, and corrupted in their Morals, (juſt as they were now) Inſtructions to addreſs them in the ſelf-ſame Manner: (s) Thus ſaith the Lord God, Woe be unto the Shepherds of Iſrael, that do feed themſelves, ſhould not the Shepherds feed the Flock? Ye eat the Fat, and ye cloath you with the Wool; ye kill them that are fed, but ye feed not the Flocks, &c. And again, (t) Woe be unto thoſe Paſtors, that deſtroy, and ſcatter the Sheep of my Paſture; thus ſaith the Lord, ye have ſcattered my Flock, and driven them away, and have not viſited them. And, if inferior Prophets were commiſſion'd to make ſuch Denunciations, much more might this great Meſſenger of the Covenant (who was both inveſted with ſupreme Power from the Father, and perfectly knew what was in every Man's Heart, and therefore could not miſcall Things) be allow'd (u) to reprove, and rebuke all with Authority, and without Violation of that great Law of Charity, which is ſo peculiarly fitted to the Evangelical Inſtitution, that, upon ſundry Accounts, it may not improperly be called a new Commandment.

And why that is called a new Commandment.

(x) This Commandment indeed of loving one another is by our Lord and Saviour ſo much enlarg'd, as to the Object of it, extending to all Mankind, and even to our greateſt Enemies; is ſo greatly advanc'd and heightened, as to the Degree of it, even to the laying down of our Lives for one another; and is ſo effectually taught, ſo mightily encourag'd, and ſo much urg'd and inſiſted upon, that, tho' it was a Precept deliver'd by Moſes, yet, conſidering in what Manner the Scribes and Phariſees had perverted the Senſe, and confin'd and diſcourag'd the Practice of it, it may well enough be ſaid to have receiv'd in our Saviour a Republication. And, tho' it was not altogether unknown to other Nations before, yet it was never ſo taught, ſo encourag'd; never was ſuch an illuſtrious Example given of it, never ſo much Streſs and Weight laid upon it, by any Philoſophy, or Religion, that was ever before in the World.

What is meant by the Abomiuation of Deſolation, mention'd in Mat. xxiv. 15. various Opinions.

THERE are three Paſſages in the Prophet Daniel, which mention (y) the Abomination, that maketh deſolate; and to any of theſe our Saviour may be ſuppos'd to allude; for they are all Predictions of the Diſſolution of the Jewiſh State, when the Sacrifices and Oblations ſhould be made to ceaſe. 'Tis the Senſe indeed, that our Saviour ſeems more to attend to, than the Words of the Prophecy; and, becauſe it was the Cuſtom of the Roman Armies to have an Eagle for their Enſign, in which they plac'd a Kind of Divinity, and to carry their Emperor's Images along with them, to which they paid a religious Adoration, and therein committed ſuch Idolatry as was highly deteſtable to every Jew; (z) it is hence ſuppos'd, that the Abomination ſtanding in the Holy Place means the Roman Army, with theſe hated Objects of their Idolatry, beſieging Jeruſalem; and that it is therefore called a Deſolation, becauſe it was appointed by Almighty God to lay the Country, City, and Temple of Jeruſalem, deſolate and waſte; for ſo St Luke ſeems to have explain'd it by a parallel Place, (a) When ye ſhall ſee Jeruſalem compaſſed with Armies, then know, that the Deſolation thereof is nigh.

JERUSALEM indeed may perhaps, in ſome Places of Scripture (b), be called the Holy Place, (c) but this is a Title ſo peculiar to the Temple, that we cannot but think, that our Saviour, in the Application of the Prophecy, intended it here; eſpecially (d), ſince his Diſciples, by ſhewing the Statelineſs of its Buildings, gave the whole Riſe to his Diſcourſe. But now, if we ſuppoſe the Temple to be this Holy Place, we cannot ſee, how the Abomination here ſpoken of could be the Roman Army, and their Enſigns, becauſe neither of theſe were ever in the Temple, until the Taking, and Sackage of the City, and could therefore, in this Reſpect be no Preſages at all. If we ſuppoſe the City of Jeruſalem to be this Holy Place, 'tis certain, that this Abomination was lodg'd in it, long before the Approach of Titus with his Army, becauſe the Romans had, all along, a ſtrong Garriſon, over-againſt the Temple, in Fort Antonia, where their Colours, and Standard were ſet up: Nor can we readily conceive, why the military Enſigns under Titus ſhould be thought an Abomination to the Jews, more than thoſe under Pompey, Socius, and Ceſtius, who had all, before him, beſieg'd Jeruſalem.

The right Interpretation of it.

THESE are ſome of the Difficulties, that attend the common Interpretation; and therefore we ſhould rather think, that the Abomination of Deſolation, here ſpoken of, ſhould refer to that groſs Profanation of the Temple, which happen'd a little before the Beginning of the Siege of Jeruſalem. While the Roman Arms were in Judea, there were two contending Parties in Jeruſalem. (e) Some were for accommodating Matters with an Enemy ſo vaſtly ſuperior to them in Power, and from whom nothing leſs than utter Ruin was to be expected at laſt; others, again, were for making no Terms at all, but in Hopes of ſome ſtrange Deliverance for ſtanding it out to the laſt, and among theſe was a Crew of Ruffians and Robbers, who, from their pretended Concern for the Honour of God, which they could not bear to ſee proſtituted to the Gentile Power, were called Zealots. This Gang of Men ſeiz'd upon the Temple, and fortify'd it, and, having got into their Poſſeſſion the Engines, which had been left in the Country by Ceſtius Gallus, when he beſieg'd the City about three Years before; with theſe they ſhot from the Battlements of the Temple upon the Town, whilſt thoſe in the Town ſhot likewiſe likewiſe at them, by which Means great Numbers were killed on both Sides, and the Temple became thereby polluted with the Blood of the Slain, that were within it, and by which Means the Daily Service was intermitted, and the Sanctuary, according to the Jewiſh Notion of the Word, became deſolate. Here then was a Sign peculiar, and what never had happen'd at any Siege before, which our Saviour gave his Diſciples, in order to provide for their Eſcape. Wars, Famines, Murthers, Maſſacres, Diviſions among deſperate Men, and inveſting Cities by hoſtile Troops, are no uncommon Things in Caſes of this Nature, and what the Jews, upon this Occaſion, knew too much of by woeful Experience; but to have the Sanctuary filled with armed Men, who were after killed in the Holy Place, and who, by being brought into the Courts of the Temple, actually defiled it with the Carcaſes and Blood of the ſlain, (which were both of them to the higheſt Degree abominable by the Moſaick Law) was the diſtinguiſhing Mark of this Calamity; and, when this once began to appear, the Diſciples were caution'd to decline the approaching Storm, by making the beſt of their Way out of Jeruſalem, which they could not have done ſo well, had they ſtay'd till the Siege was form'd, and the Roman Army had inveſted the Town.

Infant Baptiſm in Uſe among the Jews.

(f) That it was a Cuſtom among the Jews, before our Saviour's Time, and (as they themſelves affirm) before the Beginning of the Law, to baptize, as well as circumciſe, any Proſelyte, that came over to them from another Nation; and, in Caſe ſuch a Perſon had any Infant-Children then born to him, that they, at their Father's Deſire, were, in like Manner, circumcis'd, baptiz'd, and admitted as Proſelytes, is manifeſt from the inconteſtable Evidence of their Writers. The Incapacity of the Child to declare, or promiſe for himſelf, was not look'd on as a Bar againſt his Reception into the Covenant, but the Deſire of the Father to dedicate him to the true God was accounted available, and ſufficient to juſtify his Admiſſion; and the Reaſon, they give for this, is,——That the Things, they were admitted to, were undoubtedly for their Good; for one may privilege a Perſon, ſay they, tho' he be incapable of knowing it; but one ought not to diſprivilege any one, without his Knowledge and Conſent.

And inſtituted in the Chriſtian Church for ſeveral Reaſons.

Now this gives great Light to our better underſtanding the Meaning of our Saviour, when he bids his Diſciples go, and teach all Nations, baptizing them. Baptiſm he took, as the eaſier Rite of the two, and, having converted it into an Evangelical Precept, made it the federal Form of Admiſſion into his Religion, as Circumciſion had been in the Moſaick Diſpenſation; and, as he gave his Apoſtles no Directions in their Commiſſion concerning little Children, it may juſtly be preſum'd, that, with regard to them, he left them to proceed, juſt in the ſame Manner, as the Church, wherein they liv'd, had been accuſtom'd to do, and that was, to make them Proſelytes to his Religion by Baptiſm.

(g) That in the Jewiſh Church Infants were Part of thoſe, who engag'd in Covenant with God, is evident from theſe Words of Moſes to all the People; (h) Ye ſtand this Day before the Lord your God; you, and your Little-Ones, that thou ſhouldſt enter into Covenant with the Lord thy God, that thou mayeſt be a People to him, and he unto unto thee thy God: And that, in the Chriſtian Church, Children, in like Manner, are under the Covenant of Grace, is more than intimated in St Peter's Exhortation to ſuch Perſons, as he had converted, that they would receive Baptiſm, in order to make their Children likewiſe capable of it, becauſe (i) the Promiſe was to them, and their Children, i. e the Promiſe of Remiſſion of Sins, and of receiving the Holy Ghoſt, (mention'd (mention'd immediately before) which appertain'd to the Covenant, belong'd to them and their Children. Now, if the Promiſe and Covenant belong'd to the Children, as well as Parents, there is no Queſtion to be made, but that Baptiſm, which is the Seal of the Covenant, and the viſible Confirmation of the Promiſe, belongs to them likewiſe, and, if Infants have a covenanted Right to Baptiſm, we may ſafely infer, that Chriſt never intended to debar them of it; and that, conſequently, tho' they are not expreſly nam'd, yet are they moſt certainly imply'd in the Commiſſion of baptizing all Nations. For, ſince the Univerſal includes all Particulars, and Children make up a conſiderable Part of all Nations, the Words of the Commiſſion may reaſonably be ſuppos'd to compriſe them; nor can we forbear thinking, but that, when we read of whole Families that were baptiz'd, there muſt, of courſe, have been ſeveral Children in them, becauſe the Word οἶκος, which, in this Caſe, is render'd Houſhold, according to the Obſervation of the Learned, (k) is of a large Signification, and takes in every individual Perſon of the Family, Women, as well as Men, and Children, as well as grown Perſons.

Their Incapacity for Inſtruction, no valid Objection.

(l) THE Adult indeed, before they were admitted as Proſelytes to the Jewiſh Religion, were to be inſtructed in the Fundamentals of the Law, in the Weight and Burthen of it, and in the Nature of its Rewards and Penalties, and ſo profeſs their Submiſſion to it; but then it muſt be obſerv'd, that theſe Pre-requiſites in the Parent, who was capable of ſuch Inſtruction, did not exclude the Children, then born, from the Rite of Baptiſm; ſo far from this, that, by the Sentence of the Sanhedrim, the Church was oblig'd to baptize them, as having a Right to the Ordinance by their Parents Faith. And, in like Manner, they, who were arriv'd at a competent Age and Underſtanding, were to be inſtructed in the Principles of the Chriſtian Religion, were to (m) confeſs with their Mouth the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and to believe in their Heart, that God had raiſed him from the Dead, before they were admitted to Baptiſm. This was a Condition requir'd of them, becauſe they were able to do it: But why this Condition ſhould exclude their Children any more than it did the Children of Jewiſh Proſelytes (who were uſually baptiz'd together with their Parents) we cannot ſee.

OUR Children indeed cannot underſtand the Nature and End of the Ordinance of Baptiſm, but neither were the Jewiſh Children, at eight Days old, able to know what the Purpoſe of Circumciſion was. They have no actual Faith of their own, but the Faith of thoſe, who preſent them in the Congregation, is imputed, and themſelves are ſanctify'd by being born of believing Parents. They have no Manner of Room for Repentance, but then they have Innocence, which is a much better Qualification; and tho' they cannot ſtipulate for themſelves, yet have they Proxies and Sureties, (of (n) early Inſtitution both in the Jewiſh and Chriſtian Church) to contract in their Names, whoſe Act is look'd upon, and accepted by God, as theirs. In the mean Time, that Infants and young Children (tho' inſenſible of what is done for them) may have Favours conferr'd on them, and are capable of receiving ſpiritual Advantages to their Souls, is plain from that Paſſage in the Evangelical Hiſtory, where, when (o) young Children were brought to Chriſt, he took them up in his Arms, laid his Hands on them, and bleſſed them, namely, by praying for a Bleſſing, by pronouncing a Bleſſing, and by actually conferring a Bleſſing on them; and, if they are capable of being bleſſed, why ſhould they be thought incapable of being baptiz'd, ſince Baptiſm, in the main, is but a ſolemn Benediction, as it inſtates us in the Privileges and Benefits of the Goſpel, ſuch as Adoption and Grace, the Pardon of our Sins, and the Acceptance of our Perſons?

In ſhort, (p) the Covenant of Grace is a Deed of Gift, made to us by Chriſt, wherein he promiſes to beſtow upon us eternal Life and Happineſs: And, as it would be abſurd to ſay, that a Child's Name ought not to be put into any Deed, or Legacy, until he came of Age to underſtand it; ſo it is equally abſurd, and far more injurious, to exclude our Children from this Heavenly Legacy, which Chriſt, out of the Riches of his Goodneſs, has bequeath'd unto them: Eſpecially, conſidering (q) that the Primitive Church did all along, and (r) every National Church, at this Day in the World, does admit their Children into the Chriſtian Covenant by this Ordinance; that (s) many of the moſt antient Writers plead the Neceſſity of it, for the Expiation of original Guilt, and (t) ſpeak of it, as a great Sin in Parents, and others, that have Opportunity, to ſuffer any Child of theirs, or any other Perſon, under their Care, to die unbaptiz'd.

The true Meaning of our Saviour's Words in the Inſtitution of the Euchariſt.

In Relation to the other Sacrament, there can be no great Difficulty in our Saviour's Words, if we will but admit, that the Scripture very frequently makes uſe of figurative Expreſſions, and, in Matters of a ſacramental Nature more eſpecially, is apt to put the Sign for the Thing ſignified. (u) The three Baskets are three Days, (x) the ſeven good Kine are ſeven Years, (y) the Ram, with the two Horns, are the Kings of Media and Perſia, (z) Sarah and Agar are the two Covenants, and (a) the ſeven Stars are the Angels of the ſeven Churches, are Inſtances of this Kind: And when Moſes, ſpeaking of the Paſchal Lamb, tells the Iſraelites, (b) This is the Lord's Paſſover, even before the Lord had paſs'd over them, and ſmitten the Egyptians; and of the unleavened Bread us'd at the Paſchal Feaſt, This is the Bread of Affliction, which your Fathers did eat in the Land of Egypt, his Meaning can be no other, than that theſe Things were a Repreſentation and Memorial of what had befallen their Fore-Fathers in Egypt. And therefore it is no Wonder, that our Bleſſed Saviour, in the Inſtitution of this Sacrament, ſhould make choice of the like Form of Expreſſion, as was in Uſe in the Jewiſh Church, upon the like Occaſion, and, conſequently, that when he ſays, This is my Body, and this is my Blood, his Meaning muſt be, that "this Bread in my Hand, and the Wine "in this Cup, do ſignify and repreſent to "you my Body and Blood, and that, in "in eating and drinking of theſe, you are "made Partakers of my Body and Blood, "i. e. of the real Benefits of my Death "and Paſſion."

The Abſurdity of a literal Acceptation.

(c) And indeed, if we conſider, that our Bleſſed Saviour celebrated this Sacrament before his Paſſion, we ſhall ſoon perceive that his Words could not poſſibly bear any other Conſtruction. For how could he hold himſelf in his own Hand, or give his Diſciples his Body broken, and his Blood ſhed, when, at this Time, he was alive, and no Violence had paſs'd upon him? (d) They ſaw his Body whole, before them, and knew that his Blood was in his Veins, and therefore could not but conclude, that what they eat and drank, according to the Evidence of their Senſes, was Bread and Wine; for, had they underſtood our Saviour's Words in their literal Meaning, it is hardly imaginable, but that they who, upon all other Occaſions, were ſo full of their Queſtions and Objections, would, upon the firſt hearing of this Paradox, have ſtarted ſome ſuch Scruple as this, —— "We ſee this to be "Bread, and that to be Wine, and we "ſee that thy Body is diſtinct from both; "we ſee that thy Body is not broken, "nor is thy Blood ſhed, how therefore can "theſe Things be?"

From Matth. xx. 10. to the End, Mark xi. 15. to the End, Luke xix. 45. to the End, and John xii. 19. to the End.

THE antient Apologiſts for our Holy Religion take notice, that this was one of the greateſt Accuſations which the Heathens brought againſt Chriſtians, that they did eat human Fleſh, which they endeavour to refute, and conſtantly rejected, as the vileſt Calumny, and moſt abominable Thing: But now, had they underſtood our Saviour's Words in a literal Senſe, and thereupon made it an Article of Faith, that they did daily eat the Fleſh of the Son of Man, with what Sincerity could they (without all Limitation or Diſtinction) not only have deny'd, but even deteſted the doing ſo? (e) Nay, nothing is more obvious, than that primitive Writers continually ridicule the Heathens, for worſhipping ſuch Deities, as might be eaten, and inſtance particularly in the Egyptians, who made the ſame Fleſh, which ſome of them did conſecrate as a God, the Food of others. But how can it poſſibly be conceiv'd, that they ſhould thus ridicule and expoſe the Religion of Heathens, for that very Thing, which made ſo great a Part in their own; or brand that, as the very Extremity of Madneſs and Folly, when done by others, which their Faith taught them was the higheſt Act of religious Worſhip, when perform'd by themſelves? (f) Theſe Things ſurely give us ſufficient Reaſon (with Scotus) to admire, that ſuch an Interpretation ſhould be put upon this one Article, as makes our Faith contemptible to all, that are guided with Reaſon; and, at the ſame Time, to aſſert, that, as it is apparently againſt Humanity, and againſt Piety, to break with our Hands, to tear with our Teeth, and to devour, as we do common Food, the Fleſh and Blood of Chriſt, and that the Scorn of Atheiſts and Infidels will never ceaſe, until the Doctrine, which eſtabliſh'd theſe Poſitions, be baniſh'd from the Chriſtian Church.

Why our Lord did not appear publickly, and to his Enemies, after his Reſurrection.

WE own indeed, that the whole Streſs of the Chriſtian Cauſe lies upon the Truth of our Lord's Reſurrection, and that all proper Methods of convincing the World were neceſſary upon this Occaſion; but then it ſhould be conſider'd, (g) that our Lord, being now, after his Reſurrection, to act according to the Majeſty of the Divine Nature, and not according to the Infirmities and Condeſcenſion of the Human, it did not ſo well comport with the Dignity, he had aſſum'd, to converſe publickly, or to ſubmit himſelf to the Cenſures, and freſh Affronts of his Enemies. But allowing it had been conſiſtent, (h) yet the unbelieving Jews (eſpecially the Chief-Prieſts and Rulers) were of all Men moſt unworthy to have ſo extraordinary a Way of Conviction afforded them.

THEY had already deſpis'd the Evidence, that was given them, and not only ſo, but maliciouſly imputed the plaineſt Miracles, that ever were wrought, to the Power and Operation of the Devil. Now, if any Thing can render Men incapable of the Favour of a farther Conviction, ſuch a malicious Reſiſtance of the Evidence, which our Saviour's Miracles carry'd along with them, would probably do it; eſpecially, if we conſider, that the greateſt of all the Miracles, which he wrought in his Life-Time, (I mean the raiſing Lazarus from the Grave, after he had been dead four Days) was ſo far from convincing them, that, tho' they could not deny the Thing, they took occaſion to reſolve to put him to Death: And therefore, what Reaſon was there, that Chriſt ſhould appear to them for their Conviction, who had conſpir'd to compaſs his Death, even becauſe they knew that he had rais'd one from the Dead?

BUT ſuppoſing, for the preſent, that our Saviour had appear'd publickly to the Jewiſh Rulers; yet, ſince neither the Darkneſs at his Death, nor the Earthquake at his Reſurrection, neither the Declaration of the Centurion, on the one, or the Confeſſion of the Soldiers, on the other Occaſion, had wrought in them any Remorſe, we can hardly ſuppoſe, but that, had he ſo appear'd, they would have offer'd to lay violent Hands upon him, as they before deſign'd againſt Lazarus, and for the ſame Reaſons: (i) In which Caſe, had our Saviour vaniſh'd out of their Hands, (as doubtleſs he would) what would they have concluded from thence, but that they had ſeen a Ghoſt, a Spectre, or Apparition? And what Conviction would that have wrought, but that their Senſes had been impos'd upon by ſome magical Illuſion? And what Effect would this have had upon their Minds towards bringing them to a Belief that Chriſt was truly riſen? None at all.

(e) Whitby's Annotations on Matth. xxvi. 26.

(f) Ibid.

(g) Jenkins's Reaſonableneſs of the Chriſtian Religion, Vol. II.

(h) Tillotſon's Sermons.

In many of the Jews, (eſpecially their Chief-Prieſts and Elders) the God of this World had ſo blinded their Eyes, and hardened their Hearts, that they would not have believ'd one Tittle of our Saviour's Reſurrection; or, in caſe they did believe it, ſuch was their Malice and Perverſeneſs, that they would not have teſtify'd, that they ever had ſeen him, after his Reſurrection. (k) Now they, that are wicked enough to deny what they believe, will, at a Pinch, deny alſo what they know to be true; and therefore, ſuppoſing that our Lord had ſhewn himſelf to all his Enemies, and to all the People, and but ſome of them (eſpecially of the great Men in Authority) had deny'd that ever they ſaw him after his Reſurrection, this would have exceedingly weaken'd the Teſtimony of thoſe, who vouch'd and confeſs'd it: For he, that appeals to the Knowledge of another for the Truth of a Matter of Fact, is ſo far from gaining, that he loſes Credit by the Appeal, if the other Perſon denies that he knows any Thing of it. If therefore our Lord had appear'd to his Perſecutors, (it being likely that his Diſciples would appeal to their Knowledge) they, by proteſting the contrary, would have made a terrible Advantage againſt the Chriſtians upon that Appeal. Herein therefore is manifeſt the Wiſdom of Chriſt, that, in making choice of particular Witneſſes, viz. ſuch Perſons only, as would be ſo far from diſſembling their Knowledge, that they would always be ready to ſeal their Teſtimony with their Blood, he hath ſettled the Chriſtian Faith upon a better Foundation, than if he had appear'd in the Temple, or in the Midſt of Jeruſalem, to the whole People of the Jews.

The Truth is, (l) it is not the Number of Witneſſes, but the Character and Qualifications of the Perſons, together with the Evidence itſelf in its full Force and Circumſtances, that are chiefly to be regarded in Matters of this Nature. If but a few Men can (as the Apoſtles did) by undeniable Miracles make it ſufficiently appear, that what they ſay is true, and that God himſelf confirms the Truth of it; they can appeal to every Man's own Senſes, before whom they work Miracles, and make every one, that ſees them, a Witneſs to the Truth of their Doctrines. In this Caſe, God himſelf bears witneſs to it; and what the High-Prieſt ſaid upon a very different Occaſion, every Stander-by finds himſelf conſtrain'd to declare in this: What need have we of any farther Witneſſes? For we ourſelves have heard of their own Mouths, (in the miraculous Gift of Tongues) and ſeen with our own Eyes, (in the many wonderful Works, which they have publickly wrought) a full and authentick Teſtimony of Chriſt's Reſurrection.

The Reaſon of St Thomas's Incredulity.

And this poſſibly may ſuggeſt the Reaſon, why God permitted the Apoſtle St Thomas to be ſo ſcrupulous and doubtful in this great Article of our Faith. He had been told, that our Saviour was riſen from the Dead, and the Truth of it had been atteſted to him by Evidences beyond Exception: (m) Several Companies, who had ſeen him, and convers'd with him ſeveral Times; to whom he had expos'd the Sight and Feeling of his Wounds; to whom he had expounded the Scriptures concerning himſelf; with whom he had broken the Sacramental Bread, and conferr'd on them the Benediction of the Holy Ghoſt: All theſe, with all theſe convincing Tokens, had told Thomas that Chriſt was riſen; but Thomas's Reply was, (n) Except I ſhall ſee in his Hands the Print of the Nails, and put my Finger into the Print of the Nails and thruſt my Hand into his Side, I will not believe. It might indeed be urg'd before, that our Lord had not given all the Proofs of his Reſurrection, that the Nature of the Thing was capable of; but (o) now, when nothing is left unaſk'd, that the moſt ſceptical Doubts could pretend to deſire; when the very Apoſtles themſelves had one of their Number, that held out a while, and they preach'd not this Doctrine, until his Scruples were remov'd; when even this Doubter himſelf was no leſs vigorous, and poſitive afterwards in aſſerting the Truth of a Point, which nothing, but Demonſtration, could make him believe; this takes off all Imputation of Credulity and Eaſineſs. It ſhews, that the Apoſtles proceeded with great Caution, before they embark'd in the Cauſe of Chriſtianity, which could not but reap great Advantages from his Apoſtles Backwardneſs to believe; and therefore our Church juſtly acknowledges, that (p) God, in his Wiſdom, ſuffer'd Thomas to doubt, for the greater Confirmation of our Faith, according to that Saying of one of the Antients, Plus nobis Thomæ infidelitas ad fidem, quam fides diſcipulorum profuit; quia dum ille ad fidem palpando reducitur, noſtra mens, omni dubitatione poſtpoſitâ, in fide ſolidatur. This Diſciple, in ſhort, doubted, and was ſatisfy'd for us all. His former Unbelief adds Strength to the Cauſe he pleads, and makes him a Witneſs, ſo much above Exception, that the Scruples, which in him were Weakneſſes, in thoſe, that pretend to follow him, and know his Story, they will be Wilfulneſs, and reſolv'd Infidelity.

From Matth. xx. 10. to the End, Mark xi 15. to the End, Luke xix. 45. to the End, and John xii. 19. to the End.

The Subſtantiality of our Lord's glorify'd Body.

His Story indeed, and the Means, which (as we therein read) our Saviour made uſe of to convince him, will inſtruct us in this, —— That, whatever Changes our Saviour's glorify'd Body might undergo after his Reſurrection, it was not alter'd, as to the Properties of a Body, whereof our outward Senſes are competent Judges. To theſe Senſes it is that our Lord appealed; by theſe he compos'd the Diſciples, ſuſpecting him to be a Phantom; by theſe he ſatisfy'd the Doubtful and Incredulous; and by theſe the Apoſtles make it their Buſineſs to perſuade the World, when they ſo frequently teſtify, that they (q) had ſeen, and heard him, had eaten, and drank with him. But now, if our Saviour's Body was not ſubject to the ſame Laws with other corporeal Subſtances; if it could then paſs through the Doors in the Manner of a Spirit, and may at this Time be, where our Senſes can diſcern nothing of it, tho' no other Body can be ſo; then what Satisfaction could Thomas receive, in feeling his Hands and Side? Or, wherein would the Strength of St John's Argument lie, when he declares to his Proſelytes, (r) that he had ſeen, and heard, and his Hands had handled of the Word of Life?

And how he might go into the Room unperceiv'd.

The Indulgence indeed, which our Saviour gave his Apoſtles, to try all their Senſes upon him, gave them full Satiſfaction, both as to the Materiality, and Identity of his Body. But then, as all Philoſophy informs us, that no Body can penetrate through another, we may reaſonably infer, that when our Lord came to his Apoſtles, on purpoſe, as it were, to convince them of the Reality of his Reſurrection-Body, he did not glide into the Room like a Spirit, or Phantaſm, but, by his ſovereign Power, open'd the Door himſelf (even as the Angel did the Priſon-Gates to releaſe Peter) ſecretly, and without the Perception of any in the Company, who might all then be at the upper End of the Room perhaps, and employ'd in ſome ſuch Buſineſs as took up their whole Attention. For, (s) unleſs we can ſuppoſe, that our Saviour deſign'd to invalidate the Strength of what he ſaid and did, to convince his Apoſtles of the Truth of his Reſurrection, we cannot believe, that, at the ſame Time, he would do a Thing, (known and obſerv'd by them) which would, in Effect, evacuate the Force of all his Proofs.

'Tis difficult however to imagine the Reaſon, why our Saviour ſhould ſo far condeſcend to his Apoſtles, as to ſhew his Hands and his Feet, deſiring them to handle them, when, not long before, he forbad Mary Magdalen to touch him, becauſe he was not yet aſcended; unleſs we may ſuppoſe, that, after his Reſurrection, he might aſcend ſeveral Times; and that his firſt Aſcenſion was immediately inſuant upon it.

That, immediately after his Reſurrection, our Lord aſcended into Heaven.

Now, to make this more obvious, we muſt remember, that, a little before his Paſſion, our Saviour foretold to his Apoſtles his ſudden Aſcent to his Father, and as ſudden Deſcent to them again: (t) Yet a little while, ſays he, and ye ſhall ſee me, and again a little while, and ye ſhall not ſee me, becauſe I go to my Father; and that afterwards, upon their Surprize, and Diſpute about the Meaning of the Expreſſion, (u) Jeſus ſaid unto them, do you enquire among yourſelves of what I ſaid, A little while, and ye ſhall ſee me, and again, a little while, and ye ſhall not ſee me? Verily, verily, I ſay unto you, that ye ſhall weep and lament, but the World ſhall rejoice, and ye ſhall be ſorrowful, but your Sorrow ſhall be turned into Joy, &c. (x) Now, if we compare this Prediction with the Event, how ſad and diſconſolate the Apoſtles were upon our Saviour's Death, and how refreſh'd and joyful they were ſoon after his Reſurrection, and conſider withal, that this Sorrow was to laſt, till Chriſt had been with his Father, and then their Joy to commence; we ſhall be inclin'd to believe, that what our Lord would be underſtood to ſay, is, that he was to go to his Father immediately after his Reſurrection, and then very ſoon to return to his Apoſtles again, even the very ſame Day in the Evening.

And indeed, conſidering that Chriſt was our High-Prieſt, 'twas neceſſary for him to aſcend into Heaven, as ſoon as his Sufferings were finiſh'd. For, as the High-Prieſt, under the Law, was not only to ſlay the Sacrifice, but to carry the Blood, that Moment, within the Sanctuary, and there preſent it before God, to compleat the Atonement, and make Interceſſion for the People; ſo Chriſt, having ſhed his Blood, and offer'd his Body on the Altar of the Croſs, was immediately to aſcend into the Heavenly Sanctuary, and there obtain for us the Remiſſion of our Sins, and all the other Benefits of his Paſſion.

But this is not all. In ſeveral Parts of Scripture, our Saviour is inveſted with a regal, as well as ſacerdotal Character; but now, if, according to the Teſtimony of the ſame Scripture, he could not exerciſe any ſupreme Authority, until he was exalted to his Heavenly Kingdom; if he could not (y) give Gifts unto Men, until he was aſcended up on high; nor (z) ſend his Holy Spirit upon his Diſciples, until he was glorified, and had, by his Interceſſion, (a) obtained that great Promiſe of the Father; if he could not, I ſay, adminiſter the Affairs of his mediatorial Kingdom, before he had conquer'd Death by his Reſurrection, and had preſented himſelf as a ſlain Sacrifice and Propitiation for the Sins of the World, before the Preſence of the Divine Majeſty; this makes it evident, that, on the very Day of his Reſurrection, he muſt have aſcended to Heaven, becauſe, in the Evening of that Day, we find him (b) giving a Commiſſion Commiſſion and Inſtructions to his Apoſtles; promiſing them the Miſſion of the Holy Ghoſt; (c) bleſſing them in a ſolemn Manner; (d) ſending them as his Father had ſent him; (e) giving them the Power of remitting and retaining Sins; and, afterwards, in Galilee, (f) aſſuring them, that all Power was given him in Heaven, as well as Earth; and therefore commanding them to go, and teach, and baptize all Nations, and promiſing his powerful Preſence with them, even until the End of the World.

And why he forbad Mary to touch him.

NOW if theſe Exerciſes both of the ſacerdotal Office, and regal Power, could not properly belong to our Saviour, until his Exaltation, then we have Reaſon to ſuppoſe, that, in the Morning of his Reſurrection, he privately aſcended into Heaven, to receive the Reward of his Humiliation in our Fleſh; and that the Reaſon for his forbidding Mary to touch him, was, that, by her officious Embraces and Importunity, ſhe might not hinder him from aſcending that Moment, and (what was the Crown of all his Labour) carrying our glorify'd Nature, as ſoon as poſſibly he could, into that bleſſed Place, where God's majeſtick Preſence appears, and where Thrones, Dominions, Principalities, Powers, Angels, and Arch-Angels have their Abode.

DISSERTATION IV.

Of our Bleſſed SAVIOUR'S DOCTRINE, and the Excellency of his RELIGION.

The internal Evidence of the Chriſtian Religion.

THE Completion of the Prophecies, relating to the promis'd Meſſiah, in the Perſon and Actions of our Saviour Chriſt, and the Miracles, which he wrought, in Teſtimony of his Divine Miſſion, and in Conformity to what the Meſſiah was to do, were the Subjects of the two preceding Diſſertations, as the great external Evidences of the Truth of our Holy Religion; and the internal Evidence is, the Goodneſs and Perfection of thoſe Precepts, relating to Practice, which he hath enjoin'd, and of thoſe Doctrines, relating to Faith, which he hath taught us in the Courſe of his Goſpel, and which, when duly conſider'd, will manifeſt the Excellency of the Chriſtian Religion above all others.

In its practical Part.

NOW the practical Part of our Holy Religion, or thoſe Precepts, which were intended to direct us in our Duty towards God and Man, are ſuch, as either tend to the Perfection of human Nature, or to the Peace and Happineſs of human Society. Of thoſe, which tend to the Perfection of human Nature, ſome enjoin Piety towards God, and others require the good Government of ourſelves with reſpect to the Pleaſures of his Life; and our Buſineſs is to ſhew, that all and every of theſe are both conformable to the Dictates of right Reaſon in their Practice, and declarative of the Wiſdom of God in their Appointment.

As it relates to the Happineſs of private Perſons.

(g) 1. THAT we ſhould inwardly reverence and love God, and expreſs that Reverence by external Worſhip and Adoration, and by our Readineſs to receive and obey all the Revelations of his Will; that we ſhould teſtify our Dependance upon him, and our Confidence in his Goodneſs, Goodneſs by conſtant Prayers and Supplications to him for Mercy and Help, both for ourſelves and others; that we ſhould acknowledge our Obligations to him for the many Favours and Benefits, which, every Day, every Moment, we receive from him, by continual Praiſes and Thankſgivings; and that, on the contrary, we ſhould not entertain any unworthy Thoughts of God, nor give that Honour and Reverence, which is due to him, to any other; that we ſhould not worſhip him, in any Manner, that is, either unſuitable to the Perfections of his Nature, or repugnant to his revealed Will; that we ſhould carefully avoid the Profanation of his Name, by cuſtomary Swearing or Curſing; and take great Heed, that we be not guilty of the Neglect or Contempt of his Worſhip, or of any other Thing, that belongs to him: In ſhort, (h) that we ſhould poſſeſs our Minds with ſuch a due Senſe of the Majeſty, and Holineſs, and Juſtice, and Goodneſs of God, as may make us, upon all Occaſions, thoroughly fearful to offend him; of his Majeſty, leſt we affront it by being irreverent; of his Holineſs, leſt we offend it by being carnal; of his Juſtice, leſt we provoke it by being preſumptuous; and of his Goodneſs, leſt we forfeit it by being unthankful. Theſe are the general Heads of thoſe Duties, which every Man's Reaſon tells him he owes to God, and yet theſe are the very Things, which the Chriſtian Religion expreſsly requires of us; ſo that, in this Part of Chriſtianity, there is nothing, but what exactly agrees with the Reaſon of Mankind.

IN reſpect to the good Government of ourſelves, amidſt the Pleaſures and Enjoyments of this Life, St John, when he tells us, that (i) all that is in the World, is the Luſt of the Fleſh, the Luſt of the Eye, and the Pride of Life, diſtributes the irregular Appetites of Men into three Kinds, Voluptuouſneſs, Covetouſneſs, and Ambition, anſwerable to the three Sorts of tempting Objects, that are in the World, Pleaſures, Riches, and Honours; but, when our holy Religion requires of us, that (k) we ſhould not walk after the Fleſh, but after the Spirit; that we ſhould, in ſhort, (l) walk decently, as in the Day, not in Rioting and Drunkenneſs, not in Chambering and Wantonneſs, but, (m) being holy in all Manner of Converſation, (n) abſtain from fleſhly Luſts, which war againſt the Soul; when it gives us this ſtrict Caution (o) to take heed, and beware of Covetouſneſs, becauſe a Man's Life, or the Happineſs of his Life, conſiſteth not in the Things, which he poſſeſſeth; and calls upon us ſo frequently (p) to be meek and lowly in Spirit, and not (q) to mind high Things; to (r) let nothing be done through vain Glory, but, in Lowlineſs of Mind, to let each eſteem other better than themſelves; 'tis plain, that it lays a Prohibition upon all ſuch irregular Appetites and Paſſions, as are the Bane of human Eaſe and Happineſs, and enjoins ſuch Virtues and good Diſpoſitions, as are not only highly reaſonable, ſuitable to our Nature, and every Way for our temporal Convenience and Advantage, but ſuch, as diſpoſe us likewiſe to the Practice of Piety and Religion, by purifying our Souls from the Droſs and Filth of ſenſual Delights.

And the Peace of publick Societies.

2. IN relation to the other Sort of Precepts, which (as we ſaid) tend to the Peace and Happineſs of human Society, they are ſuch, as enjoin all thoſe Virtues, that are apt to ſweeten the Spirits, and allay the Paſſions and Animoſities, which ſometimes happen among Men. For when our moſt holy Religion requires us to love our Neighbour (i. e. every Man in the World, even our greateſt Enemies) as ourſelves, and, in Purſuance of this general Precept, if it be poſſible, and as much as in us lies, to live peaceably with all Men; to be kind to one another, ready to gratify and oblige thoſe, that we converſe with, to be tender-hearted, and compaſſionate to thoſe, that that are in Want, and Miſery, and ready, upon all Occaſions, to ſupply and relieve them; to ſympathize with one another in our Joys and Sorrows, to mourn with thoſe that mourn, and to rejoice with them that rejoice; to bear one another's Burthens; and to forbear one another in Love; to be eaſily reconciled to them, that have offended us; and to be ready to forgive from our Hearts the greateſt, and moſt reiterated Injuries, that can be done us; it diſcovers itſelf not only to be the moſt innocent and harmleſs, but the moſt generous and beſt-natur'd Inſtitution, that ever was in the World.

In like Manner, when our holy Religion endeavours to ſecure the private Intereſts of Men, as well as the publick Peace, by confirming and enforcing all the Dictates of Nature concerning Juſtice and Equity; by recommending the great Rule of doing to others what we would have them to do to us, as the Sum and Subſtance of the Law and the Prophets; by commanding Obedience to human Laws, which decide Mens Rights, and Submiſſion to all Government, under Pain of Damnation; and by forbidding whatever is contrary to theſe, viz. Violence and Oppreſſion, Fraud and Over-reaching, Perfidiouſneſs and Treachery, Breach of Truſts, Oaths or Promiſes, Undutifulneſs to Superiors, Sedition and Rebellion againſt Magiſtracy and Authority; and if there be any Thing elſe, that is apt to diſturb the Peace of the World, and to alienate the Affections of Men from one another, ſuch as Sourneſs of Diſpoſition, and Rudeneſs of Behaviour, Cenſoriouſneſs, and ſiniſter Interpretation of Things; in ſhort, all croſs and diſtaſteful Humours, and whatever elſe may render Converſation uneaſy or unſociable: When the Laws of Chriſtianity, I ſay, forbid theſe Vices and evil Diſpoſitions, and, upon every Occaſion, command the contrary Virtues, (s) Whatſoever Things are true, whatſoever Things are honeſt, whatſoever Things are juſt, whatſoever Things are pure, whatſoever Things are lovely, whatſoever Things are of good Report, if there be any Virtue, if there be any Praiſe, requiring us to think of theſe Things; we cannot but allow, that nothing can be deviſ'd more proper and effectual, to advance the Nature of Man to its higheſt Perfection, to procure the Tranquillity of Mens Minds, to eſtabliſh the Peace and Happineſs of the World, and (if they were duly practis'd,) to make it, as it were, an Heaven upon Earth, than the Precepts, which we find recorded in the Goſpel: And (what is no ſmall Commendation of them) there is nothing in all theſe Precepts, but what, if we were to conſult our own Intereſt and Happineſs, we ſhould think ourſelves obliged to do, even tho' it were never enjoin'd us; nothing, in ſhort, but what is eaſy to be underſtood, and as eaſy to be practiſed by every honeſt and well-meaning Mind.

An Objection againſt the Practicableneſs of ——

Some, indeed, have repreſented even the moral Part of the Chriſtian Religion, as an heavy Burthen, and grievous to be borne, difficult to be kept, and yet dangerous to be broken; that it requires us to govern and keep under our Paſſions, to contradict our ſtrongeſt Inclinations, and, many Times, to deny ourſelves even lawful Enjoyments; that it enjoins us to forgive and love our Enemies, to bleſs them that curſe us, to do good to them that hate and perſecute us; and (what is more) that it commands us to part with all the Advantages of this World, and even to lay down Life itſelf, in the Cauſe of God, and the Diſcharge of a good Conſcience. Hard Sayings theſe, in ſome Mens Opinion, and ſuch as our Nature, in its State of Degeneracy, is not able to perform: But this is for Want of duly conſidering the Obligation, and Tendency of ſuch Duties.

Self-denial.

Some of the wiſeſt Heathens, even by the Strength of Reaſon, were able to diſcover the general Corruption of human Nature, but then they were ignorant both of the Riſe and Progreſs of it; whereas, by the Chriſtian Revelation, we are ſufficiently inſtructed in both. Here we find the baneful Venom of our firſt Anceſtors Tranſgreſſion entailed on their Poſterity; here the perpetual Strugglings of Fleſh and Spirit, and that Violence of Paſſions and Deſires, that ſo often carries us into Exceſſes, which our ſober and better Senſe cannot but diſapprove; and here that general Bent to Evil, and Backwardneſs to Good, which every one (but ſuch as are obdurate and inſenſible) is forc'd both to feel and lament; and therefore, ſince the Goſpel does not only ſhew us our Diſeaſe, but the Malignity and true Original of it, there is good Reaſon, why it ſhould be allow'd to preſs upon us the great Duties of Mortification and Self-denial, as the beſt Means, within the Compaſs of human Power, to cure us of it.

---

(t) The Heathen Sages, in the Paſſage of their Hercules fighting with Antæus, ſeem to inſinuate, that the only Way to gain the Maſtery over our Paſſions, is never to ceaſe contending with them. Whilſt Hercules graſped his Adverſary, and held him up in his Arms, he could manage and maſter him with Eaſe, but no ſooner did he let Antæus touch the Earth, but he got Strength again, and was able to renew the Combat. Antæus's touching the Earth is morally no other, than an earthly Affection permitted to its Element, i. e. ſuffer'd to have its Fill; at which Time it gets Strength, and grows maſterly, and becomes leſs manageable than it was before: Whereas, to grapple with our Deſires, to hold them off from the Reach of their Quarry, and to reſtrain them, even from the lawful Meaſures of Enjoyment, is the only Way, both to bring them into Subjection, and to confirm our Government over them.

The Truth is, every Time that we indulge our Appetites beyond what is convenient, we give away ſo much Power out of our own Hands, we ſtrengthen the Enemy for the next Attack, and diſable ourſelves ſtill more for reſiſting it: And therefore, as the Chriſtian State is deſervedly called a Warfare, i. e. the neceſſary and continual Engagement of our rational Deſires againſt our ſenſual, in order to bring them under, and keep them in Obedience; and as, in this Warfare, there muſt be no League, no Truce, no laying down of Arms, becauſe the Enemy is perfidious, and will never keep the Peace; ſo are we never out of Danger, but while we are actually fighting. (u) The more we gratify our Appetites, the more craving they will be, and the more impatient of Denial; for every Luſt is a Kind of Hydropick Diſtemper, and, in this Caſe too, the more we drink, the more we ſhall thirſt. If we give way to our Paſſions, we do but gratify ourſelves for the preſent, in order to our future Diſquiet; but, if we reſiſt and conquer them, we lay the Foundation of perpetual Peace and Tranquillity in our Minds: So that, in the whole, by retrenching our Deſires, eſpecially when they prove exorbitant, we do not rob ourſelves of any true Pleaſure, but only prevent the Pain and Trouble of farther Diſſatisfaction.

Forgiving of Enemies.

(x) The ancient Moraliſts, tho' they ſometimes decry an Inſenſibility of juſt Provocations, as a Mark of an abject and little Soul; yet, upon no Occaſion, are they ſo profuſe in their Praiſes, as where they ſpeak of Perſons, touch'd with a Senſe of Injuries and Indignities, and yet able, with a generous Contempt, to overlook, and ſhew themſelves above them; for the paſſing by, and forgetting ſuch Things, the being very hardly incens'd, and very readily appeas'd again, is conſtantly ſet forth, as one of the brighteſt Virtues, that give Luſtre to a brave and truly noble Mind. And, if ſuch were the Notions of Heathens, who profeſs'd to follow no other Guide, but the Light of Reaſon, Reaſon, ſurely the Duty of loving and forgiving thoſe, that have injur'd and offended us, cannot be a Taſk ſo very difficult to Chriſtians, who, in Matters capable of any tolerable Conſtruction, are requir'd to put on that Charity, (y) which believeth all Things, hopeth all Things, endureth all Things; and, in the worſt that can be, ſuch a generous Greatneſs of Mind, as puts away from us all Bitterneſs, and Wrath, and Clamour, and Evil-ſpeaking, with all Malice; ſuch, as ſhould make us kind and tender-hearted, (z) reſtoring thoſe that are overtaken in a Fault, in the Spirit of Meekneſs; and ſuch, as ſhould prevail with us, (a) to forbear one another, and to forgive one another, even as God, for Chriſt's Sake, hath forgiven us.

And indeed, he, who conſiders, that the very Foundation of our Religion is laid in the Belief and Profeſſion of a Pardon extended to the higheſt of all Provocations, of Love inconceivable to the worſt of all Enemies, and both theſe expreſs'd and effected by a Perſon, the moſt highly injur'd, and in a Method, the moſt beneficial, the moſt amazingly kind; inſomuch, that no Inſtance of Generoſity or Goodneſs beſides preſents us with any Thing like it, with any Thing near it, with any Thing fit to be nam'd with it: He, who conſiders this, I ſay, cannot but acknowledge, that the Precept of loving and forgiving our Enemies is peculiarly ſuitable to the Condition of Chriſtians, who owe all their Hopes and Happineſs to it; and that it would have been abſurd not to have oblig'd thoſe Men to a Virtue, which they confeſs themſelves ſo infinitely beholden to, and (b) which no Man can think a grievous Command, who conſiders the Pleaſure and Sweetneſs of Love, the glorious Victory of overcoming Evil with Good, and then compares theſe with the reſtleſs Torments and perpetual Tumults of a malicious and revengeful Spirit.

And taking up our Croſs, all anſwer'd.

(c) 3. The Stoicks of old repreſented their wiſe Man, as no more concern'd at the Loſs of his Eſtate, his Liberty, or Life, than if they were the Rattles, or Gewgaws of a Child, which might afford him ſome little Eaſe, and preſent Diverſion indeed, but were by no means eſſential, or, in any Degree, neceſſary to his real Happineſs. This however is a Flight too romantick to be credited. To lay down this Life and all the Comforts of it, while Men were ſo much in the Dark about another, and to expoſe the Body to Sufferings, when doubtful, and in Diſtruſt about the Soul, is too great an Infraction upon Self-Preſervation, becauſe it is to part with one's all, at leaſt our all in Certainty, and Opinion: But to do this, when Men know the Reality of a future State, and the Value of their immortal Souls; (d) to fear him, who, when he hath killed, can caſt both Body and Soul into Hell, rather than them, who can only kill the Body, and, after that, have no more that they can do; to receive, embrace, rejoice in (e) the light Affliction, which is but for a Moment, when thoroughly perſuaded, that it worketh out for us a far more exceeding, and eternal Weight of Glory; this is not to deſtroy, but to ſave, and profit ourſelves, and what, in the Affairs of this World, we eſteem it our Wiſdom to do every Day.

If, by any ſad Accident, our Houſe happens to be ſet on fire, no Man is to be blam'd for doing his beſt to ſave his Goods; but, when that is found impracticable, every wiſe Man will chuſe to leave all, and eſcape naked, rather than, out of a fooliſh Fondneſs for any Furniture of Value or Curioſity, there ſtay, and periſh with it. Now this is no improper Emblem of the Caſe before us. When the Fire of Perſecution breaks out among us, we have our Lord's Permiſſion, by all prudent and honourable Methods, to decline it; but, when it comes at laſt to catch upon theſe earthly Tabernacles, i. e. when our Circumſtances admit of no other Choice, but either ſinning or ſuffering, the Loſs

Loſs of our Lives, or the Loſs of our Virtue, we owe it then, not only to God, but to ourſelves, rather to quit this Houſe of Fleſh than bring the glorious Inhabitant in it into Danger of being bury'd in its Ruins.

UPON the Whole therefore, this taking up our Croſs, or ſuffering upon the Account of Religion, is not chuſing Evil, as ſuch, but chuſing an infinitely leſs Evil, which, in this Reſpect, is a great Good. 'Tis not expoſing ourſelves, when we might be ſafe, but, where we cannot be ſafe in our whole Perſons, redeeming one Part with another, the better with the worſe; 'tis not ſuſtaining a Loſs, but making an Exchange, an Exchange of fugitive and periſhing Goods, for laſting and ſubſtantial, and parting with ſomething of leſs Value, in order to receive anther Thing unſpeakably better, and more deſirable.

THUS it appears, that the three great Precepts, which are commonly objected againſt, as heavy Impoſitions, are the neceſſary Reſult of the State and Circumſtances wherein we are plac'd: That the Duty of denying ourſelves ariſes from the Corruption of the Nature, we are born with; that of loving our Enemies, from the very Genius, and Foundation of the Religion, we live under; and that of taking up our Croſs, from ſuch prudential Conſiderations, as make us always chuſe the leſs Evil; and are all ſo ſuited to the Reaſon of Mankind, that we find ſome of the beſt Improvers of it preſcribing the ſame Rules to their Diſciples; (f) which is enough to convince us, that our Lord, who has opened the Kingdom of Heaven to all Believers, ought not by any Means to be accounted an hard Maſter, when he impoſes no other Terms, than the Heathens thought fit to engage in, upon the mere Spur of private Conſcience or publick Shame; and that ſpeechleſs, and without Apology, a great Part of the Chriſtian World muſt needs ſtand in the Day of Enquiry, when it ſhall appear that Pythagoras, and Plato, and Zeno could have their Scholars run through ſuch Diſcipline, as neceſſary to the Character of a virtuous Man, which thoſe, who profeſs Chriſt, are not aſham'd to call fooliſh and needleſs, only becauſe it is unpleaſing.

4. THE other Part of the Chriſtian Religion is (as we ſaid) thoſe Doctrines, which were deſign'd for the Direction of our Faith in Matters, that were not ſufficienly revealed before.

The Doctrines of Chriſtianity.

(g) THAT there is one ſupreme, abſolute, and independent Cauſe, and Original of all Things, eternal, infinite, all-powerful, all-ſufficient, the Maker and Lord of all Things, himſelf deriv'd from none, made of none, begotten of none, proceeding from none; that by him all Creatures, material and immaterial, viſible and inviſible, animate and inanimate, rational and irrational, mortal and immortal, in Heaven, and in Earth, were made, or created out of nothing: That, having made the World at firſt, he ſtill governs it by his perpetual Providence, inſomuch, that the moſt fortuitous Accident does not happen, a Sparrow does not fall to the Ground, nor an Hair from our Heads, without his Permiſſion or Direction; that, in the Exerciſe of this his Providence, every Thing is ſubmitted to his Will; no Strength can reſiſt his Power, no Swiftneſs can flee from his Preſence, no Secrecy can conceal from his Knowledge, no Art can evade his Juſtice, and every Creature participates of his Goodneſs: That this infinite and Almighty Being did, from all Eternity, and long before any Ages commenc'd, in an ineffable Manner, (which the Scriptures call Generation) communicate the Eſſence of the Godhead ſo entirely to his Son, as to make him the ſame with himſelf, very God of very God: That this eternal Son of God, having a Being in the Boſom of his Father, was Partaker of his Glory and Power in the Creation and Government of the World, and, by the Divine Appointment, is our Saviour, Mediator, Interceſſor, and Judge: That, having a tender Compaſſion for ſinful Man, and willing to procure for him the Grace of Repentance, he voluntarily condeſcended to take our Nature, with all its innocent Infirmities upon him: That, in this Nature, (miraculouſly conceiv'd, and born of a Virgin) he liv'd a Life, as we do, and was affected, as we are, (but without Sin) revealed unto us his Father's Will, and did many wonderful Works in Confirmation of his Divine Miſſion: That, after a Life ſpent in doing Good, he ſubmitted, in his Human Nature, to a painful and ignominious Death, that thereby he might make an Atonement to God, and Reconciliation for our Sins: That, after a Stay of three Days in the Grave, by his Almighty Power, he rais'd himſelf to Life again, convers'd upon Earth for the Space of forty Days, inſtructed his Diſciples in Matters relating to his Kingdom, and, at length, in the Sight of a great Number of Spectators, aſcended viſibly into Heaven: That, upon his Aſcenſion, he was exalted to the Right-Hand of God, where he now makes Interceſſion for us, and is inveſted with all Power and Authority, wherewith he governs the whole Church, and is hereafter to judge the whole World: That, upon his Inveſtiture, he ſoon ſent down the Holy Ghoſt (the third Perſon in the Ever-Bleſſed Trinity) to be the immediate Comforter and Director of his Apoſtles, to lead them into all Truth, to inſpire them with the Gift of Tongues, and to impart to their Followers ſuch other Gifts, as might beſt ſerve the End of their Miniſtry: That this Bleſſed Spirit ſtill continues with all good Men, and (b) by illuminating their Underſtandings, rectifying their Wills and Affections, renewing their Natures, uniting their Perſons to Chriſt, and helping the Infirmities of their Prayers with his own Interceſſion, is the great Sanctifier of their Souls and Bodies, in order to make them acceptable in the Sight of God for ever: Theſe (together with the Doctrines of the Immortality of the Soul, the Reſurrection of the Body, and, after their Re-Union, an eternal State of Miſery or Happineſs in the other World) are the great and fundamental Principles of the Chriſtian Religion, and Myſteries (as the Apoſtle (i) calls them) which have been hid from Ages, and from Generations, but are now made manifeſt to the Saints.

The Objection againſt theſe Doctrinal Points.

“But how are theſe Things made manifeſt (ſays the Objector preſently) when, notwithſtanding all the pretended Light of Revelation, they ſtill remain obſcure and unintelligible? Some Articles of the Chriſtian Faith, ſuch as the Exiſtence of a God, the Diſpenſations of Providence, the Spirituality of our Souls, a future State, and future Judgment, we readily allow, becauſe theſe are founded in the Nature of Things, and riſe in the Mind upon the Diſquiſitions of Reaſon, but, as for the Stories of a Trinity in Unity, a Co-Equality in the Son, the Incarnation of a God, and the Propitiation made by the Man Chriſt Jeſus, of theſe we can frame no Manner of Conception, and therefore you muſt excuſe us, if we do not believe them; for where is the Crime of not performing Impoſſibilities, or of not believing what does not appear to us to be true?”

Anſwered, from the Conſideration of the Things themſelves.

It cannot be deny'd indeed, but that, in the Chriſtian Religion, there are many great Myſteries, or Doctrines of too much Sublimity for the Powers of Reaſon, unaſſiſted by Revelation, to find out, or, when diſcovered, fully to comprehend; but this is no more than what we might reaſonably expect, conſidering the Nature and Quality of the Things, it treats of. In its main Intendment, it is a Kind of Comment upon the Divine Nature, or an Inſtrument to convey right Conceptions to the Soul of Man, as far as it is capable of receiving them. But now God, we know, is an infinite Being, without any Bounds or Limitations tions of his Eſſence; wonderful in his Actions, inconceivable in his Purpoſes, and inexpreſſible in his Attributes; and how can ſuch vaſt and mighty Things be crouded in a little finite Underſtanding? How ſhall our poor, ſhort Faculties be able to meaſure the Lengths of his Eternity, the Breadth and Expanſions of his Immenſity, the Heights of his Preſcience, the Depth of his Decrees, and, leaſt of all, the unutterable, incomprehenſible Myſtery of two Natures united into one Perſon, and again of one and the ſame Nature diffus'd into a triple Perſonality? When a Man, that is born blind (as (k) one expreſſes it) ſhall be able, on Hear-ſay, to conceive in his Mind all the Varieties and Curioſities of Colours, or to draw an exact Scheme of ſome fine City, or Map of ſome large Province, then may we expect, in this degenerate State of our Underſtanding, to comprehend the Ways of the Almighty, and by ſearching find out God: But (to do Juſtice to the Argument on the other Side) as it would be extreamly fooliſh and irrational for a blind Man to affirm, that there is no ſuch Thing as Colours, or Lines, or Pictures, becauſe he finds that he cannot form in his Mind any true Perception of them; ſo would it be equally, if not ſuperlatively more unreaſonable for us to deny the great Myſteries of our Faith, becauſe the Plummet of our Reaſon will not reach them.

While we continue in this State of Imperfection, we muſt be content (l) to know in Part: A full and adequate Perception of theſe ſublime Myſteries is reſerv'd, as a principal Ingredient of our Felicity and Happineſs above, when all the Heights and Depths, which we now ſtand amaz'd at, ſhall be made clear and familiar to us; when God ſhall diſplay the hidden Glories of his Nature, the Wonders of his Providence, and the Wiſdom of his Counſels; and, with all, fortify the Eye of the Soul to ſuch a Degree, as to make it able (as far as the Capacities of an Human Intellect can be able) to behold, and take them in.

From Matth. xx. 10. to the End, Mark xi. 15. to the End, Luke xix. 45. to the End, and John xii. 19. to the End.

A Diſtinction between Things above, and Things againſt Reaſon.

To have a right Notion of the Doctrines of our Religion however, we are to diſtinguiſh between thoſe Things that are above Reaſon, and incomprehenſible, and thoſe, that are againſt Reaſon, and utterly inconceivable. (m) Some Things are above Reaſon, becauſe of their tranſcendent Excellency and Diſtance from us; whereas thoſe, that are againſt Reaſon, involve a Contradiction, and have a natural Repugnancy to our Underſtandings, which cannot conceive any Thing, that is formally impoſſible. And from hence it will follow, that tho' we neither can, nor ſhould believe thoſe Things that are contrary to our Reaſon, yet we both may, and ought to believe thoſe that are above it: And the Reaſon is, (n) becauſe the only Evidence, we can give of our acknowledging the infallible Truth of God, is by aſſenting to what he affirms upon his own Authority.

Why we ought to aſſent to the former, and why it is reaſonable to expect ſuch in a Divine Revelation.

In aſſenting to a Propoſition, whoſe Truth we perceive from the Reaſon of the Thing, we do not aſſent upon any Authority at all. To ſuch a Propoſition we ſhould aſſent, tho' it were affirm'd by the moſt fallible Man, nay, tho' it were affirm'd by the moſt notorious Lyar; and, conſequently, our aſſenting to ſuch a Propoſition is no Manner of Proof that we acknowledge the infallible Veracity of God. This can only appear by our aſſenting to a Propoſition, whoſe Truth we do not perceive by any Evidence from the Nature of the Thing; for here we aſſent upon the ſimple Authority of God's Affirmation, and our Aſſent is an explicit Acknowledgment of his abſolute Veracity. If then it be reaſonable to expect, in a Divine Revelation, that God ſhould require our Acknowledgment of this Attribute eſpecially, (and without ſuch Acknowledgment no Revelation would be of any Uſe)

Uſe) and if this Acknowledgment can appear only by our aſſenting, upon the Authority of God, to ſuch Propoſitions, as we cannot perceive the Truth of by any internal Evidence; it certainly cannot be incongruous to expect ſuch Propoſitions in a Divine Revelation: Nay, much more incongruous would it be, and (o) a probable Objection againſt the Divinity of any Revelation, if we ſhould not find ſome Propoſitions of this Kind in it, becauſe it is hardly conceivable, why God ſhould make an external Revelation of thoſe Things only, which, by a due Exerciſe of our Reaſon, he has enabled us to find out.

SEEING it is ſo far from being unreaſonable, then, that it is highly expedient, and in ſome Sort neceſſary, that there ſhould be ſome Propoſitions above the Reach of human Underſtanding, in every Revelation, that comes from God; if we can but ſhew, that in the Chriſtian Syſtem there are no Doctrines, but ſuch, as ſtand clear of all Abſurdity and Contradiction, the more abſtruſe and myſterious they are, the more they deſerve our Belief, for this very Reaſon, becauſe, (p) if what is revealed concerning God were every Way eaſy, and adapted to our Comprehenſion, it could never reach, nor, with any Fitneſs, repreſent that Nature, which we all allow to be incomprehenſible.

No Contradiction or Abſurdity in any Doctrines of the Chriſtian Revelation.

THE Holy Scriptures, for Inſtance, teach us, that, in the Divine Nature (which can be but one) there are three diſtinct Perſons, to whom we aſcribe the ſame Attributes and Perfections, the ſame Worſhip and Adoration. This, indeed, is a Doctrine above our Comprehenſion, as to the Manner, how three ſhould be one, and one three (q); but ſtill we affirm, that there is no Contradiction in it, if we will but diſtinguiſh between Numbers, and the Nature of Things. For three to be one, indeed, is a Contradiction in Numbers, but whether an infinite Nature can communicate itſelf to three different Subſiſtences, without ſuch a Diviſion as is among created Beings, muſt not be determin'd by bare Numbers, but by the abſolute Perfections of the Divine Nature, which muſt be own'd to be above our Comprehenſion. The Holy Scriptures teach us, that the Son of God was made Fleſh, and dwelt amongſt us, and that therefore our Redeemer was both God and Man in one Perſon. This, we own, is, in its Nature, one of the great Myſteries of Godlineſs, as St Paul calls it; but then we muſt remember, that, in Reality, it is not much more difficult, than the Union of the Soul and Body in all Mankind, which, however unaccountable it may be to our Reaſon and Imagination, is too certain, in Fact, to be called in Queſtion. Once more the Holy Scriptures teach us, that our Saviour Chriſt, who was both God and Man in one Perſon, became the Redeemer of the World, by offering himſelf a Propitiation to God for Sinners. This, in many Reſpects, is a Myſtery too, and what we could not have known, had it not been revealed to us; but now that it is revealed, 'tis far from deſerving the Imputation of being abſurd. (r) That all Mankind are Sinners, and have fallen from their primitive Integrity, not only the Scriptures, but the conſtant Experience of our own irregular Appetites is but too convincing a Demonſtration. Now, ſince this was our Condition, and God was minded to reſcue us from it, but entirely at Liberty in what Method to effect it; ſince the Soul of our Saviour Chriſt was a free, immaculate Being, that might voluntarily ſuffer for us, if he pleas'd, and, by the Dignity of his Nature, inhance the Value of his Sufferings to the full Pardon of our Sins, upon his Father's Acceptance of a vicarious Sacrifice; there appears nothing in this Doctrine of Chriſt's Satisfaction, (now that we have it fully revealed to us) but what correſponds with common Reaſon, and all judicial Proceedings among Mankind.

But a great deal of Majeſty and Dignity in them.

These are ſome of the principal Doctrines that we (as Chriſtians) profeſs; and being they are free (when rightly conſidered) from all Appearance of Contradiction, (s) we may appeal to the Judgment of any conſiderate Perſon, whether it be not for the Dignity and Advantage of Religion, that ſome Articles of it ſhould exceed the largeſt human Comprehenſion: Whether we ſhould entertain the ſame awful Impreſſions of the Divine Majeſty, if the Perfections of his Nature and Operations were only ſuch, as we could ſee to the End of; Whether it does not raiſe the Value of Man's Redemption, to have it brought about by Miracles of Mercy, not only without Example, but even beyond our preſent Underſtanding. Had all theſe Things been leſs, we ſhould indeed have known them better; but then, ſo much as we abate of their Myſteriouſneſs, to bring them down to our Capacity, ſo much we impair their Dignity, and weaken the Power of them upon our Affections. It is therefore the very Commendation (as we ſaid before) and Excellency of theſe Doctrines, that they are ſo far above us; and we ought to eſteem it an Inſtance of the Divine Goodneſs, no leſs than Wiſdom, ſo to have temper'd his Revelations, that we want no Knowledge, enough to engage our Piety and holy Wonder, and yet have not ſo much, as ſhould deſtroy our Humility and godly Reverence; and, upon the whole, have Reaſon to believe, that it could not have been better, nay, probably not near ſo well, if either leſs had been diſcover'd to us, or leſs conceal'd from us.

The moral Tendency of the more obvious Doctrines of Chriſtianity.

The other Doctrines, which, in ſome Meaſure, were diſcoverable by the Strength of Reaſon, but have been ſet in full Light, and clear'd of all their Ambiguity and Doubtfulneſs by the Revelation of the Goſpel, ſuch as that of the Being of a God, the Inſpection of his Providence, the ſupreme End of Man, the Immortality of his Soul, the Reſurrection of his Body, a future Judgment, and an eternal State of Happineſs or Miſery hereafter, are ſo rational in themſelves, and have ſo natural a Tendency to what is the great End of all Religion, the Reformation of Mens Lives and Tempers, that a very ſmall Illuſtration will ſuffice to recommend them. For,

(t) What can be a more neceſſary and excellent Foundation of true Piety, than that Doctrine, which the Chriſtian Religion clearly and diſtinctly teaches us, concerning the Nature and Attributes of the only true God, who inhabits Eternity, and yet humbleth himſelf to behold the Things, that are in Heaven and Earth? What can afford more Comfort and Security in all Conditions of Life, than the Senſe of a Providence, (by which the very (u) Hairs of our Head are numbered) concerning itſelf for our Welfare, and, for that Reaſon, bidding us (x) to be careful for nothing, but, in every Thing, by Prayer and Supplication, with Thankſgiving, to make our Requeſts known unto God? What can be a more effectual Means to wean us from the Love of the World, and the Allurements of Sin, than to conſider, that the proper and ultimate End of Man is the Fruition of God, and that, tho' (y) it does not yet appear what we ſhall be, yet, this we know, that, when he ſhall appear, we ſhall be like him; for we ſhall ſee him as he is? What a greater Incitement to Purity and Holineſs, to Love, and Hope, and Heavenly-mindedneſs, than the Aſſurance given us in the Goſpel, that, when we are (z) diſſolved, we ſhall immediately be with Chriſt; that (a) this Corruptible ſhall put on Incorruption, and this Mortal put on Immortality; that our Souls, when they go hence, return to the God, that gave them, and our Bodies, when laid in the Duſt, after a ſhort Repoſe, are to be raiſed in Power, and (b) faſhioned like unto Chriſt's glorious Body? In fine, what ſtronger and more powerful Motive to deter us from Vice, and allure us to all Kind

Kind of Virtue, than the Diſcovery we have of God's having appointed a Day, wherein he will judge the World in Righteouſneſs, (c) and render unto every Man according to his Works; to them, who, by patient Continuance in well-doing, ſeek for Glory and Honour, and Immortality, eternal Life; but unto them, that are contentious, and obey not the Truth, but obey Unrighteouſneſs, Indignation and Wrath, Tribulation and Anguiſh upon every Soul of Man, that doth Evil. So that the Articles of our Chriſtian Faith, you ſee are far from being arbitrary Impoſitions, (d) calculated for the Exerciſe of our Credulity, or the Gratification of our idle Curioſity, but have an immediate Relation to Practice. They are indeed the genuine Principles and Foundations of all Human and Divine Virtues; and, (e) taken altogether, make a far more rational and conſiſtent Scheme of Belief, than what the wiſeſt antient Philoſopher ever thought of, or the moſt opinionative modern Unbeliever ever yet contriv'd.

The Reaſonableneſs and Benefits of the two Sacraments.

But beſides theſe Doctrines, there are two Ordinances, peculiar to the Chriſtian Religion which have an equal Tendency to Practice, and are ſo far from being vain and ſuperſtitious, (f) (as ſome are pleas'd to call them) that they carry their own Plea, and Juſtification along with them. For, what reaſonable Man can pretend to ſay, that it is any ways ſuperſtitious for every Member of the Society, which Chriſt has inſtituted, to be ſolemnly admitted into the Profeſſion of his Religion, by a plain and ſignificant Rite, entitling him to all the Privileges, and charging him with all the Obligations, which belong to the Members of that Society as ſuch, which is the Deſign of one of the Sacraments; or that it is unreaſonable, or ſuperſtitious, for Men frequently to commemorate, with all due Thankfulneſs, the Love of their greateſt Benefactor, and humbly and ſolemnly to renew their Obligations, and Promiſes of Obedience to him, which is the Deſign of the other? But then, if we conſider farther the manifold Benefits, which we receive from theſe ſacramental Ordinances, that, by the former, we are admitted to the Pardon of all our Sins, the Aſſiſtance of Divine Grace, the Adoption of Sons, and a Title to a glorious Inheritance; and that, by the latter, we have the Covenant of Mercy renew'd, our Breaches repair'd, and our Right to eternal Happineſs confirm'd; that, in both, in ſhort, we are made and recogniz'd to be the Children of God, and if Children, then (according to that happy Climax) are we Heirs, Heirs with God, and joint Heirs with Chriſt, to the Intent, that we may be glorified with him: If we conſider theſe great Privileges, I ſay, we ſhall ſoon perceive the Wiſdom and Love of our Maſter, and only Saviour, in thus (g) opening to us a Fountain for Sin, and for Uncleanneſs, and in thus giving us the (h) Medicine of Immortality, (as the Ancients ſtile the Euchariſt) an Antidote to preſerve Men from dying, and to give them a Life, that is everlaſting.

From Matth. xx. 10. to the End, Mark xi. 15. to the End, Luke xix. 45. to the End, and John xii. 19. to the End.

But, whatever inherent Efficacy ſome may think fit to aſcribe, or deny to theſe ſacred Ordinances, it can hardly be thought, but that, ſince (when they are duly obſerv'd) they are productive of many Virtues and good Diſpoſitions; (i) ſince, in the Sacrament of Baptiſm, we profeſs our ſincere Belief in the Truth of that Doctrine which God the Father revealed by his bleſſed Son, and confirm'd by the miraculous Operations of the Holy Ghoſt; in it declare our humble Acceptance of the Overtures of Mercy and Grace, purchas'd for us by our Saviour, and in this Sacrament exhibited to us; in it acknowledge our Obligations to all Piety, Righteouſneſs, and Sobriety, as loyal Subjects, faithful Servants, and dutiful Children to God; and in it devote ourſelves to the Faith and Obedience of God the Father, our great and glorious Maker, of God the Son, our great and gracious Redeemer, and of God the Holy Ghoſt, our bleſſed Guide and Comforter: And, in like Manner, ſince a devout Reception of the Supper of our Lord exerciſes and excites in us an awful Senſe of Mind, anſwerable to the Greatneſs and Holineſs of him, whom, at that Time, we approach; an hearty Contrition for our Sins, which expos'd our Saviour to ſuch Pains and Agonies, as are therein remember'd; a fervent Love and Gratitude to him, for his wonderful Goodneſs and Love to us; a deep Humility, upon the Senſe of our Unworthineſs to receive ſuch Teſtimonies of his Favour; a pious Joy, in Conſideration of the excellent Fruits accruing to us from his Performances; a comfortable Hope of obtaining the Benefits of his Paſſion, by the Aſſiſtance of his Grace; and, laſtly, an enlarg'd good-Will and Charity to all our Brethren, as being made Heirs of the ſame Hope, and not only waſh'd in the ſame Baptiſm, but fed at the ſame Table with ourſelves; ſince theſe, I ſay, are the Graces and Benefits, which accrue to us by theſe holy Ordinances, we cannot but applaud the Wiſdom of their Inſtitution, which affords ſuch mighty Helps to our Chriſtian Progreſs, and by the Bleſſing of God, are the happy Inſtruments both of our living well, and our living for ever.

From this brief Review of the Chriſtian Religion, it appears, that the Purity and Practicableneſs of its Precepts, the Truth and Sublimity of its Doctrines, and the Wiſdom and Piety of its ſacramental Inſtitutions cannot but recommend it to every Man's Conſcience, that is neither brib'd with Vice, nor tinctur'd with Infidelity; for (k) if our Goſpel be hid, if the Beauty and Excellency of our holy Religion be hid, it is hid to them, that are loſt, in whom the God of this World hath blinded the Minds of them, who believe not, leſt the Light of the glorious Goſpel of Chriſt, (who is the Image of God) ſhould ſhine unto them.

(l) And now, methinks, we may, with ſome Confidence, challenge any Religion in the World, to ſhew us ſuch a complete Body and Collection of Doctrines, both ſpeculative and practical; of Myſteries more ſublime, and rational withal, more agreeable to the Divine Nature, and more perfect of human Underſtanding; and of Rules and Precepts, that would make Men more pious and devout, more holy and ſober, more juſt and fair in their Dealings, better Friends, and better Neighbours, better Magiſtrates, better Subjects, and better in all Relations, than what we find recorded in the Goſpel.

Were there no other Argument of the Divinity of the Chriſtian Religion, but only the Excellency of the Doctrines which it teaches, this would be enough to convince any conſidering Man, that it came from God. (m) For, if it were nothing elſe but the Reſult of natural Reaſoning, why ſhould not other Religions in the World, and other Syſtems of Morality be as good as this? How comes the Doctrine of Jeſus Chriſt to excel thoſe of all the famous Legiſlators, and Philoſophers in the World? How comes an obſcure Perſon in Judea to draw up ſuch an admirable Scheme of Ethicks, that whatever is laid down by the Lycurgus's, and Numa's, and Plato's, and Ariſtotle's, ſhould not be comparable to it? How ſhould he, in one or two Years Preaching, nay, in one ſhort Sermon, advance the practical Doctrines to a greater Height and Pefection, than ever they were brought to by any of the Sects of Philoſophers, who had made it their Buſineſs to ſtudy them for ſome Ages? Moſt certainly, unleſs God had been aſſiſting in contriving this new Model of the Morality of Jeſus Chriſt, it is impoſſible that it could ever have equalled, much leſs ſo far exceeded that of the Grecian Schools, which had all the human Advantages, that he wanted, on their Side.

The Imperfection and Wickedneſs of natural or Pagan Religion.

It cannot be deny'd indeed, but that, almoſt in every Age, there have been, in the Heathen World, ſome wiſe, brave, and good Men, who have carry'd Human Reaſon to a great Height, and, in the Study and Diſquiſition of natural Religion, have made no mean Diſcoveries; but then, there is Room to ſuſpect, that their Diſcoveries of this Kind were not ſo much owing to the Strength and Sagacity of their own Reaſon, as to the Traditions, they might receive from their Anceſtors, or the Converſation, they might have with the Hebrews, who had all their Inſtruction from Revelation.

Whence the Heathen Philoſophers had their Knowledge.

That there were certain Principles deliver'd by God to Noah, and by him propagated among his Poſterity, through all Ages and Nations, is what we may eaſily conceive; and thence we may ſuppoſe, that many Points, which ſeem now to be Deductions from natural Reaſon, might have their Original from Revelation, becauſe Things, once diſcover'd, may ſeem eaſy, and obvious to Men, which they, notwithſtanding, would never, of themſelves, have been able to find out.

However this be, 'tis certain, that, as the antient Philoſophers might borrow many Helps from their Knowledge of the Jewiſh Religion, which was the only Revelation then pretended to; ſo (n) whoever compares the Writings of later Philoſophers, of Epictetus, Antoninus, and ſome others, who liv'd ſince the Goſpel got Footing in the World, with theirs, who went before them, will find ſo manifeſt a Difference, ſo much more unaffected Solidity, and ſo near a Reſemblance to ſome of the moſt exalted Chriſtian Precepts, as cannot well be accounted for, without ſuppoſing ſome Acquaintance with a Set of Principles, which they could not but approve and admire, and affected to engraft into their own Syſtems of Morality, tho' they never expreſly avow'd the Authority, on which they ſtand. Theſe were great Helps: And 'tis no Wonder, that under the Influence of theſe, they wrote ſo well. But if we look into the Tracts of thoſe, that went before them, and were unaſſiſted by Revelation, we ſhall find them miſerably ignorant of many important Points, that are deliver'd to us with the greateſt Perſpicuity.

Their Ignorance in ſeveral great Points.

They were ignorant (as we had occaſion to ſhew (o) before) of the Creation of the World, and the Origin of Mankind; ignorant of the Riſe of Evil, or the Cauſe of human Depravation; ignorant of any Form of Worſhip, that might be acceptable to God, and of any Way to appeaſe his Diſpleaſure; and quite ignorant of the Method, which he, in his eternal Counſel, had ordain'd, for the Recovery of loſt Man, without any Infraction upon his Attributes. They had but confus'd Notions of the Nature of the Supreme Being, and talk'd very inconſiſtently of the Summum Bonum, or ultimate Felicity of Man. They taught but little of God's exceeding Love towards us, and Deſire of our Happineſs; and were entirely ſilent as to the Divine Grace, and Aſſiſtance towards our Attainment of Virtue, and Perſeverance in it. The Immortality of the Soul was to them a moot Point: The Certainty of a future State they were not well agreed in; and, as for the Reſurrection of the Body, this, (p) in their very Seats of Learning, was thought a Doctrine highly abſurd and ridiculous. So doubtful, ſo ignorant were they in thoſe main and fundamental Points, which are the great Reſtraints of our inordinate Appetites; and therefore no Wonder, if, (q) having their Underſtanding darkened, (as the Apoſtle deſcribes them) and being alienated from the Life of God through the Ignorance that was in them, they gave themſelves up unto Laſciviouſneſs, and to work all Uncleanneſs with Greedineſs.

And groſs Impiety.

Nay, well had it been, had they confin'd their Lewdneſs and Debauchery within private Walls; but the Misfortune was, that they enter'd their Temples, and made no ſmall Part of their religious Worſhip. * They deify'd the worſt of Men, a drunken Bacchus, an effeminate Hercules, a Romulus unnatural to his Brother, a Jupiter as unnatural to his Father. (r) They paid Adoration, not only to the Ghoſts of ſuch as theſe, but to Birds, and Beaſts, and creeping Things, and even to the Devil himſelf, under Images of ſuch hideous Forms and Shapes, as were frightful to behold. Nay, and in the Worſhip of him, they made their Altars ſmoke with the Blood of Human Sacrifices, of their Sons, and their Daughters; and that in ſome Places, every Day, and, upon extraordinary Emergencies, (even as it is the Practice of ſome Pagan Countries at this very Time) in whole Hecatombs. So blinded were the Eyes of their Underſtanding, and ſo hardened their Hearts againſt all tender Impreſſions, by the Deceitfulneſs of Sin, and the Infatuation of the Devil.

And Wickedneſs.

Men may talk of the natural Light and Power of Reaſon, as long as they pleaſe; and the Topick perhaps is well enough for popular Eloquence to flouriſh upon: But, when we appeal to Experience, we ſhall ſoon find it empty Boaſt, and pompous Harangue. If ever there was a Time, when Human Reaſon might be a Guide in Matters of Religion, (s) it was, when our Saviour came into the World, or ſome Time before; when Knowledge of all Kinds, and particularly the Study of Philoſophy, was cultivated and improv'd with the greateſt Application, and by the ableſt Hands: And yet, it is hardly poſſible to read the firſt Chapter of the Epiſtle to the Romans, without Amazement, and many mortifying Reflections, to find rational Creatures capable of ſo wretched a Degeneracy, as to verify the Apoſtle's Deſcription of them, when he tells us that they (t) were filled with Unrighteouſneſs, Fornication, Wickedneſs; Covetouſneſs, Maliciousneſs; were full of Envy, Murther, Debate, Deceit, Malignity; were Whiſperers, Backbiters, Haters of God, Deſpiteful, Proud, Boaſters, Inventors of evil Things; were diſobedient to Parents, without Underſtanding, Covenant-Breakers, without natural Affection, implacable, unmerciful, and (what is worſe ſtill) not only did theſe Things themſelves, but took Pleaſure likewiſe in thoſe that did them.

In this Light it is, that the Apoſtle repreſents the State of the Heathen World, while it was under the Guidance of unaſſiſted Reaſon: And, if our Reaſon ſeems to guide us any better now; if it rejects thoſe deteſtable Deeds of Darkneſs, and impious Modes of Worſhips, which it once reverenc'd, and embrac'd, 'tis not becauſe its Faculties are in themſelves any clearer or ſtronger than they were, but becauſe it has ſubmitted its Weakneſs and Ignorance, its Pride and Paſſions, to the Light and Authority of the Chriſtian Revelation. (u) Take but away the Direction and Reſtraint of this Authority, and it will act juſt as it did, and relapſe into the ſame Extravagancies, the ſame Impiety, the ſame Folly and Superſtition, that prevailed on it before.

The Folly and Impiety of the Mahometan Religion.

And, if the Pagan Religion, when ſupported with the higheſt Improvements, of Human Underſtanding, fell ſo far ſhort of being a rational Service, what ſhall we

* Can any Thing be ſo ſtupid, as to load the Divine Nature with ſo many Crimes and Imperfections, as the Heathen Theology does: To make one God, and that the Supreme God too, an Adulterer, and another a Pimp; one Goddeſs a Scold, and another a Whore; to ſtock Heaven with Strumpets, and Sodomites, and Drunkards, and Baſtards; to make their Deities fighting and quarrelling, diſſembling, and lying; to be lame, and blind, and old, and wounded? Can any Thing be more fooliſh, than the Stories of their Theogony; of their Gods, not only begetting Children like Men, but eating them like Cannibals; their Battles with Titans, and Giants, and their running out of Heaven, for Security, upon Earth? What wretched ſilly Stuff is the Hiſtory of their Demi-Gods, or Heroes, of Perſeus, Theſeus, Orpheus, and all the other contradictious Tales, which we read in Ovid's Metamorphoſes, that is nothing elſe, but a Compendium of the Heathen Divinity. Nichols's Conference with the Theiſt, Vol. II. we ſay to the Mahometan, which invelops itſelf in Ignorance, and makes its main Foundation the Gratification of Mens brutal Luſts and Appetites? One would really wonder how ſo corrupt an Inſtitution came to ſpread ſo wide in the World, but that there was a Concurrence of Circumſtances, at that Time, which did not a little contribute to its Propagation.

The Occaſions of its Propagation.

(x) When Conſtantine, and his Followers had made the Profeſſion of the Chriſtian Religion not only ſafe, but honourable, Biſhops grew ambitious, and minded nothing ſo much, as their Advancement to the beſt Preferments. Schiſms and Hereſies over-ran the Church. Rites and Ceremonies were more eſteem'd, than Purity of Heart; and a general Corruption infected both Clergy and Laity alike. This Juncture, God, in his juſt Judgment, permitted Mahomet to lay hold on, to ſet up a new Religion, (y) which being a Kind of Medly, made up of Judaiſm, the ſeveral Hereſies then in the Eaſt, and the old Pagan Rites of the Arabs, (with an Indulgence to all ſenſual Delights, and the Inforcement of ſecular Power and Violence) did too well anſwer his Deſign in drawing or forcing Men of all Sorts to the Profeſſion of it; inſomuch, that it ſoon gave Birth to an Empire, which in eighty Years Time, extended its Dominions over more Kingdoms and Countries, than ever the Roman could in eight Hundred. And, altho' it continu'd in its Strength not above three hundred Years, yet, out of its Aſhes have ſprung up many other Kingdoms, and Empires, of which there are three at this Day the largeſt, and moſt potent upon the Face of the Earth, viz. the Empire of Turkey, the Empire of Perſia, and the Empire of the Mogul in India, which God, in his all-wiſe Providence, has permitted ſtill to continue, for a Scourge unto us Chriſtians, who, having receiv'd ſo holy, and ſo excellent a Religion through his Mercy to us in Chriſt Jeſus our Lord, will not yet conform ourſelves to live worthy of it.

From Matth. xx. 10. to the End, Mark xi. 15. to the End, Luke xix. 45. to the End, and John xii. 19. to the End.

No Argument for its being from God.

This we muſt obſerve however, that God does not always approve thoſe Actions and Deſigns, which, to demonſtrate the Wiſdom of his Providence, he is ſometimes pleas'd to permit and proſper; that a Religion propagated by Force, and ſupported by Methods of external Strength, is ſo far deſtitute of any Proof, that its Original is from Heaven; and that, when it contains ſuch Doctrines, as are repugnant to the Dictates of right Reaſon, or the known Properties and Attributes of God, it can be the Product of nothing elſe, but human Invention.

As appears from comparing the Doctrines.

(z) When therefore we find Mahomet eſtabliſhing his Religion by the Dint of the Sword, perſecuting with War all that would not ſubmit to it, and threatning, with no leſs than Death, all that pretended to diſpute the leaſt Article of it; (a) whereas the Chriſtian, quite otherwiſe, was planted in Weakneſs and Diſgrace, in Tears, and Prayers, and Patience, and water'd with the Blood of many Thouſands of its Profeſſors: When we find him allowing of Fornication, juſtifying Adultery, and talking of War, Rapine, and Slaughter, as Things enjoin'd, and commanded by Almighty God; whereas what we have learnt from Chriſt, and his Apoſtles, is, (b) to poſſeſs every one his Veſſel in Sanctification and Honour; not in the Luſt of Concupiſcence; to live peaceably with all Men; and, inſtead of invading any other's Property, (c) to take joyfully the ſpoiling of our Goods, knowing that we have in Heaven a better and an enduring Subſtance: When we find him, the better to allure his Followers, telling them (d) of pleaſant Gardens, curious Fountains, delicate Beds, and beautiful Women with black Eyes and fair Complexions in Paradiſe, with whom they ſhall enjoy continual

IF we proceed to compare the Tranſactions of Chriſt's Life, with thoſe, that are related of Mahomet; how our Bleſſed (g) Saviour went about doing Good, healing all Manner of Sickneſs, and of Diſeaſe among the People, giving Sight to the Blind, and Feet to the Lame, and Life to the Dead; how the Miracles which he wrought were ſolemn and grave, Acts of his Love to Mankind, and Demonſtrations of his Omnipotence; and (h) how thoſe, who embrac'd his Religion, in Virtue of thoſe Miracles, were Men of Innocence and Simplicity, who liv'd good Lives, and fear'd God, and were therefore, under the Divine Protection, ſecur'd from the Deceivableneſs of Error; whereas the Followers of Mahomet were a Gang of Robbers and Plunderers, void of all Piety, and all Humanity; himſelf a bold ambitious Man, greedy of Empire, and reſolv'd to raiſe himſelf, even at the Deſtruction of his Fellow-Creatures; and the Miracles reported of him, (ſuch as (i) his cleaving the Moon in two; the Trees going out to meet him; the Stones ſaluting him, the Camel, and the Shoulder of Mutton ſpeaking to him; and his wonderful Journey to Heaven, with all the ſtrange Sights, he there beheld) are, to the higheſt Degree, abſurd * and ridiculous: If we compare theſe Things together, I ſay, we ſhall ſoon perceive, in whom the Characters of a true Prophet meet, and who is to be deem'd the wicked Impoſtor; whoſe Religion was intended to civilize, and ſanctify human Nature, and, conſequently, is the Gift of God; and whoſe calculated to gratify the cruel and carnal Appetites of rude Barbarians, and, conſequently, is the Forgery of Man.

And the Inferiority of the Jewiſh Religion, compared with the Chriſtian.

THE Jewiſh Religion indeed deriv'd its Origin from Heaven, and Moſes, ſeems to glory in the Excellence of its Inſtitutes, when he aſks the People, (k) What Nation is there ſo great, that has Statutes and Judgments ſo righteous, as all this Law, which I ſet before you this Day? And yet, if we were to deſcend to an Examination, we ſhould ſoon perceive, in many great Diſcoveries, the Pre-eminence of the Goſpel above the Law.

be known by all, who would attain eternal Life; and it cannot be doubted, but that the Faithful, from the Beginning, had this Knowledge of God: but then, before the Coming of Chriſt, they had not ſo certain, ſo clear, and ſo diſtinct a Knowledge of theſe Things, as we have now under the Goſpel. For, over and above the Knowledge of theſe Things, which the Pious, before Moſes, had either from a ſerious Contemplation of the Works of God, or from the Tradition and Inſtruction of the Patriarchs, and which the Jews, in ſucceeding Ages, had from the Writings of Moſes and the Prophets; we Chriſtians have a more clear, more diſtinct, and evident Manifeſtation thereof, from the Books of the Evangeliſts and Apoſtles.

THE Faithful under the Jewiſh Diſpenſation, did, without doubt, believe God to be an inviſible, and omnipreſent Spirit; and yet his frequent Appearances, ſometimes under one Reſemblance, and ſometimes under another, the Building of an Ark, a Tabernacle, and Temple, whither he was pleas'd to call his People together into his immediate Preſence, and to talk with them (as Moſes (m) expreſſes it) Face to Face, muſt neceſſarily turn their Eyes and Minds towards the Mercy-Seat; make them apprehend God ſhut up, as it were, within the Holy of Holies, and, conſequently, perplex and obſcure their Notions of his Spirituality and Omnipreſence: Whereas there is no Room now, under the Goſpel, for any groſs Conceptions of the Deity, when we are called upon, not to turn our Eyes towards a viſible Tabernacle, but, (n) to pray every where, in any Place, lifting up holy Hands; and are taught by Chriſt, (o) that God is a Spirit, and that they, who worſhip him, worſhip him in Spirit and in Truth.

THE Believers under the Law, were perſuaded that all Things were order'd and govern'd by an all-wiſe and all-powerful Being; and yet the moſt ſagacious of them were not able to account for the Juſtice of Divine Providence, in ſuffering the Wicked to proſper, and the Righteous to be afflicted. But now, this Difficulty every common Chriſtian is able to ſolve, by the Help of what he has learned from the Goſpel, concerning the Retributions of a future State; and can apply to all ſuch Caſes the Reflection made by Abraham, on the rich Man's Deſire of ſome Relief from Lazarus, (p) Son, remember that thou, in thy Life-Time, receivedſt thy good Things, and likewiſe Lazarus evil Things; but now he is comforted, and thou art tormented.

The Nature of Sin.

2. THE Nature and Obliquity of Sin is what Men in all Ages, could not but perceive; but how to account for its Cauſe and Origin, they were at a ſtrange Loſs: And therefore, ſome imagin'd a pre-exiſtent State, from whence they brought Depravity along with them; while others deviſ'd two contrary Principles, equally actuating the World, the one the Author of all the Good, and the other of all the Evil, they did. (q) The Wickedneſs of Man (as Moſes tells us) was great in the Earth, and every Imagination of the Thoughts of his Heart was evil continually; but whether theſe Expreſſions are to be extended to the whole Race of Mankind, and ſo are a Proof of the general Depravation, has been doubted by ſome: Whereas all ſuch Doubts muſt now be ſilenc'd by the plain Aſſertions in the New Teſtament, that (r) by one Man Sin entered into the World, and Death by Sin, ſo that (s) by the Offence of one, Judgment came upon all Men to Condemnation; that all, who are of the Race of Mankind, are Sinners, Ungodly, Enemies of God, Children of the Devil, and by (t) Nature the Children of Wrath; that (u) when they would do Good, Evil is preſent with them, having a Law in their Members, warring againſt the Law of their Mind, and bringing them into Captivity to the Law of Sin; and that this is the State of deprav'd Nature, wherein Men are born, and wherein thoſe that live and die, ſhall (x) be puniſhed with everlaſting Deſtruction, from the Preſence of the Lord, and from the Glory of his Power.

Its Attonement.

3. And as the Goſpel gives us a more diſtinct Account of the Origin and Demerit of Sin, ſo does it furniſh us with a clearer Diſcovery of the Method whereby the Guilt of it is atton'd. Thoſe, who liv'd under the Moſaick Diſpenſation, were ſav'd by the ſame Means of Redemption, as we, who live under the Evangelical; but the Myſtery of our common Redemption was not, in any Degree, ſo fully manifeſted to them, as it is to us: And hence it is, that the Apoſtle compares the Writings of the Old Teſtament to a (y) Light, or (as the Original is to a Candle ſhining in a dark Place, but the Revelation which was made by Chriſt in the Goſpel, to the Day-Dawn, and the Day-Star ariſing in our Hearts. The Revelation made to the Jews was to them a Light, but a faint one; it ſhone, but in a dark Place. The Nativity, Life, and Death of Chriſt, the ſeveral Offices of his Mediatorſhip, the Remiſſion of our Sins through his Blood, the Sanctification of our Hearts by his Spirit, and the Glories of the World to come, were taught them, not in Words at length, but in Figures, and a dark Vail was over the Writings, as well as over (z) the Face of Moſes, ſo that the Children of Iſrael could not ſteadfaſtly behold his Doctrine, any more than they could his Countenance. In a Word, (a) they were ſav'd, as well as we, by the Blood of Chriſt; but there was as great a Difference between their Knowledge of the Myſtery of our Redemption by the Sacrifice of the Death of Chriſt, and ours, as there was between that dark Cloud, wherewith God led the People at one Time, and that Pillar of Light, wherewith he guided them at another.

Our Juſtification.

4. And as the Goſpel gives us clearer Notions of the Expiation of Sin, ſo does it exhibit a fuller Aſſurance of our being juſtify'd, or having our Sins pardon'd thereby. Religious Perſons, who liv'd before the Coming of Chriſt, knew that they were Sinners, and that they therefore had need of the Mercy and Favour of God, for the Remiſſion of their Sins; but then, being not ſufficiently inſtructed in the Method of obtaining God's Favour, they could not but groan ſorely under the Weight of them. Severe Curſes were denounc'd in the Law againſt all who ſhould, in any Caſe tranſgreſs it; theſe Curſes were plain, and eaſy to be underſtood; but the Promiſes of a Pardon, through the Merits of a Saviour, were more intricate and involv'd. When therefore the Danger, which threatened them, was ſo apparent, and the Methods of their Eſcape, ſo obſcurely notify'd to them, it is no Wonder, if their Fears did very much over-balance their Hopes. Hence it is, that the Spirit, by which they were govern'd, is, in the Goſpel, repreſented as a Spirit of Bondage, but the Spirit, by which we Chriſtians are influenc'd, is a Spirit of Adoption: (b) Ye have not now, ſays the Apoſtle, received the Spirit of Bondage again unto Fear; but ye have received the Spirit of Adoption, whereby we cry ABBA, FATHER, i. e. whereby we are as well aſſur'd of the Love of God, as a Child is of the Affection of an indulgent Father; as ſurely entitled to the Joys of Heaven, as an adopted Son is to the Inheritance of him, who therefore adopted him, that he might make him his Heir; for (as the Apoſtle goes on to diſplay the Privileges of the Chriſtian Diſpenſation) the Spirit itſelf beareth witneſs with our Spirit, that we are the Children of God; and if Children, then Heirs; Heirs of God, and Joint-Heirs with Chriſt.

And future Glory.

5. And as the Aſſurances, given us of this Inheritance, are greater; ſo, laſtly, is the Inheritance itſelf much more plainly revealed to us in the Goſpel, than ever it was before. Whatever could be learn'd of a future State from the Light of Reaſon, that, and much more, was known to the Jews: What by Reaſon, and by Revelation,

From Matth. xx. 10. to the End, Mark xi. 15. to the End, Luke xix. 45. to the End, and John xii. 19. to the End.

Revelation, was made known to the Jews concerning an immortal Life, that, and much more is manifeſted to us Chriſtians. The Texts, in which our future State is revealed to the Jews, are few, and here and there thinly ſcatter'd in ſome particular Books of the Old Teſtament; but there is no one Book, ſcarce one Chapter, in which this Doctrine is not taught in the New. Thoſe, in the Old Teſtament, are not ſo clear of Ambiguity, but that they are capable of another Interpretation; thoſe, in the New, are ſo plain and perſpicuous, that there is no Room for the moſt Ignorant to miſapprehend, or the moſt impious to pervert them: And therefore it is with great Juſtice, that, the Author of the Epiſtle to the Hebrews (who himſelf was excellently vers'd in the Knowledge of the Jewiſh Law) hath obſerv'd, that (c) the Law had only the Shadow of good Things to come, but not the very Image of the Things, i. e. it did, but obſcurely, and faintly typify the Glories of Heaven; not give us ſo bright an Image, and ſo lively a Repreſentation of the Rewards of another World, as is pictur'd out to us, and, in all its full Proportion and Lineaments, accurately deſcrib'd in the Goſpel.

(d) UPON the whole therefore it appears, how incomparably happy we Chriſtians are under the Goſpel, above what the Jews were in the Time of the Law; God having plac'd us under the beſt of Diſpenſations, under the cleareſt Diſcoveries and Revelations, and given us the moſt noble, rational, and maſculine Religion; a Religion the moſt perfective of our Natures, and moſt conducive to our Happineſs. And what indeed can be a nobler Privilege, what a more generous and delightful Pleaſure, what a more powerful Incentive to Obedience, than for a rational Creature clearly to diſcern the Equity, the Neceſſity, the Benefit, the Decency, and Beauty of every Action, he is called upon to do; and thence to be duly ſenſible how gracious a Maſter he ſerves; one, who is ſo far from loading him with fruitleſs and arbitrary Impoſitions, that each Command, abſtracted from his Authority who gives it, is able to recommend itſelf, and nothing requir'd, but what every wiſe Man would chuſe of his own Accord, and cannot, without being his own Enemy, ſo much as wiſh to be exempted from? (e) Bleſſed are the Eyes, which ſee the Things, that ye ſee; (ſays our Saviour to his Diſciples, and in them, to all Profeſſors of his Religion in ſucceeding Generations) for I tell you, that many Prophets and Kings have deſired to ſee thoſe Things, which ye ſee, and have not ſeen them, and to hear thoſe Things, which ye hear, and have not heard them. But in vain were theſe great Privileges conferr'd on us, unleſs we make an anſwerable Improvement of them; and far from bleſſed ſhall we be, when we come to appear before the dread Tribunal, unleſs we endeavour (f) in all Things to adorn the Doctrine of God our Saviour, who gave himſelf for us, that he might redeem us from all Iniquity, and purify unto himſelf a peculiar People, zealous of good Works.

From the Aſcenſion of CHRIST, to the Completion of the Canon of the New Teſtament, in all about 64 Years.

The HISTORY.

A. M. 4037, &c. Ann. Dom. 33, &c.

The Apoſtles, at Jeruſalem, after our Lord's Aſcenſion, elect Matthias into their Number. Acts i. 10. Luke xxiv. 51.

From Acts i. 10. to the End.

AFTER that our Bleſſed Saviour was aſcended out of Sight, the Apoſtles, and other Diſciples ſtill ſtood gazing up to Heaven, until two Angels, in the Shape of Men, and gloriouſly apparelled, came, and inform'd them, that their Lord and Maſter, who was then departed into Heaven, ſhould, at the great Day of Judgment, in the ſame viſible Manner, come again from thence; whereupon they all return'd to Jeruſalem, full of Joy and Conſolation, and, being about an hundred and twenty in Number, (beſides Mary the Mother of our Lord, and ſome other pious Women, who had attended him in his Miniſtry) they there ſpent their Time in Acts of religious Worſhip, aſſembling daily in a certain Upper Room †, which they had made choice of for that Purpoſe.

Acts i. 15.

In one of theſe Aſſemblies, St Peter reminding them, that the Number of the Apoſtles, which our Lord had appointed, was originally Twelve, but that Judas, by his Tranſgreſſion, had forfeited that Honour, thought proper to propoſe the Choice of another Perſon || to ſucceed in his Place; and

† Some Annotators are of Opinion, that the Upper-Room, where the Apoſtles, and other Believers ſo frequently met together, was one of the Chambers of the Temple, which not only ſerv'd for the Uſe of the Prieſts, but ſtood conſtantly open likewiſe for any religious Aſſemblies. 'Tis granted indeed, that in the Temple there were ſeveral Upper-Rooms, but then, that they belong'd to any, beſides the Prieſts and Levites, is an Aſſertion deſtitute of Proof; nor is it eaſy to conceive, how a Company of poor Fiſhermen and Galileans, who were odious to the Prieſthood for their Maſter's Sake, ſhould be permitted to come in ſuch Numbers, as the ſacred Hiſtory takes notice of, and to hold their Aſſemblies, which were thought deſtructive to the eſtabliſh'd Religion, within the Verge of the Temple. As therefore it was a Thing very common among the Jews to have their Oratories. or private Chaples, on the Tops of their Houſes, where they generally met to read the Law, and to treat of any religious Matters; ſo it is much more probable, that this was a Room belonging to ſome private Family, that were Converts to the Chriſtian Faith, where, conſequently, the Apoſtles, and other Profeſſors might meet to conſult about the Affairs of the Church, and to pay their Adorations to their Heavenly Maſter, without Fear of Moleſtation: And, if Conjectures may be allow'd in Matters of ſuch Uncertainty, 'tis not improbable, that their cuſtomary Place of meeting was at the Houſe of Mary, the Mother of John, whoſe ſirname was Mark, becauſe St Peter, upon his miraculous Eſcape out of Priſon, is ſaid to have gone directly thither, and there to have found ſeveral of his Brethren gather'd together, Acts xii. 12. Echard's Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory, Whitby's Annotations, and Calmet's Commentary.

|| The Words, according to our Tranſlation, are theſe,——That he might take Part of the Miniſtry, and Apoſtleſhip, from which Judas, by Tranſgreſſion, fell, that he might go to his own Place, Acts i. 25. Here ſeveral Commentators and Divines make ſeveral Reflections on the Modeſty and Charity of St Luke, the Author of the Acts of the Apoſtles, in that he does not ſay, that Judas was damn'd, but only, that he went to his Place, without pretending to determine the Matter; whilſt others imagine, that this Expreſſion denotes a particular Place of Damnation appropriated and eſpecially ſuch an one, as had been familiarly converſant with our Saviour from firſt to laſt, that ſo he might be a competent Witneſs both of his Doctrines and Miracles, his Life and Death, and eſpecially his Reſurrection from the Dead. To this, the Company readily aſſented; and, having appointed Joſeph[*], ſirnam'd Barſabas, and Matthias, one of the ſeventy Diſciples, for the two Candidates, they ſolemnly implor'd the Divine Direction in what they were going to do, and ſo, drawing Lots, elected Matthias (upon whom the Lot fell) into the Number of the Twelve Apoſtles.

And are all filled with the Holy Ghoſt. Acts ii. 4.

WHEN the Vacancy of the ſacred College was thus filled up, the Apoſtles, and other Diſciples were all met together in their accuſtom'd Place, on the Day of Pentecoſt[†]; when, on a ſudden, a prodigious Noiſe, much like the ruſhing of a loud impetuous Wind) filled all the Houſe, where they were, and a Kind of fiery Vapour, or Exhalation, form'd into the Figure of a Man's Tongue, but divided a little at the Tip, ſat on the Head of each of them; whereupon they were all immediately filled with the Holy Ghoſt[†], and, by its Divine Inſpiration, began to ſpeak in ſeveral different Languages.

AT this Time, there were Jews of every Quarter of the World ſojourning in Jeruſalem, beſides Proſelytes, who, from almoſt all Nations came thither to the Celebration of the Feaſt; and no ſooner did they hear of this miraculous Event, but they began to wonder not a little, how Perſons illiterate, and all born in the Land of Galilee, ſhould be able, with ſo much Facility, to ſpeak the Languages of the ſeveral Countries, from whence they came; but others, who were willing to elude the Force appropriated to Judas becauſe of the Heinouſneſs of his Crime: But, if we conſider the Original, we ſhall find, that the Words do not relate to Judas, but Matthias. Judas, by his Tranſgreſſion, had forfeited his Share in the Miniſtry: Another was to be choſen into it: This Perſon, when ſo choſen, ſucceeds him in his κλῆρον, his Lot, or Portion of the Miniſtry, and ſo is now to go to his τόπον τὸ, ἴδιον, proper Place or Province. 'Tis but then encloſing the Words, from which Judas by Tranſgreſſion fell, within a Parentheſis, and then they will have no Relation to the following, that he might go to his own Place: For theſe belong entirely to Matthias, or the Perſon, that ſhould be choſen into the Apoſtleſhip, and plainly denote, that he ſhould go, and take Poſſeſſion of the Place, or Office, which Judas had forfeited, and not at all, that Judas ſhould go to his Place of Puniſhment. Hammond's Annotations, and an Eſſay towards a new Tranſlation.

[*] He was one of our Lord's firſt Diſciples, and is reckon'd by the Ancients among the Number of the Seventy. Some ſuppoſe, that he was one of the Brethren, or Relations of our Bleſſed Saviour, whom the Goſpels make mention of; and Papias relates one Particular in his Life, viz. That, having on a certain Time, drank Poiſon, it had no Effect on him, as our Saviour had promis'd thoſe, who ſhould believe on him. However this might be, 'tis certain, that he continu'd in the Apoſtolick Miniſtry to the End, and, having ſuffer'd a great deal from the Jews, at laſt died in Judea, and there obtain'd a Crown of Martyrdom. Calmet's Commentary, and Fleury's Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory.

[†] This Word is deriv'd from the Greek, πεντηκοστὴ, which ſignifies the fiftieth, becauſe the Feaſt of Pentecoſt was celebrated the fiftieth Day after the ſixteenth of the Month Niſan, which was the ſecond Day of the Feaſt of the Paſſover, Lev. xxiii. 15, 16. and for the ſame Reaſon it is called the Feaſt of Weeks, becauſe it was obſerv'd ſeven Weeks after the Paſſover, Deut. xvi. 9. It was at firſt inſtituted in order to oblige the Jews to repair to the Temple of the Lord, there to acknowledge his Dominion and Sovereignty over all their Labours, and there to render Thanks to him for the Law, which he gave them on the like Day, viz. the fiftieth Day, after their Departure out of Egypt. In like Manner, the Chriſtian Church celebrates the Feaſt of Pentecoſt fifty Days, or ſeven Weeks after the Paſſover, or the Reſurrection of our Bleſſed Saviour, to put us in Remembrance, that the Gifts of the Spirit were then pour'd out in a plentiful Manner, as the Firſt Fruits of our Saviour's Aſcenſion into Heaven, and that the Goſpel began to be publiſh'd by the Apoſtles on the ſame Day, that the antient Law was given to the Hebrews. Calmet's Dictionary, Pool's and Beauſobre's Annotations.

[†] It is a Queſtion much debated, whether the all here mention'd, relates to the whole hundred and twenty, who are ſaid to have been preſent at this Time, Acts i. 15. or to the Twelve Apoſtles only: And, in ſome Meaſure to ſolve this, we may obſerve, that when the Apoſtles came to appoint the ſeven Deacons, they order'd the Aſſembly to look out among them Men full of the Holy Ghoſt, Acts vi. 3. which plainly implies, that there were ſeveral Perſons among them remarkable for ſuch extraordinary Gifts, yet we cannot ſuppoſe any Time ſo proper for their Reception of theſe Gifts as this wonderful Day of Pentecoſt. Nay, if the Apoſtles themſelves, by the Impoſition of their Hands, could communicate the Holy Ghoſt to thoſe, whom they ordain'd Miniſters in particular Churches; it ſeems unreaſonable to think, that ſuch Perſons, as had been conſtant Companions of Chriſt and his Apoſtles, and were to be the great Preachers of the Goſpel in ſeveral Parts of the World, ſhould not at this Time be endow'd with the like Gifts. So that from hence we may, with St Chryſoſtom, and others, be allow'd to infer, that the Holy Ghoſt fell, not only upon the Apoſtles, but alſo upon the hundred and twenty, that were in Company with them. Whitby's Annotations.

From Acts i. 10. to the End.

Force of the Miracle, imputed their talking at this wild extravagant Rate (as they called it) to the Power and Strength of new Wine †.

Peter's Speech upon this Occaſion, and its Succeſs.
Acts ii. 14.

HEREUPON the Apoſtles all ſtood up, and Peter, as Preſident of the Aſſembly, took upon him to confute this injurious Calumny, by ſhewing the Audience, "That then it was early in the Morning, not above nine † o'Clock, and conſequently, no proper Time to have eaten or drank any Thing; that the preſent Effuſion of the Holy Ghoſt was a full Completion of that famous Propheſy in Joel (a), where God had expreſly promis'd it; that Jeſus of Nazareth was the Perſon, who had pour'd down theſe extraordinary Gifts upon his Church; that from the Teſtimony of holy David it plainly appear'd, that God all along intended to raiſe him from the Dead, and exalt him to his Right-Hand; and that the preſent Miſſion of the Holy Ghoſt abundantly declar'd, that the ſame Perſon, whom they, by Divine Permiſſion, had crucify'd, God had ordain'd to be both Lord and Chriſt."

THIS Sermon, though the firſt that St Peter made in publick, was ſo very moving to the Audience, that it converted no leſs than three Thouſand Souls ‖, who thereupon were receiv'd into the Profeſſion of the Chriſtian Faith by Baptiſm, and, by their diligent Attention to the Apoſtles Doctrine afterwards, their conſtant Attendance on publick Prayers, their frequent Celebration of the Lord's Supper, their chearful Intercourſe with one another, their parting with their Goods and Poſſeſſions, and communicating to every one according to their Neceſſities, even to the Love and Admiration of all that beheld them) were daily and hourly confirm'd therein.

His curing the Cripple, and Speech thereupon.
Acts iii. 1.

NOT long after this, as Peter and John about † three o'Clock in the Afternoon, were going into the Temple to pray, they ſaw a poor Cripple, who was forty Years old, and had been lame from his Mother's Womb, lying at the beautiful Gate [*], and begging an Alms of thoſe that went in. Silver and Gold (as Peter told the Man) he had none to give him, but (what was much more valuable) in the Name of Jeſus of Nazareth he intended to heal him; and no ſooner were the Words ſpoken, than the Cure was effected. His Joints were made ſtrait, and his Nerves became ſtrong, ſo that he went along with the Apoſtles into the Temple, walking, and leaping, and praiſing God.

---

† As it was not, at this Time the Seaſon for new Wine, theſe Scoffers may be ſuppos'd to mean no more, than any ſtrong agreeable Liquor, whether natural, or made by Art. The Antients, we are told, had a Secret how to make a Wine, which would preſerve its Sweetneſs all the Year round, and which they generally us'd for a Morning's Draught.

> ——— Quoniam vacuis committere venis,
> Nil niſi lene decet, leni præcordia mulſo
> Prolueris melius. ——— HOR. lib. ii. ſat. 4.

But it ſeems incredible, that any Men in their Senſes ſhould think, that either Wine, or any other Liquor ſhould enable the Apoſtles to ſpeak all Languages, and to declare the wonderful Works of God. 'Tis well conjectur'd therefore by our learned Lightfoot, that they, who ſaid this, were Men of Judea, who, not underſtanding what the Apoſtles ſpake in other Languages, imagin'd that (as drunken Men are wont to do) they babbled ſome fooliſh Gibberiſh, which they could make nothing of. Calmet's Commentary, and Beauſobre's, and Whitby's Annotations.

† This was the ordinary Time for their Morning-Sacrifice and Prayer, before which they never us'd to eat or drink any Thing. Nay, on their Feſtival Days it was cuſtomary with them not to eat or drink until the ſixth Hour, i. e. Noon-Time, that they might be more fit for, and intent upon the Service of the Day: And from this Cuſtom the Apoſtle draws an Argument, which, in thoſe ſober Times, was thought to be concluſive. Pool's Annotations.

(a) Joel ii. 21.

‖ A quick and plentiful Harveſt this! but 'tis highly probable, that, as Peter preach'd to the Jews of Judea in the Syriack Tongue, the other Apoſtles ſpake, at the ſame Time, and to the ſame Purpoſe, to the Foreigners, in their reſpective Languages, while the late Sufferings of our Lord, the preſent Miracle of Languages, the Authority of the Speakers, and, above all, the Efficacy of the Holy Spirit contributed more than a little to this numerous Converſion: The only Queſtion is, how ſuch a Multitude of Converts could poſſibly be baptiz'd in one Day? To which ſome reply, that this Rite of Initiation into the Chriſtian Church was then perform'd by Way of ſprinkling, as it is among us; but whoever looks into Hiſtory will find, that the Form of Baptiſm among the Jews was plunging the whole Body under Water, and that, in Conformity to them, the primitive Chriſtians did, and the Eaſtern Church even to this Day, does adminiſter that Sacrament in this Manner. There is no Neceſſity therefore for us to ſuppoſe, that all theſe Proſelytes to the Chriſtian Faith were baptiz'd in one Day. St Luke delivers in the Groſs what might poſſibly be tranſacted at ſeveral Times; for it ſeems indeed expedient, that theſe new Converts ſhould be a little better inſtructed in the Principles of their Religion, and the Apoſtles more fully convinc'd of the Sincerity of their Change, before they finally admitted them into the Number of the Saints. Echard's Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory, and, Calmet's Commentary.

† Though, by the Death of Jeſus Chriſt, all Sacrifices, and other Things requir'd in the Ceremonial Law, were utterly aboliſh'd, and a New Covenant introduc'd; yet, for fear of offending the Weak, and eſtranging them from his Religion, our Bleſſed Lord permitted his Diſciples to frequent the Aſſemblies of the Jews, and, in ſome Points, to Acts iii. 10.

EVERY one knew that this was the Perſon, who had been the lame Beggar at the Temple Gate; and as he kept cloſe by the two Apoſtles, when the Multitude, in much Amazement, came flocking together to them in Solomon's Porch [†], St Peter took this Occaſion to inform them, "That it was by the Efficacy of the Name of Jeſus, (whom they had crucify'd, but God had rais'd from the Dead) and not by any Power or Holineſs of their own, that this impotent Man was made whole; that their Crucifixion of Jeſus was, in ſome Meaſure, a Sin of Ignorance, but his Riſing again, and Advancement to a Celeſtial Kingdom, a ſure Evidence of his being the promis'd Meſſiah; that the Coming of ſuch a Meſſiah, as well as the whole Evangelical State, was all along foretold, not only by Moſes, but by every Prophet that ſucceeded him; and therefore, as they were the profeſs'd Deſcendants of the Prophets, and Heirs of the Covenant ratify'd with Abraham, God had made the firſt Overtures of Mercy to them, in Hopes that they would receive the Goſpel of his beloved Son, and repent of the Iniquities, which they had done unto him."

His Vindication of himſelf, &c. before the Sanhedrim. Acts iv. 1.

THIS was the Purport of St Peter's Speech, and ſuch was its Efficacy, that it converted no leſs than five Thouſand of its Hearers: But, as the Apoſtles were thus buſy'd in inſtructing the People, at the Inſtigation of the [†] Prieſts and Sadducees, the Captain of the Temple came ſuddenly to comply with the Obſervances of the Law, until a more pure and dſpiritual Form of Worſhip could conveniently be eſtabliſh'd. This is the Reaſon why we find the Apoſtles ſo frequently in the Temple at the ſtated Hours of Prayer, of which the Jews had three. The 1ſt, at the third Hour of the Day, which anſwers to our ninth, at which Time they offer'd their Morning-Sacrifice, Exod. xxix. 39. The 2d, at the ſixth, i. e. our twelve of the Clock, either before or after Dinner, at which Time we find Peter praying, Acts x. 9. And the 3d, at the ninth, or our three in the Afternoon, when they offer'd their Evening-Sacrifice, Acts x. 30. Theſe ſtated Hours (as the Rabbins tell us) they receiv'd from their three great Patriarchs, that of the Morning, from Abraham; that of Noon, from Iſaac; and that of the Evening Prayer, from Jacob. However this be, 'tis certain, that the Royal Pſalmiſt makes mention of theſe three Times, at Evening, and at Morning, and at Noon will I pray to thee, Pſal. lv. 17. and of Daniel it is recorded, that he kneeled down three Times a Day, and prayed, and gave Thanks, Dan. vi. 10, 13. Calmet's Commentary, and Whitby's Annotations.

[*] Several of the Gates (as Joſephus tells us) were plated all over with Gold and Silver, Poſts, Front, and all; (but this, which he calls the Corinthian Gate, becauſe it was made of Corinthian Braſs, did far ſurpaſs in Glory thoſe of Gold and Silver, being built with ſuch Art and Sumptuouſneſs, as well became the Frontiſpiece of that Place, where the Divine Majeſty vouchſafed to dwell. De Bello Jud. lib. vi. c. 6. And Whitby's Annotations.

[†] Some are of Opinion, that this Porch, being one of thoſe which Solomon built, had the Fortune to eſcape (at leaſt ſome Part of it) when the Babylonians ſet Fire to the Temple, and that, tho' Herod the Great pulled it down, and rebuilt it in a more magnificent Manner, it ſtill retain'd its ancient Name. 'Tis certain from Joſephus, that the vaſt Foundation of the Eaſt Side of the Court of the Gentiles, which Solomon built, was ſtill ſubſiſting in the Time of the ſecond Temple; and as Herod, when he repair'd that, made no Alteration in this Part of the Work, the Portico, or Cloiſter, which, upon the old Foundation, was built round this Court, might in Memory of ſo great a Prince, and firſt Founder of the Temple, ſtill be called by Solomon's Name. Joſeph. Jewiſh Hiſtory, lib. xv. c. 14. and Calmet's Commentary.

[†] Theſe were three different Kinds of Men, and, upon different Accounts, prejudic'd againſt the Apoſtles. The Prieſts were offended, becauſe the Apoſtles, whom they look'd upon only as private Men, undertook publickly to teach and inſtruct the People. The Sadducees were diſpleas'd, becauſe, in teſtifying that Chriſt was riſen, and become the Firſt-Fruits of them that ſlept, they effectually preach'd the Reſurrection of the Dead, a Doctrine, which theſe Men deteſted. And the Captain, who was plac'd with a Band of Soldiers near the Temple, in order to guard it, ſeeing ſuch ſuddenly upon them, ſeiz'd them, and clapped them up in Priſon. The next Morning the great Sanhedrim met, who, having ſummon'd the Apoſtles before them, demanded of them, by what Power they had wrought that Miracle upon the lame Man, and who it was, that gave them Authority to preach to the People? To which Peter, without the leaſt Heſitation, boldly reply'd, "That their Power and Authority "were both from Jeſus of Nazareth, "whom they had crucify'd, but God had "rais'd from the Dead, and thereby de"clar'd him to be the Saviour of the "World."

Acts iv. 14.

THE Miracle was indiſputable. The Man, who had receiv'd the Cure, was ſtanding by the Apoſtles, and ready to atteſt the Fact, and therefore the Council had nothing to object againſt it; only, after they had order'd the Apoſtles to withdraw, and conſulted together what was proper to be done upon this Occaſion, they called them in again, and, in Hopes of awing them into Silence, gave them ſtrict Charge, not to teach any more in the Name of Jesus: But to this they made Anſwer, "That, ſince they had receiv'd a Com"mand from Heaven, to declare to all "Nations, what they had heard and ſeen, "it was certainly their Duty to * obey "God, rather than them."

THIS was a fair Appeal to the Conſciences of their very Judges; but their Judges, inſtead of being ſatisfy'd with it, would probably have proceeded to greater Violence, had not the People's Veneration for the Apoſtles put a Reſtraint upon their Malice: All that they dar'd to do therefore was, to repeat, and enforce their Menaces, and ſo diſmiſs them. When the Apoſtles were come to their Brethren, and had reported to them the Treatment they had met with, they all join'd in Prayer to God for a Supply of Courage and Aſſiſtance extraordinary, in that trying and perillous Juncture; and, at the Concluſion of their Prayer, the Houſe, where they were, was ſhaken with a mighty Wind, as before on the Day of Pentecoſt; whereupon, they were inſtantly repleniſh'd with freſh Meaſures of the Holy Ghoſt, and, notwithſtanding all the Threatenings of the Jewiſh Rulers, found themſelves invigorated to preach the Goſpel of Chriſt with more Boldneſs and Reſolution than ever.

His puniſhing Ananias and Sapphira with Death, and curing divers. Acts iv. 32. Ibid. v. 1.

THE Charity, at this Time, among Believers was very large and extenſive. Such of them as had Houſes, or Poſſeſſions of any Kind, ſold them, and depoſited the Money in the Hands of the Apoſtles, by them to be diſtributed in due Proportions, according to the Neceſſities of their Brethren. This a certain Levite, a Native of Cyprus †, called Joſes, but by the Apoſtles ſirnam'd Barſabas, or the Son of Conſolation, did with great Readineſs, and Singleneſs of Heart; and, in Imitation of him, Ananias, and his Wife Sapphira, pretending to devote all they had to the ſuch a Croud of People gather'd together about the Apoſtles, began to be apprehenſive of a Tumult: But, whether this Captain was a Jew or a Roman, 'tis difficult to determine, unleſs we will acquieſce in what our learned Lightfoot, with ſome others, ſeems to aſſert, viz. That the Prieſts kept watch in three Places of the Temple, and the Levites in twenty-one; that to every one of theſe Watches there was a Chief, and to them all one, who was eminently the ἀρχηγὸς, the Captain, or Ruler of the Temple, and that this Captain is the very ſame, who, in Jewiſh Writers, is ſo frequently called the Man of the Mount: Whereupon he ſuppoſes, that this Captain was an Officer of the High-Prieſt's, appointed to bring thoſe, who any Way offended in the Temple, (as the Apoſtles were thought to do for having preach'd therein the Doctrine of Chriſt) before the Sanhedrim, in order to be puniſh'd. Calmet's Commentary, Pool's and Whitby's Annotations.

* Whether or no this was an Axiom commonly receiv'd among the Jewiſh Rabbins, and therefore very pertinently here apply'd by the Apoſtles to their angry Judges, this is certainly true, that Socrates anſwer'd his Accuſers in this Manner, O ye Athenians, I will obey God, rather than you, Apol. p. 23. and that Arian delivers this as a general Precept, when thy Superiors command thee any Thing, thou muſt remember that there is one above, who ſees thee, *and that thou oughteſt rather to pleaſe him, than Man. Service of the Church, ſold their Eſtate, but, making a Reſerve of ſome of the Money to themſelves, they brought only Part of it into the publick Fund, hoping thereby to impoſe upon the Apoſtles. By the Spirit of Prophecy, Peter however perceiving their Deceit, rebuk'd them ſeverely for it, and, by the miraculous Power, wherewith he was then inveſted, ſtruck them both dead upon the Spot; thereby to inject Terror into the reſt of the Believers, and thereby to prevent the like Hypocriſy and Diſſimulation among them for the future.

Acts v. 12.

Miracles of Severity were not however much practis'd by the Apoſtles: Acts of Mercy were their proper Province, and healing the Diſeas'd, and freeing the Poſſeſs'd, a great Part of their Employment; wherein the Divine Power ſo far attended them, that even the Shadow of Peter paſſing by cur'd the Sick, who, in the very Streets, were laid on Beds and Couches, on purpoſe to receive the Benefit of his ſalutary Influence. Nor were theſe marvellous Cures confin'd to the Inhabitants of Jeruſalem only, but the People of ſeveral neighbouring Towns and Villages brought thither their Sick, their Lame, and Poſſeſs'd, who from the Hands of the Apoſtles never once miſs'd of a Cure.

The Apoſtles caſt into Priſon, reſcu'd thence by an Angel, and by the Interpoſition of Gamaliel, eſcape with Scourging.

Provok'd at the Fame of theſe Cures, and at the Succeſs which they ſaw Chriſtianity gain'd by the Miracles and Preachings of the Apoſtles, the High-Prieſt, and ſome others of the Sanhedrim, who were of the Sect of the Sadducees, had them apprehended, and thrown into the common Priſon; but the next Night an Angel from Heaven, having ſet them at Liberty, encourag'd them to proceed with Boldneſs in their Miniſtry, and order'd them even to go the next Morning, and preach the Doctrine of Chriſt in the Midſt of the Temple, which accordingly they failed not to do.

From Acts i. 10. to the End.

In the Morning the Council being met, ſent their Officers to bring the Apoſtles before them; but were not a little ſurpris'd, when the Officers return'd, and told them, that they found the Doors of the Priſon ſhut indeed, and the Keepers all upon their Guard, but, as for the Perſons whom they were ſent for, there was not one of them to be found. This Report put the whole Court in great Perplexity, until Word was brought them, that the Priſoners, whom they wanted, were preaching in the Temple, whereupon the Captain of the Guard, with ſome other Officers, went, and intreated them to come before the Council, not daring to offer any Violence to them, for Fear of being ſton'd by the People.

Acts v. 27.

When the Apoſtles were brought before their Judges, and the High-Prieſt demanded of them, how they durſt preſume to preach a Doctrine, which ſo lately had been interdicted them, they return'd much the ſame Anſwer, that they had done once before, viz. "That they were bound to "obey God, rather than Man; that Jeſus, "whom they had murther'd, was undoubtedly the true Meſſiah; and that, of "his Reſurrection and Aſcenſion into "Heaven, both they, and the Holy Ghoſt, "(whereby they acted) were authentick "Witneſſes." Which ſo exaſperated the High-Prieſt, and ſome other of the Rulers, that, upon their ordering them to withdraw, their firſt Reſolution was to have put them to Death, but this was prevented by the wiſe Advice of a certain Phariſee, nam'd Gamaliel †, who, from ſome Examples in former Hiſtory, repreſented to in great Abundance. They celebrate it much for its Fertility, as being ſufficiently provided with all Things within itſelf, for which Reaſon they call it the rich and happy Iſland; but ſo infamous was it for Luxury, and all Kinds of Debauchery, that it gave the Name of Cypris, or Cypria, to Venus, who was the chief Goddeſs of it in the Times of Heatheniſm, when they us'd to conſecrate their Women to Whoredom, and by a Law compel them to lie with Strangers, as did the Babylonians. Calmet's Dictionary, Wells's Geography of the New Teſtament, and Whitby's Alphabetical Table.

† This was the Gamaliel, at whoſe Feet St Paul was brought up, Acts xxii. 3. and ſome of the Ancients are of Opinion, that he was Tutor likewiſe to two other Apoſtles, Barnabas and Stephen; and, for this Reaſon, 'tis reported of him, that, when the Proto-Martyr ſuffer'd, he encourag'd the Chriſtians to go by Night, and carry off his Body, the Court, “That, if the Apoſtles were no better than Impoſtors, their Fraud and Fallacy would quickly be diſcover'd; but that, if they acted by a proper Authority from God, it would badly become the Wiſdom of that Aſſembly to contend with the Almighty, in perſecuting his Servants;” And by this Speech he ſo far diverted the Indignation of the Council, as to have the Sentence (at firſt deſign'd againſt the Apoſtles Lives) chang'd into a corporal Puniſhment. The Court, accordingly, having order'd them to be ſcourg'd, and charg'd them very ſtrictly never to teach any more in the Name of Jeſus, diſmiſs'd them; and the Apoſtles went away greatly rejoicing, not ſo much that they had eſcap'd Death, as that they were accounted worthy to ſuffer Shame and Puniſhment, for the Name of their deareſt Lord and Maſter.

They elect ſeven Deacons, and upon what Occaſion. Acts vi. 1.

The great Increaſe of Believers, and Acceſs of Money to the common Fund for the Relief of their Poor, made the Inſtitution of another Order of Men in the Chriſtian Church highly neceſſary. For when the Helleniſts † complain'd, that, in the Diſtribution of the Charity-Money, an undue Preference was given to the Hebrew Widows, whilſt theirs were too frequently neglected; the Apoſtles, who had Matters of greater Importance upon their Hands, and were not at Leiſure to attend on this Affair themſelves, called the Church together, and having order'd them to ſingle out ſeven ‖ Men of great Repute for for which Purpoſe he lent them his Chariot, and allow'd them a Burying-Place in his own Eſtate, about eight Leagues diſtant from Jeruſalem. He certainly was a Doctor of great Repute among the Jews, and was therefore uſually called Rabban Gamaliel, a Title of the higheſt Eminence, and never given, ſay they, to any more than ſeven. He is ſuppos'd to have been the Grandſon of Hillel, and either Uncle, or Couſin to Nicodemus, of whom we read in the Goſpel, John iii. 1, &c; for thirty-two Years to have continu'd the Naſi, or Preſident of the Sanhedrim, and to have died about ten Years after the Deſtruction of Jeruſalem. Chriſtian Authors make no Doubt but that he embrac'd the Faith of Jeſus, but, at what Time, he became a Convert, or by whoſe Hands he was baptiz'd, they no where tell us. To reconcile his Converſion however with what the Jewiſh Writers relate of his being at the Head of the Sanhedrim ſo long, they affirm, that he was a Chriſtian, even when that Aſſembly ſat upon the Apoſtles, and that the Apoſtles perſuaded him to continue in it, and not to diſcover his Religion, that thereby he might be capable of doing more Service to the Church. But the Author of the Acts has noted the true Reaſon of his ſpeaking in Favour of the Apoſtles, viz. that as the Sadducees, after our Lord's Reſurrection, became the Apoſtles greateſt Enemies, becauſe they preached through Chriſt the Reſurrection of the Dead, Acts iv. 2. ſo Gamaliel, who was a Phariſee, and, conſequently, a ſtrict Aſſerter of the Reſurrection, did therefore give his Advice for the Diſmiſſion of the Apoſtles, even as we find the Phariſees afterwards, almoſt in the ſame Words, pleading for St Paul preaching the ſame Doctrine, viz. that they ought not to moleſt him in what he did, leſt they ſhould be found Fighters againſt God, Acts xxiii. 9. Calmet's Commentary, and Whitby's Annotations.

† Some are of Opinion, that theſe Helleniſts or Grecians (as our Tranſlations render them) were originally Gentiles, firſt converted to the Jewiſh, and afterwards to the Chriſtian Religion, even as the Hebrews, here mention'd, were originally Jews: But tho' it be allow'd, that Gentiles of all Nations are frequently called Hellens, yet it no where appears, that they are ſtiled Helleniſts; and, that theſe Grecians muſt mean ſomething different from the common Hellens, or Greeks, is evident from the Caſe of St Paul, who when he came to Jeruſalem, and diſputed πρὸς τοὺς Ἑλληνιστὰς, againſt the Grecians, they went about to kill him, Acts ix. 29. whereas, had they been Strangers of other Nations, they durſt not have attempted to kill a Jew, among a Nation of Jews, without bringing him to their Tribunal. It is reaſonable therefore to believe, that theſe Helleniſts were originally Jews, and deſcended from ſuch, as, in the ſeveral Calamities that befel the Jewiſh State, were either forc'd, or choſe to leave their own Country, and, ſettling in Alexandria, and other Places, where the Greek Tongue was only ſpoke, in Proceſs of Time, came to forget their own, and to make uſe of the Greek only, both in their common Converſation and religious Offices. Of this Kind of Jews, we are told, there were great Numbers in Jeruſalem, where there was a Synagogue particularly appointed for ſuch, as underſtood no other Language than Greek, and where the Verſion of the LXX was conſtantly read in their Aſſemblies. As therefore the Apoſtles had hitherto made no Tender of the Goſpel to the Gentiles, the Helleniſts, here ſpoken of, muſt neceſſarily mean ſuch Jews, converted to the Chriſtian Religion, as had diſus'd the Hebrew or Syriack, and ſpake the Greek Language only. Calmet's Commentary, Whitby's and Pool's Annotations.

‖ The Words in the Text are theſe——Wherefore, Brethren, look you out among you ſeven Men, of honeſt Report, full of the Holy Ghoſt and Wiſdom, whom WE may appoint over this Buſineſs, Acts vi. 3. and indeed, in the whole Relation of this Matter, there is nothing that favours the Authority of the Laity in chuſing Perſons to ſacred Offices; for, tho' the Choice of theſe ſeven was committed to them, yet this was done by the particular Appointment of the Apoſtles themſelves, who ſpecify'd the Number and Qualifications of the Perſons to be thus choſen, and who reſerv'd to themſelves their Deſignation to this Office by the Impoſition of their Hands, Acts vi. 6. And yet this for their Wiſdom and Prudence, as well as ſpiritual Endowments, to be choſen Stewards of the publick Stock, theſe they ordain'd to the Office of Deacons, by the Solemnity of Prayers, and the Impoſition of their Hands. † The Names of the Perſons, who were ordain'd to this Office, were Stephen, Philip, Prochorus, Nicanor, Timon, Parmenas, and Nicholas, all taken out of the Number of the ſeventy Diſciples, whom our Lord had choſen; but, of theſe, the moſt eminent, for the Gifts and Graces of the Holy Spirit, was Stephen.

Stephen's Apprehenſion, laſt Speech, and Martyrdom.

HE preach'd the Goſpel with a noble Courage and Reſolution, and confirm'd it with many publick and unqueſtionable Miracles among the People, inſomuch, that by this Means the Chriſtian Religion gain'd Ground abundantly. Converts came in apace: And great Numbers of the Prieſts themſelves laid aſide their Prejudices, and embrac'd the Goſpel. This Zeal and Succeſs of his, however, ſoon awaken'd the Malice of his Adverſaries to procure ſome Members † of the moſt learned Synagogues, then in Jeruſalem, to diſpute with him; but, when they found their Diſputants baffled, and unable to withſtand the Force of thoſe Arguments, which the Divine Wiſdom inſpir'd him with, they betook themſelves to vile Practices; and, having procur'd Men of profligate Conſciences to accuſe him of Blaſphemy, caus'd him to be apprehended, and, in a tumultous Manner, brought him before this Part of the Text, in many, or moſt of our Engliſh Bibles, is very erroneouſly render'd: For, from the Year of our Lord 1638 to the Year 1660, and in ſeveral ſince, it is printed, whom YE may appoint, &c. thereby devolving the Power of Ordination into the Hands of the Laity. The Bibles printed with this Fault are theſe ——— That in 8vo, by John Field, 1660. In 24to, by the Aſſigns of John Bill and Chriſtopher Barker, 1674. In 8vo, by John Bill and Chriſtopher Barker, 1674. In 8vo, at Edinburgh, by Andrew Anderſon, and Partners, 1673, and 1675. In 8vo, by John Bill, Thomas Newcomb, and Henry Hill, 1679. And in Baxter's Paraphraſe, and ſeveral others, the Greek Word καταστήσομεν, we may appoint, is render'd ye may appoint; whether this was by Miſtake or Deſign, it may certainly be of dangerous Conſequence, as liable to deceive thoſe, who, tho' not unſkilful in the Greek, may, through Haſte and Inadvertency, depend upon the Tranſlation. Whitby's Annotations, and Howell's Hiſtory, in the Notes.

† The Names of theſe ſeven Deacons we may obſerve are all of Greek Extract, from whence we may infer, that, very probably, they were all Helleniſts, and that, conſequently, by their Deſignation the Church was deſirous to give full Satisfaction to the Complaint of thoſe, whoſe Widows had been before neglected. Of the two firſt of theſe, viz. Stephen and Philip, the ſacred Hiſtory has given us a ſufficient Account, but of the reſt we have nothing certain, except we will admit of what the Latins tell us of Prochorus, viz. that, on the 9th of Auguſt, he ſuffer'd Martyrdom at Antioch, after having made himſelf famous for his Miracles: Of Nicanor, that, on the 10th of January, he ſuffer'd in the Iſland of Cyprus, after having given great Demonſtrations of his Faith and Virtue: Of Timon, that, on the 19th of April, he was firſt thrown into the Fire, and, when he had miraculouſly eſcap'd from thence, was fix'd upon a Croſs at Corinth: Of Parmenas, that, on the 23d of January, he ſuffer'd at Philippi, in Macedonia: And of Nicholas, that, either by Deſign or Indiſcretion, he gave Riſe to the infamous Sect of Nicholaitans, and therefore no Chriſtian Church has ever yet paid any Honour to his Memory. One Thing we may obſerve in this Place, viz. that, much about the Time of the Inſtitution of theſe Deacons, James the Leſs, (ſo called to diſtinguiſh him from the other James, who was the Son of Zebedee) and for his eminent Virtues ſirnam'd the Juſt, was choſen Biſhop of Jeruſalem, and for this Reaſon preferr'd before all the reſt, becauſe he was a near Relation, viz. a Couſin-German to our Bleſſed Saviour. Calmet's Commentary and Dictionary, and Fleury's Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory.

† As there were People of all Nations, Proſelytes to the Jewiſh Religion, dwelling at Jeruſalem, 'tis reaſonable to conceive, that they had Synagogues, or Places appointed for Prayer, for hearing the Law, and pious Exhortations in their own Languages. The Jews report, that there were no leſs than four hundred and eighty of theſe in Jeruſalem, which were ſo many inferior Churches, and ſubordinate to the Temple, as their Cathedral. Theſe Synagogues very probably were built, and maintain'd by the ſeveral Nations, or Degrees of People, that reſorted to them, and from theſe they had their Names, as the Synagogue of Libertines. i. e. of ſuch as were Denizens of Rome, of the Cyrenians, the Alexandrians, &c. But it is to be obſerv'd of theſe Synagogues, that they were not only Places of religious Worſhip, but a Sort of Colleges, or Schools likewiſe, where Perſons were inſtituted in the Law, and Traditions of the Jews. The Jews, at this Time, were diſpers'd in ſeveral foreign Parts, and from theſe they ſent their Youth to Jeruſalem to be educated in the Synagogue, or Colleges peculiar to their reſpective Countries. St Paul was of the Province of Cilicia, and, as it is reaſonable to think, that he ſtudy'd in a College, either belonging to the Country, where he was born, or proper to his Quality, as a Freeman of Rome; there ſeems to be no Incongruity in ſuppoſing, that he might poſſibly be one, either of thoſe Libertines, or Cilician Diſputants, who enter'd the Liſts with St Stephen. Whitby's and Beauſobre's Annotations, Stanhope, on the Epiſtles and Goſpels, and Calmet's Commentary.

before the Sanhedrim, in order to obtain a formal Sentence of Condemnation againſt him.

WHILST he ſtood before the Council, the Judges, and all the People then preſent, beheld a Luſtre and Radiancy in his Countenance, not unlike the Appearance of an Angel; and, when he was indulg'd the Liberty of Speech, in a grave and ſevere Oration he endeavour'd, not only to vindicate himſelf from the Imputation of Blaſphemy, but, at the ſame Time, by an hiſtorical Deduction of the moſt memorable Actions and Events, that had happen'd in the Jewiſh Nation, from the Time of Abraham to that of Solomon; he undertook to ſhew, "That Religion was "not confin'd to the Holy-Land, or the "Temple-Service; that the Law, for "which they expreſs'd ſo vehement a "Zeal, was unable to contain Mankind "within the Bounds of their Duty; that, as "their Fore-Fathers were all along a ſtubborn and rebellious People, and grievous "Perſecutors of the Prophets, who were "ſent to foretell the Coming of the Meſſiah, ſo were they likewiſe a wicked and "perverſe Generation, who in all Things "had equalled, but in this ſurpaſs'd the "Impiety of their Anceſtors, viz. that "contrary to that Law, which had been "deliver'd to them by the Miniſtry of "Angels, they had betray'd and murther'd that very Perſon, who was ſent "into the World to fulfil it."

From Acts i. 10. to the End.

THESE laſt Words, which were but too true, incens'd the Jews to ſuch a Degree, that they fell upon him with the utmoſt Expreſſions of their Rage and Fury; whilſt he, regardleſs of what they were about, had his Mind employ'd in the † delightful Proſpect of Heaven, and the ſenſible Appearance of the bleſſed Jeſus, in our glorify'd Nature, ſtanding at the Right-Hand of God; which when he had declar'd to all the Company, the Jews were ſo enrag'd, that, raiſing a loud Clamour, and ſtopping their Ears againſt all Cries for Mercy, they unanimouſly ruſh'd upon him, dragg'd him out of the City, and there ſton'd him to Death; whilſt he, having firſt devoutly † recommended his Soul to God, upon his bended Knees made loud Interceſſion for his Murtherers, that the Sin, they were then committing, might not be laid to their Charge, and ſo gave up the Ghoſt; but his Body was bury'd by devout Men, (probably Proſelytes to the Chriſtian Faith) who made great Lamentations over it.

Saul's Violence againſt the Chriſtians.

AMONG the many, that were thus enrag'd againſt Stephen, one particular Perſon, who had but too great an Hand in his Death, was a young Man of Cilicia, named Saul. He, out of his great Officiouſneſs to have him executed, undertook to look to the Clothes of the Witneſſes, who uſually ſtripp'd themſelves to throw the firſt Stones, as the Law directed, at the Perſon who dy'd by their Evidence; and,

† Whether, to afford St Stephen this delightful Proſpect, the Opening of the Heavens was real, (as it is believ'd to have been at our Lord's Baptiſm) or whether, this, like other Appearances to the Prophets of the Old Teſtament, was repreſented to him by Way of Viſion, as we cannot certainly know, ſo is it of no great Conſequence that we ſhould. For, ſince a Viſion is deſcrib'd by thoſe, that are particularly curious in theſe Matters, to be ſuch a diſtinct and ſtrong Impreſſion upon the Faculty of the Imagination, as ſets the Object before the Man, as plainly, as if it actually were preſent, and perceiv'd by his bodily Senſes, [Maim. Mor. Nev. Part. ii. c. 26.] it is not to be doubted, but that either of theſe Ways comes all to one, as to the Certainty of the Perſuaſion, and every other Effect, which we can ſuppoſe it is intended to produce in the Mind of the Perſon, whom it actuates. Stanhope, on the Epiſtles and Goſpels.

† In this Prayer of our dying Martyr, there are theſe four Things obſervable. (1.) That he look'd upon his Soul as a Subſtance diſtinct from his Body; and, (2.) That it continu'd to exiſt after its Separation from the Body. (3.) That he declar'd our Bleſſed Saviour to be God omniſcient, and omnipotent, able to hear, and grant his Prayer, and to preſerve the Souls commended to his Care and Protection. And, (4.) That the Spirits receiv'd by him are in a State of Safety and Happineſs. The Time of this Martyrdom is by ſome plac'd after our Lord's Death, about eight Months; by others, at the Diſtance of about four; by others again, ſeven Years. Euſebius is expreſs, that it follow'd quickly after his Election into the Office of Deacon; from St Chryſoſtom and ſome others, who ſpeak in his Honour, we are to conclude, that he was martyr'd young; and from Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory we are inform'd, that the Place, where he ſuffer'd, had a ſtately Church built upon it by Eudocia, the Empreſs, Wife to Theodoſius. Stanhope, on the Epiſtles and Goſpels, Vol. I.

and, out of his paſſionate Concern for the Traditions of the Antients, having procur'd a Commiſſion from the Sanhedrim, he immediately put it in Execution. For he broke open Houſes, ſeiz'd upon all, who look'd like the Diſciples of Jeſus, and, without any Regard to Sex or Age, ſcourg'd, and hauled them away to Priſon, compelling them to blaſpheme and deny Chriſt, and breathing out nothing but Threatenings and Slaughter wherever he came; inſomuch, that moſt of the Believers, except the Apoſtles †, were forc'd to leave Jeruſalem, and diſperſe themſelves in the Regions of Judea and Samaria, Syria and Phœnicia, Cyprus and Antioch, &c. preaching the Goſpel to the Jews, that were in thoſe Places.

Peter's Oppoſition to Simon Magus.

AMONG thoſe, who were thus diſpers'd, Philip the Deacon, the ſecond in Order after Stephen came to Samaria, where, by his Preaching and Miracles, he converted many. In this Place there was one Simon *, who, by his Sorcery and magical Arts, had ſo ſtrangely gain'd the Veneration of the People, that they look'd upon his Diabolical Illuſions, as real Operations of the Power of God; but ſeeing great Numbers of his Admirers fall off from him, and embrace the Doctrine, which Philip preach'd, he, in like Manner, pretended to be a Convert, and, in Hopes of obtaining ſome Share of the miraculous Gifts, which he could not but admire in the Apoſtle, deſir'd by him to be baptiz'd.

Acts viii. 14.

THE News of the Converſion of ſo large a City as Samaria was ſoon brought to the Apoſtles at Jeruſalem, who thereupon ſent Peter and John to confer the Gifts of the Holy Ghoſt upon the new Converts. The Magician, perceiving that a Power of working Miracles, and ſpeaking with Tongues, was conſequent upon the Impoſition of the Apoſtles Hands, offer'd to give them Money to enable him to do the like; but the Offer St Peter rejected with Scorn and Deteſtation, denouncing an Execration againſt him and his Money; which ſo terrify'd the Caitiff, that, poſſibly fearing to be made an Example of Diſſimulation, (as Ananias was) he begg'd the Apoſtles Prayers to God for the Pardon of his Sin, and the Averſion of thoſe Judgments, which his Denunciations ſeem'd to portend: But how falſe and feign'd his Repentance was, the Sequel of this Hiſtory will ſhew.

† It is a very ancient Tradition, mention'd by Clemens of Alexandria, that our Lord aſſign'd twelve Years after his Aſcenſion, for the Converſion of the unbelieving Jews in Judea, leſt any of them ſhould ſay, that they had not heard of the glad Tidings of the Goſpel; and Apollonius, who flouriſh'd at the ſame Time, ſpeaks of this ὡς ἐκ παραδόσεως, as deliver'd by Tradition, that our Lord commanded his Apoſtles, not to depart out of Jeruſalem for the Space of twelve Years, which, if there be any Truth in it, ſhews the Reaſon, why the Apoſtles continued at Jeruſalem, when the reſt of the Diſciples were ſcatter'd abroad. Whitby's Annotations.

* This Man was a Native of Gitton, a Village of Samaria, and a pretended Convert to Chriſtianity; but, upon his being rejected by the Apoſtles, he ſoon turn'd Apoſtate, and, being a Man of an ambitious and daring Temper, in pure Revenge, ſet himſelf in Oppoſition to them, and became the firſt Broacher of ſeveral abominable Hereſies. The Account, indeed, which, according to St Luke, this Magician gives of himſelf is only this,——That he was μέγας τὶς, ſome great Perſon, as Mountebanks uſually repreſent themſelves, and the Opinion, which his magical Pranks had wrought among the Samaritans, only this:——That he was the great Power of God; by which Words perhaps they only meant ſome Legate, or Miniſter of God, aſſiſted by his mighty Power: And yet, from theſe Words very probably, the Fathers tell us, that he declar'd himſelf to be the prime God; the God above all Principality, Power, and Virtue whatever; and that to the Samaritans he was the Father; to the Jews, the Son; and to other Nations, the Holy Ghoſt. But, ſince the Hiſtory of the Apoſtles informs us, that he believed, and was baptiz'd in the Name of Jeſus, 'tis difficult to conceive, how he ſhould perſuade the Samaritans, that he was God the Father; or the Jews, that he was the Son, or that Jeſus, into whoſe Name he baptiz'd; or the Gentiles, that he was that Spirit, which he would have purchaſed with Money. And therefore we may preſume, that theſe venerable Writers, out of their ardent Zeal againſt this Arch-Heretick, might be induc'd to magnify his arrogant Pretenſions above Meaſure, by putting too ſtrong an Interpretation upon St Luke's Words. However this be, 'tis certain, that he did not acknowledge Jeſus Chriſt as the Son of God, but look'd upon him as a Rival, and pretended himſelf to be the Chriſt; that he held the World was not created by God, but made by Angels, and therefore Divine Honours were due to them, as appointed Mediators between God and Men; that he accounted the ordinary Worſhip of Idols as a Thing indifferent; and in Times of Perſecution, that Men might lawfully abjure the Chriſtian Faith; that he maintain'd an univerſal Licence to Sin; Men might act as they were inclin'd; Women might be in common; and that to preſs the Obſervance of good Works was inconſiſtent with the Goſpel-Liberty. Theſe were ſome of his Principles; and, in Conſequence of theſe, (as Irenæus tells us) he and his Followers liv'd in all Luſt, and Impurity, and wallow'd in the moſt horrible and unheard of Beſtialities. Calmet's Diſſert. ſur Simon le Magicien; Echard's Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory, and Cave's Life of St Paul.

Philip's Converſion of the Queen of Ethiopia's Eunuch. Acts viii. 25.

The two Apoſtles, having thus confirm'd the Church of Samaria, preach'd the Goſpel in many of the neighbouring Villages with good Succeſs, and ſo return'd to Jeruſalem; while Philip being order'd by an Angel, who appear'd to him, to go Southward, into the Road, which led from Jeruſalem to Gaza[†], he there met with an Eunuch[†], that waited on Candace[*], Queen of Ethiopia, who had been to pay his Devotions at Jeruſalem[†], and was then upon his Journey home. As he drew near to the Chariot, Philip found him commendably employ'd in reading a Paſſage in the fifty-third Chapter of Iſaiah, relating to the Sufferings of the Meſſiah, and, when the Treaſurer expreſs'd his Deſire of having the Paſſage (which he did not ſo well underſtand) a little explain'd to him, and thereupon invited him into the Chariot, Philip took this Opportunity to preach unto him the Goſpel of Jeſus Chriſt, and thereby to ſhew him, that not only the Senſe of that Paſſage, but of ſeveral others in the ancient Prophets, was fully accompliſh'd in his Perſon and Tranſactions. This ſo fully convinc'd the Eunuch, that, with much Eagerneſs, he deſir'd to be baptiz'd into the Chriſtian Faith, which, when Philip had done, the Spirit of the Lord immediately tranſported him to Azotus[†], from whence he proceeded as far as Cæſarea [†], preaching the Goſpel in all the Cities, while the Ethiopian purſu'd his Journey with great Joy and Satisfaction of Mind.

[†] We have before (in Page 589) given an Account of this City, and of the ſeveral Revolutions, which it underwent; and have only here to obſerve, that, as there were two Places of this Name, one, which was deſtroy'd by Alexander, (ſome ſay the Great, and others Jannæus) and therefore called the Deſert, and another, which, by Conſtantine the Great, was built in a Place nearer the Sea, than the ancient City ſtood, it muſt be of the ancient City, (whoſe Ruins, as St Jerom informs us, were viſible in his Time) that the ſacred Hiſtorian is here to be underſtood. Calmet's Commentary.

[†] This Word is deriv'd from the Greek εὐνοῦχος, which ſignifies one, who guards the Bed, becauſe generally, in the Courts of the Eaſtern Kings, the Care of the Beds and Apartments belonging to Princes and Princeſſes was committed to them, but more eſpecially thoſe of the Princeſſes, who, in thoſe Countries, live in great Retirement, and remote from the Sight and Company of Men. It is not to be deny'd however, that this Word is in Scripture frequently ſet to ſignify any Miniſter belonging to a Prince, attending at his Court, and employ'd more eſpecially in ſome Office belonging to the inner Part of the Palace, whether he be really an Eunuch or not; but that the Word, in this Place, is to be taken in its moſt natural and obvious Senſe, ſeems to be evident from hence,——That the ſame Perſon, who is here called an Eunuch, is ſaid to have been of great Authority with the Queen of Ethiopia, which would have been needleſs, had the Word Eunuch here been intended to ſignify any Prime Miniſter of State. In Relation to this Eunuch however, ſome Greek Copies of good Repute read, that the Holy Ghoſt fell upon him (even as it did upon Cornelius) without the Impoſition of Hands, by which Means he was enabled to be a Preacher of the Goſpel in Ethiopia, and other Places. For, even to this Day, the Abyſſines make it their Boaſt, that they receiv'd the Chriſtian Religion from him, and, accordingly, in their Form of Baptiſm, recite the Hiſtory of his Converſion. Calmet's Dictionary, and Commentary.

[*] Some are of Opinion, that the Word Candace ſignifies Sovereign Authority, and that this was a common Name for all the Queens, who reign'd in the Iſland, or Peninſula of Meroe, which is the Country here called Ethiopia; (not the Ethiopia in Arabia, where the Queen of Sheba dwelt, but the Ethiopia in Africa, which lay below Egypt) and of whoſe Government Pliny teſtifies, that it was generally in the Hands of Women, who, for ſeveral Succeſſions, aſſum'd the Name of Candace: And of this particular Queen it is reported, that, by the Preaching of this her Eunuch, ſhe was prevail'd upon to turn Chriſtian. Whitby's Annotations, and Calmet's Commentary.

[†] That this Eunuch was a Proſelyte of Juſtice, or one, who, from Paganiſm, had embrac'd the Jewiſh Faith, to which he might be converted by thoſe Jews, who, from Alexandria, ſpread themſelves into the African Ethiopia, is a reaſonable Conjecture, not only becauſe he came ſo long a Journey to worſhip at Jeruſalem, probably at ſome great Feſtival, but becauſe Cornelius is expreſly declar'd to be the Firſt-Fruits of the Gentiles; and 'tis not unlikely, that the Fame, which he had heard at Jeruſalem, of the Crucifixion and Reſurrection of Chriſt, might be the Reaſon of his reading the Prophet Iſaiah, who ſpeaks more plainly of the Times of the Goſpel, than any other, and that particular Chapter, which (as Abarbinel teſtifies) all the Jewiſh Rabbins did, with one Mouth, confeſs, that it related to the Sufferings of Meſſiah the King. Whitby's Annotations.

[†] That it was a common Thing for the Spirit of God to convey his Prophets of old from one Place to another, as it were in an Inſtant of Time, is plain from Obadiah's Words to Elijah, It ſhall come to paſs, that, as ſoon as I am gone from thee, the Spirit of the Lord ſhall carry thee where I know not, 1 Kings xviii. 12. And from what the Sons of the Prophets ſay to Eliſha, Let theſe Men, we pray thee, go, and ſeek thy Maſter, leſt peradventure the Spirit of the Lord hath taken him up, and caſt him upon ſome Mountain, 2 Kings ii. 16. This very probably might be done by the Miniſtry of ſome Angel, here called the Spirit, or Power, of the Lord; and the Reaſon, that is commonly aſſign'd

Saul's miraculous Converſion, and the Circumſtances of it. Acts ix. 1.

THE Diſperſion of Believers, which occaſion'd a Propagation of the Goſpel in other Countries, ſoon excited the furious Zeal of Saul to procure proper Letters [†] of Authority from the High-Prieſt to Damaſcus [†], that in Caſe he ſhould find any there, whether they were Men or Women, profeſſing the Chriſtian Faith, he might bring them bound to Jeruſalem, there to be puniſh'd: But, as he was upon the Road, and now drawing near to Damaſcus, all on a ſudden, about Mid-Day, a moſt amazing Gleam of Light, far exceeding the Brightneſs of the Sun, was darted from Heaven upon him, and thoſe that were with him, and threw them all for Fear proſtrate upon the Ground. This Light was accompany'd with a Voice, in the Hebrew (or rather Syriack) Tongue, demanding of him why it was, that he perſecuted him ſo violently? And, as Saul was uncertain from whence the Words came, I am Jeſus of Nazareth, (continu'd the Voice) whom thou perſecuteſt; but 'tis in vain for thee to reſiſt the Decrees of Providence, and therefore be aſſign'd for it, in the Caſe of Philip, is,——That the Eunuch had requeſted of him to go with him into Ethiopia; whereas God, having deſign'd him to preach the Goſpel in other Parts of the World, remov'd him in this extraordinary Manner, and thereby not only prevented his Compliance with the Requeſt, but gave the Eunuch Aſſurance likewiſe of his being a Meſſenger ſent from Heaven, and, conſequently, that the Things, which had been taught him, were true. Calmet's Commentary, Whitby's and Pool's Annotations.

[†] This City, in the Old Teſtament, 1 Sam. v. 1, 2, is called Aſhdod, and is therein memorable for the Temple of Dagon. It lies upon the Mediterranean Sea, about nine or ten Miles North of Gaza, and, in the Times, when Chriſtianity flouriſh'd in theſe Parts, was made an Epiſcopal See, and continu'd a fair Village 'till the Days of St Jerom. Wells's Geography, of the New Teſtament.

[†] From hence it appears, that, however the Jews were cramped in ſeveral Privileges belonging originally to their Nation, yet, even after they became a Roman Province, their great Council at Jeruſalem had a Juriſdiction, which extended to all Synagogues, even thoſe that were out of Judea, and that the Power of Capital Puniſhments was not ſo far taken from them, but that, either by their own Authority, or at leaſt the Conſent of the Roman Governors, they might, in ſome Caſes, inflict them. Calmet's Commentary, and Whitby's Annotations.

[†] Of the ancient Hiſtory of Damaſcus, ſo far as we had occaſion in the Old Teſtament, we have given ſome Account before, Page 900, in the Notes; and ſhall only here add a ſhort Abſtract of what a late Traveller of our own tells us concerning its preſent State, viz. "That it is ſituated on an even Plain, of ſo great Extent, that one can but juſt "diſcern the Mountains, which compaſs it on the farther Side; that it ſtands on the Weſt Side of the Plain, about "two Miles diſtant from the Head of the River Barrady, which waters it; is of a long, ſtraight Figure, about two "Miles in Extent, adorn'd with Moſques and Steeples, as the Manner of Turkiſh Cities is, and encompaſs'd with "Gardens (according to common Computation) full thirty Miles round. That the River Barrady, as ſoon as it iſſues "out from between a Cleft of the Mountain Anti-libanus into the Plain, is divided into three Streams, whereof the "middlemoſt and biggeſt runs directly to Damaſcus through a large open Field, called Ager Damaſcenus, and is "diſtributed to all the Ciſterns and Fountains of the City; while the other two (which ſeem to be the Work of Art) "are drawn round, one to the Right Hand, and the other to the Left, on the Borders of the Gardens, into which "they are let (as they paſs along) by little Currents, and ſo every-where diſpers'd: That the Houſes of the City "(whoſe Streets are very narrow) are all built, on the Outſide, with no better Materials, than either Sun-burnt Brick, "or Flemiſh Wall, and yet it is no uncommon Thing to ſee the Gates and Doors adorn'd with Marble Portals, carv'd "and inlaid with great Beauty and Variety, and, within theſe Protals, to find generally a large ſquare Court "beautified with fragrant Trees, and Marble Fountains, and compaſs'd round with ſplendid Apartments: That, in "in theſe Apartments, their Ceilings and Traves are uſually richly painted and gilded, and their Duans (which are a "Sort of low Stages, ſeated in the pleaſanteſt Part of the Room, and elevated about ſixteen or eighteen Inches "above the Floor, whereon the Turks eat, ſleep, ſmoak, receive Viſits, ſay their Prayers, &c.) are floor'd, and "adorn'd on the Sides with Variety of Marble, mix'd in Moſaick Knots and Mazes, ſpread with Carpets, and "furniſh'd all round with Bolſters and Cuſhions to the very Height of Luxury: That in this City is ſhewn the Church "of John the Baptiſt, now converted into a famous Moſque, the Houſe of Ananias, which is only a ſmall Grotto "or Cellar, wherein is nothing remarkable, and the Houſe of Judas, with whom St Paul lodg'd, wherein is an "old Tomb, the ſuppos'd Burying-Place of Ananias, which the Turks hold in ſo much Reverence, that they maintain "a Lamp continually burning over it." This is the chief of the Account, which the ingenious Mr Maundrell gives us of the City of Damaſcus, and it may not perhaps be immaterial here to adjoin,——That the Fruit Tree, called the Damaſcen, and the Flower called the Damaſk Roſe, were tranſplanted from the Gardens belonging to this City, as thoſe Branches of Silk and Linnen, which go under the Name of Damaſks, were not improbably the firſt Invention of its Inhabitants. Wells's Geography of the New Teſtament.

be no longer refractory, but obey the Commands that ſhall be given thee. Whereupon Saul, in a terrible Dread and Agony, deſiring to know what he was to do: Go to Damaſcus, (reply'd the Voice) and there thou ſhalt know my Will. Thoſe, that accompany'd Saul in his Journey, were ſtruck with Fear and Amazement, wondering that they ſhould hear a Voice ‖, and yet ſee no Man ſpeak, whilſt Saul himſelf was ſo dazzled, and over-power'd by the Light, that he quite loſt his Eye-Sight, and was led by the Hand into Damaſcus, where he continu'd for the Space of three Days, without taking any Manner of Suſtenance.

Acts ix. 10.

AT this Time there was in the City a certain Diſciple named Ananias †, whom the Lord, in a Viſion, commanded to go, and find out Saul, then lodging at the Houſe of one Judas a Jew, and, by the Impoſition of his Hands, to cure him of his Blindneſs. Ananias was ſtartled at the Name of the Man, and, to excuſe himſelf, alledg'd his violent Perſecutions of the Church, and with what a wicked Intent he was then come to Damaſcus; but to this the Viſion reply'd, that he was appointed by God to be a powerful Inſtrument in the Propagation of the Goſpel, both among the Jews and Gentiles, and that, how much ſoever he had perſecuted Chriſtianity heretofore, he was now to become a zealous Defender of it, and even to die in Teſtimony of its Truth.

ENCOURAG'D with this Aſſurance, Ananias repair'd to the Houſe where Saul was, with this joyful Meſſage,——" That " the Lord Jeſus, who had appear'd to " him in his Journey, had ſent him not " only to reſtore his Eye-Sight, but to " beſtow upon him likewiſe the Gifts and " Graces of the Holy Spirit, ſuch as " might qualify him for the Miniſtry, to " which he was then appointed." And no ſooner had Ananias ended his Speech, than thick Films, like Scales, fell from the other's Eyes, whereupon he recover'd his Eye-Sight, and, being baptiz'd, for ſome Days continu'd with the Diſciples at Damaſcus, preaching in the Synagogues, and proving that Jeſus was the Meſſias.

‖ In Acts xxii. 9. 'tis ſaid expreſly, that the Men, who were with Saul, heard not the Voice of him, that ſpake to him, but, as the Words φωνὴ and ἀκούειν (both employ'd in theſe Paſſages) will admit of different Significations, they will be eaſily reconciled by ſaying,——That the People, who accompany'd Saul, heard a Sound, a Noiſe, a Thunder in the Air, (for to all theſe the Word φωνὴ is applicable) but did not hear any articulate Words, or did not underſtand (for in this Senſe the Word ἀκούειν is often taken) what that Noiſe or Sound meant; in the ſame Manner, as when a Voice from Heaven was addreſs'd to our Lord, the People, who ſtood by, and heard it, ſaid, that it thundered, and others, that an Angel ſpake to him, and perhaps none of them underſtood diſtinctly what it ſaid, John xii. 29. Hammond's and Whitby's Annotations, and Calmet's Commentary.

† Who this Ananias was, we have no certain Information from Antiquity. The Apoſtolical Conſtitutions aſſert, that he was a Lay-Man: St Auſtin will have it that he was a Prieſt; but OEcumenius and ſome Moderns are of Opinion, that he was a Deacon. The Greeks maintain, that he was one of the ſeventy Diſciples, was made Biſhop of Damaſcus, and, having obtain'd a Crown of Martyrdom, was bury'd in the ſame City. However this be, 'tis certain, that, in the Place, where he is ſaid to have been interr'd, there is a very fine Church, which tho' the Turks have turn'd into a Moſque, yet they ſtill preſerve a great Reſpect for his Monument. Calmet's Commentary and Dictionary.

(b) Gal. i. 17.

† The Reader need not be told, that Arabia, which is one of the moſt conſiderable Diviſions of Aſia, is diſtinguiſh'd into three Parts, Deſerta, Petræa, and Arabia Fœlix, or that the Deſerta borders upon Syria, and is not far diſtant from Damaſcus. What we had rather obſerve to him is,——That, as we learn this Paſſage of the Apoſtle's Life from his own Account only, Gal. i. 17. St Luke, who makes no Mention of it in his Hiſtory, in all Probability, did not accompany him in this Journey; and this makes it the rather believ'd, that the Intent of his going into Arabia was not to propagate the Goſpel, but to find out a Retreat, where, by Meditation and Prayer, he might fit and prepare himſelf for his future Miniſtry; tho' it is hardly conceivable, how a Perſon of St Paul's Zeal and Activity could ſuffer himſelf to lie ſtill, amidſt ſo many poor Creatures, that ſtood in need of his Inſtructions: And therefore others have ſuppos'd, that the chief Intent of his taking this Journey, was, to carry the glad Tidings of the Goſpel into a Country, that had never heard of it before. Calmet's Commentary.

Synagogues; ſo that all the Jews, in that City, were not a little amaz'd and confounded, both at the ſtrange Change in his Opinions and Proceedings, and the powerful Efficacy of his Arguings and Diſcourſes. Acts ix. 23. Their Malice however being incens'd, at having loſt ſo conſiderable a Champion, purſu'd him cloſe. They contriv'd all poſſible Means to diſpatch him; and, after many Attempts to no Purpoſe, (c) made their Requeſt at laſt to the Governor, under Aretas †, King of Arabia, that he would gratify them in his Deſtruction. Saul, however, had early Notice of this, and, knowing that the Gates were Day and Night ſtrictly guarded to prevent his Eſcape, from one of the Houſes, that ſtood upon the City-Wall, he was let † down by the Diſciples in a Baſket, and ſo made the beſt of his Way to Jeruſalem.

THREE Years were now paſt and gone, ſince the Time of his Converſion; but, notwithſtanding this, when he came to Jeruſalem, he found but a cold Reception among many of the Diſciples, who were ſenſible of his former Conduct, and, as yet, diffident of the Reality of his Change, until Barnabas †, who was privy to all his Circumſtances, having introduc'd him to the Apoſtles, Peter and James, vouch'd for his Sincerity, and, by declaring the miraculous Manner of his Converſion, and his zealous Preaching at Damaſcus, diſſipated all their Doubts, and gain'd him the Right-Hand of Fellowſhip, or an intimate Communion with the Apoſtles. Here he continu'd preaching with all Boldneſs, and his Sermons were ſo powerful, and Diſputations with the Helleniſts ſo unanſwerable, that they too, like the Jews at Damaſcus, form'd Deſigns againſt his Life; which when the Brethren underſtood, they conducted him to Cæſarea †, from whence he ſet ſail to his

† This Aretas, whoſe Name is ſaid to have been Æneas, before he came to the Crown of Arabia, was Father-in-Law to Herod Antipas, who, ſome Time after, divorc'd his Daughter, and made Herodias, his Brother Philip's Wife, the Conſort of his Bed: But how this Aretas, who, in the Beginning of his Reign, by the Inſinuations of one Syllæus, fell under the Diſpleaſure of Tiberius, came to be poſſeſs'd of the Sovereignty of Damaſcus, the Capital of Syria, which had been a long while a Roman Province, we can no where learn. Joſeph. † This was ſo far from betraying any Want of Courage in the Apoſtle, that it was only putting in Practice his Maſter's Direction, when they perſecute you in one City, flee to another, Matth. x. 23.

† Barnabas is ſuppos'd to have been an old Acquaintance of St Paul's, and a Fellow-Student with him under Gamaliel; and, having been lately at Antioch, 'tis not unlikely, that he might there receive the Account of his Converſion, and conſequent Behaviour, which made him the readier to become, upon this Occaſion, his Guarantee with the Apoſtles. Calmet's Commentary.

† Some Commentators are of Opinion, that the Place, to which the Brethren conducted St Paul, was Cæſarea Philippi, in the extream Northern Parts of Paleſtine, from whence his Way lay directly through Syria to Tarſus in Cilicia; but others, with more Juſtneſs, have obſerv'd, that wherever Mention is made in the New Teſtament of Cæſarea alone, and without any Addition, it is always to be underſtood of the Cæſarea, which Herod the Great built, and whereof Joſephus gives us the following Account: " There was a certain Place, by the Sea ſide, formerly " called Straton's Tower, which Herod look'd upon as a very commodious Tract of Ground, whereon to raiſe a " City. Accordingly he drew his Model, and ſet People to work, and in twelve Years Time finiſh'd it. The " Buildings were all of Marble, private Houſes, as well as Palaces; but his Maſter-Piece was the Port, which he " made as large as the Pyræum, (or Port belonging to Athens) and a ſafe Station againſt all Winds and Weathers
" ——— The City ſtands between Dora and Joppa, two wretched Sea-Towns, where there is no Riding in the " Harbours with a South-Weſt Wind, which bears ſo furious upon the Shore, that Merchantmen are forc'd to keep " off at Sea many Times, for Fear of being driven a-ground. To encounter this Difficulty of the Place, Herod
" order'd a Mole to be made, in the Form of an Half-Moon, and large enough for a Royal Navy to ride in, which " he did, by letting down Stones of a prodigious Size, fifty Feet in Length, eighteen over, and nine deep (and " ſome larger) in Twenty-Fathom Water. This Mole was two hundred Feet in Extent, whereof the one Half ſerv'd
" to break the Setting in of the Sea, and the other Half for the Foundation of a Stone-Wall, that was fortify'd with " Turrets; and, underneath this, was a Key, or Landing-Place, with a large Walk upon it round the Port, as a " Place of Pleaſure, to take the Air in. ——— The Houſes, about the Port were all uniformly built, of the moſt
" excellent Sort of Marble, and, in the Middle of them, on a Mount, ſtood a Temple, which ſerv'd as a Sea-Mark
" to the Mariners, and was celebrated no leſs for its Materials, than its Workmanſhip. In this Temple there were " two Statues or Images, one of Rome, and the other of Cæſar, from whom the City took its Name; and, in " the City, the Contrivance of the very Vaults and Common-Sewers, laid at equal Diſtances, and diſcharging

Peter raiſes Tabitha, from the Dead. Acts. ix. 31.

The Church at this Time had Peace, and flouriſh'd exceedingly: Saul diligently preach'd the Word in Cilicia †, and Syria †, and Peter made a general Viſitation of all the Saints in Judea, Galilee, and Samaria. In his Progreſs he arriv'd at a Town called Lydda †, where he cur'd one Æneas of a Paralytick Diſorder, which had confin'd him to his Bed for eight Years, and thereby prevailed with all the Inhabitants of Lydda and of Saron †, a neighbouring Town, to embrace the Chriſtian Profeſſion. From Lydda he was intreated by two Meſſengers to come over to Joppa, a noted Port about ſix Miles Diſtance, upon the Account of one Tabitha †, (in Greek called Dorcas) a Chriſtian Woman, venerable for her Piety, and diffuſive Charity, who was lately dead. When he came to the Houſe, he found the Body in an upper Chamber ready waſh'd, and prepar'd for its Funeral, and attended with many ſorrowful Widows, who durſt not requeſt of him to raiſe her from the Dead, but, by their Tears and Lamentations, and large Commendations of her Charity, ſufficiently teſtify'd their Deſire; ſo that the Apoſtle, having caus'd the Company to withdraw, firſt kneeled down, and made his Supplications to God, and then turning to the Body, with one Word's Speaking, rais'd her up, and preſented her alive to her Friends and Relations: Which gain'd him a great Number of Converts at Joppa, and encourag'd him, for ſome conſiderable Time, to take up his Abode there, lodging in the Houſe of one Simon a Tanner.

In the Times of the Romans it was a City of great Note, as being not only the Metropolis of the Province of Cilicia, but honour'd likewiſe with the Privileges of a Roman Colony, (which we find St Paul pleading in his own Behalf, Acts xxii. 25, 28.) and with an Academy furniſh'd with ſuch eminent Men, that Strabo ſcruples not to ſay, they excelled all others in polite Learning and Philoſophy, even thoſe of Alexandria, and Athens, and that Rome itſelf was beholding to this Nurſery of all Sciences for its beſt Profeſſors; and therefore no Wonder that St Paul, who had the firſt Foundations of his Erudition laid here, became ſo well inſtructed in the Liberal Arts, and ſo well acquainted with Heathen Authors. Wells's Geography of the New Teſtament.

By the Gentiles it was called Dioſpolis, or the City of Jupiter, but by the Chriſtians, in the Times of the Holy Wars, it had the Name of St George's, partly from a magnificent Temple, which the Emperor Juſtinian there erected in Honour of that Saint, and partly from an erroneous Opinion then prevailing among them, that in that Place he obtain'd the Crown of Martyrdom. Wells's Geography of the New Teſtament.

† The true Reaſon, why St Luke gives this Interpretation of her Syriack Name, ſeems to be this, —— That as ſhe was a Jeweſs, who ſpake nothing but Greek, ſhe was called by her firſt Name among the Jews, and by her ſecond among the Greeks; for in both Languages the two Names ſignify the ſame Thing, viz. a Goat, or a Roe. Whitby's Annotations.

† At the Dedication of the Temple, Solomon had ſo oft and ſo ſolemnly requeſted of God, that he would hearken to the Supplications of his People, who ſhould, at any Time, ſpread out their Hands towards that Place, 1 Kings viii. 30, 38. that it thence became a Cuſtom among the Jews, whenever they were abſent from Jeruſalem, to offer up

Noon-tide to pray, after he had ended his Devotions, he found himſelf hungry; but, while the People were preparing his Dinner, he fell into a Trance, wherein was preſented to him a large Sheet, or Table-Cloth, let down, as it were, by the four Corners from Heaven, wherein were Creatures of all Kinds, clean and unclean, and, at the ſame Time, he heard a Voice calling to him to kill, and eat freely of them; which when Peter, a little too tenacious of the Rites and Inſtitutions of the Moſaick Law, declar'd his Averſion to do, the Voice rejoin'd, That, what God had pronounc'd clean, he ought by no Means to account common or unclean. This Repreſentation was made to him three ſeveral Times, after which the Sheet was again taken up, and the Viſion diſappear'd. But, while Peter was revolving with himſelf what the Meaning of this might be, three Meſſengers knock'd at the Door, deſiring to ſpeak with him; and when they had deliver'd their Meſſage, viz. That Cornelius, a Roman, Captain of a Company in the Italian Legion † then at Cæſarea, and a Perſon of eminent Virtue, Piety, and Charity, had, by an immediate Command from God, ſent to him; he, the next Day, with ſix other Brethren from Joppa, went along with them, and, the Day following, arriv'd at Cæſarea.

Acts x. 24.

CORNELIUS, in Expectation of his coming, had invited his Friends and Relations to his Houſe, and, as Peter drew near, fell down at his Feet to worſhip him; but the Apoſtle, rejecting the Honour, as what was due to God alone, enter'd into the Houſe, and there made his Apology to the Company, viz. "That, "tho' they could not but know, that it "was not lawful for a Jew to converſe "(in the Duties of Religion eſpecially) "with thoſe of another Nation; yet, ſince "God had now taught him to make no "Diſtinction, he very readily attended "their Pleaſure, deſiring to know the "Occaſion of their ſending for him." Whereupon Cornelius made Anſwer, "That "he did it upon the expreſs Command of "God, who, by his Angel ‡, had order'd him to ſend for him at Joppa, "from whom he ſhould receive ſome "ſpecial Inſtruction, and that for this "Reaſon they were all then met together, "attending the Commands, which he had "brought them from God."

Hereupon St Peter began his Diſcourſe, and declar'd, "That now he perceiv'd plainly, that God had made no "Diſtinction of Perſons, and People, but "that the Pious and Godly of all Nations "were to meet with Acceptance; that "Peace and Reconciliation between God and up their Prayers in Places, where they might have a free Proſpect towards it. Thus of Daniel it is recorded, that when he pray'd, (as he did it three Times a Day) the Windows of his Chamber were opened towards Jeruſalem, Dan. vi. 10. and therefore, in all Likelihood, St Peter, being now at Joppa, went up to the Roof of the Houſe to pray for the ſame Reaſon. Whitby's Annotations.

† The Cohors of the Romans, which the Greek renders σπεῖρα, and we, Band, was a Body of Infantry, conſiſting of five hundred Men, ten of which Bands made a Legion; and the Manner in which the Romans diſtinguiſh'd, and denominated their Bands and Legions, was very various. Sometimes it was from the Order of Places, and ſo they were called the firſt, or ſecond Band, according to their Rank and Precedency: Sometimes from the Commanders they were under, as the Auguſtan, and Claudian Band, &c. becauſe Perſons of that Name did lead them: Sometimes from their own Behaviour, as the Victrix, the Ferrea, the Conquering, the Iron-band, &c. by Reaſon of the great Valour, which, in ſome ſharp Engagements, theſe had ſhewn: Sometimes from the Countries, they were chiefly quarter'd in, as the German, and Pannonian Band, &c. and ſometimes from the Parts, from whence they were gather'd, as this of Cornelius is called the Italian Band, becauſe it was rais'd out of that Country, and was a Body of Forces, well known for their Gallantry and great Exploits, among the Writers of the Roman Hiſtory. Calmet's Commentary.

‡ But, if God was ſo very kind to Cornelius, as to ſend an Angel to him, why did not he, at the ſame Time, give that Angel Commiſſion to inſtruct him in what he was to do, and to ſave his Apoſtle a Journey from Joppa to Cæſarea? Now, beſides the Honour, which God, in this Method of Proceeding, deſign'd to confer upon St Peter and his Miniſtry, 'tis apparent, that hereby he intended to let us know, that we are not to expect extraordinary Ways of Inſtruction, where he hath inſtituted ordinary Means. The Angel, no doubt, might as readily have told Cornelius what he ought to do, as bid him ſend for Peter, and God could as eaſily have given him his Spirit at that Time,

From Acts i 10. to the End.

“ and Man, was a Doctrine publiſh'd by “ the Prophets of old, and, of late, ſince “ the Time of John the Baptiſt, preach'd “ through Galilee and Judea; that of “ this Peace Jeſus of Nazareth was the “ only Mediator between God and Man, “ as appear'd by the Divine Powers and “ Graces, wherewith he was inveſted, and “ which he conſtantly exercis'd in doing “ good to Mankind; that of his Life and “ Actions, more eſpecially of his Cruci- “ fixion by the Jews, and Reſurrection “ from the Dead, of his appearing to his “ Diſciples, and even eating and drinking “ with them after his Reſurrection, he “ and the reſt of the Apoſtles were choſen “ Witneſſes; and that from him they had “ receiv'd, before his Aſcenſion, a Com- “ mand, and Commiſſion to publiſh to all “ Nations under Heaven, that he was the “ Perſon, whom God had appointed to be “ the great Judge of all the World.”

WHILE Peter was thus preaching to them, the Holy Ghoſt fell upon all that heard him, without the Impoſition of the Apoſtles Hands. This made the Jewiſh Converts, who came along with Peter, wonder not a little, that the Gifts of the Holy Ghoſt ſhould be pour'd upon the Gentiles; but Peter, perceiving it, order'd them ‡ immediately to be baptiz'd, and, (to inſtruct them more fully in their Chriſtian Profeſſion) tarry'd for ſome conſiderable Time with them.

Acts xi. 1.

Time, as four Days after; but then this would not have been ſo agreeable to the Order, which Chriſt had ſettled in his Church. Chriſt had appointed his Apoſtles to miniſter his Ordinances; and therefore God did not ſuffer even an Angel to break in upon this OEconomy, but order'd St Peter to wait upon the Centurion, that his Divine Mercy might not redound upon him only, but be extended to his Relations and Friends. Whitby's Annotations.

‡ But whom did he order to do this, the Gentiles? It ſeems, at firſt Sight, not a little abſurd, that they, who were not yet baptiz'd themſelves, ſhould baptize others. Or were they ſome of thoſe, who came along with him to Cæſarea? Theſe are generally ſuppos'd to be no more than Lay-Brethren, who were not permitted to baptize, but in Caſes of Neceſſity: But, conſidering that St Peter was now upon his Viſitation through Judea, Galilee, and Samaria, it ſeems reaſonable, that he ſhould carry ſome of his Deacons (at leaſt) along with him, to attend in ſuch Offices as theſe. Such was the Beginning of the Converſion of the Gentiles: For that Cornelius and his Company were the Firſt-Fruits of the Heathen World is evident from the Injunction, which our Saviour gave his Apoſtles, not to go into the Way of the Gentiles, Matth. x. 5. from the Practice of thoſe, that were ſcatter'd abroad upon the Death of Stephen, but preached the Word to the Jews only, Acts xi. 19. from the Wonder, which the Jewiſh Converts with St Peter expreſs'd, when they ſay, that on the Gentiles alſo was poured out the Gift of the Holy Ghoſt Acts x. 45. and from the Altercation, which the Brethren at Jeruſalem had with him at his Return, thou wenteſt in to Men uncircumciſed, and didſt eat with them, Acts xi. 3. which to me is a Proof ſufficient, that the Door of Faith was not opened to the Gentiles, before the Converſion of Cornelius, who (according to the Account of ſome Latin Writers) was made afterwards Biſhop of Cæſarea of Paleſtine, where he ſuffer'd Martyrdom. But ſince Euſebius, who was Biſhop of that Church, does not reckon him among the Number of his Predeceſſors, we have Reaſon to ſuſpect the Truth of this Piece of Hiſtory. Whitby's Annotations, and Calmet's Commentary.

† The ancient Fathers are generally of Opinion, that the Apoſtles themſelves had no Hand in this Controverſy, and ſome of them ſuppoſe, that the great Fomenter of it was Cerinthus, whoſe Hereſy grew afterwards famous in the Church: But, if we conſider how zealous the Jews, even after their Converſion, were for their Laws and Cuſtoms, Acts xxi. 20, 21. how St Peter himſelf, before he receiv'd this Viſion, laid it down for a Rule, that it was unlawful for a Jew to converſe with an Alien, Acts x. 28. and, even after this Viſion, how he withdrew from the believing Gentiles, for Fear of the Cenſure of thoſe, who came from Jeruſalem, Gal. ii. 12. we cannot ſee, why it ſhould be inconſiſtent with the Character of the very greateſt of the Apoſtles to enquire into the Reaſons of St Peter's Conduct, which, according to their preſent Perſuaſion, was not warrantable: Since this was a Myſtery (as St Paul tells us) which, in other Ages, was not known unto the Sons of Men, as it is now revealed unto his Holy Apoſtles and Prophets by the Spirit, viz. that the Gentiles ſhould be Fellow-Heirs, and of the ſame Body, and Partakers of God's Promiſe in Chriſt, by the Goſpel, Eph. iii. 5, 6, &c. Calmet's Commentary, and Whitby's Annotations.

"Inſtructions and Converſation;" which fully ſatisfy'd the Audience, and turn'd their Diſpleaſure againſt him into Praiſe and Thankſgiving to God, for having communicated the ſame Mercy to the Gentiles, that he had done to the Jews.

Barnabas and Saul preach at Antioch, where the Diſciples were firſt called Chriſtians. Acts xi. 19.

After the general Diſperſion, which follow'd upon St Stephen's Death, ſome Diſciples, who were born in Cyprus, and Cyrene[†], having travelled through ſeveral Countries, and hitherto preach'd to the Jews only, when they came to Antioch[†], and there heard of the Converſion of Cornelius, and others, they apply'd themſelves to the Greeks[‖], who liv'd in that City, and, by the Bleſſing of God, made great Numbers of Converts daily; inſomuch, that the Apoſtles, who remain'd at Jeruſalem, when they heard of this happy Progreſs, ſent Barnabas[†], a pious Man, and indu'd with many excellent Gifts, to aſſiſt the Diſciples, and confirm the Believers in that City. The Succeſs of the Goſpel in ſo large a Place was no ſmall Conſolation to him: And therefore, having exhorted the Brethren to hold faſt the Profeſſion of their Faith, he thence departed to Tarſus to find out Saul, and with him, in a ſhort Time, return'd to Antioch; where, for the Space of a whole Year, they daily reſorted to the Places of publick Concourſe, and gain'd Converts ſo numerous and conſiderable, that in this City the Diſciples of Jeſus firſt obtain'd the honourable Name of Chriſtians[†].

This

[†] This City was of great Note, and once of ſuch Power, as to contend with Carthage for ſome Pre-eminencies. It ſtood on the Weſtern Parts of Lybia, properly ſo called; and, as it was the principal City, it ſometimes gave the Name of Cyrenaica to the whole Country, which by the Sacred Writer is paraphraſtically called Lybia about Cyrene, Acts ii. 10. The City itſelf is famous in profane Writers for being the Birth-Place of Eratoſthenes the Mathematician, of Callimachus the Poet, and (in Holy Writ) of Simon, whom the Jews compelled to bear our Saviour's Croſs. Wells's Geography of the New Teſtament.

[†] This Antioch, to diſtinguiſh it from ſixteen other Cities, which, in Syria, and other Countries, bore that Name, was frequently called Antiochia Epidaphne, from its Neighbourhood to Daphne, a Village, where the Temple of Daphne ſtood. It was built, as ſome ſay, by Antiochus Epiphanes; as others, by Seleucus Nicanor, the firſt King of Syria after Alexander the Great, in Memory of his Father Antiochus, and was, after that, the Royal Seat of the Kings of Syria. In the flouriſhing Times of the Roman Empire it was the ordinary Reſidence of the Prefect, or Governor of the Eaſtern Provinces, and was alſo honour'd with the Reſidence of many of the Roman Emperors, eſpecially of Verus and Valens, who ſpent here the greateſt Part of their Time. As to its Situation, it lay on both Sides the River Orontes, about twelve Miles diſtant from the Mediterranean Sea; was, in former Times, adorn'd with many ſumptuous Palaces, and ſtately Temples, and both by Nature and Art fortify'd even to Admiration; but, being taken by the Saracens, and afterwards by the Turks, it began to grow into Decay, and is now in ſo deſolate and ruinous a Condition, that the Patriarch has long ſince remov'd his Dwelling to Damaſcus. Whitby's Alphabetical Table, and Wells's Geography of the New Teſtament.

[‖] The learned Grotius is pretty poſitive, that, inſtead of πρὸς τοὺς Ἑλληνιστὰς, as it is in our vulgar Copies, and denotes ſuch Jews, as ſpake the Greek Language, we ſhould read πρὸς τοὺς Ἕλληνας, i. e. Greeks, who were Gentiles, for which he produces, not only the Syriack, Arabick, and Latin Verſions, but the Alexandrian Manuſcript likewiſe, as indeed the whole Series and Purport of St Luke's Diſcourſe ſeems to require it. For, having given us an Account of what happen'd to Cornelius at Cæſarea, he next proceeds to another Piece of Hiſtory of the like Nature, viz. the Converſion of ſeveral other Gentiles in the City of Antioch, which, when it came to be known at Jeruſalem, confirm'd the Brethren in the Belief of God's Deſign to receive the Gentiles into the Boſom of his Church, and gave a great Weight to what St Peter had teſtify'd concerning this Matter. Whitby's Annotations, and Calmet's Commentary.

[†] The Scripture acquaints us, Acts iv. 36. that his Name was originally Joſes, that he was deſcended of the Tribe of Levi, but born at Cyprus; and that, as he was the firſt, who ſold an Eſtate, and put the Purchaſe-Money into the common Fund then apply'd to the Suſtenance of poor Chriſtians, he very likely from that Action receiv'd the Name of Barnabas, which (according to St Luke's Interpretation) ſignifies the Son of Conſolation. But, beſides the Qualifications mentioned in the Text, there were two other Reaſons, that might induce the Apoſtles to make choice of Barnabas, preferably to any other, upon this Occaſion; 1ſt, Becauſe he was a great Maſter of the Greek, which was the current Language of Antioch, as being himſelf born at Cyprus, where that Language only was in Uſe. And 2dly, becauſe the Apoſtles thought it might be more agreeable to theſe firſt Planters of the Goſpel in Antioch, (who were a great many of them Natives of Cyprus) to have a Fellow-Labourer of the ſame Country ſent amongſt them. Calmet's Commentary.

[†] Before this, they were called, among themſelves, Brethren, Saints, Diſciples, Believers, the Faithful, and thoſe that called on the Name of Chriſt; and, among their Enemies, Galileans, Nazarens, and the Men of the Sect; but now, by the Converſion of ſo many Heathens both in Cæſarea and Antioch, the believing Jews and Gentiles being all made

Acts xi. 27.

THIS open'd an Intercourſe between Jeruſalem and Antioch; ſo that, when certain Perſons, who, at that Time, had the Spirit of Prophecy, were come from Jeruſalem, and, among them, one nam'd Agabus †, had foretold, that there would ſhortly be a great Famine in many Parts of the Roman Empire, (which accordingly happen'd in the fourth Year of the Reign of Claudius) the Chriſtians of Antioch determin'd to make a Collection for their Brethren in Judea †, which, upon the Approach of the Dearth, they accordingly did, and ſent it to the Elders by the Hands of Barnabas and Saul: But, before their Arrival at Jeruſalem, Agrippa, the Grandſon of Herod the Great, (merely to ingratiate himſelf with the Jews) rais'd a ſharp Perſecution againſt the Chriſtians. He order'd James, (the Son of Zebedee †, and Brother of John) commonly called the Great, to be beheaded; and, having apprehended Peter, and put him in Priſon, he ſet a Guard of ſixteen Soldiers upon him, deſigning, immediately after the Feaſt of the Paſſover, to bring him forth to the Jews, and, if they deſir'd it, to have him executed. But the very Night, before the Day intended for his Arraignment and Execution, God ſent an Angel from Heaven, who knock'd off his Chains †, open'd the Priſon-Door, and, without the Guards once perceiving it, carry'd him quite out; whereupon he went directly to made one Church; this new Name was given them, as more expreſſive of their common Relation to their Maſter Chriſt; and, that it was given them in a ſolemn Manner, we have Reaſon to conclude from the Propriety of the Original Word. For χρηματίσαι is commonly uſed with Regard to Edicts and Proclamations, ſuch eſpecially, as contain the People's Profeſſions of Allegiance to Emperors, and the Privileges granted by them to the People: And therefore it ſeems not improbable, that the Impoſition of this Name was done by a publick Act, and Declaration of the whole Church, about the Beginning of the Reign of Claudius, ten Years after our Lord's Aſcenſion, (as an ancient Hiſtorian informs us) whether Euodius was at that Time the Biſhop of Antioch or no. Stanhope, on the Epiſtles and Goſpels, and Cave's Lives of the Apoſtles.

† Who this Agabus was, we have no Account in any Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory, only the Greeks tell us, that he was one of our Lord's Seventy Diſciples, and, as he is ſaid to have ſuffer'd Martyrdom at Antioch, accordingly they obſerve his Feſtival on the eighth of March: But, in Regard to the Truth of his Prophecy, Euſebius tells us, that the Famine, which he foretold, oppreſs'd almoſt the whole Empire, and was recorded by Hiſtorians, the moſt averſe to the Chriſtian Religion, viz. by Dion Caſſius, who calls it a very great Famine, Hiſt. lib. xvi. by Joſephus, who tells us, that in Judea many periſh'd for want of Victuals, Antiq. lib. xx. c. 2. and by Suetonius, who obſerves, that the Emperor himſelf, upon this Occaſion, was ſo inſulted by the People in the common Market-Place, that he was oblig'd, by a Poſtern-Gate, to retire into his Palace. In Claudio, Chap. xviii. Calmet's Commentary, and Whitby's Annotations.

† The Reaſons, why this Supply was principally ſent to Judea, might be, either becauſe there the Calamity fell heavieſt, or becauſe Believers were like to find leaſt Pity there, or becauſe this was a fitting Teſtimony of Gratitude to the Country, from whence the Means of their Converſion firſt came, according to that ſubſequent Reaſoning of St Paul's, If we have ſown unto you ſpiritual Things, ought it to be accounted a great Thing, if we ſhall reap your carnal Things? 1 Cor. ix. 11. Stanhope, on the Epiſtles and Goſpels.

† Theſe Titles are given to the Apoſtle, either upon the Account of his Age, or to diſtinguiſh him from another of the ſame Name, who was Biſhop of Jeruſalem, and is uſually ſtiled the Leſs. He was by Country a Galilean, and born very probably either at Capernaum, or Bethſaida. He had his firſt Inſtitution (together with his Brother John the Evangeliſt) under the Baptiſt, but, how he diſpos'd of himſelf after our Lord's Aſcenſion, it does not certainly appear. St Jerom makes him to have preach'd to the Jews of the Diſperſion; but that his Labours carry'd him at all out of Judea, or even from Jeruſalem itſelf, no authentick Hiſtory informs us. That his Zeal was very induſtrious and ardent there, no other Proof is neceſſary, than that Agrippa, a great Aſſerter of the Jewiſh Religion, made choice of him for the firſt Sacrifice to the Fury of the People: But that his Courage and Conſtancy, at the Time of his Trial, was ſuch, as even converted his Accuſer, made him come, and fall down at his Feet, and heartily beg Pardon for what he had ſaid againſt him; and that, after the Apoſtle had forgiven him, he, in the Preſence of the whole Aſſembly, declar'd himſelf likewiſe to be a Chriſtian, and ſo they were both beheaded together, is evident from the Teſtimony of Euſebius, lib. ii. c. 9. who had this Account (as he acquaints us) from the Inſtitutions of Clemens of Alexandria. Cave's Lives of the Apoſtles, and Stanhope, on the Epiſtles and Goſpels.

† That the Manner of ſecuring a Priſoner was to have him faſten'd, by two Chains, to two Soldiers, or Keepers, on each Side one, while two others ſtood Guard at the Priſon-Door, is very plain from the Text in this Place; but that ſome of theſe Soldiers, converted to the Chriſtian Faith, ſhould mark, and take away theſe Chains, and give them to the Biſhop of Jeruſalem; and that they ſhould be kept, as a Treaſure, not only through all the Jewiſh Wars, but about four hundred Years after, 'till Juvenal, Biſhop of Jeruſalem gave them to Eudoxia, Wife to Theodoſius the Younger, who gave one of them to the Church of St Peter in Conſtantinople, and ſent the other to Rome, is a Legend, that ſmells too much of Superſtition to deſerve the leaſt Credit. Whitby's Annotations.

to the Houſe of Mary [†], the Mother of John, ſirnam'd Mark, where ſeveral Diſciples were met together, and ſending up their Prayers to Heaven for his Deliverance. As he ſtood knocking without, a Maid of the Houſe, nam'd Rhoda, perceiving that it was his Voice, ran in, and acquainted the Company, that Peter was at the Door, but, when ſhe perſiſted in the thing, they concluded rather, that it muſt have been his Angel [†], until, being let in, he related to them the whole Manner of his miraculous Eſcape; and, having order'd them to acquaint James, and the other Brethren with this good News, he withdrew himſelf to a Place of more Retirement and Security.

Acts xii. 18. IN the Morning, as ſoon as it was Day, the Soldiers, miſſing their Priſoner, were in the utmoſt Confuſion, and Agrippa, finding himſelf diſappointed in his wicked Deſign, commanded the Keepers to be put to Death, as ſuppoſing them acceſſary to St Peter's Eſcape, and ſo departed from Jeruſalem to Cæſarea [*]. While he was here, the Embaſſadors of Tyre and Sidon, relying on the Intereſt they had with Blaſtus, the Lord High-Chamberlain, came to ſollicit an Accommodation of ſome Difference, that had lately happen'd between their States and the King, and that the rather, becauſe, in this Time of Scarcity, their [‡] Country was in a great Meaſure dependent on the King's Dominions for its Support. Agrippa, tho' highly diſpleas'd with them, appointed them a Day of Audience; and being dreſs'd in his Royal Robes, and, ſeated on his Throne, made ſuch an Oration, as the flattering Multitude called the Speech of a God, and not of a Man, which he, with a ſecret Pride and Vanity, aſſuming to himſelf, was, that Moment, ſtruck by an Angel with a Mortification in his Bowels [*], of which, in a ſhort Time, he died.

ABOUT the Time of the Death of Agrippa, Saul and Barnabas, having diſpos'd of their Contributions to the Chriſtians in Jeruſalem and Judea, return'd back to the City of Antioch, and brought with them Mark †; but they had not long been there, before God, by ſome particular Inſpiration, gave them to underſtand, that he had appointed them to carry his Word into other Places: Whereupon the Church, that was at Antioch, betook themſelves to faſting and Prayer; and Simon ‡, Lucius †, and Manean †, Men endu'd with a Spirit of Prophecy, laid their Hands † on them, and ſo ſent them away to preach, wherever the Holy Ghoſt ſhould require them to go.

[†] This Houſe ſtood upon Mount Sion, and, according to Epiphanius, having eſcap'd the Deſtruction of Jeruſalem by Titus, it was afterwards turn'd into a famous Church, (called the Church of Sion) which endur'd for ſeveral Ages. Calmet's Commentary, and Dictionary.

[†] That the Word ἄγγελος, or Angel, ſignifies not only a celeſtial Spirit, but alſo a Meſſenger ſent from one to another, we allow is manifeſt from ſeveral Paſſages in Scripture; but that it cannot, in this Place, denote a common Meſſenger, is evident for this Reaſon, viz. That the Damſel could know St Peter no otherwiſe, than either by his Voice, or Face, which the company might believe his Angel was capable of imitating; whereas St Peter could not but know, that no Meſſenger from the priſon (had he been allow'd to ſend one) was able to do this: And therefore, ſince it was a vulgar Opinion among the Jews, that good Men had their tutelar Angels, or at leaſt, that Angels were ſent down from Heaven about their Affairs, they, by this Angel, might underſtand, either erroneouſly a Guardian Angel attending on him, or, agreeably to Scripture, an Angel ſent down from Heaven to acquaint them with ſomething relating to him, in Anſwer to their Prayers. Hammond's and Whitby's Annotations.

[*] Joſephus, who gives us an Account both of this Journey, and the Occaſion of it, informs us, that he went down to the City of Cæſarea to perform the Solemnities, and the Games, which were there celebrated every Olympiad, to the Honour of Cæſar, and that the Nobles and Governors of Syria repair'd to that City for the ſame Purpoſe. Antiq. lib. xix. c. 7.

[‡] The Inhabitants of the Countries of Tyre and Sidon, which were very narrow, and pent up by the Sea, took little Pains in the Cultivation of their Ground. Their whole Buſineſs and Employment was Commerce; and therefore they were beholden to Judea, Samaria, and Galilee, (which were all at this Time under Agrippa's Juriſdiction) for moſt of the common Neceſſaries of Life, as appears from 1 Kings v. 9, 11. and Ezek. xxvii. 17. Calmet's Commentary.

[*] In teſtimony of the Truth of this Piece of ſacred Hiſtory, Joſephus relates the Manner of this King's Death, and what was eſteem'd the Occaſion of it, in the following Terms, ——— " Upon the ſecond Day of the Feſtival, Agrippa went early in the Morning to the Theatre, in a Silver Stuff, ſo wonderfully rich and curious, that, " the Beams of the riſing Sun ſtriking upon it, People's Eyes were dazzled with the Reflection, and, as the ſparkling " of the Light ſeem'd to have ſomething Divine in it, it mov'd the Spectators, at the ſame Time, both with Vene- " ration and dread. † This Perſon, who is ſometimes called John Mark, and, at other Times, ſimply Mark, or John, is very improperly confounded with the Evangeliſt St Mark. He was the Couſin, and Diſciple of Barnabas, and the Son of a Chriſtian Woman, whoſe Name was Mary, who had an Houſe at Jeruſalem, where the Faithful, and the Apoſtles generally met. What Part he bore in the Propagation of the Goſpel, the Acts of the Apoſtles inform us. Notwithſtanding the Difference between St Paul and Barnabas, which aroſe concerning him, St Paul ſpeaks advantageouſly of him in his Epiſtle to the Coloſſians, Chap. iv. 10. in that to Philemon, Ver. 24. and in his ſecond to Timothy, Chap. iv. 11. The Greeks give him the Title of an Apoſtle, and ſay, that the Sick were cur'd merely by his Shadow. Some make him the Biſhop of Biblis in Phœnicia; but others, with more Probability, report, that he dy'd at Epheſus, but as to the Time, or Manner of his Death, we are utterly in the Dark. Calmet's Commentary.

‡ This Simeon, who is ſirnam'd Niger, is ſuppos'd by ſome to be the ſame with Simon the Cyrenean, who bore our Saviour's Croſs; but for this Opinion there is no other Proof, than the Similitude of Names, which, in this Caſe, is far from being exact, ſince St Luke always calls Simon the Cyrenean by the Name of Simon, but Simon Niger by the Name of Simeon. Calmet's Commentary.

† This Lucius is ſaid by ſome to have been one of our Lord's ſeventy Diſciples, and by the Apoſtles to have been conſtituted the firſt Biſhop of Cyrene; but of theſe, and ſome other pretended Paſſages of his Life and Death, we have no Manner of Certainty. Calmet's Commentary.

† This Manaen muſt needs have been a Perſon of a conſiderable Family, and Diſtinction, becauſe we find that he was brought up with Herod Antipas, the Tetrarch, who put John the Baptiſt, to Death; and yet we are told, that he was one of the ſeventy Diſciples, and ſuffer'd Martyrdom at Antioch, but when, or in what Manner, we have no Information. Calmet's Commentary.

† Some have imagin'd, that this Impoſition of Hands was a ſolemn Ordination of Paul and Barnabas to be Biſhops in the Chriſtian Church; but, beſides the Incongruity of an Apoſtle's being ordain'd Biſhop by thoſe of an inferior Order, as Prophets, and Teachers were, Acts xiii. 1. St Paul declares for himſelf, that he was an Apoſtle, not of Men, neither by Men, but by Jeſus Chriſt, Gal. i. 1. And as the Apoſtleſhip comprehends in it all Eccleſiaſtical Power, this Laying on of Hands was not deſign'd to give them any Epiſcopal Authority, as is pretended, but merely to recommend them to the Grace of God, for the Work, which they were to fulfil, Acts xiv. 26. as being a Ceremony that attended Prayer, and Benediction, and other ſolemn Actions, as well as Ordination. Thus the Children of Iſrael laid their Hands on the Levites, when they were ſeparated to the Service of Aaron, and his Sons, Numb. vii. 10. and thus our Bleſſed Saviour, when the Children were brought to him, put his Hands upon them, and bleſſed them, Matth. xix. 15. So that this Impoſition of Hands upon Paul and Barnabas was precatory, not conſecratory; deſign'd to implore the Bleſſing of Heaven upon their Miſſion to the Gentiles, and not to ordain, or confirm them Biſhops of the Church of Chriſt. In the Reign of the Emperor Trajan, it was deſtroy'd by the Jews, and re-built; but, after that, being, in the Time of Herodias, ſack'd and raz'd to the Ground by the Saracens, it never recover'd its former Splendor, tho' out of its Ruins is ſaid to have ariſen Famaguſta, which was the chief Place of the Iſle, when the Turks took it from the Venetians, in the Year 1570. Wells's Geography of the New Teſtament.

firſt began their miniſterial Office. Here they preach'd in the Synagogues, and employ'd Marks, who was of their Company, in ſeveral Offices of the Church, which they could not attend themſelves. From Salamis they croſs'd the Iſland of Paphos †, where the Pro-Conſul, of Governor to the Place, (who at that time was Sergius Paulus) had his Reſidence; a Man of great Wiſdom and Prudence, but unhappily ſeduc'd by a Jewiſh Sorcerer nam'd Barjeſus. Upon their preaching there, the Governor, being inform'd of ſomething extraordinary, ſent to the Apoſtles to hear their Doctrine. But the Sorcerer warmly oppos'd this, and us'd all poſſible Methods to hinder his Converſion; which when Saul perceiv'd, he, in the Governor's Preſence, having ſharply rebuk'd him, denounc'd a Judgment of Blindneſs upon him; which being immediately inflicted, convinc'd the Pro-Conſul, and converted him to the Faith; and from this Event (as ſome imagine) our Apoſtle had the Sirname of Paul † given him.

† This was another City of Cyprus, lying on the Weſtern (as Salamis did on the Eaſtern) Tract of the Iſland, where Venus (who from hence took the Name of Paphia) had her moſt antient and celebrated Temple, and where the Roman Pro Conſul, at this Time, had his Seat of Reſidence. Wells's Geography of the New Teſtament.

† It is very obſervable, that, all along, before this Paſſage of the Apoſtle's Life, St Luke calls him by the Name of Saul, but, ever after, by that of Paul; which make ſome imagine, that he aſſum'd that Name to himſelf, in Memory of his converting of Sergius Paulus; juſt as the antient Roman Generals were wont to adopt the Names of the Provinces which they conquer'd. St Auſtin, more than once, aſſerts, that he took it out of a Principle of Humility, by a ſmall Variation changing his former Name, whereby a proud haughty King of Iſrael was called, into that of Paulus, which ſignifies little; and that, in Conformity to this, he calls himſelf ἐλαχιστότερος, Eph. iii. 8. (which is a Word made by himſelf on purpoſe) leſs than the leaſt of the Apoſtles. But the moſt rational Account of the Matter ſeems to be that of Origen, viz. that he, being of Jewiſh Parentage, and born in Tarſus, a Roman City, had, at his Circumciſion, two Names given him, Saul a Jewiſh, and Paul a Roman Name, and that, when he preach'd to the Jews, he was called by his Jewiſh, and when to the Gentiles, (as he did chiefly after this Time) by his Roman Name. Calmet's Commentary, and Hammond's and Whitby's Annotations.

Acts xiii. 42.

This the Congregation heard with great Attention; and, as they were going out of the Synagogue, the Gentiles deſir'd of St Paul to ſpeak again to them upon the ſame Subject, on the following Sabbath; and ſeveral Jews and Proſelytes, who believ'd, waited upon Paul and Barnabas for farther Inſtruction. The next Sabbath, the whole City flock'd to the Synagogue to hear the Apoſtle's Diſcourſe, which when the unbelieving Jews ſaw, ſuch was their Envy and Deſpite, that they not only oppos'd themſelves with Blaſphemy againſt what St Paul preach'd, but, perceiving the Progreſs which the Goſpel made, not in that City only, but in all the neighbouring Country, they apply'd themſelves to ſome Female † Proſelytes of Diſtinction, who, by their Intereſt with the principal Men of the City, forc'd the Apoſtles to depart to Iconium †, and after ſome Stay there, (their Malice purſuing them thither likewiſe) caus'd them to haſten to Lyſtra, where they continu'd for ſome Time, preaching the Goſpel to the Inhabitants of that City, and to the People of the Parts adjacent.

Acts xiv. 8.

At Lyſtra there was a Man, nam'd Æneas, lame from his Birth, whom St Paul, perceiving, by his diligent Attention to his Preaching, that he had Faith to be healed, immediately cur'd. This ſo amaz'd and tranſported the Standers-by, that, acknowledging a Divine Power in the Miracle, they took them for two Gods *, diſguis'd in human Shape; calling Paul, ‖ as chief Speaker, Mercury; and Barnabas, perhaps for his Gravity, or majeſtick Looks, Jupiter. The Prieſt of Jupiter therefore as ſoon as he was acquainted with the Matter, brought Oxen, all adorn'd with Garlands *, to the Door of the Houſe, where Paul and Barnabas were, in order to ſacrifice to them; but when the Apoſtles ſaw what they were going to do, they rent their Cloaths, and, running in among the People, cried aloud, "That they were miſtaken in the Object "of their Worſhip; that, notwithſtanding the Miracle they had wrought, they "were no more than Men; and that the "chief End of their Preaching was to turn "them from theſe idolatrous Practices, to "the Worſhip of the only true God, who, "by his almighty Power, had made Heaven and Earth, and, by his kind Providence, given them all the Bleſſings "they enjoy'd:" But, with all theſe Arguments, it was as much as they could do to reſtrain them from ſacrificing.

† Women, who, being originally Gentiles, had embrac'd the Jewiſh Religion; and of Converts of this Kind it is generally obſerv'd, that their Zeal and Superſtition is uſually blinder, and their Attention to Reaſon, in Matters of Religion, weaker, than what belongs to the other Sex, inſomuch, that ſome Eccleſiaſtical Writers have made it their Remark, that there never was any Hereſy or Schiſm in the Chriſtian Church, but what was either begun, or fomented by Women of Wealth and Diſtinction. Calmet's Commentary.

† This was the chief City of Lycaonia, a ſmall Province of Aſia-Minor, lying to the Eaſt, or North-Eaſt rather, of Piſidia; and adjoining Southward to Pamphylia, and Cilicia. This City, is ſaid by Strabo to have been well built, and ſituated in the richeſt Part of the Province. It was once a Place of ſuch Strength and Conſequence, that the Turkiſh Kings of the Leſſer Aſia, when they were moſt diſtreſs'd by the Weſtern Chriſtians, made it the Seat of their Empire, and, at preſent, it is in ſo conſiderable a Condition, as to be the Reſidence of a Turkiſh Baſhaw. ‖ The Account, which St Paul's Enemies gave of him, is this,——His Letters are weighty and powerful, but his bodily Preſence is weak, and his Speech contemptible, 2 Cor. x. 10. His Diſcourſes indeed, were not form'd upon the Plan of the Greek Orators. The vain Ornaments, which they were ſo fond of, as tending only to impair the Strength and Majeſty of the Truths, which he taught, were by him held in great Contempt; for his Speech and his Preaching was not with enticing Words of Man's Wiſdom, but with Demonſtration of the Spirit and Power, 1 Cor. ii. 4. Acts xiv. 19.

IT was not long however, before they turn'd to the other Extream: For ſome Jews, who had purſu'd the Apoſtles from Antioch, and Iconium, ſo far inſtigated the giddy Multitude againſt them, that they took Paul, whom juſt before they would have ador'd, and ſton'd him, and then drew him out of the City, ſuppoſing him to be dead: But, when the Diſciples came, (probably to inter his Body) he roſe up, and went into the City for that Night, but the next Day he departed with Barnabas to Derbe; where, having preach'd the Goſpel, and converted many to the Faith, they thence return'd to Lyſtra, Iconium, and Antioch, in which Places, having confirm'd the new Converts in the Belief and Profeſſion of Chriſtianity, and, with Faſting, and Prayer, and Impoſition of Hands, ordain'd Governors in every Church, they recommended them to the ſpecial Protection of God, and ſo took their Leave.

FROM Antioch they paſſed through Piſidia, and thence came to Pamphylia; and, having preach'd to the People at Perga, they went down to Attalia †, and from thence return'd by Sea to Antioch in Syria, whence they had ſet out, about three Years before, upon this holy Expedition. Here they aſſembled the Church together, and, having given an Account of their Succeſs, what Miracles God had wrought by their Hands, and what a large Door of Faith he, by their Miniſtry, had open'd to the Gentiles, they ſuſpended their Journeyings for the preſent, and, for ſome conſiderable Time †, took up their Abode among the Diſciples of this Place.

† St Luke gives us no Manner of an Account of what paſs'd in the Church from St Paul's returning to Antioch in Syria, which was in the 46th, to his Deputation to the Council at Jeruſalem, which was in the 51ſt Year of Chriſt. How he ſpent this intermediate Time, we cannot tell; but ſure we are, that his Zeal for the Chriſtian Cauſe would not permit him to be idle; and therefore, we may ſuppoſe, that this was the Opportunity he took to preach the Goſpel, not only through the Provinces adjacent to Antioch, but through ſeveral other Places, where Chriſt had not been named, that he might not build upon another Man's Foundation, Rom. xv. 20. Himſelf, in his ſecond Epiſtle to the Corinthians, acquaints us with many Journeyings, and Labours, and Stripes, and Impriſonments, that are not recorded in the Book of Acts; particularly he tells us, that five Times he had been ſcourged by the Jews, and three Times beaten with Rods by the Romans; that thrice he had ſuffered Shipwreck, and a Day and a Night had been in the Deep, toſs'd to and fro in the Sea, upon ſome plank, or broken Piece of the Ship, 2 Cor. xi. 23, &c. and a properer Time, for theſe ſad Events to befal him, we cannot aſſign, than where the Sacred Hiſtory has made a Vacancy in his Life. Calmet's Commentary.

But, after many Conferences and Diſputations, it was at length propos'd, that the Deciſion of the Queſtion ſhould be referred to the General Aſſembly of the Apoſtles at Jeruſalem †. This the whole Church readily agreed to; and, having deputed Barnabas and Paul, together with ſome others of their Body, to go with the Meſſage, they conducted them Part of their Way, and the two Apoſtles, in paſſing through Phœnicia †, and Samaria, took care to relate what Succeſs they had met with in the Converſion of the Gentiles, to the great Joy and Comfort of all the Brethren in thoſe Parts.

When they were come to Jeruſalem, they firſt addreſs'd themſelves to Peter, James, and John, the Pillars, and principal Perſons in that Place, who receiv'd them very kindly; and, perceiving, by the Account which St Paul gave them, that the (d) Goſpel of the Uncircumciſion was committed to him, as that of Circumciſion was to Peter, they ratified it by Compact and Agreement, that Peter ſhould preach to the Jews, and Paul to the Gentiles; and, upon calling of the Council, wherein Peter declar'd his Senſe of the Inſufficiency of all legal Obſervance to ſave thoſe, who could expect Salvation only through the Grace of the Lord Jeſus Chriſt; and wherein Paul and Barnabas gave an Account of the Wonders and Miracles, which God had enabled them to work in converting the Gentiles, it was finally determin'd by St James, as Biſhop of the Place, and Preſident of the Council, that the Gentiles, who were converted to Chriſtianity, ſhould not be oblig'd to ſubmit to the Yoke of the Law, but only abſtain from Fornication †, and from eating Things offer'd to Idols †, make it the rather believ'd, that the Neceſſity of Circumciſion, in order to Salvation, was a Tenet of the Apoſtles. It is to be obſerv'd however, that the Jews themſelves were of different Opinions in this Matter, even as to Mens Admiſſion into their Religion. For ſome of them would allow thoſe of other Nations, who own'd the true God, and practis'd moral Duties, to live quietly among them, and, even without Circumciſion, to be admitted into their Religion; whilſt others would admit of no ſuch Thing. Thus Joſephus tells us, that when Izates, the Son of Helen, Queen of Adiabene, embrac'd the Jews Religion, Ananias, who converted him, declared that he might do it without Circumciſion; but Eleazar, another eminent Jew, maintain'd, that it was a great Impiety, in ſuch Circumſtances, to remain uncircumcis'd; and this Difference of Opinion continu'd among the Jewiſh Converts, after their embracing Chriſtianity, ſome allowing Gentiles to become Converts to Chriſtianity, without ſubmitting to Circumciſion and the Jewiſh Law, whilſt others contended, that, without Circumciſion, and the Obſervance of the Law, their Profeſſion of the Chriſtian Faith would not ſave them. Calmet's Commentary, and Beauſobre's and Whitby's Annotations.

† St Paul, in his Epiſtle to the Galatians, lets us into a Circumſtance, that is not recorded in the Hiſtory of the Acts, viz. that he went up, at this Time, to Jeruſalem by Revelation, Chap. ii. 2. for, as the Prophets and Teachers at Antioch had before ſeparated him and Barnabas, by Revelation, to preach to ſome of the Gentiles, and they having fulfilled that Work, return'd to Antioch again, Acts xiv. 26. ſo it is probable, that by another Revelation, made to the ſame Perſons, they were ſent up to Jeruſalem, as being the fitteſt to convince thoſe of a contrary Perſuaſion, by declaring what God had wrought by them among the uncircumciſed Gentiles, and his Acceptance of them without Circumciſion, or the Obſervance of the Law of Moſes. Whitby's Annotations.

† This was a Province of Syria, which, in the Times of the New Teſtament, lay between the two Rivers Elutherus to the North, and Cherſeus (or the Kiſhon in Scripture) to the South. In the Phraſe of the Goſpel it is called the Coaſts of Tyre and Sidon, becauſe theſe two Towns ſtood in the Southern Part of it; and for its great Skill in Navigation, and the Invention of Letters, (which, according to Herodotus, were brought thence by Cadmus into Greece) is juſtly celebrated by the Antients. Wells's Geography of the New Teſtament, and Whitby's Alphabetical Table.

† That we are abſolutely obliged to abſtain from Fornication, no good Chriſtian can ſeriouſly make a Matter of Diſpute; for, how favourable ſoever the Gentiles might look upon it, or how much ſoever it might obtain among the Jews, under the Name of Polygamy, nothing is more plain, than that Fornication was accounted an heinous Crime under the Old Teſtament, and that the wiſeſt of the Heathen World always eſteem'd Chaſtity a Virtue. However, ſince the greateſt Part of them acted, as if they thought Fornication a Thing indifferent, and in many of their idolatrous Feſtivals, made Lewdneſs a neceſſary and principal Ingredient, it hence came to paſs, that the Council at Jeruſalem thought proper to inſert this Prohibition in their Decree. Beauſobre's Annotations.

† The Heathens of this Age uſed the ſame Arts to ſeduce the Chriſtians, and bring them to their Temples, that the Moabites had formerly done to corrupt the Iſraelites, calling, and inviting them to eat of the Sacrifices, which Things ſtrangled, and Blood †, which, in the preſent Circumſtances of the Church, were highly neceſſary. With this Decree, which was drawn up in the Form of an Epiſtle, Paul and Barnabas were ſent back to the Church of Antioch, and with them the Council join'd Judas † and Silas, two eminent Men of their own Number, that, by their Teſtimony of what was tranſacted at Jeruſalem, the falſe Teachers might be ſilenc'd, and the believing Gentiles confirm'd in the Truth. Being arriv'd at Antioch, they aſſembled the Church, and preſented the decretal Epiſtle to them, in the Preſence of the whole Congregation: Which when they had read, the Gentile Converts rejoiced greatly to find themſelves diſcharg'd from the Burthen of the Law, and confirm'd in their Chriſtian Liberty, by an Apoſtolick Decree.

Paul at Antioch reproves Peter for Judaizing.

While they were in Antioch, Judas and Silas were not idle; but, being both Men of excellent Gifts in the Interpretation of the Scriptures, they employ'd their Time in confirming Believers in the Truth of Chriſtianity; and, after a ſhort Stay, were, with all Kindneſs and Civility, diſmiſs'd by the Church, in order to return to Jeruſalem: But Silas, for ſome Reaſons, was unwilling to depart ſo ſoon and choſe rather to tarry with Paul and Barnabas, who, with ſeveral others of their Fraternity, employ'd themſelves in inſtructing thoſe, who had already receiv'd the Chriſtian Faith, and in preaching it to others, who had not yet embrac'd it, in this great and populous City.

Gal. ii. 11. &c.

It was not long after the Determination of the Council at Jeruſalem, that Peter came to Antioch; where, uſing their Liberty, which the Goſpel had given him, for ſome time he converſed familiarly with the Gentile Converts, eating with them, and living in the ſame Manner as they did. But when ſome Jewiſh Chriſtians, ſtill tenacious of the Ceremonial Law, came from Jeruſalem, for fear of offending or diſpleaſing them, he ſeparated himſelf from the Gentile Converts, and refus'd to eat with them; whereby he not only confirm'd the Jews in their darling Opinions, but filled the Gentiles likewiſe with new Doubts and Scruples. St Paul, who was not ignorant of what pernicious Influence the Example of ſo great an Apoſtle might be, (eſpecially when he ſaw Barnabas carried away with the Stream of his Diſſimulation) was not afraid, even in the Face of the whole Church, to reprove him ſharply, for endeavouring to impoſe that Yoke upon the Gentiles, which he, tho' they had offer'd to their falſe Gods. To this Purpoſe our Saviour, in his Letter to the Church of Pergamus, makes mention of ſome, who held the Doctrine of Balaam, who taught Balack to caſt a Stumbling-block before the Children of Iſrael, to eat Things ſacrificed to Idols, Rev. ii. 14. Great Reaſon therefore had the Council to forbid Chriſtians this prophane Practice, becauſe (as St Paul expreſſes his Senſe of the Matter) we cannot be Partakers of the Lord's Table, and of the Table of the Devils, 1 Cor. x. 21. i. e. 'tis highly unfit, that Chriſtians, who eat of the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, ſhould defile themſelves with Meats, that have been ſacrific'd to what the Gentiles call Gods, but are, in Reality, no better than Devils. Whitby's Annotations.

† The Jews had ſo ſtrong an Averſion to Blood, that they accounted all, who made uſe of it in Food, as Creatures ſadly polluted, and groſs Tranſgreſſors even of the Law of Nature. The Gentiles, on the contrary, look'd upon Blood, as the moſt delicious Food of their Gods, and thought, that by eating of it, they enter'd into a more intimate Communion with them: And therefore the Prohibition of it was neceſſary for theſe two Reaſons: 1ſt, That no Offence might be given to the Jewiſh Converts, who would be loth to converſe, much more to join in any religious Offices, with Perſons, who indulg'd themſelves in ſuch Meats, as they deteſted; and 2dly, That the Gentile Converts, might be in no Danger of relapſing into Idolatry, which they poſſibly might do, if a Toleration to eat Things offer'd to Idols were ſtill indulg'd them. Beauſobre's Annotations, and Calmet's Commentary.

† It is generally thought, that Judas, who is ſurnam'd Barſabas, was the Brother of Joſes, or Joſeph, who, together with Matthias was propos'd as a Candidate for the Apoſtleſhip, which Judas the Traytor by his Tranſgreſſion had forfeited; and Silas is ſuppos'd to be the ſame Perſon, that, under the Name of Sylvanus, is mention'd in the Title of both St Paul's Epiſtles to the Theſſalonians, and whom St Peter, in his firſt Epiſtle, ſtiles a faithful Brother. St Luke ſays of them both, that they were chief Men among the Brethren, Acts xv. 22. which gives us room to think, that they were of the Number of the ſeventy, and might therefore be ſent back with Paul and Barnabas, to carry the Deciſion of the Council to Antioch, becauſe Paul and Barnabas, being ſtrenuous Aſſerters of the Liberty of the Goſpel, might otherwiſe have been ſuſpected by thoſe of the contrary Party, who maintain'd the Neceſſity of Circumciſion, Calmet's Commentary.

tho' a Jew, thought himſelf at Liberty to ſhake off. But how St Peter receiv'd this Reproof, we are no where told; and this indeed is the laſt Time that we read of him in the Hiſtory of the Acts.

Paul and Barnabas part, and take different Ways.
Acts xv. 36.

IT was not long after this, that Paul and Barnabas reſolv'd upon viſiting the Churches, which they had lately planted among the Gentiles. To this End Barnabas propos'd to take his Couſin Mark with them, which Paul would by no Means agree to, becauſe he had deſerted them in their former Journey; ſo that, after a warm Diſpute on both Sides, they ſeparated † from each other: Barnabas, with his Nephew, betook himſelf to Cyprus, which was his native Country; and Paul (after he had been recommended to the Bleſſing and Aſſiſtance of God by the Prayers of the Church) made choice of Silas, for his Companion, in his intended Viſitation of the ſeveral Places, where he had propagated Chriſtianity.

Silas, Timothy, and Mark, accompany Paul through ſeveral Countries.
Acts xvi. 1.

PARTING from Antioch, he travelled over the Provinces of Syria and Cilicia, confirming the Churches, and leaving with them Copies of the Synodical Decree, which had lately paſs'd in the Council at Jeruſalem. Thence, very probably, he ſailed to Crete †, where he planted Chriſtianity, and, having conſtituted Titus to be the Biſhop of the Place, left him there to regulate ſuch Matters, as the Shortneſs of his Stay would not permit him to do. From Crete he return'd to Cilicia, and came to Lyſtra, where he met with a young Man, nam'd Timothy, whoſe Father was a Greek †, but his Mother Eunice (from whom he had receiv'd all the Advantages of a pious Education, and an extraordinary Skill in the Sacred Writings) was a Jewiſh Convert. Him Paul deſign'd to make the Companion of his Travels, and a ſpecial Inſtrument in the Miniſtry of the Goſpel: And therefore being willing, in indifferent Matters, to accommodate himſelf to the Humour of ſome particular Men, he caus'd him to be circumcis'd, as knowing very well what a mighty Prejudice the Want of that Rite would have been, in the Opinion and Eſtimation of the Jews.

† From hence we may learn, not only that theſe great Lights in the Chriſtian Church were Men of the like Paſſions with us, but that God, upon this Occaſion, did moſt eminently illuſtrate the Wiſdom of his Providence, by rendering the Frailties of two ſuch eminent Servants inſtrumental to the Benefit of his Church, ſince both of them thenceforward employ'd their extraordinary Induſtry and Zeal, ſingly and apart, which till then had been united, and confin'd to the ſame Place. Stanhope, on the Epiſtles and Goſpels, Vol. IV.

† This is one of the nobleſt Iſles in the whole Mediterranean Sea, which had once an hundred conſiderable Towns or Cities in it, from whence it had the Name of Hecatonpolis, and, for the Goodneſs of the Soil, and Temper of the Air, was likewiſe ſtiled Macarios, or Macarioneſus, the happy Iſland; for tho' the Inland Parts of it are very mountainous, yet are they extremely fruitful, eſpecially of Vines called the Muſcadine, tho' not ſo productive of Corn. At preſent it is commonly called Candia, from its principal Town, which bears that Name; is ſituate over againſt the Mouth of the Ægean Sea, or Archipelago; and, while it continued in the Hands of the Venetians, was an Archbiſhop's See, great, rich, and populous; but, ſince it came into the Poſſeſſion of the Turks, (which was in the Year 1669) it has loſt all Marks of its former Happineſs and Grandeur. Wells's Geography of the New Teſtament.

† The Law of Moſes (as Grotius underſtands it) forbad the Jewiſh Males to marry with Women of another Religion, but did not forbid a Jewiſh Woman to marry with a Gentile, even as Eſther did with Ahaſuerus) if ſo be he was a Man of Piety, and moral Honeſty. To this Purpoſe he obſerves, that Ezra, when he went about a Reformation in this Matter, made Enquiry only into thoſe Males, who had taken ſtrange Wives, Chap. ix. and x. but none at all into the Women, who had taken ſtrange Huſbands. 'Tis certain however from Joſephus, that, in his Days, the Jews look'd upon both theſe Practices as contrary to the true Interpretation of their Law, and therefore he calls Druſilla's Marriage with Felix a manifeſt Contempt of it. † It is a Province of Aſia Minor, having Bithynia to the North; Galatia to the Eaſt; Lycia to the South; and Myſia to the Weſt. The Inhabitants of this Country (who are ſaid to have been the Inventors of Augury, and other Kinds of Divination) were antiently more ſuperſtitious, than the other Aſiaticks, as appears from the Rites, which they us'd in the Sacrifices of Cybele, and other Heathen Goddeſſes. They were noted for their Effeminacy, and Lightneſs of Converſation, as well as for their ſervile and ſtupid Temper, which gave occaſion to theſe Proverbs, ſerò ſapiunt Phryges, and Phryges plagis fieri ſolent meliores. Wells's Geography of the New Teſtament.

It took its Name from its principal City, which was a Sea-Port, about four Miles from the Situation of old Troy, ſo famous in the Works of Homer. This City was built by Lyſimachus, one of Alexander's Captains, who peopled it from the neighbouring Places, and called it Alexandria, or Troas Alexandri, in Honour of his Maſter, who himſelf indeed began the Work, but did not live to bring it to Perfection; but, in Proceſs of Time, it loſt that Name, and both City and Country were called Troas only. Whitby's Alphabetical Table, and Wells's Geography of the New Teſtament.

In Proceſs of Time, it became a Roman Colony; for the Romans (we muſt know) had two Sorts of Colonies; ſuch as were founded in Places, where there had never been a City before, or where a former City had been totally deſtroy'd, and theſe were peopled with none but Romans; and ſuch as were ſettled in Cities already built, where thoſe, who had ſerv'd in the Wars, as well as any other Romans, that were willing to remove thither, had ſuch a Diſtrict of the Town aſſign'd for them to inhabit, and ſuch a Quantity of Ground in the Country for them to till and cultivate. Both theſe Kinds of Colonies (how far ſoever diſtant from Rome) enjoy'd the Privileges of Roman Citizens, and Roman Colony. A little [†] diſtant from the City, the Jews had a Proſeuche, or Place of Devotion, whither the Apoſtle and his Company us'd to reſort, for the Exerciſe of their Religion, and the Preaching of the Goſpel to ſuch as frequented the Place. Here they found ſeveral devout Women, and, among others, one nam'd Lydia, a Dealer in Purple, whom, when they had converted, they baptiz'd, as likewiſe her whole Family; and ſhe, in Return, gave them an Invitation to lodge at her Houſe, during the Time of their Abode in that City.

As they were going to this Place of Devotion, they were frequently follow'd by a Maid-Servant, who, being actuated by a Spirit of Divination [†], proclaim'd them to be (as indeed they were, the [‖] Servants of the moſt high God, and Preachers of the Way to Salvation. But Paul, well knowing that the Chriſtian Religion needed not the Teſtimony of Satan to confirm it, commanded the Demon, in the Name of Jeſus Chriſt, to come out of her. The Demon was forc'd to obey; but immediately rais'd a Storm againſt the Apoſtles. For, when the Maſters of the Maid ſaw, that, by this Miracle, all their Proſpect of future Gain from her Divinations was gone, they apprehended Paul and Silas, and, having brought them before the Magiſtrates, to them they inſinuated, that, as they were Jews [†], there was Reaſon to believe, that they intended to introduce a Religion and Form of Worſhip, contrary to and were govern'd by the Roman Laws. Of this latter Sort was the City of Philippi, and had this Honour conferr'd on it both by Julius, and Auguſtus Cæſar, very probably, in Memory of the two great Battles, that were fought in the Plains adjacent, the former between Julius and Pompey the Great, and the latter between Auguſtus and Mark Anthony on the one Side, and Caſſius and Brutus on the other. Whitby's Alphabetical Table, Calmet's Commentary, and Wells's Geography of the New Teſtament.

[†] The Words in the Original are πνεῦμα Πύθωνος. All Commentators agree in this, that Python is a Spirit, which divin'd, or foretold Things to come. And they generally conclude, that the moſt famous Pythoneſs in the World was that at the Temple of Delphi. In the Midſt of this Temple there was a deep Hole or Pit, from whence proceeded a Vapour, that was apt to diſturb the Underſtanding. The Woman, when ſhe was to foretel any Thing, was plac'd directly over this Hole, on a brazen Tripos, that ſo ſhe might receive her Enthuſiaſm à ſecretis, till being thus filled with the Spirit, and retaining in Memory the Phantaſms rais'd by the Agitation of the Demon, ſhe pronounc'd her Oracles, and foretold future Events to thoſe, who came to conſult her. Whether the Pythoneſs at Philippi was in this Manner agitated, we have no Manner of Account; but certainly the Apoſtle was highly commendable for diſpoſſeſſing the Spirit, ſince thereby he not only manifeſted the Power of the Name of Jeſus, but reſcu'd the poor Woman likewiſe from a very troubleſome Inmate, if ſo be it affected her, as it is ſaid to have done the Sibyl in Virgil:

——— Subitò non vultus, non color unus,
Non comptæ manſêre comæ, ſed pectus anhelum,
Et Rabie fera Corda tument, majorque videri,
Nec mortale ſonans, afflata eſt numine, quando

Whitby's Annotations, and Calmet's Commentary.

[‖] It may ſeem a little ſtrange, that the Devil, who is the Father of Lyes, and had all the Reaſon imaginable to vilify and decry St Paul and his Companions, ſhould here be tempted to tell Truth in Commendation of them; but for this he had his Deſign. He knew full well, that, if the Gentiles ſhould believe the Character he gave them, this would invalidate the Apoſtles Preaching and Miracles, and, by ſuppoſing a Confederacy between them, make the one be eſteem'd the Effects of Magick, and the other, no better than the Doctrines of Devils. He knew, in like Manner, that, if the Jews did not believe his Teſtimony concerning the Apoſtles, it would nevertheleſs leave a bad Impreſſion upon their Minds, and make them entertain a Suſpicion of St Paul and his Aſſociates, for having the Praiſe and Approbation of the Prince of Darkneſs; and tho' this Prince of Darkneſs might poſſibly foreſee that St Paul would give him no farther Quarter, but inſtantly diſpoſſeſs him; yet this might not at all deter him from his Purpoſe, becauſe he did not doubt, but that his Ejection would draw upon the Apoſtles and his Friends a violent Perſecution, which was the ultimate of his Wiſh. Calmet's Commentary.

[†] At the firſt Appearance of the Chriſtian Religion, the Gentiles look'd upon it as no other than a particular Sect, or Reformation of Judaiſm; becauſe, at that Time, thoſe, who profeſs'd it, were deſcended from the ſame Stock, born in the ſame Country, obſerv'd, in the main, the ſame Laws, ador'd the ſame God, and receiv'd the ſame Scriptures. This was enough to denominate them Jews: And, accordingly, Suetonius, in his Life of Claudius, c. 25, tells us, that the Emperor baniſh'd all the Jews out of Rome, becauſe they were always raiſing Tumults at to the Laws of the Roman Empire. Upon this ſlight Occaſion, the Magiſtrates order'd them (tho' unconvicted) to be ſcourged; and, having committed them to cloſe Priſon, gave the Jailor ſtrict Charge to keep them ſafe, who thereupon thruſt them into the inner Dungeon, and made their Feet faſt in the Stocks. But in vain was all his Contrivance. While the Apoſtles, at Midnight, were ſinging Hymns and Praiſes to God, an Earthquake ſuddenly ſhook the Foundations of the Priſon; the Doors flew open, and their Chains fell off. The Jailor, awaken'd at the Noiſe, and, ſuppoſing that the Priſoners had made their Eſcape, drew his Sword †, with an Intent to kill himſelf; but, being aſſur'd by St Paul to the contrary, he came trembling in; and, having taken the two Apoſtles home to his own Houſe, he waſh'd their Wounds, entertain'd them courteouſly, and gave ſuch evident Proof of his Faith and Repentance, as not only to be baptiz'd himſelf, but to make his whole Family likewiſe become Proſelytes to this perſecuted Religion.

THE Magiſtrates, next Morning, reflecting upon what they had done, would have diſmiſs'd the Apoſtles privately; but the Apoſtles refus'd to accept of their Diſcharge, alledging, "That they were not only innocent Perſons, but Denizens † of Rome; that, as they had been illegally ſcourg'd and committed, their Delivery ſhould be as publick, as was the Injury, and attended with a ſolemn Retraction of what they had done." The Magiſtrates, when they heard that they inſiſted on their Privileges, were not a little afraid, and therefore repairing to the Priſon, with all Submiſſion, deſir'd them to leave the City; which the Apoſtles, after ſome Conference with the Converts in Lydia's Houſe, were not averſe to do.

At Theſſalonica being oppos'd, he goes to Beræa, and thence to Athens.

FROM Philippi, Paul and his Companions, paſſing through Amphipolis † and Apollonia †, came to Theſſalonica †, the Metropolis of Macedonia, where he diſputed in the Synagogues of the Jews three Sabbath-Days ſucceſſively, proving, from the Predictions of the Old Teſtament, that at the Inſtigation of one Chreſtus: (For ſo he calls our Lord and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt) And, in like Manner, the People of Philippi, to make Paul and Silas more odious to the Magiſtrates, did not ſtick to acquaint them, that they were Jews, and intended ſome Innovations in Religion. For tho', as yet, there was no expreſs Edict againſt Chriſtians, yet there was an old Law of the Romans, which requir'd them to worſhip the Gods of their own Country only, Tully de Leg. lib. ii. and yet Chriſtianity diſſuaded them from this, For we preach unto you, ſays St Paul, that ye ſhould turn from theſe Vanities to the Living God, who made Heaven and Earth, Acts xiv. 15. Calmet's Commentary, and Whitby's Annotations.

† Among the Greeks and Romans both, Self-murther was ſo common a Thing, allow'd by their Philoſophers, and practis'd by moſt of them, that we need not wonder to find the Jailor, for Fear of ſome ſeverer Puniſhment, in a ready Diſpoſition to commit it upon himſelf. Whitby's Annotations.

† Silas might likewiſe be a Roman Citizen; but, as St Paul was undoubtedly one, this was enough to juſtify the Language which he uſes. The only Diſpute is, how he came by this Privilege? And to this ſome reply, that the City, where he was born, for its faithful Adherence to Julius Cæſar, was by him made a Roman Colony, and all its Inhabitants admitted to the uſual Rights and Immunities of Romans. Others contend, that tho' Tarſus might, at that Time, be made a Free Town, yet it was never a Roman Colony, until the Reign either of Caracalla, or Heliogabalus; and that therefore the Right of a Roman Citizen was not common to all the People of the Place, but only to ſome particular Perſons who might purchaſe it, as a Title of Honour, for them, and their Heirs for ever; of whom they ſuppoſe St Paul's Father to be one, and that, upon this Foundation, his Son might very properly ſay, that he was born free. However this be, 'tis certain, that the Quality of a Roman Citizen was highly eſteem'd, eſpecially in all Roman Colonies, whereof Philippi was one. Every Injury offer'd to ſuch a one was look'd upon as an Affront againſt the Majeſty of the whole People of Rome: To bind him was a Violation of the Law, and much more to have him beaten; but to be ſcourg'd and bound, without being firſt legally heard and try'd, was not only againſt the Roman, but againſt the Laws of all Nations; and the more publick any ſuch Injury is, the greater is its Aggravation, and the more ſolemn ſhould its Reparation be. Beauſobre's Annotations, Calmet's Commentary, and Cave's Lives of the Apoſtles.

the Meſſiah was to ſuffer, and to riſe again, and that the Bleſſed Jeſus was this Meſſiah. Great Numbers, eſpecially of religious Proſelytes, and ſeveral Women of the better Rank and Quality, were converted at his Preaching; but the unbelieving Jews rais'd a Tumult in the City, and went to the Houſe of Jaſon [*], where St Paul lodg'd; but, not finding him there, they ſeiz'd Jaſon, and carry'd him before the Magiſtrates, where they accus'd him of harbouring in his Houſe Perſons diſaffected to the Roman Government, and who ſet up one Jeſus in Oppoſition to Cæſar. He however, upon Security for his good Behaviour, was diſmiſs'd; and Paul and Silas (for Fear of greater Diſturbances) were by the Brethren convey'd, next Night, to Beræa [†]. Here they found the People in a better Diſpoſition to entertain the Chriſtian Doctrine, but yet not willing to take it merely upon the Apoſtles Word, until they had examin'd the Scriptures, and found that their Preaching agreed very well with the Characters therein deliver'd of the Meſſiah; and then great Numbers both of Men and Women of Diſtinction were converted: But the Jews of Theſſalonica, hearing of their Succeſs, came down to Beræa, and there rais'd ſuch Diſturbances, that the Brethren thought proper to ſend Paul privately away to Athens [†], while Silas and Timothy continu'd ſome Time in the Place to confirm the new Believers, but, after that, had Orders to follow him, as ſoon as poſſible.

His Diſputes, and Preaching at Athens. Acts xvii. 16.

While Paul waited for his Company at Athens, he went about ſeveral Parts of the City, to ſee the Rarities of it, and, wherever he came, found Abundance of Superſtition [†], and ignorant Zeal, even for Deities, that themſelves knew nothing of. This therefore he eſteem'd no improper Place and Time for him, to apply himſelf to the Diſcharge of his great Work; and, accordingly, he not only diſputed with the Jews and Proſelytes, in the Synagogues every Sabbath-Day, but took all Opportunities, wherever he met with a convenient Auditory, (and this he ſeldom miſs'd of in the publick Forum, where People of all Sorts daily reſorted to hear and tell News, which was the great Buſineſs of their Lives) to inſtruct them in the Coming of the Meſſiah, and in the Doctrine of a Reſurrection, and future State.

ATHENS was, at this Time, the great Academy of the Roman Empire, and abounded with Philoſophers of all Sects; but thoſe, whom St Paul had chiefly to deal it ſtands upon, took its Name. Some are of Opinion, that, being improv'd, and beautify'd by Philip, King of Macedon, it was called Theſſalonica, in Memory of the Victory, which he obtain'd over the Theſſalonians; but Strabo, and ſome others, rather think, that it took its Name from Theſſalonica, the Wife of Caſſander, and Daughter of Philip. At preſent it is called Salonichi, and is thought to retain ſomething of its antient Wealth and Greatneſs, having ſtill a ſafe Harbour for the Benefit of Commerce, and being ſtill an Archbiſhop's See of the Grecian Church. Calmet's Dictionary, and Wells's Geography of the New Teſtament.

[*] The Greeks ſay, that he was afterwards made Biſhop of Tarſus in Cilicia.

[†] This was likewiſe another great and populous City of Macedonia, lying to the South of Theſſalonica, and almoſt directly in the Way to Athens. Wells's Geography of the New Teſtament.

[†] This was one of the moſt renown'd Cities in the World, ſituate on the Gulph of the Ægean Sea, which comes up to the Iſthmus of the Peloponeſe, or Morea, in that Diſtrict of Greece, properly ſo called, which was nam'd Attica, and was the Parent of that Dialect, which is eſteemed the pureſt and fineſt Greek. The City itſelf was the great Seat of Arts and Sciences, and (as Cicero will have it) the Fountain where Civility, Learning, Religion, and Laws were derived to all other Nations; ſo univerſally flock'd to by thoſe, that had the leaſt Kindneſs for the Muſes and good Manners, that he, who had not ſeen Athens, was accounted a Block; he, who having ſeen it, was not in Love with it, a dull, ſtupid Aſs; and he, who after he had ſeen it, could be willing to leave it, fit for nothing, but to be a Pack-horſe. Wells's Geography of the New Teſtament, and Cave's Lives of the Apoſtles.

[†] Several of their own Writers have made it their Remark, that Athens had greater Numbers of Deities, and Idols, than all Greece beſides; and Strabo, in particular, notes, that the Athenians were not more fond of Strangers, than forward to comply with any Novelties in Religion, and ready to entertain any foreign Deities, and Rites of Worſhip. Cave's Lives of the Apoſtles.

deal with, were the Epicureans † and the Stoicks, who treated him with a great deal of Scorn and Contempt, while others look'd upon him as a Setter-up of new Gods, (ſuppoſing Jeſus and Anaſtaſis, or the Reſurrection, which he preach'd, to be two new and unheard of Deities) and therefore brought him before their famous Senate at Areopagus †. Here, in a moſt excellent Diſcourſe, he endeavour'd to convince them of their preſent Errors and Deluſions, and to inform them who that true God was, whom they, under falſe Notions, blindly worſhipp'd. "The Deity, to whom they had dedicated an Altar, under the Title of the unknown God †, was no other (he told them) than the great God, the Creator of all Things, the Supreme Governor and Ruler of the World; that, as he was infinite in all Perfections, it was not to be ſuppoſ'd, that he could be confin'd within any Temple or human Fabrick; that any Image could be made † Theſe two Sects were not only contrary to each other in their Tenets, but ſtrangely averſe to the Chriſtian Religion, both in their Principles and Practices. The Epicureans were ſo, becauſe they found their Pleaſures and jovial Humour, and their looſe and exorbitant Courſe of Life (conſequent upon their Diſbelief of a God, a Providence, and a future State) ſo much check'd and controul'd by the ſtrict and ſevere Precepts of Chriſt; and becauſe Chriſtianity ſo plainly and poſitively aſſerted a Divine Providence, the Subſiſtence of the Soul, the Reſurrection of the Body, and State of Rewards and Puniſhments after Death, which they abſolutely deny'd. The Stoicks, on the other Hand, tho' pretending to Principles of great and uncommon Rigour and Severity, and ſuch as had the neareſt Affinity to the Chriſtian Religion, yet found themſelves aggrieved with it. For (beſides their Doctrine of Fate, which they made ſuperior to their Jupiter) that meek and humble Temper of Mind, that Modeſty, and Self-denial, which the Goſpel ſo earneſtly recommended, was ſo directly contrary to the immoderate Pride and Haughtineſs of that Sect, who were not aſham'd to make their wiſe Man equal, and in ſome Things exceed God himſelf, that 'tis no Wonder, we find them treating a Preacher of ſuch Doctrines with Slight and Diſdain, What will this Babbler ſay? Acts xvii. 18. Cave's Lives of the Apoſtles.

† This was a Place in Athens, where the Senate uſually aſſembled, and took its Name (as ſome think) from ἄρης which is the ſame as Mars, the God of War, who was the firſt Perſon, that was judg'd here for having killed Apollo's Son: But, as ἄρης does ſomething ſignify Fighting, Murther, or Violence of any Kind, and πάγος is properly a Rock, or riſing Hill, it therefore ſeems to denote a Court, ſituate upon an Eminence, (as the Areopagus was) where Cauſes of Murther, &c. were try'd. This Court, at preſent, is out of the City, but in former Times it ſtood almoſt in the Middle of it. Its Foundations, which are ſtill ſtanding, are built with ſquare Stones of a prodigious Size, in the Form of a Semi-circle, and ſupport a Terras, or Plat form, of about an hundred and forty Paces, which was the Court, where this Senate was held. In the Midſt of it there was a Tribunal, cut in a Rock, and all about were Seats, cut likewiſe in Stone, where the Senate heard Cauſes, in the open Air, without any Covering, and (as ſome ſay) in the Night-Time, that they might not be mov'd to Compaſſion at the Sight of any Criminal, that was brought before them. For this Judicature was ſo famous for its Uprightneſs, and held by all in ſuch Eſteem and Veneration, that, when the Romans had conquer'd Greece, and ſent their Pro-conſuls to rule there, it was no uncommon Thing for them to refer difficult Cauſes to the Judgment of the Areopagites. After the Loſs of their Liberty however, the Authority of this Senate (which uſ'd before to determine in all Cauſes, both Civil and Religious) declin'd apace, ſo that, in our Apoſtle's Time, the Areopagus was not ſo much a Court of Judicature, as a common Rendezvous, where all curious and inquiſitive Perſons, who ſpent their Time in nothing elſe, but either in hearing, or telling ſome new Thing, were accuſtom'd to meet, Acts xvii. 21. But tho' their Power, in other Matters, was greatly impair'd, yet they ſeem ſtill to have retain'd the Privilege of canonizing all Gods, that were allow'd publick Worſhip; and therefore St Paul was brought before them, as an Aſſerter and Preacher of ſuch a Deity, as they had not yet admitted among them. Calmet's Commentary. Beauſobre's and Hammond's Annotations.

† That the Athenians, in their publick Places, had Altars without any Names on them, and others inſcrib'd to unknown Gods, or Demons, is evident from the Teſtimony of Laërtius, who informs us, that, when a great Plague rag'd at Athens, and ſeveral Means had been attempted for the Removal of it, they were adviſ'd by Epimenides the Philoſopher, to build an Altar, and dedicate it τῷ προσήκοντι Θεῷ, to the proper and peculiar God, to whom Sacrifices were due. In Vitâ Epimen. lib. xi. And the Athenians (as St Chryſoſtom ſuppoſes) not knowing by what Name to call him, erected an Altar with this Inſcription, ΘΕΟΙΣ ΑΣΙΑΣ, ΚΑΙ ΕΥΡΩΠΗΣ, ΚΑΙ ΛΙΒΥΗΣ; ΘΕΩ ΑΓΝΩΣΤΩ ΚΑΙ ΞΕΝΩ: To the Gods of Aſia, Europe, and Africa, to the ſtrange and unknown God, whereby (as ſome imagine) the Athenians intended the God of the Jews, who had given ſuch wonderful Deliverance to his own People: Nor is this Conjecture unreaſonable, conſidering, that the Writings of Plato, Pythagoras, and many others, are a plain Proof, that the Scriptures had been read by their Philoſophers, tho', not being able to comprehend his Divine Nature and Attributes, they might call him the unknown God, in Conformity perhaps to the Hebrews themſelves, who had the Name of their God in great Secrecy and Veneration, and, from the Mouth of the Prophet, had receiv'd it, as one of his diſtinguiſh'd Titles, Verily thou art a God, that hideſt thyſelf, O God of Iſrael, the Saviour, Iſai. xlv. 15. Hammond's Annotations, and Cave's Lives of the Apoſtles.

“to repreſent him, or that he could ſtand in need of their Gifts or Sacrifices, who is the ſole Fountain of all the Bleſſings they enjoy'd; that it was entirely from him, that they had either Life, Motion, or Exiſtence, as one of their own Poets †, by calling them his Offſpring, acknowledg'd: and therefore incongruous it was to think, that their Creator could be the Work of their Hands, as every Image of Gold, Silver, or Stone was; that, tho' his Divine Patience had, for a long Time, borne with Mens blind Idolatries, yet now he expected a general Repentance, and Reformation from the World, eſpecially ſince, by the Publication of the Goſpel, he had fully evidenc'd a future Judgment, had appointed the holy Jeſus to adminiſter that Judgment, and given us ſufficient Aſſurance of ſuch his Appointment, by having raiſed him from the Dead.” But, no ſooner had he mention'd the Reſurrection, than ſome of the Philoſophers † mock'd and derided him, whilſt others † expreſs'd their Deſire to hear him upon the ſame Subject another Time: And the good Effect of his Diſcourſe was, that it converted ſeveral of the beſt Rank and Quality, among whom was Dionyſius †, one of the Senators of the Areopagus, and Damaris, whom the Antients, not improbably, account his Wife.

At Corinth he converts Aquila and Priſcilla, and writes his firſt Epiſtle to the Theſſalonians. Its Contents.

FROM Athens St Paul departed to Corinth †, where he found a certain Jew, nam'd Aquila †, lately come from Italy, with Priſcilla his Wife, becauſe the Emperor Claudius, towards the latter End of his Reign, had made an Edict † to baniſh all the Jews from Rome; and, having inſtructed them in the Chriſtian Faith, he took up his Lodgings, and wrought with them, (for they by Profeſſion were Tent-Makers †, as well as himſelf) and, every Sabbath-Day he preach'd in the Synagogues, labouring to convince both Jews and Greeks, that Jeſus was the true Meſſias.

† The Poet, whom St Paul means, was Aratus, born in Cilicia, and, conſequently, his Countryman; and, what he attributes to Jupiter, the Apoſtle applies to the true God, We are his Offſpring. This indeed was no Argument to the Epicurean Auditors, who held the Poets in great Contempt, becauſe, on all Occaſions, they introduc'd the Gods, and taught the ſeparate Exiſtence of human Souls; but it was of great Weight to the common People, who paid a mighty Veneration to the Poets, from whoſe Works ſome of the greateſt Philoſophers then living were wont to borrow Citations, thereby to confirm and adorn their Diſcourſes. To the Honour of human Learning therefore we may obſerve, that, in the New Teſtament, the Holy Ghoſt is pleas'd three ſeveral Times to make mention of the Heathen Poets: Of Aratus here, Acts xvii. 2, 8. of Menander, 1 Cor. xv. 33. and of Epimenides. Beauſobre's and Burkitt's Annotations, and Bentley's Sermons at Boyle's Lectures.

† Theſe were the Epicureans, who believ'd no Reſurrection, no Immortality of the Soul, nor any future Judgment, which St Paul here aſſerts. Whitby's Annotations.

† Theſe were the Stoicks, who maintain'd a Conflagration, and Reviviſcence of the World, held that Souls might live long, tho' not always, in another State, and allow'd ſomething of future Recompences, tho' with great Fluctuation. Whitby's Annotations.

† He is ſaid, in his Youth, to have been bred at Athens, in all the learn'd Arts and Sciences, and, at the Years of five and twenty, to have travelled into Egypt, there to perfect himſelf in the Study of Aſtronomy, for which that Nation had the Renown. When our Saviour dy'd, he was at Heliopolis, where, obſerving the miraculous Darkneſs, that attended his Paſſion, he broke out into this Expreſſion,——That certainly, at that Time, either God himſelf ſuffer'd, or was much concern'd for ſomebody that did. Returning to Athens, he became one of the Senators of the Areopagus; diſputed with St Paul, and by him was converted, inſtructed, and conſecrated Biſhop of Athens; where, having labour'd much in the Defence and Propagation of the Goſpel, and ſuffer'd a great deal in that Cauſe, he crown'd his Life, and Confeſſion, with a glorious Martyrdom, being burnt to Death at Athens, in the 93d Year of Chriſt. Cave's Lives of the Apoſtles, Stanhope, on the Epiſtles and Goſpels, and Calmet's Dictionary, under the Word.

† Corinth, which was anciently called Epirus, was the Capital of Achaia, and had its Name from one Corinthus, who took, and rebuilt it. Its Situation, which is on the Bottom of the Iſthmus, or Neck of Land, which joins Peloponneſus, or the Morea, to the main Continent, made it capable of commanding all Greece; but its Inhabitants, living upon two Seas, which drew the Trade both of the Eaſt and Weſt from all Parts, were chiefly given to Commerce, which procur'd them Abundance of Wealth; but then this Wealth produc'd Pride, Oſtentation, Effeminacy, and all Manner of Vice in them. Laſciviouſneſs, in particular, was not only tolerated here, but, in ſome Sort, conſecrated, by the Worſhip of Venus, and the publick Proſtitution of thoſe, who were devoted to her. Here liv'd that famous, or rather infamous Whore, Thais, who exacted ten thouſand Drachmas for one Night's Lodging, which made Demoſthenes cry out, Nolo tanti emere Pœnitentiam! i. e. I will not purchaſe what I muſt repent of, at ſo dear a Rate. But, what this City was moſt memorable for among Heathen Authors, was its Citadel, which was called Acro-corinthus, from its being built on an high Mountain, or Rock, and for its Inſolence againſt the Roman Legates, which made L. Mummius deſtroy it; but, in its Conflagration, ſo many Statues of different Metals were melted down, that the Remains of them made the famous Corinthian Braſs, which was accounted more valuable, than either Gold, or Silver. After this Deſtruction it was reſtor'd by Julius Cæſar to its former Splendor, and, in a ſhort Time, became the moſt beautiful City of all Greece, inſomuch, that the neat Order of Pillars, which are us'd at this Day, in the Decoration of all fine Buildings, took from this Place the Name of Corinthian Pillars. Whitby's Alphabetical Table, Calmet's Commentary, and Wells's Geography of the New Teſtament.

BEFORE Paul departed from Athens, Timothy, according to his Requeſt, came to him from Beræa, and brought him an Account, (f) that the new Chriſtians at Theſſalonica had been under great Perſecution, ever ſince he left them. This oblig'd Paul to ſend him back again into Macedonia, in order to eſtabliſh and comfort the Brethren under their Afflictions; which when Timothy had done, he took Silas along with him, and return'd from Theſſalonica with the joyful News of the ſtedfaſt Adherence to the Truth, which that Church had ſhewn in all its Diſtreſſes. This was a Matter of no ſmall Conſolation to the Apoſtle, who thereupon wrote his firſt Epiſtle to the Theſſalonians: (g) “Wherein he highly applauds their Courage and Zeal, in the Belief of the Chriſtian Religion, and exhorts them to a noble Conſtancy and Perſeverance amidſt their Afflictions: Wherein he commends their Charity to the Believers of Macedonia, and gives them many Inſtructions concerning a good Life and Converſation: Wherein he exhorts them to the Practice of all Purity and Holineſs, eſpecially in the Uſe of the Marriage-Bed; to avoid Idleneſs; to be diligent in their Callings, and not immoderate in their Grief for the Dead; and wherein he inſtructs them in the Doctrine of the Reſurrection, the Manner of Chriſt's coming to Judgment, and the Obligation all were under to make a timely Preparation for it.”

He here makes ſome Converts, but is oppoſ'd by the Jews.

UPON the Acceſſion of Timothy and Silas, St Paul preach'd the Doctrine of Chriſt with freſh Ardour to the Jews; but, when he perceiv'd that, inſtead of attending to it, they only oppos'd it with blaſphemous and opprobrious Language, he openly declar'd his Rejection of them, and Purpoſe of applying himſelf to the Gentiles †. However, † Aquila was a Native of Pontus, in Aſia Minor, and, together with his Wife Priſcilla, (who is ſometimes called Priſca) was made a Convert to the Chriſtian Religion by St Paul at Antioch. When the Apoſtle left that City, in order to return to Jeruſalem, theſe two Perſons accompany'd him as far as Epheſus, where he left them, for ſome Time, to preach the Goſpel, and, by their Example and Inſtruction, to confirm the Faithful in that Church. Here it was, that they did him ſingular Service, and for his Life laid down their own Necks, as himſelf acknowledges, Rom. xvi. 4. When he wrote his Epiſtle to the Romans, they were return'd to Rome, becauſe he therein ſalutes them with great Commendations; but, when he wrote his ſecond Epiſtle to Timothy, they were come back to Epheſus; becauſe in it he deſires him to ſalute them in his Name, 2 Tim. iv. 19. What became of them after this, we have no certain Account, but 'tis ſuppos'd, that they continu'd at Epheſus, until the Time of their Death, which, according to the Roman Martyrologies, is ſet down on the eighth of July. Calmet's Commentary and Dictionary.

† Suetonius, in his Life of Claudius, makes the Occaſion of this Decree to have been the Tumults, which the Jews (or Chriſtians, who went under the Notion of Jews) were perpetually fomenting in Rome: But, as we find nothing of this in any other Hiſtorian, 'tis rather ſuppos'd, that this Severity proceeded from the Behaviour of ſome Thieves in Judea, who had aſſaulted a Servant of the Emperor's, named Stephen, taken from him the Imperial Baggage, and killed the Roman Troops, that were appointed to guard it; as both Tacitus, in his Annals, lib. xii. and Joſephus, in his Hiſtory of the Jewiſh Wars, lib. ii. have inform'd us. Whitby's Annotations.

† It was a receiv'd Cuſtom among the Jews, for every Man, of what Rank or Quality ſoever, to learn ſome Handy-craft; for one of their proverbial Expreſſions is, that whoever teaches not his Son a Trade, teaches him to be a Thief: And, in thoſe hot Countries, where Tents (which were commonly made of Skins, or Leather, ſew'd together, to keep out the Violence of the Weather) were us'd not only by Soldiers, but by Travellers, and others whoſe Buſineſs requir'd them to be abroad, a Tent-Maker was no mean or unprofitable Employ. Stanhope, on the Epiſtles and Goſpels, and Pool's Annotations.

(f) 1 Theſſ. iii. 1, &c. (g) Ibid. paſſim.

† His Words are, from henceforth I will turn to the Gentiles, Acts xviii. 6. and theſe, at firſt Sight, ſeem to be a Declaration, that he would leave off preaching to the Jews, wherever he came, and wholly apply himſelf to the Converſion of the Gentiles; but, by comparing his Actions with the Places, where this Phraſe, or ſomething like it, does ever, before he did this, ſome Perſons of Diſtinction among them, ſuch as Criſpus †, the chief Ruler of the Synagogue, and Stephanus and Gaius, together with their whole Families, had embrac'd the Doctrine of the Goſpel, and were baptiz'd into the Chriſtian Faith. Among the Gentiles, he made a Multitude of Converts, and, by a Viſion from Heaven, being encourag'd to proceed in his Miniſtry with Boldneſs, under the Divine Protection, and in certain Hopes of Succeſs, he there continu'd for the Space of one whole Year, and ſix Months.

Acts xviii. 12.

During his Stay in this Place, the Jews made a general Inſurrection againſt him, and brought him before Gallio †, who, at that Time, was Pro-Conſul of Achaia, accuſing him of attempting to introduce a new Religion, contrary to what was eſtabliſh'd by the Jewiſh Law, and permitted by the Roman Powers. But, as Gallio apprehended, that this was a Controverſy, which fell not under the Cognizance of the Civil Judicature, he would have no Concern in it, and therefore order'd his Officers to drive them out of the Court: Whereupon the common People took Soſthenes †, a Ruler of the Synagogue, and one of St Paul's chief Accuſers, and beat him publickly before the Tribunal; but this gave the Pro-Conſul no Diſturbance.

And from hence he writes his ſecond Epiſtle to the Theſſalonians. Its Contents.

After this Tumult was over, St Paul continu'd ſome Time in Corinth, and, before his Departure thence, wrote his ſecond Epiſtle to the Theſſalonians: (b) "Wherein he endeavours to confirm their "Minds in the Faith, and to animate "them courageouſly to endure Perſecu"tion from the unbelieving Jews, a loſt "and undone Race of Men, whom the "Divine Vengeance was ready to over"take: Wherein he rectifies the Miſ-In"terpretation, which falſe Teachers had "made of ſome Paſſages in his former "Epiſtle, relating to the Day of Judg"ment, as if it were juſt at Hand, and "ſhews what Events (eſpecially that of "the Coming and Deſtruction of the "Man does occur, it appears, that he only intended to ſay, he would no longer preach to the Jews of that Place: For, after this is ſaid, we find him ſtill entering into the Synagogues, and preaching to the Jews, and calling upon them to hear the Word, Acts xv. 8. and xxviii. 23, &c. Whitby's Annotations.

† Criſpus is ſaid to have been made by St Paul Biſhop of Ægina, an Iſland near Athens; and Origen makes mention of one Gaius, a Diſciple of St Paul, who by him was appointed Biſhop of Theſſalonica; but of Stephanus we have no other Account, than what we learn from the Acts of the Apoſtles. Calmet's Dictionary.

† The Name of this Pro-Conſul was once Marcus Annæus Novatus, but, being adopted by Lucius Junius Gallio, he took the Name of his adoptive Father, and was Brother to the famous Seneca, Tutor to Nero. To him it is, that that Philoſopher dedicates his Book De Vitâ Beatâ; and of him the Roman Hiſtorians give us the Character, that he was a Man of ſweet Temper and Diſpoſition, an Enemy to all Vice, and particularly a Hater of Flattery. He was twice made Pro-Conſul of Achaia; firſt by Claudius, and afterwards by Nero; but, as he partook of his Brother's Proſperity, when he was in Favour at Court, ſo was he a Sharer in his Misfortunes, when he fell under Nero's Diſpleaſure, and at length was put to Death by the Tyrant, as well as his Brother. Calmet's Commentary, Pool's and Beauſobre's Annotations.

† Criſpus, we read, was a Ruler of the Synagogue at Corinth; and therefore we may ſuppoſe, either that there were more Synagogues in that City than one, or that there might be ſeveral Rulers in one and the ſame Synagogue; or that Criſpus, after his Converſion to Chriſtianity, might be ſucceeded in that Office by Soſthenes; but then we are at a Loſs to know, who the People were, that thus beat and miſus'd him. The Greek printed Copies tell us, that they were the Gentiles; and thoſe, who read the Text thus, imagine, that when they perceiv'd the Neglect and Diſregard, wherewith the Pro-Conſul receiv'd the Jews, they, to inſult them the more, fell foul upon the Ruler of their Synagogue, who was at their Head, whether out of Hatred to them, or Friendſhip to St Paul, it makes no Matter. But others think, that Soſthenes, however Head of the Synagogue, might be a ſecret Friend and Diſciple of St Paul, and that the other Jews, ſeeing themſelves neglected by Gallio, might vent their Malice upon him; for they ſuppoſe, that this was the ſame Soſthenes, whoſe Name St Paul, in the Beginning of his Firſt Epiſtle to the Corinthians, written about three Years after this Scuffle happen'd at Corinth, joins with his own. It muſt be own'd however, that this Opinion was not univerſally receiv'd, ſince, in the Time of Euſebius, it was thought, that the Soſthenes, mention'd in the Epiſtle, was one of the LXX Diſciples, and, conſequently, could not be the Chief of the Synagogue of Corinth twenty Years after the Death of Jeſus Chriſt. Beauſobre's Annotations, Calmet's Commentary, and Dictionary.

He goes to Jeruſalem at the Paſſover by the Way of Epheſus, and, after that, returns to that City again.

HAVING thus planted the Church of Corinth, St Paul reſolv'd to return into Syria, and, taking along with him Aquila and Priſcilla, from Chenchrea, (the Port or Road for Ships in the Archipelago, belonging to Corinth) he ſailed to Epheſus †, where he preach'd a while in the Synagogue of the Jews; but, being reſolv'd to be at Jeruſalem at the Paſſover, he could not be perſuaded to ſtay longer. Leaving therefore Aquila and Priſcilla at Epheſus, and promiſing (if God would permit) to return to them again, he ſet ſail for Cæſarea in Paleſtine, and from thence proceeded to Jeruſalem. After he had viſited the Church, and kept the Feaſt, he went down to Antioch; and, having there ſtayed ſome Time, he travers'd the Countries of Galatia and Phrygia, confirming, as he went along, the new-converted Chriſtians, and ſo return'd to Epheſus.

IN his Abſence, Apollos, a Jew of Alexandria, eminent for his Eloquence, and great Knowledge of the Old Teſtament, came to Epheſus, and, tho' he was only initiated by the Baptiſm of John ‖, yet being † Epheſus, the Metropolis and principal Mart of the Proconſular Aſia, is ſituated upon the River Cayſter, and on the Side of a Hill, which, towards the Weſt, has the Proſpect of a lovely Plain, water'd and beautify'd with the pleaſant Circles of the River, turning and winding in ſo many curious Mazes, that ſome Travellers have miſtaken it for the Meander, and this the rather, becauſe the Turks gave it the Name of the Leſſer Mendres. Among heathen Authors this City was once much celebrated for its famous Temple of Diana, which, for its Largeneſs, and Workmanſhip, was accounted one of the ſeven Wonders of the World. It is ſaid to have been 425 Feet long, 220 broad, and to have been ſupported with 127 Pillars of Marble, 70 Feet high, whereof 27 were moſt curiouſly wrought, and all the reſt poliſh'd. One Cteſiphon, a famous Architect in his Time, contriv'd the Model of it, and that with ſo much Art and Curioſity, that it took up two hundred Years before it was finiſh'd, even tho' it was built at the common Charge of all Aſia peoperly ſo called. After it was finiſh'd, it was ſeven Times ſet on Fire; but once more eſpecially, on the very ſame Day that Socrates was poiſon'd, 400 Years before Chriſt; and, at another Time, (when Eroſtratus fir'd it only to get himſelf a Name) on the ſame Night, that Alexander the Great was born. It was rebuilt however, and beautify'd by the Epheſians, to which Work the Ladies of Epheſus contributed very largely. In the Time of our Apoſtle, it retain'd a great deal of its former Grandeur; but, at preſent, it is only an Heap of Ruins, and the very Place, where it once ſtood, is ſo little known, that it affords Matter of various Conjecture to Travellers. The only two Buildings, worth Obſervation, are a ſtrong and lofty Caſtle, ſituate on an Eminence, and a beautiful Church, honour'd with the Name of St John, but now converted into a Turkiſh Moſque. All the reſt of the Place is the Habitation of Herdſmen and Farmers, who live in low and humble Cottages of Dirt, cover'd on the Top with Earth, and ſhelter'd from the Extremity of the Weather, by mighty Maſſes of ruinous Walls, the Pride and Oſtentation of former Days, and, in theſe, the Emblem of the Frailty of the World, and the tranſient Vanity of human Glory. Whitby's Alphabetical Table, and Wells's Geography of the New Teſtament.

‖ The Account, which St Paul gives us of the Baptiſm of John, our Saviour's Forerunner, is this:——— John verily baptized with the Baptiſm of Repentance, ſaying to the People, that they ſhould believe on him, who ſhould come after him, i. e. on Jeſus Chriſt, Acts xix. 4. And herein he diſcovers a wide Difference between the Baptiſm of John, and that of Jeſus Chriſt, viz. that the Baptiſm of John was a ſolemn Rite of renouncing Sins, and Profeſſion of Obedience for the future; that it open'd a Way for a more perfect Inſtitution of the like Nature, and exhibited Chriſt as the Object of Faith, and the Maſter and Guide, which Men ought to follow. For, being thus baptiz'd, they were thereby led and conſign'd over to him, and qualify'd for the Chriſtian Baptiſm, which vaſtly exceeds the other both in Dignity and Efficacy. For here the Spirit accompanies the Water: This confirms, and compleats that Pardon of Sins, and thoſe Aſſiſtances of Grace, which belong'd to no other Waſhings, farther than as they were Approaches to the Chriſtian, which is therefore, by Way of Diſtinction and Eminence, ſtiled the Waſhing of Regeneration, and Renewing of the Holy Ghoſt, Tit. iii. 5. But, if the Baptiſm of John was ſo imperfect, how came it to paſs, that, even twenty Years after our Lord's Aſcenſion, this Apollos ſhould have no Knowledge of any other? Or, being ſo well acquainted with the Doctrine of Chriſt, to be able to teach others, how could he be ignorant of the Neceſſity of his Baptiſm? Now the only Reply to this is,———That Apollos might be one of thoſe Jews, who, having receiv'd the Baptiſm of John, ſome two or three and twenty Years before, might, ſoon after that, or before the miraculous Effuſion of the Holy Ghoſt on the Apoſtles at the Day of Pentecoſt, remove from Judea to Alexandria, where, having not yet ſeen any of the Goſpel-Hiſtories, that might poſſibly be publiſh'd at this Time, nor had an Opportunity of converſing with any of the Apoſtles, to gain farther Information, he acquieſc'd in the Baptiſm being by Aquila and Priſcilla more fully inſtructed in the Rudiments of the Chriſtian Religion, and baptiz'd, he taught the Word of God with great Boldneſs, and a moſt powerful Zeal. After ſome Stay in Epheſus, he obtain'd commendatory Letters † from the Brethren, and with them went over to Corinth, where he prov'd highly ſerviceable, and (k) water'd what St Paul had before planted, confirming the Diſciples, and convincing the Jews, that Jeſus was the true and only Meſſias promis'd in the Holy Scriptures.

Where he baptizes ſeveral Converts, confers on them the Holy Ghoſt, and cures Diſeaſes moſt wonderfully.

At St Paul's Return to Epheſus, he found ſeveral Diſciples, as well as Apollos, who had receiv'd no more, than the Baptiſm of John, and had never once heard of the Gifts of the Holy Ghoſt: However, when they were ſufficiently inſtructed in the Principles of Chriſtianity, and ſolemnly admitted to Chriſtian Baptiſm, upon the Impoſition of the Apoſtle's Hands, they immediately receiv'd the Holy Ghoſt, in the Gift of Tongues, Prophecy, and other miraculous Powers, that were conferr'd on them. For three Months after this, St Paul went into the Synagogues, and preach'd to the Jews, endeavouring, with much Earneſtneſs, to convince them, that Jeſus Chriſt was the true Meſſiah; but when, inſtead of Succeſs, he met with nothing but Refractorineſs and Infidelity, he left the Synagogues, and, for the Space of two Years, inſtructed the Heathen Converts, as well as all others, who reſorted to him in the School of one Tyrannus †. By this Means all the Inhabitants of the Proconſular Aſia had an Opportunity of having the Goſpel preach'd to them, and of ſeeing it confirm'd by Miracles of an extraordinary Nature, which St Paul was enabled to do; inſomuch, that if Napkins or Handkerchiefs were but touch'd by him, and apply'd to thoſe, who were any ways ſick, or poſſeſs'd with Devils, they immediately receiv'd Cure.

Baptiſm he had receiv'd, until he came to underſtand better: Unleſs we ſuppoſe, with St Chryſoſtom, (Hom. 40.) that God vouchſafed him (as he did Cornelius) the Baptiſm of the Spirit, (which ſupply'd the Want of external Baptiſm) both as an Encouragement, and Recompence for his Zeal in preaching the Goſpel. What became of this great Preacher, after his Return from Corinth to Epheſus, we have no Manner of Account, unleſs we may credit what St Jerom tells us of him, viz. that being diſſatiſfy'd with the Diviſion, which his Preaching at Corinth had occaſion'd, 1 Cor. iii. 7. he retir'd into Crete with Zena, a Doctor of the Law; but that after St Paul, by his Letter, had appeas'd that Diſſenſion, he return'd again to Corinth, and was made Biſhop of that City. Stanhope, on the Epiſtles and Goſpels, and Calmet's Commentary.

† That commendatory Epiſtles, certifying the Piety, and Orthodoxy of the Perſon, to whom they were given, and recommending him to an hoſpitable Reception in the Places, which he travelled to, were an antient Cuſtom in the Primitive Church, is evident from the Teſtimony of ſeveral Fathers, and other Eccleſiaſtical Writers; but whether they took their Riſe from Teſſeræ Hoſpitalitatis among the Heathens, or from the Jews, among whom the ſame Cuſtom prevailed, is a Point, wherein the Learned are not agreed. Hammond's and Whitby's Annotations.

(k) 1 Cor. iii. 6.

† Among the Jews there were two Kinds of Schools, wherein the Law was taught, private, and publick. Their private Schools were thoſe, wherein a Doctor of the Law entertain'd his Scholars, and were uſually ſtiled Houſes of Learning. Their publick Schools were thoſe, where their Conſiſtories ſat to reſolve all Difficulties and Differences of the Law: But it ſeems moſt likely, that the Tyrannus, who lent St Paul his School to preach in, was not a Jew, but a Gentile; not a Doctor of the Law, but ſome Philoſopher, or publick Profeſſor of Rhetorick, whom the Apoſtle had converted; becauſe, when he departed from the Jews, and ſeparated the Diſciples, Acts xix. 9. 'tis reaſonable to think, that the Place, made uſe of for their Inſtruction, ſhould appertain to a Gentile, rather than a Jew. Howell's Annotations.

† The Word comes from the Greek ἐξορκίζειν, which ſignifies to adjure, or to uſe the Name of God, with a Deſign to drive Devils out of Places, and Bodies, which they poſſeſs. And that the Jews had ſeveral Incantations in Uſe and Veneration, which they had in greater Credit, becauſe of an Opinion, common among them, that they had been invented by Solomon, is evident from the Teſtimony of Joſephus. That even in our Saviour's Time, Exorciſts were very frequent among them, is manifeſt from theſe Words of his, If I by Beelzebub caſt out Devils, by whom do your Children caſt them out? Therefore they ſhall be your Judges, Matth. xii. 27. And that they practis'd their Exorciſms ſometimes with Succeſs, is plain from the Acknowledgment of Irenæus, who ſays, All Things are ſubject to

This was an Event, which, when the Jews and Gentiles in Epheſus came to know it, filled them with ſuch a reverential Fear, that none dar'd to mention the Name of Jeſus, but with a profound Reſpect; and that many, who had addicted themſelves to the Study of Magick †, came, and confeſs'd their Sins, and publickly burnt their Books †, which amounted to the Value of above fifteen hundred Pounds in our Money. to the Moſt High, and, by Invocation of his Name, even before the Advent of our Lord, Men were ſaved from evil Spirits, and all Kinds of Demons. Calmet's Dictionary, and Commentary, on Acts xix. 13. and Whitby and Grotius on Matth. xii. 27.

† Their common Form of Incantation was, in the Name of the God of Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob.

† Epheſus, above all other Places in the World, was noted of old for the Study of Magick, and all ſecret and hidden Arts, inſomuch, that the 'Εφέσια γράμματα, or Epheſian Letters, ſo often ſpoken of by the Antients, which were certain obſcure and myſtical Spells and Charms, whereby they endeavour'd to heal Diſeaſes, and drive away evil Spirits) ſeem to have been firſt invented in this City.' Cave's Lives of the Apoſtles.

† Tho' theſe Books were of great Value, yet we find they did not ſell them, becauſe they would not be Gainers by theſe wicked Arts, nor would they contribute, by ſelling them, to the teaching of others the ſame Arts; but they rightly adjudg'd them to the Flames, to which they were condemn'd before by the Laws of the Empire: For they prohibited any to keep Books of Magick, and, where any ſuch were found, order'd, that their Goods ſhould be forfeited, the Books publickly burnt, the Perſons baniſh'd, and (if of meaner Rank) beheaded. Whitby's Annotations, and Cave's Lives of the Apoſtles.

† Thoſe, who take Babylon in a myſtical Senſe, underſtand by it Rome, from whence they ſuppoſe, that St. Peter wrote this Epiſtle, not long after his coming thither; and, for the Confirmation of this, they tell us, that St John, in his Book of Revelations, calls Rome by the Name of Babylon, either from its Conformity in Power and Greatneſs to that ancient City, or from its Reſemblance of it in Idolatry, and Oppreſſion of God's People. Others, who ſtill take it in a figurative Senſe, by Babylon had rather underſtand Jeruſalem, no longer now the holy City, ſay they, but a Kind of ſpiritual Babylon, in which the Church of God did, at this Time, groan under great Servitude and Captivity; and, to ſupport this Notion of the Word, they produce the Authority of ſome Fathers, who underſtood that of the Prophet, We would have healed Babylon, but ſhe is not healed, in this Senſe, Jer. li. 9. But, as a myſtical and figurative Senſe does not ſo well agree with the Date of a Letter, and, to conceal the Place, from whence they wrote, was never the Practice of any of the Apoſtles, 'tis more natural to underſtand it of Babylon properly ſo called, tho' whether it was Babylon in Egypt, where St Peter might preach the Goſpel, or Babylon, the antient Metropolis of Aſſyria, where, ever ſince the Time of their Captivity, great Numbers of Jews were ſettled, we leave the inquiſitive Reader to determine. Cave's Lives of the Apoſtles, and Beauſobre's Preface ſur la 1 Epitre de St Pierre.

"themſelves to their Governors, whether "ſupreme or ſubordinate; that Servants "ſhould obey their Maſters, Wives be "ſubject to their Huſbands, and Huſbands honour their Wives; that they "ſhould all love one another fervently "and unfeignedly, bear Afflictions patiently, live in Union, and ſympathize with each other in their Afflictions; and laſtly, that the Miniſters and "Paſtors of the ſeveral Churches ſhould "take ſpecial Care of the Flocks committed to their Charge, teach them "diligently, and govern them gently, not "ſeeking their own Gain and Profit, "but the Salvation of the People's Souls." This is the Purport of the Epiſtle, and the Whole is written with a Fervour and Zeal, not unbecoming ſo great an Apoſtle. But to proceed with St Paul.

Paul's Stay at Epheſus, from whence he wrote his firſt Epiſtle to the Corinthians. Its Contents. Acts xix. 21.

AFTER a Stay of above two Years in Epheſus, he determin'd to return into Macedonia and Achaia, and, having winter'd in Corinth, to paſs thence to Jeruſalem, where he propos'd to celebrate the Feaſt of Pentecoſt, and, after that, to proceed in his long intended Journey to Rome. In Purſuance to this Deſign, he ſent Timothy, and Eraſtus [†] before him into Macedonia, but himſelf ſtay'd behind at Epheſus, very probably to anſwer a Letter, which Apollos and ſome other Brethren had brought him from the Church of Corinth, deſiring his Reſolution of ſeveral Points relating to Marriage, and Chaſtity, and ſome other Subjects. The Corinthians were, at this Time, unhappily divided into Parties and Factions upon Account of their Teachers, each one preferring the Perſon, from whom he had receiv'd his Inſtruction, and diſparaging the reſt. They committed great Diſorders in their Love-Feaſts [†], and celebrated the Holy Sacrament very irreverently. They were addicted to Fornication, and one, in particular, had run into Inceſt, in marrying his Father's Wife. They were unjuſt, and fraudulent in their Dealings; they went to Law at Heathen Tribunals; and, among them, were found ſome, who were bold and profligate enough, to deny the Reſurrection. In Oppoſition to all this, the Apoſtle, (in what is called his [†] firſt Epiſtle to the Corinthians) "ſhews the Equality of "Chriſt's Miniſters, and their Inſufficiency for the Work, to which they are "ordain'd, without the Divine Aſſiſtance; "orders the inceſtuous Perſon to be excommunicated, leſt his Example ſhould "infect others; blames their litigious Law-[†] Eraſtus was very probably born at Corinth, and, as the Apoſtle informs us, was made Chamberlain of that City, Rom. xvi. 23. but being converted by St Paul, and reſolving to purſue his Fortune, he reſign'd his Employment, follow'd him all along, until his laſt Voyage to Corinth, in the Way to Rome, where the Apoſtle ſuffer'd Martyrdom. The Latin Writers ſay, that St Paul left Eraſtus in Macedonia; that he made him Biſhop of that Province, and that he dy'd a Martyr at Philippi; but the Greeks, in their Calendars, make him Biſhop of Paneas, near the Sources of the River Jordan, give him the Title of an Apoſtle, place him in the Number of the ſeventy Diſciples, and ſay, that he dy'd in Peace, after having gone over all the Earth, preaching the Faith of Jeſus Chriſt: But not any of theſe produce one Proof of what they ſay. Calmet's Commentary.

[†] Theſe Feaſts of Charity, which were in Uſe among the Primitive Chriſtians, in Memory of the laſt Supper, which our Bleſſed Saviour had with his Apoſtles, when he inſtituted the Holy Euchariſt, were kept in the Church, towards the Evening, after the common Prayers were over, and the Word of Salvation had been heard. When this was done, the whole Congregation eat together what every one had brought with him, in great Simplicity and Union, ſo that there was no Diſtinction between Rich and Poor; and, after a frugal and modeſt Supper, they partook of the Sacrament, and gave each other a Kiſs of Peace, and ſo departed. But this Cuſtom, as good and laudable as it was in its Original, came, in a ſhort Time, to be abus'd. Calmet's Dictionary, under the Word Agape.

[†] That this was an Epiſtle written by St Paul the Apoſtle, as is aſſerted in the firſt Verſe, was never once doubted in the Church of God; but whether it was his firſt Epiſtle to the Corinthians, has been a Matter of Diſpute; becauſe he ſays in it, I have written to you an Epiſtle, Chap. v. 9. which ſeems plainly to relate to a former Epiſtle. But, as none of the Antients ever aſcrib'd to St Paul more than fourteen Epiſtles, even including that to the Hebrews, no Chriſtian Writer ever cited any Thing from an Epiſtle of his to the Corinthians, ſuppos'd to be loſt; and all the Greek Scholiaſts declare, that the Apoſtle, in theſe Words, ſpeaketh not of another, but of this very Epiſtle; the Words ἔγραψα ὑμῖν, which we tranſlate I wrote, ſhould rather be render'd I had wrote, (it being a common Obſervation of Grammarians, that the Aoriſt is ſo called, becauſe it is of an indefinite Signification, ſometimes us'd for the perfect, and ſometimes for the pluſquam perfect Tenſe, I had wrote) but made ſome Alteration in my Letter, before I ſent it. Whitby's Preface to the firſt Epiſtle to the Corinthians.

“Suits, as thinking it much better to refer their Differences to ſome of their own Body; propounds the firſt Inſtitution of the Sacrament, and a previous Examination of their Lives, to bring them to a right Uſe of it; anſwers their Queſtions, relating to Marriage, Celibacy, and Meats offer'd to Idols; and, having added ſeveral Things, concerning a decent Behaviour, both of Men and Women, in their Churches; concerning the Gifts of the Holy Ghoſt; the Excellency of Charity; the Gift of Tongues, and Prayer in an unknown Language; he proves the Truth of the Goſpel, and the Certainty of a future Reſurrection, almoſt to a Demonſtration.”

His Epiſtle to the Galatians, and its Contents.

ABOUT the ſame Time it was, that St Paul, in like Manner, wrote his Epiſtle to the Galatians [†]: For being inform'd, that, ſince his Departure, ſeveral Impoſtors had crept in among them, who ſtrongly inſiſted on the Neceſſity of Circumciſion, and other legal Rites, and greatly diſparag'd his Authority, as being but a ſecond-hand Apoſtle, in Compariſon of Peter, James, and John, from whom they pretended to derive their Inſtructions; in this Epiſtle, “He reproves them with ſome neceſſary Warmth and Severity, for ſuffering themſelves ſo eaſily to be impos'd upon by crafty Artifices of Seducers. He largely refutes thoſe Judaical Opinions, wherewith they were infected, and, by ſeveral Arguments, proves, that the Slavery of the Law brought a Curſe with it; was deſtructive of their Chriſtian Liberty, and incapable of procuring their Juſtification in the Sight of God. Among theſe Reproofs, and Arguments however, he mingles ſeveral Exhortations full of paternal and apoſtolick Charity; and, towards the Concluſion, gives them many excellent Rules and Directions, for the Conduct of their Lives and Converſations.”

The Tumult, which Demetrius rais'd at Epheſus, pacify'd by the Recorder's Speech. Acts xix. 23.

A LITTLE before St Paul's Departure from Epheſus, one Demetrius, a Silver-Smith, who dealt in making little Models [†], of the Temple of Epheſus, with the Image of Diana included in them, perceiving, that, if the Chriſtian Religion prevailed, this gainful Employment of his would be totally ruin'd, called together a great Number of the ſame Profeſſion, and, having repreſented to them the Injury, which St Paul, by his Preaching every where againſt Idolatry, was like to do, not only to the Trade, whereby they ſubſiſted, but to the Honour and Reputation likewiſe of the great [†] St Luke, in his Hiſtory of the Acts, acquaints us with two Journeys, which our Apoſtle took to Galatia; but his Account of them is very ſhort. He only ſays, that Paul, Silas, and Timothy, went through Phrygia, and the Region of Galatia, Acts xvi. 6. without relating any Thing, that there paſs'd; from whence we may ſuppoſe, that his Stay there was not long, either becauſe he was called away by the Spirit into Macedonia, or becauſe his Preaching there, at firſt, was attended with ſuch Succeſs, that they, received him as an Angel of God, or even as Chriſt Jeſus himſelf, tho' he had then a great Infirmity of the Fleſh, occaſion'd, very probably, by ſome bodily Sickneſs. This Apoſtle, without all Doubt, was the firſt, who preach'd to the Gentiles in Galatia; but there is Reaſon to believe, that, before him, St Peter had preach'd to the Jews of that Province, as appears from the Inſcription of his Epiſtle, to the Strangers, ſcattered throughout Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Aſia, and Bithynia, 1 Pet. i. 1. and 'twas certainly the Jews, whom St Peter here converted, who, among the Gentile Converts, rais'd the Troubles, which occaſion'd our Apoſtle's writing this Letter. Beauſobre's and Calmet's Pref. ſur. L' Epitre aux Galates.

---

[†] In the Idolatry of the Heathens, they us'd to carry the Images of their Gods in Proceſſion from one City to another, which they did in a Chariot conſecrated for that Purpoſe. But, beſides this greater, there was a leſs Frame, wherein it was plac'd, by the Romans called Ferculum, not much unlike that, which the Greeks called ναὸς, a little Chapel, repreſenting the Form of a Temple with an Image in it, which being ſet upon the Altar, or other ſolemn Place, and the Leaves of the Door open'd, the Image appear'd, ſitting or ſtanding in State, and ſo was repreſented to the Spectators. The making of theſe Temples and Images in Miniature, was certainly a very profitable Employ at Epheſus, becauſe few People of Diſtinction came to viſit this great Wonder of the World, who did not carry home with them ſome of theſe little Models of it, not only as an Evidence of the Pilgrimage they had perform'd, but as a Means likewiſe to incite their Devotion to the Goddeſs Diana. Hammond's, Beauſobre's, and Pool's Annotations.

Goddeſs Diana *, whom all the World ador'd, he ſo inflam'd them with his Speech, that immediately they cry'd out, Great is Diana of the Epheſians! And, as the Spirit of Mutiny ſoon ſpread from the Workmen to the Rabble, it was not long before the whole City was in an Uproar.

In this Confuſion, the People, ſeizing upon Gaius and Ariſtarchus †, two of St Paul's Companions, hurry'd them to the Theatre, with a Deſign, very probably, to throw them to the wild Beaſts, as their Cuſtom was to treat Malefactors; which when Paul underſtood, he would have ventur'd himſelf among them, had not the Chriſtians then preſent, and even ſome of the Prefects of the Theatrical Games †, (well knowing what Danger this would have expos'd him to) earneſtly diſſuaded him from it; and to this, without Doubt, he alludes, when elſewhere he tells us, that (i) he fought with Beaſts at Epheſus ‖.

The Tumult, in the mean Time, increas'd, rather than diminiſh'd; when a certain Jew, nam'd Alexander †, breaking through the Croud, and making a Sign with his Hand for Silence, would have made a Speech to the People, with a Deſign, very probably, to excuſe the Jews, and throw the Odium upon the Chriſtians; but they, perceiving him to be a Jew, and thereby ſuſpecting him to be one of Paul's Aſſociates, began to raiſe an Out-cry for near two Hours together, wherein nothing was heard, but Great is Diana of the Epheſians! When the Noiſe was a little abated, however, the Recorder of the City came out, and calmly told them, "That it was ſufficiently known to all the World, what a mighty Veneration the City of Epheſus had for their great Goddeſs Diana, and the famous Image †, which fell down from Heaven; ſo that there needed not any Diſturbance to vindicate and aſſert it; that they had ſeiz'd on Perſons, who were not guilty either of Sacrilege, or Blaſphemy againſt their Goddeſs; that, if Demetrius and his Company had any juſt Charge againſt them, the Courts were ſitting, and they might enter their Accuſation; or, if the Controverſy was about any other Matter, there were proper Judicatures to determine it in; that therefore they ſhould do well to be pacify'd, having done more already, than they could anſwer, and being in Danger of incurring a ſevere Puniſhment, if they ſhould be called to an Account (as very likely they might) for that Day's riotous Aſſembly." And, with this prudent Diſcourſe, he appeas'd and diſpers'd the Multitude.

* The Heathens, who had their ſuperior and inferior Gods and Goddeſſes, always plac'd Diana in the Number of the former, which are all included in the two Verſes of Ennius:

Juno, Veſto, Minerva, Ceres, Diana, Venus, Mars, Mercurius, Jovi, Neptunus, Vulcanus, Apollo.

Theſe were worſhipp'd by the Gentiles of all Nations; but the inferior Kind, who were called Dii minorum Gentium, were only known and worſhipp'd in ſome particular Countries and Places. Calmet's Commentary.

† He was a Macedonian, and Native of Theſſalonica, who, adjoining himſelf to St Paul, accompany'd him to Epheſus, and there continu'd with him for the two Years of his Abode, partaking in all the Labours and Dangers of the Apoſtleſhip. From Epheſus he follow'd him into Greece; from Greece into Aſia; from Aſia into Judea; and from Judea to Rome; where (as ſome ſay) he was beheaded with him in Nero's Reign. Calmet's Commentary.

† Among the Heathens, there were Games inſtituted in Honour of the Good Deities, even as Sacrifices and Victims were to appeaſe the Bad and Angry. Of theſe Games, at Rome the Pontifices, or High-Prieſts, were Preſidents, and, in other Places the Prieſts, and chief Magiſtrates, who, from their Provinces, were called Aſiarchæ, Syriarchæ, Bithyniarchæ, &c. They were generally choſen out of the chief Cities, and beſt Families in the Province, and had the Regulation, not only of what concern'd the Worſhip of their Gods, but of ſeveral other publick Affairs, particularly of the Games and Combats, which were exhibited to the People on their Theatres. Thus, in the Martyrdom of Polycarp at Smyrna, the People aſk'd Philip, the Ruler of the Games there, to let out a Lion upon the aged Biſhop, which he refus'd to do, becauſe (as he tells them) the Games were ended; from whence it appears, that it belong'd to the Aſiarchæ, here mention'd, to let looſe the wild Beaſts upon the Malefactors; and therefore, having ſome Kindneſs for St Paul, (a great Work of God's Providence that they had) they ſent him Word to keep cloſe, and not venture himſelf upon the Theatre, knowing, that the full Purpoſe of the People was to ſet him to the θηριομαχία, or Combating with wild Beaſts, if he did. Whitby's, Beauſobre's, and Hammond's Annotations.

(i) 1 Cor. xv. 32.

‖ That St Paul, in this Place, does actually refer us to what befel him at Epheſus, is manifeſt from his own Words, in another Epiſtle to the Corinthians, where he mentions his great Perſecution in Aſia, (whereof Epheſus was the Metropolis) and a Preſſure ſo heavy, that he deſpair'd even of Life, having the Sentence of Death in himſelf; but that, truſting in God, who raiſed the Dead, he was delivered from ſo great a Death, 2 Cor. i. 8, &c. But then the Queſtion is, whether theſe Beaſts at Epheſus are to be taken in a literal, or metaphorical Senſe? That cruel and bloody-minded Men are often repreſented, under the Metaphor of Beaſts, cannot be deny'd; and that St Paul was actually expos'd to Beaſts, but they would not touch him, thoſe, (ſays Nicephorus Hiſt. Eccl. lib. ii. c. 25.) who wrote the Life of this Apoſtle, do affirm. Either of theſe Senſes therefore may be true; but, as we read no where in the Acts, or in the Catalogue of his Afflictions, 2 Cor. xi. that St Paul did really fight with wild Beaſts, our beſt Way is to render the preceding Words κατ' ἄνθρωπον, not according to the Manner, but according to the Intention of Men, and then the Senſe will be,——that, according to the Intention of the Men of Epheſus, he had fought with Beaſts, becauſe, in the Tumult, which Demetrius had rais'd, the People's Deſign was to have dealt ſo with St Paul's Companions, and much more ſo with him, had not his Friends diſſuaded him from entering into the Theatre. Hammond's and Whitby's Annotations.

† Who this Alexander was, whether a Jew, or a Jewiſh Convert, and whether for, or againſt St Paul, it no where appears from the Sacred Hiſtory; and therefore ſome have imagin'd, that this was the Alexander, who afterwards revolted from the Chriſtian Faith, of whom St Paul complains ſo loudly, 1 Tim. i. 20. 2 Tim. iv. 14. but that being now a Friend, and Retainer to the Apoſtle, he was about to ſtand up in his Defence, and make his Apology. We can ſcarce think however, that, had the Thing been thus, the Jews would have encourag'd, or put him forward, Acts xix. 33. and therefore the more probable Conjecture is, that he was a Jew, who, perceiving his Countrymen involv'd in this Affair, at their Sollicitation, was for addreſſing himſelf to the Multitude, in order to excuſe them, and to lay all the Blame of the Tumult upon the Chriſtians. Beauſobre's Annotations.

Paul makes Timothy Biſhop of Epheſus, and writes his ſecond Epiſtle to the Corinthians. Its Contents. Acts xx. 1.

AS ſoon as this Storm was diſpers'd, St Paul, having called the Church together, and conſtituted Timothy Biſhop of the Place, took his Leave, and departed by Troas for Macedonia; where, having inſtructed ſome, and confirm'd others in the Principles of a ſound Faith and holy Life, he continu'd his Preaching all over the Country, even as far as Illyricum †. While he was in Macedonia, Titus came to him, and gave him an Account of the good Effects, which his Epiſtle had at Corinth, and how great Reformation it had wrought; but, as ſeveral vain-glorious Teachers ſtill perſiſted in their Contumacy, vilifying his Authority, and miſrepreſenting his Words and Actions; charging him, particularly, with Levity, in not coming according to his Promiſe; with Severity, in his Dealings with the inceſtuous Perſon; with Imperiouſneſs in his Writings, Abjectneſs in his Perſon, and ſome ſmall Tincture of Irreligion, in overthrowing the Moſaick Law, (all which he underſtood from Titus) he thought it neceſſary to write a ſecond Epiſtle to the Corinthians: "Wherein he excuſes his not coming directly to Corinth, for Fear of occaſioning their Sorrow, and giving himſelf Uneaſineſs, in being oblig'd to treat with Severity

† The Image of this Diana was not ſet out in an Hunting-dreſs, with a Bow and Arrows in her Hand, and a Creſcent upon her Head; but it was cover'd with Breaſts, ſometimes from Head to Foot, and ſometimes her Boſom only, and Belly was cover'd with them, and all beſides was a Kind of Pedeſtal, adorn'd, at proper Diſtances, with the Heads of Stags and Dogs, having about Half of their Bodies prominent. The Multitude of her Breaſts denoted her Fertility, as being called the Nurſe of all living Creatures; and the Dogs and Stags, which belong'd to her, were the Indication of her being the Goddeſs of Hunting. This Image, as ſingular as it was, is ſaid to have been the Work of one Canetias, whoſe Name is ſtill upon Record; but, as it had ſubſiſted long beyond the Memory of Man, the crafty Prieſts perſuaded the credulous Multitude that it fell from Heaven, that thereby they might advance both its Honour, and their own Profit. Calmet's Commentary, and Pool's Annotations.

† This is a Province of Europe, lying to the North, or North-Weſt of Macedonia, along the Adriatick Sea, now called the Gulph of Venice; and its antient Boundaries were, to the Eaſt, the Upper Mæſia and Macedonia; to the Weſt, Iſtria; to the North, the two Pannonia's; and to the South, the Adriatick Sea. It was commonly diſtinguiſh'd into two Parts; Lyburnia to the North, where now lies Croatia; and Dalmatia to the South, which ſtill retains its Name. St Paul tells us, that, from Jeruſalem, and round about unto Illyricum, he had fully preached the Goſpel of Chriſt, Rom. xv. 19. So that he muſt have travelled into Syria, Phœnicia, Arabia, Cilicia, Pamphylia, Piſidia, Lycaonia, Galatia, Pontus, Paphlagonia, Phrygia, Troas, Aſia, Caria, Lyſia, Ionia, Lydia, the Iſles of Cyprus and Crete, Thracia, Macedonia, Theſſalia, and Achaia. So juſtly, and without Oſtentation, might he ſay, that, in relation to the other Apoſtles, he laboured more abundantly than them all, 1 Cor. xv. 10. Wells's Geography of the New Teſtament, and Calmet's Dictionary.

“ thoſe, who had not yet amended their Faults: Wherein he commends their Zeal againſt the inceſtuous Perſon, but now, that he had ſuffer'd, and ſorrow'd enough for his Tranſgreſſion, allow'd them to be reconciled to him: Wherein he juſtifies his Conduct, vindicates the Dignity and Miniſtry of the Goſpel, and proves its great Excellency above the Law: Wherein he diſclaims thoſe falſe Teachers, who, to eſtrange them from him, made it their Buſineſs to traduce and vilify him, and threatens them with his Apoſtolick Authority, whenever he came among them: Wherein he ſpeaks of himſelf with ſome Advantage, and, tho' he mentions his ſupernatural Gifts and Revelations, yet ſeems to glory moſt in his extraordinary Labours, and Sufferings for the Goſpel; and wherein he exhorts them all to the Works of Penance and Mortification, leſt, when he comes, he ſhould be oblig'd to uſe his Power againſt Offenders; and to have their Alms in Readineſs, that they may not be an Hindrance to him at his Arrival at Corinth.”

From Corinth, he writes his Epiſtle to the Romans. Its Contents.

HAVING paſs'd over Macedonia, St Paul came into Achaia †, and continu'd there for the Space of three Months, reſiding principally at Corinth, from whence he wrote his famous Epiſtle to the Romans †: “Wherein he ſtates and determines the great Controverſy between the Jews and the Gentiles, about the Obligation of the Rites and Ceremonies of the Moſaick Law, and thoſe main and material Doctrines of Chriſtianity, which depend on it, ſuch as that of Chriſtian Liberty, and the Uſe of indifferent Things, &c. Wherein he diſcovers the Effects of Original Sin, and the Power it has even in the Regenerate; and then explains the profound Queſtions concerning Election and Reprobation, in his Diſcourſe of the Calling of the Gentiles, and the Rejection of the Jews; and wherein he intermixes ſeveral admirable Inſtructions and Exhortations to the Duties of an holy and religious Life, ſuch as the Chriſtian Doctrine does naturally tend to produce.”

He paſſes through Macedonia, and at Troas recovers a young Man killed with a Fall. Acts xviii. 12.

FROM Corinth, St Paul, being to carry the Alms, which he had gather'd in Macedonia and Achaia, to the poor Chriſtians in Judea, intended, at firſt, to have taken the ſhorteſt Cut into Syria; but, upon Intimation of a Conſpiracy, that the Jews had form'd againſt his Life, he alter'd his Courſe, and determin'd to go through Macedonia. Accordingly, he, and his Company, ſet forward, and came to Philippi, where he ſtay'd for ſome Time, and there celebrated the Feaſt of the Paſſover. From Philippi he went on board, and, in five Days, landed at Troas, where having tarry'd a Week, on the Lord's-Day †, when the Chriſtians of the Place met together to receive the Sacrament, he preach'd to them,

† It is a general Obſervation of the antient Commentators, that, tho' this Epiſtle has obtain'd the firſt Place and Rank, it is far from being the firſt, that St Paul wrote; that thoſe to the Theſſalonians, Corinthians, and the Galatians were prior; nay, that it was the very laſt of all, that he compos'd, before his firſt Journey to Rome; and therefore they think, that it had the firſt Place aſſign'd it in the Canon, either from the Majeſty of the Imperial City, to which it was ſent, or from the Excellency of the Doctrine, which it contain'd. Hammond's and Whitby's Annotations.

† The Words in the Original are, ——— Ἐν δὲ τῇ μιᾷ τῶν Σαββάτων, which we render, on the firſt Day of the Week; and, that this firſt Day of the Week was our Lord's-Day, or the Day of our Lord's Reſurrection from the Dead, is obvious from the Account of all the Evangeliſts. Vid. Matth. xxviii. 1. Mark xvi. 9. Luke xxiii. 56, and John xx. 1. And from hence we may obſerve, that, from the very Beginning, Chriſtians us'd to aſſemble on the Firſt Day of the Week, to perform their religious Worſhip; for Pliny, in his Epiſtle to the Emperor Trajan, tells him, that he found nothing to alledge againſt the Chriſtians, but their Obſtinacy in their Superſtition, and that it was their Cuſtom to meet together on a ſet Day, before it was light, Ep. lib. x. Ep. 97. And what that ſet Day was, Juſtin Martyr who wrote not a great many Years after Pliny, has taken care to inform us; for on Sunday, ſays he, all Chriſtians, in the City, or Country, meet together, becauſe that is the Day of our Lord's Reſurrection; and then we have read unto us the Writings of the Prophets and Apoſtles. When this is done, the Preſident makes an Oration to the Aſſembly, to exhort them to imitate, and do the Things, which they have heard, and then we all join in Prayer, and, after that, celebrate the Sacrament, Apol. 2. Whitby's Annotations.

But Paul went down, and ſoon recover'd him; and ſo, going up again, he reſum'd his Diſcourſe, and, in the Celebration of the Sacrament, and other Divine Offices, continu'd until Break of Day, and then departed.

* This is a Sea-port Town, ſituate on the South-Weſt Part of the Province of Troas, and over-againſt the Iſland Leſbos. By Land, it is a great deal nearer Troas, than it is by Sea, becauſe of a Promontory that runs a great Way into the Ocean, and muſt be doubled before we can come to Aſſos, which was the Reaſon that the Apoſtle choſe rather to walk it. Wells's Geography of the New Teſtament, and Calmet's Commentary.

† This was one of the principal Cities of the Iſle Leſbos, ſeated in a Peninſula, with a commodious Haven on each Side, and ſoon became ſo conſiderable, as to give Name to the whole Iſland (at preſent called Metelin) many Years ago. The Iſland (which is one of the largeſt in the Archipelago) was, in former Times, renown'd for the many eminent Perſons it had produc'd; ſuch as Sappho, the Inventreſs of Sapphic Verſes; Alcæus, a famous Lyric Poet; Pittacus, one of the ſeven wiſe Men of Greece; Theophraſtus, the noble Phyſician and Philoſopher; and Arion, the celebrated Muſician; and the Turks, who have it now in Poſſeſſion, think it ſtill a Place of Conſequence enough to deſerve a Fortreſs and Garriſon to defend it. Wells's Geography of the New Teſtament.

§ This is an Iſland in the Archipelago, next to Leſbos, or Metelin, both in its Situation and Bigneſs. It lies over-againſt Smyrna, and is not above four Leagues diſtant from the Aſiatic Continent. It is celebrated by Horace, and Martial, for the Wine, and Figs, that came from thence; but, at preſent, its Renown is, that it produces the moſt excellent Maſtick in the World, wherein the People pay their Tribute to the Grand Seignior. Nor is it leſs remarkable for what Sir Paul Ricaut, in his preſent State of the Greek Church, tells us of it, viz. that there is no Place in the Turkiſh Dominions, where Chriſtians enjoy more Freedom in their Religion and Eſtates, than in this Iſle, to which they are intitled by an antient Capitulation made with Sultan Mahomet II. which, to this Day, is maintain'd ſo faithfully, that no Turk can ſtrike, or abuſe a Chriſtian, without ſevere Correction. Wells's Geography of the New Teſtament.

‡ This is another Iſle in the Archipelago, lying South-Eaſt of Chios, and about five Miles from the Aſiatic Continent. It is famous among Heathen Writers for the Worſhip of Juno; for one of the Sibyls, called Sibylla Samina; for Pherecydes, who foretold an Earthquake, that happen'd there, by drinking of the Waters; and more eſpecially, for the Birth of Pythagoras, who excelled all the ſeven Wiſe-Men, ſo renown'd among the Greeks. It was formerly a free Commonwealth, and the Inhabitants were ſo powerful, that they managed many proſperous Wars againſt their Neighbours; but, at preſent, the Turks have reduc'd it to ſuch a mean and depopulated Condition, that a few Pirates dare land, and plunder it as they pleaſe; ſo that, ever ſince the Year 1676, no Turk has ventur'd to live upon it, for Fear of being carry'd into Captivity by theſe Rovers. Whitby's Alphabetical Table, and Wells's Geography of the New Teſtament.

† It is a Cape, or Promontory, on the Aſiatic Coaſt, oppoſite to Samos, and not much below Epheſus, having a Town of the ſame Name. Whitby's Alphabetical Table, and Wells's Geography of the New Teſtament.

* This is a Port Town on the Continent of Aſia Minor, and in the Province of Caria, memorable for being the Birth-Place of Thales, one of the ſeven Wiſe-Men in Greece, and Father of the Ionic Philoſophy; of Anaximenes, his Scholar; Timotheus, the Muſician; and Anaximenius, the Philoſopher. At preſent it is called, by the Turks, Melas; and not far diſtant from it, is the true Meander, which, tho' it encircles all the Plain it runs thro' with many wanton Mazes, and innumerable Windings, yet, in ſome Places, it goes with ſuch a Current, as ſtirs up the Earth and Gravel from the Bottom, which make its Water not ſo clear and cryſtalline, as might be expected. Whitby's Alphabetical Table, and Wells's Geography of the New Teſtament.

† That, in theſe early Times of Chriſtianity, the Divine Spirit did enable the Apoſtles to diſcern, who were fit to be Governors of the Church, and that, by its Movement, or Inſpiration, they were accordingly choſen into that Office, ſeems to be evident from ſeveral Paſſages in Scripture. Thus the Spirit, in the Prophets at Antioch, ſaid, Separate me Barnabas and Saul for the Work, whereunto I have called them, Acts xiii. 2. and thus the Holy Ghoſt is ſaid to have conſtituted the Biſhops and Preſbyters in Aſia, Acts xx. 28. becauſe, (as Clemens Romanus ſays) they made Trial of them by the Holy Ghoſt, or, (as Clemens Alexandrinus has it) they were ſignified to them by the Spirit; and therefore Ignatius teſtifies of the Biſhops of his Time, that they were not appointed by Men, but by the Counſel of Chriſt Jeſus, even as St Cyprian ſays of thoſe in his, that they were conſtituted, not only by the Conſent of the People, and the Sufferings of their Fellow Biſhops, but by the Judgment and Teſtimony of God: And, therefore, we need not doubt, but that to this Kind of Election it is, that the Words of the Apoſtle refer. Whitby's Annotations.

* What we have term'd heretical Teachers St Paul deſcribes by the Metaphor of grievous Wolves, not ſparing the Flock, Acts xx. 29. and well may they be compar'd to Wolves, for their Craft and Cruelty, their mortal Hatred to all good Chriſtians, and lying in wait to circumvent and deſtroy them. The Prophets likens them to Evening Wolves, Zeph. iii. 3. which come ſecretly in the Dark, and are very hungry, zealous, and paſſionately deſirous to pervert harmleſs and unwary Souls; and, leſt their Malice ſhould be perceiv'd, theſe ravenous Wolves diſguiſe themſelves in Sheeps Cloathing, i. e. they pretend to great Innocence and Simplicity, they ſeem to pity the Miſtakes, and deſire the Salvation of ſuch, as they would inſinuate into, and, under this Vail, they are taken for Friends, tho' ſtill they remain the worſt of Enemies. Comber, on Ordination.

‖ 'Tis certain, that this Saying does not occur in any of the four Evangeliſts, nor does the Apoſtle mention it, as an Inference from our Lord's ſeveral Diſcourſes in Commendation of Charity, but as his own expreſs Words; and therefore we muſt neceſſarily conclude, that he came to the Knowledge of it, either by the Information of

But, how uncertain ſoever the firſt Conveyers of this Saying may be, the Author of it is unqueſtionable, ſince the Apoſtle aſſures us, that it came from Chriſt. Calmet's Commentary, and Collier's Sermons.

† Theſe Words are to be expounded according to the Meaſures and Limitations of other proverbial Sayings in Scripture. For tho', generally ſpeaking, they are true, yet, in ſome Caſes, they will admit of an Exception. If he that gives, for Inſtance, does it out of a Principle of Intereſt, or Vain-Glory, to get a Reputation, or ſtrengthen a Faction; if he does it to encroach upon the Liberty of the Oblig'd, to upbraid him with his Neceſſities, to betray him into any ſinful Compliance, and make him obnoxious to his Humour, it is not to be doubted, but that, in this Caſe, a grateful and benevolent Receiver is much a greater Man, than ſuch a pretended Benefactor; but then, if we ſuppoſe the Giver and Receiver, purely conſider'd as ſuch, to be both free from every ill Principle and moral Indiſpoſition, the Circumſtances of the Giver are more deſirable, than thoſe of the Receiver: 1ſt, Becauſe Giving includes more Perfection in it, and is a more ſecure and honourable Condition. 2dly, Becauſe, generally ſpeaking, it is a clearer Evidence of a virtuous Diſpoſition. 3dly, Becauſe Charity is a nobler Virtue than Gratitude, and will be more conſider'd in another World: And, 4thly, Becauſe there is more Pleaſure in giving, than receiving. Collier's Sermons.

* This was an Iſland in the Archipelago, lying near the South-Weſt Point of Aſia Minor, and having a City of the ſame Name. At preſent it is commonly called Lango, and was formerly celebrated for the Birth of Hippocrates the famous Phyſician, and Apelles the famous Painter; for a ſtately Temple dedicated to Apollo, and another to Juno; for the Richneſs of its Wines, and the Fineneſs of a Stuff made here, which was perfectly tranſparent. Whitby's Alphabetical Table, and Wells's Geography of the New Teſtament.

‖ This Iſland (which is ſuppos'd to have took its Name ἀπὸ τῶν ῥόδων, from the many Roſes, which are known to grow there) lies South of the Province of Caria, in Leſſer Aſia; and, among the Aſiatic Iſles, is accounted, for Dignity, next to Cyprus and Leſbos. It was remarkable among the Antients for the Expertneſs of its Inhabitants in the Art of Navigation; for a College, in which the Students were eminent for Eloquence and Mathematicks; for the Clearneſs of its Air, inſomuch, that there was not a Day in the Year, wherein the Sun did not ſhine upon it; for its pleaſant and healthy Climate, which induc'd the Roman Nobility to make it a Place of their Receſs; and more eſpecially, for its prodigious Statue of Braſs, conſecrated to the Sun, and called his Coloſſus. This Statue was ſeventy Cubits high, had every Finger as big as an ordinary Man, and, ſtanding aſtride over the Mouth of the Harbour ſo that the Ships ſailed between its Legs, on Account of its vaſt Bulk, was reckon'd one of the ſeven Wonders of the World. Whitby's Alphabetical Table, and Wells's Geography of the New Teſtament.

§ This is a Sea-Port of Lycia, formerly beautify'd with a fair Harbour, and many Temples, whereof one was dedicated to Apollo, and had an Oracle in it, for Wealth and Credit not inferior to that of Delphi. Wells's Geography of the New Teſtament.

‡ But, if the Perſons, who diſſuaded St Paul from going to Jeruſalem, were really mov'd by the Holy Ghoſt to do this, how could he act contrary to their Advice, without oppoſing what the Spirit of God requir'd, and running himſelf raſhly into what it did forbid? Now to this it may be ſaid, That all that the Spirit diſcover'd to the Diſciples of Tyre was, that, if St Paul purſu'd his Journey, he would certainly meet with very cruel Uſage; and therefore, out of pure Kindneſs and Concern for his Welfare, they entreated him to conſult his own Safety, and not expoſe himſelf to the Malice of his Enemies, by going to a Place, where they were ſo violently bent againſt him. Their Diſſuading him therefore was properly the Effect of their Love, and the Reſult of what the Spirit had foretold them, but no Part of the Spirit's Inſtructions to St Paul to deſiſt from his Journey. Himſelf tells us, That the Holy Ghoſt witneſſeth, in every City, that Bonds and Afflictions abode him, Acts. xx. 23. But this, we may be ſure, was not to prevail with him to abandon the Work of the Goſpel, but rather to arm him with Strength and Reſolution to accompliſh it, without giving himſelf any Pain about the Perils, that would enſue. Whitby's and Beauſobre's Annotations, and Calmet's Commentary.

they ſailed to Ptolemais [†], and there having but juſt ſaluted the Brethren they came by Land the next Day to Cæſarea of Paleſtine, and lodg'd at the Houſe of Philip, the Deacon and Evangeliſt [†], who had four Daughters all endu'd with the Gift of Prophecy. During their Stay in this Place, the Prophet Agabus came from Jeruſalem and, taking St Paul's Girdle [*], bound his own Hands and Feet with it, thereby intimating, that the Owner of it ſhould be ſerv'd in the ſame Manner by the Jews at Jeruſalem, and by them be deliver'd over into the Hands of the Gentiles; but St Paul's Conſtancy was not in the leaſt ſhaken by all theſe Predictions, being ready, (as he told thoſe, who were diſſuading him from going) not only to ſuffer Bonds, but even Death itſelf, for the Sake of Chriſt, and his Religion; ſo that, finding his Reſolution immoveable, they importun'd him no more, but left the Event to the Will of God: Whereupon he and his Companions ſet forwards on their Journey, and, having arriv'd at Jeruſalem before the Feaſt of Pentecoſt, were receiv'd by the Chriſtians there with the utmoſt Demonſtrations of Joy.

He complies with the Requeſt of the Apoſtles.

Acts xxi. 18.

THE next Day, Paul and his Company went to the Houſe of St James, the Apoſtle, and Biſhop of Jeruſalem, where the reſt of the Elders and Governors of the Church were met together. After mutual Salutations, he gave them an Account of the Succeſs, he had met with in the Propagation of Chriſtianity among the Gentiles, for which they all glorify'd God; but withal told him, "That, ſince he was "now come to a Place, where there were "many Thouſands of Jewiſh Converts, "who all retain'd a mighty Zeal and "Veneration for the Law of Moſes, and "who had been inform'd of him, that, in "every Place, he taught the Jews, whom "he had converted, to renounce Circumciſion, and other ritual Obſervances, the "beſt Expedient, to obviate their Clamours, would be for him to [‖] join "himſelf

[†] This City was anciently called Accho; but, when Ptolemy I. had enlarg'd it, it took its Name from him; tho', ſince its Subjection to the Turks, it has recover'd ſome Reſemblance of its former Name, in being now called Acca, or Acra. As to its Situation, it enjoys all poſſible Advantages both by Sea and Land; for, on its North and Eaſt Sides, it is compaſs'd with a ſpacious fertile Plain; on the Weſt, it is waſh'd by the Mediterranean Sea; and on the South, by a large Bay, which extends itſelf from the City, as far as Mount Carmel. This made it one of the faireſt and moſt commodious Cities in Galilee, and for a long Time, it was the Theatre of Contention between the Chriſtians and Infidels, till, having divers Times chang'd its Maſters, it was at laſt, after a long Siege, finally taken by the Turks, A. D. 1291, and by them deſtroy'd in ſuch a Manner, that, beſides a large Kane, wherein the French Factors have taken up their Quarters, one Moſque, and a few poor Cottages, there is nothing to be ſeen, but a vaſt ſpacious Ruin; tho', even here, there are ſome Remains, (ſuch as thoſe of the Church of St Andrew and St John, the Convent of the Knights Hoſpitallers, and the Palace of the Grand Maſter of that Order) which diſtinguiſh'd themſelves from the general Heap, by certain Marks of ſuperior Strength and Magnificence. Maundrell's Journey from Aleppo to Jeruſalem.

[†] An Evangeliſt is a Preacher of the Goſpel, who, being ſettled in no particular Place, was by the Apoſtles ſent into different Parts of the World, either to confirm the Churches, which they had founded, or, by his own Labour and Application, to found new ones himſelf. St Paul makes mention of this Order of Men, and ranks them next to the Apoſtles and Prophets, Eph. iv. 2. And, to let us know, that Marriage is not inconſiſtent with any ſacred Function, St Luke acquaints us, that this Deacon and Evangeliſt had four Daughters. And indeed the Rules, which St Paul gives Timothy, are a ſufficient Demonſtration, that he allow'd Biſhops, as well as Deacons, to be marry'd Men; nor is there any Thing, either in Scripture or Antiquity, that denies them that Liberty. For it is evident, that St Peter had a Wife, Matth. viii. 14. and that St Paul aſſerts his Right to marry, if he pleas'd, 1 Cor. ix. 5. Ignatius affirms, that he had a Wife as well as St Peter, and others of the Apoſtles; and St Ambroſe teſtifies, that all the Apoſtles were marry'd Men, except St John and St Paul. Beauſobre's Annotations. Calmet's Commentary, and Comber, on Ordination.

[*] It was a common Practice among the antient Prophets (to give their Predictions a ſtronger Impreſſion) to foretel future Events by figurative or ſymbolical Actions. Thus Iſaiah went naked and barefoot, to ſhew what the People of Iſrael ſhould meet with under the Kings of Aſſyria, Iſai. xx. 2. and Ezekiel was to pack up his Houſhold-Goods, and remove, to ſignify their being carry'd away into Captivity, Ezek. xii. 3. and, in like Manner, here Agabus uſes a Sign. He takes St Paul's Girdle, and binds his own Hands and Feet with it, thereby denoting, that the Jews at Jeruſalem would ſo bind the Apoſtle, and deliver him to the Gentiles, firſt to the Roman Governor of Judea, and afterwards to Nero, the Roman Emperor. Calmet's Commentary, and Burkitt's Annotations.

[‖] The better to underſtand this, we muſt obſerve, that, among the Jews, it was accounted a Kind of meritorious Action to contribute to the Expence of the Sacrifices and Offerings, which thoſe who had taken upon them a

THESE Oblations were to be continu'd for ſeven Days, which were now almoſt ended, when certain Jews from Aſia, who had there been Oppoſers of St Paul, finding him in the Temple, began to raiſe an Uproar, and laying hold on him, called out to the reſt for Help, becauſe this is the Fellow, ſaid they, who, in all Places, vents Doctrines, injurious to the Prerogative of the Jewiſh Nation, deſtructive to the Inſtitutions of the Law, and abhorrent to the Sacredneſs of this Place, which, by his bringing uncircumciſed Greeks into it, he has groſly profaned. (This they affirm'd, becauſe they had ſeen Trophimus [*] in the City with him) and hereupon they ſeiz'd him, dragg'd him out of the Temple, ſhut the Gates upon him, and would certainly have killed him, had not Claudius Lyſias, Commander of the Roman Garriſon in the Caſtle of Antonia [†], come with a conſiderable Force to his Reſcue and Deliverance. As he was going into the Caſtle, Paul, addreſſing himſelf to the Governor [‖] in Greek, deſir'd the Liberty to ſpeak to him; but the Governor, ſuppoſing him to be the Egyptian [§], who, not many Years before, Vow of Nazaritiſm, were to make, when the Time of their Vow came to be accompliſh'd. Thus Joſephus, to magnify the Zeal and Devotion of Herod Agrippa, King of the Jews, tells us, that he cauſed ſeveral Nazarites to be ſhaved, whereby he means, that he bore the Expence of the whole Ceremony; and Maimonides informs us, that he, who would partake of the Merits of another's Nazaritiſm, went to the Temple, and ſaid to the Prieſt, “ ſuch an “ one will finiſh his Vow, and I intend to defray the Charge of his Tonſure, either in Part, or in the Whole;” and, whoever did ſo, was reputed to partake in the Merits of him, who had fulfilled his Vow. Calmet's Commentary, and Dictionary.

[*] This Trophimus was a Diſciple of St Paul, a Gentile by Religion, and an Epheſian by Birth. After his Converſion, he accompany'd our Apoſtle wherever he went, and, very probably, follow'd him to Rome, and forſook him not in his Bonds. After that St Paul obtain'd his Liberty, ſome pretend, that he went into Spain, and paſſing through the Country of the Gauls, left Trophimus there in the Capacity of their Biſhop. But it is not a little difficult to reconcile this with what the Apoſtle writes to Timothy, viz. that he had left Trophimus ſick at Miletus, 2 Tim. iv. 20. unleſs we can ſuppoſe, that he return'd into Aſia again, about a Year after that St Paul had left him at Arles, and (as the Greeks will have it) accompanying him to Rome again, at the ſame Time that the Apoſtle ſuffer'd, had his Head likewiſe ſtruck off by Nero's Command. Calmet's Commentary, and Dictionary.

[†] This was a Tower, or Fortreſs, where the Romans kept a conſtant Garriſon at Jeruſalem. It was originally built by the Aſmonæan Princes, who called it Baris; but Herod the Great, having repair'd it, chang'd its Name in Honour of his Friend M. Anthony. It was ſituated towards the weſt Angle of the Temple, upon an Eminence cut ſteep on all Sides, and encloſ'd with a Wall three hundred Cubits high. It was built in the Form of a large Square, having within the Magnificence of a Palace, and the Conveniencies of a City; and without ſeveral Fortifications, and a Tower at each Corner to ſtrengthen and defend it. So that, conſidering its Form and Situation, we may be allow'd to ſay, that it was a Citadel to the Temple, even as the Temple was, in ſome Sort, a Citadel to the Town. Calmet's Dictionary, and Fleury's Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory.

[‖] That Lyſias was no Roman is plain from his telling St Paul, that with a great Sum he had purchaſed his Freedom, Acts xxii. 28. but that he was a Greek, we may, in ſome Meaſure, learn from the common Analogy of his Name; and therefore it was no bad Policy in our Apoſtle to addreſs the Governor in his own Language; and the Governor might be the rather pleas'd with it, becauſe that, by this Means, he might have an Opportunity of knowing from St Paul himſelf the Cauſe of the preſent Tumult. Calmet's Commentary.

[§] “ While Felix was Procurator of Judea, there came a certain Perſon (ſays Joſephus) out of Egypt to Jeruſalem, “ ſetting up for a Prophet, and perſuading the People to follow him to the Top of Mount Olivet, ſome five “ Furlongs from the City; for, when he came thither, (he told them) he would but ſpeak the Word, and immediately “ they ſhould ſee the Walls of Jeruſalem fall flat to the Ground, and make way for them to enter the City. But “ when Felix came to hear of this Adventure, he fell upon them with his Horſe and Foot, killed four Hundred upon “ the before, had rais'd a Sedition in Judea, and headed a party of four Thouſand profligate Wretches, ſeem'd to refuſe him that Favour, until the Apoſtle informing him, that he was a Jew of Tarſus, a Freeman of a rich and honourable City, and therefore humbly hop'd, that he would not deny him the Privilege of vindicating himſelf, the Governor conſented; and the Apoſtle, ſtanding upon the Stairs, and making Signs for Silence, began his Speech * in the Hebrew Language, which when the People heard, they were a little pacify'd, and ſtood attentive to him, while he gave them a particular Account of his Birth and Education; of his extraordinary Zeal for the Rites and Cuſtoms of their Religion; of his violent Perſecution of the Chriſtians in all Parts, whereof the Sanhedrim could bear him witneſs; of the miraculous Manner of his Converſion; and of the Commiſſion, which he immediately receiv'd from God to preach Salvation to the Gentiles. Thus far the People heard him with Patience; but, when he proceeded to defend his Practice in preaching to the Gentiles, they could contain themſelves no longer, but unanimouſly cry'd out to have the Villain put to Death; and the more to expreſs their Indignation, threw off their Clothes, and caſt Duſt into the Air, as if they had intended that Moment to ſtone him. But Lyſias, to avoid farther Tumult, order'd him to be carry'd into the Caſtle, and to be examin'd by Scourging †, until he confeſs'd, what Acts xxii. 1.

" the Spot, took two hundred, and put the Egyptian, to Flight," 'Tis to this Story, no doubt, that Lyſias alludes; and therefore it ſeems to be a Miſtake in Grotius, and others, to ſay, that the Egyptian, mention'd by Joſephus, was later than theſe Times; for it is apparent from Joſephus himſelf, both in his Antiquities, lib. xx. and his Hiſtory of the Jewiſh Wars, lib. ii. that this Egyptian march'd his Rabble up to Jeruſalem, in the firſt, or ſecond Year of Nero; whereas, it was not till the fourth of Nero, that St Paul made this his laſt Journey to Jeruſalem. Hammond's, and Whitby's Annotations.

* To give ſome Account of the Apoſtle's Conduct in this Particular, we muſt obſerve, that there were two Sorts of Jews at this Time, ſome, who us'd no other Language, in their common Diſcourſe, nor allow'd of any Bible in their religious Aſſemblies, but the Hebrew, and theſe St Chryſoſtom calls, οἱ βαθεῖς Ἑβραῖοι, profound Hebrews; others that ſpake Greek, and us'd the Greek Tranſlation of the Bible in their Places of Worſhip, and theſe were ſtiled Helleniſts. Of this latter Sort was St Paul, becauſe, as we may obſerve in his Writings, he always makes uſe of the Greek Tranſlation of the Old Teſtament, ſo that, in this Reſpect, he might not be ſo acceptable to the other Sort. Thoſe of them, who were converted to Chriſtianity, had great Prejudices againſt him, Acts xxi. 21. which is ſaid to be the Reaſon, why he concealed his Name in the Epiſtle written to the Hebrews: And as for thoſe, who were not converted, they could not ſo much as endure him; and this is the Reaſon, which St Chryſoſtom gives, why he preach'd to the Helleniſts only, Acts ix. 28. That therefore he might avert the great Diſpleaſure, which the Jews had conceiv'd againſt him, he here ſpeaks to them in the Language, which they beſt knew, and moſt eſteem'd, and they, by his Compliance in this Reſpect, were ſo far pacify'd, as to give him Audience. For they were well enough pleas'd to hear him diſcourſe of Matters relating to Religion, and eſpecially of the Vocation of the Gentiles, in a Language which the Romans did not underſtand; whereas, had he, in the Courſe of his Apology, expos'd the Contempt and Hatred, which the Jews entertain'd of all Heathens, in a Language, which the chief Captain, and his Men were acquainted with, and in ſuch a Light, as his known Eloquence would have enabled him to do; it is not to be imagin'd, what Terror, or Confuſion at leaſt, he would have brought upon his Enemies. So that, it was a Point of Charity, as well as Prudence in him, to ſpeak to them in Hebrew, that thereby he might both ſcreen them from the Reſentment of the Soldiery, and cure them, if poſſible, of their falſe Prejudices againſt them. Hammond's Annotations, and Calmet's Commentary.

† As Lyſias did not underſtand Hebrew, he could not tell what the Purport of St Paul's Speech to the People was; but, by their mad and outrageous Behaviour, he gueſs'd, that he muſt have ſaid ſomething very provoking, either againſt the Authority of their Law, or the Dignity of their Nation, and therefore he was willing to know the Truth of it from himſelf. Scourging was a Method of Examination us'd by the Romans, and other Nations, to force ſuch, as were ſuppos'd guilty, to confeſs what they had done, what were their Motives, and who were acceſſary to the Fact. Thus Tacitus tells us of Herrenius Gallus, that he receiv'd ſeveral Stripes, that it might be known for what Price, and with what Confederates, he had betray'd the Roman Army. It is to be obſerv'd however, that the Romans were puniſh'd in this wiſe, not by Whips and Scourges, but by Rods only, and therefore it is, that Cicero (in his Oration pro Rabirio) ſpeaking againſt Labienus, tells his Audience, that the Porcian Law permitted a Roman to be whipp'd with Rods, but he, like a good and merciful Man, (ſpeaking ironically) had done it with Scourges: And, what is farther obſervable, neither by Whips, or Rods, could a Citizen of Rome be puniſh'd, unleſs he were firſt adjudg'd to loſe his Privilege, to be uncitizen'd, and declar'd an Enemy to the Common-Wealth, and then he might be either ſcourg'd, or put to Death: For the From of diſfranchizing him was this, ———

WHILE the Lictor was binding him in order to his Puniſhment, Paul aſk'd the Centurion that ſtood by, whether the Roman Laws permitted them to treat in this Manner a Citizen, even before any Sentence was paſſed upon him? Which when the Centurion heard, without making any Reply, he went directly to the Governor, and adviſ'd him to act cautiouſly in this Affair, becauſe the Priſoner, as he underſtood, was a Roman Citizen; and a Citizen indeed he was by Birth-Right [†], whereas the Governor himſelf was ſuch only by Purchaſe [*]. This made him wave all farther Thoughts of ſcourging him, as being not a little afraid, that he had already done more, than he could anſwer; but being deſirous to know the Bottom of the Matter, the next Day he conven'd the Sanhedrim, and brought down Paul, and ſet him before them.

THE Sight of ſo awful an Aſſembly ſtruck no Terror into the Apoſtle, who began his Apology, with an open Declaration of the Integrity, and good Intentions of his Heart: Men, and Brethren, I have liv'd in all good Conſcience [‖] before God, until this Day. This aſſerting of his Innocency, Ananias [§], the High-Prieſt, look'd upon as a Kind of Reflection upon the Juſtice of their Tribunal, and therefore order'd the Officers, that ſtood near him, to ſtrike him on the Face; an Indignity this, which the Apoſtle reſented with Severity of Language [‡]; but when the Standers-by

[†] In what Manner St Paul obtain'd this Privilege, the Learned are not agreed; but it ſeems to make fair for the Opinion of thoſe, who think, that the People of Tarſus had it beſtow'd on them by the Favour of ſome Emperor, that Dion Caſſius, lib. xlvii. reports, that they ſided ſo far with Julius Cæſar in the Civil War, and afterwards with Octavius, that their City obtain'd the Name of Juliopolis, and was honour'd with the greateſt Privileges; which makes Cathuſianus, and the Gloſs upon 2 Tim. iv. 12. ſay more fully, that the Inhabitants receiv'd this Freedom, becauſe they met the Roman Embaſſadors with Peace and Crowns, and that then Paul's Father, going out with them, receiv'd the Penula, or Cloak, as a Mark and Enſign of a Roman Citizen, 2 Tim. iv. 13. Whitby's Annotations.

[*] Photius, in one of his Letters, tells us, about what Time it was, that the Privileges of a Roman Citizen came to be enjoy'd, not only by thoſe, who were Natives of the Place, but by as many, as, either by Favour, or Money, were made Partakers of that Appellation; and ſeveral Hiſtorians have obſerv'd, that under the firſt Emperors, it was highly valu'd, and coſt dear, but that, in the Reign of Claudius, it came to be diſeſteem'd, and purchas'd at a very low Rate. Hammond's and Beauſobre's Annotations, and Calmet's Commentary.

[‖] The Apoſtle, by a good Conſcience, does not mean here a Conſcience void of all Error and Offence; for he owns himſelf to have been guilty of a great Sin in perſecuting the Church of Chriſt, 1 Tim. i. 13. but ſuch a Conſcience, as acted according to his Perſuaſion that he ought ſo to act; in which Senſe he ſays, that when he blaſphem'd againſt Chriſt, and perſecuted his Church, he did it out of a Belief, that he ought to do many Things contrary to the Name of Jeſus, Acts xxvi. 9. ſo that the Senſe of the Apoſtle is,——— "While I was perſuaded, that the Chriſtian Religion "was falſe, I perſecuted it with the utmoſt Vigour; but as ſoon as I came to perceive its Divine Inſtitution, I de-"clar'd for it, and have, ever ſince, maintain'd it, even to the Hazard of my Life. The Religion of the Jews I did "not forſake out of any Hardſhips, that it requir'd, or any Prejudice, I had conceiv'd againſt its Precepts; nor did "I embrace that of the Chriſtians upon any other Account, than a full Conviction of its Truth and Veracity. I "was a good Jew, in ſhort, as long as I thought it my Duty to be ſo; and, when I thought it my Duty to be other-"wiſe, I became a zealous Chriſtian; in all which God knows the Sincerity of my Heart, and is Witneſs of my Up-"rightneſs." Whitby's Annotations, and Calmet's Commentary.

'Tis evident, from the Account of Joſephus himſelf, that Ananias, at this Time, was not the High-Prieſt, and yet he ſtill retain'd the Titles and Honours belonging to it, even as Annas did in the Time of Caiaphas. Joſeph. Antiq. lib. xx. c. 5. and Fleury's Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory.

[‡] The Apoſtle's Words are theſe——— God ſhall ſmite thee, thou whited Wall. A whited Wall was a proverbial Expreſſion, denoting an Hypocrite of any Kind, and the Propriety of it appears in this:———That, as the Wall had Standers-by accus'd him with calumniating the High-Prieſt, he excus'd himſelf, by ſaying, that he did not know, or could not well believe, that a Perſon who had given ſuch unjuſt Orders, could be inveſted with ſo ſacred a Character. Perceiving however, that the Council conſiſted partly of Sadducees, and partly of Phariſees, to elude the Malice of his Enemies, he made open Declaration, that he was a Phariſee, even as his Father was before him, and that the great Offence taken againſt him was his Belief of a future Reſurrection; which ſo divided the Council, that, however the Sadducees, who were violent Oppoſers of this Article, were bent againſt him, the Phariſees, who were zealous Maintainers of it, were for acquitting him: So that the Diſſention among them grew ſo high, that the Governor fearing leſt Paul ſhould be torn in Pieces among them, commanded the Soldiers to take him from the Bar, and to return him back to the Caſtle, where to comfort him after all his Frights and Fears, God was pleas'd to appear to him that Night in a Viſion, encouraging him to Conſtancy and Reſolution, and aſſuring him, that, as he had borne Teſtimony to his Cauſe at Jeruſalem, ſo, in Deſpite of all his Enemies, he ſhould live to do the ſame Thing at Rome.

THE next Morning, above forty Jews enter'd into a wicked Confederacy, which they ratify'd with an Imprecation, never to eat or drink, until they had killed Paul; and having acquainted the Sanhedrim with their Deſign, they thought it adviſable, that ſome of their Body ſhould ſollicit the Governor to bring him down before them, under Pretence of enquiring more accurately into his Caſe, and that then, before he reach'd the Court, they would not fail to way-lay, and diſpatch him. This Conſpiracy however was diſcover'd to St Paul by a Nephew of his, and by him imparted to Lyſias, who immediately commanded two Parties of Foot, and one of Horſe, to be ready by nine o'Clock that Night, in order to conduct Paul firſt to Antipatris *, and thence to Cæſarea, where Felix †, the Governor of the Province, had his Reſidence.

had a fair Outſide, but nothing but Dirt, or Sticks and Stones within, ſo the High-Prieſt had the outward Appearance of a righteous Judge, ſitting as one, that would paſs Judgment according to Law, and yet commanding him to be puniſh'd for ſpeaking the Truth, and ſo condemning the Innocent, againſt the Law of Nature, as well as that of Moſes, Lev. xix. 15. Our Bleſſed Saviour makes uſe of a Compariſon much of the ſame Nature, when he calls the Scribes and Phariſees whited Sepulchres, which appear beautiful outward, but are within full of dead Mens Bones, and of all Uncleanneſs, Matth. xxiii. 27. and we need but look into the Hiſtory of the antient Prophets, and there obſerve, with what an Air of Authority Elijah and Eliſha ſpeak to the Kings of Iſrael, and with what Boldneſs Iſaiah, Jeremiah, and Ezekiel, reproach the Prieſts, the Princes, and the People of Judah, with their Tranſgreſſions, to juſtify our Apoſtle, in taking the ſame Freedom with this proud Pontiff, who bely'd his Character by his unjuſt Proceedings. It is to be obſerv'd however, in further Vindication of St Paul, that theſe Words of his, God ſhall ſmite thee, are a Prediction, and not an Imprecation; and a Prediction, which (according to Joſephus) was fulfilled in a ſhort Time: For, when (in the Government of Florus) his Son Eleazar ſet himſelf at the Head of a Party of Mutineers, who, having made themſelves Maſters of the Temple, would permit no Sacrifices to be offer'd for the Emperor, and, being join'd by a Company of Aſſaſſins, compelled Perſons of the beſt Quality, to fly for their Safety into Sinks, and Vaults, Ananias, and his Brother Hezekias, were both drawn out of one of theſe Places, and murder'd; tho' Dr Lightfoot will have it, that he periſh'd at the Siege of Jeruſalem. Calmet's Commentary. Whitby's Annotations, and Joſeph de Bello Jud. lib ii. c. 17, 18.

* This Place, which was formerly called Capharſalama, 1 Maccab. vii. 31. ſtood upon the Sea-Coaſt, between Joppa, and Cæſarea Paleſtinæ, but was of little or no Repute, until it was rebuilt, or at leaſt repair'd and beautify'd by Herod the Great, who, in Honour of his Father Antipater, chang'd its Name. Whitby's Alphabetical Table, and Wells's Geography of the New Teſtament.

† Claudius Felix, who, in Tacitus, is likewiſe called Antonius, becauſe he was a Slave both to the Emperor Claudius, and his Mother Antonia, was the Brother of Pallas, the Freed Man, and firſt Favourite of the Emperor, by whoſe Intereſt he obtain'd the Government of Judea; but, in the Adminiſtration of it, practis'd all Manner of Violence, Avarice, and Luſt. The above-cited Hiſtorian tells us of him, that he made his Will the Law of his Government, and ruled the Province with all the Authority of a King, and the Inſolence of a Free-Slave, whom neither Shame nor Fear could reſtrain. He ſtuck at no Manner of Cruelty or Injuſtice, having caus'd Jonathan, the High-Prieſt, to be aſſaſſinated, merely becauſe he ſometimes reminded him of his Male-Adminiſtration; and to gratify his Debauchery, he ſcrupled not to violate all Laws, both human and divine. For, being in love with Druſilla, who was marry'd to Azizus, King of the Emiſenes, by the Help of Simon the Magician, a Jew of Cyprus, he took her Reſidence. Lyſias, at the ſame Time, ſent a Letter to the Governor, ſignifying, "That the Perſon, whom he had ſent, was a Freeman of Rome; that the Jews had evil-treated him, and conſpir'd againſt his Life; that he had taken that Method to ſecure him againſt their Violence; and had order'd his Enemies to appear before him at Cæſarea, to manage their Charge and Accuſation." This Letter the Governor receiv'd with great Civility, and, finding that Paul belong'd to the Province of Cilicia, promis'd him a fair Hearing, as ſoon as his Accuſers ſhould come down, and, in the mean Time, order'd him to be ſecur'd in a Place called Herod's Judgment-Hall ‖.

Acts xxiv. 1.

ABOUT five Days after this, Ananias the High-Prieſt, with others of the Sanhedrim, came down to Cæſarea, and brought with them an Advocate, nam'd Tertullus *, who, in a Speech, ſet off with all the inſinuating Arts of Eloquence, to prepoſſeſs the Governor † in their Favour, accus'd St Paul "of being a ſeditious Perſon, and a Diſturber of the publick Peace; who had ſet himſelf at the Head of the Sect of the Nazarenes ‖, and made no Manner of Scruple even to prophane even the Temple itſelf." But, to the ſeveral Parts of this Accuſation, the Apoſtle (when permitted by Felix to make his Defence) anſwer'd diſtinctly. The Charge of Sedition he utterly deny'd, and challeng'd them to prove, that they had ever found him, ſo much as diſputing in the Temple, or ſtirring up the People in the Synagogues, or any other Place of the City. The Charge of what they called Hereſy he readily admitted; but, then he affirm'd, that, long before him, this was the Way, in which all the Patriarchs of the Jewiſh Nation worſhipp'd her from her Huſband's Bed; and, in Defiance of all Law and Right, kept her for his own Wife. In ſhort, his Government was ſo grievous to the Jews, that they procur'd his Re-call, A. D. 60. And, as ſeveral of them went to Rome after him, to complain of his Extortions, and other Acts of Violence, he had undoubtedly been executed, had not his Brother's Credit preſerv'd him. Calmet's Commentary, Beauſobre's Annotations, and Joſeph. Antiq. lib. xx. c. 5, 6.

‖ The Word Πραιτώριον, which we render Judgment-Hall, is properly of Latin Extract, and ſignifies the Houſe, where the chief Roman Governor liv'd; and this, in Cæſarea, is called Herod's Prætorium, becauſe it was a magnificent Palace, which Herod the Great had built for his own Habitation, whenever he ſhould go to Cæſarea, but which, in After-Times, the Roman Governors made uſe of for the Place of their Abode, as well as a Place of Confinement for ſome particular Priſoners. Calmet's Commentary.

* It ſeems very likely, that this Tertullus, whoſe Name is properly Latin, was a Roman Orator, or Advocate, whom the Jewiſh Rulers employ'd in this Cauſe againſt Paul, as being a Perſon better vers'd in the Roman Language, and Formalities of Roman Courts, than they were. Beauſobre's Annotations.

† In this Preamble, which Tertullus makes to Felix, there is a great deal of groſs Flattery, mixt with ſome Truth: For, tho' it be true, that Felix did ſome Kindneſs to the Jewiſh Nation, in delivering them from the Thieves and Magicians, that infeſted them; in deſtroying Eleazar, in particular, who was at the Head of one of theſe Bands of Robbers, and in defeating the Egyptian Impoſtor, who drew ſo many Thouſands of poor People after him; yet, had the Orator been minded to have told the whole Truth, he might have accus'd him of numberleſs Injuries done the Province, ſince no Governor was ever known to exerciſe his Authority with more Injuſtice and Cruelty, than he; but this was not the Buſineſs of one, who, in the Beginning of his Speech, was to inſinuate himſelf into his Favour. Whitby's and Beauſobre's Annotations, and Calmet's Commentary.

‖ This is the only Place of Scripture, wherein Chriſtians are called Nazarenes, tho' the Author and Founder of their Religion is frequently ſo called from Nazareth, a City of Galilee, the Place of his Nativity, (as ſome ſuppos'd) becauſe it was that of his uſual Abode. At the firſt Appearance of the Goſpel, Chriſtians were generally look'd upon as a particular Sect of the Jews, even as the Phariſees and Sadducees were. The Heathens almoſt always confounded them with the Jews, nor was the Diſtinction properly made, till after the Deſtruction of the Jewiſh Temples, and the large Increaſe of Pagan Converts: But as the Word αἵρεσις, or Sect, bears often an indifferent Senſe, both in the Holy Scriptures, and in antient Jewiſh Writers, we might poſſibly ſuppoſe it ſo here, did not Juſtin Martyr (cont. Tryp. p. 234.) inform us, that the Jews very early ſent their Emiſſaries to all Nations againſt the Chriſtians, repreſenting them as αἵρεσις ἄθεος, ϗ ἄνομος, an Atheiſtical, and wicked Hereſy; and therefore we have Reaſon to believe, that, in this Senſe, they accus'd St Paul, as being a Ring-Leader of the Sect of the Nazarenes. Calmet's Commentary, and Whitby's Annotations.

ſhipp'd God, firmly believing another Life, and a future Reſurrection; and, as to the Charge of prophaning the Temple, he allow'd indeed, that ſeveral Times ſince his coming to Jeruſalem, he had been there, but then, it was without any Multitude, and only to purify himſelf according to the Moſaic Law. Felix gave both Sides the Hearing, but refus'd to make any final Determination, until Lyſias himſelf came down, of whom he might be more fully inform'd in the Controverſy; but, in the mean Time, he commanded, that, tho' Paul ſhould be kept under a Guard, yet his Cuſtody ſhould be ſo free and eaſy, that none of his Friends ſhould be hinder'd from viſiting, or doing him any Office of Kindneſs.

Acts xxiv. 24.

A FEW Days after this, when his Wife Druſilla * (who had been a Jeweſs) was come to Cæſarea, Felix being minded to have her hear Paul, order'd him to be brought before them, and gave him Leave to ſpeak freely concerning the Doctrines of Chriſtianity. In his Diſcourſe he took occaſion particularly to inſiſt upon the great Obligation, which the Laws of Chriſt lay upon Men to Juſtice and Righteouſneſs towards one another, and to Sobriety and Chaſtity both towards themſelves and others, from this Conſideration more eſpecially, viz. the ſtrict and impartial Account that muſt be given, in the Day of Judgment, of all the Actions of their paſt Lives, to be either eternally puniſh'd, or rewarded for them. Subjects, that were wiſely adapted to the Governor's Condition and Circumſtances, and what ſtung his Conſcience ſo feelingly, that he could not forbear trembling, which made him break off the Apoſtle's Diſcourſe with a Go thy Way for this Time, when I have a convenient Seaſon, I will call for thee.

Defends himſelf before Feſtus, and appeals unto Cæſar.

Acts xxv. 1.

WHEN Portius Feſtus * ſucceeded to the Government of Judea, he found Paul ſtill in Priſon, left there by his Predeceſſor to gratify the Jews †. Upon his firſt coming to Jeruſalem, the High-Prieſt, and other Members of the Sanhedrim, exhibited freſh Accuſations againſt him, and, in order to his Trial, deſir'd that he might be ſent for up to Jeruſalem, meaning to aſſaſſinate ‖ him by the Way; but Feſtus, unwilling to grant their Requeſt, order'd them to come down to Cæſarea, where he himſelf would ſhortly be, and then he would not fail to do them Juſtice. The Jews, accordingly, went down, and, when Feſtus was ſeated on the Tribunal, they renew'd their Charge, and produc'd their Articles againſt him, which differ'd not much from what they had accus'd him of before Felix: But Paul defended himſelf ſo well, by making it appear, that he had neither offended againſt the Jewiſh Laws, nor againſt the Temple, nor againſt the Emperor, that their Charge ſoon fell to the Ground for want of ſufficient Proof. Feſtus however, being willing to oblige the Jews at his firſt coming to the Government, propos'd to the Apoſtle his going up to Jeruſalem, there to be judg'd of the Matters, that were alledg'd againſt him; but he, knowing full well the Malice of his Enemies, and being unwilling to truſt himſelf in their Power, boldly declar'd, "That, as he then ſtood at the Emperor's Judgment-Seat, where he ought to have a final Trial, if he had done any Thing worthy of Death, he did not at all decline it; but that, as he had injur'd none of the Jews, and they could prove nothing criminal againſt him, he ought not to be made a Victim to their Fury; and therefore, as he was a Roman, he appealed[†] to the Emperor himſelf." Whereupon Feſtus, being not a little ſtartled, firſt conferr'd with his own Council[*], and then, with ſome ſeeming Emotion, told the Apoſtle, that ſince he had appealed unto Cæſar, unto Cæſar he ſhould go.

* This Druſilla was the Daughter of that Agrippa, who put St James to Death, and impriſon'd St Peter, and was himſelf miraculouſly ſmitten, in the Midſt of his Oration at Cæſarea, whereof we have given a full Account before. This Daughter of his paſs'd for one of the greateſt Beauties of her Age, but was far from being remarkable either for her Piety, or Chaſtity. At firſt ſhe was promis'd in Marriage to Epiphanes, the Son of Antiochus, King of Comagene, upon Condition that he would ſubmit to be circumciſed; but, when he refus'd to comply with that, the Match broke off, and ſhe afterwards was marry'd to Azizus, (as we ſaid before) who accepted of the Condition. When ſhe left him, and took it in her Head to live with Felix, who was a Gentile, ſhe forſook her own, and conform'd to his Religion, according to the Teſtimony of Joſephus, Antiq. lib. xx. c. 5. and therefore, when St Luke calls her a Jeweſs, he muſt be underſtood thereby to denote her Birth and Parentage, rather than the Form and Profeſſion of her Religion. Calmet's Commentary.

* When Feſtus came into Judea, (which was in the ſixth, or ſeventh Year of Nero) he found all in Deſolation and Diſtreſs; the Country laid waſte; the People forc'd from their Habitations; their Houſes expos'd to Fire and Pillage; and all at the Mercy of a brutal Rout of Vagabond Free-booters, who, in great Numbers, ravag'd up and down at Pleaſure. In theſe Days there was a famous Impoſtor likewiſe, with a Train of credulous Rabble at his Heels, whom he had deluded into an Opinion, that if they did but follow him into ſuch a Wilderneſs, no Harm ſhould ever befal them. Both theſe Sorts of People the Governor endeavour'd to ſuppreſs, and the latter he did effectually; but had not Time to accompliſh the other, becauſe, in the Space of two Years, he dy'd, and was ſucceeded in the Province by Albinus. Joſeph. Antiq. lib. xx. c. 7, 8.

† He had ſorely exaſperated them by his unjuſt and violent Proceedings, while he continu'd in the Government, and therefore, upon his Diſmiſſion, he thought to have pacify'd them, in ſome Meaſure, by leaving Paul (whom he might have diſcharg'd long before) ſtill in Cuſtody, and ſtill liable to become a Prey to their greedy Malice: But herein he found himſelf ſadly miſtaken; for, no ſooner was his Diſgrace at Court known, than ſeveral of the principal Jews of Cæſarea took a Journey to Rome on Purpoſe to accuſe him, and (as we ſaid before) would certainly have wrought his Ruin, had not his Brother Pallas (who was now in equal Favour with Nero, as formerly he had been with Claudius) interceeded for his Pardon. Joſeph. Antiq. lib. xx. c. 7.

‖ Which might eaſily be done by any of the Bands of Robbers and Aſſaſſins, (thoſe Perſons, whom Joſephus calls Sicarii, from Sica, or the ſhort Sword they wore, ſomething betwixt the Perſian Scymitar, and the Roman Faulchion) which, at that Time, infeſted the whole Province, and would have done it for a ſmall Sum of Money, without any Suſpicion upon the true Authors of his Murder. Calmet's Commentary.

He defends himſelf and the Chriſtian Cauſe bravely before Feſtus, and King Agrippa.

[†] This Way of appealing was frequent among the Romans, introduc'd to defend and ſecure the Lives and Fortunes of the Populace, from the unjuſt Incroachments and over-rigorous Severities of the Magiſtrates; whereby it was lawful, in Caſes of Oppreſſion, to appeal from them for Redreſs and Reſcue; a Thing, more than once ſettled by the Sanction of the Valerian Laws. Theſe Appeals were generally made in Writing by appellatory Libels given into the Court, and containing an Account of the Appellant, the Perſon againſt whom, and from whoſe Sentence, he did appeal; But where the Caſe was done in open Court, it was enough for the Criminal verbally to declare that did appeal. In great and weighty Caſes, the Appeal was made to the Prince himſelf; whereupon not only at Rome, but in all the Provinces of the Empire, every Pro-Conſul, and Governor was ſtrictly forbidden to execute, ſcourge, bind, or put any Badge of Servility upon a Citizen, or any that had the Privilege of a Citizen, who had made his Appeal; or any Ways to hinder him from going to Rome to obtain Juſtice at the Hands of the Emperor, who had as much Regard to the Liberty of his Subjects (ſays the Law itſelf) as they could have for their Good-Will, and Obedience to him. And this was exactly St Paul's Caſe; who, knowing that he ſhould have no fair and equitable Dealing at the Hands of the Governor, when once he came to be ſway'd by the Jews, his ſworn and inveterate Enemies, appealed from him to the Emperor, which was a Privilege, ſo often, ſo plainly ſettled by the Roman Laws, that Feſtus durſt not deny his Demand. Cave's Lives of the Apoſtles.

[*] Some Annotators are of Opinion, that the Perſons, with whom the Governor adviſ'd upon this Occaſion, were Part of the Sanhedrim, who were come to Cæſarea to proſecute Paul; but we can ſcarce think, that any of this Body of Men would have counſelled him to admit of St Paul's Appeal, or to ſend him to Cæſar out of their Reach; and therefore we ſuppoſe, that, as theſe Governors of Provinces were not always great Lawyers, though they might ſometimes have very nice Controverſies come before them, they were uſually provided with Men of ſufficient Abilities in the Roman Laws, who, ſitting behind a Veil, or Curtain, drawn between them, and the Governor's Tribunal, were ready, in all difficult Caſes, to aſſiſt him with their Advice. Whitby's Annotations, and Calmet's Commentary.

[†] This Prince, who was the Son of Agrippa, ſirnam'd Herod, of whom we read ſo much in the xiith Chapter of the Acts, was at Rome with the Emperor Claudius, when he dy'd. The Emperor was inclin'd to have given him all the Dominions which his Father poſſeſs'd; but thoſe, who were about him, diſſuaded him from it, ſo that, ſending Cuſpius Fadus as Procurator to Judea, he kept Agrippa ſtill at Court, until he was in a Condition to reign. When Herod, King of Chalcis, his Uncle by his Father's Side, dy'd, he gave him his Dominions, but, ſoon after, tranſlated him to a larger Kingdom; for he beſtow'd on him, not only all the Territories formerly belonging to Philip the Tetrarch, but added likewiſe the Country of Abilene, which belong'd to Lyſanias. After the Death of Claudius, his Succeſſor Nero, who had a great Affection for Agrippa, to his other Dominions added Julius in Perea, and that Part of Galilee, to which Tarichæa and Tiberias belong'd. When the War broke out between the Jews and Romans, this Prince was conſtrain'd to join his Troops with thoſe of Rome, to reduce his Countrymen, and aſſiſt in the Taking of Jeruſalem. After the Deſtruction of that City, he retir'd to Rome with his Siſter Berenice, with whom he had always liv'd in an indiſcreet Manner, and there dy'd, at about ſeventy Years of Age. Calmet's Commentary, and Dictionary, Echard's and Fleury's Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtories.

[‖] She was at firſt marry'd to Herod, King of Chalcis, her own Uncle by her Father's Side, but after his Death, ſhe betook herſelf to her Brother, and with him continu'd for ſome conſiderable Time, till, at length, being cenſur'd,

Train, came to Cæſarea, to make a Viſit and Compliment to the new Governor; who, upon ſome Occaſion or other, took an Opportunity to entertain them with Paul's Caſe; telling them, "That Felix, "upon his parting with the Government, "had left a certain Priſoner, againſt whom "ſome of the chief of the Jews had "brought an Information, and immediately demanded Judgment, which, "according to the Roman Law †, could "not be done without firſt hearing the "Cauſe, and bringing the Parties Face to "Face; that to this Purpoſe, he had "order'd his Accuſers to come to Cæſarea, "but, upon the Reſult, found, that the Diſpute between them was about Matters "of their own Superſtition ‡, and whether a perſon (whom they call Jeſus) "was really dead or alive; that, being "himſelf unacquainted with ſuch Kind of "Controverſies, he had referr'd the Priſoner to the Jewiſh Sanhedrim, but "that he, declining their Judgment, had "appealed to Cæſar; and that therefore "he kept him ſtill in Priſon, until he "could meet with a convenient Opportunity to ſend him to Rome."

THIS Account excited the Curioſity of Agrippa, who was very deſirous to ſee, and hear the Priſoner; and, accordingly, the King, and his Siſter, accompany'd with Feſtus, and other Perſons of Quality, came into the Court, with a pompous and magnificent Retinue, aod, when Paul was brought forth before them, Feſtus acquainted the King, and the whole Aſſembly, "how much he had been ſollicited by the Jews, both at Cæſarea and "Jeruſalem, concerning the Priſoner at "the Bar, that, as a notorious Malefactor, he might be put to Death; but "that, having found him guilty of no "capital Crime, and the Priſoner himſelf "having appealed to Cæſar, he was determin'd to ſend him to Rome; that he "was willing however to have his Cauſe "again diſcuſs'd before ſo judicious a Perſon as Agrippa, that he might be furniſh'd with ſome material Inſtructions "to ſend along with him, ſince it ſeem'd "abſurd to him to ſend a Priſoner to "the Emperor, without ſignifying his "Crimes." When Feſtus had ended, and Agrippa had ſignify'd to St Paul, that he had Liberty to anſwer for himſelf; after Silence was made, he addreſs'd himſelf chiefly to Agrippa, and thus began his Speech.

as having an inceſtuous Familiarity with him, in order to juſtify himſelf, and wipe off the Diſgrace, ſhe thought proper to be marry'd again to Polemon, King of Cilicia, who, for the Sake of her Riches, was perſuaded to be circumcis'd, that he might have her: But they did not live long together, and, when ſhe left her Huſband, ſhe return'd to her Brother, with whom ſhe behav'd in ſuch a Manner, as made all the World, as well as the Satyriſt, take Notice of her.

† Of this Law and Cuſtom of the Romans, Philo Judæus, ſpeaking of their Prefects, gives us this Account: ——They yielded themſelves to be common Judges, hearing equally the Accuſers and Defendants, condemning no Man unheard, prejudging no Man, but judging without Favour or Enmity, according to the Nature of the Cauſe. Hammond's Annotations.

‡ The Word in the Original is Δεισιδαιμονία, i. e. a vain and groundleſs Fear of the Gods: For the pious Man (according to Varro) honours and fears God, but the ſuperſtitious Man dreads him, and is ſeiz'd with Terror before him; and to the ſame Purpoſe, Maximus Tyrius tells us, that a Man truly pious looks upon God as a Friend, full of Goodneſs; but the ſuperſtitious Man ſerves him with Sentiments of baſe and ſervile Flattery. Now, conſidering that Feſtus was addreſſing himſelf to Agrippa and Berenice, who were certainly Jews, one may be apt to think it a Breach of good Manners for him to call the Religion they profeſs'd, by no better a Name, than that of Superſtition; but then we muſt obſerve, that he is ſuppos'd to ſpeak here in the common Strain of Heathens, who generally look'd upon all Jewiſh Ceremonies as ſuperſtitious Uſages; and that he made it no Scruple to expreſs himſelf in this Manner, as, either accounting himſelf ſo much ſuperior to ſuch petty Princes, that, he thought, he might make free with them, or as judging, that themſelves would not be offended at his repreſenting the particular Points in Diſpute between St Paul and his Adverſaries, in ſuch a contemptuous Light. Calmet's Dictionary and Commentary.

upon me by the Jews, before a Perſon ſo exactly verſ'd in all the Rites and Cuſtoms, the Queſtions and Controverſies of the Jewiſh Law; for which Reaſon I intreat your Majeſty to hear me with Patience.

MY Manner of Life, from my Youth, which was among the Jews at Jeruſalem, they all know, and that I was brought up under the Inſtitution of the Phariſees [*], a Sect, the ſtricteſt of all others in the Jewiſh Religion. Accordingly, now I am accuſ'd for aſſerting the Reſurrection [‖] of the Dead, which is not only a Doctrine acknowledg'd by the Phariſees, but a fundamental Promiſe made by God of old, which the Generality of the Jews [‖] depend upon, and, in Hopes of which, they ſpend their Time in conſtant Piety, and Obedience to God: And yet for believing, and expecting this, O King, I am accuſ'd, and perſecuted by the Jews: But why ſhould it be thought an incredible Thing, that God, who is Omnipotent, ſhould raiſe the Dead? I confeſs indeed, that once I was of Opinion, that I was bound in Conſcience to perſecute this Profeſſion, and Doctrine of Chriſt; and, accordingly, having obtain'd a Commiſſion from the High-Prieſt, many holy Men and Women in Jeruſalem I not only hurry'd to Priſon, but, when any of them were put to Death, was myſelf not a little aſſenting and aſſiſting in it. Nay, in other Places too, I brought them before Courts of Judicature; by ſeveral Methods of Severity, forced them to deny Chriſt; and was ſo much enrag'd againſt them, that I compelled them to flee to

---

[*] That, of the three Sects, which were then of greateſt Credit in Judea, the Phariſees were the moſt ſtrict, and held in the greateſt Veneration, we have the Teſtimony of Joſephus, who, in more Places than one, informs us, that this Sect was thought to be more pious than others, and more exact in their Knowledge of the Cuſtoms of their Fathers, and in the Interpretation of their Laws. For, as for the other two famous Sects, the Sadducees, by denying the Reſurrection, and all future Puniſhments, took away the Rewards of a virtuous, and gave Licence to a vicious Life; and the Eſſenes, by being Jews, and yet ſeparating themſelves entirely from the Worſhip of the Temple, were guilty of a great Schiſm, and, by making their Prayers, and religious Addreſſes to the SUN, (as Joſephus, who liv'd three Years among them, teſtifies) were chargeable with Idolatry, De Bello Jud. lib. ii. c. 7. Whitby's Annotations.

[‖] But why ſhould St Paul ſay, that he was accuſ'd for aſſerting the general Reſurrection, when it was only the Reſurrection of Chriſt, that he was called in Queſtion for? Now, in Anſwer to this, it muſt be obſerv'd, that, before our Saviour's Paſſion, the Doctrine which he preach'd, was chiefly levelled againſt the vain Traditions of the Scribes and Phariſees, but that, after his Reſurrection, the Teſtimony of the Apoſtles being this, that Chriſt was riſen from the Dead, which was directly contrary to the Notion of the Sadducees, theſe People became their hotteſt Enemies, being grieved (as the Text expreſſes it) that they preached the Reſurrection of the Dead through Jeſus, Acts iv. 1, 2, as eaſily perceiving, that the Proof of the one, viz. that Chriſt was riſen, was a Confirmation of the general Reſurrection. As therefore the Reſurrection of Chriſt was a Pledge and Aſſurance of a general Reſurrection, it was impoſſible for the Apoſtles to atteſt the one, without aſſerting the other, ſince, in the Truth of the Thing, and according to the Sentiments of the Jews themſelves, the Reſurrection was to be effected by the Meſſiah, for which Reaſon we find St Paul ſtiling our Lord the Firſt-Fruits of them that ſlept, and declaring farther, that as in Adam all die, even ſo in Chriſt ſhall all be made alive. 1 Cor. xv. 20, 22. Whitby's Annotations.

[‖] That the Jews had Grounds ſufficient, in the Writings of the Old Teſtament, to expect a future Reſurrection, is evident from our Saviour's Application of God's own Words, I am the God of Abraham, the God of Iſaac, and the God of Jacob, Exod. iii. 6. God is not the God of the Dead, but of the Living, Matth. xxii. 32. Wherever God is ſtiled the God of any one, it always ſignifies, that he either is, or will be, the Benefactor of that Perſon; and, in naming Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, he muſt mean it of their complete Perſons, which conſiſted of Bodies, as well as Souls; and from hence it will follow, that, as the Troubles and Afflictions, which theſe three Patriarchs underwent in their Life-time, did not anſwer thoſe Favours and Kindneſſes, which are included in the Phraſe of his being the God of any one, God was ſtill engag'd to make them happy after this Life, and compleatly happy in their whole Perſons, i. e. both in Body and Soul, which could only be effected by their Reſurrection. This is the Deduction which our Saviour makes; but, when we read in the Prophets, that the Earth ſhall caſt out the Dead, and thoſe, that dwell in the Duſt, ſhall ariſe, Iſa. xxvi. 19. and more expreſsly ſtill, that many of them, who ſleep in the Duſt, ſhall awake, ſome to everlaſting Life, and ſome to everlaſting Confuſion, Dan. xii. 2. we need leſs wonder that we find the Martyrs in the Jewiſh Church not doubting, but that the Creator of the World would give them Breath and Life again, and would raiſe thoſe up, who died for his Laws, unto everlaſting Life, 2 Maccab. vii. 9, 23. Good Reaſon therefore had the Apoſtle to repreſent this as the Hope of their Tribes; for, tho' the Sadducees deny'd it, yet (as Joſephus informs us) they were but an Handful of Men in Compariſon, and, whenever they came to bear Offices, they were forc'd to profeſs the Doctrine of the Phariſees, otherwiſe the common People would not have endur'd them. Antiq. lib. xviii. c. 2. Whitby's Annotations.

to Heathen Cities, and even thither purſu'd them. To this Purpoſe, having receiv'd Authority from the Sanhedrim to go to Damaſcus, at Noon-Day, O King, I ſaw a Light from Heaven, far exceeding that of the Sun, which ſtruck me, and thoſe that accompany'd me, to the Ground; and heard a Voice, in the Hebrew Tongue, calling me by Name, and admoniſhing me to forbear my cruel and perſecuting Temper, becauſe, from that Time, I was choſen to be a Preacher and Promoter of that Doctrine, which I was then labouring to deſtroy, and particularly commiſſion'd to preach the Goſpel to the Gentiles, in order to convert them from their idolatrous Worſhip, to the Service of the True God. In Obedience therefore to this heavenly Viſion, I have ever ſince been very diligent in preaching the Doctrines of Repentance and Reformation, not in Judea only, but in other Nations, and not to the Jews only, but likewiſe to the Gentiles. This, O King, is my great Crime; and for this it was, that the Jews apprehended me in the Temple with a Deſign to have murther'd me; but, being ſupported by a Divine Power, I continue in my Duty to this Day, aſſerting nothing, but what is agreeable to Moſes and the Prophets, who have plainly foretold, that the Meſſiah ſhould be put to Death, and riſe again, and, by his Doctrine, enlighten both Jews and Gentiles. While he was thus diſcourſing, Feſtus, who happen'd to be no great Maſter of the Argument, was ready to think, that his Talking in this abſtruſe Manner muſt be the Effect of ſome Deliriouſneſs, and therefore told him abruptly, that his too much Learning * had made him mad. But to this he calmly reply'd: I am in my perfect Senſes, moſt noble Feſtus, and what I ſay, without Exceſs or Tranſport, is literally true. For this I appeal to Agrippa, before whom I take this Freedom of Speech, and am confident, that he knows it to be true. The Life, Death, and Reſurrection of Chriſt were Things of publick Note, and cannot be a Secret to him, who was a Jew born. Believeſt thou the Prophets, O King? I am ſatisfy'd thou doſt, and therefore cannot but know, that their Predictions are fulfilled in Chriſt. This moving and perſuaſive Eloquence ſo wrought upon Agrippa, that he could not forbear declaring, that the Apoſtle had almoſt perſuaded him to be a Chriſtian *: To which he readily reply'd, "That he heartily wiſh'd, that not "only he, but the whole Company then "preſent, were not only almoſt, but altogether, † (tho' not Priſoners) as much "Chriſtians, as himſelf was." Upon this the Aſſembly broke up; and, when Agrippa and Feſtus had conferr'd together about Paul's Caſe, they freely own'd, that the Accuſation laid againſt him amounted neither to a capital Offence ‖, nor any Thing

* Feſtus muſt have known, from ſome other Hand, that Paul was a learned Man; becauſe, in this Speech of his, he gives us no Indication of his Proficiency either in the Greek, or Roman Literature; tho' he might think, from the Terms which he heard him make uſe of, that the Subject of his Diſcourſe muſt be vaſtly myſterious; for to hear him ſpeak of the Reſurrection of the Dead, of a Viſion and Voice from Heaven, of Faith in Chriſt, of Converſion from Darkneſs to Light, of Deliverance from the Power of Satan, of an Inheritance among them that are ſanctified, and of Chriſt's ſhewing Light unto the People, and to the Gentiles, which were ſo many Ænigma's to the Governor, was enough to make him think, that there poſſibly might be ſome Diſorder in the Apoſtle's Brain, that made him talk in ſo unintelligible a Manner. Calmet's Commentary.

* This ſeems to imply, that, ſince the Time that they took it upon themſelves at Antioch, the Name of Chriſtians was become their common Appellation. Beauſobre's Annotations.

† When Felix underſtood that St Paul was a Citizen of Rome, the Text tells us, that he commanded the Centurion to ſet him at Liberty, Acts xxiv. 23. But whether that Liberty extended ſo far, as to releaſe him from his Bonds, is the Matter in doubt. It muſt be allow'd, that the Words, except theſe Bonds, Acts xxvi. 29, would ſound with a better Grace, and be a finer Compliment to the Company, if ſo be, that the Apoſtle, at this Time, had his Fetters on, and actually pointed at them when he ſpake; but, as Bonds may not improperly ſignify a Priſon, 'tis enough to juſtify that Expreſſion, that he was ſtill kept in Durance, and under the Cuſtody of a Guard. Calmet's Commentary, and Beauſobre's Annotations.

‖ Claudius indeed, towards the latter End of his Reign, had publiſh'd an Edict againſt the Jews, to baniſh them out of Italy, Acts xviii. 2. and by that the Chriſtian Jews (but then as Jews, not as Chriſtians) fell under that

He is ſent to Rome by Sea, and being ſhipwreck'd, is caſt upon the Iſland of Mileta.

HIS Journey to Rome therefore being thus finally determin'd, he, and ſome other Priſoners of Note, were committed to the Charge of one Julius, a Centurion, or Captain of the Legion, called Auguſta, having Luke the Evangeliſt, Ariſtarchus, Trophimus, and ſome others, to accompany him in his Voyage. † About the latter End of September, they went on board a Ship of Adramyttium ‡, and coaſting along Aſia, arriv'd at Sidon: where Julius, who all along treated Paul with great Civility, gave him Leave to go aſhore, and refreſh himſelf. From Sidon they ſet ſail, and came in Sight of Cyprus, and, having paſs'd over the Seas of Cilicia and Pamphylia, landed a Myra †, a Port in Lycia, where this Ship finiſh'd its Voyage. At Myra, Julius, and the Priſoners that were under his Care, went on board a Ship of Alexandria, bound for Italy; and, having paſſed by Cnidus *, with much ado they made for Salmone, a Promontory on the Eaſtern Shore of Crete, from whence, by many Days ſlow Sailing, they arriv'd at a Place called the Fair Havens, on the Coaſt of the ſame Iſland. Here St Paul adviſ'd the Centurion to put in, and winter, becauſe the Seaſon of the Year was far advanc'd, and Sailing *, in thoſe Seas eſpecially, was now become dangerous; but he preferring the Judgment of the Maſter of the Ship, and that Interdict. As yet there were no penal Laws againſt Chriſtians as ſuch. He, who firſt dedicated Perſecution, (as Tertullian expreſſes it) and made the Profeſſion of Chriſtianity a capital Offence, was Nero. But now this Appearance of Paul before Agrippa was before this Rage of his broke out, and, accordingly, we find that St Paul had appealed to his Tribunal, as well knowing that the Difference between him and the Jews was a Thing of that Nature, that no Law of the Romans would take hold of it; but it is eaſy to perceive, that his Appeal would have ſtood him in no Stead, if Chriſtianity, at this Time, had been under any Imperial Interdict. Hammond's Annotations.

† When the Faſt was now already paſt, is the Signification of Time in the Text, Acts xxvii. 9. and, without all Controverſy, this was the great annual Faſt of Expiation for the Sins of the People of Iſrael, Lev. xvi. 29. which began on the tenth Day of the Month Tizri, anſwering to the twenty-fifth of our September. This was the Commencement of their Civil Year; and therefore it is no Wonder, that St Luke ſhould make uſe of this Epocha, the Faſt being already paſt, to denote a particular Part of the Year, ſince he wrote his Goſpel for the Uſe of Chriſtians, who, at this Time, were chiefly Jewiſh Converts, and, conſequently, no Strangers to this Kind of Language. Hammond's and Whitby's Annotations, and Calmet's Commentary.

‡ Some of the Antients are of Opinion, that this was a City of Egypt, built by Alexander the Great, as a Monument of his Triumphs at the Canopic Mouth of the Nile, and is by Livy, and ſome others, made the ſame with Thebes; but the Adramyttium, here ſpoken of, muſt be that Sea-Port in Myſia, a Province in Aſia Minor, lying over-againſt the Iſle of Leſbos or Metelin, and not far from Troas: For whoever looks into a Map, may ſee, that, from Cæſarea, where the Ships ſet out, to Myra in Lycia, where it touch'd, lies the direct Courſe to Adramyttium in Myſia. Whitby's Alphabetical Table, and Wells's Geography of the New Teſtament.

† Lycia was a Province of Aſia Minor, bounded on the Eaſt, by Pamphylia; on the Weſt, by Caria; on the North, by Phrygia; and on the South, by the Mediterranean Sea: Its Metropolis was Myra, which, when it was Chriſtian, was an Archbiſhop's See; but at preſent there is nothing remarkable in the whole Province, except that Taurus, the chief and moſt famous Mountain of all the Aſiatick Continent, takes its firſt Riſe here. Wells's Geography of the New Teſtament.

* This is a City which ſtands on a Promontory, or Foreland of the ſame Name, in that Part of the Province of Caria, which was more peculiarly called Doris, remarkable among the Antients for the Worſhip of Venus, (thence called by Horace Regina Cnidi) and for the celebrated Statue of that Goddeſs, which was made by the great Artificer Praxiteles. Wells's Geography of the New Teſtament, and Whitby's Alphabetical Table.

* It is a common Obſervation of Mariners, that for ſome Weeks before and after Michaelmas, there are, at Sea, ſudden and frequent Storms, commonly called Michaelmas Flawers, which at that Time of the Year make Sailing (eſpecially in the Mediterranean) dangerous. Nor is this any new Obſervation, but as old as Heſiod himſelf, who tells us, that at the Going down of the Pleiades, which was at the End of Autumn, Navigation was hazardous:

and the Wind, at this Inſtant, blowing gently at South, they put again to Sea, in Hopes of reaching Phœnice, another Harbour of Crete, where there was ſafe Riding, and there to winter. It was not long however, before they found themſelves diſappointed; for the calm Southerly Gale, which blew before, ſuddenly chang'd into a ſtormy and † tempeſtuous North-Eaſt Wind, which bore down all before it, ſo that they were forc'd to let the Ship drive; but, to ſecure it from ſplitting, they under-girt it; and, to prevent its running aground on the Shallows, threw out a great Part of its Lading and Tackle.

Acts xxvii. 20. For fourteen Days the Company continu'd in this Condition, without ever ſeeing either Sun or Stars, and began all now to give up their Lives for loſt; when St Paul, having a little blam'd them for not taking his Advice, deſir'd them however to be of good Courage, becauſe he had Aſſurance from Heaven, that, whatever became of the Ship, they ſhould eſcape to an Iſland, and not one of their Lives be loſt. On the fourteenth Night, as the Sailors were throwing the Lead, and ſounding, they found themſelves nigh ſome Coaſt; and, apprehending they might ſtrike upon ſome Shelves in the dark, thought proper to come to an Anchor, till the Morning might give them better Information: But, not ſtaying for that, they were attempting to ſave themſelves by getting into the Boat, when St Paul, perceiving it, told the Centurion, that, unleſs they all ſtay'd in the Ship, none could be ſafe; whereupon the Soldiers cut the Ropes, and let the Boat drive. A little before Daybreak, St Paul perſuaded them to take ſome Nouriſhment, becauſe, in all that Time of Danger, which had been ‖ for fourteen Days, they had eaten in a Manner nothing; and, to encourage them to do this, he aſſur'd them again, that not a Hair of their Heads ſhould periſh. In the Morning, they diſcover'd Land, and, diſcerning a Creek, which ſeem'd to make a Kind of Haven, they reſolv'd, if poſſible, to put in there; but, in their Paſſage, unexpectedly fell into a Place, where two Seas met, and where the Fore-part of the Ship ſtriking upon a Neck of Land, that ran out into the Sea, the Hinder-part was ſoon beaten in Pieces by the Violence of the Waves. When the Soldiers ſaw this, they propos'd putting all the Priſoners to the Sword, leſt any of them ſhould ſwim to Land, and make their Eſcape; but the Centurion, who was willing to ſave Paul, by no Means allowing of that, gave Orders that every one ſhould ſhift for himſelf; and the Iſſue was, that ſome by Swimming, others on Planks, and others on Pieces of the broken Ship, (to the Number of two hundred and ſeventy-ſix Perſons) they all got ſafe to Shore.

The Country upon which they were caſt, as St Paul had foretold, was an Iſland called * Melita, now Malta; and † the Natives of the Place received them with great Civility and Kindneſs, making them Fires to dry their wet Clothes, and cheriſh their benumbed Limbs; but, as St Paul was throwing ſome Sticks upon the Fire, ‖ a Viper, diſlodged by the Heat, came out of the Wood, and faſtened on his Hand; which when the Natives ſaw, they immediately concluded, that he was ſome notorious Malefactor or Murtherer, whom the Divine Vengeance (tho' it ſuffer'd him to eſcape the Sea) had reſerved for a more publick and ſolemn Execution. But when they ſaw him ſhake off the venomous Creature into the Fire, and no Manner of Harm enſue, they changed their Sentiments to the other Extreme, and cried out, that † he was a God.

† The Words in their Original are, Ἄνεμος τυφωνικὸς ὁ καλούμενος Εὐροκλύδων Acts xxvii. 14. Ventus Typhonicus is a Whirl-wind, which Pliny with great Elegance has thus deſcrib'd, ——— Typhon defert ſecum aliquid abruptum è Nube gelidâ, convolvens verſanſque, & locum ex loco mutans rapidâ Vertigine; præcipua Navigantium peſtis, non antennas modo, verum ipſa navigia contorta frangens, l. 2. c. 48. But then we cannot but think, that the proper Name of this Wind was not Εὐροκλύδων, which is a Word we read no where elſe, and whoſe Signification we are no ways certain of, but Εὐρακύλων, or Euro Aquilo, a Wind, which blew from Eaſt and by North; becauſe, if we obſerve the Courſe, that the Ship made from the Fair Havens, which lie on the Eaſtern Point of Crete, to the Iſland of Malta, we ſhall ſoon perceive, that it required exactly ſuch a Wind to drive it thither. Calmet's Commentary and Hammond's Annotations.

‖ The Words in the Text are——— This is the fourteenth Day that ye have continu'd faſting, having taken nothing, Acts xxvii. 33. Now, becauſe it was impoſſible for them, without a Miracle, to continue faſting fourteen Days without eating any Thing, ſome have been induc'd to render the Words thus, Ye have continu'd expecting this Day, which is the fourteenth Day, i. e. waiting to ſee the Succeſs of it, which, it ſeems, in the Opinion of the Mariners, was a critical Day to them, wherein their Danger was at the higheſt, and therefore they eat nothing all that Day, as having no Leiſure to conſider Hunger, when their greater Danger, and more immediate Fear was Drowning. But, as we read nothing of this critical Day, ſo the long Faſting mention'd in Ver. 21. determines the Senſe otherwiſe, and makes St Paul's Words indeed amount to no more, than a common familiar Expreſſion, that may, almoſt every Day, be heard at any Table, where there happens to be a puny Stomach: You have eat nothing, ſays the Maſter of the Houſe to ſuch an one, very little, or next to nothing. Whitby's, Hammond's, and Beauſobre's Annotations.

* This Iſland is ſuppoſed to have had its Name at firſt from the great Quantity of Honey, (in the Greek Language called μέλι) which it produced. It yielded likewiſe Cotton-wool in Abundance, which the People uſed to ſow, as we do Corn, and no ſmall Store of excellent Fruits, both for Taſte and Colour; and yet the whole Iſland is one continued Rock, and has not above three Feet Depth in Earth. It is computed to be about twelve Miles broad, and twenty long; lies diſtant from Sicily about ſixty Miles, and much more from the Coaſt of Africk, ſo that no other Reaſon can be given, why ſome Geographers have reckoned it among the African Iſles, but that it once belonged to Carthage. At preſent it is called Malta, and is remarkable on account of its being granted to the Knights of St John of Jeruſalem (formerly called the Knights of Rhodes, but now Knights of Malta) by Charles V. after that the Turks had beaten them out of Rhodes, in the Year of our Lord 1530. Theſe Knights, according to their Inſtitution, are in Number a Thouſand, whereof five Hundred are to be reſident in the Iſland, and the other five Hundred are diſperſed through Chriſtendom, in their ſeveral Seminaries, which are in France, Italy, and Germany, as there was one likewiſe in England, before it was ſuppreſſed by Henry VIII. Each of theſe Seminaries have over them a Grand Prior. He that is Chief of the whole Order, is ſtiled Great Maſter of the Hoſpital of St John of Jeruſalem, and the others commonly called Knights Hoſpitallers, from whom many Places that formerly belonged to them here in England, do ſtill retain ſomething of their Name, by being called in ſhort Spitals. Wells's Geography of the New Teſtament.

† That the People of Malta were originally a Colony of the Carthaginians, is manifeſt from ſeveral old Inſcriptions, that are there to be ſeen in the Punick Character, and from the preſent Language of the Natives, which differs very little from Arabick. At Valette indeed, which is the principal City in this Iſland, the Inhabitants ſpeak Italian likewiſe, and the Reaſon of this is, becauſe the Knights Hoſpitallers have ſettled their Abode here; but the Country People have no Knowledge of this Tongue, and tho' in this Place, there are two Greek Pariſhes, yet theſe are only for the Grecians, Deſcendants of thoſe, who quitted Rhodes, when theſe Knights were expelled by the Turks, and followed their Fortune to Malta. The Sicilians and Africans had a long Conteſt for the Property of this Iſland; but at length the Romans became Maſters of it, tho', when they had it, they never attempted to introduce their own Language. They however, as well as the Greeks, held all Nations in a Kind of Contempt, that did not ſpeak their Language, or that did not ſpeak it correctly, and without the Mixture of any other Dialect; and this is the Reaſon why St Paul's Company, who were all Greeks or Latins, called the Malteſe, Barbarians. Calmet's Commentary, and Beauſobre's Annotations.

‖ Vipera, quaſi vivipara, (a Sort of Serpent, ſo called becauſe it brings forth its Young alive) is but a ſmall Creature, (the largeſt not above half an Ell long, and an Inch thick) but ſo very poiſonous, that the Bite of it will ſometimes kill a Perſon in a Moment, or cauſe a ſudden Inflammation all over the Body, as the People of Malta we ſee expected of St Paul, Acts xxviii. 6. The People of that Iſland however have a Tradition, that ever ſince the Time, that the Apoſtle was bitten by one, whatever Vipers are found there, have no Venom in them, and that ſome of them, when, out of Curioſity, carried into Sicily, become as poiſonous as others, but, when brought back to Malta again, loſe all their venomous Quality. Nay, they add farther, that as there are great Numbers of petrified Vipers, and other Serpents in this Iſland, thoſe, who carry Pieces of theſe about them, will be preſerved from the Biting of any venomous Animal; and that thoſe, who for want of them, chance to be bit, may certainly be cured, by taking ſome of the Powder of one of the Petrifactions mingled in a little Water. Calmet's Commentary and Dictionary, under the Word Malta.

† Hercules was one of the Gods, whom the People of this Iſland worſhipped, and to him they aſcribed the Power of curing the Bite of Serpents. Beauſobre's Annotations.

* That he was Governor of the Iſland is highly probable from an Inſcription found there, and ſet down by Grotius, wherein the ΠΡΩΤΟΣ ΜΕΛΙΤΑΙΩΝ, is reckoned among the Roman Officers, and that both he, and moſt of the People under him, were converted to the Chriſtian Faith is the joint Opinion of St Chryſoſtom, and ſome other Greek Authors; whereas Ado, with ſeveral Latin Writers, affirms, that Publius, joining himſelf to St Paul, was by him made a Biſhop, and ſent to preach the Goſpel; and that coming to Athens, he there ſettled, governed that Church in the Quality of their Biſhop for ſome Time, and then ended his Life by Martyrdom. But this is a miſtaken Piece of Hiſtory, ſince the Publius, who was the Biſhop of Athens, did not ſuffer Martyrdom till the Time of Marcus Aurelius. Cave's Lives of the Apoſtles, and Calmet's Commentary.

St Paul, by his Prayers and the Impoſition of his Hands, recovered his Father from a Fever and Bloody-Flux; and ſeveral others of the Inhabitants afflicted with any Kind of Diſeaſe, he reſtored to their former Health and Strength; for which they not only ſhewed him the higheſt Marks of their Eſteem, but furniſhed both him and his Company with all Neceſſaries proper for the reſt of their Voyage.

He purſues his Journey, and is conducted into Rome by the Brethren.

After three Months Stay in this Iſland, the Centurion, and his Charge, went on board the † Caſtor and Pollux, a Ship of Alexandria bound for Italy. At ‖ Syracuſe they put in, and tarried three Days; thence ſailed to † Rhegium, and ſo to ‡ Puteoli, where they landed; and, finding ſome Chriſtians there, at their Requeſt, ſtaid a Week with them, and then ſet forward in their Journey to Rome. † Theſe were two Brothers, Sons of Jupiter and Leda, who (as the Poets fable) ſprung from the ſame Egg, and are therefore repreſented, as having each the half of an Egg-ſhell in his Hand, becauſe it is pretended, that Jupiter converſed with their Mother in the Form of a Swan. Theſe two Brothers were of great Reputation for their Valour, and, particularly, for the Wars, which they waged againſt the Corſairs and Pirates, for which they had divine Honours paid them, being the peculiar Deities of Mariners, to whom they made their Vows in every Voyage, and whoſe Aſſiſtance they implored in every Storm. Among the Ancients it was the Cuſtom to have the Image of ſome Creature or other painted, or engraven upon the Prow of every Ship of Burden, from which the Veſſel had its Name: And hence the Poets have given it out, that Europa was carried away by a Bull, and Ganymede by an Eagle, and that Phryxus rode over the Euxine Sea on a Ram, becauſe the Ships, employ'd in the Voyages, had ſuch Creatures for their Enſigns, and from them borrowed their Names. But, beſides all this, it was uſual with the Ancients to have ſome God or other generally painted upon the Stern, as the Patron, or tutelary God of the Veſſel; and therefore we may obſerve, that the ſame Ship, which Virgil calls the Tiger, becauſe of the Image of that animal on its Prow, ——— Ærata Princeps ſecat Æquora Tigri, had, on its Stern, the Image of Apollo, ——— Aurato fulgebat Apolline Puppis. Æneid. x.

But whether this Caſtor and Pollux was painted, or engraven on the Prow or Stern of the Ship, 'tis plain, that St Paul was not ſo ſuperſtitious, as to refuſe to ſail in it, nor St Luke to make mention of it, upon that Account. Calmet's Dictionary and Commentary, Hammond's and Whitby's Annotations.

‖ This was a City of Sicily, ſeated on the Eaſt Side of the Iſland, with a fine Proſpect from every Entrance both by Sea and Land. Its Port, which had the Sea on both Sides of it, was almoſt all of it environed with beautiful Buildings, and all that Part of it, which was without the City, was on both Sides banked up, and ſuſtained with very fair Walls of Marble. The City itſelf, while in its Splendor, was the largeſt and richeſt, that the Greeks poſſeſſed in any Part of the World. For (according to Strabo) it was two and twenty Miles in Circumference, and both Livy and Plutarch informs us, that the Spoil of it was equal to that of Carthage. It was called Quadruplex, as being divided into four Parts, Acradino, Tyche, Neapolis, and the Iſland of Ortygia. The firſt of theſe contained in it the famous Temple of Jupiter; the ſecond, the Temple of Fortune; the third, a large Amphitheatre, and a wonderful Statue of Apollo in the Midſt of a ſpacious Square; and the fourth, the two Temples of Diana and Minerva, and the renowned Fountain of Arethuſa. About two hundred and ten Years before the Birth of Chriſt, this City was taken and ſacked by Marcellus, the Roman General, and, in ſtorming the Place, Archimedes, the great Mathematician, who is eſteemed the firſt Inventor of the Sphere, and who, during the Siege, had ſorely galled the Romans with his military Engines, was ſlain by a common Soldier, while he was intent upon his Studies. After it was thus deſtroy'd by Marcellus, Auguſtus rebuilt that Part of it, which ſtood upon the Iſland, and, in Time, it ſo far recovered itſelf as to have three Walls, three Caſtles, and a Marble Gate, and to be able to ſet out twelve thouſand Horſe, and four hundred Ships. But the Blow, which the Saracens gave it, A. D. 884, when they razed it to the Ground, it even feels to this Day. Whitby's Alphabetical Table, and Wells's Geography of the New Teſtament.

† Rhegium, now called Reggio, is a Port Town in Italy, oppoſite to Meſſina in Sicily, and is thought to have had this Name given it by the Greeks, who ſuppoſe, that much about this Place Sicily was broken off from the Continent of Italy by the Sea. At preſent it is an Archbiſhop's See, and a conſiderable Place for Trade, tho' it has ſeveral Times formerly been ſurprized and plundered by the Turks. Wells's Geography of the New Teſtament.

‡ This Place, which is now commonly called Pozzuoli, is a City in Terra di Lavoro, a Province in the Kingdom of Naples) ſituated upon a Hill, in a Creek of the Sea, and juſt oppoſite to Baiæ, (on the other Side of the Creek) a Place of great Renown among the Roman Writers. Within the Bounds of this City there are five and thirty natural Baths of different Sorts of warm Waters, very uſeful for the Cure of ſeveral Diſeaſes; and from theſe Baths, or Pits of Water, called in Latin, Putei, the Town is ſaid to have taken its Name. At preſent it is a Biſhop's See, under the Archbiſhop of Naples, and in it are to be ſeen many Roman Antiquities, and natural Rarities, not eaſily to be found elſewhere. Wells's Geography of the New Teſtament.

him, ſome as far as* Apii-forum, and others as far as the † Three Taverns; which when he ſaw, he bleſſed God, and took Courage. They all conducted him, in a Kind of Triumph, into the City, where, when they were arrived, the reſt of the Priſoners were delivered over to the || Captain of the Guard, but Paul was permitted to ſtay in a private Houſe, only † with one Soldier for his Ward.

Confers with the Jews, and preaches Chriſtianity to them, but with different Succeſs.

Acts xxviii. 17.

THREE Days after his Arrival at Rome, St Paul ſent for the Heads of the ‡ Jewiſh Conſiſtory there, and to them related the Cauſe of his Coming; viz. "That, tho' "he had been guilty of no Violation "of the Laws of their Religion, yet, by "the Jews at Jeruſalem he had been "delivered into the Hands of the Roman Governors, who more than once "would have acquitted him, as innocent "of any capital Offence, but that, by "the Perverſeneſs of his Perſecutors, he "was conſtrained (not with any Intention to accuſe his own Nation, but only to clear and vindicate himſelf) to "make his Appeal to the Emperor." Having thus removed a popular Prejudice, and inſinuated the Cauſe of his Suffering to be that, which their own Religion had taught him, viz. the Belief, and Expectation of a future Reſurrection, he gained ſo far upon their Affections, as to have a ſecond Conference, by their own Appointment, for explaining the Principles of Chriſtianity to them. Accordingly, when they were met together, he diſcourſed to them from Morning to Night, concerning the Religion and Doctrine of the Holy Jeſus, proving, from the Promiſes and Predictions of the Old Teſtament, that he was the true Meſſias: But the Succeſs of his Diſcourſe was different, ſome being convinced, and others perſiſting in their Infidelity; ſo that they parted with no ſmall Difference, and Diſagreement among themſelves.

FOR two whole Years Paul dwelt at Rome, in an Houſe, which he hired for his own Uſe, wherein he conſtantly employed himſelf in preaching, and writing for the Good of the Church. He preached daily without Interruption, and with

* This Place, at preſent called Caſſarilla di St Maria, was an antient City of the Volſci, about fifty Miles diſtant from Rome, and is probably thought to have had its Name from the Statue of Apius Claudius, (that Roman Conſul, who paved the famous Way from Rome to Capua) which was ſet up here. Wells's Geography of the New Teſtament, and Calmet's Commentary.

† This was another Place, that ſtood upon the Apian Way, about thirty Miles diſtant from Rome; and, that it was a City, properly ſo called, and not a Parcel of Inns only for the Reception and Entertainment of Travellers, is evident from its being an Epiſcopal See in the Time of Conſtantine; for, among the nineteen Biſhops, who were delegated by that Emperor to decide the Controverſy between Donatus and Cæcilianus, Felix à tribus Tabernis, Felix Biſhop of the City, called, Tres Tabernæ, was one. And indeed, if we will allow of Sclagier's Interpretation of the Word Tabernæ, viz. that it was the Name of the Frontier-Towns, which were built againſt the Incurſions of the Barbarians; Zoſimus [Hiſt. l. 2. pt. 65.] acquaints us, that Diocleſian every where erected ſuch, on the Borders of the Roman Empire, and we have Reaſon to think, that the like was done in earlier Times, by other Emperors; and that therefore, the Tres Tabernæ, where the Sauromatæ (as Auſonius tells us) had their Habitations aſſigned them, in order to garriſon and defend theſe Places, were ſuch. Hammond's Annotations.

|| This στρατοπεδάρχης, or chief Commander of the Emperor's Guards, is generally ſuppoſed to have been Burrhus, whom Claudius made his Prætorian Prefect, A. D. 51. He had a great Hand in advancing Nero to the Empire, and while he lived, had ſo much Influence or Authority over him, as to keep his evil Inclinations under ſome Sort of Reſtraint; but he died A. D. 62, about two Years after St Paul's Arrival at Rome, leaving behind him (according to the Account of Hiſtorians) a great Reputation for Wiſdom and Moderation. Echard's Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory, and Calmet's Commentary.

† The Manner of the Soldier's guarding the Priſoner among the Romans, was, by having a Chain, at one End faſtened to the Priſoner's Right-Hand, and, that the other, to the Soldier's Left, and this made ſo long, that they might conveniently go together: But ſometimes, for greater Security, the Priſoner was guarded with two Soldiers, and ſo had two Chains, one of them made faſt to one Soldier, and the other to the other, Acts xii. 6, 7. and Acts xxi. 33. Whitby's and Hammond's Annotations.

‡ Hence it appears, that the Edict of Claudius, which baniſhed the Jews from Rome, was of no long Continuance. but probably expired with his Life; becauſe we find, by St Paul's Epiſtle to the Romans, which he wrote about two Years before his going among them, that there were great Numbers both of Jews and Chriſtians, then reſiding at Rome. Beauſobre's Annotations, and Calmet's Commentary.

with good Succeſs, inſomuch, that his Impriſonment very much redounded to the Propagation of the Goſpel, and made him famous, even in the * Emperor's Court, where he converted ſeveral to Chriſtianity.

Here he writes his Epiſtle to Philemon. Its Contents.

Among other of the Apoſtle's Converts at Rome, was one † Oneſimus, who had formerly been a Servant to ‖ Philemon, a Perſon of Diſtinction † in Coloſſe, but had run away from his Maſter, and taken Things of ſome Value with him. He rambled as far as Rome; where, by St Paul's Means, he was converted, inſtructed, and baptized, and afterwards became highly ſerviceable to him in his Impriſonment. But being another Man's Servant, he ſent him back to Coloſſe, and at the ſame Time, wrote ‡ a ſhort Letter to his Maſter, [†] "Earneſtly deſiring him to pardon him, and, notwithſtanding his former Faults, to treat him kindly, and uſe him as a Brother; and promiſing withal, that, if he had wrong'd, or ow'd him any Thing, he himſelf would not fail to re-pay it."

---

* Among theſe the Roman Martyrology reckons Terpes, an Officer of prime Note in Nero's Palace, and afterwards a Martyr for the Faith; and St Chryſoſtom (if Baronius cites him right) tells us of Nero's Cup-bearer, and one of his Concubines, ſuppoſed by ſome to have been Poppæa Sabina, of whom Tacitus gives us this Character:——That ſhe wanted nothing to make her one of the moſt accompliſhed Ladies in the World, but a chaſte and virtuous Mind: And I know not how far it may ſeem to countenance her Converſion, at leaſt Inclination to a better Religion than that of Paganiſm, that Joſephus ſtiles her a pious Woman, and tells us, that ſhe effectually ſollicited the Cauſe of the Jews with her Huſband Nero; and what Favours Joſephus himſelf received from her at Rome, he relates in his own Life. Cave's Lives of the Apoſtles.

† This was no uncommon Name given to Slaves, and, as it ſignifies in the Original profitable, the Apoſtle may be ſuppoſed to allude to it, when he tells Philemon, concerning this Servant of his, in Time paſt he was to thee unprofitable, but now profitable both to thee and me, Phil. ver. 11. and indeed ſo he proved: For, not long after his Return to his Maſter, he was ſent back again to Rome, that he might be of Service to St Paul in his Priſon. The Epiſtles, which St Paul wrote in his Confinement, were by his Hand conveyed to their reſpective Churches. After the Apoſtle's Releaſe from Priſon, he was Aſſiſtant to him in the Propagation of the Goſpel, and (according to the Apoſtolick Conſtitutions) was by him made Biſhop of Berea in Macedonia, where he ſuffered Martyrdom; tho' others ſay, that he ſucceeded Timothy in the Biſhoprick of Epheſus, and that, being taken into Cuſtody, and carried to Rome, he was there ſtoned to Death for his Faith in Jeſus Chriſt. That he was a true Convert to Chriſtianity, and a ſincere Penitent for his private Offences, is evident from the Appellations which St Paul gives him, of his Son, the Son of his Bonds, his own Bowels, Phil. ver. 10, 12. and his faithful and beloved Brother, Col. iv. 9. but that he was either Biſhop or Martyr, St Chryſoſtom, St Jerom, and Theodoret, who have all wrote Commentaries upon the Epiſtle to Philemon, make not the leaſt Mention. Calmet's and Beauſobre's Pref. ſur l'Epitre a Philemon.

‖ He was a Perſon of ſome Conſideration in Coloſſe, a City of Phrygia; for his Family was there remaining in the Time of Theodoret, who flouriſhed in the fifth Age of the Church. St Paul, we read, was twice in Phrygia, and yet we do not find that he was ever at Coloſſe; nay, he ſeems to declare himſelf that he was never there, Col. ii. 1. and therefore we muſt ſuppoſe, that either he converted Philemon (as he ſeems to intimate he did, ver. 19.) at Epheſus, or ſome other Place in Aſia Minor, (while he was preaching the Goſpel there) or that Epaphras, who was St Paul's Diſciple, and by him appointed Evangeliſt to the Coloſſians, was the Perſon who converted him. However this be, 'tis certain, that upon his Converſion, he became a Fellow-labourer in the Goſpel, ver. 1. and (as the Apoſtolick Conſtitutions tell us) by St Paul was made the Biſhop of the Church of Coloſſe, which, by his extenſive Charity, Phil. ver. 5, 6. he edified, as much as by his Preaching of the Goſpel, until he and his Wife Appia both ſuffered Martyrdom in the Time ero. Calmet's and Beauſobre's Pref. ſur l'Epitres a Col. et Philemon.

† This was a great City of Phrygia in Aſia Minor, built by the River Lycus, near the Place (as Herodotus informs us, l. 7. c. 30.) where it begins to run under Ground, as it does for five Furlongs before it riſes again, and empties itſelf into the Meander. This City was ſituated at an equal Diſtance between Laodicea and Hierapolis, and therefore we find St Paul (in his Epiſtles to the Coloſſians, Chap. iv. 13.) making mention of the Inhabitants of all theſe three Cities together; which (according to the Account of Euſebius) were all deſtroyed by an Earthquake, in the tenth of Nero, about two Years after that this Epiſtle was ſent to them. Wells's Geography of the New Teſtament, and Whitby's Alphabetical Table.

‡ This Epiſtle may paſs for a Maſter-piece of Eloquence in the perſuaſive Way. For therein the Apoſtle has recourſe to all the Conſiderations, which Friendſhip, Religion, Piety, and Tenderneſs can inſpire, to reconcile a Servant to his Maſter; and yet ſome of the Antients were of Opinion, that it did not deſerve a Place in the Canon of Scripture, becauſe it was wrote on a particular Occaſion, and with a Deſign, not ſo much to inſtruct Chriſtians in general, as to recommend a fugitive Servant. But tho' the Subject of this Epiſtle be a private Affair, yet it contains ſuch general Inſtructions as theſe. 1*ſt*. That no Chriſtian, tho' of the meaneſt Condition, is to be contemned. 2*dly*, That Chriſtianity does not impair the Power of Maſters over their Servants. 3*dly*, That Servants ought to make Satisfaction for any Wrong or Injury done to their Maſters. 4*thly*, That Maſters ought to be reconciled to their Servants, upon their Repentance, and Acknowledgment of their Faults: And 5*thly*, That there is, at all Times, a Love and Affection due from a Maſter to a profitable Servant. And who then (ſay the Greek Interpreters) would refuſe to number an Epiſtle, ſo profitable and ſo inſtructive, with the reſt of St Paul's Works? Chryſoſt. Argum. Epiſt. ad Philem. Calmet's, Beauſobre's and Whitby's Pref. ad eandem.

His Epiſtle to the Philippians. Its Contents.

THE Chriſtians of Philippi, having heard of St Paul's Impriſonment at Rome, and not knowing what Straits he might be reduc'd to, rais'd a Contribution for him, and ſent it by Epaphroditus[*], their Biſhop, by whom he return'd an Epiſtle[†] to them: "Wherein he gives ſome Account of the State of his Affairs at Rome; gratefully acknowledges their Kindneſs to him; warns them againſt the dangerous Opinions, which the Judaizing Teachers began to vent among them; and adviſes them to live in continual Obedience to Chriſt; to avoid Diſputations, to delight in Prayer, to be courageous under Afflictions, united in Love, and cloth'd with Humility, in Imitation of the Bleſſed Jeſus, who ſo far humbled himſelf, as to become obedient to Death, even to the Death of the Croſs."

His Epiſtle to the Epheſians. Its Contents.

St PAUL had, for three Years, liv'd at Epheſus, taking great Pains in preaching the Goſpel, and was thoroughly acquainted with the State and Condition of the Place; and therefore now, taking the Opportunity of Tychicus's [‖] going thither, he wrote his Epiſtle [†] to the Epheſians; "Wherein he endeavours to countermine the Principles,

[†] For the Caſe of Servants in thoſe Days was very hard. All Maſters were look'd upon, not only by the Roman Laws, but by the Laws of all Nations, as having an unlimited Power over them; ſo that, without aſking the Magiſtrates Leave, or any publick or formal Tryal, they might adjudge them to any Work or Puniſhment, even to the Loſs of Life itſelf, if they pleas'd. The Exorbitancy of this Power however was, in ſome Meaſure, curb'd by the Laws of ſucceeding Emperors, (eſpecially after they became Chriſtian) which make better Proviſion for Perſons in that Relation and Capacity, and, in caſe of unjuſt and over-rigorous Uſage, enabled them to appeal to a more righteous Tribunal, where Maſter and Servant ſhall both ſtand upon even Ground, where he, that doth wrong, ſhall receive for the Wrong which he hath done, and there is no Reſpect of Perſons, Col. iii. 25. Cave's Lives of the Apoſtles.

[*] St Paul calls him the Apoſtle of the Philippians, which ſome taking the Word Apoſtle in its literal Senſe for a Meſſenger only, do ſuppoſe that Epaphroditus is ſo called, becauſe he was appointed by the Philippians to carry Money to St Paul, who was then in Priſon at Rome, and in their Name, to be ſerviceable to him in his Perſon. But Theodoret, and others of the Fathers, who have written upon the Epiſtle to the Philippians, tell us, that he was the Perſon ᾧ τῶν ψυχῶν αὐτῶν ἐπιστεύθη ἐπιμέλεια, to whom the Care of their Souls had been committed, and, conſequently their Biſhop; for it is more feaſible, to make him Biſhop of Philippi, than of any other Place, as ſome have done. Whitby's Preface to the Epiſtle to the Philippians, and Calmet's Commentary on Chap. ii. 25.

[†] Of all the Epiſtles which St Paul wrote, there is none ſo full of Affection, and tender Sentiments, as this to the Philippians, who, (it muſt be own'd) upon the Account of their Conſtancy in the Faith, as well as their Zeal for the Apoſtle, and Concern for his Sufferings, deſerv'd ſuch kind Treatment; and therefore, ſo far is he from cenſuring, or reproving them, (as he uſually does other Churches) that we find him abounding in their Praiſe and Commendation. A good Argument this (as St Chryſoſtom remarks) of their virtuous Behaviour, that they gave their Teacher no Cauſe to complain, but that the whole Epiſtle, which he ſent them, contains nothing but kind Exhortations and Encouragements, without the leaſt Mixture of Sharpneſs or Reproof. Beauſobre's Preface ſur l'Epitre aux Philip.

[‖] Tychicus was of the Province of Aſia, and a diſciple of St Paul, whom he frequently employ'd to carry his Letters to ſeveral Churches, as that to the Coloſſians, written in 61; that to the Epheſians, written in 65; and the firſt to Timothy, written in 64. Nor did he employ him merely to carry his Letters, but to learn likewiſe the State of the ſeveral Churches to which he ſent him, and to bring him proper Intelligence from thence; and for this Reaſon he calls him his dear Brother, a faithful Miniſter in the Lord, and his Companion in the Service of God, Eph. vi. 21, 22. and Col. iv. 7, 8. For this Reaſon he had once Thoughts of ſending him to Crete, to preſide over that Church in the Abſence of Titus, Chap. iii. 12. as it is probably ſuppos'd, that, when he ſent him with his Letter to Epheſus, he order'd him to abide there, and to govern that Church, while Timothy, their proper Biſhop, was abſent with him at Rome. But when St Paul was reſtor'd to his Liberty, whether this Diſciple of his attended him in his Travels, or was conſtituted Biſhop of Colophon, in the Province of Aſia, as ſome report, we have no Account, that may be depended on. Calmet's Dictionary under the Word.

[†] The Heretick Marcion (as Tertullian, adv. Mar. lib. v. c. 17. informs us) pretended, that this Epiſtle was not written to the Epheſians, but to the Laodiceans, for which he produces his own Copy, inſcrib'd to the Saints, which were at Laodicea, and not at Epheſus, as the Generality of Manuſcripts and Verſions now have it; and, to ſupport this, ſeveral Paſſages are cited out of the Epiſtle itſelf, which ſeem not ſo well to agree with the Circumſtances of

His Epiſtle to the Coloſſians. Its contents.

St PAUL himſelf had never been at Coloſſe, but Epaphras *, who was then at Rome, a Priſoner with him, had preach'd the Goſpel there with good Succeſs; and from him he might learn, that certain falſe Teachers had endeavour'd to perſuade the People, that they ought not to apply to God by Jeſus Chriſt, who, ſince his Aſcenſion, was ſo far exalted above them, but by Angels, who were now become the proper Mediators between God and Man; and therefore, in Oppoſition to this, as well as ſome other Seductions of the like Nature, he wrote his Epiſtle to the Coloſſians †; “Wherein he magnificently ſets forth the Meſſiah, and all the Benefits flowing of St Paul, who had liv'd and preach'd for the Space of three Years at Epheſus, vid. Chap. i. 15. iii. 1, 4. iv. 21. but, as it would be raſh and imprudent upon the Account of a few ambiguous Texts, to deny the Authority of all Antiquity, and eſpecially that of St Ignatius, who, in his Letter to the Epheſians, Sect. xii. makes mention of that which St Paul had wrote to them, ſo (if we are minded to compromiſe the Matter) we may, with Archbiſhop Uſher, ſay, that this was a circular Letter, and deſign'd for the Uſe of all the Churches of Aſia, inſomuch, that St Paul did not inſert the Name of any particular Church, but ſent it with this general Title, Paul the Apoſtle of Jeſus Chriſt, to the Saints which are at ———. But then, as Epheſus was the Metropolis of the Province, the Epiſtle in moſt of the Copies, went under its Name, tho' others there might be, (even as late as St Baſil's Days) inſcrib'd to no Church at all, from whence the Laodiceans might pretend, that it belong'd originally to them, and Marcion (who was of the Kingdom of Pontius, in the Confines of Phrygia, wherein Laodicea was) might, accordingly, cite it under their Name. Calmet's and Beauſobre's Preface ſur l'Epitre aux Epheſiens.

* While St Paul was preaching in Phrygia, whereof Coloſſe was one of the principal Cities, he very likely met with this Epaphras, but when, where, or upon what Occaſion he converted him from the Heathen to the Chriſtian Religion, we no where find. This only we know, that, after his own Converſion, he contributed very much to that of his Fellow-Citizens, the Inhabitants of Coloſſe, and that while St Paul was in Bonds at Rome, coming, very probably, to pay him a Viſit, himſelf was likewiſe made a Priſoner with him for the common Cauſe of Chriſtianity, Philem. ver. 23. Underſtanding however, that falſe Teachers, taking the Advantage of his Abſence, had ſown Tares among the Wheat, he engag'd St Paul (whoſe Name and Authority were reverenc'd through all Phrygia) to ſend a Letter to the Coloſſians, in order to ſet them right in Matters, wherein they were miſtaken, and to give them a true Knowledge of their falſe Teachers. This the Apoſtle very readily did; and, the more to recommend the Merit, and ſupport the Authority of Epaphras, ſtiles him his dear Fellow-Servant, and faithful Miniſter of Chriſt, Col. i. 7. being then (as tis ſaid of him) a Biſhop, and, long after, a Martyr at Coloſſe. Calmet's Commentary in Locum.

† The better to underſtand the chief Deſign of this Epiſtle, we may obſerve, that the Followers of Plato always looked upon Angels (whom they honour'd with the Name of Demons) as the great Mediators between God and Men, who carry'd up their Prayers to him, and reconvey'd his Bleſſings to them. To theſe they committed not only the Direction of the Stars and Elements, but the Adminiſtration likewiſe of all ſublunary Things, and from thence they concluded, that they were to be honour'd, for the ſame Reaſon, that we uſually do honour the Governors of Provinces, or the chief Miniſters of any State. The Followers of Simon Magus aſcrib'd the Creation of the World even to the meaneſt Kind of Angels, but thoſe of a ſuperior Order they held in the higheſt Veneration: For their Maſter, who (according to his Fancy) had ſtock'd the Heavens with theſe Intelligencies, made it one of his Principles, that none could be ſav'd without uſing ſuch and ſuch Myſteries, and ſacrificing to the God of all Things by the Mediation of theſe Celeſtial Powers. Nay, the Jews themſelves, after their Return from the Babyloniſh Captivity, began to entertain high Conceptions of the Angels, inſomuch, that in the Prophecy of Daniel, and other Books, written after that Captivity, we find the ſeveral Orders of them rang'd under their proper Names; and, among them, there was a famous Sect, called the Eſſenes, who, together with other Things, oblig'd themſelves to preſerve the Books, which were peculiar to them, and the Names of the Angels, which they held in great Eſteem. It is to be obſerv'd farther, that among the Jews there were ſeveral Sects very ſuperſtitious in their Abſtinences; that the Eſſenes deny'd themſelves the Uſe of Wine; the Nazarens held it a Crime to eat Fleſh; and the Therapeutæ would drink nothing but Water, and made Bread and Salt their common Food, except ſome more delicate Perſons, (as they called them) who us'd Honey and Hyſſop. From all which it ſeems very probable, that the Eſſenes, who were reputed the Philoſophers of the Jews, or ſome other Sects of the like Nature, having embrac'd the Chriſtian Religion, were for engaging others in the Worſhip of Angels, the Obſervation of the Jewiſh Ceremonies, and ſome particular Abſtinences, wherein they

The Epiſtle of St James. Its Contents, and his Martyrdom.

While St Paul was thus laudably employ'd in his Confinement at Rome, James, the Biſhop of Jeruſalem, was not idle; but, thinking it belong'd to his Apoſtolical Office, to take care of all the Converted among the twelve Tribes of Iſrael, wherever diſperſed, he wrote an Epiſtle to them, which, among thoſe that are called * Catholick, is placed firſt in the ſacred Canon, and was deſign'd “to ſuppreſs, and confute a dangerous Error, then growing up in the Church, viz. that a bare naked Faith was ſufficient to ſecure Mens Salvation, without any Attention to good Works; to comfort Chriſtians under the Perſecutions, which were going to be raiſed againſt them † by worldly Powers; and to awaken them out of their Stupidity, when Judgments were ready to overtake them.” To this Purpoſe, he inſerts, in his Epiſtle, many excellent Exhortations, ſuch as, “to bear Afflictions, to hear the Word of God, mortify their Luſts, to bridle their Tongues, to avoid Curſing and Swearing, and to adorn their Chriſtian Profeſſion with a good Converſation, with Meekneſs, Peaceableneſs, and Charity.” But it was not long before a Period was put to all his Labours; for the governing Part of the Jews, being highly enraged at the Diſappointment of their Malice againſt St Paul, by his appealing to Cæſar, were now reſolv'd to revenge it upon St James; and, they placed a great deal of Perfection. For, tho' this Doctrine of worſhipping Angels might originally be derived from the Platoniſts, yet ſince they, who at this time held it, added ſome Jewiſh Obſervances, they are rather to be reckon'd among the Scholars of Simon Magus, or of ſome opinionated Jews, who were for mixing the Law and the Goſpel together, and theſe were the Hereticks, whom St Paul, in his Epiſtle, ſets himſelf to oppoſe. Beauſobre's Preface ſur l'Epitre aux Coloſ. and Echard's Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory, lib. ii. c. 6.

* Ever ſince the fourth Century, this Epiſtle of St James, the two of St Peter, three of St John, and that of St Jude, have obtained the Name of Catholick, becauſe they are directed to all the Faithful, and not to any particular Church, as theſe of St Paul are; and this may ſuggeſt a Reaſon, why this Epiſtle of St James, in particular, did not at firſt meet with a general Reception. For, being in the Nature of a circular Letter, and addreſſed to no one Church, who might take care to preſerve it, and promote its Pretenſions, it might be ſome time, before it obtained its Place in the Canon; and that the rather, becauſe there ſeemed to be ſome Contradiction between the Doctrine advanced in it, viz. that by Works a Man is juſtified, and not by Faith only, Chap. ii. Ver. 24. and that in St Paul's Epiſtle to the Romans, that a Man is juſtified by Faith, without the Deeds of the Law, Chap. iii. Ver. 28. which might give ſome unſkilful Readers, not ſufficiently attentive to the Scope of each Apoſtle, ſome Umbrage of Suſpicion. Whitby's and Beauſobre's Preface to the Epiſtle of St James.

† From the Hiſtory of the Acts we learn, that about the 39th Year of Chriſt, the Churches had Peace throughout all Judea, Galilee, and Samaria, Chap. ix. Ver. 31. and ſo they ſeem to have continued, till after the Council of Jeruſalem, when they are ſaid to be eſtabliſhed in Faith, and to increaſe in Numbers daily, Acts xvi. 5. Nay, when St Paul was at Rome, he received all that came in to him, for two whole Years, preaching the Kingdom of God, with all Confidence, no Man forbidding him, Acts xxviii. 30, 31. So that, at leaſt, till the 4*th* or 5*th* Year of Nero, the Goſpel was freely preached at Rome, without any Oppoſition, either from the Romans or the Jews. But then, in the 6*th* Year of this Emperor's Reign, the Chriſtians were ſubjected to Puniſhments, (as Suetonius in Neron. c. 16. tells us) and it ſeems very probable, ſays Dr Lightfoot, that, even then, Nero had, by ſome publick Act or Edict, ſuppreſſed Chriſtianity, not only at Rome, but alſo in Judea, as he gathers from that Paſſage in Tacitus, Repreſſaque in præſens exitiabilis Superſtitio rurſus erumpebat, non modo per Judæam, Originem ejus Mali, ſed per Urbem etiam, which ſhews, that before the Perſecution began in the 10th Year of Nero, (of which Tacitus here ſpeaks) Chriſtianity had been by him ſuppreſſed, not at Rome only, but in Judea. In the 10th of his Reign he renewed his Perſecution of the Chriſtians, and this he did, not only at Rome, but, through all the Provinces of his Empire, which encouraged the Jews every where to ſhew their utmoſt Rage againſt all thoſe of their Religion, who had embraced the Faith of Chriſt, and, the nearer they drew to their final Diſſolution, the more did Satan inflame their Rage and Malice againſt thoſe Chriſtians, whom he found to be the fatal Enemies and Overthrowers of his Kingdom. Whitby's Preface to the Epiſtle of St James.

and, accordingly, taking the Opportunity of the Death of Feſtus, before the Arrival of his Succeſſor Albinus, Annas, or Ananas, the High-prieſt, ſummon'd James, and ſome others, before the Sanhedrim, requiring them to renounce the Chriſtian Faith. Their Deſire more eſpecially was, that the Apoſtle ſhould make his Renunciation in the moſt publick Manner, and therefore they carried him up to the Battlements of the Temple, and threatened to caſt him down thence in Caſe of Refuſal. But when, inſtead of gratifying their Deſires, he began himſelf to confeſs, and to exhort others to confeſs the Faith of Chriſt, in the Preſence of thoſe, who came to hear his Recantation, they ordered him to be thrown down headlong from the Place where he ſtood. By this Fall he was ſadly bruis'd, tho' not quite killed; and therefore getting upon his Knees, he was praying for his Murtherers, in the Manner of the Protomartyr St Stephen, when, as the Rabble was loading him with a Shower of Stones, one of them, more mercifully cruel than the reſt, with a Fuller's Club, beat out his Brains: A Fact altogether ſo black and barbarous, that even their [*] own Hiſtorian Joſephus could not but condemn it, and (as himſelf teſtifies) all the honeſt and conſcientious Part of the City remonſtrated againſt it, both to their King Agrippa, and to the Roman Governor, Albinus; inſomuch, that the High-prieſt, by whoſe Authority it was committed, was, in a few Months, degraded, and another put in his Place: But [†] the Bleſſed Martyr was buried in a Tomb of his own building on Mount Olivet, and, by the general Voice, his own Brother Simon was appointed his Succeſſor in the Biſhoprick of Jeruſalem.

By what Means St. Paul was deliver'd from his Impriſonment, and diſcharg'd from the Accuſation, which the Jews brought againſt him, we have no Account in Hiſtory; but may preſume, that, having not ſufficient Proof of what they alledg'd, or being inform'd, that what they alledg'd was no Violation of any Roman Law, they durſt not implead him before the Emperor, and ſo permitted him to be diſcharg'd on courſe. But before he left Italy, he wrote his famous, and moſt elaborate [‖] Epiſtle to the Hebrews, i. e. to the converted Jews, dwelling in Jeruſalem, and

[*] The Words of Joſephus are theſe,——" This was ſo ſurpriſing a Way of proceeding to all the honeſt and " conſcientious Part of the City, that they preſently ſent King Agrippa private Notice of it, as a very ill Thing " done, with a Requeſt, that Ananas might have a Check for it, and a Caution never to do any ſuch Thing for " the future; whilſt others were ſent with an Account of it to Albinus, who was then upon his Journey to Alexandria, repreſenting it as an Uſurpation, and Encroachment upon his Authority, and what ought not to have " been done without his Conſent; whereupon the Governor ſent him an angry and menacing Letter, and King " Agrippa, at the End of three Months, removed him from his Office of High-prieſt, and gave it to Jeſus, the Son " of Damnæus." Antiquities, lib. xx. c. 8.

[†] He was a Man of extraordinary Piety and Devotion, educated under the ſtricteſt Rules of Religion, and a Prieſt (as ſome imagine) of the Order of the Rechabites, or rather (as Epiphanius conjectures) of the moſt antient Form of Prieſthood, when the ſacerdotal Office was the Prerogative of the Firſt-born; and therefore 'tis ſaid, that he wore a Plate of Gold, or probably a Mitre upon his Head, as the Enſign of his Dignity. Prayer was his daily Buſineſs and Delight; ſo conſtant was he at his Devotions, that his Knees became hard and callous as a Camel's, and ſo prevalent in his Petitions to Heaven, that, in Time of great Drought, he prayed for Rain, and obtained it. Nor was his Piety towards God more remarkable, than his Charity, his Humility, his Temperance, and univerſal Goodneſs, which made him the Love and Wonder of the Age, and gained him the Character and Title of James the Juſt, or (as it is in the Syriack) of Oblias, i. e. the Defence and Fortreſs of the People, as if the Safety and Happineſs of the whole Nation depended upon his Prayers, and Intereſt with Heaven. In ſhort, he was the Delight of all good Men, and ſo much in the Favour and Eſtimation of the People, that they uſed to flock after him, and ſtrive who ſhould touch, tho' it were but the Hem of his Garment. Nor was he only loved and honoured by his Friends, but held in great Veneration by his Enemies, inſomuch, that ſome of the wiſeſt of them looked upon his Martyrdom, as an Inlet to all thoſe Miſeries and Calamities, which ſoon after flowed in upon them. Cave's Lives of the Apoſtles.

[‖] That this Epiſtle was of antient Date, and written before the Deſtruction of the Temple, and Abolition of the Jewiſh Worſhip, is manifeſt from the Author's making no mention of theſe Events, which, had they been paſſed, he would not have omitted, as being one of the beſt Arguments, that could be produced, for the and Judea, "Wherein his main Deſign is, to magnify Chriſt, and the Religion of the Goſpel, above Moſes, and the Jewiſh Oeconomy, that, by this Means, he may the better eſtabliſh the converted Jews in the Belief and Profeſſion of Chriſtianity: Wherein, to this Purpoſe, he repreſents our Saviour, in his Divine Nature, far ſuperior to all Angels, and all created Beings; and, in his mediatorial Capacity, a greater Lawgiver than Moſes; a greater Prieſt than Aaron; and a greater King and Prieſt than Melchiſedec: Wherein he ſhews, that the Ceremonies, the Sacrifices, and the Obſervances of the Law could have no Virtue in themſelves, but only as they were Types of Jeſus Chriſt; and, being now accompliſhed in his Perſon, and by his Miniſtry, were finally and totally aboliſh'd: Wherein he inſiſts upon the Neceſſity of Faith, and, by the Examples of the Patriarchs and Prophets, proves, that Juſtification is to be had no other Way, than by the Merits of a dying Saviour; and wherein, laſtly, he mingles many excellent Precepts for the Regulation of their Lives; Exhortations to Truſt and Confidence in Chriſt, in all their Sufferings; and ſtrict Cautions againſt Apoſtacy from his Religion, in the hotteſt Perſecutions."

HAVING thus diſcharg'd his Miniſtry, both by Preaching and Writing in Italy, St Paul, in Company with Timothy, proſecuted his long-intended Journey into Spain, and, 'tis probably thought, that from thence he came over, and [*] preach'd the Goſpel in Britain. After he had continued about eight or nine Months in theſe Weſtern Parts, he return'd again Eaſtward, and, leaving both Sicily and Greece, arriv'd at Crete, where he conſtituted Titus Biſhop of the Iſland, and then went with Timothy into Judea, to viſit the Chriſtians there.

St Peter's Travels and Preaching, and Defeat of Simon Magus.

IN what Manner St Peter employ'd his Time, after his Eſcape out of Priſon, we have no certain Account; but, 'tis generally agreed, that, about the ſecond Year of the Emperor Claudius, he went to Rome, and Support of his main Doctrine, the Abrogation of the Levitical Sacrifices and Prieſthood; nor could we find it quoted ſo frequently in St Clement's Letter to the Corinthians, which ſeems to have been wrote before the Downfal of Jeruſalem, had it not been of a Date prior to that Time. 'Tis not to be queſtioned then, but that this Epiſtle to the Hebrews was extant in the Apoſtolick Age; but, who its Author was, we find both Antients and Moderns in great Diſpute. Some aſcribe it to St Barnabas, others to Clemens Romanus, others to St Luke, and others again to Apollos, who, in the Sacred Hiſtory, is ſtiled an eloquent Man, and mighty in the Scriptures, Acts xviii. 24. If, however, we look into the Epiſtle itſelf, we ſhall find, that the Character can agree with none ſo well as St Paul: For as it appears, that this Epiſtle was in Being before the Deſtruction of Jeruſalem, and while the Jews had Power enough to oppreſs the Chriſtians in Judea; that the Perſon, who wrote it, was well verſed in the Scriptures of the Old Teſtament, and the moſt abſtruſe Parts of Jewiſh Theology; that he repreſents himſelf, as lately in Priſon, but, at that Time, ſet at Liberty, and hoping ſpeedily to come and ſee them; that he mentions Timothy, whom he calls his Brother, as being likewiſe releas'd, and ready to accompany him in his Journey, Hebr. xiii. 23. that he commends thoſe, to whom he writes, for having had Compaſſion of him in his Bonds, and taking joyfully the Spoiling of their Goods, Chap. x. 34. that he requeſts them to pray for him, that he might be reſtored to them ſooner, Chap. xiii. 18, 19. And, laſtly, that this Epiſtle was written from Rome, as ſome Manuſcripts have it, or from Italy, as we find it in others; we cannot but allow, that each of theſe is a ſtrong Argument, that this Epiſtle was written by St Paul, becauſe they accord ſo exactly with his Circumſtances, at this Time, above any one's elſe. But then, if we add to this the Teſtimony of the Antients, eſpecially of St Peter, who, in his ſecond Epiſtle to the Jewiſh Converts, mentions a certain Letter, which St Paul had wrote to them, diſtinct from all his other Epiſtolary Writings, 2 Peter iii. 15, 16. and can be no other, than that, which bears the Name of the Epiſtle to the Hebrews, we can no longer doubt of its being the Compoſition of St Paul; and an Original Compoſition too, ſince it has in it none of that Conſtraint, which is viſible in a Tranſlation, nor any of thoſe Hebrew Phraſes, which occur ſo frequently in the Verſion of the Septuagint. Beauſobre's and Whitby's Preface to the Epiſtle to the Hebrews.

[*] Clemens, in his famous Epiſtle to the Corinthians, expreſsly tells us, that, being a Preacher both in the Eaſt and Weſt, he taught Righteouſneſs to the whole World, and went to the utmoſt Bounds of the Weſt; and Theodoret and others inform us, that he preach'd not only in Spain, but went to other Nations, and brought the Goſpel into the Iſles of the Sea, by which he undoubtedly means Britain: And therefore he elſewhere reckons the Gauls and Britons, among the People, whom the Apoſtles, and particularly the Tent-maker, (as he calls him) perſuaded to embrace the Law of Chriſt. Cave's Lives of the Apoſtles.

and there continu'd, until that Emperor, taking the Advantage of ſome Seditions and Tumults rais'd by the Jews, by a publick Edict baniſh'd them from Rome. Upon this Occaſion St Peter return'd back to Jeruſalem, and was preſent at the great Apoſtolick Synod, whereof we have given ſome Account before. How he diſpos'd of himſelf after this, we are left under great Uncertainties, tho' the current Opinion is, that, after he had viſited the ſeveral Churches, which he had planted in the Eaſt, and carried the glad Tidings of the Goſpel into Africa, Sicily, Italy, and even as far as Britain, making great Numbers of Converts in all Places; towards the latter End of Nero's Reign, he return'd to Rome, where he found † the Minds of the People ſtrangely bewitch'd, and harden'd againſt Chriſtianity, by the Subtilties, and magical Arts of Simon Magus, whom he had formerly defeated at Samaria.

From Acts i. 10. to the End.

PROVOKED at this general Infatuation, the Apoſtle thought himſelf concerned to oppoſe this Sorcerer; and having, * in ſome Inſtances, diſcovered the Vanity of his Impoſtures, he wrought him up, at length, to ſuch a Pitch of Madneſs and Deſperation, that, to give the People an evident Demonſtration of his being the Son of God, (as he pretended) he promis'd, that, on ſuch a Day, he would aſcend viſibly up into Heaven. Accordingly, at the Time appointed, he went up to the Mount of the Capitol, and, throwing himſelf from the Top of the Rock, began his Flight, and, by the Help of ſome infernal Powers, ſeem'd to be poſting to Heaven; when, immediately upon the Apoſtle's Prayer to God, that the People might be undeceiv'd, and the Cheat detected, his inviſible Supporters withdrew, and † down he came headlong, ſo miſerably bruiſed, and wounded with his Fall, that, in a ſhort Time after, he expired.

NERO,

† Juſtin Martyr aſſures us, that this Impoſtor was honour'd as a Deity; that a Statue was erected to him in the Inſula Tyberina, with this Inſcription, SIMONI DEO SANCTO, which is confirmed by the Teſtimony of Irenæus, Tertullian, and ſeveral others after them. Whatever therefore may be ſaid to ſhake the Credit of this Inſcription, it can hardly be thought, that Juſtin Martyr, who was a Perſon of great Learning and Gravity, inquiſitive about Things of this Nature, and, at this Time, at Rome, where he might fully ſatisfy himſelf of the Truth of it, would have inſerted any Thing, in his Apology to the Emperor and the Senate of Rome, but what he knew would bear the Teſt; and yet he ſpeaks twice of this Statue, and deſires of them, that if, upon Enquiry, they ſhould find what he ſaid to be true, they would aboliſh it. Cave's Lives of the Apoſtles, and Whitby's Preface to the Second Epiſtle to the Theſſalonians.

* A noble Inſtance of this Kind we have in Hegeſippus the Younger: "There was, at this Time, ſays he, in Rome, a Gentleman of ſome Note, a Kinſman to the Emperor, lately dead. Thoſe who knew St Peter's Power in working Miracles, adviſ'd his Friends to ſend for him, and others likewiſe prevail'd, that Simon the Magician might be ſent for. Glad of this Occaſion to magnify himſelf before the People, Simon propounded to Peter, that, if he rais'd the Man to Life, Peter, who had reviled the mighty Power of God, (as he ſtiled himſelf) ſhould loſe his Life; but that, if Peter prevail'd, he would ſubmit to the ſame Penalty. Peter accepted the Challenge; and, when Simon began his Charms and Enchantments, the dead Body ſeem'd to move his Hand: Whereupon the People, who ſtood by, thinking that the Perſon was alive, were going to fall foul upon Peter, for daring to oppoſe ſo great a Power. But Peter, intreating their Patience, deſir'd only that the Magician might be remov'd from the Bed-ſide; which when they had done, the Deception vaniſh'd, and the Body remain'd without the leaſt Sign of Motion. Then Peter, ſtanding at a good Diſtance from the Bed, ſilently made his Addreſſes to Heaven, and, when he had ſo done, in the Preſence of them all, commanded the Man, in the Name of the Lord Jeſus, to ariſe, which he inſtantly did; ſo that the People, changing their Minds, were going to ſtone the Magician, but that Peter interpoſed for his Life, by telling them, that it would be Puniſhment enough to him to live, and ſee, that, in Deſpite of all his Power and Malice, the Kingdom of Chriſt would increaſe and flouriſh." Cave's Lives of the Apoſtles.

† It muſt be own'd, that the Truth of this whole Tranſaction, between St Peter and Simon Magus, has been greatly ſuſpected, not only upon the Account of the ſmall Authority of thoſe Apocryphal Writers, from whom it was firſt taken, but by Reaſon of the great Diſagreement likewiſe, which appears in their Relation of the ſeveral Circumſtances of it. For, whereas ſome of them ſay, that Simon Magus made himſelf Wings to fly with; others affirm, that he was inviſibly held up by two Devils; others, that he made himſelf a Chariot; and others again, that he aſcended a fiery One drawn by four Horſes, but all done by the Art of Magick: And whereas ſome ſay, that, by his Fall, he cruſhed his whole Body to Pieces; and others, that he daſh'd out his Brains; others aver, that he only broke a Thigh, a Leg, or an Arm; and this done in the Reign of Claudius, according NERO, the Emperor, was a profeſſed Patron of Magicians, and of all ſuch as maintain'd a ſecret Commerce with the infernal Powers. He had a particular Diſlike to the Doctrine of Chriſtianity likewiſe, as being ſo very repugnant to the Luſts and Paſſions, which he indulg'd; and was not a little offended at the many Converſions, which St Peter had made, in Perſons of ſome Diſtinction, from a vicious and diſſolute Courſe of Life, which the Emperor admired in any: So that he not only commanded him, and St Paul (who was at this Time at Rome) to be apprehended, and caſt into Priſon, but, by a publick Edict, raiſed the † firſt general Perſecution againſt the Church, wherein Chriſtians, of all Orders and Degrees, were * treated with the utmoſt Contempt and Cruelty.

Martyrdom.

In this common Calamity Andrew, the Apoſtle, and (as moſt think) the younger Brother of St Peter, was call'd to ſuffer. He, having preached the Goſpel, wrought many Miracles, and ſuffer'd many Hardſhips in the wild Northern Countries of Scythia and Sogdiana, and, after that, in ſome of the Provinces of the Leſſer Aſia, came at length into † Epirus and Achaia, ‖ two Provinces of Greece, where he to ſome; but in the Reign of Nero, according to others; by Peter alone, as ſome will have it; but by Peter and Paul in Conjunction, according to the Report of others. Nor is it a ſmall Diſcredit to this Story, that the Ancients of the three firſt Centuries, who ſpeak much of Simon's being at Rome, and having his Statue erected there, ſhould ſay nothing of his Flight, or his Fall, tho' they had juſt Reaſon to ſpeak of them, had they believed them true: Nor is it credible, (ſaith Hornius) that all the Roman Writers of thoſe Times, Suetonius, Tacitus, Pliny, &c. ſhould paſs over ſo memorable a Thing in Silence, eſpecially, if Simon was ſo honoured by Claudius, and beloved by Nero, as ſome Authors of this Story ſay he was. This is the Subſtance of what is alledged againſt it; and yet, according to others, it is fully atteſted by the Apoſtolick Conſtitutions; hinted at in the Recognitions; taken for a known Fact by ſuch as lived neareſt to Rome, viz. Arnobius, Ambroſius, and St Jerom de Script. Eccleſ. fully mentioned by Euſebius, Cyril of Jeruſalem, Epiphanius, and many others; contradicted by no one Eccleſiaſtical Writer, and yet ſuppoſed to be alluded to in that Paſſage of Suetonius, where he tells us, that Icarus, primo ſtatim Conatu juxta Cubiculum Nevonis decidit, ipſumque Cruores reſperſit, i. e. Icarus, or one that flew in the Air, in his firſt Attempt, fell down near the Emperor's Pavilion, and ſprinkled his Blood upon him. Whitby's Preface to the 2d Epiſtle to the Theſſalonians, and Whiſton's Anſwer to the Grounds and Reaſons of the Chriſtian Religion.

† Before the Roman Empire was converted to Chriſtianity, there are commonly reckoned ten general Perſecutions. The firſt, in the 10th Year of Nero, A. D. 64. the ſecond, in the 14th of Domitian, A. D, 95. the third, in the 3d of Trajan, A. D. 106. the fourth, in the 2d of Antoninus Philoſophus, A. D. 257. the ninth, in the 4th of Aurelian, A D. 274. and the tenth, in the 19th of Diocleſian, A. D. 303. till at length Chriſtianity came to be eſtabliſhed by human Laws, A. D. 313. Echard's Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory.

* As to the Particulars of this Perſecution, Tacitus tells us, that, at firſt, ſeveral were ſeized, who made Profeſſion of this new Religion, and, by their Confeſſion, infinite Numbers of others were detected, and executed, and, in the Manner of their Execution, were treated with all the Inſtances of Scorn and Barbarity. Some of them were wrapt up in the Skins of wild Beaſts, and worried and devoured by Dogs; others were crucified; and others burnt alive, in Paper-coats dipped in Pitch, Wax, and other combuſtible Matters, that, when Day-light failed, they might ſerve for Torches and Illuminations in the Night. Nero exhibited theſe Spectacles in his own Gardens, impiouſly joining to them the Diverſions of the Cirque, and appearing himſelf publickly in the Habit of a Charioteer ſitting in his Chariot, which yet the People entertained more with Pity, than Pleaſure, as knowing they were not done for the publick Benefit, but merely to gratify the Tyrant's private Rage and Malice. Echard's Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory, l. 1. c. 7.

† This is a Province of Greece, in its largeſt Acceptation, lying along the Coaſt of the Ionian Sea, and having for its Bounds, on the North, Albania; on the North-Eaſt, Theſſaly; on the South-Eaſt, Achaia; and on the Weſt, the Ocean. This Country was anciently govern'd by its own Princes, then united to the Kingdom of Macedon; after that, ſubjected to the Romans; then reſtor'd to its own Princes; but is now in the Poſſeſſion of the Turks, except ſome few Places, which the Venetians regain'd in a late War. he ſtill added more Converts to the Chriſtian Faith. At laſt, in † Patræa, a City of Achaia, Ægeas, the Pro-counſul, obſerving the Multitudes, that, by the Apoſtle's Preaching, had fallen off from Paganiſm, and embrac'd Chriſtianity, and being not a little offended at his oppoſing his Mandates for the Re-eſtabliſhment of Idolatry, and undauntedly perſiſting in his Publication of the Doctrine of a crucified Saviour, condemn'd him to the Death, which he ſo much extoll'd. After ſeven Lictors therefore had cruelly torn his naked Body, he was led out, with great Chearfulneſs, and Serenity of Mind, to be crucified. But his Croſs was not of the uſual Form: It was made of two Pieces of Timber, croſſing each other in the Middle, in the Shape of the Letter X, (which ever ſince has been known by the Name of St Andrew's Croſs) and to this he was faſten'd, not with Nails, but Cords, to make his Death more painful and lingering. In this Condition he hung for the Space of three Days, all the while teaching and inſtructing the People; exhorting them to Conſtancy and Perſeverance in that Religion, which he had deliver'd to them; and, when great Interceſſions were made to the Pro-conſul for his Life, earneſtly requeſting of our Lord in Prayer, that he might on that Day (which was the laſt of November) depart, and ſeal the Truth of his Religion † with his Blood.

Kingdoms, or States, 'till Philip, King of Macedon, and, after him, Alexander, his Son, reduced it all under their Subjection, and made it a Monarchy. This Kingdom was afterwards deſtroy'd by the Romans, and made a Province of the Empire, in which Condition it continued (tho' ſorely mangled by the Goths and Huns) till the Turks (who are its preſent Maſters) over-ran it, and have, long ſince, effaced all its ancient and magnificent Monuments, as well as reduced the People to a State of the utmoſt Slavery and Stupidity. Wells's Geography of the New Teſtament, and the Compleat Geographer.

† This City is ſeated on an Hill near the Sea, at a little Diſtance from the Mountain, formerly called Cerynea, and not above ten Miles from the Mouth of the Gulph Lepanto. It is a Place of good Trade, very populous, eſpecially of Jews. It is defended with a ſtrong Caſtle, and has the Honour to be an Archbiſhop's See, which has, at preſent, a Thouſand Churches under its Juriſdiction. In ancient Times the Goddeſs Diana was worſhipped here in a cruel Manner, having a moſt beautiful young Man and Maid, every Year, ſacrificed to her, till, by the Preaching of St. Andrew, Eurypilus was converted to Chriſtianity, and then that horrid Superſtition was laid aſide. † His Body, being taken down from the Croſs and embalmed, was decently and honourably interred by Maximilla, a Lady of great Quality and Fortune; but afterwards, by Conſtantine the Great, it was ſolemnly remov'd from Patræa to Conſtantinople, and there buried in a great Church, which he had built in Honour of all the Apoſtles. Cave's Lives.

* This Hymeneus was, very probably, a Citizen of Epheſus, who, being converted by ſome of St Paul's firſt Sermons, fell afterwards into the Hereſy of thoſe, who denied the Reſurrection of the Body, and affirmed, that there was no other Reſurrection, than that of the Soul, which, by Faith and Baptiſm, is revived from Sin to Grace. The Alexander, who was his Colleague in this Hereſy, was doubtleſs the Copper-ſmith, whom St Paul, in his ſecond Epiſtle to Timothy, loudly complains of, as greatly obſtructing the good Effect of his Preaching, Chap. iv. 14. but whether he was the ſame Alexander, who would have addreſſed himſelf to the Multitude, which Demetrius, the Silver-ſmith of Epheſus, had drawn together, Acts xix. 24, is a Matter of ſome Doubt. However this be, 'tis certain, that their Notion of no other Reſurrection, than a ſpiritual One, was deſtructive of the very Foundations of Chriſtianity, which are laid in the Hopes of a Reſurrection from the Dead; and therefore the Apoſtle thought it expedient to have them excommunicated, i. e. ſeparated from the Society of the Faithful, and deprived of the Privileges of being preſent at religious Aſſemblies, of partaking of the Lord's Supper, and joining in ſuch other holy Offices, as linked Chriſtians together in one and the ſame Society and Communion. Whitby's Annotations on 2 Tim. ii. 17. iv. 14. and Calmet's Dictionary, under the Word.

‖ Among the Learned there is no ſmall Diſagreement as to the Time, when this Epiſtle was written. That it was written after St Paul's Departure from Epheſus to Macedonia, ſome have gather'd from theſe Words, When I went into Macedonia, I beſought thee to abide at Epheſus, 1 Tim. i. 3. And that it was written, when he was in Expectation of returning ſhortly thither, they conclude from theſe, I write to thee, hoping to come to thee quickly, 1 Tim. iii. 14. From whence they argue, that it muſt have been written before he came to Miletus, becauſe there he ſeems to have laid aſide all Thoughts of returning any more to Epheſus, as he tells the Clergy of that Place, And I know that all you, among whom I have gone, preaching the Kingdom of God, ſhall ſee my Face no more, Acts xx. 25. And therefore they conclude, that it was written while he was in Macedonia, i. e. in the firſt of Nero, and in the Year of our Lord 55. Others allow indeed, that this Epiſtle was written after that St Paul was gone into Macedonia, but then they contend, that this Journey into Macedonia was none of thoſe, that are recorded in the Acts of the Apoſtles. In his firſt Journey Timothy went with him, but then the Apoſtle had never ſeen Epheſus, Acts xvi. 10, &c. In his ſecond, tho' he went from Epheſus, yet ſo far was he from leaving Timothy there, that he ſent him and Eraſtus before him, Acts xix. 21, 22. And, in the third, he did not go from Epheſus, but from Greece into Macedonia, whence Timothy accompany'd him, firſt to Jeruſalem, and then to Rome, Acts xx. 3, 4. So that there could be no Poſſibility for St Paul to leave Timothy at Epheſus, while himſelf departed into Macedonia, till after the Time of his Return from Rome. They therefore ſuppoſe, that, after he was releas'd from his Confinement, he return'd into Aſia, and, having made ſome Stay at Epheſus, went from thence into Macedonia; that this is the Time, when he beſought Timothy to abide ſtill at Epheſus, and, conſequently, that this Epiſtle was written to him about the 10th of Nero, and in the Year of our Lord 63. For ſince, in the Courſe of the Hiſtory of the Acts, (which extends as far as St Paul's Impriſonment) we can find no Room to place this Epiſtle, we muſt neceſſarily refer it to the Time, which was ſubſequent to his Releaſement, and when he went to re-viſit the Churches, which he had planted in the Eaſt. Whitby's and Beauſobre's Preface to the firſt Epiſtle to Timothy.

* Nicopolis, by the Turks called Sciltaro, ſtands on the Danube, at the Mouth of the Iatrus, or Iſchar, twenty-five Miles North from Siliſtria. It was built by the Emperor Trajan, in Memory of his Victory over King Decebalus; and, near this Place, Sigiſmund, King of Hungary, was unfortunately defeated by Bajazet the Turkiſh Emperor, A. D. 1136. which was owing more to the Diviſions among the Chriſtians, than the Bravery of the Turks; for, of the latter, there fell ſixty Thouſand, but of the former only twenty, as Hiſtory relates. The compleat Geographer.

† There is ſome Diſpute among the Learned concerning the Time, when this Epiſtle was written. That it was written after the Time that St Paul had left Titus at Crete, Titus i. 5. cannot be deny'd; but then the Queſtion is, when St Paul was at Crete, ſince, in all the Acts of the Apoſtles, we find no Footſteps of his being there. In his Voyage to Rome indeed, the Veſſel, in which he ſailed, touch'd at the Fair Havens belonging to Crete; but, as that was no commodious Harbour, ſhe ſoon ſet ſail from thence in hopes to make Phenice, another Port in the ſame Iſland, but, by contrary Winds, was drove another Way. Whether St Paul, at this Time, had Titus in Company with him, it no where appears; but the ſhort Stay, which he made at the Fair Havens, (which was only to conſult, whether they ſhould winter there or not) will not permit us to think, (eſpecially conſidering, that, at this Time, he was a Priſoner in Bonds) either that he attempted to preach the Goſpel there, or that he had any Occaſion to leave Titus in the Iſland, to ſet in Order the Things that were wanting, and to ordain Elders in every City. As therefore we ſaid before, in relation to the Epiſtle to Timothy, viz. that, after St Paul was reſtor'd to his Liberty, he return'd into the Eaſt to viſit the Churches, which he had planted; in his Voyage from Rome to Jeruſalem, he might conveniently enough call at Crete; after he had ſtay'd, and preach'd ſome Time there, leave Titus behind him, to regulate ſuch Matters, as he had not Time and Opportunity himſelf to do; and, in a Year or two after (i. e. in the 12th of Nero, and of our Lord 65.) ſend him this Letter to renew his Inſtructions, and to requeſt his Company. For, that this Epiſtle was written after the Apoſtle had obtain'd his Diſcharge, is manifeſt from his making no mention of his Bonds and Temptations, as he does in his Epiſtle to the Epheſians, Chap. vi. 20. to the Philippians, i. 7. to the Coloſſians, iv. 18. to Philemon, ver. 9. and in his ſecond to Timothy, Chap. i. 8. and whoever compares this Epiſtle to Titus, with the two to Timothy, will find ſuch an Affinity in their Subjects, the ſame Sentiments, and the ſame Inſtructions, occaſion'd by the

His Return to Rome, and being caſt into Priſon with St Peter.

From Nicopolis (as ſoon as Winter was over) St Paul went a third Time to Corinth, where (e) he appointed Eraſtus to continue: Thence croſſing the Sea into Aſia, he came to Epheſus, where, upon his Departure, he left Timothy in Tears, and ſo proceeded to Miletum, where he left Trophimus ſick. From Miletum he travelled Northward to Troas, and lodg'd with Carpus ‖, one of his Diſciples, where (f) he left his Cloak †, ſome Books, and Parchment-Rolls; and, in all Probability, about this Time it was, that he ſuffer'd thoſe Perſecutions, and Afflictions at Antioch, Iconium, and Lyſtra, (g) whereof he makes mention to Timothy, and thanks God for his Deliverance from them. But, tho' God was pleas'd to deliver him from theſe Afflictions, yet it was not long, before he diſcover'd to him the near Approach of his Death, and gave him to know particularly, that at Rome he was to ſuffer Martyrdom; which was ſo far from retarding, that it made him haſten his Journey, with Joy and Alacrity, to that Place.

It was about the twelfth or thirteenth Year of Nero's Reign, when he came to Rome the ſecond Time, where meeting and joining with Peter, they both us'd their utmoſt Endeavours to inſtruct the Jews, in their Synagogues, and to convert the Gentiles in all publick Places and Aſſemblies. This ſoon raiſed the Malice and Indignation of the Magiſtrates, eſpecially of the Governor (h) Helius, whom Nero, at his Departure into Greece, left inveſted with exorbitant Powers, which he exercis'd after as exorbitant a Manner. It was Crime enough for theſe two Apoſtles, that they were Chriſtians; but the particular Prejudice againſt Peter is ſaid to have been his defeating Simon Magus, and the ſame Set of Men, who began now to appear in the Eaſt, and ſpread their Fables and Impoſtures every where, as will eaſily convince him, that they were all written much about the ſame Time, tho' the firſt to Timothy ſeems to be of a prior Date to that to Titus, even as that to Titus may be thought to precede the ſecond to Timothy. In relation to Titus, (for this is the laſt Time we ſhall meet with him in our Hiſtory) after having preach'd the Goſpel in Dalmatia, 2 Tim. iv. 10. he is ſaid to have return'd into Crete; to have propagated the Chriſtian Religion in the neighbouring Iſlands; and, dying in the ninety-fourth Year of his Age, and being bury'd in Crete, to have had the Cathedral Church of the Iſland dedicated to his Name. Whitby's and Beauſobre's Preface to the Epiſtle to Titus, and Calmet's Commentary.

‖ We know very little of the Life of Carpus, only that he muſt be a different Perſon from St Polycarp, Biſhop of Smyrna, and from that other Carpus, whom the falſe Dionyſius, in his Letter to Demophilus, makes mention of. The Greeks tell us a great many Particulars of him, which are far from being certain. They affirm, that he was one of the ſeventy Diſciples; that he propagated the Truth in ſeveral Places; that he wrought Abundance of Miracles; that he was St Paul's Aſſiſtant in preaching the Goſpel, and was employ'd by him in carrying his Epiſtles. They make him Biſhop of Beræa, and ſay, that he died in Peace. Calmet's Commentary and Dictionary, under the Word.

† What we are to underſtand by St Paul's Cloak, will beſt be reſolv'd in our Anſwers to the following Objections. We have only to obſerve here,——That the Time, when he left this Cloak, was not when he went from Troas to Aſſos in his Journey to Jeruſalem, for then (as Biſhop Pearſon ſays) he could have no Cauſe to leave any Thing of Moment, having ſo many to accompany him in his Journey, as well as a Ship to attend him, Acts xx. 4, 6. 13. but it was in his Travels, after he was ſet at Liberty, and had left Rome, or rather in his Return to Rome again, that, in the Hurry of his Departure, he left ſome Things with Carpus, which he afterwards found he wanted. Whitby's Annotations, and Calmet's Commentary.

However this be, apprehended they both were, and caſt into Priſon, where they ſpent their Time in the moſt ſolemn Acts of Devotion, and, as Occaſion offer'd, preach'd the Goſpel to their Guards and Fellow-Priſoners, among whom it is ſaid, that they converted Proceſſus and Martinian, two Captains of the Guard, with ſeven and forty others.

Peter's ſecond Epiſtle, and Paul's ſecond Epiſtle to Timothy, with their Contents.

DURING the Time of the Apoſtle's Confinement, St Peter wrote his ſecond general Epiſtle * to the converted Jews, who were diſpers'd in the ſeveral Provinces of Aſia: “Wherein he endeavours, by earneſt Exhortations, to prevail with them to perſevere in the Doctrine, which they had receiv'd, and to teſtify the Soundneſs and Sincerity of their Faith by a Chriſtian Life comporting therewith: Wherein he forewarns them of the falſe Teachers †, that would ſhortly ſpring up among them; foretels their ſad and miſerable Deſtruction; and deſcribes them by their odious Characters, that they might avoid them: Wherein he vindicates the Doctrine of Chriſt's coming to Judgment, which the Hereticks of thoſe Times deny'd, that thereby they might encourage Men the more ſecurely to purſue their lewd Courſes; and wherein he deſcribes the ‖ great and terrible Day of the Lord, when the Elements ſhall melt, and the whole Frame of Nature be diſſolv'd, thereby to excite them to become circumſpect and diligent, in order to be found of him in Peace, without Spot, and blameleſs.”

ABOUT the ſame Time, St Paul wrote his ſecond Epiſtle * to Timothy: “Wherein

---

* That this Epiſtle was written by St Peter, is evident both from the Inſcription it bears, and the Concurrence of Circumſtances in it, relating to that Apoſtle, and none elſe; and therefore we may ſuppoſe, that the true Reaſon of its late Reception into the Liſt of the Holy Scriptures, was, not ſo much its Difference of Stile, as its not being addreſs'd to any particular Church, that might have taken care to preſerve it, and, in due Time, to have enter'd its Claim for a Place in the Canon: And that it was indited, not after the Deſtruction of Jeruſalem, as ſome will have it, but a little before the Author's Death, (not improbably in the 13th of Nero's Reign, A. D. 67.) may be juſtly concluded from this Declaration of his, I think it meet, as long as I am in this Tabernacle, to put you always in Remembrance of theſe Things, knowing, that ſhortly I ſhall put off this Tabernacle, even as our Lord Jeſus Chriſt hath ſhewn me, 2 Pet. i. 12, 13, 14. Beauſobre's, Whitby's, and Hammond's Preface to the 2d Epiſtle of St Peter.

† There are three Sorts of People, which the Apoſtle cautions his Converts againſt in this Epiſtle. 1ſt, The Solifidians, who talked of obtaining Salvation by the Strength of their Faith, or a right Belief of the Doctrines of Chriſtianity, without any Regard to a virtuous Life. 2dly, The Nicholaitans, who turn'd the Grace of God into Laſciviouſneſs, and, upon the Preſumption of their being ſpiritual Perſons, and the Seed of Election, averr'd, that they contracted no Guilt, and could receive no Pollution, from any evil Action they did. And 3dly, The Scoffers at the Promiſe of Chriſt's coming to Judgment, which they look'd upon as a Thing, that could never be verify'd, and which the Continuance of their Perſecutions gave the Chriſtians ſmall Hopes of expecting. Whitby's Pref. to the ſecond Epiſtle of St Peter.

‖ It is the Opinion of the reverend and judicious Dr Hammond, and Dr Lightfoot, that St. Peter, in the third Chapter of his ſecond Epiſtle, does not diſcourſe of our Lord's coming to the general Judgment of all Mankind; but only of his coming to execute his Judgment on the Jews in the final Deſtruction of their Church and Nation: But, beſides that this Notion is entirely new, and contrary to the Sentiments of all the Ancients, who have commented upon this Epiſtle, it ſeems obvious at firſt Sight, that the Day of the Lord, in which the Heavens ſhall paſs away with a great Noiſe, and the Elements ſhall melt with fervent Heat, the Earth alſo, and the Works that are therein, ſhall be burnt up, can mean no other, than the great Day of Judgment: For, to interpret theſe Words of the Deſtruction of Jeruſalem only, is to turn them into a Metaphor and Allegory; whereas St Peter ſays plainly, that, as the old World was deſtroy'd by Water, ſo ſhall the World that now is, be deſtroy'd by Fire, 2 Pet. iii. 6, 7. 'Tis uſual indeed with the Prophets to repreſent God's Judgments on the Enemies of his Church and People, by the Tragical Expreſſions of burning up the Earth, and diſſolving the Heavens, Iſa. xiii. 9, &c. xxxiv. 3, &c. but this ſolemn Exhortation, Seeing then all theſe Things ſhall be diſſolved, what Manner of Perſons ought we to be in all holy Converſation and Godlineſs; looking for, and haſtening to, the Coming of our Lord and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, that we may be found of him without Spot, and blameleſs? 2 Pet. iii. 11, 12. This Exhortation, I ſay, ſounds too high for the Deſtruction of Jeruſalem, in which they of Pontus and Galatia could not be much concern'd; but is very proper for thoſe, who had the lively Ideas of the Conflagration of the World, and the tremendous Judgment and Perdition of ungodly Men, then ſet before them. Whitby's Preface to the ſecond Epiſtle of St Peter.

* That, at two different Times, St Paul was a Priſoner at Rome, is evident from the Circumſtances, which himſelf relates. In his firſt Confinement, he was permitted to live in his hired Houſe, and to receive all that came to him,

A. M. 4071, &c. Ann. Dom. 67, &c.

From Acts i. 10. to the End.

“Wherein he informs him of the near Approach of his Death, and deſires him to come to him before Winter, becauſe moſt of his Companions, upon one Affair or other, were departed from him; wherein he exhorts him to diſcharge all the Duties of a Biſhop and Paſtor, ſuitable to thoſe excellent Gifts he had receiv'd, and with a generous Contempt of the World, and worldly Things; wherein he admoniſhes him, not to forget the Doctrine which he had taught him, nor to be ſurpris'd, or diſturb'd at the Apoſtacy of ſome from the Faith, but to preach the more zealouſly againſt ſuch Oppoſers, as heap'd up to themſelves Teachers, and left the Truth to turn unto Fables; and wherein he acquainted him, how, at his firſt Appearing before Helius, all his Companions, for Fear of being involv'd in his Puniſhment, (i) forſook him, but that the Lord ſtood by him, and ſtrengthened him, to make his Preaching more conſpicuous, and effectual to the Gentiles.”

Both the Apoſtles ſuffer Martyrdom at Rome; Peter is crucified, and Paul beheaded.

How long theſe two Apoſtles lived under their Confinement, we have no certain Knowledge, but at laſt, it being determin'd that they ſhould both die, (k) Peter, as a Jew and Foreigner, was ſentenced to be crucified, and Paul, * as a Roman Citizen, to be beheaded. * On the 29th of June, (as it is generally ſuppos'd) St Peter, being firſt ſcourg'd, according to the Roman Cuſtom, was led to the Top of the Vatican Mount, near Tiber, where he deſir'd the Favour of the Officers, that he might be crucified with his Head downwards, as thinking himſelf unworthy

Acts xxviii. 30, 31. but, in his ſecond, he was ſo cloſely ſhut up, that Oneſiphorus was forced to enquire diligently after him, before he found him, 2 Tim. i. 17. In the firſt, Timothy and Mark were both with him, and conſtantly attending him, Phil. i. 1. and Col. iv. 10. In the ſecond, they were both abſent in Aſia, and knew nothing of what paſs'd in Rome, 2 Tim. iv. 11. In the firſt, Demas had adjoin'd himſelf to him, and was become a Fellow-labourer in the Goſpel. In the ſecond, out of Love to the Things of this World, he had forſaken him, and departed to Theſſalonica, 2 Tim. iv. 10. In the firſt, many of the Brethren, waxing confident by his Bonds, were much more bold to ſpeak the Word without Fear, Phil. i. 14. But, in the ſecond, they were ſo intimidated, that they all forſook him, and not one Man ſtood with him, 2 Tim. iv. 16. And if it thus appears, that St. Paul was twice in Cuſtody at Rome, himſelf gives us to underſtand, that this Epiſtle was written under his latter Confinement, and was, very probably, the laſt, that ever he wrote: For, I am ready to be offered, and the Time of my Departure is at Hand; I have finiſhed my Courſe, and from henceforth there is laid up for me a Crown of Glory, 2 Tim. iv. 6, &c. are the Words of one, that is approaching to his latter End. This therefore is a ſtrong Indication of the ſingular Affection, which St Paul had for Timothy, that he favour'd him with one of the laſt Letters, that he ever wrote: And if, purſuant to this Letter, Timothy went to Rome, (as probably he did) he muſt have been there when the Apoſtle was led out to ſuffer, and finiſh'd his Courſe in a glorious Martyrdom. After the Death of St Paul, the Hiſtory of Timothy is but ſhort; only we may ſuppoſe, that he return'd to Epheſus, probably the Year following, and there continu'd to govern that Church in the Capacity of their Biſhop, until the Pagans of that City, who were great Votaries to the Goddeſs Diana, celebrating a Feſtival called Catagogian, in which they carried about the Images of their Gods, and by Means of their Maſk and Clubs committed a thouſand Inſolencies and Outrages, Timothy ſtood in the Streets to oppoſe, and reprove this execrable Cuſtom, which ſo enrag'd the People, that, falling upon him with Stones and Clubs, they left him for dead: But ſome of his Diſciples, finding him to breathe, took him up, and lodg'd him without the Gates, where in two Days he expired, and was afterwards buried on a Mountain not far from the City. Whitby's and Beauſobre's Preface to the ſecond Epiſtle of Timothy, and Echard's Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory.

* This was accounted a more noble Kind of Death, not among the Romans only, but among other Nations, as being fitter for Perſons of better Quality, and more ingenuous Education: And, from this Inſtrument of his Execution, the Cuſtom no doubt firſt aroſe, that in all Pictures, and Images of this Apoſtle, he is conſtantly repreſented with a Sword in his right Hand. He is ſaid to have ſuffer'd in the ſixty-eighth Year of his Age, to have been buried in the Via Oſtienſis, about two Miles from Rome, and, by Conſtantine the Great, to have had a ſtately Church, in the Year 418, built over his Grave. It was adorn'd with an hundred of the beſt Marble Columns, and beautified with the moſt exquiſite Workmanſhip; but, as it was afterwards thought to be too narrow and little for the Honour of ſo great an Apoſtle, Valentinian, or rather Theodoſius the Emperor, (the one but finiſhing what the other begun) by a Reſcript, directed to Saluſtius Prefect of the City, cauſed it to be taken down, and a larger and more noble one to be built in its Room. Cave's Lives of the Apoſtles.

* Many of the Ancients poſitively affirm, that both theſe Apoſtles ſuffer'd on the ſame Day and Year: but others, tho' allowing the ſame Day, tell us, That St Paul did not ſuffer till a Year after St. Peter, and ſome interpoſe the Diſtance of ſeveral Years. Cave, ibid.

unworthy to ſuffer in the ſame Poſture, wherein his Lord and Maſter had ſuffer'd before him. In this Manner † he expir'd upon the Croſs; while St Paul, having converted three of the Soldiers, that were ſent to guard him to his Execution, and who, within a few Days after died Martyrs themſelves, when he came to the Place, called Aquæ Salviæ, about three Miles out of the City, after ſome ſolemn Preparation, chearfully gave up his Neck to the fatal Stroke.

THUS died * the two moſt eminent Apoſtles of Jeſus Chriſt, after they had, with indefatigable Labour, reap'd a glorious Harveſt of infinite Numbers of Souls, and triumphantly propagated Salvation to the moſt conſiderable Parts of the World; and as they were equally concern'd in the Foundation of the Church of Rome, the one having the Jewiſh, and the other the Gentile Converts under his Care and Government, when both of them were dead, the whole Adminiſtration of it devolv'd upon † Linus, one of St Paul's Diſciples, of whom he makes mention in his ſecond Epiſtle to Timothy (l), and who, after twelve Years Preſiding therein, is ſaid to have ſuffer'd Martyrdom either in the firſt or ſecond Year of Titus.

St Jude's Epiſtle; the Occaſion of it, and Contents.

ONE of St Paul's Predictions was, that in the Chriſtian Church (m) Hereſies ſhould ariſe, for the Manifeſtation of ſuch, as were found in the Faith; which Prediction began now to be verified: For, beſides the immediate Followers of Simon Magus, * thoſe of Menander, Ebion, and Cerinthus, as well as others, who are ſtiled (n) * Nicholaitans, appearing eager Advocates for ſuch Principles, as ſapp'd the very Foundations of the Chriſtian Religion, oblig'd † St Jude to write his Epiſtle (in the ſame Manner as St Peter did his) to the Jewiſh Converts, in their ſeveral Diſperſions: “Wherein he informs them, that his primary Intention was, to have wrote to them in general of the common Salvation, in order to confirm them in it; yet, ſeeing the Doctrine of Chriſt attack'd on every Side by Hereticks, he thought it more neceſſary to exhort them to ſtand up manfully for the Defence of the Faith once deliver'd to the Saints, and to oppoſe thoſe falſe Teachers, who ſo earneſtly labour'd to corrupt them; and, that they might know theſe the better, he deſcribes them in their proper Colours, and foretells their future, if not impending Deſtruction; but exhorts them, at the ſame Time, to endeavour, by all gentle Methods, to ſave them, and to take them out of the Fire, into which their own Folly had caſt them.”

---

† His Body, being taken from the Croſs, was embalm'd after the Jewiſh Manner by Marcellinus the Preſbyter, and ſo buried in the Vatican, near the Triumphal Way. Over his Grave a ſmall Church was ſoon after erected, but, when it was deſtroy'd by Heliogabulus, his Body was remov'd to the Cemetry in the Appian Way, two Miles diſtant from Rome. Here it continu'd, 'till, in the Time of Pope Cornelius, it was re-convey'd to the Vatican, where it abode in ſome Obſcurity, until Conſtantine the Great, out of the profound Reverence he had for the Chriſtian Religion, having rebuilt, and enlarg'd the Vatican to the Honour of St Peter, enrich'd it with Gifts and Ornaments, which, in every Age, increas'd in Splendor and Beauty, 'till it is become one of the Wonders of the World at this Day. Cave, ibid.

* Before we part with theſe two Apoſtles, it may not be amiſs to take a ſhort Survey of their Perſons and Tempers. St Peter (if we may believe the Deſcription which Nicephorus gives us of him) was of a middle Size, but ſomewhat ſlender, and inclining to Tallneſs: His Complexion was very pale; his Hair thick and curled; his Eyes black; his Eye-brows thin; and his Noſe large, but not ſharp. In his natural Temper (as moſt Galileans were) he was warm, eager, and enterprizing; ſtout and courageous in the main, tho', in ſome Caſes, his Fear prevail'd, and deſtroy'd the Succours, which Reaſon offer'd. His Humility and Lowlineſs of Mind was ſingular; his Affection and Zeal for his Maſter wonderful; his Love for the Souls of Men ardent; his Diligence in his miniſterial Office indefatigable; and his Rule and Conduct in his Epiſcopal Capacity highly prudent and engaging. St Paul (if we may believe the ſame Nicephorus) was of a low and ſmall Stature, ſomewhat ſtooping; his Complexion was fair; his Countenance grave; his Head ſmall; his Eyes ſparkling; his Noſe high and bending; and his Hair thick, and dark, but mixt with grey. His Conſtitution was weak, and often ſubject to Diſtempers; but his Mind was ſtrong, and endu'd with a ſolid Judgment, quick Invention, and prompt Memory, which were all improv'd by Art, and the Advantages of a liberal Education: His Humility and Self-abaſement was wonderful; his Sobriety and Temperance ſingularly ſtrict; his Contempt of the World great and generous; his Charity to the Poor extenſive; his Love for Mens Souls univerſal: His Labours in the Execution of his Miniſtry inceſſant; his Conſtancy in the Profeſſion of Religion invincible; and his Stile and Manner of Writing, to inculcate it, even by the Confeſſion of his Enemies, weighty and powerful, 2 Cor. x. 10. Beſides the Epiſtles, which are own'd to be genuine, ſeveral other Writings are falſely aſcrib'd to him, as an Epiſtle to the Laodiceans, a third to the Theſſalonians, a third to the Corinthians, a ſecond to the Epheſians, his Letter to Seneca, his Acts, his Revelation, his Voyage to Thecla, and his Sermons: As the like has been done to St Peter, viz. his Acts, Goſpel, Revelation, Preaching, Judgment, and Liturgy. Cave, Ibid.

† The Book of Apoſtolical Conſtitutions ſays, that Linus, the Son of Herculaneus, a Tuſcan by Birth, was ordain'd Biſhop of Rome by St Paul, long before the Death of St Peter; and Ruffinus aſſerts, that, he and Anacletus having govern'd that Church, while the Apoſtles Peter and Paul were living, but then abſent, Peter, a little before his Death, choſe at laſt Clement to ſucceed him in the See of Rome, but Clement, (according to Epiphanius) out of Modeſty refus'd to exerciſe that Office, till after the Death of Linus and Anacletus. Calmet's Dictionary, and Cave's Diſputat. * Menander was a Samaritan, and, like Simon, a notorious Impoſtor and Magician; but abounding with more monſtrous Illuſions than he. He gave it out, that he was a Saviour, ſent from above for the Reſtoration of Mankind, kind, and that whoever was inſtructed in his occult Knowledge, and initiated in his Baptiſm, ſhould enjoy a perpetual Immortality, and continue always young and vigorous, even in this World. With theſe, and ſeveral other of his Maſter Simon's Opinions, he ſeduc'd many in Antioch; and, tho' the Extravagancy of his Notions made them leſs infectious, yet they were continu'd in the ſecond Century, particularly by Baſilides and Saturninus. Ebion, ſo called for his affected Poverty, was born at Cocaba, a Village in Paleſtine, and ſpread his Hereſy in Trachonitis, and among the Chriſtians, who, before the Siege of Jeruſalem, had retir'd to Pella. He denied the Divinity of our Saviour; and, tho' he acknowledg'd him for an excellent Perſon, believ'd him to be no more than the Son of Joſeph and Mary. He enjoin'd the Obſervation of the Law of Moſes as neceſſary to Salvation; receiv'd all the Writings of the Old Teſtament, but none of the New, except St Matthew's Goſpel; and particularly condemn'd St Paul as an Apoſtate, for proving the Diſſolution of the Jewiſh Law. Cerinthus ſpread his Hereſy in Epheſus, and other Parts of Aſia Minor; and, in his Denial of our Lord's Divinity, his Acknowledgment of St Matthew's Goſpel, and aſſerting the Obligation of the Moſaick Law, agreed exactly with Ebion; as he did with the Gnoſticks, in aſſerting the Creation of the World by Angels. To inſinuate himſelf with the Vulgar, he boaſted much of his Illuminations and Revelations, and, to make the Myſtery of our Lord's Paſſion more familiar, diſtinguiſh'd between Jeſus and Chriſt, and accordingly taught, that Jeſus was but a mere Man; that Chriſt deſcended upon him in the Likeneſs of a Dove, and continu'd with him during the Time of his Miniſtry; but that, as Chriſt was incapable of ſuffering, he forſook Jeſus, when he came to be crucified, and left him to die: But his Kingdom afterwards he affirm'd ſhould be Terreſtrial, in the City of Jeruſalem, where Men ſhould enjoy all Kinds of carnal Pleaſures, for a Thouſand Years.

(n) Rev. ii. 15.

* The Nicholaitans are ſuppos'd to derive their Original from Nicholas, one of the Deacons mention'd in the vith of Acts, and (as Clemens Alexandrinus relates the Story) not improbably on this Occaſion. This Nicholas had a beautiful Wife, of whom he was ſaid to be jealous; but, to ſhew the Apoſtles how far he was from that, he brought her forth one Day, and gave any Perſon leave to marry her. Himſelf was a ſober and temperate Man, who never knew any Woman, but his own Wife, by whom he had one Son, and ſeveral Daughters, who liv'd all unmarried, and ſhew'd that their Father was no Encourager of Lewdneſs; but ſo it was, that, being accuſtomed to make uſe of an Expreſſion, which bore an equivocal Meaning, viz. That we ought to abuſe the Fleſh, meaning, that we ought to mortify and keep it under, by this Saying of his, and what he had done in offering his Wife, he unhappily gave an Umbrage to his Diſciples and Followers, to throw off all Reſtraint, and to give themſelves over to the groſſeſt Impurities, allowing of the moſt pernicious Mixtures, and making corporal Pleaſure the ultimate End of Man. Echard's and Lamy's Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtories.

† This Jude, who, in the Hiſtory of the Goſpel, is ſtiled our Lord's Brother, as being the Son of Mary, Siſter to the bleſſed Virgin, was undoubtedly the Brother of James the Leſs, Biſhop of Jeruſalem, Matth. xiii. 55. and “it may be, (as Dr Lightfoot expreſſes himſelf) that St Jude ſtands up in the Charge of his Brother James among the Circumciſion of Judea, and directs his Epiſtle to all ſuch, as were ſanctified and preſerved in thoſe apoſtatizing Times, as his Brother had done to all the twelve Tribes in general.” Between this, and St Peter's ſecond Epiſtle, there is certainly a great Reſemblance. The End aimed at in both, viz. to expoſe in their true Light the corrupt Principles and Practices of the Gnoſticks, is evidently the ſame; and the Arguments and Expreſſions, in many Caſes, ſo much alike, that it has been diſputed, whether St Jude has here abridged that of St Peter, or St Peter enlarged upon this of St Jude, tho' moſt are of the former Opinion. And indeed, when we find St Jude quoting expreſly this Epiſtle of St Peter, [Jude ver. 17. compared with 2 Pet. iii. 1, 2.] alluding to St Paul's ſecond Epiſtle to Timothy [2 Tim. iii. 1. compared with Jude, ver. 18.] and ſpeaking of the Apoſtles, as Perſons, who had been ſome Time dead, we cannot but conclude, that this Epiſtle was not written, till after the Death of the Apoſtles St Peter and St Paul, but how long after we cannot tell. Whitby's Preface to the Epiſtle of Jude, and Stanhope, on the Epiſtles and Goſpels, Vol. IV.

The Hiſtory and Martyrdom of St Jude.

Simon.

Thomas.

It is very obſervable of this Apoſtle, that the Evangeliſts commonly call him, not Jude, but either [*] Thaddæus, or Lebbæus, out of a particular Diſlike, no doubt, to the Name of Judas, ever ſince the treacherous and bloody Iſcariot betrayed and ſold his Maſter; but then the ſacred Records are ſo very ſhort in their Accounts of him, as well as of the other remaining Apoſtles, that we muſt, in this Caſe, be beholden to other Eccleſiaſtical Writers; who tell us of this St Jude, that, after our Lord's Aſcent into Heaven, having, for ſome Time, preached about Judea and Galilée, next in Samaria and Idumea, and then in Syria and Meſopotamia, he travelled at laſt into Perſia, where, at the Inſtigation of the Magi, provok'd by his open Rebukes of their idolatrous Worſhip of the Sun, and other Superſtitions, he was aſſaulted by the common People, and, after other previous Cruelties, crucified: Who tell us of [†] St Simon, that, upon the Diſperſion of the Apoſtles, having preach'd in Egypt, Cyrene, Africa, Mauritania, and other remote Countries thereunto adjoining, at length bent his Courſe Weſtward, and [‖] came into Britain, where, after many Miracles wrought, and great Hardſhips undergone, he was at laſt put to Death, for the Teſtimony of the Truth, by the then rude and barbarous Inhabitants of that Iſland: Who tell us of [†] St Thomas, that, having preached in Media, Perſia, Hyrcania, Bactriana, &c. he was at length encouraged by a divine Viſion to travel into India, where, coming into the Country of the Brachmans, by the Miracles, which he wrought, he converted ſo many, (and among others Sagamo, the Prince of the Country) that the Prieſts, fearing the Downfal of their Religion, fell upon him, while he was intent at Prayer, with Stones and Darts, and, at laſt, one of them, coming nearer, ran him through with a Lance: Who

---

[*] The ſuperſtitious Veneration which the Jews had for the ſacred Name of Jehovah, would not ſuffer them to pronounce it in common Converſation; and hence it was, that when any Man had a Name, wherein occurred the major Part of this ineffable Title, (as it did in Jehuda, or Juda) they choſe rather to change it, in common Speech, for another of the like Importance, but different Characters; for which Reaſon Judas, which denotes Praiſe, was changed into Thaddæus, a Word of the ſame Signification. Concerning the other Name of Lebbæus, Conjectures have been various. Some, deriving it from an Hebrew Word, which ſignifies the Heart, will have it to intimate the extraordinary Wiſdom and Courage of this Apoſtle; while others draw it from a Root, which imports a Lion, and think it an Alluſion to the Prophecy of Jacob, which compares his Son Judah to an old Lion, and a Lion's Whelp, Gen. xlix. 9. tho' all this Etymology might be ſpared, if we can but (with Dr. Lightfoot) ſuppoſe, that this Name was taken from Lebba, a Town in Galilee, where he conceives that this Apoſtle was born. Cave's Lives of the Apoſtles, and Stanhope, on the Epiſtles and Goſpels.

[†] This Apoſtle (to diſtinguiſh him, I ſuppoſe, from that other Simon ſirnamed Peter) is ſtiled Simon Zelotes, or Simon the Canaanite; but the latter Name, we muſt obſerve, does not relate to his Country or Kindred, but is indeed the ſame in Senſe with Zelotes, and derived from an Hebrew, as that is from a Greek Word, ſignifying Zeal; but whether this Title was given him, in regard of any perſonal Warmth, or Vigour remarkable in him, or whether to denote him one of that Sect, who were called Zealots among the Jews, we cannot tell; only we may obſerve, that, if it was upon the latter Account, his Converſion was more ſignal, ſince nothing could be more oppoſite to the Meekneſs and Gentleneſs of Chriſtianity, than the Irregularity and Fierceneſs of that Spirit, by which this Sect was actuated. Stanhope, on the Epiſtles and Goſpels.

[‖] Others ſay, that, after his Preaching the Goſpel in Egypt, he came into Meſopotamia, and, there meeting with St Jude, went with him into Perſia, where they both receiv'd the Crown of Martyrdom, for which Reaſon perhaps it is, that the Church commemorates them both together in one Feſtival. Stanhope, on the Epiſtles and Goſpels.

[†] It was cuſtomary with the Jews, when travelling into foreign Countries, or familiarly converſing with the Greeks and Romans, to aſſume to themſelves a Greek or Latin Name, of great Affinity, and ſometimes of the very ſame Signification, with that of their own Country; as that of Thomas and Didymus, one in the Syriack, and the other in the Greek, do both ſignify a Twin. He no doubt was a Jew, and, in all Probability, a Galilean, as well as the other Apoſtles; but the Place of his Birth, and the Nature of his Calling (unleſs we ſhould ſuppoſe that he was brought up to the Trade of Fiſhing) is a Thing unknown. 'Tis generally agreed however, that he preached the Goſpel in the Eaſt-Indies, by Reaſon of the great Numbers of Chriſtians found there in ſeveral Places, who ſtill go by the Name of St Thomas, tho' there are not wanting ſome, who aſcribe the Original of this Sect to a Perſon of the ſame Name, who lived many Centuries after. Cave's Lives of the Apoſtles, and Stanhope, on the Epiſtles and Goſpels.

Philip.

Bartholomew.

Matthias.

Who tell us of [*] St Philip, that, after his having made many Converts in the Upper Aſia, Colchis, and ſome Parts of Scythia, he came at length to Hieropolis, a noted City in Phrygia, where the Inhabitants, at that Time, paid their Adorations to a [†] Dragon, which when the Apoſtle, by his Prayers, and Invocation of the Name of Chriſt, either quite deſtroyed, or cauſed to diſappear, the Magiſtrates of the Place were ſo exaſperated againſt him, that they threw him into Priſon, and, after a ſevere Scourging, order'd him either to be hang'd, or crucified: Who tell us of [†] St Bartholomew, (generally ſuppoſed to be the ſame with Nathaniel) that having, with great Succeſs, propagated Chriſtianity in the Higher India, (whither he carried St Matthew's Goſpel) he thence removed into Lycaonia, and came, at laſt, to Albinople, a City of the Greater Armenia, at this Time miſerably over-run with Idolatry, where, having converted their King Polymius, and his Wife, and, by their Example, prevail'd with Multitudes to relinquiſh their Idols, he ſo far enraged the Prieſts againſt him, that they inſtigated Aſtyages, the King's Brother, to get him into his Hands, and to have him [*] firſt flay'd, and then, either beheaded, or crucified: Who tell us of [‡] St Matthias, that having, for ſome Time, employ'd himſelf in the Work of the Miniſtry within the Confines of Judea, at length he betook himſelf to other Countries, and, travelling Eaſtward, came at laſt to Æthiopia, (or Cappadocia rather) where, meeting with a People of a fierce and intractable Temper, after all his Labours and Sufferings, and a numerous Converſion to the Chriſtian Faith, from them he receiv'd

[*] This Apoſtle was born at Bethſaida, a Town near the Sea of Tiberias; but of his Parents, and Manner of Life, the Hiſtory of the Goſpel takes no Notice, though probably he was a Fiſherman, the general Trade of the Place. He is ſaid to have preach'd in the Upper Aſia; to have wrought many Miracles in Hierapolis, a City of Phrygia, (now called, by the Turks, Pambuck-Kulaſi, from the Rocks about it, which are white like Cotton) and there to have ſuffer'd Martyrdom, by being faſten'd to a Croſs, and ſtoned to Death. Cave's Lives of the Apoſtles, and Stanhope, on the Epiſtles and Goſples, Vol. IV.

[†] This doubtleſs was done in Memory of that infamous Act of Jupiter, who, in the Shape of a Dragon, inſinuated himſelf into the Embraces of Proſerpine, his own Daughter, begot of Ceres, and whom the Phrygians chiefly worſhipped, as Clemens of Alexandria informs us. Cave, ibid.

[†] That Nathaniel and Bartholomew were only two Names for one and the ſame Perſon, the one his proper, and the other his relative Name, appears from ſeveral Paſſages in the Goſpels compared together; but then the Queſtion is, upon what Account it was, that he had his relative Name conferr'd upon him. That ſeveral Sects, in the Jewiſh Church, denominated themſelves from ſome famous Perſon of that Nation (as the Eſſenes did from Enoſh, and the Sadducees from Sadoc) cannot be denied; and therefore, if we may ſuppoſe, that there were others, who call'd themſelves Tholmæans, from Tholmai, Scholar to Heber, the ancient Maſter of the Hebrews, who flouriſhed in Debir and Hebron, 'twill be no hard Matter to make Nathaniel of this Order and Inſtitution, and thereupon to give him the Name of Bartholomew, i. e. a Scholar of the Tholmæans, and ſo create him (as he is ſaid to have been) a Doctor of the Jewiſh Law. But an eaſier Account of this Matter is,———That, as the firſt Syllable of this Name ſignifies a Son, the Word Bar-tholomew will import no more, than the Son of Tholomew, or Tholmai, which was no uncommon Name among the Jews. And that it was an uſual Thing, among them, for the Son thus to derive his Name, is evident from the Inſtance of Bar-timæus, which is interpreted the Son of Timæus, Mark x. 46. and that of Bar-jona, Matth. xvi. 17. which St John makes the ſame with Simon, Son of Jonas, John xxi. 15. Cave's Lives of the Apoſtles, and Stanhope, on the Epiſtles and Goſpels.

[*] That Excoriation was a Puniſhment in uſe not only in Egypt, but among the Perſians likewiſe, is evident from the Teſtimony of Plutarch, who records a particular Inſtance of Meſabates the Perſian Eunuch's being firſt flay'd alive, and then crucified. In Vita Artaxerx. And that the Armenians, who were next Neighbours to the Perſians, might from them borrow this Piece of barbarous and inhuman Cruelty, is no hard Suppoſition at all. Cave's Lives of the Apoſtles.

[‡] As this Apoſtle was not one of the firſt Election, immediately call'd and choſen by our Saviour, we are not to expect any Account of him in the Hiſtory of the Goſpel; but, from the Acts of the Apoſtles, we learn, that, being one of our Lord's Diſciples, and probably one of the Seventy, upon the Death of Judas, he was elected into the Apoſtleſhip, which he diſcharged with great Efficacy, and a full Demonſtration of the Spirit and of Power: But there are ſome Things in Eccleſiaſtical Story related of him, (as particularly, when he preach'd the Goſpel in Macedonia, and the Heathens, to make Experiment of his Faith, gave him a poiſonous Potion, that he chearfully drank it up, in the Name of Chriſt, and received no Harm) which have not met with ſo ready a Credence, tho' ceiv'd the Crown of Martyrdom, but in what Manner it was conferr'd † Authors are not agreed: And who tells us of St * Barnabas, that, after his Separation from St Paul, having preached about Liguria, and ſettled a Church at Milan, (whereof himſelf was conſtituted Biſhop) he return'd at laſt to Cyprus, his native Country, where, by the Malice of the Jews, he was tumultuouſly aſſaulted, and ſtoned to Death at Salamis, the principal City of the Iſland.

Barnabas.

THUS were all the Apoſtles, and firſt Miniſters of Chriſt, appointed by God to lay down their Lives, in Teſtimony of the Truth of the Goſpel, except the beloved Evangeliſt † St John; and yet, if we conſider his Stripes and Impriſonment by the Council of Jeruſalem, his ‖ Baniſhment to the Iſle of Patmos for the Word of God, and his being † caſt into a Cauldron of flaming Oil by the Order of Domitian, we can hardly deny him the Honour of being a Martyr, ſince he ſubmitted himſelf freely to ſuch Sufferings, as nothing, but a Miracle, could reſcue him from.

St John Acts, Writings, Death and Burial.

OF this Apoſtle the ſame Eccleſiaſtical Writers tells us,—That, (a) after the Death of the Bleſſed Mother, (which happen'd tho' the Inſtance before us be no more than the Completion of our Saviour's Promiſe to his Apoſtles, they ſhall take up Serpents, and, if they drink any deadly Thing, it ſhall not hurt them, Mark xvi. 18. Cave's Lives of the Apoſtles.

† Ancient Martyrology reports him to have been ſeized by the Jews, and, as a Blaſphemer, to have been firſt ſtoned, and then beheaded; but the Greek Offices, ſeconded herein by ſeveral ancient Breviaries, tell us, that he was crucified, as an Hymn, cited by Dr. Cave out of the Greek Offices, ſeems to import. There was a ſpurious Book, called the Goſpel, or Acts of Matthias, which, Euſebius tells us, was compoſed by Hereticks, and fathered upon him; even as Clemens of Alexandria obſerves, that Valentinus, Marcion, and Baſilides, ſhelter'd their vile Tenets, under the pretended Authority of this Apoſtle. Cave's Lives of the Apoſtles, and Stanhope, on the Epiſtles and Goſpels, Vol. iv.

* In relation to this Apoſtle, we have only to remark, that he hath left us one Epiſtle, reckoned among the Apocryphal Writings of the firſt Chriſtians, which may be genuine perhaps, tho' not canonical. Its principal Deſign is to prove, that the Law is aboliſhed by the Goſpel; that legal Ceremonies are uſeleſs; and that the Incarnation and Death of Jeſus Chriſt was neceſſary. It is certainly very ancient, full of Piety and Zeal, frequently quoted by Clemens of Alexandria, and, though written in a Style very allegorical, by the Labours of our late Archbiſhop Wake is made, to the Engliſh Reader, both entertaining and profitable. Calmet's Dictionary, and Stanhope, on the Epiſtles and Goſpels.

† Theophylact, and others before him, were of Opinion, that our Apoſtle died a Martyr, upon no other Ground, than what our Saviour told him, and his Brother, that they ſhould drink of the Cup, and be baptized with the Baptiſm, wherewith he was baptized, which St Chryſoſtom ſtrictly underſtands of a bloody Death. This was indeed literally verified of his Brother James, but the general Senſe of Antiquity is, that St John died in his Bed. Cave's Lives of the Apoſtles.

‖ This Puniſhment, in the Roman Law, is called Capitis Diminutio, becauſe the Perſon thus baniſhed was diſfranchiſed, and the City thereby loſt an Head. It ſucceeded in the room of that ancient Puniſhment, Aquâ & Igni interdicere, whereby it was implied, that the Man muſt, for his own Defence, betake himſelf into Baniſhment, when it became unlawful for any to accommodate him with Lodging or Diet, or any other Neceſſary of Life. But this Baniſhing into Iſlands was properly called Diſportatio, being accounted the worſt Kind of Exile, whereby the Criminal forfeited his Eſtate, and being bound, and put on Ship board, was, by publick Officers, tranſported to ſome certain Iſland, (which none but the Emperor himſelf might aſſign) there to be confined to perpetual Baniſhment. The Place, to which St John was carried, was Patmos, a little Iſland in the Archipelago, now called Palmoſa, mountainous, but moderately fruitful, eſpecially in Wheat and Pulſe, tho' defective in other Commodities. The whole Circumference of the Iſland is about thirty Miles, and, on one of the Mountains, ſtands a Town of the ſame Name, having on the Top of it a Monaſtery of Greek Monks; and, on the North Side of the Town, the Inhabitants by Tradition ſhew an Houſe, in which the Apocalypſe was written, and, not far off, the Cave, where it was revealed, both Places of great Eſteem and Veneration with the Greeks and Latins. Cave's Lives of the Apoſtles, and Wells's Geography of the New Teſtament.

† This is a Point of Hiſtory, that has of late been call'd in Queſtion: But, ſince it is atteſted by Tertullian de Præſcript. c. 36. a moſt learned and very honeſt Man, and who lived near enough the Time to be certified of the Truth; ſince it is contradicted by no Eccleſiaſtical Writer, that we know of; is no more incredible, than St Paul's taking up a Viper unhurt, Acts xxviii. 3, &c. and is agreeable to the Intimation given of St John, that he ſhould not die a Martyr, John xxi. 21, 22, there can be no Reaſon for cavilling at this in thoſe, that admit of the Poſſibility of any Miracle. Collins's Grounds, &c. and Whiſton's Anſwer.

pen'd about fifteen Years after our Lord's Aſcenſion) by the ſpecial Conduct of the Holy Ghoſt, he was carried into Aſia, on Purpoſe to oppoſe the Hereſies, which in thoſe Parts began to ſpread, and infeſt the Church; that, as he ſpared no Pains in preaching the Goſpel, where it was wanted, and in confirming it, where it had been ſettled, many Churches of Note and Eminence, beſides thoſe mention'd in the Beginning of his Revelation, were of his Foundation; that, in the Perſecution rais'd by Domitian, the Pro-conſul of Aſia ſent him bound to Rome, as an Aſſerter of Atheiſm, and a Subverter of the Religion of the Empire, where he was treated with the utmoſt Barbarity, and at length baniſh'd into a deſolate Iſland, there to be employ'd in digging in the Mines: that in this diſconſolate Place, however, he was entertain'd with the more immediate Converſe of Heaven, and, by frequent Viſions and Prophetic Repreſentations, had a clear Proſpect given him of the State of Chriſtianity, in the future Periods and Ages of the Church, [*] which he has tranſmitted to us; that upon the Death of Domitian, when Nerva had reſcinded all his odious Edicts, our Apoſtle took the Opportunity to return to Epheſus, and (as Timothy had lately been dead) at the Requeſt of the Biſhops of the Province, enter'd upon the Adminiſtration of that Metropolitan See, and therein continu'd till the Reign of Trajan; that, in the Time of his ruling this Church, he wrote three ſeveral Epiſtles; whereof the firſt is called Catholic, calculated as it were, for all Times and Places, "in which he excites his little Children (as he calls all Chriſtians) to Love and Charity, to Holineſs and Purity of Manners; cautions them againſt reſting in a naked and empty Profeſſion of Religion, againſt being led away by the crafty Inſinuations of Seducers; antidotes them againſt the Poiſon of the Gnoſtic Principles and Practices; and gives them moſt excellent Rules for the Conduct of the Chriſtian Life." The other too are but ſhort, and directed to particular Perſons; the one to a Lady of honourable Quality, "Encouraging her and her Children to Charity, to Perſeverance in good Works, and to ſhew no Countenance to falſe Teachers and Deceivers." The other to the charitable and hoſpitable Gaius, ſo kind a Friend, ſo courteous an Entertainer of all indigent Chriſtians.

THE ſame Authors tell us, that, in his Archi-epiſcopal Capacity, he took great Care of the Flock of Chriſt, and, notwithſtanding his advanc'd Age, went many Journies into the neighbouring Provinces, to ordain Biſhops, to ſettle and confirm Churches, and was induc'd at laſt, by the Requeſt, and Importunity of ſeveral of his Diſciples, (even when he was 97 Years of Age) to compoſe his Goſpel, [†] for a Defence

[*] The Apocalypſe, or Book of Revelations, as we call it, was, of old, not only condemned by Hereticks, but controverted by many of the Fathers likewiſe. Dionyſius, Biſhop of Alexandria, tells us, that, for his Part, he durſt not reject it, being perſuaded, that it contained many wiſe and admirable Myſteries, tho' he could not comprehend them, and, that tho' he own'd the Author to have been a divinely inſpir'd Perſon, yet he could not believe it to be St John, the Apoſtle and Evangeliſt, becauſe the Style, Matter, and Method of it, did no ways agree with his other Writings. The common Current of Antiquity, however, runs another Way; and, as the Diverſity of Style, &c. is of no Moment in this Caſe, becauſe that in Subjects, which are ſo vaſtly different, 'tis hardly poſſible for any Man to obſerve the ſame Tenor and Way of Writing, the Book being wrote in the Iſland of Patmos, which is a Circumſtance compatible to none but St John; his Name ſo frequently occurring in it, his ſtiling himſelf a Brother and Companion in Tribulation, and in the Kingdom and Patience of Jeſus Chriſt, his writing particular Epiſtles to the Seven Churches in Aſia, all planted, or at leaſt cultivated by him, together with Doctrines contained in them all ſuitable to the Apoſtolic Spirit and Temper; theſe are ſo many concurring Evidences to prove our Apoſtle to have been the Author of it, whatever was the Occaſion of its not being receiv'd ſo readily into the Canon of Scripture. Cave's Life of St. John.

[†] The Ancients aſſign two Reaſons, eſpecially for the writing of this Goſpel. The firſt is, that he might obviate the early Hereſies of thoſe Times, eſpecially of Ebion and Cerinthus, and the reſt of that Party, who began openly to deny Chriſt's Divinity, and that he had any Exiſtence before his Incarnation. The other is, that he might Defence againſt the Hereſies then brooding, and for a Supply of what the other Evangeliſts had omitted: For, as we cannot but ſuppoſe, that in the Courſe of the many Years, which he lived, he had ſeen the Writings of all the reſt of the Apoſtles and Evangeliſts, and ſignified his Approbation of them; ſo we can hardly imagine any Thing more worthy his Care, or more neceſſary in itſelf, than for him to aſcertain the Authority of thoſe Writings, and to finiſh and ſettle the Canon of Scripture, that it might be the Rule of Faith and Practice, and the Church's Preſervative againſt † ſuch Hereſies, as were very numerous even in theſe Days, and very likely to give much Trouble and Scandal in future Ages. This was the laſt Service, he had to do for the Church of Chriſt, which when he had accompliſhed, he then finiſhed his Courſe, and in a * good old Age, † dying peaceably at Epheſus, was buried might ſupply thoſe Paſſages of the Evangelical Hiſtory, which the reſt of the ſacred Writers had omitted; and therefore, collecting the other three Evangeliſts, he firſt ſet to them his Seal, ratifying the Truth of them with his Approbation, and then added his own Goſpel to the reſt; wherein he chiefly inſiſts upon the Acts of Chriſt, from the firſt Commencement of his Miniſtry, to the Death of John the Baptiſt, in which the others were moſt defective; and wherein he largely records his Diſcourſes, becauſe ſome of them were paſs'd by, but takes not ſo much Notice of his Miracles, becauſe they were ſufficiently related by the reſt. Cave, ibid.

† The Hereſies, that were then ſpringing up, and not long after overſpread the Church in divers Places, were thoſe of Menander, Cerinthus, and Ebion; whereof we ſhall give our Reader this ſhort Account.

Menander was a Samaritan, a great Diſciple of Simon Magus, (of whoſe Tenets and Doctrines we have ſpoken before, p. 1453, in the Notes) and a notorious Impoſtor and Magician, as well as he. He maintain'd, that the World was made by Angels, denied the Reality of Chriſt's Manhood, and affirm'd, that himſelf was the true Saviour of the World, ſent from above for the Reſtoration of Mankind; that, without being initiated into his Magical Knowledge, and baptiz'd in his Name, none could be ſaved: That his Baptiſm was the true Reſurrection, which, to thoſe that were Partakers of it, would not fail to convey, even in this Life, Youth, Vigour, and perpetual Immortality. Theſe were ſome of the Illuſions, wherewith he ſeduced many into Antioch, the Place where he chiefly reſided, and, tho' their Extravagance made them leſs infectious, yet they were continued, in the ſecond Century, by Baſilides and Saturninus.

Cerinthus was a Jew by Birth, and ſpread his Notions principally in Epheſus, and other Parts of Aſia Minor. He maintain'd that the World was not made by God, but by a certain Power diſtinct, and very different from the Supreme Being: That the old Law and Precepts of Moſes were to be obſerv'd in Conjunction with thoſe of Jeſus Chriſt: That Jeſus was no more than a mere Man, born of Joſeph and Mary, but that, at his Baptiſm, Chriſt deſcended upon him like a Dove; that, at his Crucifixion, Chriſt forſook him, and, returning into Heaven, left him to ſuffer alone; and, laſtly, that, after the general Reſurrection, Chriſt's Kingdom ſhould be terreſtrial in the City of Jeruſalem, where Men ſhould enjoy all Sorts of carnal Pleaſures, and paſs their Time in the Celebration of Marriage-Feaſts and Banquets for a Thouſand Years.

Ebion, ſo called from his affected Poverty, was born in a Village of Paleſtine, and ſpread his Hereſy in Trachonitis. He agreed with Cerinthus in denying the Divinity of our Saviour, and enjoining the Obſervation of the Law of Moſes, as neceſſary to Salvation. He aſſerted that God had given the Dominion of all Things to Chriſt and the Devil; and that, as the latter had the Aſcendancy in this World, ſo the former ſhould have a much greater Superiority in the next. All the Prophets, after the Time of Joſhua, and all the New Teſtament, except the Goſpel of St Matthew, he rejected; and, as for the Writings of St Paul, theſe he utterly condemn'd, as the Product of a wicked and vile Apoſtate, becauſe he endeavour'd to prove the Diſſolution of the Moſaick Law. Fleury and Echard's Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtories, and Tillemont's Hiſt. des Empereurs.

* The general Opinion is, that he was ninety-eight or ninety-nine Years of Age, when he died, which was in the third Year of Trajan's Reign; St Chryſoſtom, however, is very poſitive, that he was an hundred Years old, when he wrote his Goſpel; and Dorotheus affirms, that, in the whole, he liv'd an hundred and twenty. But all this is highly improbable: For, according to this Account, he muſt be fifty Years of Age, when he firſt became acquainted with our Lord, a Thing directly contrary to the Teſtimony of all Antiquity, which makes him very young, at the Time of his being called to the Apoſtolick Office. Cave, ibid.

† But, contrary to this, ſome have peremptorily denied, that he ever died at all, upon no better Foundation, than our Saviour's Words to St Peter concerning him, If I will, that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee? tho' St John, who records theſe Words, inſerts a Caution, that Jeſus did not ſay, he ſhould not die, but only, what if I will, that he tarry till I come? John xxi. 22, 23. which doubtleſs he meant of his Coming in Judgment upon the Jews, at the final Overthrow of Jeruſalem, which was an Event, that St John outliv'd many Years. However, as the Apoſtles, at firſt, miſtook our Saviour's Meaning, and thereupon a Report went out among the Brethren, that his beloved Diſciple ſhould not die, ſo we may obſerve, that the Continuance of the ſame Report, viz. that St John is ſtill alive, has been made uſe of by ſome to wild and fantaſtick Purpoſes. For Sulpitius Severus, ſpeaking of a young Spaniard, who firſt profeſſed himſelf to be Elias, and then Chriſt himſelf, adds, buried ‖ in that City, where ſeveral of the Fathers obſerve, that his Tomb, in their Time, was remaining in a Church, which was built to his Honour, and call'd by his Name. Thus we are come to the Concluſion of the Apoſtolick Age, and ſo have brought our Hiſtory to its intended Period.

ΜΟΝΩ ΤΩ ΘΕΩ ΔΟΞΑ.

The OBJECTION.

“BUT Pity it is, that an Hiſtory of ſo much Conſequence to the Chriſtian World ſhould be ſo ſoon brought to its Period; or that the Book of the Acts of the Apoſtles, which ſhould contain (one would think) the moſt remarkable Atchievements of theſe great Heroes, ſhould ſo ſadly belye its Title: For, excepting St Peter and St Paul, all, that we have of the reſt, is but here and there a particular Paſſage of their Lives; (a) now and then an oblique and accidental Remark; and, in ſome of them, no more than a bare Recital of their Names. Nay, even as to the Characters, that are chiefly inſiſted on, the Hiſtory of St Paul proceeds no farther than to his firſt Impriſonment at Rome; and no ſooner is St Peter deliver'd from his at Jeruſalem, than the Author entirely drops him, and has left it as a Point undetermin'd, and a perpetual Bone of Contention between us, and thoſe of another Communion, whether he was ever at Rome or no.

“An Author, who affected to be thus brief, even in Matters that requir'd an Illuſtration, ſhould not fail (one would think) to be very clear and correct in the other Part of his Compoſition; and yet, what ſhall we ſay, (b) when we find him leading St Stephen (c), from the firſt Call of Abraham to the Generation then in Being, through a Wild Gooſe Chace of Hiſtory, nothing at all to the Purpoſe, and yet ſtuff'd throughout with Errors and Falſhoods; for ſuch, no doubt, is that (d) of Terah's Death, before Abraham's Removal into Canaan, whereas he ſurviv'd it ſixty Years; that of (e) the threeſcore and fifteen Souls, which went down with Jacob into Egypt, whereas, at the moſt they were but ſeventy; and that of Jacob's being buried at Sychem, as (f) Stephen inſinuates, whereas it is evident, that he adds, that, at the ſame Time, there was one in the Eaſt, who pretended to be St John, even as Beza tells us of an Impoſtor in his Time, who publickly did the ſame, and was afterwards burnt at Thoulouſe in France. Cave, ibid.

‖ But, inſtead of being buried, we find Nicephorus, Hiſt. Eccl. l. 2. c. 42, relating the Matter thus:—— That St John, foreſeeing his Tranſlation into Heaven, took the Clergy of the Church of Epheſus, and ſeveral other Chriſtians out of the City with him, to a Cemetery, where himſelf was wont to retire to Prayer; that, having there ordered a Grave to be dug, after he had inſtructed them in the Precepts and Myſteries of Theology, confirm'd them in the Practice of Religion, and commended them to the Care and Bleſſing of Jeſus Chriſt, he ſolemnly took his Leave, and went down into the Grave; that he ſtrictly charged them to put on the Grave-ſtone, and to make it faſt, which accordingly they did, but coming next Day, as he had enjoined them, when they opened the Sepulchre, they found nothing there, but the Grave-clothes, which he had left behind him. But this is far from agreeing with what another Author, much of the ſame Stamp, (the Arabick Writer of his Life) reports, viz. that there was none preſent at this Apoſtle's Burial, but his Diſciple Phogſir, (he means very probably Prochorus, one of the ſeven Deacons, that conſtantly attended him) whom he required ſtrictly never to diſcover his Sepulchre to any: For the ſame Reaſon, very likely, that the Body of Moſes is thought to have been concealed, to prevent the idolatrous Worſhipping of his Reliques. Cave, ibid.

was bury'd (g) in the Cave of Machpelah? What ſhall we ſay to his making Gamaliel, a learned Doctor of the Law, ſo far miſtaken in his Chronology, as to reckon Theudas, and Judas of Galilee, (h) both prior to the Times he was then ſpeaking of, whereas it is manifeſt (i) from Joſephus, that this Theudas appear'd, and periſh'd in the Reign of Claudius, ten Years at leaſt after the Council, which was now met at Jeruſalem? Or, what ſhall we ſay to the incredible Number of (k) devout Men, out of every Nation under Heaven, (as he calls it) which, on the Day of Pentecoſt, were together at Jeruſalem?

"BUT the Misfortume is ſtill the greater, when, out of an Affectation of Brevity, an Hiſtorian becomes ſo obſcure, as to lay the Foundation of perpetual Conteſts in the Chriſtian Church; and yet it is certain, that the Author of the Acts has incurr'd this Fault to an high Degree, by leaving the ſeveral Orders of Chriſt's Miniſters ſo mix'd and confounded together, that it is no eaſy Matter to diſtinguiſh them, and next to impoſſible to define the ſeparate Powers which belong to each; that we are ſtill wrangling and diſputing concerning the Difference between a Biſhop and an Elder, and perhaps ſhall never come to the true Knowledge of what the Office of a Deacon does import, or what Share of Authority the Perſons, called (l) Brethren, originally had in the Government of the Church.

"TIMOTHY and Titus are ſaid to be Biſhops of Epheſus and Crete; and yet we find them ſo frequently abſent from their Charge in their Attendance upon St Paul, and going upon his Errands at every Turn, that either we muſt ſuppoſe the Epiſcopal Office was a different Adminiſtration in thoſe Days, or that the Privilege of Non-reſidence was indulged them from the very firſt. Paul and Barnabas were certainly great Preachers among the Gentiles, and yet the Hiſtorian has given us no Account of the Time, when they commenced Apoſtles, tho' he has not failed to acquaint us with the particular Occaſion of their Falling-out, and, upon what a trifling Affair, they choſe to violate the Bands of Friendſhip, and interrupt the Courſe of the Goſpel, rather than recede from a pettiſh Humour.

"St LUKE indeed (if he was the Compiler of the Acts of the Apoſtles) ſeems to be no great Friend to either of the two Perſons, who bear the principal Characters in his Hiſtory. For, what a Reproach does he caſt upon the Memory of St Peter, when he introduces him, (m) deſtroying, firſt, the Huſband, and then the Wife, for no other Reaſon, but merely becauſe they would not give away in Charity every Penny they had; whereas, in Caſes of this Nature, every one ſhould be left to his Liberty to do what (n) he is diſpoſed in his Heart? What an Inconſiſtency does he diſcover in the Behaviour of St Paul, that he ſhould order Timothy (o) to be circumciſed, when, at the ſame Time, he enjoin'd, that, (p) if any Man was called in Uncircumciſion, he ought not to be circumciſed; for that, if he was, (q) Chriſt would profit him nothing, and, upon that Account, (r) would not permit Titus, who was equally a Gentile, to ſubmit to that Ordinance?

"'TWAS Policy enough in St Paul, when he found himſelf in Danger of his Life, (s) to declare himſelf a Phariſee, (tho' this was implicitly renouncing his Chriſtianity) thereby to divide the Aſſembly, and gain over a Party to his Intereſt: But, when he was in no ſuch Peril, 'twas a groſs Prevarication

“ in him, (t) to join in the Obſervation of ſuch Ceremonies at Jeruſalem, as he had been all along preaching againſt, and knew (u) were aboliſh'd by the Chriſtian Inſtitution; and no ſmall Rudeneſs to (x) withſtand St Peter to the Face after that, for a Fault of the like Nature at Antioch; as it was little leſs than Hypocriſy in St James, and all the Elders at Jeruſalem, to put him upon an Expedient, abhorrent to his own Judgment, merely to gull the People into a falſe Perſuaſion, that he comply'd with the Moſaick Rites, and was indeed a (y) ſtrict Obſerver of the Law.

“ BUT, how much ſoever they might contrive to delude the People into this Perſuaſion, we can hardly think, that he himſelf had any great Regard ſo much as to the moral Part of the Law, when, in Oppoſition to the ſound Doctrine of St James, viz. that (z) by Works a Man is juſtified, we find him ſetting up a quite different Principle, and boldly aſſerting, that (a) by Faith a Man is juſtified, without the Deeds of the Law, (b) to the no ſmall Triumph of Infidelity, when it ſees two ſuch Pillars of the Church contradicting one another ſo palpably. But well might St Paul contradict a private Apoſtle, when, in the Caſe of eating thoſe Things which were offered in the Sacrifices to Idols, he ſets up his own Opinion, in Oppoſition to the plain Determination of the Council of Jeruſalem; and, notwithſtanding their Decree for abſtaining from ſuch polluted Meats, ventures to ſay, that an Idol is nothing in the World, and therefore (c) whether we eat, or eat not the Things that are offer'd to it, we are neither better nor worſe.

“ 'TIS natural to think, that a Perſon, who had ſo high a Conceit of his own Underſtanding and Abilities, whenever he came into Power, would not fail to exerciſe it in a Manner arbitrary enough; and therefore we need leſs wonder, that we find St Paul talking ſo much of (d) his Rod of Diſcipline; (e) reviling the High-Prieſt, tho' afterwards he ſneakingly retracted it; (f) loading the poor Copper-Smith with an heavy Imprecation; (g) delivering Hymeneus and others unto Satan; and exhorting thoſe, that were growing up in the Church, to the like Violence of Spirit, (h) to rebuke ſharply, and with all Authority, and not to let any Man deſpiſe them.

(i) “ WHEN the Believer's ſold all that they had, and laid the Price at the Apoſtles Feet, we cannot but think, that the Eccleſiaſticks in thoſe Days made free with ſome Part of it, as having a Right to (k) exchange their ſpiritual for the others carnal Things; and therefore it is no eaſy Matter to aſſign a Reaſon for St Paul's leaving his Cloak at Troas, ſince all the Drollery of his pawning it for Want of Money to pay his Reckoning, upon this Suppoſition, vaniſhes. It ſeems more likely indeed, that the Apoſtle, in this and ſome other Paſſages, was minded to leave ſome Obſcurities in his Writings, on Purpoſe to raiſe a Duſt among Commentators; and therefore we may as well pretend to reſolve, what St Jude means (l) by Michael's contending with the Devil about the Body of Moſes, as to define what St Paul alludes to by his (m) fighting with Beaſts at Epheſus; by his (n) Thorn in the Fleſh, and a Meſſenger of Satan to buffet him; and, above all, by his (o) Man of Sin, the Son of Perdition, who oppoſeth, and exalteth himſelf above all that is called God. So true is the Character which “ St Anſwer'd, by ſhewing the Deſign of the Hiſtory of the Acts, and why ſo called.

THAT the Hiſtory of the Acts of the Apoſtles was written by St Luke who was the Author of the Goſpel, that goes under his Name, the Connection of the Matter, the Congruity of the Stile, the Identity of the Perſon, to whom they are both addreſs'd, and the unanimous Conſent of all Antiquity *, are a ſufficient Indication. (q) That this is an Hiſtory of thirty Years Tranſactions, whereof the former Part principally contains the Acts of the two Apoſtles of the Circumciſion, Peter and John, with their Preaching of the Goſpel to the Jews; and the latter, thoſe of the two Apoſtles of the Uncircumciſion, Paul and Barnabas, with the Plantation and Progreſs of the Goſpel among the Gentiles, no one can doubt, that caſts but an Eye into its Contents; and that this Hiſtory obtain'd the Name of the Acts of the Apoſtles it is generally thought, (r) not only becauſe the Doctrines, which it contains, and the Miracles, which it relates, are the ſame throughout with what they all wrought, and taught in common, but becauſe ſundry Tranſactions, that are recorded in the Beginning of it, ſuch as the Reſurrection and Aſcenſion of Chriſt, the Election of Matthias, the Deſcent of the Holy Ghoſt, and the miraculous Infuſion of Languages, which enabled them to ſpread the Goſpel through the Univerſe, were Things, wherein they were all equally concerned: But then, why the Actions of all thoſe, who were equally concern'd in the Propagation of the Goſpel, were not equally conſign'd to Writing by the Penman of the Sacred Story, this, we muſt ſay, entirely depended on the Divine Pleaſure and Determination.

Why it was made no larger.

(s) IT ſhall come to paſs in the laſt Days, (ſays the Prophet Iſaiah, ſpeaking of the Times of the Goſpel) that the Mountain of the Lord's Houſe ſhall be eſtabliſhed in the Top of the Mountains, and ſhall be exalted above the Hills, and all Nations ſhall flow unto it; and many People ſhall go and ſay, Come ye, and let us go up to the Mountain of the Lord, to the Houſe of the God of Jacob, and he will teach us his Ways, and we will walk in his Paths; for out of Sion ſhall go forth the Law, and the Word of the Lord from Jeruſalem: So that, in Conformity to this Prediction, the Divine Providence thought fit, that no more Account ſhould be given of the firſt Plantation of Chriſtianity in the World, than what concern'd Judea, and the neighbouring Countries, or, at fartheſt, the moſt eminent Places of the Roman Empire. We perhaps may think, that a more particular Relation of all, that the Apoſtles did, in the ſeveral Countries, where they travelled, had been more ſatisfactory to an inquiſitive Mind; but then we ſhould remember (t) that this would have ſwelled the Holy Volumes into too great a Bulk, and ſo have rendered them leſs ſerviceable and accommodated to the ordinary Uſe of Chriſtians. All that was proper to be done upon this Occaſion therefore was, to ſingle out ſome few Perſons, who made the moſt eminent Figure in the Infancy of the Church, and to repreſent their particular Labours and Sufferings in the Propagation of Chriſtianity, as a Specimen of all the reſt.

Why it does not finiſh St Peter's and St. Paul's Lives.

THAT St Peter and St Paul were Characters of this Kind, none can deny; and therefore St Luke is not to be blamed in making Choice of them. That he purſued the Hiſtory of St Peter no farther, ther, muſt be imputed to his adjoining himſelf to St Paul, whoſe conſtant Attendant he then became, an Eye-witneſs of the whole Carriage of his Life, and privy to his moſt intimate Tranſactions; and therefore we find him more copious upon this Subject than any other: But why he did not finiſh his whole Life, an antient Arabick Writer, cited by (u) Kirſtenius, has given us this Reaſon,—— That, after St Paul's Impriſonment and Departure from Rome, St Luke, who was left behind as his Deputy, to ſupply his Place, was, in a ſhort Time, put to Death; otherwiſe, (ſays our Author) he would have doubtleſs continued the Hiſtory of the Apoſtles Acts.

That it is ſufficiently long to anſwer its Deſign.

WITHOUT laying any Streſs then upon the Teſtimony of the * Apocryphal Acts of the Apoſtles, which, it muſt be owned, are generally full of Fable and Romance, we may venture to affirm, that this one Compoſition of St Luke is ſufficient to anſwer all the Purpoſes, for which we can deſire ſuch a Hiſtory. For what is it that we may reaſonably expect in a Work of this Kind, but that it ſhould, by a plain Relation of Facts, confirm our Faith in the Goſpel; ſhew the Accompliſhment of the Promiſes and Predictions, which Chriſt, the Founder of our Religion, has made to his Diſciples; and give us ſome competent Knowledge of the Settlement of that Religion; by what Methods it grew, and ſpread to Places remote from its firſt Plantation, what was the Fate and Behaviour of ſome of its firſt Profeſſors, and what the Tenor of their Doctrines and Diſcourſes: But that St Luke's Hiſtory, in all theſe Particulars, has ſufficiently acquitted itſelf, none, that has read it with the leaſt Obſervation, can deny.

That St. Peter was not at Rome ſo ſoon as is pretended.

ST Peter, no doubt, was an eminent Apoſtle, and accordingly makes a diſtinguiſhed Figure in the Sacred Story; but his being at Rome is a Point that we cannot expect from St Luke, becauſe his Account of Things expires ſome Time before our Apoſtle came thither. Some Writers indeed of the Roman Communion place his firſt Coming to Rome in the Year of our Lord 44, which was the ſecond of Claudius; but if we conſider, that in the Epiſtle, which St Paul, towards the latter End of the Reign of Claudius, wrote to the Romans, (wherein he ſpends the greateſt Part of one Chapter in ſaluting the particular Perſons, that were then at Rome) he never once makes mention of St Peter; and how, in that Epiſtle, he expreſſes his earneſt Deſire of coming thither, that he might (o) impart unto them ſome ſpiritual Gifts, to the End that they might be eſtabliſhed in the Faith, for which there could be no apparent Reaſon, had St Peter been there ſo long before him: If we conſider, that, when St Paul, not many Years after, i. e. about the ſecond of

* The Impoſtor, who compoſed theſe Acts, which are ſuppoſed to have been written by Abdias, gives himſelf out to have been a Biſhop, ordain'd at Babylon by the Apoſtles themſelves, when they were upon their Journey into Perſia. The Work is neither antient nor authentick. It was known neither to Euſebius, nor St Jerom, nor any of the Fathers, that lived before them; and yet, according to the Author, who ſays, that he wrote it in Greek, it contains in Subſtance, 1ſt, The Acts of St Peter, or, (according to its preſent Title) The Recognitions of St Clement, a Work ſtuffed with ſuch Viſions and Fables, as muſt come originally from the Ebionites. 2dly, The Acts of St Paul, which pretends to be a Continuation of that Apoſtle's Hiſtory, from the ſecond Year of his firſt Voyage to Rome, to the End of his Life. 3dly, The Acts of St John the Evangeliſt, which, tho' mentioned by Epiphanius and St Auſtin, contains incredible Stories of this Apoſtle. 4thly, The Acts of St Andrew, mentioned by St Auſtin, and received by the Manichees, but different from that, which we have at preſent under the Name of the Prieſts of Achaia. 5thly, The Acts of St Thomas, mentioned by the ſame Father, and received by the ſame Hereticks, as containing that Apoſtle's Travels into India, and the Sufferings which he there underwent. 6thly, The Acts of St Matthias, wrote originally in Hebrew, but what Criticks will not allow to be genuine; and 7thly, The Acts of St Philip, which, as well as the Goſpel, that goes under his Name, was held in great Eſteem by the Gnoſticks. Calmet's Dict. and Pref. ſur les Actes des Apôtres.

of Nero, was ſent Priſoner to Rome, among all the Brethren, (p) that came to meet him, as far as Apii-forum, and the Three Taverns, we hear not a Word of St Peter; and yet we cannot but think, that, had he been then at Rome, he would have come at the Head of the Company to receive a Brother Apoſtle in Chains, and that with him St Paul would have choſen rather to ſojourn, than (q) to dwell by himſelf in his own hired Houſe: If we conſider, that, in the ſeveral Epiſtles, which St Paul wrote from Rome, there is not the leaſt mention of St Peter; that, in that to the Coloſſians in particular, he tells them plainly, that, of all the Jews at Rome, he had no (r) Fellow-workers unto the Kingdom of God, which had been a Comfort unto him, ſave only Ariſtarchus, Marcus, and Jeſus, who was called Juſtus, which evidently excludes St Peter; and, in that to Timothy, complains, that, (s) at his firſt Anſwer at Rome, no Man ſtood with him, but all forſook him, which we can hardly believe St Peter would have done, had he then been there: Nay, if we conſider, that, in the ſame Epiſtle, he tells Timothy, that (t) Luke was the only Perſon that was with him; that Creſcens was gone to one Place, Titus to another, and Tychicus to another; we cannot imagine, either that St Peter, at that Time, was at Rome, or that he had lately gone from thence, ſince, had it been ſo, St Paul, no doubt, would have taken Notice of him, as well as of the reſt, unleſs we may ſuppoſe, that he was a Perſon ſo inconſiderable, as not to be worthy the remembering, and his Errand of ſo ſmall Importance, as not to deſerve a Place in St Paul's Account, as well as that of Creſcens to Galatia, and Titus to Dalmatia.

And yet 'tis certain, he was there, and when.

UPON the Whole therefore we may conclude, that, at the Time when St Paul was firſt at Rome, no Footſteps are to be found of St Peter's having been there; and yet, notwithſtanding this, to deny that he was ever there at all, is (u) to oppoſe the Current of all Antiquity, and the unanimous Conſent of Perſons of great Eminence and Authority, who lived near enough the Times of the Apoſtles, to know the Truth and Certainty of what they reported, and who have told us, (that Peter baptized in Tiber, as John the Baptiſt did in the River Jordan; that in the Days of Nero he was crucified; that the Church of Rome was happy in the having its Doctrines ſealed with Apoſtolick Blood; and that the two glorious Apoſtles, Peter and Paul, having founded and conſtituted this Church, delivered the Care of it over unto Linus: For we muſt obſerve, that, whenever the Ancients ſpeak of the Biſhops of Rome, and the firſt Originals of that Church, they equally attribute the Foundation and Government of it to Peter and Paul, making the one as much concern'd in it as the other. In ſhort, no one that has any Reverence for Antiquity, can deny that St Peter was at Rome; but then 'tis highly probable, that he came not thither, till ſome few Years before his Death; that there he join'd with St Paul in preaching the Goſpel, and that both there ſealed the Teſtimony of it with their Blood.

The Deſign and Subſtance of St Stephen's Speech.

THE Deſign of St Stephen's Speech to the Jews is apparently this,——To anſwer the Charge of Blaſphemy againſt him, for having ſpoken ſomewhat ſlightly of the perpetual Duration of their Temple, and the Obligation of the Ceremonial Law; and this he does, by ſhewing, that the Law (for which, at this Time, they expreſſed ſo fierce a Zeal, as if Salvation could be attain'd no other Way) could not poſſibly be of that weighty Conſequence, and abſolute Neceſſity, as they imagined:

1ſt, (x) BECAUSE it appears, from the Hiſtory of Abraham, and the Patriarchs, that their Anceſtors pleaſed, and continued in the Favour of God for more than four hundred Years without it; and therefore, ſince theſe were God's Peculiar and Elect, before the Law was given, this Law could not be the only Covenant, and Diſpenſation, for the Salvation of Mankind, excluſive of all others.

2*dly*, (y) Because the very Prophet, at whoſe Hands they received the Law, gave them Warning of another eminent Prophet, whom God (in Ages to come) would raiſe up from among them, like unto him, i. e. a Law-giver too, to whom every Soul among them was commanded, upon Pain of utter Exciſion, to yield Attention and Obedience; and that, conſequently, Preaching the Faith and Obedience of Jeſus, who was that very Prophet, could not be Blaſphemy againſt God, or Moſes.

3*dly*, (z) Because the Law, for which they now pretended ſo great a Reverence, was plainly inſufficient to contain them in their Duty, as appeared from their frequent Relapſes into Rebellion and Idolatry, which the Prophets ſharply reproach'd them with, and threatened with ſo many ſevere Puniſhments; and therefore, as the antient Prophets thought it no Profanation either of the Law, or the Temple, to denounce the Aboliſhing of the one, and the Demoliſhing of the other; ſo was it none in him to declare the Abrogation of the former, and the utter Ruin of the latter, to a Generation of Men now ripe for Deſtruction.

This is the Subſtance of St Stephen's Speech, which is far from being incongruous, or immethodical; tho', had he been permitted to bring it to a Concluſion, (as it is plain it was interrupted by the Noiſe and Clamour of the Rabble) it might have appeared to a better Advantage. This however muſt be ſaid in Vindication of what are ſuppoſed to be Errors in it,—1*ſt*, (a) That Terah might die in Charran, before his Son Abraham removed into Canaan. For, tho' it be ſaid, that, (b) at ſeventy Years of Age, he begat Abraham, Nahor, and Haran, yet it does not therefore follow, that Abraham was the eldeſt of theſe. 'Tis not the eldeſt, but the worthieſt, that is frequently firſt named in Holy Writ; For, that Haran, who is laſt nam'd, was conſiderably older than Abraham, is evedent from Abraham's marrying his Daughter, who was only ten Years younger than himſelf. And therefore, if we do but ſuppoſe, that, ſixty Years after that Terah began to beget Children, he begat Abraham, the Father will be two hundred and five Years old, (c) at which Age he died, when the Son was no more than ſeventy-five, at which Time he remov'd into Canaan.——2*dly*, (d) That, tho' there be a Difference between Moſes and St Stephen, in the Number of thoſe who went down with Jacob into Egypt; yet this only ariſes from the different Deſigns of the two Accountants. For, the Deſign of Moſes is to tell us, how many Jacob and his Offſpring amounted to, omitting his Son's Wives; that of St Stephen, how many all the Kindred were, whom Joſeph called into Egypt. In the Light that Moſes conſiders them, they were ſeventy, but then ſeveral of theſe muſt be left out of St Stephen's Number, viz. Joſeph, and his two Sons, who were in Egypt already, Hezron and Hamul, who were not yet born, and Jacob, whom he reckons apart. Now take out theſe ſix from the ſeventy, and there will remain ſixty-four, which, by adding the eleven Wives of Jacob's Sons, are juſt ſeventy-five.——3*dly*, That St Stephen no where inſinuates, that Jacob was buried in Sychem; for his Words are, (e) ſo Jacob went down into Egypt, and there died, he, and our Fathers, and were carried, i. e. our Fathers were carried over into Sychem: (f) For, if Joſeph deſired to have his Bones carried into the Land of Canaan there to be interr'd, there is Reaſon to believe, that the other Fathers deſired the ſame, as having the ſame

Faith in the Promiſes, and the ſame Intereſt in the Land, that Joſeph had; and that, if they did deſire the ſame, the reſt of the Tribes, bearing the ſame Honour to their Patriarchs, that the Tribe of Joſeph did to him, would think themſelves equally concern'd to preſerve their Bones, in order to be carried out of Egypt with them, and to be buried together with Joſeph's Bones (as not improbably they were) at Sychem, tho' the Remains of Jacob might be laid in another Place.

'TIS a Deference, I think, which we owe to the Spirit of God, whenever we find an Oppoſition between ſacred and profane Authors, that cannot be well reconciled, to impute the Error of Miſtake to the latter: Now the Jewiſh Hiſtorian Joſephus tells us of one Theudas, who, in the fourth Year of Claudius, ſet up for a great Prophet, and Worker of Miracles, but was ſoon routed, and deſtroy'd by Cuſpius Fadus, the Roman Governor; and St Luke, as he repreſents the Sentiments of Gamaliel, tells us of one of the ſame Name, who aroſe in the Reign of Auguſtus, and ſome Time before the Inſurrection of Judas the Gaulanite, which happen'd upon Account of the Taxation, when Cyrenius was Governor of Syria: But why ſhould we account both theſe, who are ſo widely diſtant in Point of Time, to be one and the ſame Perſon? Inſtead of charging Gamaliel, or rather St Luke, with a Lapſe of Memory in this Piece of Chronology, it is more reaſonable to think, (z) that the Theudas of Joſephus, and that of Gamaliel, were two Men, but, not unlikely, Father and Son, or Tutor and Scholar; and that this Name was given to the latter Theudas, (even as Parents call their own Children by their Names) or that he himſelf aſſum'd it, in Imitation of the former Theudas, whom he delighted to follow in his Appellation, as well as his enthuſiaſtick Folly. To this Purpoſe Origen informs us, that, having gathered from the Scriptures, that the Time of the Meſſiah was come, firſt Theudas, and after him Judas of Galilee, raiſed Tumults in the Time of the Taxing; and therefore the Fathers unanimouſly ſay, that thoſe Words of our Saviour, all that came before me, are Thieves and Robbers, do relate to theſe two Theudas and Judas of Galilee. So extremely evident it is, that the antient Fathers agreed in this, viz.——That there was a Theudas, pretending to great Matters, even before the Coming of our Lord, tho' his Inſurrection was ſo trifling, having but (a) about four hundred Men, who joined him, that the Jewiſh Hiſtorian has taken no Notice of it.

St Luke's Expreſſion in Acts ii. 5. vindicated.

ANOTHER Conceſſion, that I think we may fairly claim in Behalf of the Sacred Penmen, is, that the ſame Licence of Expreſſion, which profane Writers make ſo much Uſe of, may ſometimes be allow'd them; which will quite deſtroy the Objection againſt the hyperbolical Phraſe in St Luke, of (b) Jews reſiding at Jeruſalem out of every Nation under Heaven; tho', upon a ſhort Enquiry into the ſeveral Diſperſions of that People, we way be able, in ſome Meaſure, to vindicate the Truth of it, even in the very Letter.

The ſeveral Diſperſions of the Jews.

TO this Purpoſe we may obſerve, that, before their final Diſperſion by the Romans, the Jews had ſuffer'd two Captivities, or great Diſperſions, beſides ſome ſmaller Scatterings. The firſt was of the ten Tribes of Iſrael by Shalmaneſer, King of Aſſyria, who is ſaid to have carry'd them away, (c) and planted them in Halah, and Haber, and in the Cities of the Medes; and, as theſe never return'd to dwell in their own Country, they are the Parthians, Medes, and Elamites, i. e. the Perſians of the Province of Elymais, whom St Luke, (d) in his ſubſequent Enumeration, intends. The ſecond Captivity was by Nebuchadnezzar, King of Babylon, when he carry'd away the other two Tribes of Judah and Benjamin; and (e) plac'd them in Babylon, and other of his Territories. Now, tho' a good Part of theſe, at the End of ſeventy Years, return'd from their Captivity, yet great Numbers of them, finding themſelves happily ſituated under Princes, who indulg'd them a free Exerciſe of their Religion, never viſited their native Country, except it was at ſome of their great annual Feſtivals; and of the Number of theſe we may ſuppoſe thoſe to be, whom St Luke calls (f) the Dwellers in Meſopotamia. Beſides theſe two great Diſperſions, there happen'd a third in the Days of Ptolemy Soto (g), who ſurpris'd the City of Jeruſalem, and, carrying away above an hundred thouſand of its Inhabitants, plac'd them in his garriſon'd Cities, and other Places dependent on Alexandria.

NOW from theſe three principal Diſperſions did proceed thoſe leſſer Scatterings in all Parts of the Roman Empire, and elſewhere. From that of Babylon and Meſopotamia, ſprang thoſe (h) of Cappadocia, Pontus, Phrygia, Pamphylia, and other Parts of Aſia Minor; and from that of Egypt and Alexandria, were deriv'd thoſe of Libya, Cyrene, and all other Helleniſts whatever, in the ſeveral Parts of the Roman Empire. Add to all this, the many Natives of Judea itſelf, who, upon one Occaſion or other, choſe to live among the Gentiles, and more eſpecially at Rome, which was then the Metropolis of the whole World; and from hence might proceed (i) thoſe Strangers of Rome, Jews and Proſelytes, Cretes and Arabians, whom the Apoſtle, in like Manner, enumerates.

Why there might be ſome of all Nations then at Jeruſalem.

AGRIPPA, we read in his Speech to the Jews, diſſuading them from rebelling againſt the Romans, for fear of bringing a ſad Calamity, not upon themſelves only, but upon the whole Nation, whereever diſpers'd among the Gentiles, ſticks not to ſay, that (k) there was no People in the World, who had not ſome of their Nation dwelling among them; and therefore we need leſs wonder, that we find the Sacred Hiſtory aſſerting, that Jews of every Nation under Heaven were, at this Time, met at Jeruſalem, when, (l) not only a great Feſtival, in which all their Males were to appear before God, ſummon'd them thither; but their earneſt Expectation likewiſe of the promis'd Meſſiah, whoſe Time of coming, according to the Prediction of their Prophets, was now accompliſh'd, might make them more deſirous to return to their native Country, there, with an holy Impatience, to wait for the Conſolation of Iſrael.

An Account of the Miniſters of the primitive Church.

(m) WHAT makes it very difficult to give a diſtinct Account of the Offices and Orders of the Chriſtian Miniſters in the Apoſtoliek Age, is, the Shortneſs of the Hiſtorical Part of the New Teſtament, which ſeldom extends farther than the firſt Plantation of Churches; and the Deſign of the Epiſtolary Part, which, being written to Perſons lately converted to Chriſtianity, was to acquaint them with the Principles of their Religion, and to arm them againſt falſe Teachers, rather than inſtruct them in the Form of Church Government: However, by a due Attention to what we read, we may obſerve,

The Apoſtles, and their Offices.

—— That the Apoſtles were the firſt, and moſt diſtinguiſh'd of our Bleſſed Lord's Diſciples, choſen by him to be his more immediate Attendants, and, in the Courſe of his Miniſtry, admitted to a greater Confidence and Familiarity, than the reſt: That, upon his leaving the World, he commanded them to teſtify the Truth of his Reſurrection and Aſcenſion, and to publiſh the Doctrines and Myſteries of the Goſpel in all Nations, and, at the ſame Time, gave them Authority to govern the Churches, which they ſhould eſtabliſh every where: (n) that, to enable them to diſcharge their weighty Offices, they were endued with ſuperior ſuperior Courage, and Gifts extraordinary, that what they had in their Inſtructions they might publiſh and teſtify to the greateſt Audience, and in Times of the greateſt Danger: That, having, by this Means, ſpread the Chriſtian Religion far and wide, they ſettled Churches in the ſeveral Places, where they had made a ſufficient Number of Converts, with proper Miniſters to attend the Offices of Religion, while themſelves proceeded in the great Affair of propagating the Goſpel in other Countries: (n) That in the Churches, which they thus had founded, they retained the chief Authority, and had all other Miniſters, of what Quality ſoever, ſubject to them, as appears from St Paul's Epiſtle to Timothy and Titus, indited in a Stile, which ſufficiently ſpeaks a Superiority over them: And that, in Virtue of their Commiſſion from Chriſt, they exerciſed a Power of making ſuch Laws and Conſtitutions, as were found neceſſary for the good Government of the Church; of enforcing theſe Laws with ſuch Penalties, as the Nature of Tranſgreſſions required; of ejecting the Incorrigible from the Communion of the Saints; of pardoning and receiving the Penitent; of conferring the Gifts of the Holy Ghoſt; of chuſing proper Perſons to adminiſter in holy Offices; and of appointing their Succeſſors to rule and preſide in the Church.

Biſhops, and their Offices.

This is the moſt of what we learn concerning the Apoſtles, and their diſtinct Offices: And, in relation to the inferior Miniſters of the Chriſtian Church, we may obſerve, —— That upon the Departure of the Apoſtles from Jeruſalem, (if not much ſooner) St James, the near Relation of our Lord, was made the fixed Biſhop of that City, and under him had ſeven Deacons, who were ſolemnly ordained by the Apoſtles: That, in the Churches of Epheſus and Crete, St Paul gives Timothy and Titus plain Rules for their Conduct, in the Ordination of Biſhops and Deacons; ſo that Timothy and Titus muſt have been Biſhops themſelves, otherwiſe they could not have ordained others to that Office: That, tho' the Words Biſhop and Elder * be uſed promiſcuouſly, and are ſometimes applied to the ſame Perſon, (as St John calls himſelf an Elder, though, at the ſame Time, he was ſovereign Biſhop of Aſia) yet this he might do upon different Conſiderations, ſince an Elder he might be, with regard to his Age, and a Biſhop, with regard to his Office: And that Biſhops were Officers in the Chriſtian Church, appointed (n) Archbiſhop Potter, on Church Government.

* Allowing it to be true, that theſe Names in Scripture are uſed promiſcuouſly, (which yet is by very learned Men, and upon very good Authority, denied) yet ſtill this is no Proof, that Preſbyters muſt be advanced to the Dignity of Biſhops, or Biſhops ſunk to the Level of Preſbyters. For, although the Term Preſbyter is, at preſent, uſed to denote the Office of thoſe, who aſſiſt the Biſhop, and are ſubject to him in diſcharging ſome of the Miniſterial Functions, yet, in the Days of the Apoſtles, the Biſhops might be called Preſbyters, though they had then other Preſbyters ſubject to them. For, although all Preſbyters are not Biſhops, yet all Biſhops are Preſbyters; although the former may not perform the Function of the latter, the latter may perform the Functions of the former; what Offices are incumbent upon a Preſbyter, thoſe a Biſhop has a Right to perform, and may therefore, upon that Account, very juſtly be called a Preſbyter. It is allowed on all Hands, that, under the Jewiſh Diſpenſation, there were three Orders of Eccleſiaſtical Perſons, the High-Prieſt, the Prieſt, and the Levites; and yet, in the firſt Inſtitution of theſe Orders, the Word Prieſt is uſed promiſcuouſly, as well of the High-Prieſt, as of the inferior Prieſts; ſo that Aaron himſelf, the firſt High-Prieſt in the Book of Moſes, is never dignified with any higher Character than that of a Prieſt. But whoever, from this promiſcuous Uſe of his Name, has attempted to prove that all the Prieſts were equal to the High-Prieſt? Or, that the Sons of Aaron were of the ſame Dignity and Order with Aaron, the Father? And yet this is the main Argument, which the Contenders for a Parity among the Preſbyters make uſe of to prove their Aſſertion, viz. that becauſe, in the Writings of the Apoſtles, Biſhops are ſometimes (according to the Opinion of ſome Interpreters) call'd Preſbyters, Biſhops and Preſbyters were therefore both of one Order; but, if being call'd by the ſame Name makes an Equality in Miniſterial Functions, our Saviour, who is term'd an Apoſtle, Heb. iii. 1. a Biſhop or Paſtor, 1 Pet. ii. 25. a Maſter or Doctor, Matth. xxiii. 10. a Miniſter or Deacon, Rom xv. 8. muſt, by this Form of Reaſoning, be degraded to an Equality with the Apoſtles, with Biſhops, with Maſters, nay, with Deacons themſelves, which is not only incongruous, but impious to aſſert. Deacons, and their Offices.

Brethren, and their Power.

appointed by the Apoſtles to be their Succeſſors in the Government of it, and, in their Abſence, or upon their Demiſe, to exerciſe the ſame Functions, as it was in the Caſe of Timothy and Titus: That the Elders, (ſuppoſing them diſtinct from Biſhops) were thoſe, who had been with Chriſt from the Beginning, and, having received the Holy Ghoſt, at the ſame Time that the Apoſtles did, were ſometimes choſen into their Number, (as were Matthias and Barnabas) and, upon Account of their extraordinary Gifts, (though they were not fixed Miniſters) had a Right to officiate wherever they came, a Share in the Government of the Church, and a Seat in all their Councils and Synods: That, in the great Variety of Gifts, which Chriſt beſtowed upon his Church, ſome of theſe Elders, very probably, were Prophets, whoſe principal Work it was, by expounding the Prophecies of the Old Teſtament, and foretelling future Events to convince the Jews; and others Evangeliſts, who, by writing the Goſpel by Inſpiration, and preaching it to Infidels, who never heard of it, made it their Buſineſs to convert the Gentiles; that, tho' in ſome Churches, when firſt eſtabliſhed, we find only a Biſhop and his Deacons, without any Mention of the intermediate Order of Preſbyters; yet, when the Number of Chriſtians increaſed, the Biſhop ordained others to officiate in the Congregations, where he could not be preſent, and to aſſiſt him in the other Parts of his Paſtoral Charge; and were, at that Time, called Teachers, and afterwards Preſbyters, or Prieſts: That theſe Preſbyters were a ſettled Order in the Church, ſuperior to Deacons, but, in the Matter of Ordination and Confirmation by the Impoſition of Hands, inferior to Biſhops, though, in all other Reſpects, their Equals, and alike impowered to diſpenſe the Word, adminiſter the Sacraments, and offer up the Prayers of the People: That Deacons (as their very Name imports) were Perſons appointed to attend on the Biſhops, and (according to the Original Inſtitution of their Order) to take Care of the Poor, i. e. to enquire into the Neceſſities of every one, and to apply a ſuitable Relief to them out of the Church's Treaſure, tho' (from the Examples of St Philip and Stephen) we find that their Employment likewiſe was to baptiſe Converts and Children, and to preach the Goſpel to the Adult: And that the Brethren were properly what we now call the Laity of the Church; but then, as the Laity at that Time were endued with ſpecial Gifts, by theſe they were entitled to have ſome Share in the Adminiſtration of the Church; were preſent with the Apoſtles and Elders at the Council of Jeruſalem; and had Leave given them to chuſe proper Perſons out of their Body, and to preſent theſe to the Apoſtles, while they were alive, and afterwards to the Biſhops, but had no Power at all of their own Accord to ordain or appoint them to any ſacred Office: We may obſerve, I ſay, that ſuch were the ſeveral Orders of Men, in the Beginning of the Chriſtian Church, ſuch the Diverſities of their Gifts, and ſuch the Differences of their Adminiſtrations.

The ſtanding Miniſters of the Church after the Apoſtles.

But, as it muſt be owned, that ſeveral of theſe were extraordinary Perſons, and continued no longer than the Apoſtolick Age; ſo, to have a full and diſtinct Account of ſuch ſtanding Officers, as were to abide for ever, we muſt have recourſe to the Teſtimony of Antiquity, which perfectly agrees in this,——That after the Apoſtles Days, they were no other, than Biſhops, Preſbyters, and Deacons: And, accordingly, Ignatius, (to mention one Evidence for all) after he had been forty Years Biſhop of Antioch, (to which Dignity he was promoted by the Hands of Peter the Apoſtle, and therefore cannot be ſuppoſed to be ignorant of the State of the primitive Church) in his Exhortation to the People to be obedient to the Miniſters of it, tells us of the Biſhop preſiding in the Place of God; the Preſbyters, as the Council of the Apoſtles; and the Deacons, as the Miniſters of Chriſt; and therefore, ſays he, he that is within the Altar, is pure; but whoever does any Thing without the Biſhop, the College of Preſbyters, and the Deacons, his Conſcience is defiled; and therefore (ſays he again) adhere to the Biſhops, the College of Preſbyters, and the Deacons. A ſufficient Atteſtation, that theſe were the ſtanding Miniſters of the Chriſtian Church in thoſe Days.

In what Senſe Timothy and Titus were Biſhops of Epheſus and Crete.

THAT Timothy and Titus were Biſhops of Epheſus and Crete, and both ſuch by the Appointment of the Apoſtle St Paul, we have the Teſtimony of all Antiquity to convince us; but, if by ſaying, that they were Biſhops, we mean, that they took upon them theſe Churches, or Dioceſes, as their fixed and peculiar Charge, in which they were to preſide for Term of Life, we are much miſtaken. Upon St Paul's going to Macedonia, (o) he exhorts Timothy to abide at Epheſus, in order to correct ſeveral Abuſes; and yet, (p) in his ſecond Epiſtle, we find him intreating him to come to Rome, where he continued (as the Antients conjecture) to the Time of the Apoſtle's Martyrdom. In like Manner, St Paul (q) left Titus in Crete, to ordain Elders in every City, and to ſet in Order the Things, that were wanting; but no ſooner had he done this, than he ſent for him, the very next Year, to Nicopolis; and, having ſent Artemas to ſupply his Place, took him along with him to Rome, and then ſent him into Dalmatia, upon the great Affair of propagating the Goſpel, till, at length, after the Apoſtle's Death, he returned again to Crete.

And that they were real Biſhops, tho' not reſident.

THE Truth is, theſe two Perſons were not only Biſhops, but Evangeliſts likewiſe; and the Work of an Evangeliſt (as Euſebius informs us) was this,——To lay the Foundation of the Faith in barbarous Nations, to conſtitute in them Paſtors, and, having committed to them the Cultivating of theſe new Plantations, to paſs on to other Countries and Nations; ſo that, according to this, theſe two Evangeliſts were not in a Condition to reſide in their reſpective Dioceſes. But ſtill, if by Biſhops we only underſtand Perſons, who had Authority to ordain, and govern the Clergy of their Provinces, and to exerciſe Acts of Diſcipline and Cenſure over Eccleſiaſticks, as well as private Chriſtians, we cannot but think, that, when we find (r) Timothy ſet over the Houſe of God, and, in that Houſe, impowered (s) to make Rules for the orderly Celebration of Divine Worſhip; to ſee that Teachers (t) taught no other Doctrine, than what they had received from our Lord and his Diſciples; to commit the Doctrine of the Goſpel (u) to faithful Men, who ſhould be able to teach others; and to ordain thoſe, whom he ſhould find to be qualified, (x) ſome to be Biſhops, and others Deacons: When we find him authorized (y) to provide for the competent Maintenance, and all due Reſpect of Church-Offices; to take Cognizance of Accuſations, (z) even againſt Elders; to (a) rebuke publickly thoſe that ſin; and to inflict Cenſures, proportionably to the Crimes, that are proved againſt them: And when we find Titus, in like Manner, authorized to teach all Degrees of Men, and (b) to exhort and rebuke them with all Authority; to take Cognizance of Hereticks; and ſuch, as did not repent (c) upon the ſecond Admonition, to reject from the Communion of Saints; (d) to ſet in Order what St Paul had left unfiniſhed; and to ordain thoſe whom himſelf ſhould approve, to be Biſhops and Elders: We cannot but think, I ſay, that, to all Intents and Purpoſes, they were Biſhops, and had the ſeveral Parts of the Apoſtolick Authority committed to them; tho' in this they differed from ſuch ſettled Dioceſan Biſhops, as are among us, that the frequent Calls of their Evangelical Office obliged them to be oftentimes abſent from their Charge.

When Paul and Barnabas firſt commenced Apoſtles.

ST Paul, ſpeaking of himſelf and his Doctrine, has theſe remarkable Words: I certify

(o) 1 Tim. i. 3. (p) 2 Tim. iv. 9. (q) Tit. i. 5. (r) 1 Tim. iii. 15. (s) Ibid. ii. 1. (t) Ibid. i. 3. (u) 2 Tim. ii. 2. (x) 1 Tim. iii. 1, 2, &c. (y) Ibid. v. 17. (z) Ibid. ver. 19. (a) Ibid. ver. 20. (b) Tit. ii. 15. (c) Ibid. iii. 10. (d) Ibid. i. 5, 6.

(e) I certify to you, Brethren, that the Goſpel, which was preached of me, is not of Man; for I neither received it of Man, neither was I taught it, but by the Revelation of Jeſus Chriſt; and therefore he ſtiles himſelf an (f) Apoſtle, not of Men, neither by Man. Let us then obſerve a little, when it was, that Jeſus Chriſt vouchſafed him the Revelation, which he here ſpeaks of, and then we may poſſibly find out the Time, when he firſt commenced an Apoſtle. At his firſt Converſion near Damaſcus, he ſaw a great Light, and heard a Voice iſſuing from Heaven; but it does not appear, that, at this Time, he had any Sight of Chriſt, or received any Revelation from him, except (g) that he ſhould go to Damaſcus, where it ſhould be told him what was appointed for him to do. In Damaſcus indeed, Ananias told him, that God had choſen him, (h) to know his Will, and ſee that juſt One, and to hear the Voice of his Mouth, and (i) to carry his Name to the Gentiles; but this is rather a Declaration of what was revealed to Ananias, than any Deſignation of Saul to the Apoſtleſhip. Encouraged however by this Notification from Ananias, and the Inſpiration, which he received by the Impoſition of his Hands, he began to preach in the Name of Chriſt, and continued to do ſo for full three Years with great Eloquence, and Strength of Argument; but ſo far was all this from gaining him the Character of an Apoſtle, that, when he came to Jeruſalem, the firſt Time after his Converſion, (k) the Brethren would not believe that he was ſo much as a Diſciple. 'Tis no improbable Opinion therefore, (l) that it was at the ſecond Time of his Coming up to Jeruſalem, when, (as himſelf relates the Matter) while he was praying in the Temple, he fell into a Trance, and ſaw Jeſus Chriſt ſaying unto him, (m) Make haſte, and get thee quickly out of Jeruſalem; for they will not receive thy Teſtimony concerning me, and therefore depart; for I will ſend thee far hence to the Gentiles: 'Twas at this Time, I ſay, that he not only received his Commiſſion to preach the Goſpel to the Gentiles, but the Revelation of (n) the Goſpel likewiſe, which he was to preach, and the Deſignation of the very Perſon, that was to accompany him in the Work.

That he received ſuch a Revelation, (o) wherein God made known unto him the Myſtery, which, in other Ages, was not known unto the Sons of Men, viz. that the Gentiles ſhould be Fellow-heirs, and of the ſame Body, and Partakers of his Promiſe in Chriſt by the Goſpel, himſelf teſtifies; and yet we have no clear Account of any other Interview between Chriſt and him, than what happened here in the Temple, upon his ſecond Coming to Jeruſalem. Being thus furniſhed with a proper Revelation, and a Fellow-labourer to aſſiſt him in the Propagation of it, he and Barnabas returned unto Antioch, where the Holy Ghoſt ſoon order'd the Church (p) to ſeparate them for the Work, whereunto he had called them, viz. in the Viſion, which he vouchſafed Saul in the Temple, when he was laſt at Jeruſalem; and, accordingly, the Church (q) faſted and prayed, and laid their Hands on them, having recommended them to the Grace of God, and ſent them away; and they, being thus ſent forth by the holy Ghoſt, proceeded to the Work of their Miniſtry with great Chearfulneſs and Unanimity; until, upon their ſecond Perigrination, a certain Diſagreement happened, which produced a Separation between them.

The Benefit of their Diſagreement and Parting.

It may not be amiſs however to obſerve, that the Deſign of the Holy Ghoſt, in having this their Perverſeneſs recorded, was, not only to teſtify the Truth and Sincerity of the Apoſtolick Hiſtory, which is not afraid to relate the Faults and Failings of its chief Perſonages, whatever Conſtruction

Conſtruction may be put upon them; but to ſhew us likewiſe, that the beſt Chriſtians are ſubject to the ſame Paſſions and Infirmities with other Men; and that therefore none ought to be too much elated with an Opinion of their own Piety, or to deſpiſe others, whom they may imagine their Inferiors. Nor muſt it be forgotten, that this Benefit in particular accrued to St Mark, (who was the Subject of their Contention) viz. that the Poſitiveneſs of St Paul, not to take him in Company, who, in their former Journey, had ſo ſhamefully deſerted them, made him more conſtant and reſolved in the Service of the Church for the Time to come, and gave the Church this Advantage, (as we hinted before) (p) that, by Means of the Separation of two ſuch eminent Apoſtles, more People were converted, and a greater Number of Provinces (than otherwiſe would have been) viſited with the glorious Light of the Goſpel.

The Heinouſneſs of Ananias's Sin.

The like Benefit accrued to the Church from the Divine Severity on Ananias, and his Wife Sapphira; for it was not any Sentence of St Peter that deſtroyed them, but the righteous Judgment of God, in puniſhing the Hypocriſy, the Covetouſneſs, the Sacrilege, and groſs Impiety, wherewith their Crime was aggravated. The Cuſtom in thoſe Times was, (q) for as many as were Poſſeſſors of Lands, to ſell them, and to bring the Prices of the Things that were ſold, and to lay them down at the Apoſtles Feet, that Diſtribution might be made unto every Man according as he had Need. This charitable Diſpoſition among Believers, Ananias and his Wife made uſe of, to obtain a falſe Reputation, and to paſs a Cheat upon the Apoſtles, if they could. To this Purpoſe, they gave it out, that they had devoted all their Poſſeſſions (which perhaps were very large) to the Uſe of the Church, and accordingly ſold them. “This, ſay they, will gain us the Credit of being very charitable and religious Perſons; will make us be highly reſpected by the Apoſtles, and, in a Manner idolized among the Brethren. We purpoſe, however, not to give away our All upon this Occaſion, tho' we may pretend we do ſo; but will reſerve a good Portion to ourſelves; and, if we keep but our own Counſel, who will find it out? The Apoſtles indeed are Perſons endued with great Gifts, but (r) what Man knoweth the Things of a Man, ſave the Spirit of a Man, which is in him? It is impoſſible for them to pry into our Hearts: and therefore, if we blab it not ourſelves, we may, by this Means, put out our Money to good Intereſt, and, by laying down a Part of the Price at the Apoſtles Feet, (as others have done the whole) be intitled to the ſame Right of Relief from the publick Stock, which others, who have parted with their All, are admitted to, and, at the ſame Time, retain a comfortable Subſiſtence for ourſelves. All that we have to do then, is, to be ſtedfaſt and uniform in our Story, and then we may defy the Spirit of God itſelf, which the Apoſtles make ſuch Boaſt of, to detect us.”

And the Juſtice of his Puniſhment.

This ſeems to be a natural Comment upon their Contrivance and Conſpiracy; and if ſo, (s) the Jews, who are apt to object againſt Chriſtians the Severity of what they ſuffered, would do well to remember, that the Law of Moſes allowed of no Atonement for wilful Sacrilege, but (t) left the Delinquent to be cut off by the Hand of Heaven, as Ananias here was: Nor ſhould it be forgotten, (u) that, as we find God, under the Law, more ſevere in his Puniſhment of thoſe, who firſt offended in offering ſtrange Fire, (as in the Caſe of Nadab and Abihu) and violated the Sabbath, (as in the Caſe of the Man, who gathered Sticks on that Day) and, eſpecially, againſt thoſe, who roſe up againſt Moſes the Prophet, and Aaron the Prieſt of the Lord, (as in the Caſe of Corah and his Company) there is the like Reaſon, that the firſt great Offence of this Kind, under the Goſpel Diſpenſation, ſhould receive exemplary Puniſhment from the Hand of God, that others might ſtand in more Terror of thoſe Sins, which thus affronted that Holy Ghoſt, by whoſe Power the Chriſtian Religion began now to be propagated; for ſo the Text tells us, (x) that great Fear came upon all the Church, and upon as many, as heard theſe Things, and Believers were the more added to the Lord, Multitudes both of Men and Women.

Why St Paul allowed Timothy, and not Titus to be circumciſed.

St PAUL, ſpeaking of his own eaſy Compliance to the ſeveral Tempers, and Humours of thoſe, with whom he converſed, (y) Tho' I be free from all Men, ſays he, yet have I made myſelf a Servant unto All, that I might gain the more; unto the Jews I became as a Jew, that I might gain the Jews; to them that are under the Law, as under the Law, that I might gain them that are under the Law; to them that are without the Law, as without the Law, that I might gain them that are without the Law; to the Weak became I as Weak, that I might gain the Weak; I am made all Things to all Men, that I might by all Means ſave ſome, and this I do for the Goſpel Sake: And doubtleſs for the Goſpel's Sake it was, that he appointed Timothy to be circumciſed. He knew full well the Prejudices, which the Jews had conceived againſt Perſons, who had not ſubmitted to that Ordinance; that they would not ſuffer them to appear, much leſs to argue and diſcourſe, in any of their Synagogues: And therefore, being determined to take Timothy for the Companion of his Travels, (to make his Acceſs more eaſy to the Jews, and himſelf a fitter Inſtrument in their Converſion) he thought proper to give him this Paſs-port, as it were. (z) Circumciſion he knew was nothing, and Uncircumciſion was nothing, but the keeping of the Commandments of God. (a) In its own Nature it was a Thing indifferent, neither required by the Chriſtian Religion, nor inconſiſtent with it; and under this Conſideration, he was willing it ſhould paſs upon Timothy: But when it came to be required as a Duty, and a Duty neceſſary to Salvation; to be uſed as the diſtinguiſhing Mark of a Jew, in Oppoſition to Chriſtians; to be made an Obligation to the total Obſervance of the Law, and a Rock of Offence to thoſe of a different Perſuaſion; it then became Evil, and inconſiſtent with the Doctrine of the Goſpel. Under this Senſe it is, that St Paul ſo frequently, and ſo loudly diſclaims againſt it; and upon theſe Conſiderations it was, that he would not allow Titus to be circumciſed, notwithſtanding the earneſt Importunity of ſome People of Reputation at Jeruſalem.

(b) With what a jealous Eye St Paul was looked upon by all judaizing Chriſtians, as a Perſon averſe to the Moſaick Inſtitutions, is ſufficiently known. Theſe Men had been at Antioch, where, having inſidiouſly watched the Liberty which he took in omitting all legal Obſervances, they, when he came to Jeruſalem, informed the Church againſt him, that he preached to the Gentiles, who were not circumciſed; that he converſed freely, and familiarly with them; that Titus, who was a Greek, was at that Time with him; and therefore, to put the Matter upon an Iſſue, they urged, that this intimate Friend of his might be circumciſed. Their Policy in this was viſible. Had they carried their Point againſt St Paul, they would ſoon have inform'd the Church of Antioch, that, by the Order of the Council at Jeruſalem, (c) Titus had been obliged to be circumciſed; and this, beſides the Defeat given to the Apoſtle, and Baffle to his Doctrine of Chriſtian Liberty, would have proved a great Scandal, and Diſcouragement to the Heathen Converts, and an Impediment to the Progreſs of the Goſpel, which at that Time began to be more ſucceſsful among the Gentiles, than the Jews. And therefore St Paul was reſolute, and took eſpecial Care that Titus ſhould not be circumciſed. So that, upon the Whole, it appears, that St Paul was no ways inconſiſtent with himſelf, tho' he varied his Conduct, according to the different Circumſtances he found himſelf under. He ordered Timothy (whoſe Mother was a Jeweſs) to be circumciſed, becauſe his Circumciſion would be a Means to forward his Miniſtry, and to gain him an eaſier Acceſs to the Jews; but he refus'd to have Titus, who was a Gentile, circumciſed, becauſe his Circumciſion would have been a Means to ſcandalize the Brethren, to alienate their Minds from the Chriſtian Faith, and a great Obſtruction to the Courſe of the Goſpel. In ſhort, (c) Titus he would not ſuffer to be circumciſed, thereby to ſhew, that Circumciſion was not neceſſary; but Timothy he allowed to be circumciſed, that, by his Practice, it might appear, that ſuch Ceremonies were not evil in themſelves, but might be uſed without any Crime, until by Degrees they came to be aboliſh'd.

Why the Apoſtles deſired Paul to comply with Jewiſh Ceremonies, and he conformed thereunto.

THE like may be ſaid of his own Compliance with certain Ceremonies of Purification, at the Requeſt of St James, and the other Elders at Jeruſalem, and for the Satisfaction of the Jewiſh Converts there. (d) Thou ſeeſt, Brother, ſay they, how many Thouſands of Jews there are, who believe, and they are all zealous for the Obſervance of the Law. The Law of Moſes was held in ſo great Veneration, as being the Contrivance of God himſelf, (e) ordained by Angels in the Hand of a Mediator, ratified by Miracles, and entertain'd by all their Fore-fathers, as the peculiar Prerogative of their Nation for ſo many Generations, that even thoſe, who by the Evidence of the Goſpel were prevailed upon to embrace Chriſtianity, could not overcome the Prejudice of Education, but ſtill continued their Adherence to thoſe legal Rites and Cuſtoms, wherein they had been brought up. Some of them indeed were for obtruding them upon the Gentile Converts, but the moſt moderate of them all (even Biſhops and Elders, as as well as the Laity) were for a punctual Obſervation of them among the Jewiſh. They were convinced, that theſe Inſtitutions were of Divine Original. They knew of no Revelation made by God, that they were to ceaſe after the Death of their Meſſiah. Our Bleſſed Saviour, in his Goſpel, had ſaid little or nothing of them; nay, in ſaying that he came not to deſtroy the Law, and the Prophets, he ſeems to have given a freſh Sanction to them; and becauſe he foreknew, that the Deſtruction of their Temple, and their Excluſion from their own Land would, in a ſhort Time, make it impoſſible for them to obſerve them, he had given none of the Apoſtles (except it was St Paul) any Intimations concerning them; and therefore it is not to be wondered, that Men in theſe Circumſtances, ſhould adviſe St Paul (for the Good of ſo many Thouſand Souls, as might otherwiſe take Exception at his Conduct) to comply with the Obſervance of ſome Things, which, as yet, they did not think abrogated. So that, in the Apoſtles at Jeruſalem, there was no Deſign of deluding the People into a falſe Belief by St Paul's conforming himſelf to ſome Ritual Obſervances, becauſe their preſent Perſuaſion was, that it was a Duty incumbent upon him ſo to do. St Paul indeed knew very well, that our Saviour, by his Death, (f) had aboliſhed the Law of Commandments, contained in Ordinances; but ſince theſe were Obſervances belonging to the Temple, which was yet ſtanding, and God had not, by any expreſs Declaration made to the Jews, prohibited the Continuance of them, he might lawfully ſubmit to this Compliance with them, in order to prevent the Scandal of the believing Jews, which might otherwiſe alienate them from the Chriſtianity they had embraced, and to promote, by his future Preaching

Why he declared himſelf a Phariſee.

Preaching among them, the Converſion, and Salvation of the Unbelieving.

(g) BEHOLD, I ſend you forth as Sheep in the midſt of Wolves; be ye therefore wiſe as Serpents, and harmleſs as Doves, is a Leſſon which our Saviour gave his Diſciples, and which St Paul, more eſpecially at this Time, when he was every where ſurrounded by his Enemies, had Occaſion to put in Practice. Moſt Caſuiſts are of Opinion, that, by all innocent Men it is allowable to ſow Diviſions among the Wicked, becauſe the Union of the Wicked is as prejudicial to the Cauſe of Religion, as the Diſunion of the Good is deſtructive to it. If therefore St Paul by an innocent Addreſs, could ſet the Phariſees and Sadducees at Variance, there is no Reaſon to be given, why he ſhould decline it. Had he indeed in ſo doing but implicitly denied himſelf to be a Chriſtian, this had been an inexcuſable Crime; but both the Phariſees and Sadducees were too well acquainted with him and his Converſion, ever to put that Conſtruction upon his Words. The Reſurrection of the Dead was a principal Doctrine of the Chriſtian Religion, and, as it was co-incident with the Faith of the Phariſees, I cannot ſee how he could uſe a more proper Argument, to convince them of their Fault and Folly in perſecuting Chriſtians, than to ſhew, that they themſelves did hold one of the prime Articles of the Chriſtian Faith; and, if by declaring this Doctrine of Chriſtianity before them, he engaged the Phariſees on his Side, and thereby declined the Malice and Rage of his Enemies, who can ſay, but that, in this putting the Wiſdom of the Serpent in Execution, he ſtill preſerved the Harmleſſneſs of the Dove.

Why he reproved St Peter, and how much he deſerved it.

BUT this can hardly be ſaid of St Peter's Prevarication at Antioch. (h) He, at his firſt Coming down to that Place, made uſe of the Liberty, which the Goſpel had given him. He familiarly eat, and converſed with the Gentile Converts, accounting them, now that the Partition-Wall was broke down, no longer (i) Strangers and Foreigners, but Fellow-Citizens with the Saints, and of the Houſhold of God. This he had been taught by the Viſion of the Sheet let down from Heaven. This had been lately decreed, and he himſelf had promoted, and ſubſcribed it in the Synod at Jeruſalem. This he had before practiſed towards Cornelius and his Family, and juſtified the Action to the Satisfaction of his Accuſers: And this he had freely and innocently done at Antioch, till, ſome of the Jewiſh Brethren coming thither, for fear of offending and diſpleaſing them, he withdrew his Converſe from the Gentiles, as if it had been unlawful for him to hold Communion with uncircumciſed Perſons. In this Affair, as he himſelf acted againſt the Light of his own Mind and Judgment, condemning what he had approved, and deſtroying what before he had built up; ſo hereby he confirm'd the Jewiſh Zealots in their inveterate Error; caſt infinite Scruples into the Minds of the Gentiles; revived the old Feuds and Prejudices between them; deſtroyed that Union and Harmony, which, before his Coming, prevailed in the Church of Antioch; and, in ſhort, brought Matters to that Iſſue, that the whole Number of Jewiſh Converts following his Example, ſeparated themſelves from the Company of Gentile Chriſtians, inſomuch, that St Paul was forced to interpoſe his Authority with Rebukes.

(k) MARK them, who cauſe Diviſions, and Offences, contrary to the Doctrine, which ye have learned, and avoid them, is the Inſtruction which he gave the Romans; and had he put it in Practice upon this Occaſion, there had then been ſome Grounds to complain of his † Rudeneſs and (g) Matt. x. 16. (h) Cave's Life of St Peter. (i) Eph. ii. 19. (k) Rom. xvi. 17.

† Porphyry, that ſubtle Enemy of the Chriſtian Religion, makes uſe of this Reproof, which St Paul gave St Peter, as an Argument againſt them both, charging the one with Error and Falſhood, and the other with Rudeneſs and Incivility to St Peter; but, in oppoſing his Conduct, where it was blameable, and in telling him of his Faults, when they were notorious, he acted (even in the Eye of the Moſaick Law) the Part of a kind Brother; for (l) Thou ſhalt not hate thy Brother in thine Heart; thou ſhalt in any wiſe rebuke thy Neighbour, and not ſuffer Sin upon him; where, if not to rebuke a Brother, is to hate him, to rebuke him by Conſequence, is to love him; and therefore the Royal Pſalmiſt makes it the Matter of his Prayer, (m) Let the Righteous ſmite me friendly, and reprove me, but let not their precious Balm break my Head.

The different Occaſions of St Paul's and St James's Doctrine, concerning Juſtification.

BUT tho' St Paul might think it his Duty, and no Unkindneſs to St Peter, to oppoſe him in his Diſſimulation; yet we find him no where diſagreeing with St James, in any Point of Chriſtian Doctrine. To ſilence the Clamours of thoſe indeed, who pleaded for the Neceſſity of Circumciſion, and other Jewiſh Ordinances under the Chriſtian Diſpenſation, and were for impoſing them upon the Gentile Converts, as Things eſſential to Salvation, in ſeveral Parts of his Epiſtles, but more particularly of thoſe to the Romans and Galatians, he argues, that our Acceptance with God here, and Admiſſion to Happineſs hereafter (which he calls by the Term of Juſtification) depends upon our ſincere Belief of the Goſpel, and our living anſwerably to ſuch a Belief, (which are comprehended in the Word Faith) and not upon any Obſervance of the Jewiſh Rites and Ceremonies, which he calls the Deeds of the Law. This Doctrine of Juſtification by Faith came, in a ſhort Time, to be perverted to very bad Purpoſes, and (n) ſome there were, who, from the Authority of St Paul, endeavoured to perſuade themſelves, and others, that, ſo long as they did but believe the Goſpel in the naked Notion and Speculation of it, it was enough to recommend them to the Favour of God, and ſerve all the Purpoſes of Juſtification and Salvation, however they ſhaped and ſteered their Lives. To countermine the Deſigns of theſe Men, and to beat down this ſtrong Hold of Libertiniſm, St James, who wrote his Epiſtle ſubſequent to theſe of St Paul, and as a Kind of Comment upon them, endeavours to ſhew the Inſufficiency of a naked Faith, and empty Profeſſion of Religion, that it is not enough to recommend us to the divine Acceptance, and to juſtify us in the Sight of Heaven, barely to believe the Goſpel, unleſs we obey and practiſe it; and that ſuch a Belief, deſtitute of this Evangelical Obedience, is, (o) like the Body without the Spirit, dead, and inavailable to our Salvation: And therefore he concludes, that, by the Practice of the ſeveral Virtues of the Chriſtian Religion, (which he terms Works) a Man is juſtified, and not by a mere notional Belief of the Things recorded in the Goſpel, which he calls Faith only.

How perfectly they agree.

(p) CONSIDERING then the Difference of the Adverſaries, which theſe two Apoſtles had to contend with, that St Paul was engaged with falſe Brethren, Jewiſh Converts, who were for joining the Ceremonial Part of the Law with the Faith of the Goſpel, and the Practice of the Chriſtian Religion; and that St James, on the contrary, had to do with Libertines, and Hypocrites, Men, who having abuſed St Paul's Doctrine of Faith, and Grace, and wreſted it to their own Deſtruction, had thereupon abandoned themſelves to all Manner of Vice, and looked upon good Works as Things purely in-

---

Incivility, and ſays, that the whole was but a Compact of Forgery and Deceit, while the Princes of the Church did thus fall out among themſelves; and ſo ſenſible were ſome of this in the primitive Ages of Chriſtianity, that rather than ſuch a Diſgrace, as they accounted it, ſhould be reflected upon St Peter, they pretended, that, beſides the Apoſtle, there was one of the ſame Name, one of the Seventy Diſciples, and that it was he, whom St Paul withſtood and reprov'd at Antioch, as guilty of this Prevarication: But this is a crude and uſeleſs Evaſion. Cave's Life of St Peter.

different; conſidering this, I ſay, we ſhall find the two Apoſtles, arguing very properly with the Perſons, whom they had in View, and, though they do not advance Aſſertions abſolutely the ſame, are far from oppoſing, or contradicting one another. Legal Obſervances will not ſave us, ſays St Paul, nor will a bare Belief of the Goſpel ſave us, ſays St James. A lively Faith, that is fruitful of good Works, will ſave us, ſays St Paul: And ſo will the Practice of all moral and Chriſtian Virtues, ſays St James. Thus admirably do the two Apoſtles agree, and conſpire to explain each other.

And how firmly St Paul maintains the Neceſſity of good Works.

NAY, to clear the Character of St Paul ſtill farther, we may obſerve, that in thoſe very Epiſtles, where he ſeems to extol Faith, and debaſe the Efficacy of Works moſt, he, nevertheleſs, makes them the indiſpenſable Condition of our Salvation: For, having laid it down as a certain Truth, that (o) not the Hearers of the Law are juſt before God, but that the Doers of the Law ſhall be juſtified, he plainly aſſerts, that our Miſery or Happineſs in a future State depends upon our good or ill Deportment here; for (p) God will render to every Man according to his Works, Tribulation and Anguiſh upon every Soul, that doth Evil; but Glory, Honour, and Peace upon every Soul, that worketh Good, to the Jew firſt, and alſo to the Gentile. In another Place, having ſpoken of the Happineſs of our Redemption from Original Sin, by the Merits and Mercies of Jeſus Chriſt, he aſks theſe Queſtions, (q) What ſhall we ſay then? Shall we continue in Sin, that Grace may abound? God forbid. How ſhall we, who are dead to Sin, live any longer therein? And, in like Manner, having made this comfortable Declaration, (r) there is now no Condemnation to them, who are in Chriſt Jeſus, leſt we ſhould miſtake his Meaning, and think that an empty Faith, or bare Profeſſion of Chriſtianity, was enough to intitle us to this Bleſſedneſs, he adds, who walk not after the Fleſh, but after the Spirit; and elſewhere gives us this Caution, (s) Be not deceived, God is not mocked; for whatſoever a Man ſoweth, that ſhall he reap; for he that ſoweth to the Fleſh, ſhall of the Fleſh reap Corruption, but he that ſoweth to the Spirit, ſhall of the Spirit reap Life everlaſting.

The Caſe of Meats offered to Idols.

THERE ſeems, at firſt View indeed, to be ſome Contrariety between the Decree of the Council at Jeruſalem, and the Latitude, which St Paul allows in relation to Meats offered to Idols: But to paſs a right Judgment concerning theſe Offerings, we muſt know,—— (t) That, beſides what was eaten of them in the Idol's Temple (which Eating was an Act of religious Worſhip, and Communion with the Idol, as our eating the Bread of the Sacrament is a Communion with Chriſt); beſides this, I ſay, there was a certain Portion of thoſe Sacrifices, which fell to the Prieſts, and which they, having no Uſe for, ſold to others, who afterwards expoſed it to Sale, promiſcuouſly among other Meat, upon the Shambles, where it was bought up, and ſpent, in private Families, without any Diſtinction, whether it had or had not been offered to Idols. Now, as for the former Way of eating Meats thus offered, namely, in the Idol's Temple, this the Apoſtle utterly diſallows as abſolutely unlawful; but the other only under ſome Circumſtances: For he allows, that it might be lawfully bought, among other Meat, in the Market, and, being ſo bought, might be eaten, in any private Houſe, without the leaſt Sin; only with this Caution, that whereas there were ſome, who well underſtood that Meat could have no defiling Quality imprinted upon it by its Conſecration to an Idol; and others (on the contrary) having not ſo much Knowledge ſuppoſed, that its Conſecration to an Idol left upon it ſuch a polluting Quality, and near Relation to the Idol, as defiled the Eater; the former Sort might freely and innocently eat ſuch Meat in private Families, provided it was not before thoſe of the latter Sort, who, through Weakneſs, having an Opinion of the Unlawfulneſs of ſuch Meats, might nevertheleſs be induced to uſe the ſame Liberty, though their Conſciences, in the mean Time, having quite another Judgment in this Matter, eſteemed the eating them little better than Idolatry.

That St Paul's Doctrine in this Reſpect, does not contradict the Decree at Jeruſalem.

NOW the Argument, by which the Apoſtle abridges the Liberty of the former Sort of Converts, in Condeſcenſion to thoſe of the latter Sort, proceeds upon the Strength of this Aſſertion, that the Lawfulneſs of Mens Actions depends not ſolely, either upon the Lawfulneſs of their Subject-matter, nor yet upon the Conſcience of the Doers of them conſidered in itſelf, but as conſidered with reference to the Conſciences of others, to whom, by the Law of Charity, they ſtand bound ſo to behave themſelves, as, by none of their Actions, to give them Occaſion of Sin. From which plain State of the Caſe it appears, St Paul is ſo far from giving the leaſt Encouragement to the Eating of Meats offered unto Idols, that, in the firſt Place, he uſes the moſt cogent Arguments, viz. the Regard we ought to have to our Neighbour's Soul, and the Danger of offending Chriſt, by wounding and deſtroying thoſe Members of his myſtical Body, for which he died, to engage us to a total Abſtinence; and then propoſes his own generous Reſolution to enforce his Advice, (u) Wherefore, if Meat make my Brother to offend, I will eat no Fleſh whilſt the World ſtands, that I make not my Brother to offend.

The Authority of the Apoſtles as to Church Cenſures.

(x) WHATSOEVER ye bind on Earth, ſhall be bound in Heaven, and whatſoever ye ſhall looſe on Earth, ſhall be looſed in Heaven, as in another Place, (y) Whoſe ſoever Sins ye remit, they are remitted unto them, and whoſe ſoever Sins ye retain, they are retained, are Words, which are generally ſuppoſed to contain the Commiſſion, which our Bleſſed Lord gave his Apoſtles, to exerciſe a judicial Power over the Members of his Church, by cenſuring Offenders, and, upon their Repentance afterwards, remitting the Cenſures, which were paſſed on them. To this Purpoſe we find St Paul telling the Corinthians, that (z) tho' he ſhould boaſt of the Authority, which the Lord had given him, for Edification, and not for Deſtruction, he ſhould not be aſhamed, and putting that Authority in Practice againſt the Perſon, who had committed Inceſt among them; (a) In the Name of the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, when ye are gathered together, and my Spirit, with the Power of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, deliver ſuch an one unto Satan, for the Deſtruction of the Fleſh, that the Spirit may be ſaved in the Day of the Lord.

The Meaning of delivering unto Satan.

(b) NOW, in order to know the Meaning of this Delivering unto Satan, we muſt obſerve, that the Church, or Kingdom of Chriſt, was erected in Oppoſition to Satan's Kingdom, and therefore every Chriſtian, at his Baptiſm, covenants to renounce the Devil, and all his Works, and is thereupon admitted into the Church of Chriſt, and taken under his Protection; but, when Men notoriouſly break their Baptiſmal Covenant, and, inſtead of obeying Chriſt, openly adhere to the Devil, they are then reduced to the State of Heathens, who are under the Dominion of the Prince of this World: And, as the Scriptures generally aſcribe all Sort of Calamities, which befal Mankind, to the Procurement of the Devil; ſo the Pains, and Diſeaſes of the Body, which, in this firſt Age, uſually attended the Sentence of Excommunication, were ſuppoſed to proceed from the Devil, whoſe Malice the Divine Wiſdom might then employ ploy, as a common Serjeant and Executioner, to inflict ſome bodily Puniſhment upon every notorious Offender, thereby to deter others from the like Provocations, and thereby to bring him to Conſideration and Repentance, and ſo ſave his Soul at the great Day of Judgment.

And why God gave the firſt Chriſtian Miniſters ſuch Power.

JOSEPHUS, in his Hiſtory of the Jewiſh Wars, (c) tells us, that the Eſſenes, one of the ſtricteſt Sects among them, upon their deprehending any of their Society in a notorious Wickedneſs, excluded him from the Congregation, and, whoever incurred that Sentence generally came to a miſerable End; and therefore we need leſs wonder, that God, at the firſt Beginning of Chriſtianity, (d) and when it was wholly deſtitute of all civil coercive Authority, did inveſt his Apoſtles with a Power of inflicting corporal Puniſhments upon ſuch, as either oppoſed the Progreſs of the Goſpel, or offended groſsly againſt its Rules; ſince this was an effectual Means to keep the Wicked in Awe, to advance the Cauſe of Religion, and to conciliate Reſpect to its Miniſters: For the proper End of all Church Cenſures) according to (e) Lactantius) is, not for Revenge, but to ſupport the Honour of Chriſt's Laws, to admoniſh others to amend, and to warn all not to deſpiſe this ſalutary Authority.

The Form of the Diſcipline which St Paul preſcribes.

St PAUL's Advice to the Governors of the Church is far from exciting a Spirit of Perſecution in them: For, (f) though he arms the Temporal Magiſtrate with a Sword, not only to be a Terror to Evil-doers, but to cut off, and execute notorious Offenders; yet to the Spiritual Magiſtrate he only gives a Paſtoral Rod, and a Staff, neither of which are deſigned to deſtroy, but only to reform thoſe, that go aſtray. His firſt Preſcription is, to try gentle Methods; to begin with kind and fatherly Admonitions, which, from Perſons in ſo high a Station, may probably have a bleſſed Effect, and reſtore the Offender, (g) with all Long-ſuffering in the Spirit of Meekneſs: But, if theſe prove too weak to awaken a Sinner, who is fallen into the Lethargy of Obduration, his next Degree of Diſcipline is, (h) ſharp Reproof, and ſevere Threats, and (i) a publick Expoſition of his Crime: But, in caſe he be ſo far depraved, as to have loſt all Senſe of Shame, his laſt Direction is, to eject him out of the Church, who, while he continues in it, will be a perpetual Scandal to it, and (k) give the Enemies of the Lord an Occaſion to blaſpheme; however, only ſo to eject him, as that, upon his Repentance and Reformation, he may be reſtored again, and not (l) ſwallowed up (as the Apoſtle tenderly expreſſes it) with over-much Sorrow.

The Commendation and great Uſe of it.

These are the Rules, which St Paul has laid down, for the Governors of the Church, with reſpect to thoſe under their Care, who are either unſound in the Faith, or retain the Faith in Unrighteouſneſs. (m) This is the Diſcipline, which the Fathers have given us ſo far a Character of, as to call it the Keeper of Hope, the Anchor of Faith, the Guide of our heavenly Journey, the Food and Nouriſhment of good Inclinations, and the Miſtreſs of all Virtue. Nor is it to be denied, that (n) the Church's Reputation was never ſo good, as in the primitive Times, when this Diſcipline was exerciſed with Vigour. Then her profeſſed Enemies admired her: Great Numbers of Proſelytes daily flocked into her, and could not be reſtrained by the utmoſt Torments, which either human or diabolical Malice could inflict; whereas, ſince this godly Diſcipline has been relaxed, though the Church has been protected by the Civil Power, and furniſhed with far more Splendor than before, fewer Converts have been brought over to her, and too many of her own Sons Sons and Members have loſt their firſt Love, and Zeal for her. But, to proceed.

What Alexander's Crime was.

UPON Suppoſition that Alexander the Copper-Smith was the ſame Perſon with that Alexander, who was concerned in (o) the Tumult raiſed at Epheſus, we may imagine, that he was a Jewiſh Convert, reſiding in that City; that, when he was ſeized by the common Serjeants, and examined before the Jews, (as the Word προβάλλειν there ſignifies) in the Apology which he would have made to the People, his Purpoſe was, to have averted the Danger from him, by laying it upon St Paul; and that from this Time, conceiving an Hatred againſt the Apoſtle, and (p) having put away a good Conſcience, he ſoon began to make Shipwreck of his Faith, and particularly to call in Queſtion the Reality of a future Reſurrection; a Doctrine, which St Paul, in his firſt Epiſtle to the Corinthians, had ſo largely inſiſted on.

(q) THE Philoſophers, in thoſe Days, looked upon the Body, as the Priſon and Sepulchre of the Soul, and that her Happineſs could not commence, till after her Diſſolution from it. Upon which Principle they argued, that it was not only an impoſſible Thing, but an unjuſt and unworthy Thing, for God to raiſe the Body, in order to unite it to the Soul, ſince the Happineſs of the Soul conſiſted in being delivered from it, and its Puniſhments in being confined to it. This Notion Alexander, among others, having imbibed, began to put a new Conſtruction upon the Doctrine of the Reſurrection, as if it imported only a Renovation of our Manners, and a Reſurrection from the Death of Sin, unto a Life of Righteouſneſs, which in all God's Elect (as they were ſure to rank themſelves in that Number) (r) was already paſt.

And how much it deſerved the Apoſtle's Denunciation againſt it.

THE Reſurrection of the Dead, in its literal Senſe, was ſo fundamental a Point, that St Pual puts the whole Streſs of the Chriſtian Religion upon it. (s) If there be no Reſurrection of the Dead, then is Chriſt not riſen; and if Chriſt be not riſen, then is our Preaching vain, and your Faith is alſo vain; yea, and we are found falſe Witneſſes of God, becauſe we have teſtified of God, that he raiſed up Chriſt, whom he raiſed not up, if ſo be that the Dead riſe not. But, though the Denial of a future Reſurrection was implicitly a Renunciation of the Chriſtian Religion, yet we do not find, that Alexander had actually apoſtatiſed from it; for then the Apoſtle would not have excommunicated him, becauſe we find him claiming no Authority, but over ſuch, as were within the Pale of the Church; for (t) what have I to do, ſays he, to judge them that are without? Thoſe that are without, God judgeth.

THE Judgment however, which he gave againſt Alexander, ſo incenſed that Heretick, that he purſued him as far as Rome, on purpoſe to oppoſe his Doctrine, and vilify his Perſon, and perhaps to exhibit ſome Accuſations againſt him; which malicious Proceeding might give the Apoſtle Occaſion enough to ſay, that the Lord would reward him according to his Works: For (u) ſo the King's Manuſcript reads it, in the future Tenſe, ἀποδώσει, and ſo the Current of antient Interpreters do account it, not an Imprecation, but a Prediction only of what, in the juſt Judgment of God, would befal him; for pious Men, ſay they, do neither wiſh for, nor rejoice in, nor deſire to haſten the Puniſhments of the Wicked, tho' they ſometimes foretel them.

Why St Paul might not know the High-Prieſt.

St PAUL, no doubt, when brought (x) before Powers and Magiſtrates, had a Share in the Promiſe of the Aſſiſtance and Direction of God's Bleſſed Spirit, ſufficient to enable him to make proper Anſwers, and to ſecure him againſt the Tranſgreſſion of any Law; and therefore we may preſume, that, when he treated the High-Prieſt with ſome Severity of Speech, he either did not know, or did not acknowledge him to be a Perſon inveſted with that Authority. (y) Since the Time of his Converſion, which was now about five and twenty Years, he had been ſeldom at Jeruſalem, and, when he came thither, made but a ſhort Stay; ſo that he might very well be unacquainted with the High-Prieſt's Perſon, eſpecially if he had not on, at that Time, the Veſtments peculiar to his Function, and ſuch as diſtinguiſh'd him from ordinary Prieſts. The Order of the Pontifical Succeſſion likewiſe had been ſo totally deſtroyed, and both by the Jewiſh Kings, and Roman Governors, the High-Prieſts placed, and diſplaced ſo frequently, that a Stranger, juſt come to Jeruſalem, might not always know who was the preſent Poſſeſſor of that Dignity.

What he meant by his Retractation.

BUT even ſuppoſe that St Paul had known that Ananias was then in the Chair; (z) yet, as that Pontiff is ſuppoſed to have obtain'd his Office by Bribery, the Apoſtle, who had been taught by his Maſter Gamaliel, that whoever did ſo, was neither a Judge, nor deſerved to be honoured as ſuch, might demur to his Title, and ſay, "I know very "well, that a Ruler of the People is not "to be reviled, but, that the Perſon, "you ſpeak of, is the High-Prieſt, I know "not, i. e. I do not own, or recognize "him to be ſuch, becauſe he obtained "that Station in the Church by very in"direct Means" Or ſuppoſe the Apoſtle to ſpeak ironically. "I did not know, "i. e. I did not apprehend, that a Per"ſon ſo far enraged, as to order a Priſoner "at the Bar, when going to make his "Defence, to be ſmitten on the Mouth, "could poſſibly be the High-Prieſt. This "was a Thing ſo little becoming his "grave and venerable Character, that I "verily took him for ſome common Man, "and accordingly treated him with ſuch "Language, as the Rudeneſs of his In"ſult deſerved: But, ſince you now in"form me, that he is, in Reality, the "High-Prieſt, I beg Pardon, becauſe, "be he what he will, we are not to ſpeak "Evil of the Ruler of the People." So that, in what View ſoever we take St Paul, there is nothing incongruous in his not knowing the High-Prieſt's Perſon, nothing abject in the Retractation of his Words to him.

That the Apoſtles did not make free with the publick Money.

(a) THEY, that wait at the Altar, in the Jewiſh Church, were Partakers of the Altar; even ſo hath the Lord ordained, in the Chriſtian Church, that they who preach the Goſpel, ſhould live of the Goſpel; but I have uſed none of theſe Things (ſays St Paul); and ſo far were the reſt of the Apoſtles from making any Property of the Money collected, and laid at their Feet, that we find them inſtituting the Office of Deacons, whoſe appointed Buſineſs it was to ſee the regular Diſtribution of it among the Poor; which they never would have done, had they preached the Goſpel for the Sake of the Advantage, they made of theſe Contributions. The Truth is, the Miniſters of God, in thoſe Days, had no Reſpect to the ſecular Emoluments of their Vocation. They could ſhew (b) Hands, that had miniſtered to their Neceſſities, and to them that were with them. They made it their Glory, and the chief of their (c) Reward, that when they preach'd the Goſpel, they made the Goſpel of Chriſt without Charge; and St Paul, in particular, had it in his Power to tell the Corinthians, that, (d) when he was preſent with them, he was chargeable to no Man. Conſidering then the Narrowneſs of his Circumſtances, and the Baſhfulneſs of his Temper, we may be apt to think, that St Paul might be tempted to leave ſome ſmall Matters at Troas, in order to ſatisfy his Hoſt, rather than be (e) burdenſome to any; but then the Misfortune is, that this φελόνης does not always ſignify a Cloak. (f) The other Things, which St Paul deſires Timothy to bring with him, are Books and Parchments. The Books are generally ſuppoſed to be the Sacred Scriptures of the Old Teſtament; but as theſe were conſtantly read in all Chriſtian, as well as Jewiſh Aſſemblies, there was no Occaſion for ſending ſo far as Troas, for what might have been had any where; and therefore we rather think, that they were ſome choice Books of human Literature, in which we find our Apoſtle a great Proficient, and that the Parchments were his Adverſaria, or Common-place-books, wherein he wrote down whatever, in the Courſe of his Reading, he found worthy his Obſervation.

And why it was proper to ſend for it.

NOW if, (g) according to ſome Interpreters, the Word φελόνης ſignifies a Piece of Parchment folded up, it will be indeed the ſame Thing with the μεμβράναι, which St Paul afterwards mentions; but then, in this Senſe, it not only makes his Directions to Timothy of a Piece, as relating to Things all of one Kind, but makes the Adverb μάλιστα (which, without this Suppoſition, we could not ſo well account for) highly pertinent in this Place: The Parchments, which I left at Troas, with Carpus, when thou comeſt, bring with thee, and the Books, but eſpecially the Parchments; where the Words but eſpecially, ſeem naturally to refer to ſomething mention'd before.

BUT ſuppoſe, that this φελόνης does properly ſignify a Cloak; yet who can tell, but that this was the very Penula, or Cloak, which St Paul's Father received from the Romans, and tranſmitted to his Son, as a Mark and Enſign of his being a Roman Citizen, and which (now that St Paul was at Rome) he was obliged, upon all Occaſions, (to conciliate the good Eſteem of the People) to appear in. Nay, ſuppoſe, that it was a common Cloak, or Garment made on purpoſe to defend him from the Injuries of the Weather; yet now, that the Winter was approaching, we can ſee no Incongruity in his ſending for what he had left behind him in the hot Seaſon of the Year, to keep him warm in the Cold; though we cannot but admire (h) the modeſt Poverty of ſo great an Apoſtle, who, rather than be chargeable to any, orders Timothy to bring him a poor Cloak, which he could not well want, from ſo remote a Place as Troas.

What Michael and the Devil*'s Conteſt about the Body of* Moſes means.

THAT which makes it more difficult to reſolve, what this Conteſt between Michael and the Devil, concerning the Body of Moſes, does properly mean, is, that this Piece of Hiſtory, to which St Jude alludes, is no where recorded in the Old Teſtament. We read, indeed, in the Prophet Zechariah, of (i) Joſhua the High-prieſt's ſtanding before the Angel of the Lord, and Satan ſtanding at his Right-Hand (which was the Place of him that impleaded another) to reſiſt him; and that the Matter of Controverſy between them, was the re-edifying the Temple, and reſtoring the Service of God among the Jews, at Jeruſalem, which Satan oppoſed: And hence (k) ſome have argued, that, as the Chriſtian Church is frequently ſtiled the Body of Chriſt, by Parity of Reaſon, the Jewiſh Church might be called the Body of Moſes, and that this is the Whole, that St Jude means. But that the Jews, and their Service, ſhould be called the Body of Moſes, or that the Words in St Jude are to be referr'd to thoſe in Zechariah, ſeems not very probable, becauſe, in that Prophet, there is no Mention of Michael, or of the Body, or Death of Moſes.

THE Death of Moſes, and his Burial, are thus related in the Book of Deuteronomy: (l) So Moſes, the Servant of the Lord, died in the Land of Moab, and he buried him in a Valley, in the Land of Moab, over-againſt Beth-peor; but no Man knoweth of his Sepulchre unto this Day: From whence (m) others have argued, that as Michael was appointed by God to bury the Body of Moſes, in a Place ſo ſecret, that the Jews ſhould never find it out, the Devil oppoſed the Angel in this Office, deſiring to have his Sepulchre known, that, in Proceſs of Time, it might become a Snare to a People, who were veſted with that Authority. (y) Since the Time of his Converſion, which was now about five and twenty Years, he had been ſeldom at Jeruſalem, and, when he came thither, made but a ſhort Stay; ſo that he might very well be unacquainted with the High-Prieſt's Perſon, eſpecially if he had not on, at that Time, the Veſtments peculiar to his Function, and ſuch as diſtinguiſh'd him from ordinary Prieſts. The Order of the Pontifical Succeſſion likewiſe had been ſo totally deſtroyed, and both by the Jewiſh Kings, and Roman Governors, the High-Prieſts placed, and diſplaced ſo frequently, that a Stranger, juſt come to Jeruſalem, might not always know who was the preſent Poſſeſſor of that Dignity.

What he meant by his Retractation.

But even ſuppoſe that St Paul had known that Ananias was then in the Chair; (z) yet, as that Pontiff is ſuppoſed to have obtain'd his Office by Bribery, the Apoſtle, who had been taught by his Maſter Gamaliel, that whoever did ſo, was neither a Judge, nor deſerved to be honoured as ſuch, might demur to his Title, and ſay, "I know very well, that a Ruler of the People is not to be reviled, but, that the Perſon, you ſpeak of, is the High-Prieſt, I know not, i. e. I do not own, or recognize him to be ſuch, becauſe he obtained that Station in the Church by very indirect Means" Or ſuppoſe the Apoſtle to ſpeak ironically. "I did not know, i. e. I did not apprehend, that a Perſon ſo far enraged, as to order a Priſoner at the Bar, when going to make his Defence, to be ſmitten on the Mouth, could poſſibly be the High-Prieſt. This was a Thing ſo little becoming his grave and venerable Character, that I verily took him for ſome common Man, and accordingly treated him with ſuch Language, as the Rudeneſs of his Inſult deſerved: But, ſince you now inform me, that he is, in Reality, the High-Prieſt, I beg Pardon, becauſe, be he what he will, we are not to ſpeak Evil of the Ruler of the People." So that, in what View ſoever we take St Paul, there is nothing incongruous in his not knowing the High-Prieſt's Perſon, nothing abject in the Retractation of his Words to him.

That the Apoſtles did not make free with the publick Money.

(a) They, that wait at the Altar, in the Jewiſh Church, were Partakers of the Altar; even ſo hath the Lord ordained, in the Chriſtian Church, that they who preach the Goſpel, ſhould live of the Goſpel; but I have uſed none of theſe Things (ſays St Paul); and ſo far were the reſt of the Apoſtles from making any Property of the Money collected, and laid at their Feet, that we find them inſtituting the Office of Deacons, whoſe appointed Buſineſs it was to ſee the regular Diſtribution of it among the Poor; which they never would have done, had they preached the Goſpel for the Sake of the Advantage, they made of theſe Contributions. The Truth is, the Miniſters of God, in thoſe Days, had no Reſpect to the ſecular Emoluments of their Vocation. They could ſhew (b) Hands, that had miniſtered to their Neceſſities, and to them that were with them. They made it their Glory, and the chief of their (c) Reward, that when they preach'd the Goſpel, they made the Goſpel of Chriſt without Charge; and St Paul, in particular, had it in his Power to tell the Corinthians, that, (d) when he was preſent with them, he was chargeable to no Man. Conſidering then the Narrowneſs of his Circumſtances, and the Baſhfulneſs of his Temper, we may be apt to think, that St Paul might be tempted to leave ſome ſmall Matters at Troas, in order to ſatisfy his Hoſt, rather than be (e) burdenſome to any; but then the Misfortune is, that this φελόνης does not always ſignify a Cloak. (f) The other Things, which St Paul deſires Timothy to bring with him, are Books and Parchments. The Books are generally ſuppoſed to be the Sacred Scriptures of the Old Teſtament; but as

as theſe were conſtantly read in all Chriſtian, as well as Jewiſh Aſſemblies, there was no Occaſion for ſending ſo far as Troas, for what might have been had any where; and therefore we rather think, that they were ſome choice Books of human Literature, in which we find our Apoſtle a great Proficient, and that the Parchments were his Adverſaria, or Common-place-books, wherein he wrote down whatever, in the Courſe of his Reading, he found worthy his Obſervation.

And why it was proper to ſend for it.

Now if, (g) according to ſome Interpreters, the Word φελόνης ſignifies a Piece of Parchment folded up, it will be indeed the ſame Thing with the μεμβράναι, which St Paul afterwards mentions; but then, in this Senſe, it not only makes his Directions to Timothy of a Piece, as relating to Things all of one Kind, but makes the Adverb μάλιστα (which, without this Suppoſition, we could not ſo well account for) highly pertinent in this Place: The Parchments, which I left at Troas, with Carpus, when thou comeſt, bring with thee, and the Books, but eſpecially the Parchments; where the Words but eſpecially, ſeem naturally to refer to ſomething mention'd before.

But ſuppoſe, that this φελόνης does properly ſignify a Cloak; yet who can tell, but that this was the very Penula, or Cloak, which St Paul's Father received from the Romans, and tranſmitted to his Son, as a Mark and Enſign of his being a Roman Citizen, and which (now that St Paul was at Rome) he was obliged, upon all Occaſions, (to conciliate the good Eſteem of the People) to appear in. Nay, ſuppoſe, that it was a common Cloak, or Garment made on purpoſe to defend him from the Injuries of the Weather; yet now, that the Winter was approaching, we can ſee no Incongruity in his ſending for what he had left behind him in the hot Seaſon of the Year, to keep him warm in the Cold; though we cannot but admire (h) the modeſt Poverty of ſo great an Apoſtle, who, rather than be chargeable to any, orders Timothy to bring him a poor Cloak, which he could not well want, from ſo remote a Place as Troas.

What Michael and the Devil*'s Conteſt about the Body of* Moſes means.

That which makes it more difficult to reſolve, what this Conteſt between Michael and the Devil, concerning the Body of Moſes, does properly mean, is, that this Piece of Hiſtory, to which St Jude alludes, is no where recorded in the Old Teſtament. We read, indeed, in the Prophet Zechariah, of (i) Joſhua the High-prieſt's ſtanding before the Angel of the Lord, and Satan ſtanding at his Right-Hand (which was the Place of him that impleaded another) to reſiſt him; and that the Matter of Controverſy between them, was the re-edifying the Temple, and reſtoring the Service of God among the Jews, at Jeruſalem, which Satan oppoſed: And hence (k) ſome have argued, that, as the Chriſtian Church is frequently ſtiled the Body of Chriſt, by Parity of Reaſon, the Jewiſh Church might be called the Body of Moſes, and that this is the Whole, that St Jude means. But that the Jews, and their Service, ſhould be called the Body of Moſes, or that the Words in St Jude are to be referr'd to thoſe in Zechariah, ſeems not very probable, becauſe, in that Prophet, there is no Mention of Michael, or of the Body, or Death of Moſes.

The Death of Moſes, and his Burial, are thus related in the Book of Deuteronomy: (l) So Moſes, the Servant of the Lord, died in the Land of Moab, and he buried him in a Valley, in the Land of Moab, over-againſt Beth-peor; but no Man knoweth of his Sepulchre unto this Day: From whence (m) others have argued, that as Michael was appointed by God to bury the Body of Moſes, in a Place ſo ſecret, that the Jews ſhould never find it out, the Devil oppoſed the Angel in this Office, deſiring to have his Sepulchre known, that, in Proceſs of Time, it might become a Snare to a People, who were were ſo very prone to Idolatry. This is the moſt obvious, and, conſidering what Work the Devil has made in the World with the Body of the Saints and Martyrs ever ſince, may well be eſteemed the trueſt Senſe of the Paſſage.

What St Paul's Fighting with Beaſts at Epheſus means.

St PAUL's Fighting with Beaſts at Epheſus, is a Paſſage likewiſe, which is neither mentioned in the Hiſtory of the Acts, nor in (n) the Catalogue of his Afflictions; and therefore, ſome have imagined, that this Fight of his was nothing elſe, but the Scuffle, he had with Demetrius the Silverſmith, and his Companions, ſavage Men, who might better deſerve the Name of Beaſts. But, (o) what ruins this Opinion, is, the Date of the Epiſtle wherein this Tranſaction is mentioned, which was written a Year before the Sedition, that Demetrius occaſioned at Epheſus; and therefore others have taken the Words in their literal Senſe, and ſo aſſerted, that St Paul was really expoſed to wild Beaſts at Epheſus, but delivered from them by a Miracle. And, for the Support of this, they relate a Story out of an Apocryphal Book of St Paul's Travels, frequently mentioned by the Antients, viz. That when Jerome, Governor of Epheſus, had condemned the Apoſtle to the wild Beaſts, at his Coming upon the Theatre, a Lion was let looſe at him, which came, and lay down at his Feet, as did ſeveral other wild Creatures; that, at the ſame Time, there fell ſo violent a Storm of Hail, as killed many of the Spectators; and that, upon the Conviction of two ſuch Miracles, the Governor himſelf was converted, and baptized.

HOWEVER this be, the Silence of the Apoſtolick Hiſtory can be no juſt Exception to the literal Interpretation, ſince (p) we find our Apoſtle, in his ſecond Epiſtle to the Corinthians, relating certain Sufferings, (the ſame in all Probability with his Fighting with Beaſts at Epheſus) (q) wherein he was preſſed above Meaſure, and above Strength, deſpaired of Life, and had the Sentence of God within him, and yet we meet with nothing of this in the whole Compaſs of the Acts of the Apoſtles.

His Thorn in the Fleſh, and Meſſenger of Satan, what they mean.

THE like is to be ſaid of the Thorn in the Fleſh, and the Meſſenger of Satan, to which St Paul, for his greater Humiliation, was ſubmitted, that we have not the leaſt Intimation of them in all the Sacred Hiſtory: This only we may learn from the figurative Expreſſion, that, as (r) the pricking Brier and grieving Thorn do, in the Prophetick Stile, denote a ſore Calamity; ſo may the Expreſſion here ſignify ſome ſharp Affliction, ſent upon St Paul, to keep his Mind humble in the Midſt of the many Revelations, which God vouchſafed him. But then the Queſtion is, of what Kind this Affliction was?

SOME are of Opinion, that this Thorn in the Fleſh and Meſſenger of Satan, taking them both for one Thing, were (s) the Motions of Concupiſcence, and Suggeſtions of Luſt, ariſing frequently in St Paul: But the Apoſtle himſelf contradicts this Interpretation, in telling us, that he had the Gift of Continence, and that in ſo high a Degree, that he wiſhed all Chriſtians, in this Reſpect, like himſelf. He was, at this Time, according to the Computation of Chronologers, about ſixty Years old, and therefore it would be a foul Slur to ſo great and holy an Apoſtle, to imagine, that he ſhould burn in ſo frozen an Age, which uſes to extinguiſh, or at leaſt to allay thoſe Flames in the moſt unclean Perſons. We are told, moreover, that (t) God cannot be tempted with Evil, neither tempteth he any Man; and therefore ſince St Paul acquaints us, that this Thorn in the Fleſh (be it what it will) was (u) given him by God, and that it was one of (x) thoſe Infirmities wherein he took Pleaſure, and choſe to glory; as it would have been the greateſt Impiety, for him to have gloried gloried in his impure Motions and Deſires, ſo we cannot ſee, how the Apoſtle, by confeſſing ſuch impure Motions, could have defended his Reputation againſt the Attacks of his Adverſaries, which it is his chief Deſign, in the latter Part of this Epiſtle more eſpecially to do.

OTHERS therefore obſerving, that this Infirmity in the Fleſh happened to St Paul, after the Viſions and Revelations, whereof he ſpeaks; that it was ſuch an Infirmity, as obſtructed the Efficacy of his Preaching, and made his Miniſtry leſs graceful and acceptable to others; and that himſelf complains of the Corinthians, and falſe Apoſtles among them, as repreſented his (a) bodily Preſence weak and mean, and his (b) Speech, or Utterance, contemptible, have ſuppoſed, that St Paul had ſome Kind of Impediment in his Speech, which God, at this Time, was pleaſed to ſend upon him, and which theſe falſe Apoſtles, (whom he calls the Meſſengers of Satan) to his great Sorrow and Diſconſolation, made the Subject of their Scorn and Ridicule.

BUT, after all, the moſt general, and indeed the moſt obvious Interpretation is, that it was ſome bodily Diſeaſe, very grievous and painful to him, which he aptly calls a Thorn, for its Sharpneſs and Pungency, and a Thorn in the Fleſh, for the Seat of it, which was his Body; and this (according to Scripture-Phraſeology) the Apoſtle calls likewiſe a Meſſenger of Satan, becauſe all Diſtempers are in Scripture ſuppoſed to be the Puniſhments of God, which (as it is repreſented in Job's Caſe) he permits Satan, as the common Executioner on theſe Occaſions, to inflict.

IT may ſeem a little too nice perhaps to define the particular Kind of this Diſorder; whether it was the Gout, the Stone, a violent Head-ach, or the Falling-ſickneſs, as ſeveral of the Antients have variouſly conjectured: But this we know from his own Information, that his Diſtemper was viſible and manifeſt to all, that converſed with him, ſuch as had an Influence over his Speech, and was a great Diſadvantage to him in preaching the Goſpel; and therefore he tells the Galatians, (c) Ye know, how, through Infirmity of the Fleſh, I preached the Goſpel to you at firſt, and my Temptation, which was in the Fleſh, ye deſpiſed not, nor rejected; for (d) I was with you in Weakneſs, and in Fear, and in much Trembling, as he tells the Corinthians. (e) From all which it ſeems to be very plain, that St Paul had ſome notorious viſible Infirmity in his Body, ſuch as might have expoſed him to Contempt with thoſe, who looked no farther than the outward Appearance, and ſuch, as God deſigned for a Means to keep him humble.

What we are to underſtand by the Man of Sin.

THERE is but one Obſcurity more, remarked in the Writings of St Paul, viz. concerning the MAN OF SIN, the Son of Perdition; and that is a great Obſcurity indeed. The whole Paſſage runs thus, (f) Now I beſeech you, Brethren, by the Coming of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and by our Gathering-together unto him, that ye be not ſoon ſhaken in Mind, nor be troubled, neither by Spirit, nor by Word, nor by Letter, as from us, as that the Day of Chriſt is at Hand: Let no Man deceive you by any Means; for that Day ſhall not come, except there come a Falling-away firſt, and that MAN OF SIN be revealed, the Son of Perdition, who oppoſeth and exalteth himſelf above all that is called God, or that is worſhipped; ſo that he is as God, ſitting in the Temple of God, and ſhewing himſelf that he is God: For the better Underſtanding of which Words, we muſt remember, that St Paul, in his former Epiſtle to the Theſſalonians, ſpeaking of the Reſurrection of the Dead, had expreſſed himſelf in this Manner:——(g) This we ſay unto you by the Word of the Lord, that we, who are alive, and remain unto the Coming of the Lord, ſhall not prevent them, them, who are aſleep: For the Lord himſelf ſhall deſcend from Heaven with a Shout, with the Voice of the Arch-angel, and with the Trump of God, and the Dead in Chriſt ſhall riſe firſt. Then we, who are alive, and remain, ſhall be caught up, together with them, in the Clouds, to meet the Lord in the Air, and ſo ſhall ever be with him. ——— But of the Times and the Seaſons, Brethren, ye have no Need that I write unto you; for yourſelves know perfectly, that the Day of the Lord ſo cometh, as a Thief in the Night. From theſe Words ſome falſe Teachers, and pretended Prophets among them, took Occaſion to infer, that the Day of Judgment was at Hand; that it would certainly come, while the Apoſtles were yet alive, and before that Generation was paſſed; which was a Doctrine of ſuch dangerous Conſequence to the Peace and Tranquillity of Mens Minds, that the Apoſtle, in this Part of his ſecond Epiſtle, ſets himſelf ſolemnly to refute it: I beſeech you, Brethren, by the Coming of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and by our Gathering-together unto him; where we may obſerve, that this is the ſame Coming, which he had deſcribed, in his former Epiſtle, by Chriſt's Deſcending from Heaven with a Shout, &c. and the ſame Gathering-together, which he had ſpecified, by our being caught up together, with Saints newly raiſed, in the Clouds; and that, conſequently, all the Pains, which ſome Writers have taken to ſhew, that this Man of Sin is to be interpreted of Simon Magus, and the Gnoſticks, Mahomet, and his Followers, or the Pope, and his Clergy, &c. are to be look'd upon as Indications of their Prejudices, rather than any Diſcoveries of the Truth.

Before the Coming of Antichriſt, we are told that there muſt be a great Falling-away, which, though ſome interpret it of national Revolts from the Roman Empire, is more properly to be underſtood of a general Defection from the Chriſtian Faith; but, as this Defection has not yet prevailed, we may adventure to ſay, that this Son of Perdition is not yet come. The true Spirit of Chriſtianity indeed, in a great Meaſure, is departed from us; but we are not come yet to make an open Renunciation of our Chriſtian Profeſſion, which is the Apoſtacy here ſpoken of. Mahomet was a great Oppreſſor of the Chriſtians, and his Succeſſors compelled vaſt Numbers to abjure the Name of Jeſus; but neither is he the Man of Sin here intended, ſince it is now above eleven hundred Years from the Time of his firſt appearing in the World, and yet (b) all Things continue as they were from the Beginning of the Creation, notwithſtanding the Scripture-ANTICHRIST was to precede (and not at ſo vaſt a Diſtance to be ſure) the Coming of our Lord to Judgment.

Without concerning ourſelves then, with the many * fabulous Accounts, which

* To this Purpoſe, they tell us, that this Man of Sin, or Antichriſt, will be born of a Jewiſh Family, and come out of the Tribe of Dan, which, as they imagine, is ſtill ſubſiſting in Babylonia; that, being born in Babylonia, he will there lay the Foundations of his Empire, and the Jews, miſtaking him for their Meſſiah, will be the firſt who will declare for him, acknowledge his Dominion, and enjoy the chief Employments in his Government; that, as ſoon as he appears, he will begin with attacking the Roman Empire, which, at that Time, will be divided among ten powerful Kings, and, having ſubdued Egypt, Æthiopia, and Lybia, will then march to Jeruſalem, and there fix the Seat of his Kingdom; that, having made himſelf Maſter of the Eaſtern and Weſtern Empire, he will turn all his Thoughts towards the Deſtruction of Chriſt's Kingdom, and the Perſecution of good Men, by which Means, great Numbers will apoſtatize from the Chriſtian Faith, and pay their Adoration to him; that the Righteous, under his Perſecution, will retire to the Mount of Olives, where they will ſoon be attacked by this Enemy of God; but, upon their earneſt Application to Heaven for Help, God will ſend Jeſus Chriſt to aſſiſt them; that Chriſt will deſcend from Heaven attended by his Angels, and preceded by a Flame of Fire, which nothing will be able to extinguiſh; that his Angels will give up the Army of the Wicked into the Hands of the Righteous, who will make ſo great a Slaughter of them, that their Blood ſhall flow like a Torrent in the Valley; and laſtly, that Antichriſt will be put to Death in his own Tent, and upon his own Throne, without receiving the leaſt Aſſiſtance from any; for to him they apply theſe Words of Daniel, which ſome of the Ancients have given us of the Origin of Antichriſt, the Nature of his Kingdom, or the Manner of his Extinction; we may, in ſome Meaſure, gather from Scripture——"That, toward the Concluſion of the World, ſome mighty Prince or other will ariſe, a Man monſtrous for his Wickedneſs and Impiety, who, by the Power of his Arms, will conquer a great Part of the World, and, by the Violence of his Perſecutions, cauſe great Defections from the Chriſtian Faith: That, having ſubdued many Kings, and eſtabliſhed his Religion, (which probably will be Paganiſm) in ſeveral Countries, in Time he will come to forget that he is Man, and, accordingly, have his Statues erected in Places of Divine Worſhip, and the Prayers of the People addreſſed to him, as if he were a God: That our Bleſſed Lord, provoked with his Pride and Arrogance, will, at length, bring upon him ſuch a remarkable Judgment, as will put a quick Period to all his Pomp and Glory; reſcue his Servants from his Tyranny and Infatuation; and then ſhall the End of all Things come."

From Acts i. 10. to the End.

Thus we have endeavoured to clear the Character of the Apoſtles in general, and more eſpecially of the great Apoſtle of the Gentiles, from the Cavils of the Impious and Profane; and to anſwer the principal Objections, which, in the Hiſtory of their Acts, and in the Courſe of their Epiſtles, are commonly advanced by thoſe who delight (i) in vain Babblings, and Oppoſitions of Science, falſly ſo called; and, upon a Review of the Whole, we may take up the Words of St Paul, and ſay, (k) If our Goſpel be hid, it is hid to them that are loſt, in whom the God of this World has blinded the Minds of them, who believe not, leſt the Light of the glorious Goſpel of Chriſt, who is the Image of God, ſhould ſhine unto them.

* In this whole Narrative we follow the Account, which Dr Echard, in his Roman and Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtories, has given us.

Julia, who, being married to his Wife's Son, Tiberius, by her nocturnal Revels and Adulteries, had made herſelf infamous in the whole City. The Emperor, tho' a Pagan, had ſo great a Senſe, not only of the Scandal, but of the Immorality likewiſe of her Actions, that he was once reſolved to have put her to Death; but, upon ſecond Conſideration, he baniſhed her to a deſolate Iſland, called Pandataria, where he prohibited her the Uſe of all Sorts of Delicacies, and permitted none, without his approved Knowledge of their Lives and Morals, to † approach her. Not long after, her Daughter of the ſame Name, who was married to L. Paulus, being convicted of the ſame Crimes, was baniſh'd into an Iſland in the Adriatick Sea, called Tremera: And, in the Space of a few Years, young Agrippa (his only ſurviving Grandſon by his Daughter Livia, whom he had lately adopted for his own) by his extravagant Life, and irreclaimable Vices, became ſo ſcandalous to his Family, and ſo odious to the Emperor, that he baniſh'd him likewiſe into the Iſland of Planaſia; and afterwards, when ever any Mention was made of him, or the two Julias, (whom he uſually called by no other Name, than his Three Biles, or Impoſthumes) he would often, with a profound Sigh, ſay, Would to Heaven I had lived without a Wife, or died without Children!

His good Laws, and wholeſome Severity.

THIS Depravation in his own Family, it may well be preſumed, was one Reaſon for his making ſuch ſtrict Laws againſt all Lewdneſs and Adultery, and concerning Marriages and Divorces. Great Numbers, of the Equites more eſpecially, had taken a Reſolution againſt Marriage, not out of any Kind of Virtue, or Abſtinence, (as he told them) but from a Looſeneſs and Wantonneſs, which ought never to be encouraged in any Civil Government: And therefore, having highly commended thoſe, that were married, and increaſed the Rewards of ſuch, as had Children, he impoſed ſevere Fines upon ſingle Perſons, in caſe they did not marry in the Space of a Year; yet, to ſhew that he would diſcourage nothing, that had the Appearance of Virtue, he gave conſiderable Rewards to ſuch Women, as had vowed perpetual Virginity: But, that no publick Promoter of Looſeneſs might eſcape his Cenſure, he, ſoon after this, baniſhed his Favourite Ovid, the celebrated Poet, into Pontus, for his amorous Epiſtles, and his Art of Love, the Softneſs of which was thought capable of enervating, and corrupting a larger Empire, than that of the Roman.

His Actions in Honour of Chriſt.

AUGUSTUS, as Pontifex Maximus, had examined into the Books of the Sibylline Prophecies, (l) as we ſaid before. Thoſe, that were genuine, he repoſited in the Capitol, but the ſpurious he condemned to the Flames: And 'tis generally ſuppoſed, that, upon his Peruſal of theſe Prophecies, foretelling the Appearance of a greater Prince, to whom all the World ſhould pay Adoration, he utterly refuſed the Title of LORD, which the People unanimouſly offered him: And this, by the bye, gave ſome Sanction to the Story mentioned by Suidas, viz. that Auguſtus, ſending to the Pythian Oracle, to enquire who ſhould ſucceed him, was anſwered by the Dæmon, That an Hebrew Child, Lord of the Gods, had commanded him to return to Hell, and that no farther Anſwer was to be expected

---

† Some Time after this, the People of Rome, whether out of Love to the Emperor, or Reſpect to his Family, earneſtly petitioned him to recall his Daughter Julia; but he anſwered them, That Fire and Water ſhould ſooner meet, than they two. Nay his Concern and Reſentment in this Matter were ſo great, that, when he underſtood that Phœbe, one of his Daughter's Confidents, had hanged herſelf, he proteſted openly, That he had rather have been Phœbe's Father, than Julia's: Yet, after five Years ſtrict Confinement, the People, in a Manner, compelled him to allow of her Removal from the Iſland into the Continent, where ſhe liv'd, till after the Emperor's Death. But her Huſband Tiberius had not long obtained the Empire, before her annual Penſions were ſtopped, and ſhe, depriv'd of all Hopes, or Aſſiſtance, died in extreme Want and Miſery: An End not unſuitable to one, who had ſo vilely debaſed herſelf, and ſo publickly ſcandaliz'd the nobleſt Family in the World. Echard's Roman Hiſtory, in the Life of Auguſtus.

expected; whereupon he erected an Altar, in the Capitol, Primogenito Dei, to the Firſt-born of God.

Appointing Tiberius his Succeſſor.

However this be, 'tis generally agreed, that, in the ſame year, wherein he refuſed the Title of Lord, he appointed Tiberius for his Heir, partly thro' the prevailing Solicitations of his Wife Livia, and partly from the Hopes, he had conceived, of his Virtues outweighing his Vices; but, at the ſame Time, that he did this, he obliged Tiberius to adopt Germanicus, the Son of his Brother Druſus, a Youth of great Virtues, and ſurprizing Excellencies, which ſoon raiſed the Envy of Tiberius, and, not long after his Acceſſion to the Empire, procured the other's Ruin.

His Death.

The laſt Thing, which Auguſtus did, as Pontifex Maximus, was the Regulation of the Roman Calender, which, with us, continues in Uſe to this Day, tho', in ſome Countries, the Alteration, which Pope Gregory XIII. made in it, is obſerved. At length, being near Capua, where he found himſelf dangerouſly ill, he ſent for Tiberius, and his moſt intimate Friends and Acquaintance, to whom he recommended many wiſe and uſeful Things; and, being minded to leave the World with the Triumphs of a Pagan Philoſopher, he called for a Looking-glaſs, cauſed his Hair to be combed, and his wrinkled Cheeks to be ſmoothed up, and then, as an Actor upon the ſtage, aſked his friends, Whether he had played his Part well? And, upon their anſwering Yes, he cried, Plaudite! and ſo expired in the Embraces of his beloved Wife Livia, bidding her remember their Marriage and Farewell.

Character, and Honours paid him.

Thus died the great Auguſtus, in the 75th Year of his Age, and 41ſt of his Reign, to the inexpreſſible Grief of all his Subjects. He was a Perſon of the higheſt Learning and Eloquence, and the moſt amazing Wiſdom and Sagacity; one who had conquered greater Difficulties, met with greater Succeſs, compleated greater Deſigns, and eſtabliſh'd a greater Empire, than any Prince in the Univerſe: and therefore we may leſs wonder, that, according to the Pagan Superſtition of theſe Times, after his death, we find Temples erected to him, Divine Honours decreed him, and a large Sum of Money given by his Wife Livia to Numerius Atticus, a Senator, for having ſworn (as Proculus had formerly done of Romulus) that he ſaw him aſcendiug into Heaven.

A. M. 4018, &c. Ann. Dom. 14, &c.

The Reign of Tiberius.

The Romans, during the Adminiſtration of Auguſtus, had all the Happineſs of a free People, and were reſtrained from nothing but thoſe Miſchiefs, which a corrupted Liberty produces; but, ſhortly after his Death, they met with great Alterations, and a quite different Treatment from his Succeſſor Tiberius, whoſe only Wiſdom conſiſted in a myſterious Slyneſs and Suſpicion, and his Policy in continued Artifices and Diſſimulation.

His good Government at firſt, and vile Character afterwards.

In the Beginning of his Reign however, he made a great Show of Modeſty and Affability, and performed many laudable Actions towards the Reformation of Mens Lives and Manners. He regulated the Licentiouſneſs of the Theatre; baniſhed the Aſtrologers and Magicians from Rome; reſtrained the Delicacies of Eating-houſes and Taverns; ſeverely puniſhed the Looſeneſs of young People of either Sex; and adminiſtred Juſtice with great Exactneſs and Diligence; but afterwards, giving a looſe to his depraved Temper and Inclinations, he became guilty of all Kinds of Enormities and Oppreſſions, and proved one of the moſt ſubtle and deſigning Tyrants in Nature; ſo that Hiſtorians have obſerved of him, that he never ſpake as he thought, nor ſhewed any Inclination for what he deſired; that he looked ſullen on his Friends, and chearful on his Enemies: was fair to thoſe he deſigned to puniſh, and ſevere to thoſe he propoſed to pardon; for his ſtanding Maxim was, that a Prince's Mind ſhould be known to no Man: In ſhort, that he was a moſt exquiſite State-juggler, a moſt jealous and barbarous Governor, a Debaſer of the Roman Empire,

A. M. 4023, &c. Ann. Dom. 19, &c.

a corrupter of all that was good, and an Introducer of all that was bad and abominable in it.

His murthering young Agrippa, and Germanicus.

AT his firſt Acceſſion to the Empire, he ordered young Agrippa, whom Auguſtus baniſhed, to be murthered, and then publiſhed a Report, That this was done in Obedience to the particular Order of the late Emperor, who had given charge to the Centurion, that guarded him, to diſpatch him, upon the firſt Intelligence of his Death; and, having by the Aſſiſtance of Piſo, and his Wife Placina, poiſoned Germanicus, whoſe Virtues he dreaded, and whoſe Right to the Succeſſion, as well as his Eſteem with the People, might poſſibly (as he thought) give him ſome Diſturbance, he now began to pull off the Maſk, and to appear more barefaced in his vicious Actions, tho' not ſo open in his tyrannical Deſigns.

His Endeavour to have Chriſt canonized.

IT was a common Thing at this Time, for Governors of Provinces, to make Reports to the Emperor of all remarkable Events, that happened in the Places under their Juriſdiction; and therefore Pontius Pilate, being now Governor of Judea, wrote to Tiberius an Account of our Bleſſed Saviour's Paſſion and Reſurrection, (which came to paſs in the third Year of his Government) of the Miracles, which were perform'd by him, and by others in his Name: of the Multitude of his Followers, which daily increaſed; and of the Opinion, which generally prevailed, that he was a God: Whereupon Tiberius made a Report of the whole Matter to the Senate, and propoſed to them, that Chriſt might be admitted into the Number of their Gods. But the Senate, not liking the Motion, and alledging an ancient Law, which gave them alone the Superintendance in Matters of Religion, not only refuſed to canonize him, but, by an Edict, commanded, that all Chriſtians, ſhould be baniſh'd the City; which, when the Emperor underſtood, he, by another Edict, threatened Death to any, who dared to accuſe the Chriſtians, and, in all his Reign, would not permit, at leaſt not promote, any Perſecutions againſt them, which is ſo much the more wonderful, conſidering his natural Inclination to Cruelty.

A. M. 4040, &c. Ann. Dom. 36, &c.

His Cruelty, and the People's miſerable Condition under him.

FOR, beginning now to act openly, he treated his Subjects as Enemies, becauſe the Vileneſs of his Conduct had given them ſufficient Occaſion to be ſo. Many of the principal and nobleſt Perſons in Rome he condemned, and confiſcated their Eſtates upon very light, and frivolous Pretences; nor could any Man, however virtuous and cautious, account himſelf ſafe, becauſe, tho' he might poſſibly eſcape the falſe Reports of Spies and Informers, yet he had Reaſon nevertheleſs to ſtand in Fear of the very Imagination of the Emperor. To retain an innocent Remembrance of Liberty was interpreted a Purpoſe to re-eſtabliſh the Commonwealth: To teſtify a Concern for the Glory of the Empire, a ſecret Deſire to gain it. To praiſe Brutus and Caſſius was a capital Crime. To ſpeak well of Auguſtus, a dangerous Offence. Simplicity of Diſcourſe was thought an Indication of evil Deſign; a diſcreet Silence concealed miſchievous Intention; Joy was the Hopes of the Prince's Death; Melancholy, an envying his Proſperity; and Fear, the juſt Apprehenſions of a guilty Conſcience: So that, to ſpeak, or to be ſilent, to be glad, or grieved, to be fearful, or aſſured, were all Crimes, and very often incurr'd the moſt exquiſite Puniſhments; for he generally executed his Fury with ſuch extreme Severity, that he eſteemed it a Favour, and an Act of Mercy, to put Perſons to Death in an ordinary Way.

THUS miſerable were the Romans under the arbitrary Government of a moſt outrageous Tyrant, till, by his Gluttony, Drunkenneſs, and Luſts, which raged more violently at an Age, when Nature (one would think) ſhould have cured them, finding his Strength impaired, he removed from Place to Place, and at laſt ſettled in a Promontory of Miſenum; where, after ſeveral Conſultations with his Favourite

A. M. 4041, &c. Ann. Dom. 37, &c.

Macro, he named Caius Caligula, the only ſurviving Son of Germanicus, together with a young Grandſon of his, called Tiberius, to be his Succeſſors; and 'tis probably conjectured, that he named the former, in Hopes that his Vices would efface the Memory of his own Wickedneſs, and his known Cruelty extinguiſh the whole Roman Nobility; for which Reaſon he was frequently heard to ſay, that in Caligula he had brought up a Serpent for the People of Rome, and a Phaeton for all the reſt of the World.

His Death.

During his Illneſs, his Spirit ſenſibly declined; but his Diſſimulation was as ſtrong as ever in carrying on the Humour of his former Luxury and Debaucheries, and in deſpiſing all Phyſick, 'till his Weakneſs was diſcovered by Charides, a famous Phyſician, who, under Pretence of kiſſing his Hand, felt the Defect in his Pulſe. This the crafty Prince immediately perceiving ſhortly after diſſembled ſuch Faintings, as made all the Company think him dead, and begin to make their Court to the new Emperor; but, as he recover'd again, to the great Surprize, and almoſt Confuſion of Caligula and Macro, they ſoon found Means to diſpatch him, in the 78th Year of his Age, and the 23d of his Reign, either by Poiſon, or ſmothering him in the Bed-cloaths, to the no ſmall Joy and Satiſfaction of all the Senate, and People of Rome.

The Reign of Caligula. His good Government at firſt.

CAIUS, who was ſirnamed Caligula, from his wearing the military Buſkin, called Caliga, in his Youth, began his Reign, with all the Clemency and Regularity imaginable. He cauſed the famous Models and Inſtitutions of Auguſtus, which had been diſuſed by Tiberius, to be revived. He began to reform many Abuſes in the State, and ſeverely puniſh'd corrupt Governors, of whom he baniſh'd Pontius Pilate to Vienne in Gaul, where he afterwards killed himſelf. He took a ſtrict View of the Equites, and put all ſuch to publick Shame, as were guilty of any infamous Crime. He puniſhed with Death the Spintriæ, thoſe abominable Inventors of unnatural Pollutions, whom his Predeceſſor greatly encouraged. He remitted ſeveral Impoſitions invented by Tiberius, and was ſo popular, that he endeavoured to reſtore the antient Method of electing Magiſtrates by the Suffrages of the People.

A. M. 4042, &c. Ann. Dom. 38, &c.

But manifold Vices, Follies, and Extravagances, afterwards.

But, in a ſhort Time, all theſe promiſing Qualities vaniſhed: His Care for the Publick was laid aſide; and, by giving a full Looſe to his furious Paſſions, he ſoon became ſuch a Monſter, in all Manner of Wickedneſs, as the World never heard of before. He was ſo proud, that he impiouſly aſſumed divine Honours, and had a Temple dedicated to his own Divinity; ſo prodigal, that he conſumed above fifty Millions of our Money in a few Months Time; ſo brutiſh, that he committed Inceſt with all his three ſiſters, and ſuffered no Lady of Diſtinction to eſcape his Luſt; and ſo tyrannical, that he wiſhed the Roman People had but one Neck, that he might diſpatch them all at one Blow. In ſhort, he was ſo ſuperlatively wicked, as to occaſion this Reflection of Seneca, viz. That Nature ſeemed to have brought him forth on Purpoſe to ſhew, what was poſſible to be produced from the greateſt Viciouſneſs, ſupported by the greateſt Authority.

His aſſuming the Title of Optimus Maximus, with other Epithets of Honour, which the Romans gave only to their great God Jupiter; and, becauſe he would be reputed a real Jupiter, his Inventions to imitate Thunder and Lightning; his inſtituting a ſet of Prieſts to officiate in his Temple, who daily ſacrificed Peacocks, Pheaſants, and the moſt rare and delicate Fowls, that could be procured; and, what is more, his becoming a Prieſt himſelf, and admitting his Wife, and his Horſe to be Fellow-prieſts with him; his falling in Love with the Moon, and, as if ſhe had been a fine Lady, inviting her to his Bed, to taſte of the Pleaſures of his Embraces; and his deifying his Siſter Druſilla after her Death,

A. M. 4044, &c. Ann. Dom. 40, &c.

Death, and making her a Goddeſs, whom, all his Life long, he had made his Harlot; his barbarous Cruelty, as well as impious Love to thoſe of his own Family; his uſing his Grandmother Antonia ſo inhumanly, that ſhe poiſon'd herſelf; murthering his Co-heir Tiberius, merely for uſing a ſweet Powder; and almoſt all his own Kindred, except his Uncle Claudius, whom he preſerved only for a Laughing-ſtock; his condemning Perſons of the beſt Rank and Quality to dig in the Mines, or to repair the Highways; his caſting great Numbers of old infirm Men, and poor decrepid Houſe-keepers to the wild Beaſts to rid the State of ſuch unprofitable Members, and his cauſing all publick Granaries to be ſhut up, that ſuch, as eſcaped the wild Beaſts, might periſh by Famine; his ordering large Pillars and Towers to be built in the Bottom of the Sea; Mountains to be levelled, Plains and Valleys to be elevated, and * a wonderful Bridge of above three Miles and an half in Length, to be carried from the Point of Baiæ, to the oppoſite Shore of Puteoli; and, above all, his famous Expedition into Batavia, or Holland, where he enriched his Army with the Spoils of the conquered Ocean, as he call'd them; i. e. with Cockle Shells and Muſcle-Shells, which he ordered them to gather in their Helmits, and, after having made a pompous Oration to them, (wherein he extolled their noble Atchievements upon this Occaſion) his cauſing a lofty Town to be erected on the Sea-ſide in Memory of this great Victory; theſe, and a Thouſand more vile Extravagances, and monſtrous Cruelties, recorded at large in the Hiſtories of his Life, made him ſo very odious and contemptible to his Subjects, that many began to conſpire againſt him, but all ineffectually until Caſſius Chæreas, an Officer of his Guards, reſolved upon it; and, having communicated his Deſign to ſeveral Senators, Equites, and others, waited only for a fit Opportunity to put it in Execution.

A. M. 4045, &c. Ann. Dom. 41, &c.

The Conſpiracy againſt him, and his Murther.

BELONGING to the Palace there was a private Gallery, through which the Emperor uſually paſſed to ſome Baths, not far diſtant. Here Chæreas, with his Aſſociates, met him, and, after ſome ſhort Salutation, gave him a mortal Stab, crying out, Tyrant, think upon this; at which Inſtant the reſt of the Conſpirators ruſhed in, and gave him no leſs than thirty Wounds, before they had diſpatched him.

THUS died Caius Caligula, in the 29th Year of his Age, and the fourth of his Reign, by his prodigious Enormities having juſtly pulled down the Vengeance of Heaven

---

* To ſhew his Power and Greatneſs, and that he was able to walk upon the Sea, as well as the Land, he ordered an infinite Number of Ships to be ſecured in all Parts, and many others to be new-built, and all to be brought into the Bays of Baiæ and Puteoli, in Campania, about 90 Miles from Rome. Theſe Ships, being placed in two Rows, in the Form of a Creſcent, were faſtened, and moored together with Anchors, Chains, and Cables, to make them firm and ſecure; and over theſe were laid vaſt Quantities of large Planks and Boards, covered over with ſo much Earth, as made it look like firm Ground, or one of the Streets of Rome. For, upon this Bridge, he built Houſes and Lodgings, for the Reception of himſelf and his Followers, and by Pipes conveyed freſh Water from the Land, to ſerve the Occaſions of his Revels. When this was done, he, and all his Court, with prodigious Throngs of all Sorts of People, repaired thither, where, after ſome ſolemn Sacrifices to the Gods, he, proudly adorned with ſtately Robes of Gold and Pearl, ſitting on Horſe-back, with a Civic Crown, and Alexander's Breaſt-plate, accompanied with the great Officers of his Army, and all the Nobility and Gentry of Rome, entered at one End of the Bridge, and, with an awful Majeſty, rode to the other. After this, lodging all Night upon the Bridge, he cauſed ſuch an infinite Number of Torches, Lanthorns, and other Lights to be placed on all Parts of the Work, as gave him Occaſion to boaſt, That he had turned the Night into Day, as well as the Sea into Land. The next Day he rode over the Bridge in his triumphant Chariot, with Darius, an Hoſtage of Parthia attending, and followed by a mighty Train of other Chariots, and all his Soldiers in bright Armour; which when he had done, he aſcended a Roſtrum, and there made a ſolemn Oration in Praiſe of his own great Attempt; and (that he might perform ſomething more memorable before he left the Bridge) he ordered great Numbers of the Multitude to be caſt into the Sea; and, when they laid hold on Rudders, or any Thing that might ſave their Lives, commanded them to be thruſt off, ſo that they all periſhed without Remedy: After which he returned Home in a magnificent Manner, for having ſurmounted (as he thought) the very Order and Laws of Nature. Echard's Roman Hiſtory, in the Life of Caligula.

A. M. 4045, &c. Ann. Dom. 41, &c.

A. M. 4045, &c. Ann. Dom. 41, &c.

Heaven upon himſelf and his Family; for (that his whole Race might be extinguiſhed) his Wife Cæſonia was, at the ſame Time, ſtabbed by a Centurion, and his only Daughter, then an Infant in the Cradle, had her Brains daſhed out againſt a Wall; and that, if poſſible, both his Name and Features might be forgot in future Ages, his Money, by a Decree of the Senate, was melted down.

The Reign of Claudius.

Upon the Death of Caligula, the City was much divided. The Nobility were for reſtoring the Roman Liberty, the Commons for electing a new Emperor, and the Army joined with the Commons; but who to nominate to this Dignity, they were at a Loſs, till ſome of the Soldiers, ſearching about for Plunder in the Palace, chanced to eſpy Caligula's Uncle Claudius hid in an Hole, for Fear of his Life, whom they brought into the Camp, and inſtantly proclaimed Emperor. The Senate, hearing of this, ſent a Tribune of the People to adviſe him to ſubmit to their Eſtabliſhment, and not diſturb the publick Peace with his Pretenſions; but, at the Inſtigation of Herod Agrippa, King of Judea, who was then at Rome, he refuſed to comply, and, in a few Days, by the Clamours of the People, and Menaces of the Soldiers, the Senate was ſo wrought upon, that, conſidering him as nearer allied to the Empire than any other, (being both Uncle to Caligula, and Brother to Germanicus) they agreed to make him Emperor, and ſhortly after confirmed that Title to him.

His good Government at firſt.

CLAUDIUS was now in the fiftieth Year of his Age; but, either upon Account of his bodily Diſtempers, or the natural Stupidity of his Mind, he was ever, till this Time, judged incapable of any publick Office in the State; however, by the good Acts, which he did in the Beginning of his Reign, it ſeemed, as if he had cured the Infirmities of his Body, and, in ſome Meaſure, corrected thoſe of his Underſtanding too. He diſannulled the cruel Edicts made by Caligula, and commanded all, who were unjuſtly confined, either in Priſon or Baniſhment, to be ſet at Liberty. In his Honours and Titles he ſhewed himſelf modeſt and temperate, and, upon ſevere Penalties, forbad all Perſons to ſacrifice to him, as they had done to Caligula. To his Enemies, and the Oppoſers of his Election, he ſhewed himſelf merciful, and paſſed a general Act of Indemnity for all paſt Crimes; only, for a publick Example, and to terrify others from the like Attempt, he ordered Chæreas, and ſome other Conſpirators (who died all with great Reſolution) to be executed. He took more than ordinary Care, that the City of Rome ſhould be continually furniſhed with all ſorts of Corn and Proviſions, by ſecuring the Merchants againſt the Pirates at Sea; and, that it might want no Supply of Water, he made a famous Conduit, or Aqueduct, called after his own Name, which, both for Statelineſs of Workmanſhip, and the Plenty of Water it conveyed, at forty Miles Diſtance, through great Mountains, and over ſtately Arches in Vallies, far ſurpaſſed any Work of that Kind in all Italy.

His Indolence, and ſad Stupidity afterwards.

But it was not long, before this Emperor begun to leſſen his Care and Concern for the Publick, and to give himſelf up to his gluttonous Diſpoſition, and paſſive Stupidity; ſo that his Freed-men and Favourites, (together with his libidinous Wife, Meſſalina) impoſing upon him as they thought fit, became the moſt intolerable Oppreſſors and Tyrants; inflicting innumerable Deaths, and other Cruelties; ſelling Governments and Dignities; and iſſuing out Pardons and Penalties, without his Knowledge. The Truth is, he was ſo cowardly and fearful, that, when a Rebel, named Camillus, commanded him by Letter to reſign his Empire, he was in a Diſpoſition to have done it; ſo blind and incogitant, that his Empreſs Meſſalina married herſelf to another Man, in his Life-Time, and almoſt in his Preſence; ſo ſtupid, that, when the News of her Execution was brought him, he ſhewed not the leaſt Token of Joy, Sorrow, or any other human Paſſion or Affection; and ſo prodigiouſly forgetful, that he frequently aſked, and ſent for ſuch Perſons, as he had executed the Day before.

A. M. 4052, &c. Ann. Dom. 48, &c.

His Marriage to Agrippina, and adopting her Son.

AFTER the Death of the infamous Meſſalina, the Emperor married his own Niece Agrippina, a Woman of a vaſt Spirit, and unbounded Ambition, who ſoon prevailed with her Huſband, even to the Prejudice of his own Son Britannicus, to adopt her Son Domitius, under the Name of Claudius Nero, and to confer on her the Title of Auguſta. Upon her Advancement to this Dignity, it was not long before ſhe procured the Deaths of ſeveral Ladies of the higheſt Rank, who had been her Rivals in marrying the Emperor, and became ſo very zealous for her Son's ſucceeding in the Empire, that when ſhe was told by ſome Oracle, or Augur, that her Son ſhould be Emperor indeed, but would certainly be the Cauſe of her Death, her Anſwer was, Let him, ſo he does but reign.

His Death by Poiſon.

IN a few Years however, the exorbitant Power, which ſhe aſſumed, gained her the Envy and Hatred of the Emperor's Favourites, and the Diſeſteem of Claudius himſelf, who, notwithſtanding his ſtrange Inſenſibility, began now to repent of his Marriage with her, and the Adoption of her Son. This Agrippina ſoon diſcovered by his unuſual Favours to his Son Britannicus, and by what accidentally dropp'd from him, when heated with Wine, viz. That he had been very unfortunate in his Wives, but that none of them had eſcaped unpuniſhed. Whereupon ſhe determined with herſelf to procure his Death by Poiſon; but what Kind of Poiſon to make choice of, was the Queſtion. A ſtrong Poiſon ſhe thought might make her Villainy too apparent, and a ſlow one might give the Emperor Opportunity of diſcovering ſo much of her Practices, as to prevent her Son's Succeſſion; and therefore ſhe reſolved upon ſuch a Potion, as would diſtract his Senſes, and not too ſuddenly end his Life. For this ſhe wanted not her Aſſiſtants, who infuſed the Poiſon into ſome Muſhrooms, a Diſh which the Emperor loved beyond Meaſure; but, finding that this only made him ſick, ſhe ſent for her own Phyſician, named Xenophon, who, under the Pretence of making him vomit, (as his Cuſtom was to do after his gluttonous Debauches) thruſt a poiſonous Feather down his Throat, which, in a ſhort Time, ended his Life, in the 64th Year of his Age, and the 14th of his Reign.

A. M. 4057, &c. Ann. Dom. 53, &c.

The Reign of Nero.

AS ſoon as Claudius was dead, Agrippina, as one overwhelmed with Extremity of Grief, embraced Britannicus in her Arms, calling him the dear Image of his Father's Face, and, by many Artifices, detained him, and his two Siſters, Antonia and Octavia, in the Chamber, placing a ſtrong Guard at every Door and Paſſage, till all Things were made ready for her Son's Advancement; and then, the Palace Gates being ſuddenly ſet open, Nero, accompanied with Burrhus, Prefect of the Prætorian Guards, went out to the Cohort then in waiting, who, at the Command of Burrhus, received him with loud Acclamations, (though not without ſome Enquiries after Britannicus) and carried him in a Chariot to the reſt of the Troops, and they, upon his Promiſe of a Donative, (according to the Example of his Predeceſſors) ſaluted him Emperor, which was ſhortly confirmed by the Senate, and acknowledged by the Provinces.

His good Government at firſt:

NERO, though but 17 Years of Age, began his Reign with the general Joy and Satisfaction of the City; for, promiſing to govern according to the wiſe Rules and Inſtitutions of the great Auguſtus, he, at firſt, both in Words and Actions, ſhewed himſelf juſt, liberal, and merciful. He conferred Favours, and diſtributed large Sums of Money among the People, and Prætorian Soldiers. He moderated the Impoſitions and Tributes of the Provinces; aſſigned Penſions to decayed Senators; uſed all Men with ſuch Humanity and Courteſy, and, in the Execution of Juſtice, ſhewed ſuch Clemency and Pity, that it ſeemed as if Heaven had ſent the Romans ſuch a Prince, as they deſired; as indeed, for the firſt five Years of his Government, it was ſo good, in all Reſpects, that the famous Emperor Trajan was afterwards wont to ſay, that, for that Space of Time, all Governments came ſhort of this: But this, in a great Meaſure, is to be imputed to the wiſe Conduct of Burrhus and Seneca, who were the young Emperor's Guides and Governors, in equal Authority, and bearing equal Share in their different Faculties; Burrhus, in military Diſcipline, and Gravity of Manners; and Seneca, in Precepts of Eloquence, and courteous Demeanour.

His Vices, and mad Extravagances afterwards.

As Nero increaſed in Years, ſo his Vices and Extravagances became more conſpicuous: For, having poiſoned his [*] Predeceſſor's Son Britannicus, taken Pappæa Sabina from the Bed of her Huſband Otho, firſt divorced his Wife Octavia, and afterwards put her to Death, murthered his [†] Mother Agrippina, and (as ſome imagine) poiſoned his Governor Burrhus, he thought himſelf now free from all Reſtraint. He therefore gave the Reins to his brutal Appetites, and abandoned himſelf to all Kinds of Extravagances and Vices, ſuch as were never practiſed by a Prince, and ſcarce conceived by any Man. His running about the City by Night, diſguiſed in the Habit of a Slave, with his lewd Companions, entering Taverns and infamous Houſes, and there committing what Outrages he thought fit; his debaſing himſelf ſo far, as to become a common Singer, Muſician, and Stage-Player, frequently acting a Part before the whole City, and procuring great Numbers of Noblemen and Ladies to be preſent when he acted; his profeſſing the Art of a Charioteer, taking a Journey as far as Peloponneſus, on purpoſe to run in the Olympick Games, and, at his Return to Rome, entering the City in Triumph, ſurrounded with Muſicians and Players, brought from all Parts of the World: Theſe were excuſable Follies, in Compariſon to the monſtrous Extravagances, which he afterwards fell into, when, having attired himſelf in the Habit of a Woman, and a Bride, he was firſt wedded to one of his abominable Companions, named Pythagoras, and, after that, became an Huſband to a Boy, called Sporus, whom he firſt emaſculated, and then, cloathing him withall the Ornaments of an Empreſs, accompanied him in all the moſt publick Places.

His Cruelties, Murthers, and Burning of Rome.

Nor was his Cruelty leſs exorbitant, than his Luſt: For, upon the Diſcovery of a Conſpiracy, which Caius Piſo, and ſome other great Men, had formed againſt him, he put vaſt Numbers to Death, Noble and Ignoble, Guilty and Innocent, among whom (beſides Piſo, the Head of the Conſpiracy) died Lucan, the famous Poet,

[*] The Occaſion of Nero's doing this is ſaid to be ſome furious Menaces, his Mother Agrippina made him, which put him in great Fear of a Competitor at leaſt, if not of the Loſs of his Empire; and therefore, to free himſelf from all Jealouſies, he ordered a Poiſon for Britannicus; but, this proving ineffectual, he had Recourſe to a ſtronger, which was cunningly adminiſtered to the young Prince in a publick Banquet, and ſo ſuddenly ſpread through his Veins, that, at once, his Speech and his Spirits forſook him. While the Spectators were all amazed, Nero, leaning unconcernedly on the Table, aſſured the Company, That it was uſual for him to be ſeized with ſuch Epileptick Fits, ſo that they need not doubt his Recovery; whereupon the reſt, for different Ends and Purpoſes, diſſembled their Griefs, and, after ſome Silence, the Mirth of the Banquet began again: But Britannicus in the mean time died, and was privately buried that ſame Night. Echard's Roman Hiſtory, in the Life of Nero.

[†] After that Nero was reſolved upon his Mother's Death, he attempted firſt to poiſon her; but, by reaſon of the Antidotes and Preſervatives, which ſhe took, Poiſon proved ineffectual. Then he endeavoured to drown her; but ſhe having the good Luck to eſcape, even when ſeveral of her Company periſhed, he at laſt cauſed a Report to be ſpread, that ſhe had conſpired to take away his Life, and ſo ſent certain Tribunes, to murder her; and Authors generally ſay, that, upon their approaching, and unſheathing their Swords, ſhe ſhewed them her Belly, crying, Strike me here; ſince this Part hath deſerved it, for having conceived, , and brought forth ſuch a Monſter as Nero, and immediately expired with the Wounds ſhe received. Echard, ibid.

Poet, who hated Nero, for his forbidding him to publiſh his Verſes; * Seneca, the Philoſopher, and Tutor to the Tyrant, who, though not convicted of any Treaſon, was commanded to die; and the polite, but † impure Petronius, who had been a great Aſſiſtant to Nero in his extravagant Pleaſures. Nay, ſo ſanguinary was he in his Temper, that, without any Manner of Provocation, he put many eminent Perſons to Death, as Rubellius Plautus, only for being of the Julian Family, and another, named Pallus, merely for being rich; a Crime, for which many ſuffered in thoſe Days! And, to compleat all his Wickedneſs, having ſet the City of Rome on Fire, which, with infinite Satisfaction he beheld, and ſung all the while the Deſtruction of Troy in Deriſion, he nevertheleſs, out of Hatred to the Chriſtians, accuſed them of the Fact, and thereupon proceeded againſt them as Incendiaries, raiſed the firſt general Perſecution, and put great Numbers of them to the moſt exquiſitely cruel and ignominious Deaths.

THESE and many more bloody and tyrannical Proceedings had, by this Time, worn out the Patience of the Romans, and made all Men preſs for a Revolution. Vindex, Commander of the Legions in Gaul, was the firſt, who began the Revolt. He publickly proteſted againſt the Government of Nero, and proclaimed Sergius Galba, who, at that Time, was Governor of Part of Spain, Emperor. * Galba, joining in the Enterprize, and taking the Empire upon him, procured the Revolt, not only of the Armies in Spain, but of the Legions of Germany and ſeveral other Places who unanimouſly declared againſt the preſent Emperor.

His black and bloody Deſigns and Death.

THESE Proceedings drove Nero to the utmoſt Rage and Deſpair, and put him upon a Deſign, the blackeſt and moſt barbarous, that ever Man imagined. He reſolved to maſſacre all the Governors of Provinces, and Commanders of Armies, under the Pretence of Conſpiracies; to deſtroy all exiled Perſons, leſt they ſhould join with the Revolters; to murther all the Gauls in Rome, as Favourers of their Countrymen; to poiſon the whole Senate at an Entertainment; to burn the City again, and to turn out wild Beaſts among the People, to prevent their extinguiſhing the Flames: But he found himſelf unable to effect theſe Deſigns. All Mankind fell from him, and forſook him; which made him become as ſervile, as before he was tyrannical. Nay, the Senate, having met together, pronounced him a mortal Enemy to the State, and ſolemnly condemned him to die More Majorum, which was to have his Body ſtripped naked, his Head made faſt in a Pillory, and ſo to be ſcourged to Death. When Nero underſtood this, he ſnatched up two Daggers, and, after many inglorious Sighs and Tears, and ſome whining Complaints, what a rare Artiſt the World in him would loſe, by the Aſſiſtance of Epaphroditus, his Secretary, he wounded himſelf ſo, that he died ſhortly after, in the thirty-ſecond Year of his Age, and fourteenth of his Reign.

* He, being commanded to die, chearfully undertook it, but was obliged to ſeek Death ſeveral Ways; for he had ſo macerated himſelf with Abſtinence, that he could not bleed, and Poiſon would have no Operation upon him: But at length, entering a Bath, he was ſtifled with the Fumes, (diſcourſing even to the laſt, according to his uſual Eloquence) of the moſt excellent Things, which, being taken from his Mouth, were afterwards publiſhed. Such was the Death of the great Philoſopher Seneca, which ſome have thought a juſt judgment upon him, for living ſo contrary to his Writings, and for educating his Pupil no better. Echard's Roman Hiſtory, in the Life of Nero.

† His Death was the moſt remarkable in the World, and moſt reſembling the whole Courſe of his Life. In it he proceeded with all imaginable Unconcern, opening his Veins, and cloſing them as he thought fit, diſcourſing with his Friends, not of ſerious Matters, or the Immortality of the Soul, but of light and pleaſant Things, and, all the Time, attending to ſoft Verſes and delicate Love-Songs. Echard, ibid.

* There is ſomething ſo lively in ſome Part of the Speech, which Galba made to his Army upon this Occaſion, that is well worthy our Obſervation: ——— "It grieves me to ſay, but it hinders not every Man "from ſeeing, that no Slave, under the ſevereſt Maſter, ever endured a Year of harder Service, than we have "ſo many under Nero. What Kind of Exaction has he not uſed to ſupply, with Extortion, what he hath ſpent "with Shame? What Kind of Cruelty has he not practiſed? How has he wallowed in the Blood of his Father, his Brother, his Mother, his Wife, his Maſter, and all who are valiant and virtuous in the Senate, "City, or Provinces, without any Diſtinction of Age or Sex? All which cry for Vengeance upon ſuch a "Prince: A Prince! No, an Incendiary, a Singer, a Fiddler, a Player, a Carter, a Cryer; no Prince, nay, no "Man, having a Man to his Huſband, and a Man to his Wife; but a Monſter of Mankind!" Echard, ibid.

The Reign of Galba.

The Death of Nero occaſioned an univerſal Joy and Satisfaction in Rome; and, as Galba was eſteemed a Perſon of great Wiſdom and Valour, and had been elected by the two Armies in Gaul and Spain, the People unanimouſly agreed, and the Senate, in a ſhort Time, conſented to create him Emperor, though he had no Affinity or Alliance with the Family of the Cæſars, either by Blood, or Adoption.

The Report of his Cruelty.

GALBA was ſeventy-two Years old, when he firſt undertook the Government, under the Name of the Lieutenant of the Senate and People of Rome; but, when he received Advice, that Nero was dead, and the People had ſworn Allegiance to him, he laid aſide the Name of Lieutenant, and aſſuming the Title of Cæſar, put himſelf upon his Way to Rome. In the mean Time, ſeveral Rumours were ſpread abroad both of his Avarice, and Cruelty; of his ſevere treating the Cities of Spain and Gaul, which ſcrupled, at firſt, to declare for him; of his oppreſſing them with exceſſive Tributes, demoliſhing their Fortifications, executing their Governors, and even not ſparing their Wives and Children, which made the People begin to ſhew leſs Satisfaction for his Arrival, than they did for his Election.

His arbitrary Proceedings at Rome.

At his firſt coming to Rome, his Severity to thoſe Sea-men and Mariners, whom Nero had liſted among his Legionary Soldiers; his diſcharging the Roman Cohorts, which had been eſtabliſhed by former Emperors; his refuſing to pay the Donative, that, in his Abſence, was promiſed to the Prætorian Bands; and ſhortly after, caſhiering ſeveral of them upon a bare Suſpicion of Correſpondence and Confederacy with Nymphidius, Captain of the Guards; theſe, and ſeveral other arbitrary Proceedings procured him many Enemies, eſpecially among the military People: Though his reſcinding the odious Acts of Nero, recalling thoſe, whom he had unjuſtly baniſhed, and executing ſeveral of the wicked Inſtruments of his Cruelty, were very grateful Actions to the Romans in general, had he not ſpared ſome of the moſt notorious Offenders for the ſake of Money.

His Covetouſneſs and being ruled by Favourites.

The Love of Money indeed was his governing Paſſion, and had got ſo abſolute a Poſſeſſion of him, that he was often obſerved to ſigh and weep, when he ſaw his Table a little better furniſhed than ordinary: But that which made this Emperor moſt generally deteſted, was his ſuffering himſelf to be entirely managed by three Favourites, who, having their Lodgings with him in the Palace, and being perpetually in his Preſence, were commonly ſtiled his three Pædagogues. They were Perſons of as different Humours and Vices as poſſible; and accordingly, by the Abuſe of his Authority, made him appear, in the Inequality of his Conduct, both odious and deſpicable; ſo that ſometimes he ſhewed himſelf ſevere and rigorous, at other times remiſs and negligent, condemning ſome illuſtrious Perſons unheard, pardoning others without Reaſon, and permitting every Thing, either to be purchaſed by Money, or granted for Favour, juſt as he was guided by theſe Men.

His Adoption of Piſo.

During this Miſconduct at Rome, Affairs in the Provinces were in a worſe Condition. For, ſince the Army in Spain had preſumed to chuſe an Emperor without any other Authority, many Mutinies were raiſed, and Factions ſprang up in moſt Parts of the Empire, through Envy, Diſcontent, or a Deſire of Alteration; ſo that the Emperor perceiving that, beſides his unwieldly Old-age, which made him contemptible, he was leſs reſpected by many for want of an Heir, was reſolved to adopt ſome Perſon, of ſuch an Age and Authority, as, in his Life-time, might be able to protect him, and, after his Deceaſe, ſucceed him in the Empire. Upon his declaring this his Intent, his three Favourites were very buſy in recommending Perſons to him; but Otho, having gained the chief Favourite Vanius, together with the Urban and Prætorian Cohorts, aſſured himſelf of Succeſs. Galba however, reſolving to conſider the publick Good, and diſliking Otho's irregular Life, as too much reſembling that of his Maſter Nero, rejected him, and made choice of a Young Man, called Piſo, in whom was an happy Concurrence of all the good Qualities, that were neceſſary in a Prince and Emperor.

His Murther by Otho's Command.

OTHO, finding the Hopes of his Adoption thus blaſted, immediately applied himſelf to the Soldiers, with whom he had a powerful Intereſt, and, by his plauſible Speeches, and large Promiſes, engaged them to proclaim him Emperor, in Oppoſition to Galba's Choice; which when Galba underſtood, he was both diſheartened and confounded. Some were of Opinion, that he ought to put himſelf in Arms, and appear in Publick, that his Preſence might ſtem the Torrent of this dangerous Faction; others, that his greateſt Security would be to fortify himſelf in the Capitol, and there to attend the Reſult of the Diſorder. But while he continued thus wavering and irreſolute, a falſe Report was brought him, that Otho was ſlain; whereupon he rode arm'd out of his Palace, with his Guards, and many Followers into the grand Forum; and, at the ſame Time, there entered, at the other Side, a ſtrong Body of Horſe from the Camp, ſent by Otho to diſpatch him. Upon their nearer Approach, for a conſiderable while they ſtood amazed, and in a dubious Poſture, as apprehending the conſequence of their fatal Commiſſion; ſo that Galba had Time enough to make his Eſcape, but by his Irreſolution loſt his Opportunity. For, while he was conſidering with himſelf, whether to return to the Palace, or retire to the Capitol, he was ſuddenly abandoned by the chief of his Followers, inſomuch that, when the Soldiers ſent by Otho, came up to him, he ſtretched out his Neck, and bad them ſtrike it off, if it were for the Good of the Commonwealth, and the Roman People; which accordingly was done, in the ſeventy-third Year of his Age, after a ſhort Reign of ſeven Months; and, after him, were executed his three Favourites, and his adopted Son, Piſo.

The Reign of Otho, and good Government at firſt.

On the ſame Day, that Galba was murther'd in the Forum, the Senate, and the People of Rome, all acknowledged Otho for his Succeſſor; a Perſon valiant, and witty, of an ancient and honourable Family, and a great Favourite to Nero; but more for the Conformity of his Humours and Vices, and the Beauty of his Wife Poppæa, than any worthy Execution of the many conſiderable Offices wherewith he was intruſted. However, when he came to the Government, he ordered all Things agreeably to the Honour of the Empire, which, together with his pardoning Marius Celſus, who had been advanced by Galba, and ſtrenuouſly oppoſed his Succeſſion; his puniſhing of Tigellinus, who had been Nero's chief Inſtrument in Impurity; and his generous reſtoring the Goods and Eſtates of ſuch, as had been exiled by that Tyrant, gained him the Love and Affection of the People of Rome.

Vitellius's Character, and being choſe Emperor by his Army.

VITELLIUS, at this Time, commanded the Legions in the Lower Germany. He was a Perſon of great Reputation and Authority, by reaſon of the ſeveral Offices and Magiſtracies which he had held in Rome, and elſewhere, under the three Emperors, Caligula, Claudius, and Nero, with each of whom he had been very intimate, but more for his exceſſive Vices, and ſome perſonal Abilities, than any Virtues or Excellencies in him.

A. M. 4072, &c. Ann. Dom. 68, &c.

He was in Favour with Claudius, for his Gaming at Dice; with Caligula, for his Dexterity in managing a Chariot; and with Nero, for the ſame Skill, and ſome other ſuch-like Qualities; but notwithſtanding this, being a Man of Subtlety and Intrigue, he had, by large Gifts, and ſpecious Promiſes, procured the Army to create him Emperor, without attending the Will and Pleaſure of the Senate, about 13 Days before Galba's Death.

The Situation of Affairs at Rome.

When the News of this came to Rome, it put Otho into a great Conſternation, and the City into no ſmall Concern, as well knowing, that nothing but the Sword, and the Blood of many Thouſand Romans could determine the Conteſt. The Fears and Cares of the City were farther augmented by the great Preparations, they ſaw Otho making, and the known Diſabilities of the Nobility and Gentry in martial Affairs. The chief of the Senate were grown old and impotent, wanting both the Power and Vigour of Soldiers. The Nobility were ſlothful, covered with the Ruſt of a long Peace, and unaccuſtomed to the Fatigues of a Camp. The Equites were diſſolved in Eaſe and Luxury, and ignorant in military Service, which the more they endeavoured to conceal, the more they betrayed their Fears. The wiſer Sort began to ſhew great Concern at the Miſeries, and Perturbations of the Commonwealth; but the Inconſiderate were ſwelled with vain Hopes, and extravagant Opinions, and many Perſons Bankrupts in Peace, in theſe troubleſome Times, began to make the greateſt Appearance, as being themſelves moſt in Safety, when the State was in greateſt Danger.

The two Armies meet and engage.

While Things were in this Situation at Rome, Otho received Advice, that Vitellius's Forces were upon their March towards Italy, under the Conduct of two Commanders, Valens, and Cæcinna; whereupon he departed from Rome, with a fair Army, conſiſting of the Roman Nobility, the Prætorian Cohorts, the Legions out of the Fleets upon the Italian Coaſts, and ſuch others, as he could levy in that Time. Upon the Approach of the two Armies, both Parties proceeded with ſuch Haſte and Precipitation, that, beſides Skirmiſhes, and other Encounters, three conſiderable Battles were fought, one at Placentia, another at Cremona, and a third at a Place called Caſtor, in all which Otho and the Senate had the Advantage, tho' the Word on both Sides was, Rome and the Empire!

That of Vitellius conquers, and Otho ſtabs himſelf.

VALENS and Cæcinna had hitherto acted ſeparately, but, joining now all their Forces together, they came to a general Battle near Bebriacum, a Village between Cremona and Verona, and, after a ſharp Engagement, the Prætorian Cohorts giving Way, the Vitellians obtained a Victory, which at once decided the Conteſt. For Otho, tho' he had ſufficient Encouragement to continue the War, being reduced to a Sort of Deſperation, reſolved upon an Attempt, contrary to his ſoft and effeminate Temper, which was * to die himſelf, in order to ſpare the Blood of his Country-men. No Arguments

---

* His Speech to his Soldiers, upon this Occaſion, is very remarkable, ——— "I eſteem this Day as far more happy and glorious than that, whereon you made me Emperor, ſince it has manifeſted ſuch ſenſible Tokens of your Love and Affection, and ſo inconteſtible Proofs of your Duty and Loyalty; therefore I beſeech you, not to deny me this Favour, which is to ſuffer me to die juſtly and honourably, for the Safety of ſo many brave Soldiers, and worthy Citizens, as you are. There can be no Occaſion for any Legions, and Forces coming to my Aſſiſtance, ſince the Enemy is neither Hannibal nor Pyrrhus; therefore to hazard your Virtue and Valour in Dangers wholly needleſs, is too dear a Purchaſe of Life, and the greater Hopes you have of Succeſs, the more honourable will be my Death, as being voluntary, and not by any Conſtraint. Aſſure yourſelves I had rather die, than reign Emperor, ſince I can never ſo far advance the Roman State by Wars and Bloodſhed, as by ſacrificing myſelf for the Peace of it; and whereas others have purchaſed Fame and Glory by their well-governing and ſupporting the Empire, I may reaſonably expect a Name for leaving it, rather than permit my Ambition to weaken and deſtroy it. I therefore deſire that you would take this as an undoubted Proof of my Courage and Reſolution, that I make no Complaints of hard Fortune, or ill Succeſs; for to blame either Gods or Men, implies a mean and indirect Deſire of Living." Echard's Roman Hiſtory, in the Life of Otho.

Arguments or Entreaties could move, or divert him from this Reſolution, which he carried on, and effected with all imaginable Calmneſs, and Serenity of Mind.

For the Night before he died, having choſen out a ſharp Dagger, and laid it under his Pillow, he took a Draught of cold Water, and ſo went to Bed, and fell into a profound Sleep; but, awaking about Break of Day, and ſeeing one of his Servants in the Chamber, he commanded him to retire, and then taking the Dagger, gave himſelf a mortal Stab on the Left Side, and, with a ſingle Groan, ended his Life, in the 38th Year of his Age, and after a very ſhort and troubleſome Reign of only twelve Weeks and ſix Days.

The Reign of Vitellius.

His Brutality.

Luxury.

And Cruelty.

Soon after the Death of Otho, Vitellius, being ſtill in Gaul, was both by the Army and Senate acknowledged for Emperor. In his Journey towards Rome arriving at Bebriacum, where the laſt Battle was fought, he was extremely delighted with the Sight of the putrified Bodies, and the Limbs of Men and Horſes, mangled, and ſcattered abroad; and, when ſeveral of his Train complained of the noiſom Smells, he impiouſly replied, That a dead Enemy ſmelt well, but a dead Citizen better. Nor did he give greater Satisfaction at his Arrival in Rome; for, like a Conqueror, he entered the City, mounted upon a noble Steed, and adorned with all his military Habiliments; encouraged his Soldiers to all Kinds of Inſolence and Outrage; and abandoned himſelf to the moſt extravagant Degrees of Luxury, Gluttony, and Cruelty, inſomuch that, in four Months Time, he waſted above ſeven Millions of our Money; nor would the Revenues of the whole Empire, had he reigned long, have been ſufficient to maintain his Expences. His uſing all Manner of Fraud and Hypocriſy to deſtroy ſuch Perſons of Quality, as had formerly been his Aſſociates, and School-fellows; his going to viſit one of them in a Fever, and, upon his deſiring to drink, mingling Poiſon with the Water, and delivering it to him with his own Hand; his cauſing all Perſons to be put to Death, that came to demand the Payment of his former Debts, and one of them to be ſlain in his very Preſence, that he might feed his Eyes with the Spectacle, as he called it; his ordering two Sons to be executed, with their Father, for no other Crime, than merely preſuming to intercede for his Life; and his having ſeveral of the meaner Sort ſlaughtered, only for deriding the Colours of ſome Charioteers, whom he pretended to favour; theſe, and many more ſanguinary Acts, mentioned by the Hiſtorians, who have recorded his Life, are a ſufficient Indication, that in his Government he deſigned to follow the Example of Nero, to whoſe Manes he publickly ſacrificed in a general Aſſembly of the Prieſts in the Campus Martius. All this while he gave himſelf up to ſuch a ſtrange Careleſſneſs and Stupidity, that nothing but his horrid Cruelties could put him in Mind of his exalted State; and fortifying himſelf with confuſed Mirth and Sottiſhneſs againſt all Dangers and Exigences, he almoſt loſt the Remembrance of Things paſt, and the Thoughts of Things to come.

Veſpaſion declared Emperor by his Army.

Having thus, by this abominable Life, made himſelf odious to the City, and, by the daily Inſolencies and Cruelties of his Soldiers, inſupportable to the Country, the Legions in the Eaſt (tho' in the Beginning of his Reign, they ſubmitted to his Authority) began now to revolt, and, fixing their Eyes upon Veſpaſian, as a Perſon moſt worthy of the higheſt Authority, and moſt able to put an End to the Miſeries of his Country, reſolved to create him Emperor againſt Vitellius. Veſpaſian, at this Time, was engaged in a War againſt the Jews, and, with great Bravery and Renown, had reduced moſt of their Country, except Jeruſalem; but, when his Army proclaimed him Emperor, and he abſolutely refuſed that Dignity, the Soldiers, with their their drawn Swords, and many Menaces againſt his Life, compelled him to take the Honour upon him; whereupon, all the Armies of the Eaſt came to his Service and Obedience, and, in a general Council, it was determined, that Titus ſhould continue the War againſt the Jews, Mutianus enter Italy with the greateſt Part of the Legions, and Veſpaſian himſelf go to Alexandria, to make Proviſion from all Parts, and thence paſs over into Italy, to join Mutianus, as Occaſion ſhould require it.

The Defeat of Vitellius's Army.

IN the mean Time, Antonius Primus, an excellent Soldier, who had been baniſhed by Nero, but reſtored by Galba, a Friend to Veſpaſian, and privy to his Deſign, immediately marched at the Head of the Mœſian Legions into Italy; and, before Mutianus could arrive, having entirely defeated Vitellius's Army, was proceeding directly towards Rome. This ſo ſtartled and confounded Vitellius, that he became perfectly ridiculous and deſpicable, ſometimes propoſing Terms of Accommodation, and offering to lay down his Authority, and then re-aſſuming it again, till he occaſioned a Faction, and Civil War even in Rome, in which the Capitol was beſieged, taken, and laid in Aſhes, and Sabinus, the Governor of the City, was ſlain. After this, Antonius would hearken to no more Treaties or Accommodations, but continued his March even to the Walls of Rome, where a furious Battle of almoſt a Day's Continuance enſued, until Vitellius's Army were driven into the City, and, through the Martius Campus, and all the Streets, purſued with a moſt terrible Slaughter.

Taking the City.

IN the Midſt of theſe Devaſtations, the People, who were then celebrating their Saturnalia, rather than not enjoy the Pleaſures of the Feſtival, converted the common Calamity into Mirth and Jollity; ſo that, through the whole City, there was both a barbarous and a ſhameful Spectacle, and a ſcandalous Mixture of Cruelty and Lewdneſs; in one Place, Wounding and Slaying; in another, Tippling and Bathing; here, Streams of Blood and Heaps of mangled Bodies; and, hard by, lewd Debauches, and ſhameleſs Proſtitutes: In ſhort, all the abominable Licentiouſneſs of a moſt diſſolute and riotous Peace, and all the deplorable Miſeries of a moſt dreadful and cruel War.

And deſtroying him, and his Party.

THUS was this mighty City, the Head and Empreſs of the World, taken and ravaged by her own natural Subjects; and, as it was fatal to many Thouſands, ſo it was no leſs to Vitellius himſelf, whom the Soldiers dragged out of his Palace, and, without hearkening to any Intreaties, binding his Hands behind him, threw an Halter about his Neck, and, tearing his very Cloaths from his Back, drew him half-naked into the publick Forum, through the main Street, called Via Sacra; all the while, as he went along, treating him with the utmoſt Indignities, and moſt opprobrious Language; tying his Hair backwards, as it was wont to be done to the moſt execrable Malefactors; pelting him with Dung and Filth, and holding the Point of a Sword under his Chin, to prevent his concealing his Face; till, at length, they brought him to the common Place of Execution for the moſt notorious Criminals, and, having there, with many Blows and Wounds, diſpatched him in the 56th Year of his Age, and after a ſhort Reign of eight Months, they thence dragged him with an Hook, and, having thrown him into the Tiber, made afterwards, not only his Brother, and only Son, but all, whom they met with of his Party, Victims to their Fury.

The Reign of Veſpaſian.

AFTER theſe Murthers and Ravages were abated, the Roman Senate aſſembled, and, with an unanimous Conſent, not only declared Veſpaſian Emperor, but conferred the Title of Cæſar upon his two Sons, Titus and Domitian; nominated the former to be Conſul, with his Father, for the Year enſuing, and the latter to be Prætor with Conſular Power; rewarded Mutianus, Antonius, and ſeveral others, with great Revenues and Dignities, for contributing to this happy Revolution; and diſpatched Couriers to Veſpaſian at Alexandria to tender him their Homage and Obedience, and to deſire his ſpeedy Return to Rome: But, as the Winter was not ſo commodious for Sailing, he deferred his going to a more convenient Seaſon.

The Siege of Jeruſalem.

VESPASIAN, (as we ſaid) before he left Judea, committed the Management of the War againſt the Jews to his Son Titus, as well knowing his extraordinary Valour and Skill for ſuch an Undertaking. Himſelf had reduced moſt of the Country, except Jeruſalem; but Jeruſalem was the capital City, fortified with three Walls on every Side, except where it was fenced with deep Vallies, having the Caſtle of Antonia, the Temple, the Palace of Acra, the Towers on Mount Sion, and ſeveral other Places almoſt impregnable; ſo that great Conſultation, and a Preparation of many Materials, were required to carry on ſuch a Siege. But what facilitated its Reduction, were the ſeveral Parties and Factions, which had Poſſeſſion of different Parts of the City, and were not only murthering and maſſacring one another, but, in their Rage and Madneſs, had deſtroyed the Proviſions likewiſe, which might have ſerved the City for many Years. Jeruſalem was involved in theſe ſad Circumſtances, when Titus, with a powerful Army, and all Kinds of warlike Engines, approached, and ſat down within ſix or ſeven Furlongs of the City, a little before the Feaſt of the Paſſover, by which Means he ſhut up an infinite Number of People, come from all Parts to that Solemnity, which, in a ſhort Time, occaſioned a great Conſumption of their Proviſions.

UPON the Sight of ſo numerous an Army, the ſeveral Factions unanimouſly agreed to oppoſe it, and, ſallying out with great Reſolution and Fury, put the Romans to Diſorder, and obliged them to abandon their Camp, and fly to the Mountains; but the Jews were at laſt repulſed, and driven into the City by the extraordinary Skill and Valour of Titus, who, in this, and all other Actions, during this Siege, greatly ſignalized himſelf.

WHEN Titus had placed his Engines, (which was not done without great Oppoſition) he battered the outward Wall, and, on the third Day of May, making a Breach, entered, and took Poſſeſſion of the North Quarter of the City, as far as the Caſtle of Antonia, and the Valley of Kedron; which when he had done, he gave the Beſieged all poſſible Aſſurances of Pardon and civil Treatment, if they would but ſubmit; but they, judging his Humanity to be the Effect of Cowardice, refuſed all Terms and Conditions. Five Days after this, Titus broke through the ſecond Wall, and tho' the Beſieged made ſeveral Sallies, and drove him out again; yet, on the fourth Day, he recovered the Place, and poſſeſſed himſelf of the new Lower City; which when he had done, being ſtill deſirous to ſhew them Mercy, he ſent * Joſephus to his Countrymen, to exhort them

---

* How Joſephus came to be at Jeruſalem, and in the Camp of Titus, while he beſieged it, himſelf tells us in his Hiſtory of the Jewiſh Wars, viz. that, after the Reduction of Jotapata, which he gallantly defended, he became a Priſoner to Veſpaſian; but, having foretold his Advancement to the Empire, (which accordingly came to paſs) he was not only ſet at Liberty, but received into great Confidence, and attended his Son at the Siege of Jeruſalem, where he made a long Speech to his Countrymen, by all the Arguments that he could invent, perſuading them to ſurrender, but all in vain; for, though his Diſcourſe drew Tears from his own Eyes, (as himſelf tells us, l. vi. c. 9.) the Factions were not in the leaſt ſoftened by it. After the Deſtruction of Jeruſalem, he went with his Conqueror to Rome, where Veſpaſian ſhewed him great Reſpect, and (as himſelf tells in his Life) lodged him in his own Houſe, made him a free Citizen of Rome, aſſigned him a Penſion, gave him Lands in Judea, and, above all, ordered him a publick Statue. Theſe Favours Titus, when he came to the Empire, increaſed, and, in Honour of him, had his Hiſtory of the Wars of the Jews, which was now finiſhed, depoſited in the publick Library. This Hiſtory is a continued Account of the Jewiſh Affairs, from the

them to yield, but, tho' he uſed all the powerful and pathetick Perſuaſions imaginable, he was entertained with nothing but Scoffs and Reproaches; ſo that Titus was now reſolved to proceed with more Severity againſt a People, who had been perfidious to the higheſt Degree, and ſtubborn beyond all Example: And, accordingly, whenever any eſcaped out of the City, (as the Famine compelled many to make their Eſcape) they were no ſooner taken by Titus, than he cauſed them to be ſcourged and crucified, and that in ſuch Numbers, that Room was wanting for Croſſes, and Croſſes for Perſons, tho', by the Cruelty of this Spectacle, he only deſigned to terrify the City, and haſten its Surrender.

ON the 12th of May, Titus began four Mounts for his Battering-Rams, two near the Caſtle of Antonia, where he was in Hopes of taking the Temple, and two near the Monument of John, the High-Prieſt, where he ſuppoſed he might break into the upper City with the greateſt Facility; but, in two bold Sallies, the Beſieged ruined and deſtroyed the Mounts, and, having burnt ſeveral Battering-Rams, and other Engines, preſſed forward, and broke into the very Camp of the Romans, though, at length, they were valiantly repulſed by Titus, who (in a Council of War) now reſolved to ſurround the whole City with a Wall, or Intrenchment, to hinder the Flight of the Beſieged, and to prevent all Relief from coming into the City, thereby verifying our bleſſed Lord's Predictions to a Tittle: (a) The Days ſhall come upon thee, that thy Enemies ſhall caſt a Trench about thee, and compaſs thee around, and keep thee in on every Side.

A. M. 4074, &c. Ann. Dom. 70, &c.

THIS Work, tho' near five Miles in Compaſs, was, with incredible Celerity, finiſhed in three Days; but it made no Impreſſion upon the Beſieged, though the Famine began to rage violently, and ſuch a Mortality enſued, that, from the 14th of April, to the 1ſt of July, 115,080 Carcaſſes of the poorer Sort were carried out to be buried at the publick Charge, 600,000 were caſt out of the Gates, and when the Number of the dead Bodies increaſed ſo, that they had no Place to diſpoſe of them, they gathered them together into the largeſt Houſes adjoining, and there ſhut them up. All this while, the Famine increaſed to ſuch a Degree, that a Buſhel of Corn was ſold for 600 Crowns; that Wives took the Meat out of their Huſbands Mouths, Children from their Parents, and Mothers from their Infants; that old Men were driven from their Meat, as Perſons of no Uſe, and young Men tortured to confeſs where their Proviſions lay; that Sinks and Holes were continually raked to find the old Dung of Oxen for Food, that the very Soldiers (who were the laſt that would want) began to eat Girdles, Shoes, Sticks, and Hay; and that a Woman of Quality even boiled her own Child, with an Intent to eat it; an Act ſo deteſtable, that Titus, after he had inſiſted upon his frequent Offers of Peace and Pardon to the Jews, declared publickly, that he would bury the abominable Crime in the Ruins of their Country, and not ſuffer the Sun to ſhine upon that City, where Mothers eat their own Children, and where Fathers, no leſs the Taking of Jeruſalem by Antiochus Epiphanes, down to the utter Ruin of it by Titus, conſiſting in all of 242 Years; but the moſt conſiderable and valuable Part of it is, that of the ſix laſt Years, where he deſcribes the laſt Jewiſh Wars, the Deſtruction of Jeruſalem, and the Miſeries of his Countrymen, in the moſt lively and affecting Manner. Beſides this, Joſephus wrote another Hiſtory, intitled, The Antiquities of the Jews, which was finiſhed in the 13th Year of Domitian. One half of this Hiſtory is taken from the Books of the Old Teſtament; but he has ventured to add ſeveral Facts, that are not to be found in theſe Writings, and to thoſe, which he has wholly taken from them, he has given ſuch an artificial Turn, as ſhews, that his Intention was to accommodate the moſt ſurpriſing Paſſages in the Holy Scriptures to the Humour and Opinions of the Perſons to whom he wrote. Beſides theſe two Hiſtories, he wrote an Account of his own Life, two Treatiſes againſt Apion, and one concerning the Martyrdom of the Maccabees, which Eraſmus juſtly ſtiles a Maſter-piece of Eloquence. Echard's Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory.

leſs culpable, reduced them to that Extremity by their Obſtinacy.

WITH this Reſolution he cut down all the Groves within a conſiderable Diſtance of the City, and, cauſing more Mounts to be raiſed, on the firſt of July he began to batter the Wall of Antonia, and, on the fifth, entered the Caſtle by Force, and purſued the flying Jews even to the Temple; which when he had done, both he and Joſephus again exhorted them to ſurrender, but all to no Purpoſe: They obſtinately refuſed all Accommodation, and made it their Boaſt, that they had rather endure the worſt of Miſeries. Titus, hearing this, in order to make an eaſy Aſcent to the Temple, overturned the Foundation of Antonia; and, having ſeized the North and Weſt Portico's, or Cloyſters of the outward Range of the Temple, he ſet them on Fire, as the Jews did other Porticos, to hinder the Romans from making their Approaches. On the eighth Day of Auguſt, Titus, perceiving that the Walls of the Inner Temple were too ſtrong for the Battering-Rams, and that the Foundation of the Gates could not be undermined, was obliged to ſet Fire to them, yet ſtill with an Intent, if poſſible, to ſave the Temple itſelf; but it ſo fell out, that, on the tenth, a certain Soldier, contrary to the Command of the General, excited by a Kind of divine Impulſe, caſt a flaming Firebrand through the Golden Window into the Chambers and Buildings on the North Side, which immediately ſet them on Fire, and, notwithſtanding the utmoſt Endeavours to the contrary, ſpread throughout the whole Fabrick, and conſumed the moſt glorious and beautiful Structure that the World ever ſaw; whilſt the Roman Soldiers, purſuing their Victory with all imaginable Fury and Revenge, cut in Pieces all that they found about the Temple, and ſet Fire to the reſt of the Buildings.

IN all theſe Confuſions, thoſe, who were the Chiefs in this Sedition, found Means to retire to the upper and ſtrongeſt Part of the City, called Sion, ſituated upon a ſteep Rock, where they threatened to defend themſelves to the laſt, and there tyrannized with more Cruelty than ever; till, Titus having raiſed his Batteries, and made a Breach in the Wall, they loſt all their Courage, and, in great Conſternation, abandoned the Towers, which were their only Strength, and in vain ſought to eſcape by hiding themſelves in Vaults and Privies, from whence both John * and Simon, two principal Ringleaders of their different Factions, were dragged out, and the former condemned to perpetual Impriſonment, whilſt the latter was appointed to grace the General's Triumph.

THE Romans, having now gained the Walls, and, with Shouts of Joy, placed their Colours upon the Towers, broke looſe all over the City, and ranged up and down in the Streets, killing all that fell in their Way without Diſtinction, till the Paſſages and Alleys were choaked up with Carcaſſes, and the Kennels of the City ran with Blood, as if it had been to quench the Fire, which was now become one general Conflagration.

TO this fatal End was the famous City of Jeruſalem, after a Siege of above five Months, reduced, in the ſecond Year of Veſpaſian's Reign, and 38 Years after our Lord's Crucifixion; in which Siege there periſhed no leſs than 1,100,000, and no fewer

* This John was the Son of one Levi, born at Giſchala, and one of the principal Men of the Place. When Titus came before it, under a Pretence of ſurrendering it, he made his Eſcape, and came, with a Party of Men, to Jeruſalem, where, joining with the Zealots, and being naturally a crafty Man, eloquent in his Speech, and ambitious beyond Meaſure, he ſoon began to affect a ſovereign Power over the reſt, and became the Commander of one Faction, as Simon, the Son of Gioras, did of another. For he, gathering together great Multitudes of Robbers and Murtherers, who got into the mountainous Parts, reduced all Idumæa, waſted Judea, encamped himſelf before Jeruſalem, and was at length let in by the Citizens to defend them againſt John, who, at the Head of the Zealots, did many cruel and tyrannical Actions. So that Simon and his Army were in the City, while John and his Adherents were in the Temple, fighting and deſtroying one another, even while the Enemy was at the Walls. Echard's Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory.

fewer than 97,000 were taken Captives, beſides the 237,490 more, (according to Joſephus) who fell in the Wars which preceded it. At laſt, when the Soldiers had neither Rapine nor Bloodſhed left for their Rage and Indignation to work upon, Titus order'd them to lay the City and the Temple level with the Ground, or, in the Words of our Saviour's Prediction, not to leave one Stone upon another; which Order was ſo punctually executed, that (except three Towers, which, for their Strength and Beauty, were left as Monuments of the City's Statelineſs to Poſterity) the whole was laid ſo flat, that the Place look'd as if it had never been inhabited.

The Goodneſs of Veſpaſian's Government.

While theſe Things were tranſacting at Jeruſalem, Veſpaſian, who entered upon the Government in the fifty-ninth Year of his Age, having been received at Rome with all imaginable Teſtimonies of Joy and Triumph, as the only Perſon, whoſe Virtues and Excellencies could recover the languiſhing State of the Empire, began immediately to act conformably to the Hopes which all Men had conceived of him, in adminiſtring Juſtice, and in reforming the Laws and Cuſtoms of Rome; honourably rewarding thoſe, who had ſerved him, and pardoning his Adverſaries with ſingular Clemency.

Titus's Return and Triumph.

Mean Time the Concluſion of the Jewiſh War occaſioned great Rejoicings at Rome, where all Mens Mouths were filled with the Praiſes of Titus, who had ſhewn himſelf ſo expert a Soldier and Commander; and, accordingly, a Triumph was decreed by the Senate both for him, and his Father, who had ſo bravely managed the Beginning of the War. When Titus returned to Rome, he was received with the univerſal Applauſes of the whole City, and, within a few Days after, both the Father and Son enter'd upon their Triumph, which was as ſolemn and magnificent, as Rome ever ſaw; wherein, among other rich and glorious Spoils, vaſt Quantities of Gold taken out of the Temple, and the Body of the Jewiſh Law, (the laſt, and not the leaſt remarkable of all theſe Spoils) were exhibited to the View of the People. This was the firſt Time that Rome ever ſaw the Father and Son triumph together: And, as Veſpaſian built a new Temple to Peace, wherein he depoſited moſt of the Jewiſh Spoils, ſo Titus had a Triumphal Arch of great Beauty and Magnificence erected to his Honour, whereon are inſcrib'd all his noble Exploits againſt the Jews, and which (as a laſting Monument againſt that impious and perverſe Nation) remains almoſt entire to this very Day.

Veſpaſian's Reformation of ſeveral Abuſes.

After this happy Peace, Veſpaſian proceeded to the Regulation of the ſeveral Abuſes and Corruptions, which, in the late Reigns, and the Civil Confuſions, had crept into the State. He reſtrained the Luxury and Licentiouſneſs of his Officers and Soldiers, not ſparing thoſe, who had been Aſſiſtants to him, and Partners with him in his Victories. He reformed the two principal Orders among the Romans, the Senators, and the Equites, degrading all thoſe, he found unworthy of their Dignities, and ſupplying their Places with the moſt deſerving Perſons he could procure, either in Italy, or other Provinces. He examin'd into all Courts of Judicature, and where he found Law-ſuits multiplied to a prodigious Number, or extended to an unreaſonable Length, he appointed proper Perſons to determine them, and made many excellent Laws to digeſt, and reduce ſuch Matters into a far leſs Compaſs; and to reform the Corruption of Uſurers, as well as the Looſeneſs of Youth, he ordain'd, that no Perſon ſhould recover any Money of young Heirs, if it was lent to be repaid with Intereſt upon the Deceaſe of their Fathers.

His Liberality to Men of Learning and Clemency.

And as he was ſevere in puniſhing Vice, ſo he was no leſs remarkable for rewarding all Kinds of Merit, tho' his more particular Bounty was extended to the learned Profeſſors of Arts and Sciences. He ſettled a conſtant Salary of an hundred Thouſand Seſterces upon the Teachers of Rhetorick, to be paid yearly out of the Exchequer. He entertained Joſephus, the famous Writer of the Jewiſh Wars and Antiquities, with great Civility, and honoured him with a Statue. Pliny the Elder, an eminent natural Hiſtorian, Quintilian, the renowned Orator, and many other Perſons of great Learning, flouriſhed in his Reign, and were highly eſteemed by him; as the greateſt Maſters of all other Arts and Sciences were invited to Rome, from all Parts of the World, by his generous Allowances. To all which we may add, that his Courteſy and Clemency appeared conſtantly, both in publick and private, ſo that ſcarce one innocent Perſon was puniſhed through his whole Reign; and ſo contrary was his Temper to that of moſt of his Predeceſſors, that he could not ſo much as look upon the Sufferings of a Criminal, without ſignifying his Compaſſion by his Sighs and Tears.

The Charge of Covetouſneſs againſt him, in ſome Meaſure, excuſed.

BUT, tho' he was thus mild and merciful, brave and generous, yet he did not preſerve himſelf from the Scandal of Avarice and Rapaciouſneſs; which was grounded upon his ſelling all the Lands in Judea, and appropriating the Money to himſelf; upon his obliging all the Jews in the Roman Empire to pay yearly two Drachmas to the Capitol, as they formerly had done to the Temple at Jeruſalem; and upon his laying heavy Tributes upon ſeveral Provinces, and particularly a ſcandalous Exciſe upon Urine. But for this, and all other his ſevere Impoſitions, Authors do much excuſe him, upon the Account of the great Neceſſities of the State, and the Emptineſs of the Exchequer, when he came firſt to the Government; reminding us withal, that his publick Works and Edifices were highly chargeable and expenſive; his Preſents and Penſions were numerous and large; his Feaſts and Entertainments frequent and magnificent; and that, tho' his Revenue, by theſe Exactions, was augmented, yet he always employed it to noble Purpoſes, and laid it out with great Wiſdom and Liberality.

His Death and Character.

BY this wiſe Adminiſtration of publick Affairs, he increaſed the Love and Reſpect of the whole Senate and People, the nearer he approached to the End of his Days; and, when he had finiſhed his Courſe, which was in the 69th Year of his Age; and, 10th of his Reign, his Death was greatly lamented, and his Memory gratefully preſerved, as being a Prince of great Wiſdom, Moderation, and Modeſty, next to Julius Cæſar in War, and Auguſtus in Peace; and in whom (as Pliny expreſſes it) Greatneſs and Majeſty had changed nothing, but only to make his Power of doing Good anſwerable to his Will.

The Reign of Titus.

UPON the Death of the great Veſpaſian, his eldeſt Son Titus, both by the general Conſent, and his Father's laſt Will and Teſtament, ſucceeded to the Empire, tho' not without ſome Obſtructions from his ambitious Brother Domitian. Titus had ſerved in many Wars with great Honour, and diſcharged many Civil Offices with no leſs Wiſdom; yet, during his Father's Reign, he had given too many Occaſions of Prejudice and Aſperſion, upon Account of his Severity, and voluptuous Life, his extravagant Paſſion for Berenice, King Agrippa's Siſter, and his promoting his Father's Impoſitions and Extortions; inſomuch, that he was generally looked upon as a ſecond Nero, and ſcarce any Man ever arrived at the Empire with a more ſullied Reputation, and a greater Repugnancy of the People. But, in a ſhort Time, theſe Accuſations and Averſions turned all to his Advantage, and his Virtue gained him a Reputation, under the Burthen of an Empire, which he could not attain under the Freedom of a private Perſon: For, from his firſt Acceſſion, ſuch was his Skill and Addreſs,

Some Prejudices againſt him at his Acceſſion.

His gaining the Affections of the People.

Addreſs, as well as good Fortune, in gaining upon the Hearts and Affections of all People, that he was generally ſtiled, the Love and Delight of Mankind. His Notion was, that no Man ought to depart ſorrowful from the Preſence of a Prince; and therefore he never ſent any away with an unpleaſing Anſwer: And ſo ſtrong a Propenſity had he to do Good, that, being told one Night by thoſe about him, that he had done nothing for any Perſon that Day, with a ſorrowful Countenance he replied, O my Friends, I have loſt a Day! A Sentence, worthy of an Emperor, and fit to be retained in the Memory of all Princes.

Overcoming his own Paſſions.

HIS firſt Step towards gaining the Hearts of his Subjects, and his happy Government of the Empire, was his moderating his Paſſions, and bridling his ſtrong Inclinations, particularly by withdrawing himſelf from the beautiful Berenice, and ſending her away, notwithſtanding their mutual Loves; and by diſmiſſing ſeveral Perſons, who had formerly been the chief Inſtruments of his Pleaſures, rightly judging them unbecoming the Dignity and Majeſty of his preſent Office.

Reforming Abuſes in the State.

AFTER this he proceeded, with a better Grace and Authority, in the great Affairs of the State, and, particularly, in regulating and reforming ſeveral Miſchiefs, which had not been perfectly remov'd in his Father's Reign. All Informers, Promoters, and Petty-foggers, the Bane of Society, and the Peſts of the City, he took care to exterminate, by cauſing ſome to be ſold for Slaves, and others to be tranſported to uninhabited Iſlands; and to put a farther Stop to the Corruptions and Tediousneſs of Law-ſuits, he prohibited, among other Things, that the ſame Caſe ſhould be tried by ſeveral Laws, or that the Eſtate of any dead Perſon ſhould be claimed, after ſuch a preciſe Number of Years.

His Imitation of his Father's Virtues.

THE ſame Activity in repairing antient Buildings, and erecting new ones; the ſame Freedom of Converſation, Magnificence of Living, Generoſity to Friends, Clemency to Enemies, * Encouragement to Men of Learning, and Courteſy to all, that his Father had ſhewn, Titus was not forgetful to imitate; ſo that, if ever a People may be ſaid to be happy under any Prince, the Romans were certainly ſo under him: And yet, in his ſhort Reign, there happened ſome Miſfortunes and Calamities, no leſs aſtoniſhing than deplorable, viz. A moſt dreadful Eruption of Mount Veſuvius, which, being accompanied with violent Earthquakes, ruined many Cities, and even threw its Aſhes into diſtant Countries, and to Rome in ſuch Quantities, that the Sun was darken'd for many Days together; in the Year following, a prodigious Fire in Rome, which laſted three Days and Nights inceſſantly, conſumed the Capitol, the Pantheon, and ſeveral other Temples, the Library of Auguſtus, and many more noble Buildings; and this followed by a dangerous Peſtilence, ſuppos'd to be occaſion'd by the Aſhes of Mount Veſuvius, in which there commonly died ten Thouſand every Day. In all which Miſeries, Titus behaved himſelf, not only with the Care and Regard of a Prince, but alſo with the Tenderneſs and Compaſſion of a Father.

The publick Calamities in his Reign.

BUT

---

* Of his great Clemency we have theſe remarkable Inſtances,——Two of the Patrician Degree, being convicted of Treaſon for aſpiring to the Empire, he inflicted no Puniſhment upon them, but only privately admoniſhed them to deſiſt, mildly telling them, that the Empire was given by Providence, and that it was in vain for them to commit a Villainy in hopes of obtaining it. The ſame Night he entertained them at Supper, and, the next Day at a Spectacle of the Gladiators, placed them by himſelf, and when the Combatants Weapons, according to Cuſtom, were preſented to him, he publickly deſired their Judgment and Approbation.——In the like Manner, tho' his Brother Domitian was continually conſpiring, and exciting the Legions againſt him, yet ſo far was he from puniſhing him for it, that he comported himſelf towards him, as he had always done, giving him the Title of Aſſociate, and Succeſſor, and, with Tears, privately intreating him not to attempt that by Treaſon and Fratricide, which, in a ſhort Time, he would obtain freely, and in Courſe. Echard's Roman Hiſtory, in the Life of Titus.

His Death, and the general Sorrow for it.

But Heaven had determined that ſo good an Emperor ſhould not long bleſs ſo corrupt an Age, and a People ſo flagitious, as the Romans were then become; for, after a lingering Illneſs, he died, in the 41ſt Year of his Age, and the 3d of his Reign, not without Suſpicion of Poiſon from his Brother Domitian; and, as ſoon as his Death was known, a general Grief and Sadneſs appear'd in all the City, which, in a ſhort Time, ſpread itſelf over every Province, to the utmoſt Bounds of the Empire, and made him in all Parts be lamented, as tho' the World had been deprived of a perpetual Protector.

The Reign of Domitian.

The great Reſpect which all had for Titus and his Father, cauſed his Brother Domitian to ſucceed him in the Empire without any Oppoſition, notwithſtanding the ill Opinion which many had juſtly conceiv'd of him. In the Beginning of his Reign however, he behav'd with great Moderation, conceal'd his vicious Inclinations, and did ſeveral commendable Things, to gain the Good-will and Affections of the People. So far was he from ſhewing any Tendency to Cruelty and Bloodſhed, that he was determin'd, by a publick Edict, to forbid the ſacrificing of Oxen; and ſo far from any Signs of Avarice or Parſimony, that he acted very generouſly upon all Occaſions, and made it the chief Topick of his Advice to thoſe, that were about him, to avoid Rapine and Sordidneſs.

His Methods of gaining the Vulgar.

In rebuilding ſeveral ſtately and noble Fabricks, which had been deſtroy'd by the Fire in his Brother's Reign; in exhibiting a Sea-fight on a vaſt Lake, dug for that Purpoſe, and by great Numbers of Ships, almoſt amounting to compleat Fleets; in celebrating the great Games and Feaſts, called Secular, of all others the moſt magnificent, as happening but once in a hundred Years; in repreſenting all thoſe Shows and Spectacles, that had ever been known in Rome, beſides many more, that were newly invented; in the many ſumptuous Banquets and Entertainments, that he made, the large Donatives which he diſtributed, and the valuable Things which he threw among the common People by way of Miſſilia; in theſe, and ſuch like Things, as he knew would captivate the Eſteem of the Vulgar, he was as expenſive and ambitious, as any of his Predeceſſors: Nor was he defective in ſome other Things, which juſtly deſerve the Commendations of all Men.

His Reformation of ſeveral Abuſes.

He was diligent, for a while, in the Adminiſtration of Juſtice, and would many Times ſit himſelf, in an extraordinary Manner, in the Courts of Judicature. He ſeverely puniſhed all ſuch Judges and Counſellors, as were corrupt, and acted for Bribes; and, in this Regard, kept ſo watchful an Eye upon the City-Magiſtrates, and Governors of Provinces, that there was never known more Equity and Modeſty among the great Officers, than in his Reign. He ſuppreſs'd ſuch Libels, and defamatory Writings, as any ways reflected upon Perſons of Quality of either Sex; but then, he expected, that Perſons of Quality ſhould comport according to their Character, and, for this Reaſon, turned a Senator out of the Houſe, purely for his immoderate Delight in Buffoonery and Dancing, judging, that thoſe Things were below the Dignity of that venerable Order. From ſuch Women of Diſtinction, as were ſcandalous in their Lives, he took away the Privilege of Litters, and their Capacities of Legacies and Inheritance; and ſtruck a Roman Knight out of the Liſt of the Judges, for receiving his Wife, after ſhe had been repudiated for Adultery. The Caſtration of Children he utterly prohibited, and moderated the Prices of Eunuchs; but the Whoredoms of the Veſtal Virgins he puniſhed without Mercy. Such as were convicted but once, ſuffered Death, as ordinary Malefactors; but others were buried alive, according to the antient Cuſtom, and their aſſociate Male-criminals ſcourged to to Death. Theſe, and the like memorable Acts of Juſtice, have been highly applauded by many, but in moſt of them he uſed ſuch Pride and Elation, and ſhewed himſelf ſo exceſſively vain-glorious, as gave almoſt evident Tokens of his future Enormities.

His Pride.

After the many Conqueſts, which his great * General Agricola obtained for him over the Britons, and the Reduction of the Sarmatians, Dacians, and the Catti, a People in Germany, for which he vainly aſſumed the Sirname of Germanicus, his Pride and Impiety, as well as Cruelty and Brutiſhneſs, became inſufferable. He not only cauſed his Statues in the Capitol to be made of pure Gold and Silver, to which the People in great Crowds, came to ſacrifice continually; but his Ambition carried him ſo far, as to aſſume Divine Honours: For, as he ſtiled himſelf the Son of Pallas or Minerva, ſo he decreed, that no Man ſhould preſume to call him, either in Writing or Diſcourſe, by any other Title, than that of OUR LORD, or OUR GOD.

His Cruelty.

This monſtrous Arrogancy brought him into all Kinds of Enormities, and was the fatal Fore-runner of many exceſſive Cruelties, whereby he deſtroyed great Numbers of all Sorts, without Mercy or Conſideration. Many illuſtrious Senators, who had ſome of them been Conſuls, under Pretence of practiſing againſt the State, he put to Death; ſome of them in their Baniſhments, and all without the Privilege of making their Defence. Multitudes of others he ordered to be executed upon very ſlight and trifling Occaſions; Ælius Lamia, for his making uſe of Jeſts, tho' they were old and innocent; Salveus Coceanus, for celebrating the Nativity of Otho the Emperor; Saluſtius Lucullus, for ſuffering a new Sort of Lances to be called Lucullas, after his own Name; and Junius Ruſticus, for publiſhing a Writing in Commendation of Pætus Thraſea, and Helvidius Priſcus, two Philoſophers; upon which Occaſion he baniſhed all the Philoſophers and Mathematicians out of Rome and Italy; and, among theſe, the celebrated Stoick, Epictetus.

An Inſurrection ſuppreſs'd, and his farther Cruelties.

The Cruelty of theſe Proceedings, and ſome perſonal Affronts received from Domitian, made Lucius Antonius, Governor of the Upper Germany, raiſe a dangerous Rebellion in thoſe Parts, and, being Commander of a numerous Army, uſurp the Title of Emperor. The Succeſs of this Inſurrection remained a long while doubtful, and became daily more formidable to Domitian, who had ſo much loſt the Love of his People; till, at length, his General Normandus dextrouſly ſurpriz'd Antonius, juſt when a ſudden Overflowing of the Rhine had ſtopped the Arrival of his German Auxiliaries, and deſtroyed both him and his Army. After this Victory and Succeſs, Domitian's Cruelty increaſed, ſhewing no Kind of Mercy to thoſe, who had been of the adverſe Party. Nay, that he might thoroughly revenge himſelf, and diſcover all their Accomplices, he invented new Kinds of Tortures, and, in this Particular, exceeded Nero himſelf, that, whereas Nero was ſatisfied in command-

He was the firſt who diſcovered Britain to be an Iſland, and, in the fourth Year of Domitian, reduced it into an entire and civilized Province: Of all which, he wrote a plain Account to the Emperor, without any amplifying Terms: But, as the Emperor was uneaſy to ſee his own Glory eclipſed by a private Perſon, his Letters were received with a Shew of great Joy, but, in Reality, with no ſmall Concern. In a ſhort Time after this, Domitian recalled him from Britain, under Pretence of giving him the Lieutenancy of Syria; but, when Agricola perceived with what Coldneſs he was received, to prevent farther Inconveniencies, he retired from Court, and, for ever after, gave himſelf up to an unactive Courſe of Life, tho' his Death (which happened in a few Years) was not without Suſpicion of Poiſon by Domitian's Procurement. Echard's Roman Hiſtory, in the Life of Domitian.

commanding Executions to be done at a Diſtance, he took pleaſure in beholding his Cruelties exerciſed before his Eyes, which at length indeed became his only Diverſion.

His Perſecution of Chriſtians.

IT can ſcarce be thought, that a Prince, who, in ſome Reſpects, ſurpaſs'd even Nero himſelf in his Vices and Cruelties, ſhould in the leaſt come behind him in his Hatred of the Church of God; and therefore we need leſs wonder, that, in the 14th Year of his Reign, we find him raiſing the ſecond general Perſecution of the Chriſtians, in which, by his Letters and bloody Edicts, he cauſed the Death and Baniſhment of infinite Numbers, both in Rome and other Places; in which (among other eminent Chriſtians) St John, after his miraculous Eſcape out of the Cauldron of flaming Oil, was baniſhed to the Iſland Patmos; Antipas was put to Death at Pergamus; Timothy at Epheſus; and Dionyſius, the Areopagite at Athens; in which he not only deſtroyed the Heads of the Church, but proceeded to the Execution of his own Relations, inſomuch that he put to Death his Couſin-German Flavius Clemens, in the very Year that he was Conſul; baniſhed the Conſul's Wife, Domitilla, to Pandataria, and a Niece of the ſame Name to Pontia, for no other Crime, but their embracing Chriſtianity.

A Conſpiracy of his Domeſticks, who murther him.

BY theſe cruel and bloody Practices, Domitian became odious to the greateſt Part of his Subjects, and exceeding terrible to the * Senate and Nobility, inſomuch, that ſome of the Chief of them, merely for the Preſervation of their own Lives, were forced into Deſigns againſt his. For, when his Wife Domitia, in ſearching into his black Table-Book, which he kept purpoſely for cruel and bloody Deſigns, found her own Name there, with many of the chief Officers of his Houſhold; to them ſhe ſhewed the Book, thereby to excite them to concert Meaſures for his Diſpatch. A Conſpiracy was accordingly formed, in which the Principals were Parthenius, his Chamberlain, and Stephanus, his Steward, who, for ſeveral Days, wore a Dagger, wrapt up in Wool in his left Arm, pretending an accidental Hurt in that Place. As therefore the Emperor was going to his Bath, Parthenius, pretending that there was in his Chamber a Perſon, who had a Matter to impart to him of too great Importance to be ſafely deferred, drew him aſide thither, where Stephanus, under Pretence of diſcovering a Conſpiracy to him, preſented him with a Liſt of ſeveral Names; which while the Emperor was reading with Horror and Aſtoniſhment, he ſtruck the Dagger into his Groin; but before he could give him a ſecond Wound, the Emperor cloſed with him, and, with great Violence, threw him to the Ground, where, while they were ſtruggling together, Parthenius, Maximus, Clodianus, and other Conſpirators, who were of his own Houſhold, came furiouſly upon him, and, in the 45th Year of his Age, and

* One Evening, having made a kind and ſolemn Invitation of the greateſt Part of the Senate to a publick Entertainment, at the Entrance of his Palace, he ordered them to be ſolemnly received, and ceremoniouſly conducted, and lock'd up in a ſpacious Hall, hung round with Black, and illuminated by a few melancholy Lamps, which were only ſufficient to ſhew the Horror of the Place, and to diſcover ſeveral Coffins, upon which were fairly written the Names of the Senators, that were invited. The Senators were filled with ſtrange Fears and Apprehenſions, at the Appearance of this diſmal Scene, and the Proſpect of Death ſo ſolemnly carved out for them; when, in the Height of their frightful Imaginations, after ſome Time waiting, their Fears were increaſed by an Entertainment of many naked Perſons, with their Bodies all over blacken'd, who entered the Hall, with drawn Swords in one Hand, and flaming Torches in the other. The Gueſts, at this dreadful Appearance, expected nothing but immediate Death; when ſuddenly the naked Perſons, after they had danced ſome Time about them, ſet open the Doors, and told them, that the Emperor gave all the Company Leave to withdraw. Echard's Roman Hiſtory, in the Life of Domitian.

15th of his Reign, with ſeveral Wounds diſpatched him.

The Reign of Nerva.

UPON the Death of Domitian, the Roman Senate, after ſome ſmall Conſultation, made choice of Cocceius Nerva, to ſucceed him. He was born in Crete, and was the firſt Emperor, who was neither of a Roman, nor Italian Family; but was, at this Time, for his many Virtues, Experience, and Age, a Perſon of the greateſt Reputation and Eſteem in Rome. At his Acceſſion to the Empire, he took care to reſcind the odious Acts and Decrees of his Predeceſſor. He recalled the Chriſtians, who, from Rome, and other Cities, were baniſhed in the late Reign, and permitted them a free Exerciſe of their Religion. He ſhewed the ſame Kindneſs and Humanity to all others, who had been unjuſtly treated by his Predeceſſor, and reſtored whatever of their Goods could be found about the Imperial Palaces. He releaſed and diſcharged all the Cities of the Empire from the ſevere Taxes, and Impoſitions, which Veſpaſian and Domitian had laid upon them. He made a Diſtribution among all the People of Rome, much larger, than any of his Predeceſſors had done. He purchaſed Eſtates to be divided among decayed Citizens, and had the Sons of the poorer Sort brought up at his own Charges: And, above all, he conferred great Favours, and beſtowed large Gifts upon his Friends and Relations, upon Men of Learning, and liberal Sciences, whereof he was a great Encourager.

His many good Acts.

His Liberality.

And Clemency.

NOR was the Clemency of this Prince any ways inferior to his Kindneſs and Liberality. For, at his firſt Acceſſion to the Government, he ſolemnly ſwore, that no Senator of Rome ſhould, by his Command, be put to Death, which Oath he ſo religiouſly obſerved, that, when two of that Order had conſpired againſt his Life, he uſed no Kind of Severity againſt them; but, firſt ſending for them, to let them ſee, that he was not ignorant of their traiterous Deſigns, he carried them with him to the publick Theatre, placed them on each Side of him, and preſenting each with a Sword, told them before all the People, that they might experience the Goodneſs of the Weapons upon his Body; for ſo confident was he of his own Innocence, that he often ſaid, That, tho' he ſhould quit the Empire, and return to a private Life, he had done nothing, that could cauſe him to fear any Man.

A. M. 4101, &c. Ann. Dom. 97, &c.

His Adoption of Trajan.

BUT, notwithſtanding all this, he had not ſat long upon the Throne, before the Soldiers, who, in the late Reign, had been indulged in all Manner of Licentiouſneſs, began to be mutinous upon the Account of Domitian's Murther, reſolving to fall upon, and deſtroy all thoſe, who had any Concern in his Aſſaſſination: So that the Emperor, finding himſelf inſufficient to withſtand their Fury, and perceiving that his Age and Infirmities had impaired his Authority over them, was reſolved to adopt ſome worthy Perſon for his Succeſſor, who ſhould be able both to ſupport him, while he lived, and govern the Empire, after his Deceaſe. Tho' he had many conſiderable Friends and Relations of his own, who hoped for this high Promotion, yet, like a juſt and generous Prince, he ſought only the publick Good, and wiſely made choice of Ulpius Trajanus, an utter Stranger to his Family, but the greateſt and moſt deſerving Perſon of his Age.

And Death.

THIS Determination he accordingly put in Execution; and, having, with the uſual Solemnities, adopted him in the Capitol, and made him Cæſar in the Senate, he immediately ſent Ambaſſadors to him at Cologn (for at that Time he was Governor of the Lower Germany) with the Enſigns and Arms of the Empire. This proved ſo great a Curb to the Licentiouſneſs, and Mutinies of the Soldiers, that, from thence forward, they continued in a perfect Quietneſs and Obedience. But Nerva lived not long to enjoy the Benefit of this happy Choice; for, about three Months after, falling into a violent Paſſion againſt a Senator, named Regulus, he put himſelf into ſuch Diſorder, that, by Reaſon of the Feebleneſs of his Body, and Lowneſs of his Spirits, he fell into a Fever, which, in the 66th Year of his Age, and the 2d of his Reign, carried him off.

The Reign of Trajan.

His Qualifications for the Government.

Upon the Death of Nerva, Trajan was joyfully received (as Emperor) at Rome, both by the Senate and People. He was a Spaniard by Birth, of an illuſtrious Family, born in a Town called Italica, not far from the City of Seville; and, being now above two and forty Years of Age, of a ſtrong Body, and vigorous Mind, happily tempered between the Warmth of Youth, and the Experience of Old-age, he was, in all Reſpects, qualified for the greateſt Attempts, and the nobleſt Enterprizes. In the Beginning of his Reign, he was bleſſed with the Happineſs of having the greateſt Maſter of his Age, that admirable Philoſopher and Biographer, Plutarch, by whoſe wiſe Inſtructions, added to his own Abilities, he purſued the Adminiſtration of his Government, with that Moderation and Juſtice, and that Wiſdom and Magnanimity, as raiſed both the Love and Admiration of all Men.

And excellent Adminiſtration of it.

At his firſt entering into the Senate, he declared publickly, That no good Man, by his Command, ſhould ever ſuffer Death or Diſgrace, which he confirm'd by a ſolemn Oath, and inviolably obſerved it through his whole Reign. His firſt Step was, to reform the Laws that were defective, and to put in Execution thoſe that were good; to take care that Equity and Juſtice were ſtrictly and faithfully adminiſtred in all Caſes; to advance the moſt worthy and virtuous Men to the higheſt Poſts, and to reclaim ſuch as were otherwiſe, with Gentleneſs and Clemency: But, as Mutiny in an Army was a Matter of dangerous Conſequence, the Prætorian Cohorts, and their Commanders, who had raiſed the Sedition againſt Nerva, he ſent for, and diſbanded without any farther Puniſhment, (as ſome ſay) though others affirm, that he put ſeveral of them to Death.

The Informers, Promoters, and Pettifoggers, who had done great Miſchiefs in former Reigns, he utterly exterminated; and put down the Pantomimes, Farce-Players, and Buffoons, as effeminate Diverſions, and unbecoming the Roman Gravity: But he re-built the grand Cirque, wherein more manly Exerciſes were performed, much larger, and more beautiful than it was before, with an Inſcription, ſignifying, that it was to make it worthy to receive the People of Rome. The Truth is, his Love to the People of Rome, as well as all his other Subjects, was viſible in his Relief of the Poor, and Education of their Children; in his behaving to all Men with Courteſy and Affability, without Diſguiſe or Diſſimulation; in entertaining Perſons of Merit (though of no high Degree) with a moſt open Familiarity; beſtowing upon ſuch Honours and Wealth, though he had but a ſmall Acquaintance with them; and, in ſhort, in treating all his Subjects (as himſelf expreſſes the Matter) with the ſame Uſage, as he himſelf would have deſired of his Prince, had he been a private Perſon. For theſe, and many more Inſtances of his Goodneſs, and paternal Care to his People, he not only obtained obtained the Title of Pater Patriæ, but the Senate likewiſe conferred on him that of Optimus, as the beſt of all Princes, which he eſteemed more than all the Glories of his Victories and Conqueſts, becauſe it related, not ſo much to his Courage and Conduct, as to his Morality and Piety.

His Perſecution of Chriſtians for ſome Time.

His miſtaken Piety indeed, or Zeal for the Religion eſtabliſhed in the Empire, confirm'd his Prejudices againſt Chriſtianity, and made him look upon the Profeſſors of it with a jealous Eye, not only as Subverters of the national Faith, and Enemies to the Gods of the Romans, but (as their Adverſaries were pleaſed to repreſent them) Eſtabliſhers likewiſe of ſome illegal Societies, that were the Nurſeries of Faction and Sedition. Under this plauſible Pretence, the third general Perſecution of the Church, in the third Year of this Emperor's Reign, commenced; wherein, among an infinite Number of others, St Clement, Biſhop of Rome, being thrown into the Sea with an Anchor about his Neck; St Simeon, Biſhop of Jeruſalem, being firſt ſcourged, and then crucified; and St Ignatius, Biſhop of Antioch, being condemned to be thrown to the wild Beaſts, obtained the glorious Crown of Martyrdom. This Perſecution, for ſome Time, went on, tho' with different Degrees of Severity, in ſeveral Parts of the Empire, and was ſo much the more afflicting to the Chriſtians, becauſe they generally ſuffer'd under the Notion of Malefactors and Traitors, and under an Emperor, fam'd throughout the World for his ſingular Juſtice and Moderation: But it had not continued long, before this Prince, upon his Reception of a Letter from Pliny, the Proconſul in Bithynia, (wherein he repreſents the Innocency and Simplicity of the Chriſtians; that they were an harmleſs and inoffenſive Sort of People, who only worſhipped Chriſt as God, and bound themſelves by Oath to abſtain from all Wickedneſs) abated the Rigour of it, ſo that the Fire, which had hitherto raged with great Fury, began now to be extinguiſhed, and only crept up and down in private Corners.

The wonderful Increaſe and State of the Church, at the End of the firſt Century.

In the mean Time, the Chriſtian Religion, notwithſtanding all Oppoſition to the contrary, was ſpread through the greateſt Parts of Europe, Aſia, and Africa, extended from the Britiſh Iſlands to the fartheſt Indies, and was eſtabliſhed, not only in Cities, and populous Places, but in Towns and Country Villages, as Pliny, in the above-cited Letter, teſtifies. The metropolitan Cities were all under Biſhops of the greateſt Eminence and Piety. The four great Cities of the Roman Empire, Rome, Alexandria, Antioch, and Jeruſalem, uſually ſtiled apoſtolical Churches, were governed by apoſtolical Men. Publius was at Athens; Polycarp at Smyrna; Oneſimus at Epheſus; and Papias at Hierapolis; with many others of primitive Integrity in different Places.

Such was the State of the Chriſtian Church, in the Beginning of the ſecond Century, increaſing and flouriſhing after a marvellous Manner; and, though it wanted all human Helps, though it had all the Force and Policy of the World bent againſt it, growing by Oppoſition and Oppreſſion, and over-bearing all the Powers of Earth and Hell. (b) Whereunto then ſhall we liken the Kingdom of God, and its wonderful Increaſe, or with what Compariſon ſhall we compare it? There is indeed ſome Reſemblance of it in the prodigious Fecundity of Seeds, which accordingly our Bleſſed Saviour frequently makes uſe of to illuſtrate it; but there is nothing parallel to it, in the

3906	He takes and demoliſhes Gaza; maintains a War with his Subjects for ſix Years; and, after many military Exploits, dies at laſt at the Siege of Ragaba; and is ſucceeded by his Wife Alexandra.	94
3921	The War between the Romans and Mithridates at this Time began.	89
3926	Alexandra gains the Phariſees, a leading Sect at that Time, to her Party, and diverts Tigranes, King of Armenia, from invading Judea.	74
3935	Upon the Death of Alexandra, Ariſtobulus, the ſecond Son of Alexander Jannæus, having defeated his elder Brother Hyrcanus, ſeizes upon the Kingdom, and compels him to live a private Life.	65
3939	Hyrcanus, at the Inſtigation of Antipater, the Father of Herod the Great, by the Aſſiſtance of Aretas, King of Arabia, defeats Ariſtobulus, and claims the Kingdom.	61
3940	Mithridates is reduced to the Neceſſity of ſlaying himſelf.	60
3940	Pompey coming to Damaſcus, hears the Cauſe of Hyrcanus and Ariſtobulus; but Ariſtobulus, perceiving him to incline to his Brother, withdraws to Jeruſalem, and maintains the City againſt Pompey, who takes it; and, carrying him Priſoner to Rome, makes Hyrcanus High-Prieſt, and Prince of the Jews.	60
3954	Ariſtobulus is poiſoned at Rome; and the Difference between Cæſar and Pompey breaks out.	46
3957	Antipater obtains for his Son Phaſael the Government of Judea, and that of Galilee for his Son Herod, who, being ſummoned before the Sanhedrim, and in Danger of being condemned, retires in great Rage to his Government.	43
3960	Julius Cæſar is murthered in the Senate-Houſe; and Herod cauſes Malichus, who had poiſoned his Father Antipater, to be ſlain.	40
3962	Brutus and Caſſius, being vanquiſhed by Octavianus and Anthony, are forced to ſlay themſelves.	38
3963	The Jews accuſe Phaſael and Herod to Mark Anthony ſeveral Times, but all to no Purpoſe.	37
3964	Antigonus, the Son of Ariſtobulus, prevails with the Parthians to ſet him upon the Throne of Judea; whereupon the War between him and Herod commences, and ends in the Death of Antigonus.	36
3970	Herod, at the Requeſt of his Wife Mariamne, makes her Brother Ariſtobulus High-Prieſt, and afterwards cauſes him to be drowned, for which he is called to an Account by Mark Anthony, but makes his Peace by Bribery.	30
3972	A War breaks out between Octavianus and Mark Anthony, wherein Herod ſides with Anthony.	28
3973	The Battle at Actium, wherein Octavianus obtains a compleat Victory over Anthony.	27
3974	Herod addreſſes himſelf to Octavianus, and makes his Peace with him, who purſues Anthony and Cleopatra to Alexandria, and there compels them to kill themſelves.	26
3975	Octavianus, returning to Rome, enters it in Triumph, and has the Monarchy of the whole Roman Empire conferred on him, with the Name of Auguſtus, which he, and his Succeſſors, ever after bore.	25
3976	Herod, in a Fit of Rage and Jealouſy, puts Mariamne, his beloved Wife, to Death, and, the next Year, her Mother Alexandra.	24
3982	He undertakes ſeveral Buildings in Compliment to Auguſtus, contrary to the Religion of the Jews; but, to make an Amends for that, builds them a glorious Temple.	18
3989	Auguſtus, upon the Death of Lepidus, takes upon him the Office of High-Prieſt of Rome, and, by Virtue thereof, examines the Sibylline Prophecies, burning ſuch as were reputed ſpurious, and depoſiting the reſt in Apollo's Temple.	11
3998	Herod cauſes Alexander and Ariſtobulus, his two Sons by Mariamne, to be ſtrangled.	2

St Paul's ſecond Arrival at Rome, and his writing his ſecond Epiſtle to Timothy. He and St Peter are impriſoned. St Peter writes his ſecond Epiſtle to the Jewiſh Converts, and, under the Government of Helius, they both ſuffered Martyrdom at Rome. Nero contends, as a Charioteer, in the Olympick Games, and, returning ſoon after to Rome, is abandon'd by all, and, in an abject Manner, ſlays himſelf.	69	66
4071	Galba ſucceeds Nero, and governs imprudently: He adopts Piſo, and is ſlain by the Order of Otho. Otho ſucceeds him, and marches againſt Vitellius, who had been proclaimed Emperor by the Army in Germany; but, being defeated, kills himſelf. Vitellius ſucceeds Otho; but by his Mal-Adminiſtrations becomes odious to all; whereupon Veſpaſian is made Emperor by the Army in the Eaſt. Rome is taken and plunder'd, and Vitellius ſlain; while the Jews languiſh under all the Miſeries of War, Factions, Devaſtations, and Murthers.	71	68
4073	Veſpaſian ſucceeds Vitellius. His Son Titus begins the Siege of Jeruſalem, and, in leſs than ſix Months, takes and domoliſhes the City, at which Time the Temple is conſumed, and the Jewiſh OEconomy totally ceaſes. Veſpaſian returns to Rome, where he and Titus both triumph over the Jews. Titus has a triumphal Arch erected for him, and Veſpaſian makes many wiſe Regulations in the State.	73	70
4075	St Jude, about this Time, writes his Epiſtle, and, not long after, ſuffers Martyrdom; as do St Bartholomew, Thomas, Luke and Simon. The Hereſies of the Menandrians, Ebionites, and Cerinthians, began now to appear. Joſephus (who had been taken Priſoner, and releaſed by Veſpaſian) finiſhes his Hiſtory of the JEWISH Wars, and Pliny the Elder, his Natural Hiſtory, which he dedicates to Titus; and not long after Veſpaſian dies.	75	72
4082	Titus ſucceeds, and in his Reign there happens a vaſt Irruption of Veſuvius, Fires, Plagues, and other Calamities at Rome. He dies, and is ſucceeded by his Brother Domitian.	82	79
4085	Domitian, making many Regulations, baniſhes the Philoſophers, ſeverely puniſhes the Incontinence of the Veſtal Virgins, aſſumes divine Honours and Titles, and has many Sacrifices offered to him. St John founds the Churches of Aſia; and Agricola, having gained great Victories in Britain, reduces it entirely under the Roman Power.	85	82
4090	The Revolt and Defeat of Antonius. The grand ſecular Games celebrated by Domitian, who baniſhes the Philoſophers a ſecond Time, and begins to ſhew his Hatred againſt the Chriſtians. About this Time Joſephus finiſhes his Antiquities of the Jews; Quintilian publiſhes his Rhetorick, and Apollonius Tyanæus performs his Magick at Rome.	90	87

A CHRONOLOGICAL TABLE, &c.

Anno Mun.		Anno Dom.	Vulg. Ær.
4098	The Second general Perſecution, wherein St John is thrown into a Cauldron of flaming Oil, and is then baniſhed to the Iſle of Patmos, where he writes his Revelation. Clemens the Conſul, and ſeveral others, are martyr'd; and, at length, Domitian, being become odious to his Subjects for his many Cruelties, is ſlain in his Palace, and his Memory aboliſhed.	98	95
4099	Nerva ſucceeds, and is favourable to the Chriſtians. He reſcinds the Acts of Domitian: Upon the Mutiny of the Prætorian Bands, adopts Trajan, and, having inveſted him with full Power, not long after dies. Timothy, being martyr'd at Epheſus, St John returns to that City, and there takes care of the Aſian Churches; there writes his three Epiſtles, and, at the Requeſt of the Biſhops of Aſia, his Goſpel.	99	96
4101	Trajan ſucceeds Nerva; is made Pontifex Maximus; obtains the Title of OPTIMUS; exterminates Delators; and makes many Regulations: But then he raiſes the Third Perſecution againſt the Church of Chriſt, wherein Clement, Biſhop of Rome, and many other eminent Chriſtians, were put to Death. St John dies at Epheſus, and, with him, the Apoſtolick Age ends.	101	98
